Woo advocates service learning

Dean speaks to local business representatives

By DEREK BETCHER
Assistant News Editor

Blending academics and community mindedness into service learning was the topic of College of Business Administration Dean Carolyn Woo's address at a Wednesday luncheon with local business leaders.

Roughly 300 members of the local business community attended the 11th annual President's Luncheon for Michiana Business Leaders, hosted by Notre Dame president Father Edward Malloy.

The keynote address for the afternoon event, Woo's speech advocated for-credit service learning.

"What we're looking at is a step in educational reform — to look at service not as extra-curricular, but as a curricular activity," Woo said. "This is not merely a distinction in words but a step forward for the American educational system."

Service learning represents a junction between credited classes and volunteerism. Woo emphasized that service learning should be developed, implemented and regarded as a credit-earning, academic service experience, not merely as volunteerism.

The University now offers 84 courses that incorporate service activities toward earning acade-

"At Notre Dame we know that service is very much a part of our tradition — so is service learning," Woo said.

The address highlighted three little-known service learning initiatives sponsored by the College of Business Administration. Marketing audit, external communications and database development initiatives are each run to help local non-profit groups function more efficiently and effectively.

After praising the general concept of service learning and advocating increased cooperation and support from local businesses, Woo introduced two Notre Dame students and let them explain their service learning

Freddoso: Self-giving, sacrifice makes one holy

By TOM ENRIGHT
News Writer

Speaking yesterday about the call to Catholic marriage, family and sexuality in the modern world, philosophy professor Alfred Freddoso outlined Pope John Paul II's position on the family by drawing upon earlier Church teachings.

Drawing from the pontiff's 1981 apostolic exhortation "Familiaris Consortio," Freddoso talked about the Christian call to friendship with God through the giving of self.

"Marriage is a form of self-giving," said Freddoso. "It is only through sacrificial love that we can become holy."

Freddoso explained that the Pope directed this exhortation specifically to Catholic clergy and laity. It assumed the reader would have some understanding of Catholic theology and philosophy, Freddoso said.

Freddoso laid the ground work for better understanding of the exhortation by reviewing the Catholic Church's call for individual respect and its universal call to holiness.

"All of us are called to holiness," said Freddoso. "But we often can't see it for the inspiring challenge that it is."

Freddoso explained that humanity's friendship with God can materialize through the sacrament of marriage and the complete giving of oneself to a spouse. He emphasized the Church's call for Christians to give of themselves until they have nothing else.

'ALL OF US ARE CALLED TO HOLINESS. BUT WE OFTEN CAN'T SEE IT FOR THE INSPIRING CHALLENGE THAT IT IS.'

Folks updates group on revival of hall judicial boards

By TIM LOGAN
Assistant News Editor

After several consecutive sessions of heated debate on divisive campus issues, the Student Senate last night addressed no new, old or controversial business. Instead they heard an update on the revival of hall judicial boards from Judicial Council president Kelly Folks.

Folks, who recently took over the position from senior J.P. Cooney, talked with the senators about the progress of the Hall Judicial Council Restoration Committee, which is intended to bring back the bodies in an effort to streamline the disciplinary process.

When a student is under suspicion of violating du Lac, his or her dorm rector may decide the case independently or may refer it to either a hall judicial board or the office of Residence Life. Few dorms have acting judicial boards, however, and according to Folks, some rectors are unclear on their options regarding student discipline.

"In a lot of halls there is no Judicial Board," Folks said. "Everything is sent to the office of Residence Life by default, and Residence Life isn't real pleased with that."

Each residence hall should have a judicial board to hear disciplinary cases "which do not involve pastoral concerns," according to duLac.

There are also inconsistencies regarding hall disciplinary procedures, which contribute to the confusion about the process.

"Some dorms don't send anything to Residence Life," Folks said. "It's discretionary according to the rector."

One frustration expressed with the hall boards was the rather light nature of much of their cases. Examples of recent cases mentioned by senators ranged from open containers of alcohol in a hallway to splashing water at an assistant rector.

"In some cases, it's so trivial that no one wants to go through the process [of being on a Judicial Board]," said Morrissey senator Ryan Costantini.

Hall Judicial Councils must be established in a hall's constitution, and therein lies another problem, according to Folks, who noted that many dorms lack a constitution, and only a few have recently

Belle Boy

I scrambled to get about 30 minutes of studying in for a quiz I had in a class at Saint Mary's. In that class, I am one of only two guys. I was running a bit late but made it safely through the rain and began the quiz.

I didn't realize that that Tuesday, seemingly a carbon copy of every one of my Tuesdays and Thursdays this fall, meant something more to my classmates in the basement of Moreau Hall.

It was Saint Mary's Pride Day.

Our professor told us that once we finished the quiz, we could participate in the forming of the French Cross for a school picture.

To me, this just meant I'd get out of class early and be able to snag a nap before dinner. But then I had an experience that I'll remember for quite a while.

One of my friendly Campus View neighbors, Andrea (a.k.a. Swoop of the Silverhawks), asked me if I was going to get in the picture. I chuckled and said, "I don't think I'm invited."

She would have none of that as she pinned her Pride Day ribbon on my shirt, and we headed through the drizzle together to get into the picture.

So there I was, the only male who wasn't a professor, among the women of Saint Mary's, showing my Saint Mary's pride.

As we stood waiting for the camera man to do his thing, I was booed by a pack of Belles behind me.

"I told you so," I said to Andrea.

She told me to flash my ribbon. I did, and the jeers turned to cheers.

I can understand why some people would be upset, thinking that I was making a farce of the event, but I certainly didn't mean any offense. In fact, I am a Saint Mary's student. I'm taking my second class at Saint Mary's, and I didn't take those classes to get dates. And if that were the case, I would have failed both.

At class Thursday I shared my experience of being chastised and then accepted. I saw an evil look or two, but most of the class could have cared less. One of my classmates even reassured me, saying "Well, we love you, Joe."

This experience has made me think about what Saint Mary's has provided me. My class last semester helped me get an internship with the South Bend Tribune and my current class is not available on the east side of US 31.

Taking classes at a women's college has been a unique learning experience in itself. I've come to learn that Saint Mary's is an asset and shouldn't be taken for granted.

While the people of Saint Mary's share many similarities with us Domers, there are subtle differences that make Saint Mary's valuable.

I can't pinpoint what those differences are, but they exist and make Saint Mary's great.

From the Saint Mary's staff of The Observer, both past and present, to my always-entertaining and kindly neighbors, to seeing members of my class on the dance floor at Heartland, I've always been greeted with a friendly face and a kind word.

To make a long story short, I just wanted to say that it doesn't go unappreciated.

The views expressed in the Inside Column are those of the author and not necessarily those of The Observer.

Contract problem delays dog cloning project at Texas A&M

COLLEGE STATION, Texas

Legal problems are slowing down efforts to clone the first dog at Texas A&M University, the Missyplicity project manager said Tuesday. Lou Hawthorne, project manager and the president of the Bio Arts Research Corp., said he hopes to meet with Texas A&M officials within the next two weeks to resolve the dispute over the contract he signed with the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

"I am very optimistic that we can smooth things over," Hawthorne said. "We were called by a Texas A&M lawyer, who questioned the validity of the contract. The contracts were signed in good faith. My job is to find out what party was not included and what party needs to be included."

The Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, part of the Texas A&M University system, signed an agreement in July with the Bio Arts and Research Corp. of San Francisco to attempt to clone Missy, an 11-year-old border collie-husky mix.

Missy's owners are funding the $2.3 million cloning project, in hopes of producing another dog like her within the next two years. The investors put $500,000 into the project during the first annual quarter.

Mark Westhusin, lead scientist in the Missyplicity project and a Texas A&M professor of veterinary medicine, will work with colleagues Duane Kraemer and Robert Burghardt on the project.

Researchers are planning to operate a 10-person staff during the project and are currently interviewing applicants for assistants.

In a "super meeting" recently held at Texas A&M, researchers and Hawthorne met with consultants from the University of Georgia, Cornell University, the San Diego Zoo and Texas A&M University.

Kraemer said each of the four consultants working with the team has expertise in an area relating to the cloning project.

Texas A&M scientists' specialties were chosen to complement work in the Missyplicity project. Texas A&M was selected to participate in the cloning among applicants across the United States. Westhusin specializes in nuclear transfer, Kraemer in embryo transfer and Burghardt in tissue culturing and analysis.

Legislation addresses campus crime

GAINESVILLE, Fla.

Campus security legislation signed into law by President Clinton last week has UF officials questioning how their own long-standing policies about student crime reporting will change. The new legislation, called the Foley Amendment, is part of Congress' Higher Education Bill and requires all public and private colleges participating in federal student aid programs to disclose to the public detailed crime information about students. Under this new law, colleges would no longer be able to hide students' violent criminal behavior in closed campus courts. Dean of Students Julie Sina said she does not think UF is prepared to change its tradition of protecting students' privacy. "We definitely have some decisions to make," Sina said earlier this week. "I certainly feel strongly about protecting students' privacy." Congress' amendment gives colleges room to decide whether or not to make public the final outcome of a student's trial, Sina said.

Urban Outfitters pulls racist costumes

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.

A boycott of Urban Outfitters by Asian-American student groups around the country forced the chain to pull an offending "Chinese Man" Halloween costume from its shelves. The costume includes a Fu-Manchu style mustache, a pigtail, glasses and a cap. The boycott was organized by Richard M. Lee, a professor of educational psychology at the University of Texas at Austin. Lee sent e-mail messages to Asian-American student groups across the country notifying student leaders of the costume. "It depicts a whole group (i.e. all Chinese men) as looking like this person and...it is based on a racist image of Asian Americans," Lee wrote in the message. Harvard's Asian American Association (AAA) joined the boycott after learning of it last week through the organization's e-mail newsletter. Jay M. Hammer, director of stores and graduate of Harvard Business School, said yesterday that he decided to pull the costumes last Thursday after Lee contacted him.

Bond may bring $2.5 billion to systems

LA JOLLA, Calif.

Proposition 1A, a $9.2 billion public-school bond that would be used for construction and modernization of educational facilities in California, will be on the ballot for November's elections. If approved, Proposition 1A would provide $2.5 billion over the next four years to the University of California, the California State University and the California Community College systems. The funds would go toward building renovation, modernization in the science programs and utility systems, and expansion for enrollment growth. "It (Proposition 1A) would target enrollment programs in the engineering and sciences in order to help out the state work force," Brad Hayward, a spokesman from the UC Office of the President, said. The other $6.7 billion would go to California K-12 schools for construction, modernization and reduction of class sizes. Hayward said 1A would provide the UC system with about $210 million a year over the next four years.

Community questions race initiatives

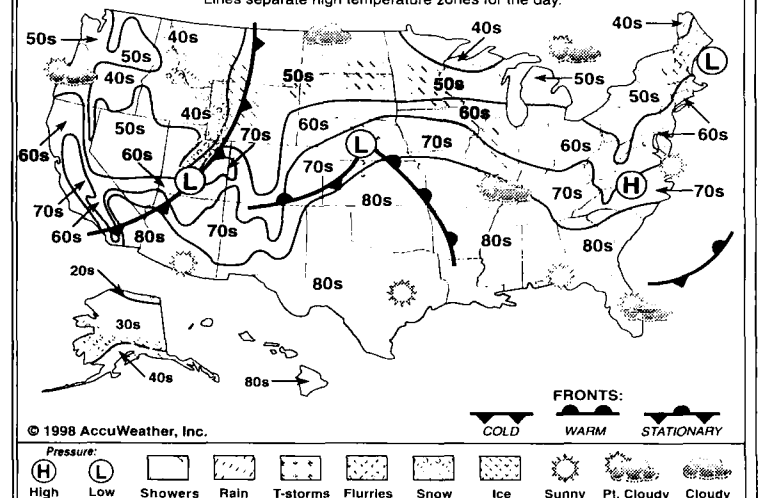

COLUMBUS, Ohio

Some members of the Ohio State community are skeptical about two initiatives President William "Brit" Kirwan announced last week to improve campus race relations. "These initiatives are excellent as long as they are followed up by work, sincerity, honesty and commitment," said Love Ali, spokeswoman for the African Student Union. Last spring, the union organized the nine-day occupation of Bricker Hall, protesting the restructuring of the Office of Minority Affairs. Kirwan's first initiative includes a diversity fair to take place Thursday, and town meetings and educational field trips throughout the year. Under the second initiative, OSU will hire a consultant to analyze women and minority recruitment and retention and make recommendations on potential policy changes. "These initiatives seem very circular in what's been going on in the past," said Jeff Capell, president of the OSU College Republicans.

Commander talks to ROTC students

Commander Cecil Haney visited Notre Dame yesterday in an effort to educate about and possibly recruit student ROTC members for service in the navy's nuclear program.

Haney, a recipient of this year's prestigious Vice Admiral Stockdale Award for Inspirational Leadership, noted three major facets of the program, including the prestige of the submarine force in the nuclear program, the sub's role in national security and the responsibility of those serving on subs.

"He gave me a new perspective from a training officer's point of view," said junior Matt Ulman, midshipman second class. "I mean, he's the best. He gave me the feel that a sub is really an elite class."

While Ulman has yet to decide whether he will serve on submarines after graduation, he does have a new respect and understanding for "driving a billion-dollar boat when you're 23 years old."

In other senate news:

- Student body vice president Andrea Selak discussed the formation of the Senate's ad hoc committee to research the addition of sexual orientation to the University's legal nondiscrimination clause.

The committee will "research all aspects of the nondiscrimination clause in a nonbiased way," Selak said. She also pointed out that the body is not solely intended to create a resolution on the issue.

"The main thing for this committee to accomplish is to provide the Senate with information about the clause and its ramifications," she said.

The committee's research will focus on other Catholic universities which have — and have not — adopted sexual orientation in their nondiscrimination clauses, as well as the financial, legal and theological implications of the statement.

The Senate recently passed a resolution calling on the Academic Council to add sexual orientation to the clause and was criticized for making such a suggestion without doing thorough research. The Council has since discussed the matter and voted to hold off their decision until Nov. 17, in order to study the issue more closely.

Amanda Deerpake, a senior chemical engineering major, spoke about her work with Engineering Projects in Community Service. EPICS groups work with community service agencies to develop projects that utilize students' technical skills.

"Students receive academic credit and the personal satisfaction that comes from community service," Deerpake said.

As an example of one such project, Deerpake spoke of developing a database to help Charles Martin Youth Center track appointments and space utilization. The City of Elkhart environmental center and the South Bend Heritage Foundation are other direct beneficiaries of the EPICS program.

"A great university stands apart from a good university because of a positive relationship with its community," Deerpake told the assembled audience of business people.

Valerie Gregory, a second-year MBA student, then spoke about service learning in an international context. Gregory told of her work to pioneer entrepreneurship in South Africa with campus volunteers.

Through her efforts, three students traveled to Capetown last year to work with microbusinesses in accounting, marketing and operations.

"We learned from the work what it is like to get started, what it is like to put all of your hopes in one business plan," Gregory said. "We're hoping to do more, to work with small businesses here."

In her closing remarks, Woo reemphasized that service learning should not be regarded as volunteerism but rather as a credit-earning, academic service experience.

"I want to extend thanks to all of you who are our friends and neighbors in this region," Malloy said in welcoming the attendees. Malloy spoke briefly of strengthening Notre Dame's ties with South Bend's business leaders before turning to lunch and introducing Woo.

This idea of complete self-giving scares many Christians, admitted Freddoso. Although hard to accept, the idea of gaining one's life by losing it can become possible through the sacraments, prayer and acts of self-denial.

"The Pope realizes that there are many people that find the idea of sacrificial love undesirable," said Freddoso, who condemned modern attitudes toward sex and love as self-fulfilling rather than self-giving.

Freddoso also criticized the women's liberation movement, saying that it defied Catholic teaching by making abortion, contraception and divorce more accepted among Americans.

"Sexual expression has a certain language built into it," said Freddoso.

He explained that the sex act between two married people should communicate the ideas of giving of one's whole self, faithfulness and willingness to bear children.

Using contraception as an example, Freddoso asked, "Is that Christ on the cross? Is that generosity?"

Freddoso challenged members of his audience to contemplate and educate themselves about the nature of marriage as Christians.

Nuclear safeguards to be tackled in talks today

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan
Seeking to ease fears of a nuclear confrontation, top officials from India and Pakistan, the world's newest nuclear states, will meet today to discuss safeguards. At the heart of the four-day talks will be the disputed region of Kashmir, the flashpoint of two previous wars, which has soured relations between the two South Asian countries since independence from Britain 51 years ago. Many fear the protracted dispute could cause a nuclear conflagration on the Asian subcontinent, home to more than 1 billion people, one-fourth of the world's population. The big worry among nuclear non-proliferationists is that the talks will become the first step toward rationalizing the deployment of nuclear weapons. "They could be taking a step down the road to deployment, minimum deterrence," said Sameena Ahmed, a defense expert with the Asia Foundation.

North American diamond mine to open

TORONTO
The first world-class diamond mine in North America began production Wednesday, seven years after a geologist discovered the treasure under the tundra of far-northern Canada. A planeload of dignitaries, including two Cabinet ministers, traveled close to Arctic circle for ceremonies inaugurating the Ekati mine beside a remote lake in the Northwest Territories. Over the next 25 years, the mine is expected to produce $7 billion (U.S.) worth of high-quality diamonds, roughly 5 percent of total global sales. The celebrations have been tempered slightly by a worldwide slump in the diamond industry, which is facing one of its toughest years in two decades because of the Asian financial crisis.

Yeltsin defeats amendment to limit power

MOSCOW
Parliament failed yesterday to gather enough votes for several Communist-proposed constitutional amendments that would sharply limit President Boris Yeltsin's powers. The amendments would have given the lower house of parliament, the State Duma, control over the appointments and dismissals of key ministers and security officials and strengthen the parliament's control over the use of armed forces on Russian territory. Under the current constitution, the Duma has the right to approve a prime minister but doesn't have any say over other Cabinet appointments. Parliament also has few levers to influence the government's course, including policies on the use of military force.

■ YUGOSLAVIA

Children play outside an abandoned Serbian special police bunker. Forces were drastically reduced in the past few days in an effort to avoid NATO air intervention. Milosevic has reluctantly agreed to halt his offensive against Albanian separatists.

Skepticism plagues NATO forces

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRISTINA
NATO warned yesterday that Slobodan Milosevic isn't doing what he must to avoid airstrikes and ethnic Albanian refugees remained reluctant to return to their charred homes as skepticism replaced relief over the Kosovo agreement.

Even as the U.N. refugee agency resumed aid convoys to Kosovo, questions remained over whether the Yugoslav president would meet international demands and refrain from further hostilities toward ethnic Albanians.

Demonstrating that it's not taking him at his word, NATO positioned warplanes at bases in Italy for possible air attacks on Serbia.

"NATO airstrikes have not yet been averted by Milosevic," said an official at the alliance's headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"We'll be keeping up the military pressure for some time to come."

Milosevic reluctantly agreed Monday to the demands of world leaders determined to halt his seven-month offensive against ethnic Albanian separatists in Kosovo and avert a tragedy among tens of thousands of refugees living outdoors as winter approaches.

The 16 NATO members have given Milosevic until Saturday to fully comply or face the renewed threat of airstrikes.

But even before an agreed-to 2,000-member unarmed monitoring force is assembled, it is clear Milosevic has not met at least one key demand: withdrawing his forces to levels before the crackdown on the southern Serb province began Feb. 28.

The official in Brussels said a number of Yugoslav units remain dug-in in Kosovo and must be withdrawn, including what he called a "notorious" special police unit from Nis, Serbia. He declined to say how many troops remained in the province but said they "far exceed" the level required by NATO.

State Department spokesman James Rubin said Western monitoring teams reported a much smaller Serb police presence in Kosovo yesterday, as well as signs of refugees returning.

But he called the early assessment of Milosevic's compliance "a mixed bag" and said a full monitoring force is needed to ensure that police aren't just being moved around or hidden.

The key to success "is whether we will have the verification system that will give the people of Kosovo confidence that this isn't a shell game, that this doesn't hide the police one day and come back in the next day," Rubin said in Washington.

The advance party of monitors — Milosevic's final concession after more than a week of intense negotiations with U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke — arrived in Kosovo from neighboring Macedonia on Wednesday. The several dozen Americans, Canadians and Europeans had been evacuated Monday.

Budget negotiations near completion

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON

White House and congressional budget bargainers all but completed agreement Wednesday on a $500 billion package of spending for education and other programs, breaking an impasse that has delayed Congress' departure for the year.

"We're down to the basically wrapping up," said Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss.

Other participants said an announcement of the agreement seemed imminent.

"We're very close to a deal," House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., told reporters. "Pretty close, we'll see," said a Clinton administration official.

Agreement would clear the way for Congress to vote on a giant measure financing dozens of departments and agencies for the federal fiscal year that began Oct. 1. Included are the departments of Health and Human Services, Education, State, Commerce, Justice and Interior, as well as the foreign aid program.

The vote could come as early as today.

A deal would also mark the end of a week of political brinkmanship that the two political parties waged leading up to the Nov. 3 elections for congressional control.

After weeks of stories on President Clinton's possible impeachment dominating the news — including last week's vote to launch a House impeachment inquiry — Democrats tried to use the budget fight to turn the focus onto their fight for more education money. During the talks, Clinton had demanded $1.1 billion to hire 100,000 more teachers.

"We've already won," Rep. Jim McDermott, D-Wash., said even before the deal was completed. "If we'd have gone out with our last vote being on impeachment, that would be the end of it. But now we've been struggling and we've forced them to debate about education."

Lott said compromise had been reached on the education issue, but it was not immediately clear what the middle ground was. Republicans had been insisting that local officials control how the money would be used and that the money also be eligible for special education and for such items as computers and books.

Lott said it was still possible that a modest package of expiring tax breaks for business and others might still be included in the massive spending measure.

Israel wants proof of security

Conference addresses West Bank terrorism

Associated Press

WASHINGTON
The Clinton administration, responding to Israel's security concerns, is preparing to present Yasser Arafat with a document that calls for "very specific" steps to counter terrorism on the West Bank, Israeli ambassador Zalmay Shoval said Wednesday.

Arafat

On the eve of the summit being convened by President Clinton, Shoval said Arafat runs a risk along with Israel if the militant Hamas organization is not uprooted on the West Bank. "Without the security document in place we cannot sign an agreement," Shoval said at a news conference.

Clinton is to open the summit at the White House today, greeting Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, and then go to the site of the talks, on Maryland's eastern shore, for further meetings with them in the afternoon and evening.

In a flurry of telephone calls Wednesday he spoke with Arafat, Netanyahu, British Prime Minister Tony Blair and King Hussein of Jordan, who is hospitalized at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., for cancer therapy.

Clinton also met for two hours with Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and Sandy Berger, his assistant for national security.

"He wants to be involved throughout," a White House official said at a briefing held under rules that shielded his identity. "I expect he will spend lots of time there."

On the Palestinian side, Saeb Erekat, a senior negotiator, said the Israeli pullback under discussion must be followed by a third one even if the two sides agree to move to negotiations on a final settlement.

"Rest assured we have a policy of zero-tolerance for terrorism," Erekat said at a news conference.

Erekat said if a final agreement and the withdrawals are not completed by May 4 — a deadline projected in interim accords between Israel and the Palestinians — Arafat simply will declare the establishment of a Palestinian state.

Palestinian promises to restrict Hamas, which claims responsibility for several bloody attacks on Israeli civilians, will not suffice, Shoval said. "We have so many general promises we can paper the walls with them," he said.

Spokesmen at the White House and State Department echoed Israel's concerns and condemned the latest incident, an attack that killed one Israeli and wounded another as they swam in a spring on a communal farm outside Jerusalem.

"We join him in condemning the violence that took place," Joe Lockhart, the president's spokesman, said of Netanyahu's denunciation of the attack.

Netanyahu warned Tuesday that "without fulfillment of all Palestinian security commitments there will not be an agreement."

Meanwhile, CIA director George Tenet has been in the region consulting with Israeli and Palestinian officials on tougher security measures.

State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said Hamas extremists "are a threat to everyone in the Middle East," including Arafat. "We have a common enemy and that is Hamas," he said.

Rubin confirmed, meanwhile, that the Clinton administration was "trying to stitch together a package of measures that will fight terrorism."

The State Department official said breaking up the Hamas infrastructure was one goal. Shoval, meanwhile, said Israel's demands that illegal weapons be confiscated, terrorist cells uprooted, and terrorist suspects not be released from prison.

Shoval also reiterated Israel's demand that the Palestine Liberation Organization either scrap its covenant or cancel the 29 provisions he said call for Israel's destruction.

Rubin indicated the administration would not press the point at the summit. He said the Palestinians had taken action on the charter and that any further changes should be taken up by Israel with the Palestinians.

Shoval confirmed that Netanyahu had agreed to relinquish 13 percent of the West Bank to the Palestinian Authority, with 3 percent turned into a nature preserve. He said security issues would "make or break" the conference at the Wye River House in Maryland.

A redeployment of Israeli forces on the West Bank and specific security measures by the Palestinians are the "two pillars" of any accord, Shoval said.

WWII internees sue for interest

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES

A group representing World War II internees of Japanese ancestry sued the U.S. government for failing to properly invest $1.65 billion appropriated by Congress for reparations.

The National Coalition for Redress/Reparations filed the lawsuit Tuesday in federal court seeking a minimum of 5 percent interest on the original $1.65 billion fund — an amount estimated by the plaintiffs to be about $200 million.

The coalition alleges that the money wasn't placed in an interest-bearing account until earlier this year, and the $5.74 million remaining isn't enough to repay hundreds of former internees.

Japanese-Americans relocated to internment camps following the Dec. 7, 1941 bombing of Pearl Harbor are each entitled to $20,000, and Japanese Latin Americans who were taken from South America and sent to internment camps in Texas are each entitled to $5,000.

The 1988 Civil Liberties Act provided the money and mandated whatever remains after payments be placed in an interest-bearing account.

U.S. Justice Department spokeswoman Christine DiBartolo said the money was invested in an interest-bearing account, although the funds were not invested immediately because reparations were being dispersed too quickly.

There are 47 cases awaiting immediate $20,000 payment, an additional 427 claims still under review, and 740 unresolved cases involving Japanese Latin Americans, according to the plaintiffs.

American prisoner undergoes testing

Associated Press

LIMA, Peru

Doctors may recommend that an American woman serving a life sentence for treason be allowed to remain at the less-harsh prison where she was taken for medical tests, prison officials said Wednesday.

New York native Lori Berenson, 28, was moved last week from the frigid Yanamayo prison 12,700 feet above sea level in the Andes mountains to a lower-altitude clinic for medical tests.

But the length of her stay at Socabaya prison, 465 miles southeast of Lima, would depend on the results of medical tests, prison officials said. Socabaya is 7,600 feet above sea level.

Berenson suffers from arthritis, chronic gastritis, a throat infection and circulatory problems from the altitude, doctors said.

Prison officials said that there is no serious threat to her health and that she was transferred because Yanamayo lacked medical facilities.

Berenson, a former Massachusetts Institute of Technology student, was convicted in 1996 by a hooded military judge for helping leftist rebels of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement plan a thwarted assault on Peru's Congress.

Her family says she is innocent and that her trial in a secretive military court denied her due process. Her parents last week petitioned the Organization of American States to review her case.

In Yanamayo, she slept under eight blankets to protect her from the freezing wind whipping through her cell window, which had no glass. She bathed in cold water.

She has suffered from laryngitis almost constantly, and her hands are cracked and swollen, her mother Rhoda Berenson has said.

Prison officials have asked Peru's National Penitentiary Institute to transfer Berenson to a maximum security prison while she undergoes treatment because Socabaya was not intended to house prisoners convicted of terrorism or treason.

In Socabaya, she is not permitted contact with other prisoners.

House may narrow inquiry

Hyde might trim charges to expediate process

Associated Press

WASHINGTON
White House and House Judiciary Committee lawyers will meet next week for the first time to discuss the impeachment inquiry into President Clinton's conduct. The session next Tuesday will be held as the committee's chairman considers trimming back the allegations.

Paul McNulty, a spokesman for the committee, said Wednesday the panel's lawyers would invite White House counsel Charles F.C. Ruff "to provide us with exculpatory information."

The meeting also would cover how the House and the White House could "work together to expedite the process," McNulty said.

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., the committee's chairman, said he may reduce the number of allegations against Clinton in order to finish the panel's work by the end of the year and recommend whether or whether not the House should begin impeachment proceedings. Democrats suggested Hyde was reacting to public opinion polls.

As Hyde was declaring his intention to "streamline" the inquiry, a new poll indicated a majority of Americans disapprove of the way Republicans are handling the impeachment investigation.

In remarks that an aide insisted were unrelated to poll numbers, Hyde, R-Ill., told a reporter, "We might have to reduce" allegations against Clinton if the inquiry is to meet Hyde's self-imposed deadline of Dec. 31.

Republicans postponed on Wednesday the only impeachment-related hearing scheduled prior to the election, an Oct. 22 subcommittee session at which scholars were to testify on historical standards for removal from office. Since the House has remained in session longer than expected this year, lawmakers did not want to interrupt their campaigns to return for the hearing, officials said.

Rep. Bobby Scott, D-Va., ranking Democrat on the Constitution subcommittee, said if Republicans really want to streamline the inquiry, they would hold the hearing on schedule. Then, he said, the Judiciary Committee could charges, emphasized his voluntary deadline won't be met "without cooperation from the White House and committee Democrats."

Paul McNulty, a spokesman for Judiciary Committee Republicans, said: "Unlike the Democrats, chairman Hyde has remained consistent in his views on this matter. He promised to conduct a fair, focused and expeditious inquiry, and he continues to deliver on that promise."

Hyde said he believed the public was tired of the Clinton-Lewinsky matter but insisted, "I haven't looked at any particular polls. My sense is there's a burnout factor."

Last Thursday, Hyde led the debate as Republicans won a bitterly partisan 258-176 vote to authorize an investigation without limits on subject matter or time. Hyde has often expressed his yearend goal, but only in the last two days has he talked of streamlining the allegations.

The new poll released Wednesday, by CNN, USA Today and the Gallup organization, indicated that 55 percent of likely voters disapprove of the way Republicans are handling the current investigation, while 43 percent approve.

That disapproval crosses party lines, however, because half the likely voters disapprove of the way Democrats are handling the investigation as well.

A majority of likely voters, 54 percent, favors impeachment hearings, although they oppose an impeachment trial or Clinton's ouster.

The poll of 1,004 adults was last weekend and has a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points. The sample of 461 likely voters has a margin of error of plus or minus 5 percentage points.

Some Democrats on the committee said they believe Republicans have been affected by a backlash resulting from an unpopular investigation.

determine standards for impeachment and decide whether the allegations meet those standards.

In a written statement, Hyde said the committee would "focus on the core charges against the president of lying under oath, obstruction of justice and witness tampering." Chief committee investigator David Schippers has prepared 15 "substantial and credible" grounds for impeachment, four more than Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr presented.

Asked whether he was giving lesser weight to Schippers' allegation that Clinton "may have been part of a conspiracy with Monica Lewinsky," Hyde said, "I couldn't make that judgment now."

Basketball Slumping with Baseball on the Rise

The National Basketball Association ended its perfect record Tuesday when it was "forced" to cancel the first two weeks of the 1998-1999 season. A total of 51 seasons had been completed without a cancellation due to labor negotiations. Unable to reach an agreement with the Player's Union, the NBA canceled a total of 99 games between Nov. 3 and Nov. 16.

NBA Deputy Commissioner Russ Granik said, "This is a painful decision for us, but we can not start the season until we have a fair agreement in place."

This is painful? Wait until the NBA returns to empty stadiums. The old fans are too stubborn to support striking millionaires, and the kids are too easily diverted towards other sports, especially other sports on video games. The primary consumers grew up with deficient attention spans in the golden years of Sesame Street; they do not have the patience to follow a sport with no definite schedule.

Last year the players and owners divided up about $1.75 billion in basketball-related income. In 1995, the owners agreed to pay the players between 48 and 51.8 percent of the total. Last season the players took home $1 billion in salaries and benefits, or 57 percent of the total; the average player salary was $2.6 million. The owners have exercised their right to impose a lockout. The players want more money.

The Player's Union has proposed that the owners pay a luxury tax on certain exorbitant contracts. The tax money would then be redistributed to low-revenue teams as compensation for tighter salary caps.

The owners refused.

The NBA has made proposals to raise the player's share of the total by 20 percent over the next four years. This would result in an average player salary of over $3.1 million and a minimum salary for 10-year veterans of $750,000.

Granik said, "Unfortunately, the union leadership has been unwilling to give any serious consideration to what we have offered."

Unfortunately, both parties have neglected to consider the example baseball's players set four years ago. After the strike, America's pastime became America's waste of time until Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa combined for one hundred and thirty-three home runs in a single season. If Larry Bird and Magic Johnson can lace up the Chuck Taylor All Stars one last time, this lockout might be acceptable. But Michael Jordan is on the golf course, and a field of high school athletes is expected to fill his basketball shoes.

The NBA cannot afford a strike. In a new, fast-paced, athletic generation of athletes and consumers, the NBA is on the verge of greatness. But even during baseball's dark years, basketball still couldn't claim to be America's most popular spectator sport, and it certainly did not rise to the status of "pastime." The NBA cannot afford to miss a season.

Everyone wants money, and everyone deserves money as long as the fans are willing to sacrifice a limb to see a game. The fans are willing and ready, but as the owners and players argue over percentages, the NBA as a sport is losing any loyalty it gained during baseball's strike. The fans can afford the players, but the players cannot afford a strike. If the National Basketball Player's Association strikes for money, the fans will strike for more baseball.

NBA season ticket holders will receive cash refunds for their tickets and an additional 6.0 percent interest. People holding individual game tickets for all preseason and regular season games that are canceled are entitled to a cash refund of the face value of the tickets or a "rain check" to be used at a later date.

They just don't understand. The fans will pay the money. They have already paid the money. The fans want games, but that is what basketball has come to: "rain-checks" for your support.

Note to professional millionaires: Baseball is back.

Beating the Midterms-Week Blues

Call me crazy, but I've always preferred finals week to midterms week. At least we get the benefit of "study days" and freedom from classes before we send our brains into overload at the end of the semester.

Midterms week always seems so much worse, as tests and projects are loaded on top of normal classwork, with Fall Break just out of reach.

I took most of my midterms last week. Determined not to get caught in the web of all-nighters and cramming, I tried to budget my time and begin studying early. My first exam was in statistics, a class that I have been struggling with this semester. I was determined to ace it.

I blew off my reading for other classes and concentrated all my efforts on understanding Z-scores and the normal distribution curve. I took notes on the chapters, made flashcards and studied with friends. I was a statistics maniac.

On the morning of the test, I walked confidently into the classroom with my no. 2 pencils and calculator. I looked over my notes briefly and, satisfied with my preparation, I began doodling in my blue book as I waited impatiently for the test to begin.

When the clock signaled 9:30, my professor instructed the class to begin. Finally, the moment of truth had arrived. I turned over my exam and began reading. Suddenly, I had a sinking feeling in the pit of my stomach when I realized that I didn't know how to answer the first question. I remembered studying the material, I could actually picture my notes, but any conceivable way to begin answering that question escaped me.

I read the next question in hopes that it would unlock the flood of information that I knew was buried somewhere in the depths of my cluttered mind. Nothing. Panic began to set in. In a desperate attempt to cling to my last shred of confidence, I went to the bottom of the exam and read the last question, hoping to find something that would spark some recognition. Again, I drew a blank.

It was now 10 minutes into the exam, and I hadn't written a thing. I looked around the room to see if anyone else was in a frantic state that would mirror my own, but my classmates seemed to be scribbling away, deeply engrossed in their work.

Somehow, I managed to regroup and get through the test. But as I turned in my paper at the end of the hour, I felt shaken and disappointed. I'd never experienced test anxiety like that before, and I had no idea what had gone wrong.

Midterms week didn't get much better from there. Within the course of the next two days, I did poorly on two more exams because I never caught up with the reading that I slacked on during those four days I spent living and breathing stats.

Disappointment gave way to frustration by the end of the week when I picked up my stats midterm. The result wasn't as disastrous as I feared, but it was definitely not reflective of the time I had spent studying. I walked home after classes on Thursday feeling angry at myself for bombing my midterms and managing my time so poorly. Several nights of sleep deprivation were beginning to catch up with me, and I promptly fell asleep as soon as I returned to my dorm. I woke up with bronchitis.

And so I found myself home sick on Saturday night, while my roommates danced the night away at Finnigan's. I began to feel sorry for myself as I sat on the couch with the remote control, cursing midterm week and counting the hours until Fall Break. And then the phone rang.

When I picked up the receiver and grumbled a greeting, I was surprised to hear the voice of a good friend of mine from home.

"Just wanted to see how you're doing," he said.

He chatted for awhile, and his call put me in better spirits. Then, at some point during the conversation, I mentioned the possibility that I might have an extra ticket for an upcoming home game. When I asked if he'd like to see the Fighting Irish in action, he grew quiet.

"Hello?"

"I'm here ... are you serious?"

"About what?"

"Me coming for a game ... are you serious?"

"Sure."

Suddenly he exploded, "Jac, are you SERIOUS?! Me, at a Notre Dame game! That's like a dream!"

Maybe it was lack of sleep, or the effects of the medicine I was taking, or maybe I was just having an emotional night, but when I heard those words, I felt my eyes fill up with tears. The thing is, my friend meant every word he said. Notre Dame has always been a dream of his. He has been following our football team for as long as I can remember, and his room is filled with as many navy and gold souvenirs as mine.

I hung up the phone that night and silently thanked my friend for reminding me how lucky I am to be here. By being a student at this university, I am living my dream. Not only that, I am living other people's dreams, people like my friend who love this place as much as I do but, for reasons known only by God and the Admissions Committee, are not able to attend this university. As I realized this, I suddenly felt ridiculous for letting midterms week get the best of me.

It's so easy to get swept up in the stresses of day to day living at ND. Classes and life in general can be very challenging here. We put a lot of pressure on ourselves to do it all, and to do it all well, from playing sports to partying to studying. Sometimes it seems like our efforts to achieve aren't paying off. But they always do.

After all, not everyone gets to walk the well-worn paths beneath the Dome, and call this place home. We are the lucky ones. Our efforts paid off.

Maybe midterms week isn't so bad after all.

Students donate mid-semester break for service seminars

By JULIA GILLESPIE
Scene Copy Editor

Many students look forward to October break from the first day of class registration. Unfortunately, once it rolls around many students are posed with the dilemma of what to do. Some students stay on campus, while others reluctantly return home.

This year, over 230 students will embark on service projects sponsored by the Center for Social Concerns. These opportunities enable students to do something worthwhile for those who are less fortunate while they form bonds of friendship with students whom they share common values with and earn academic credits.

Jay Brandenburger, the director of experiential learning and justice education at the Center for Social Concerns feels enthusiastic about this year's service projects. He feels the social concerns seminars "reinforce the university's mission statement, which advocates disciplined sensibility to poverty and justice, because it enables you to apply what you learn on campus in a larger, global community." These service projects include sites in Appalachia, Boston, New York City and Chicago.

The Appalachia Seminar was established in 1989. It consists of several project sites in the Appalachia region. Orientation classes provide members of the Notre Dame community with background information on the region.

Students participating in this seminar actively work during October break as they engage with members of the community and learn and grow from them. Throughout the week, they share their experiences with their peers.

"At the end of the week you really appreciate your experience, because the CSC works so hard to make a strong program, which every seems to really enjoy and benefit from," said Julie Reising, who attended this project in the past.

When participants return to campus, follow-up classes allow a forum for students to share their insights and analyze them accordingly. Presentations and readings also supplement discussions. A reflection paper at the end of the week allows students to present their experience and examine the impact of it on their personal lives and values.

The Social Concerns Seminar is a Children and Poverty Seminar of urban immersion in Boston or children must face. After students return to campus they focus on local children's programs within the South Bend community. These students in turn may contribute their knowledge and awareness to others while they further facilitate service at Notre Dame.

The Cultural Diversity Seminar in Chicago offers students one credit in either theology or sociology. It exposes students to Chicago's diverse cultural heritage and ethnic neighborhoods and customs as they explore problems that urban life and racism pose. Community groups work with participants in inner-city Chicago. Students also participate in unique ethnic activities while they reflect on their surroundings.

This service opportunity allows participants the opportunity to gain a greater appreciation of other cultures and an understanding of problems within diverse urban communities. Students ultimately examine how they may promote greater awareness to improve unfavorable social conditions.

The Washington D.C. seminar of Violence and Non-violence in American Life examines what causes violence in today's society in order to achieve a more peaceful national community. It also allows students the opportunity to acquire one credit that cross-lists with theology and government.

Four students will also give up fall break to assist residents of the Dominican Republic recovering from Hurricane Georges. The group will depart Saturday to participate in hurricane relief activities in the Dominican Republic's capital of Santo Domingo under the auspices of a local health-care agency in town.

"I am really excited and it will be a new experience," said Matthew Brummer, one of the participants. "More than 15,000 homes were destroyed so I expect a lot of confusion and I just want to help."

They will be under the direction of Martin Murphy, associate professor of Anthropology, who spends part of the year in the Dominican Republic as director of Notre Dame's Caribbean Studies Program.

New York City. Orientation sessions prepare students for their experience because they closely look at current legislation and reactions from children's advocates and educators.

Students learn from children in these communities, who face social issues, such as foster care, AIDS, teen pregnancy, child care, education and the juvenile justice system. Community leaders and program administrators work to inform Notre Dame students of these dire realities that some

T LAST!

From the beach to home, students ready for break

By JOELLE FARMER
Scene Writer

With a treacherous week full of midterms underway, one can only think of the upcoming Fall Break for relief.

While plans of returning home and going on road trips are being finalized, options for other activities for the break seem limitless.

Many students decide to go home for Fall Break to see family and friends. For other students, however, going home allows students to save money for the seemingly necessary Spring Break escape from the icy tundra that Notre Dame will be.

Being from a warm climate makes the Fall Break choice easy for senior Amanda Dodd, who will head home to Clearwater, Florida.

"Sun for free," Dodd said.

"Fall Break is a much needed rest for the rigors of adapting to college," said freshman Kevin Conoscenti. "I'll be able to see my friends, family, and girlfriend."

While this fall break marks the completion of half of the first semester of college life for freshmen, it is a time for job preparation for those who will graduate this year.

"For seniors, Fall Break is a time to continue interviewing and making office trips to potential employers," Andrea Razzano said. "I'm going home with a friend and interviewing with a company in D.C., but will be back for the game."

Then, of course, there are the Center for Social Concerns sponsored service seminars to sites such as Appalachia. There, students escape from Notre Dame with other students and engage themselves in learning about part of the country they ordinarily would never see.

"I'm not going to Appalachia because of the one credit," said Colleen Kinnon. "I've just always wanted to go to Appalachia and this is my last opportunity since Spring Break will be my last chance to spend time with my friends before graduating. Plus, I love the mountains."

With students stretched from California to Germany this Fall Break, a quietness will pervade the campus, leaving those who opt to stay here time to regroup and reflect. But, for now, chaos unfurls itself each day and night in the library.

■ SCENE THROUGH OUR EYES

Are you ready
I am.

By JENNIFER ZATORSKI
Assistant Scene Editor

Are you ready for fall break? I am. I have a date with American Airlines at 7:09 p.m. this Friday night and I can't wait. I am tired of doing work and taking tests. I am tired of writing papers. I am tired of eating dining hall food. I am tired of parietals. I am tired of formals and SYRs. I am just tired. I need a rest from Notre Dame.

I have been here since Aug. 19. I was thrilled to come back to Notre Dame. I had a great summer at home, but I often thought of Notre Dame. I missed sitting at the grotto at night and thinking about my day. I missed running around the lakes. I missed seeing the dome every morning as I walked to class. I missed watching the squirrels frolicking in the grass.

Most of all, though, I missed the people of Notre Dame. I have met some amazing individuals at this university and they are what make me happy to be a student here.

These past two months have been great, but they have also been long. I have a new schedule with great classes, but a lot of work. I still don't have a major, but at least I have narrowed it down to two possibilities. I have a new roommate and a great room, but a dorm with rules that seem a lot stricter this year. I have a new dining hall, but the same food and more traffic.

Unfortunately, life here has become monotonous. I sleep, shower, learn, eat, run, and study, everyday. I need to go home for awhile. It has been a long time since I've seen my family. I miss them and I miss my house. I will get to eat real food. My mom is already shopping for all of my favorite foods. I can't wait to sleep in my own bed in my own room. I'll be able to watch cable television. I won't have to wait in line to take a shower and I won't even have to wear flip-flops to the bathroom. If I want, I can even have guys in my house after 2 a.m.

When I am here it is so easy for me to get lost in my daily routine. I walk blindly from class to class and take for granted the beauty of this place and its inhabitants. I lose appreciation for how special my college experience really is. I want to get away, but then when I am gone I can't help but think about Notre Dame. It has been said that absence makes the heart grow fonder. I think that this adage makes sense.

I am a part of Notre Dame and it is a part of me now and forever. There will be times that I hate it here and times that I love it here. There will be times that I can't wait to leave and times that I can't wait to get back. I know that I will be excited to come back to Notre Dame on October 23. I just need a little distance to give me a fresh outlook and to remind me that life is good here.

Whenever I leave the Notre Dame campus to go to the airport I watch the dome from the car window until it disappears from view. On Friday evening when I can't see the dome anymore I will be excited to go home and will look forward to coming back to Notre Dame. I won't be sad, though, because I know that it will be waiting for me when I return.

Ray suspended for three more after talks with agent

Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich.

Michigan safety Marcus Ray, suspended because of his contact with an agent, will miss three more games, bringing the total to six.

Ray will not be eligible to play again until the Nov. 7 game against Penn State. Michigan had said last week that Ray would be eligible to play in the Wolverines' Oct. 31 game at Minnesota.

Michigan athletic director Tom Goss said Wednesday the confusion arose from the school's conversation with the NCAA last week.

"There was some confusion during the conversation on the telephone Thursday (Oct. 8) as to what we understood Ray's suspension to be," Goss said in a statement. "When we received the official letter late Friday, the NCAA spelled out that Marcus would have to miss 50 percent of the season."

The school said the confusion occurred because Michigan plays a 12-game schedule, instead of the usual 11-game schedule. Ray already has missed three games.

Michigan said last week that Ray and his mother received tickets to a July jazz festival in Cincinnati from a bank and that Ray picked them up at agent James Gould's office. The skybox tickets entitled the holder to free food.

The investigation also found that Gould had helped Ray's friends with arrangements for hotel room payments. The total value of the tickets and rooms was $477.23.

Michigan coach Lloyd Carr said this week that Ray no longer would be a captain and he was not guaranteed his starting job when he returns.

Ray was an All-Big Ten first-team selection last year and a second-team All-American. He had made 26 consecutive starts before his suspension.

In two games this season, he had 14 tackles.

Lady Vols shoot to improve on perfect season

Associated Press

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.

Improving on perfection.

"Many times when you win, I think it is easy to get complacent," Tennessee Lady Vols coach Pat Summitt said Monday. "It certainly has not been the case for our basketball team."

After a perfect 39-0 season brought an unprecedented third straight NCAA title, the Lady Vols are eager to set course for a fourth championship as practice opens with Midnight Madness on Friday.

All of Tennessee's starters return from last season, led by All-America forward Chamique Holdsclaw and point guard Kellie Jolly, the team's only seniors.

The Lady Vols' Fab Four freshmen — Tamika Catchings, Kristen "Ace" Clement, Teresa Geter and Semeka Randall — are sophomores now, and juniors Niya Butts and Kyra Elzy are on the mend.

And in the post — the Lady Vols' only perceived weakness last season — 6-foot-3 LaShonda Stephens has gotten stronger. And she could get some help from two freshmen — 6-5 Michelle Snow, Florida's Miss Basketball 1998, and 6-3 Shalon Pillow.

"I think everyone has worked hard (in the offseason) and we are ready to take the game to the next level," Holdsclaw said.

"Looking at our basketball team and staff, the thing that I am particularly pleased with is that we have consistency again," Summitt said as she begins her 25th season.

"We return the nucleus of our basketball team in terms of our players that understand how to start and our players that understand how to make an impact off the bench."

Summitt's also happy that her three top assistants, Mickie DeMoss, Al Brown and Holly Warlick, all return after being "courted more than our team this past offseason."

If there is a difference from last year, it's the result of the time the Lady Vols spent in the weight room in the offseason.

"I think you will see on the court that a number of (players) ... have committed to getting much stronger," Summitt said. "I know we learned last year from our closest competitors how physical the games can be."

In character, the Lady Vols will face as many as 13 ranked teams in their 27-game regular schedule, including additions Purdue and UCLA. Tennessee will be on the road at perennial powers Louisiana Tech, Connecticut and Old Dominion.

The Lady Vols enter the season with a 45-game winning streak — only nine short of Louisiana Tech's 54 game record. They know every opponent will be gunning for them.

"We are in the position where everyone is out for us," Jolly said. "They have been for the past few years now. We have to know that we can't have a bad game. We have to step up our game every single night because everybody is going to play their best game against us."

Holdsclaw said the streak factor won't affect her.

"I just know that when playing time comes that I want to go out there and win these games, and win another national championship," she said.

"We have to take it just one game at a time, and just get better as a team and mature together. We definitely have the talent. It is going to be exciting."

Pac-10 unbeatens prep for game

Associated Press

Oregon certainly won't be sneaking up on No. 2 UCLA.

"I spent six years as offensive coordinator there and they're still using a lot of the same things," UCLA coach Bob Toledo says. "When I watch them now, it's like looking in the mirror."

Which means there should be plenty of points in Pasadena when the 11th-ranked Ducks waddle into the Rose Bowl to play the Bruins. It's conceivable the teams could combine for 100 points and 1,000 yards.

Oregon (5-0, 2-0 Pac-10) and UCLA (4-0, 2-0) rank 2-3 nationally in scoring, with the Ducks at 50.6 points per game, and the Bruins at 48 points. The Ducks, led by the passing of Akili Smith and running of Reuben Droughns, average 554.3 yards per game. The Bruins, with Cade McNown at the controls, are at 485.3 yards.

"UCLA has all the ingredients to be a great team," Oregon coach Mike Bellotti said. "And we have staked a claim to that, too. We'll find out more about that this weekend."

For the Bruins, tailback Jermaine Lewis returns after a one-game suspension for his involvement in an off-campus fight. But he won't start, as Keith Brown and freshman DeShaun Foster were more than capable replacements. They ran for two touchdowns apiece and combined for 209 yards on 29 carries in UCLA's 52-28 win at Arizona.

McNown, who last week failed to reach 200 yards passing for the first time in 19 games, is trying to correct a flaw in his throwing motion.

Bruin signalcaller Cade McNown's pass completions have slipped in the past three games despite UCLA's climb to No. 2.

"He's a better thrower, but he's not throwing the ball better right now," Toledo said of his left-handed quarterback, who has hit on just 49.4 percent of his passes in the last three games after completing 60.6 percent last season.

Droughns is the Pac-10's leading rusher with 652 yards (7.5 per carry) and eight touchdowns. The 6-foot, 205-pound junior college transfer, ran for 217 yards and four TDs in Oregon's 51-29 rout of Washington State last week.

Smith, meanwhile, has joined the list of Heisman Trophy contenders with his play. The 6-3, 215-pound senior leads the nation in passing efficiency with a 196.3 rating. Smith has thrown for 1,418 yards and 15 TDs as the Ducks shoot for their first 6-0 starts since 1964.

Yankees-Indians give NBC high ratings

Associated Press

NEW YORK

NBC's coverage of the AL Championship Series between Cleveland and New York was the highest for any league championship series since before the baseball strike.

NBC averaged a 9.4 rating for the six games, 6 percent higher than the network's coverage of last year's NLCS in the same time slot. A ratings point represents 994,000 households.

The rating was 13 percent higher than Fox's ALCS coverage last year and 12 percent higher than NBC's coverage in 1996.

Tuesday night's decisive Game 6 posted a 12.9 national rating, down 1 percent from the Florida-Atlanta game last year.

In 1995, the league championship series were shown regionally as part of the failed baseball network involving ABC and NBC. The two series combined to average a 13.1 rating.

CBS posted a 10.7 rating in 1993 for the Toronto-Chicago series, the last year before the 1994 strike. This year's rating was higher than the 8.7 and 9.2 that CBS got in 1991 and 1992.

Series set: Yankees, Padres to open in New York

San Diego holds on to early-series lead to beat Braves Yanks, with extra day off, head into series to cap near-perfect season

Associated Press

ATLANTA
So much for all that talk about the San Diego Padres blowing it. The surprising Padres reached the World Series for the first time since 1984, shutting down the Atlanta Braves' comeback bid behind MVP Sterling Hitchcock for a 5-0 victory Wednesday in Game 6 of the NL championship series.

The Braves had won two in a row, fueling speculation they might become the first team in baseball history to overcome an 0-3 deficit in the postseason. But the Padres wrecked that plan, winning the series 4-2 with a five-run sixth inning off Tom Glavine. October hero Jim Leyritz drove in the go-ahead run.

"I felt this club was special," Padres outfielder Tony Gwynn said. "Even though we won the first three games of the series, then turned around and lost two, I still had a lot of faith in these guys. Coming here tonight, we were really confident. We really felt we could win this game tonight."

Now it's the underdog Padres, given little chance at the start of the playoffs, who will travel to meet the New York Yankees in Game 1 of the World Series on Saturday night.

At 38, Gwynn is the last these things, you're just not going to win them. We don't have anything to be ashamed about."

Hitchcock, forced to move up a day in the rotation because of Kevin Brown's relief appearance in Game 5, came through again. Just 9-7 in the regular season and with a history of pitching poorly on three days' rest, he improved to 3-0 with a 1.13 ERA in postseason wins over Houston's Randy Johnson and Atlanta's Greg Maddux and Glavine.

"It doesn't matter who we're playing," said Hitchcock, a former Yankees pitcher. "It's going to be the time of my life."

Hitchcock allowed only two hits in five innings and struck out eight. Leading 5-0, he left after a pair of leadoff walks starting the sixth and then Brian Boehringer — also formerly of the Yankees — relieved and got three quick outs.

With the game scoreless,

Glavine and the Braves ruined themselves in the sixth.

The inning began innocently enough when Gwynn grounded out. Greg Vaughn, back in the starting lineup for the first time since leaving the opener because of a strained left quadriceps, singled and ran to third

Up stepped Leyritz, whose three-run homer for the Yankees in Game 4 of the 1996 World Series at Atlanta sent them on to the title. He didn't hit the ball out of the park, though his RBI groundout put the Padres ahead.

Wally Joyner followed with a single and Glavine pitched around No. 8 hitter Chris Gomez, loading the bases with a two-out walk. Hitchcock hit a low liner that seemed to confuse Danny Bautista, and the left fielder got a bad break in toward the ball.

Bautista made a late dive and it was no good. The ball clanged off his glove and the Braves could only watch as two runners scored. That finished Glavine, and Quilvio Veras greeted John Rucker with an RBI single for a five-run lead.

The big inning quieted the crowd of 50,988, which had come hoping the Braves could force a Game 7 showdown between Maddux and Brown, who instead will oppose David Wells in the Series opener.

The Padres relied on their strong bullpen to close it out the combined two-hitter, with relief ace Trevor Hoffman getting the final three outs.

Having already beaten Houston (102 wins) and Atlanta (106), the 98-win Padres will try to do it again against the Yankees, who set an AL record with 114 victories.

"To go against two great ballclubs like Houston and Atlanta, it doesn't get any greater than this," Padres manager Bruce Bochy said.

"I never knew I'd like New York so much," he said. "I'm looking forward to this."

With a combined 212 wins, the Yankees and Padres have the most victories among World Series opponents. The previous mark was 210 by Baltimore (108) and Cincinnati (102) in 1970.

Associated Press

NEW YORK
Bad news for San Diego: The Yankees will be well-rested when the World Series starts Saturday night.

Not that New York needed any more advantages, what with an AL-record 114 wins, the home-field advantage and the rabid fans of the Bronx Zoo.

"Hopefully we can wrap it up in four," David Wells said early Wednesday in the glow of the Yankees' record 35th American League pennant. "That would be the best thing to do."

As the autumn sun splashed down on Yankee Stadium, players took a day off following the 9-5 victory over Cleveland that won the AL championship series 4-2.

There was talk some players would go to Atlantic City, N.J., on Wednesday night, and who could blame them? The Yankees' number has come up just about every time this year.

"To me, this is probably the tensest part, getting here," manager Joe Torre said. "The World Series, if we win the World Series, it will be magnificent and we will celebrate. But getting there is a such a tough mountain to climb, and to have been able to do that against a club like the Cleveland Indians, who have been there so often, it is just very satisfying."

New York, second in the AL with a .288 batting average, won the pennant despite a .218 average in the six games against the Indians. After scoring five runs in the first inning of the opener, New York was just 6-for-39 (.154) with runners in scoring position through Game 5. The Yankees then went 4-for-12 in Game 6.

"I felt the pressure leave us after Saturday, once we were even at two," Torre said. "We had a good batting practice Sunday. We left some runners. We could have scored more."

Pitching, as it has all year, carried the Yankees. Wells, who won two of the four games against Cleveland, was voted the ALCS MVP and is expected to start the World Series opener.

While most Yankees didn't care who won the NL title, Wells had a clear preference.

"Hopefully, San Diego," he said. "That is where I am from. That is where I grew up, and it would be exciting for me and a challenge as well."

The Padres then obliged him by beating Atlanta 5-0 to win the NL championship series 4-2.

"I never knew I'd like New York so much," said Padres manager Bruce Bochy.

After taking Wednesday off, the Yankees will regroup Thursday for a practice. Torre must figure out how to order David Cone, Andy Pettitte and Orlando "El Duque" Hernandez for Games 2-4.

While nothing was set beyond the opener, the best guess Wednesday was that Hernandez would start Game 2, followed by Cone and Pettitte.

If they are to take their place with the great teams, alongside the 1927 Murderer's Row, the 1970s Big Red Machine and others, the Yankees must win four more games and win the Series for the second time in three seasons.

"People can argue where we fit," Cone said, "but we don't dwell on it."

The Padres celebrate their defeat of Atlanta Wednesday night for a trip to the World Series.

remaining member from the Padres' only other trip to the Series, a five-game wipeout by Detroit. The eight-time batting champion contributed two hits in the clincher against Atlanta.

"For me it's a big thrill. I've never been to Yankee Stadium," he said. "I'm going to celebrate tonight."

For the Braves, the loss meant the end to yet another disappointing year. Despite having reached the postseason a record seven straight times, they have just one World Series championship to show for it. And with 106 victories, they are the winningest team to fail to reach the Series.

"This team is good. We don't need to reevaluate much," Braves manager Bobby Cox said. "If you don't get hot in Coley, Mary K. Hoffman, and Katie Wagner can step up and offer their experience. They have the talent, but need better communication and a boost in confidence.

Paulen believes Saint Mary's needs to make more of a mental adjustment than anything.

"We're just hoping to come out and play strong and smart. We know we have the potential; we just need to use it," she said. "We tend to come out defensively when we know we're up against a good team. We just need to put it all together and give it our best."

Saint Mary's plays Alma College on Saturday at home and hopes to turn things around. This will be another conference game for the Belles and an important one for them, mentally.

Foley benched after poor play at St. Louis

Associated Press

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Glenn Foley's poor outing in St. Louis last weekend has, for now, cost him his job as New York Jets quarterback.

Vinny Testaverde, 2-0 in Foley's injury-related absence earlier this season, will start Monday's critical game at New England.

"I don't feel like Glenn is back to the way he was before," coach Bill Parcells said Wednesday. "I told him he will get an opportunity to try and sharpen himself up."

Foley began the season with a 415-yard, three-touchdown effort in a 36-30 overtime loss at San Francisco. But he struggled in the second half of Game 2, a loss to Baltimore, and was awful — 5-for-15 for 76 yards, with two interceptions and a fumble — at St. Louis before Testaverde came on late in the third period.

Parcells deliberately held Foley out of the previous week's game with Miami, even though Foley claimed he was fully recovered from the rib problem. He then reinstated Foley as the starter for the Rams game.

Now, it's Testaverde's job, at least for this week.

"I just look at the situation as Glenn just isn't quite what he was early in the season right now and I can't pinpoint why," Parcells said. "We're at a point in there season where we have some tough games, and if we don't do something pretty soon, we will not be a factor."

Testaverde is looking at the current QB order as temporary. The 12-year veteran, a starter for most of his career in Tampa Bay, Cleveland and Baltimore, isn't looking beyond Foxboro Stadium.

"I look at it as one game," said Testaverde. "I haven't been around Coach Parcells enough to know what he's going to do. That doesn't concern me. Playing good football is what concerns me."

"I don't expect all of this to be on my shoulders. We have a very capable offense. I am more concerned about what the Patriots are doing. If we do our jobs, we can win the game."

Foley, in his fifth pro season, has had a rough career. He was a third-stringer for the first three years, barely getting any action. He's also been injury-prone, and those injuries not only have cost him playing time, but twice have contributed to losing the starter's job.

He spoke mysteriously on Wednesday about "other factors" that contributed to his demotion.

"You do what you're told and go about it that way," Foley said. "If you don't do well, you don't win. You look at the circumstances and everything going on around you. I am one guy trying to win."

But he also admitted that after his poor showing in St. Louis, he deserved to be set down.

"I was terrible and I cost the team big in that game," he said. "I really deserved to get benched. When you don't play well, you don't play and I'm not playing this week. That's just the way it works."

Irish

to handle success yet or maybe he just sees where his team needs improvement.

The squad has the opportunity to have an outstanding season and while he might not like to admit it, a lot of it will have to do with the head coach.

"All you have to do is watch this team and see where this team is going and what's happened and you know who deserves the credit," defensive coordinator Greg Mattison said. "Our head football coach has had a plan."

That plan started in Shreveport, Louisiana after the Irish closed their season with a loss to LSU. Dave saw his team get out-muscled, so he brought in strength and conditioning coordinator Mickey Marotti to get his troops bigger, stronger and better.

The Irish have been the dominate team in the second half in every game this season. Not even the sweltering desert heat could slow the Irish.

Now Davie and a lot of hard work by his players and staff have the Irish sitting pretty with a 4-1 mark staring at cream puffs Army, Baylor, Navy and Boston College next on the slate.

While Davie's and the team's favorite cliché remains, "take it one game at a time and our next game is our biggest," it works. If the Irish keep taking it game by game, the reservations to Pasadena and the top ten will take care of itself.

Davie has also had his team adapt the phrase from former Irish coach Dan Devine, "a team that won't be beat, can't be beat."

But Davie may be instilling more than catchy phrases in his team.

"Right now this team is taking on his personality of aggressiveness, toughness, and doing things the right way," Mattison said. "That's why we're where we're at."

Before we start patting everyone on the back, the reality is a 4-1 start does not make a season. Davie and the Irish still have a long way to go. But what is encouraging is what Davie and his team have already been through.

"He stood like a rock when there was a lot of criticism and negative things throughout the summer and throughout last season," Mattison said. "He's never wavered and that's a total credit to him and that shows."

While there is quite a difference from the 1997 Irish and this year's version, according to coach Mattison, there is no difference in the leader.

"He has the same focus," Mattison said. "He has the same preparation and I think that the kids are playing better and maybe we as assistants are doing a better job. The plan and his focus haven't changed any."

Hopefully, the way the Irish are playing won't change either.

The Irish defensive line credits the offseason training program for their ability to outmuscle opposing offensive units thus far this season.

Thank you Hall Staff and Community Service Commissioners!

Thank You Hall Staff and Community Service Commissioners

Residence halls are a vital source of community service initiatives. Hall staff and Community Service Commissioners play a key role in organizing service-learning opportunities that link students with community agencies in South Bend and beyond. For example, every Tuesday and Thursday residents of Pasquerilla East tutor at Monroe Elementary. During Fall Break, residents of Sorin Hall will travel to Chicago to rehabilitate three homes. The Center for Social Concerns would like to thank the Community Service Commissioners and Hall Staff for all their efforts to facilitate, promote, and organize hall-based community service.

Why Service?

Service fits into the bigger picture and helps us expand our individuality of faith because we reach out in cooperation rather than in competition. Service expands the circle of our communal sense of church. It's not that we have so much to give, we are also learning.

Br. Bonaventure Scully,

Keenan Hall Rector

Service opportunities are great for community building in the hall. Service also makes the Sunday liturgy come alive for the students and gives them an anchor, something concrete to attach to the Gospel.

Davie's second season a 180-degree turnaround

By JOEY CAVATO
Associate Sports Editor

Due to the power failure during Notre Dame's thrashing of the Sun Devils, head coach Bob Davie met the press on top of a golf cart with his back against the wall of the hallway that leads from the locker room to the field.

Davie had just led his team to three consecutive wins that effectively put an ugly summer and difficult first year behind him and got his back anywhere from being up against the wall.

While booking hotel reservations in Pasadena for the Rose Bowl is extremely premature, Davie appears to have righted the ship, but don't tell him he's responsible.

After the Michigan State debacle, Davie said numerous times that the blame lied with the head coach and the head coach alone. Not many of the Irish faithful disagreed, as the team was certainly unprepared for the Spartans.

Standing on top of that golf cart in Tempe, Davie began his press conference giving total credit for the current three game winning streak to the assistant coaches and the players.

Davie uses more cliches than Crash Davis taught Nuc Lalush in the movie "Bull Durham," but this one isn't accurate.

Maybe the second year coach isn't exactly sure how

After jumping to a 4-1 start this season, Bob Davie is quick to credit players, like Autry Denson (23), for putting the Irish on top.

Calvin puts Belles in two-game slump with 6-0 victory

By MOLLY MCVOY
Sports Writer

The Saint Mary's soccer team dropped another one Wednesday to Calvin College by a score of 6-0.

After a streak where the Belles went undefeated, winning three and tying two, Saint Mary's seems to be back in a slump. They have lost two in a row and their record is now 3-8-2. The Belles have been out-scored 15-1 in these losses.

Calvin dominated the game and proved yesterday that they deserved to be ranked sixth in the MIAA Conference. Calvin had a record of 10-5 and had scored 49 points going into the game, while Saint Mary's stood at 3-7-2 and had scored 17 goals.

At Calvin, the Belles continued to have a lot of trouble getting the ball to their offensive players. Saint Mary's had only one shot on goal the entire game and seemed to be on defense constantly.

"We seem to have a gap on the field," said defender and midfielder, Laura Paulen. "The defense can get it to the middle, but we have a problem working it through to the offense."

This is a problem that has been plaguing the Belles in all eight of their losses. Their defense has been tough, but has been called on to defend the entire game. Without an offensive attack, the defense has been tiring out in the down the stretch.

Midfielder, Mary K. Hoffman noted, "We definitely didn't create enough offense from the midfield."

The Belles did come out strong in the first half and held Calvin to only one goal. But Calvin adjusted well at half time and threw everything they had at Saint Mary's in the second half. They used a lot of substitution and varied their offense frequently. Saint Mary's has been outscored 8-0 in the second half in their last two games.

"They were very quick. They were switching players all over the field," said forward Katie Barger. "We really had a difficult time defending what they were throwing at us."

The Belles continue to look for leadership. The seniors, Joanne Wagner, Liz
