Abroad students cope after crisis

◆ Students in Angers, France come to terms with being abroad during the attacks

By PAT McELWEE
News Writer

ANGERS, France Shock, horror and disbelief were painted across the faces of the multinational crowd gathered around a television broadcast showing two jet planes slamming into Manhattan's Twin Towers last week.

Students and teachers from 28 different countries, who had come together in Angers, France to study French and forge a mutual understanding between people from foreign cultures, are now coming together to view the damage one group of people was capable of inflicting on another.

Cries of "Mon Dieu!", sighs and tears punctuated the silence that had fallen over the crowd of spectators in front of the French news broadcast.

Last week was one of fear, incomprehension, sympathy and resolve as people tried to come to terms with last Tuesday's events, their causes and their repercussions.

Early on, rumors spread quickly among American students, including 32 students from Notre Dame and Saint Mary's studying abroad. Real information on the events at home became difficult to obtain due to congested phone lines, faulty e-mail systems and slow Internet access on the Papers all over the world interpret what the recent terrorists attacks in the U.S. could mean. In London, various newspapers report the attacks as a declaration of war by Osama bin Laden who is now on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted list.

◆ ND students in London program respond to terror with prayer and phone calls home

By KATE NAGENGAST

LONDON Nearly 3,500 miles away from the east coast of the United States, Notre Dame students living in London packed into the basement of their classroom building last Tuesday to watch CNN. Now, one week, dozens of phone calls, two formal prayer services and multiple e-mails from the U.S. Embassy later, many are coming to terms with the terrorism from a distance.

"When I first heard the news I thought, 'I know so many people in that building. So far I've heard from my friends and family and people are OK, but our local churches are beginning to publish lists of the names of those still missing,'" said Jill Adimari from Rye, New York, a commuting suburb 20 minutes outside of New York City. "It's a lot of friends of friends. The worst part is still waiting to find out."

For Matt Johnston, from Washington, D.C. the terrorism hit even closer to home. Returning from work at Rectory Paddock, a psychology program in a school for students with severe learning and developmental disabilities, the director of the program informed him that their lecture would be cancelled due to a tragedy in the United States.

Attacks, investment fears drive market dip

By MARIBEL MOREY
Assistant News Editor

The Dow saw its largest point loss in history Monday as the industrial average plummeted 684.81 points, or 7.1 percent, to close at 8,920.70 — its lowest level since December 1998. Although Monday's stocks dove, its percentage loss today was still smaller than its 22.6 percent decline on Oct. 19, 1987, when the stock market crashed.

According to Notre Dame finance professor Roger Huang, the stock market's volatility is based on perception.

"The stock market goes up and down reflecting the long-term prospects of the company according to the perception of the shareholder," he said.

Confidence in America was shaken when hijackers led two planes into the World Trade Center towers and the Pentagon last week, causing thousands of casualties in what seemed to be an attempt to destroy the American symbols of capitalism and militarism.

"Once [the stock market] started falling, people could have lost hope and started selling," said Notre Dame economics professor Amitava Krishna Dutt. "A loss of confidence probably led to this."

Before the opening of the New York Stock Exchange Monday morning, the government asked shareholders to keep their money in the market as a sign of patriotism.

"The patriotic thing was not to sell stocks, but it could give the wrong signal to the market too," Dutt said. "People in the stock market are interested in making gains. The patriotic plea might not work."

Instead, the government should perhaps keep interest rates low or lower them even more and put some expenditure such as rebuilding efforts in New York, Dutt said. Also "[the government should] reduce uncertainty of the general climate. Whether there's going to be a war or not, make it clear," he said. "This is the plan and this is what we're going to do. The worse thing for the stock market is uncertainty."

The stock market is in an extremely volatile situation and it all comes from how people will react to current events.

The airline, entertainment and insurance industries saw a hard hit in the market Monday. "The first time the stock market was able to reflect the information [was yesterday]," Huang said.

Shareholders were able to contemplate the futures of these industries and take action accordingly.

"If the market had been open, it would have appeared smoother, but since it closed, all accumulated so the movement seems extremely dramatic."

INSIDE COLUMN

Getting back to normal

Over the course of the past week, the world got put on hold to express its sympathies and respects for those affected by the tragedies in New York, Washington, D.C. and Pennsylvania last Tuesday. We prayed for the victims and their families, lit candles in their honor, donated blood and hung American flags all across campus. I even saw a picture Monday in USA Today of a woman, undeterred by stores that had run out of flags, ribbons and other patriotic symbols, who took the next logical step and repainted the front of her house to look like the American flag.

Bryan Kronk

Sports Copy Editor

The past few days have tested our emotions, our thoughts, and our patriotism.

I'm proud to say we passed these tests with flying colors.

Never before have I seen such an outpouring of support for those who so desperately needed it. Attendance at churches across the country Sunday rivaled attendance at churches on Christmas. Donations are flying in from all around the world, and every website I see has some sort of solicitation to donate to the American Red Cross or another charitable organization. Heck, even Scrooge himself, Bill Gates, decided to donate to the cause.

This nation was called to action by a group of terrorists, and we responded tremendously, whether it was emotionally or financially.

However, as President Bush has asked us all, we need to move on.

It is obviously very easy to get caught up in speculation as to what will happen next in this story. But I think for most of us it's time to step back and resume our normal lives.

The stock market reopened Monday, television networks are resuming their normal schedules, Major League Baseball resumed its schedule last night, and other national and campus sports, if they aren't already, will also soon be in full swing.

I'm sure each sporting event in the near future will have some sort of recognition of those who perished in Tuesday's attacks. And I think that's the right way to go — moving on with our lives, but still acknowledging this event as an indelible part of our recent history.

We will move on from this. Of course, we have to move on from this. I know this doesn't give much consolation to the families and loved ones of those still missing, but it will get better. The ubiquitous news reports from the World Trade Center and Pentagon will subside, American flags will be raised from half-staff to its full height, and — eventually — we can all ride on airplanes without getting an eerie suspicion of the people sitting around us.

It's been a stressful week for the entire world. In my opinion, we as a campus have done all we can do for the time being. And I think we should all do our nerves a favor and relax a little. Watch your favorite sitcom tonight. Go and see a movie. Play some video games, even more than before. Go back and do whatever it was you were doing on last Monday, before the course of all of our lives were changed forever. After all that we've been through, I think it's the least we can do to reward ourselves for a week of proving who we really are as a nation.

Students eager to help, but often turned away

New York
When the first plane struck the north tower of the World Trade Center around 8:45 am Tuesday, Angelo Parano and his brother Mario were working on the Brooklyn Bridge as part of a team of bridge painters. After helplessly watching the two tallest buildings in New York collapse, the Parano brothers, both certified steelworkers, rushed over to ground zero to begin searching for survivors.

They worked at the site for three straight days, Angelo said, stopping only to sleep a few hours at a time.

"When you're down there, you don't want to leave," he explained. "If you think you hear a sound under the rubble, you want to stay and keep digging, not give up your spot to someone who doesn't know what's going on."

As the week progressed, Angelo and most of those wanting to volunteer throughout the city found it increasingly difficult to help. Columbia University students waited for hours in long lines at St. Luke's Hospital, and many found themselves searching out other donation sites at St. John the Divine and Wien Hall, neither of which accepted blood Tuesday.

Columbia's Student Development and Activities began investigating ways to get involved early on. Gene Awakuni, vice president of Student Services, tried canvassing various human services agencies to see what was needed. But, he said, his effort was frustrated as "many agencies aren't really geared up for the ongoing service effort yet."

In the meantime, he explained, "we've been asking students to stand at our tents on Low Plaza" that have served as makeshift depots for donated food and other items.

UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH FLORIDA

Tropical Storm closes university

Tish Griffin and her friends didn't let Tropical Storm Gabrielle dampen their weekend. They ignored the rain and partied in Ybor City. Griffin, who lived in Japan for nine years as a "Navy brat," braved typhoons of the Pacific and said she is used to tropical weather. But she said she wanted to experience a Florida tropical storm. "I actually went out in it and got soaked," Griffin said. Gabrielle swept through Tampa on Friday leaving its mark on the University of South Florida's Tampa campus in the form of broken, twisted branches that litter the sidewalks and toppled trees. Crews repaired tattered USF banners along Fowler Avenue on Sunday. They also put back newspaper stands that could have been deadly in the company of high winds. Topping 40 miles per hour, winds uprooted several trees — a tall palm in front of Cooper Hall and a tree in the green area between the science buildings and fine arts. Seeing Gabrielle's path inch toward Tampa, university officials closed the campus Friday and Saturday.

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

Attack may affect mental health

As the shock of Tuesday's tragedy begins to wear off, University of Virginia students, faculty and staff are all reflecting and coping with last week's events in New York, Washington and Pennsylvania in different ways. According to the University of Virginia Medical Center's IQ Health System Web site, some Americans may face acute stress, which can last from four to six weeks or a delayed onset lasting up to six months due to shock and fear. "Students are absolutely stunned and horrified," University spokeswoman Louise Dudley said. Dudley said she believes there will be a long process and period of grieving for many Americans. In addition, many people may have friends and family members that were killed or are still missing. "We've never experienced anything like this before," Dudley said. The first step in trying to cope and resume life as usual is communicating and discussing cares and concerns with others suffering through the same tragedy said Dr. Russ Federman, director of the University's Counseling and Psychological Services.

Oktoberfest run/walk benefits will go to firefighters

By KATIE RAND
News Writer

The Saint Mary's Athletic Department and the Student Athlete Advisory Council announced all funds collected at this year's annual Oktoberfest Run/Walk will be donated to the families of injured and fallen New York firefighters.

Athletic director Lynn Kachmarik, students and faculty were in the process of selecting a charity to donate the money to when the horror of Tuesday's tragic events in New York City and Washington, D.C. hit campus.

"One hundred percent of the proceeds will go to the New York Firefighters 911 Disaster Relief Fund, which was set up through the International Association of Firefighters. The money will then go to help the families of those firefighters who were injured or killed during last week's events," Janel Miller, Student Intramural Coordinator, said.

Oktoberfest, which includes a three mile run and one-in-a-half mile walk across campus, will be held during Saint Mary's Pride Week Oct. 2 at 5:30 p.m.

Originally, a Saint Mary's exclusive event, Oktoberfest was started in the 1980s and was formerly a fundraiser for the Intramural Program. Two years ago, with co-sponsorship by the Student Nurses Association, the run/walk grew into a campus charity event, raising around $500 annually for Breast Cancer Research.

Salon Communications, the Saint Mary's advertising club and other campus organizations are also sponsoring this year's walk.

To join in on the Oktoberfest Run/Walk interested participants may either join as an individual or with a team made up of five or more people from a recognized group such as a residence hall, club, sports team or department.

Registration and pledge forms are available beginning Wednesday, Sept. 19 in Angela Athletic Facility, however, teams are asked to pre-register with a phone call by 6 p.m. on Sept 28, and race day registration will also occur. More information is available on the pledge forms. The registration fee is five dollars per person.

Along with the Oktoberfest fundraising, Student Athlete Advisory Council began selling red, white and blue ribbons on Saturday at home volleyball and soccer games. Ribbons can also be purchased for one dollar through Oct. 2 at the front desk of Angela Athletic Facility.

"During a time when we are all looking for ways to help those in need, we can look ahead as a community to the next few weeks as our outlet to make contributions. Whether we buy a ribbon, give blood, or participate in Oktoberfest by running, walking or volunteering our time," Kachmarik said.

Contact Janel Miller about Oktoberfest at 284-4436 or mill5323@saintmarys.edu. Regarding donations for event planning or support, call Greg Petcoff, Assistant Athletic Director, at 284-5290, or gpetcoff@saintmarys.edu.

The airline industry is facing some harsh realities. The airlines companies have already started to layoff employees, such as Continental who downsized by 14,000 employees Monday.

"[The airline sector] will shrink. It's impossible to reduce uncertainty and maintain confidence," said Dutt.

However, increased security in airports means more jobs will be available. One sector will be losing, but the other will be gaining too, he said.

While jobs may shift from one sector to another in the airline industry, other companies affected directly by this tragedy face different issues. Cantor Fitzgerald, a bond brokerage firm that occupied the top floors of the north tower, lost close to 800 of its 1,000 employees.

"Imagine this company trying to stay alive with a loss of that many employees," Huang said. "Companies suffering such heavy losses need to undertake actions to secure the long-term survival and then they'll be able to get into the recruiting process."

blocks from the capitol building. So there was a big scare in D.C. and I was worried when I first heard," he said. "If it's true that the passengers on the plane that crashed in Pennsylvania took down the plane and fought the terrorists to keep it from hitting the Capitol it seems likely that I might owe the health of my family and friends to the people that were on that plane."

Many London students are also concerned about their own health and well being as American students living in a foreign country, and travelling to other areas of the world during next week's fall break.

"[The American embassy in London is] aware of Notre Dame and they keep us informed. We get daily phone calls and immediate dispatches for any kind of report about travel cautions and we turn that around into listserves and postings for the students," said Laura Holt, assistant director of undergraduate studies for the London Program.

"I think that we are safe here, but I also think we need to be discreet and respectful guests in a foreign country. It's not unreasonable to realize that in a foreign country you encounter foreigners, even those who are themselves relatively new to the country ... I caution those who [study or travel abroad] to think of their surroundings. The adjustments are hard," she said.

Likewise, Anastasia Gutting, director of the London Program at Notre Dame, sought to comfort parents who may have been concerned for their son or daughter's safety.

"The program has considerable previous experience with periods of heightened tension [like] the Gulf War and IRA terrorist activity. As in the past, we have consulted with the local authorities and given advice to our students," wrote Gutting in a letter to parents.

"The sense that we have from the U.S. Consul in London and the local police is that there's no special current danger. The British have, as a precautionary measure, tightened security, including increasing police presence in London."

Security cameras monitor lobbies in both the flats that house the students and the classroom building, in addition to the keys and swipe cards required for entrance. Should the situation in London worsen, the program's next step would be to place security guards in both buildings and contingency plans are in place should it ever be necessary to bring students back to the United States. But there are no expectations of such an event, wrote Gutting.

Londoners' reactions to the crisis in the United States have seemed sympathetic to students. Holt said an English stranger who wished to spend the day of mourning in the presence of an American accompanied her to a prayer service for the American community in London at St. Paul's Cathedral Friday.

Similarly, students have received calls and letters of condolences from members of Parliament they will intern for when session officially begins in October, and words of encouragement from strangers in pubs.

"One man even approached my friends and me at a bar and said, 'Are you Americans? I just wanted to let you know that we're all behind you here and give you my condolences,'" said Maureen Gottlieb. "I was shocked by how much the British people mourned for us too. I know that they are our allies, but the turn out at the service at St. Paul's and the general level of shock and sympathy were more than I ever expected from a country of people and ocean away from the U.S."

Notre Dame students received an invitation to Friday's service at St. Paul's Cathedral, also attended by H.R.H. Queen Elizabeth and H.R.H. Prince Charles, from the U.S. Embassy. Private prayer service for members of the Notre Dame community was also held in the classroom building Thursday night.

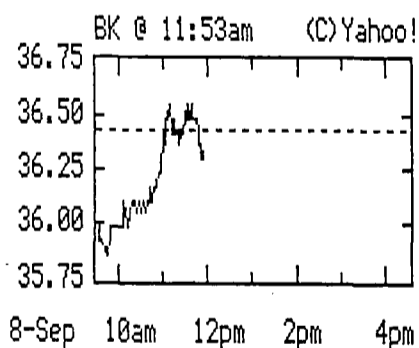

"I had been going to church every day last week and I wanted to go to [the service at St. Paul's Cathedral] because the people in London have been so amazing," said Adimari. "I also wanted to be with other Americans."

"Any word I know to describe what I've seen, felt and experienced with the students and English friends, and even English strangers wouldn't do," said Holt. "I don't have the vocabulary to describe it, except that the human spirit seems only to have been intensified."

However, London remains a long way from home. "You hear all the reports back from the States and everyone is so sorrowful," said Johnston. "Here there are the Notre Dame kids, but those are really the only Americans you see on a daily basis. The people in Britain are more removed so it's not the same atmosphere as at home. I do feel pretty detached. Sometimes it feels like I should be back home. There might be a little bit of guilt that I'm not there taking it all in."

Iran unlikely to join U.S. - led coalition:

Iran is unlikely to join a U.S.-led coalition to fight terrorism, but might join such an effort headed by the United Nations, the country's leadership has said. It also warned that America could add to its problems with military action against Afghanistan. Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei said Iran condemns any possible military action in Afghanistan that may cause another human tragedy.

101 die in Vietnamese floods:

Flood waters in Vietnam's Mekong Delta were rising again as the death toll from several weeks of heavy rains hit 101, officials said Monday. The death toll in the six affected provinces includes 90 children caught by rising waters. More than 124,000 houses and 2,105 schools have been flooded.

Hijack suspect studied aircraft

HAMBURG

More information has emerged in Germany about two of the suspected hijackers in the terrorist attacks on the United States.

A Hamburg university said Monday that one of the alleged hijackers studied aircraft engineering there. Ziad Jarrah, who was aboard the United Airlines plane that crashed in Pennsylvania on Tuesday, was a student at the University of Applied Sciences.

German authorities believe Jarrah and other suspected hijackers Marwan al-Shehhi and Mohammed Atta, were part of a terrorist group formed in Hamburg at the beginning of this year to destroy high-profile U.S. targets.

Police officials in Germany, France, the Netherlands and Belgium held talks Monday to coordinate their anti-terrorist investigations. The officials said their investigations had not yielded any links between suspects in the American terror attacks and Osama bin Laden.

Jarrah, a Lebanese national, was reported missing by his girlfriend, who was placed under witness protection. German federal investigators say they found a suitcase containing "airplane-related documents" in the girlfriend's apartment in Bochum.

Atta and Al-Shehhi were students another school in Hamburg, the Technical University. All three left Germany last year to take flight lessons in the United States, investigators say. It is believed that they later returned to Hamburg.

In Lebanon, Jarrah's uncle, Jamal, says his nephew was a secular-minded student who drank alcohol, which is forbidden by Islam.

Also Monday, the German federal prosecutor's office said it had searched three more apartments — one in Hamburg and two in Bochum — in connection with the investigation.

Spokesman Hartmut Schneider refused to give further details, although he said the action in Bochum Sunday involved "routine searches."

Federal prosecutors last week presented Hamburg's Technical University with a list of 13 people they are seeking, said a spokeswoman for the prosecutor's office.

Congress to move on airline aid

Associated Press

WASHINGTON

President Bush directed his staff on Monday to draw up a list of ways to help the airlines cope with economic losses they could face as a result of last week's terrorist attacks.

The House was also moving quickly on legislation that would do so.

Bush met with economic advisers to discuss the economy in the wake of the attacks and ordered aides to develop a package of proposals to help the airline industry, White House spokeswoman Claire Buchan said. Tuesday, Transportation Secretary Norman Mineta and Bush economic adviser Larry Lindsey were to meet with airline executives.

Buchan would offer no specifics of ideas considered in the 90-minute meeting, although concrete proposals were already emerging on Capitol Hill.

The House could pass legislation providing at least $15 billion in grants and credit to the industry, which was crippled by the shutdown following Tuesday's attacks and now must deal with a prolonged period of reduced passenger loads and added security expenses.

"If we don't act soon, I'm afraid that it will be even more difficult to resuscitate this key industry in the future," said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., ranking Republican on the Senate Commerce Committee.

House supporters tried to push through an airline bailout bill late Friday, but were blocked by several colleagues who warned against moving too hastily. That bill would have provided $2.5 billion to compensate the airlines for direct losses and opened credit lines of $12.5 billion to struggling carriers.

CLC creates task forces and agrees to stop 'in-fighting'

By JASON McFARLEY
News Editor

In the end, they agreed to agree.

And that was perhaps the most evident indication Monday from Campus Life Council members that the group would forgo the name-calling and in-fighting that rendered the group ineffective in the past — and this fall work more efficiently to influence University policy.

At their first meeting of the year Monday, CLC members agreed that operating under a task force system would enable the group to consider and draft more policy recommendations. The council forwards approved resolutions directly to the Office of Student Affairs.

"The task forces would be responsible for researching specific issues," said Brooke Norton, student body president and CLC chair. "They would basically be dissolved once their final report is delivered or when their work is done."

The council approved the creation of task forces dealing with three student life issues: an increasing number of undergraduates moving off campus, alcohol use and on-campus social space.

Some members voiced support for future task forces on religious diversity and on- and off-campus security.

To be most effective, the task forces should include no less than four members but no more than six, the council determined Monday. At least one student member and one non-student member should serve on each task force, the group decided.

The CLC membership includes students, faculty, rectors and a Student Affairs representative.

Norton told the council that non-CLC members were permitted to serve on task forces and that membership limits wouldn't apply in such cases.

"[But] in the past, there haven't been that many people outside the body who have joined task forces," Norton said.

TONY FLOYD/The Observer

Student body president Brooke Norton addresses the Campus Life Council during Monday's meeting.

There were many new faces at the 75-minute meeting Monday.

Perhaps the most noticeable newcomer was Assistant Vice President for Student Affairs

David Moss, who replaced Bill Kirk, assistant vice president for residence life, as the representative of the Office of Student Affairs.

No Faculty Senate representatives attended the meeting. The group will likely elect its representatives to the CLC at tonight's senate meeting.

In other CLC news:

◆ Members unanimously approved Norton's nomination of junior Danielle Ledesma as council parliamentarian. Ledesma holds the same position in the Student Senate.

◆ The council voted to end the group's biweekly meetings no later than 6 p.m. Meetings are every other Monday at 4:30 p.m.

◆ Norton announced plans for a security forum for on- and off-campus students next week. It forum would bring together Notre Dame Security/Police and the South Bend Police Department to discuss safety information with students, Norton said.

The forum is Sept. 25 at 6 p.m. in the Alumni-Senior Club.

What does the Church teach? Why does it matter? Have questions and need a place to ask them? Each one credit course in the series "Know Your Catholic Faith" will reflect on a central feature of the Catholic faith, so that students come away with a clear idea of what the Church holds on these topics as well as a basic theological and personal understanding of them. The courses will be based on the Catechism of the Catholic Church plus other pertinent texts, supplemented by personal reflection and experiential learning where appropriate. These courses should meet the needs of those students who know little or nothing about the faith, as well as those who are familiar with the faith but do not feel they have a clear grasp of certain features of Christian doctrine. The courses will be presented in a variety of formats and venues.

Faculty Opportunities

Faculty Needed! Through the Center for Social Concerns, Notre Dame students participate in service experiences so powerful that the lenses through which they've seen the world are permanently altered. Such experiences — providing health care to poor people in Ecuador, an intensive week in Appalachia — make our students want to know more. To deepen the learning these experiences inspire, we need faculty members to help them formulate questions for academic pursuit; professors who can provide bibliography, direct students to relevant courses, help them design research projects; teachers who will guide our students in thinking carefully about the issues. If you have interest in working with these students in these or other ways, please contact Mary Beckman at the CSC.

CSC Vehicle Info Session

(To be eligible to drive vehicles, attendance at an information session is required each year.)

Date: WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19 6:00 P.M. 124 CSC

Current Volunteer Needs

Ridgedale Presbyterian Church - Jackie Bralick 289-6321

Running an after school program on weekdays from 3-5 p.m. Volunteers needed to assist with reading skills, general homework assignments, and serve as role models for the youth. The program serves approx. 30 elementary school children from economically diverse backgrounds.

Northeast Neighborhood Center (NENC)- Rebecca Pettit 631-9970

Groups of students needed to assist residents of the Northeast Neighborhood (immediately south of Notre Dame's campus) with various beautification and winterization projects. Ideally 1 women's residence hall and 1 men's residence hall would "adopt" the NENC, to respond to projects as they arise.

Holy Cross Grade School - Diane Klee 234-3422

Students needed to tutor grade school-aged children Mon.-Thurs. from 3-4:30 pm at the school. Help especially needed Wed. afternoons for math.

LOGAN Center - Marissa Runkle (219) 289-4831

Searching for an energetic Choir Director. Choir members are adults with developmental disabilities who enjoy learning new songs and singing old favorites. The choir meets 1 hr/week and performs in the South Bend community for special occasions. Visit us at www.logancenter.org

Youth Outreach Ministries - Marcella Jones Preston 288-6809

Youth Outreach Ministries is an after school program held Mon.-Wed. from 3-6 p.m. Volunteers needed to help with homework, in computer lab, and to mentor children while assisting in developing their self-esteem. Volunteers needed 1-2 hrs. each afternoon.

South Bend Community School Corporation Adult Education Program - Gayle Silver 231-5690

Volunteers needed to tutor adults in basic skills/GED preparation/ESL classes. Morning, afternoon and evening classes are available at a variety of locations, including the Robinson Community Learning Center. Transportation needed for most sites. Initial short training session is required. Supervision is always provided in the classroom.

Personal Math Tutor Needed - Thang Hoang Home phone: 277-2770 Work phone: 631-7701

Tutor needed for a junior at Clay High School who experiences difficulty with algebra and geometry. Transportation offered from ND to their home, or son can come to ND for tutoring.

Special Needs Author Needs Assistance 287-3891 515 East Monroe Apt. 612 (Karl King Towers)

Rozanne has Carpal Tunnel Syndrome and needs a co-writer to help write her book by contributing ideas and typing for her. Rozanne has a flexible schedule, she suggests anywhere between 2-3 times/wk., for 3 hours at a time.

South Bend Housing Authority Youth Study Centers - Lisa 286-7683 or 235-7616

Volunteers needed to assist with on-going study centers run through the South Bend Housing Authority. Study centers take place Mons. & Weds. from 4 - 5:30. Two sites available, one behind LaSalle H.S., and on Monroe Circle.

BOG discusses Pride Week 2001

By SHANNON NELLIGAN
News Writer

Saint Mary's Board of Governance discussed plans for Saint Mary's Pride Week planned for the week of Sept. 30. During Pride Week the annual Oktoberfest Run/Walk will be held in benefit for the firefighters and their families who have died or have been injured in the New York City and Washington, D.C. disasters. Athletic commissioner Nicky Prezioso said the community will have the opportunity to purchase red, white and blue ribbons, with the proceeds also going to charity. This event is open to the Saint Mary's, Notre Dame, Holy Cross and the South Bend community.

BOG members also discussed at the Stress Awareness workshop which will be held Sept. 25. The focus of this is to open discussion for students about how to handle pressure this academic year.

"This will be an opportunity for first year students to learn about adjusting to college life," Student Activities Board coordinator Tiffany Mayerhofer said.

In other BOG news:

◆ Senior class president Meghan Meyer revealed plans for "Professors Unplugged," a forum for professors to share musical talent at Dalloways.

◆ Election commissioner Mary Crawford announced that First Year campaigning will begin today at noon. Meet the candidates will be Thursday at 7 p.m. in Angela Athletic complex and run offs will be Sept. 26.

◆ In light of last week's events, the BOG announced the rescheduling of previously cancelled campus events. Junior Kick Off, will now be held today at 7:30 p.m. in Haggar Parlor, the Abroad Welcome Back will be scheduled for sometime during SMC Pride Week and Cultural Jeopardy will be scheduled for October.

Student government has town hall meeting

By ERIN LaRUFFA
Associate News Editor

As part of its effort to increase communication with students, the office of the student body president will hold its first town hall meeting at 8 p.m. tonight in the Notre Dame Room of LaFortune Student Center.

"It's one step toward open communication with the student body," said Jonathan Jorissen, the office's chief of staff. The main topics of the meeting will be football ticket distribution and freshman orientation.

"These seemed to be two of the most widely discussed topics on campus. Obviously, that was before everything that happened in New York [last week]," said student body vice president Brian Moscona.

He added that the two topics are still important to discuss. Student government needs to develop plans now, according to Moscona, in order to make changes to next year's football ticket distribution or freshman orientation. Both topics are also fresh in student minds, so now is a good time to get their feedback, he said.

However, students attending the meeting may discuss other topics they believe are important.

"It's really an opportunity for students to talk about any issues they have," Jorissen said.

Moscona said he believes the meeting will generate a positive discussion and he encourages all interested students to attend. He explained that student input at the meeting will help student government and other campus organizations evaluate and try to improve both ticket distribution and freshman orientation.

Following the meeting, staff from the office of the president will meet to analyze the feedback they received.

"We'll share that information with whatever body could benefit from it," said Moscona. For example, he said that information related to ticket distribution would be passed onto the ticket office.

The office of the president will also use the feedback for its own projects, and will look into any feasible student ideas, said Jorissen.

"If it's something that we can accomplish, we will come up with a plan, and give it to the appropriate division so they can incorporate it into their plan for the year," he said.

Jorissen added that all students who would like to speak at the meeting will have the opportunity to do so, and all feedback will be taken seriously.

"We're going to value every student concern on the same level," he said.

Student body president Brooke Norton will facilitate the meeting. Other staff members from the office of the president will also attend the meeting, according to Moscona. He added that the office invited all of the groups within the Executive Cabinet to attend the meeting because they may also gain important insight from student feedback.

SMC plans for new phone system

By SARAH NESTOR
News Writer

Several Saint Mary's students experiencing problems with the current voicemail system may have to wait until the next fall before the kinks are fully worked out.

During the summer of 2002 SMC should complete the upgrades to voicemail which will allow for a more reliable source with more options and easier usage.

"We need to replace the system because it does not provide a lot of services that many students are used to at home, and to update the current system is just as costly as installing a new system," said Sandy Handley, the telecommunications coordinator.

Some of the new services that will be included are call waiting, caller id, call back and emergency 991 features. The new 991 service shows from which residence hall and room the call is placed, allowing security and medic services to respond more quickly.

The new voice mail will also be quicker to retrieve messages from. Instead of having to re-enter the extension when forwarded to voice mail callers will be instantly connected.

"The voice mail system after the switch will be a bigger network and allow for better management. The new system should not go down like the current system," Handley said.

The new add on equipment will be available in each room beginning next fall and instructions for students will be printed so that the new system is understood even though it should be easier to use.

major news sites.

Many rumors stemmed from a fear of immediate danger as Americans living abroad during a time of crisis.

"Did you hear? We're not supposed to speak English in public," one Notre Dame student announced Tuesday night to a group of other students.

Thoughts also turned to those at home. Like many in the United States and Western European countries, students and professors here had loved ones who worked in the World Trade Center or the Pentagon, who lived in New York, who are firefighters in New York or who were traveling by plane.

"It was very frightening right after it happened because I couldn't get a hold of anyone in the U.S.," said Jessica Needles, a Saint Mary's junior studying abroad.

By midnight (5 p.m. South Bend time) all Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students had contacted loved ones at home.

Tuesday night at the dormitory, students tried to make sense of the horrible scenes in New York. They gathered in the hallway for an impromptu prayer service. Later that night, there was a meeting led by Julia Douthwaite, director of Notre Dame's program in France, and Tom Bogenschild, director of all International Study Abroad programs, who had coincidentally arrived in Angers Tuesday morning.

"I wanted to give a sense of calm and a sense of control," said Douthwaite. "We just wanted to let the students know that the University is monitoring closely the events and that there is no need to worry and no need to leave France."

Now, a sense of calm has returned to Angers, with thoughts turned to the plight of the victims and the uncertain future with its prospects of retaliation, worldwide cooperation and the perceived dawn of a new chapter in world history. Fears and rumors remain, but life has, for the most part, gone back to normal.

The support from other students, professors and the French people themselves has aided this process toward a feeling of normality.

"The atmosphere's been very sympathetic here," said Needles. "I haven't encountered any negativity."

Douthwaite agreed that everyone here in France has been very aware and sympathetic.

"I get letters of support everyday," she said. "We've received letters from all our neighbors. And all the host families have asked me to express their condolences to the students."

The administration of the Université Catholique, where Notre Dame students attend, responded immediately by opening up extra Internet access, translators and televisions to students. Condolence letters were given to each American student Wednesday and Mass and three minutes of silence were observed Friday.

Students of all other nationalities have repeatedly expressed their incomprehension and concern. The prevailing worldwide opinion is that this has been a tragedy for all of humanity, not for the United States alone. Waiters, bakers and vendors of all sorts react to an American accent with words of condolence and interested discussion.

The official reaction of France has been equally concerned, alarmed and sympathetic. France is in a state of increased security, with increased police and military presence at hubs of transportation and locked trash-cans in Paris.

President Jacques Chirac has pledged his support for the United States. The French networks cancelled all programs for two or three days to devote all their time to the events in the United States. And one front-page editorial in Le Monde ("The World") proclaimed, "We are all Americans!" echoing John F. Kennedy's words in Berlin.

The overwhelming sense in France is that the United States is in good company in the world. The possibility for cooperation between democracies to ensure safety is real and visible. Students feel as safe in France as they would in their home towns.

Kearns summed up the feeling here Monday: "Angers has proven itself to be a very calm town," she said.

"It was very frightening right after it happened because I couldn't get a hold of anyone in the U.S."

Former radio show host talks to students about dating

CHRISTINA REITANO/The Observer

Former radio talk show host Ellen Gootblatt talked to students about making decisions about relationships during a Monday night lecture.

By MARY CAMPE
News Writer

Former radio talk show host Ellen Gootblatt spoke about relationships to students at Saint Mary's Monday night.

Gootblatt travels to colleges around the country to help young adults "make wise and healthy decisions regarding their relationships with family, friends and loved ones."

Gootblatt talked about three issues pertaining to relationships: "Meeting, Dating, Relating and Mating," "Sex, Passion and Intimacy" and "Men Aren't Women and Women Aren't Men."

Interacting with the audience through her witty humor, Gootblatt discussed the ups and downs of all types of relationships. She shared stories of her own personal life and of others she has spoken to in the past to help answer questions and concerns her audience had throughout the lecture.

Loving oneself is the key and first step to loving others, according to Gootblatt. She encouraged the audience to be aware of signs of a troubled relationship and to not change themselves for another person. Gootblatt also offered advice for healthy and unhealthy relationships, providing 10 steps and guidelines for all types of relationships.

"My goal is to help young people feel confident about themselves and help them make healthy and wise decisions in their relationships," Gootblatt said. "I like to give very classy advice but with brutal honesty."

Throughout the lecture students had many questions for Gootblatt.

"I saw her last year, so I knew what she was going to talk about," said first year student Jamie Belcher. "But, I'm at a different point in my life now and wanted to hear what she had to say."

Another Saint Mary's student mentioned that she could relate to Gootblatt's discussion about men and women being jealous when in relationships.

"I have had trouble with it [jealousy] before and she helped me open up my mind to accepting jealousy," Mandi Bahena said.

This is the 10th consecutive year that Gootblatt has come to Saint Mary's for her relationship lecture.

"Saint Mary's is by far, my most favorite school. The students are always sweet, refreshing, and interested," Gootblatt said.

Saint Mary's professor, student team up for performance

By NICOLE WOJKIEWICZ
News Writer

Music Professor Jeffrey Jacob and Saint Mary's senior Lilly Morales joined together Sunday for a special performance featuring the products of their recent Student Independent Study and Research (SISTAR) grant.

Morales performed a sequence of six poems while Jacob performed three musical pieces.

Focusing on the Hispanic experience, the duo united under the title taken from Morales poetry, "Breathing Against a Silent World," in which Morales drew from childhood experiences.

Growing up close to the Mexican border in Texas, she lived in a bicultural environment. Jacob worked from his own experiences as well, having adopted two Hispanic girls.

The pairing of an English major and a music professor was unique. Past recipients of SISTAR grants are mostly comprised of a student and professor working together in the same academic department.

With both student and professor working in different fields, Morales claimed that her greatest challenge was understanding what classical music was, and how she could relate to it.

However, Jacob felt differently. "Clearly the challenge for me was to write and perform music worthy of Lilly's poetry," said Jacob.

Originally financed by the John S. and James L. Knight Foundation in Excellence in Undergraduate Education Program, the SISTAR Program is in its ninth year of existence. The grant is offered to four students, usually juniors, who work in collaboration with a faculty member on a research project.

Morales will eventually submit her poetry for publication. This spring, her prose will appear in Chimes, the Saint Mary's annual poetry review and Jacob's CD to be released internationally in the future. Jacob will also perform in two or three tours this year.

Understanding Our Grief ... in the wake of our nation's tragedy

Wednesday September 19th, 4:00 - 5:15
Room 300, University Health Services Bldg
Len Hickman and Wendy Settle
University Counseling Center

Our nation, our friends, and our families are grieving in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks on the United States. Feeling numb, grief, angry, and sad are all normal expressions of adjustment to loss. There is no single right way to get through a tragedy like this. Many of us find prayer extremely helpful and comforting. Talking to others and exchanging stories about how we have been affected helps to reduce stress. And some of us may prefer to spend some time alone in silent reflection with our thoughts and feelings. Use all the strategies that work for you. Expect to have different reactions over time and be patient with yourself while you try to make sense of them.

Join us this Wednesday to hear about how we can grieve, cope, take care of ourselves, and take care of each other. Come for yourself; come for your friends.

Interested students may wish to continue to meet every week at this same time and place for on-going mutual support.

We can also arrange to come to your residence hall, organizational meeting, or group.

Employ the just war theory

In light of the recent terrorist attacks, it may be useful to review some points on the legitimacy and conduct of war.

First, and obvious: The government of the United States in this case, in defense of the common good, has the right and duty to use force, both to restore the balance of justice by punishing the perpetrators and their facilitators and to render them incapable, by death or otherwise, of again committing such an act.

Provided, of course, that the responsible parties or nations, including aiders and abettors, are identified, the traditional elements of the just war, as stated in the Catechism, no. 2309, would appear to be satisfied here:

1. "[T]he damage inflicted by the aggressor [is] lasting, grave and certain;"
2. Other means of recourse "are impractical or ineffective;"
3. There are "serious prospects of success;"
4. "[T]he use of arms must not produce evils and disorders graver than the evil to be eliminated."

This last requirement, one of proportionality, leads to the second basic point: Two criteria, proportionality and discrimination, govern the conduct of a just war.

Proportionality requires that tactics and weapons used must be proportionate to the situation. Discrimination, as the Catholic bishops of the United States said in their 1983 pastoral, "prohibits directly intended attacks on noncombatants and nonmilitary targets."

In the words of the Second Vatican Council, "Every act of war directed to the indiscriminate destruction of whole cities or vast areas with their inhabitants is a crime against God and man, which merits firm and unequivocal condemnation."

Cardinal John O'Connor of New York, for example, strongly expressed his doubt in 1999 that the NATO bombing of Serbia met this criterion.

The recent hijackings and bombings justify and even demand a conclusive military response. They were deliberate attacks on innocent civilians. They do not justify, however, a response in kind. This does not mean that a military response by the United States and its allies cannot legitimately kill innocent civilians. Pursuant to the principle of the double effect, it can be morally justified to attack a military target of sufficient importance even though the attacker knows, but does not intend, that innocent civilians will be killed in the attack. The key is the intent. No one ever has the moral right intentionally to kill the innocent. But the good act of attacking the legitimate target can be justified even though it has the unintended evil effect of killing the innocent, provided that the good effect of the attack is not obtained by means of the evil effect and provided there is sufficient reason for permitting the unintended evil effect.

The third point of this essay is more basic. What good can come out of this atrocity? Nothing happens in this world except by the ordaining or permitting will of God. As Saint Maximilian Kolbe, martyred at Auschwitz, said, "God permits everything in view of a greater blessing." The innocent died here, as did the innocent victims in Oklahoma City. They are all in the care of a loving God. The most effective thing we can do is pray for them, the injured, the missing and all their families, as well as, it must be said, for the hijackers.

For our part, the recent events may lead to good as a wake-up call, prompting us to reexamine some things. The Magnificat series of monthly prayer books offered, remarkably, for Sept. 12, the day after the terrorist attacks, a striking meditation from Father

Walter Ciszek, S.J., who spent 23 years in Soviet prisons. Father Ciszek wrote, "We begin to take things for granted, to rely on ourselves and on our own resources ... We go along, taking for granted that tomorrow will be very much like today, comfortable in the world we have created for ourselves. [We] give little thought to God at all. Somehow ... God must contrive to break through ... and remind us once again, like Israel, that we are ultimately dependent only upon him ... Then it is, perhaps, that he must allow our whole world to be turned upside down ... to remind us that it is not our permanent abode ... to turn our thoughts once more to him — even if at first our thoughts are questioning and full of reproaches." Something to think about.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Expressing a word of thanks

Sept. 11, in the middle of the Day of Prayer we observed as a result of the tragic events which took place in New York, Washington and Pennsylvania, we were able to come together on the South Quad to celebrate Mass together. That was a poignant moment for all those present, and perhaps gave us the first encouraging response to events which numbed and confused us.

As I mentioned during the Mass, the Eucharist is central to our lives at Notre Dame. When we experience moments of tragedy or sadness, it unites us as nothing else can and creates a moment that will be with us forever.

I wish to acknowledge and thank those members of our community who made that celebration possible, including Mike Dance, Tom Blicher and personnel from Joyce Center Operations, Dan Brazo and the stadium crew, Gary Shumaker and Dave Czajkowski with the men and women from General Services, David Prentkowski and Food Service personnel, Father Peter Rocca, Brother Dennis Meyers, the Basilica and University choirs and choral directors and their instrumentalists, and the members of the Notre Dame Security/Police and Fire Departments.

And, finally, a special word of thanks as well to all of those who attended this Mass and assisted us through their presence and prayers.

POLL QUESTION

Should the United States use military action to respond to the terrorist attacks?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Readers defend America and its soldiers

Soldiers win, guard freedom

One cannot argue with Mr. Kreider's assertions that the government of the United States has made a great deal of mistakes in foreign policy and in all likelihood will continue to do so. The world is most certainly a place filled with injustice, and the tremendous economic injustice of the world does a great deal to fuel other nations' anger. Failing to address these problems will make any military action by the United States in this "war against terrorism" incomplete and less effective.

I do take exception to his comments, however, to his narrow-minded, self-righteous statement that officers trained by Notre Dame who help to rid the world of the scourge of terrorism "are no longer Catholics living out the gospel of peace but tools of a government that preaches justice but only seeks blood." While I could go on for hours about the importance of having an officer corps that is well educated in Judeo-Christian ethics and philosophy (as is done at Notre Dame), I believe that this statement by Father Dennis Edward O'Brien sums up my feeling more eloquently and concisely:

"It is the soldier, not the reporter, who has given us the freedom of press.

It is the soldier, not the poet, who has given us the freedom of speech.

It is the soldier, not the campus organizer, who gives us the freedom to demonstrate.

It is the soldier who salutes the flag,

who serves beneath the flag,

and whose coffin is draped by the flag,

who allows the protester to burn the flag."

I believe strongly in questioning authority and fighting to ensure that our government does not repeat the travesties of the past. I also strongly believe that those who engage in the type of ignorant stereotyping that Mr. Kreider demonstrated in his article "End Terrorism by Eradicating Injustice" are no better than those who engage in racial bigotry. So as you sit perched in your ivory tower condemning the dedicated and self-sacrificing women and men of our armed forces, Mr. Kreider, I ask you this: Where would you be today if soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines had not given their lives so you could stand there and insult them?

Respect military alumni

I read with consternation Aaron Kreider's claptrap about Notre Dame's military alumni being tools of evil, and about Osama bin Laden wanting revenge for what we did to Saddam Hussein and his country, Iraq.

First off, what better place to train the future leaders of our military than Notre Dame, where ethics, philosophy and theology coursework are required by all?

And second, bin Laden is no fan of Hussein, a madman who invaded Kuwait for his own greedy motives, not for Islam.

If Mr. Kreider represents the present student body, I suggest they read the quote from President Eisenhower in the same issue. No one hates war more than American soldiers. But we stand ready to protect our country and our way of life in times of war, which is more than I can say for Mr. Kreider. He should be thankful that he's in a country that does not sentence people to death for espousing Christian views, as Afghanistan is presently doing. As an employee of Morgan Stanley, whose 3,700 employees in the World Trade Center came under attack, I can only say, thank God our company is not filled with individuals like Mr. Kreider.

U.S. needs ROTC, CIA

I am writing this in response to Mr. Kreider's column on Sept. 17. While I agree that past U.S. policy has caused pain in the world, I am appalled at his presumption about ROTC and CIA. Both serve very important functions and I believe, now more than ever, they need our support. In a perfect world we would not need either of the organizations, but Tuesday's events have shown us that this is far from a perfect world. I have friends in ROTC and I know them to be of utmost moral character and I have nothing but respect for them. Tuesday showed us that we need a good defense for our country and I have no problems entrusting my life to these men and women to defend.

I will agree with Mr. Kreider that the CIA and the U.S. Military have been involved in immoral practices before, but this is neither the time nor the place to put the sins of the father of the past upon the son of the present. The CIA needs our support. They are human and made a blunder, but it was one battle in an ongoing war. Let's not disband the organization which informs us of terror and helps us remove it.

Make no mistake, our nation, our world, is at war. A war unlike any war our nation has seen. We are at a unique junction in history to fight this war. We must remove those responsible, but not kill them as to make martyrs out of them. We must also not harm those who are innocent, lest we risk creating another generation of terrorists. This will take extraordinary patience and resolve on our part as a nation. Many will be hurt, many may die, and we as a nation must be prepared for this. Like I stated before, we are at war, but we must fight differently than our opposition.

Support those who are in ROTC, they will lead and protect you. Also support our government, including the CIA, at this time of crisis. Let us find unity in our support for our nation and in our disdain of cowardice. Let us support a policy which calls for diplomacy first, but unequivocal, surgical military action if diplomacy fails. Let us not throw away our support in a moment of arrogant presumption. Let us find justice.

People choose terrorism

While I would defend to the death the rights of those like Mr. Kreider to express their opinions, I am nonetheless dismayed by the seeming predisposition of those in academia to lay any and all problems in the world today at the feet of the U.S. government. Has the United States errors in judgment in the past? Absolutely. Does the United States enjoy, as a nation, a greater prosperity than most others? Perhaps. (Although some of the wealthiest people in the world live in the Middle East, bin Laden among them.) Are these the reasons why a group of terrorists decided to fly commercial jets into the World Trade Center? Absolutely not.

As Mr. Kreider notes, many of the nations that these persons called home have historically been the home of oppression, yet not every citizen of these nations becomes a terrorist. Conversely, there are those who live in great comfort, or who want for nothing yet still turn to terrorism. Last I checked, Timothy McVeigh lived a pretty comfortable existence, yet he still decided to bomb the Federal Building in Oklahoma City. Likewise, bin Laden has millions of dollars, yet he chooses to facilitate the training of terrorists.

These people are not forced to terrorism. They choose it. Having made this choice, it is only right that they be held accountable. Correspondingly, "governments" like the Taliban currently ruling Afghanistan exist, that choose to allow terrorism to be trained and to flourish in their countries. When those that they harbor commit grave injustices such as those that occurred last week in the United States, they, too, must be made to account for their choices.

I share Mr. Kreider's belief that we should not rush to judgment regarding the responsibility for last week's events, although as the hijackers are identified, it seems pretty clear who the responsible parties are. Nor should we condemn a culture or a religion as a whole for these acts. However, the solution is not to rid the world of poverty or close the gap between the world's rich and poor. Both are admirable goals. Both deserve the attention of every individual citizen of this world and all of the world's governments. Unfortunately, neither will end terrorism.

Our system of rule, like any, is not perfect. Mistakes may have been made in the past. Whatever the mistakes of the past, however, this is the time to unite as one nation to do everything necessary to make certain that what happened last Tuesday never happens, to anyone, anywhere, again.

ALBUM REVIEW

Rockin' the Suburbs does not fold without the Five

By GEOFFREY RAHIE
Scene Music Critic

After Ben Folds Five broke up last year, many die-hard fans figured the signature sound of the band was gone forever. As anticipation for the first Ben Folds solo effort since the breakup mounted, speculation about what the album would sound like varied. Many fans worried that lead singer Folds would continue his experimentation held over from 1998's Fear of Pop Vol. 1, an eclectic work infamous for a track featuring William Shatner.

However, Rockin' the Suburbs, Folds' latest effort, is more of a continuation of the ideals of his original band: carefully constructed composition, piano fireworks and edgy lyrics. The result is a great start to a hopefully long-lasting career.

As with past Ben Folds Five records, this new solo effort is based around Folds' grand piano. Save for the title track, each song is pure Ben Folds. He zigzags through several styles on the album, from lounge jazz on "Carrying Cathy" to straight-up rock on "Fired."

As usual, Folds' melodies are one-of-a-kind, shifting back and forth between the majestic and the miserable.

What most listeners will appreciate about this album is that Folds is almost solely responsible for the sound. He wrote all but one of the songs — "Losing Lisa" was co-written with wife Frally Hynes — and also plays bass, drums, guitar and electronic keyboards in addition to his usual piano duties. His drumming is more than adequate and his bass work is surprisingly consistent. The occasional "fuzz bass" sound usually associated with Ben Folds Five is scattered throughout the disc. The most notable guitar riffs on the album come from the title track.

The overall lyrical tone of the album is suburbia-longing mixed with sarcastic overtones. Most of the characters in Folds' songs are average people with everyday problems. "Still Fighting It," one of the most honest works on the disc, tells the story of a father who worries of embarrassing his son. The opening lines from "Zak and Sara" are a cross between a concerto and an '80s anthem. "Fred Jones Part 2" deals with a firing, much like the obviously-titled "Fired." In contrast, "The Ascent of Stan" narrates the maturation of a hippie child who is climbing the corporate ladder. The title track is a hilarious take on the recent boom of rap-rock metal and takes legitimate shots at "poser" bands like Limp Bizkit and Staind.

The songs on the album are crammed with so much sonic meat that it's difficult to comprehend that most of the tracks are only four minutes long. While some rock acts like Phish and Tool need ample time to express their musical ideas, Folds cuts out the fat from his tunes. Tracks like "Still Fighting It" and "The Ascent of Stan" could probably go on for another two or three minutes, but Folds wisely leaves the listener yearning for more.

Solos are kept to a minimum for a simple reason: the listener should already know about Folds' piano work. He can now do a better job focusing in on the big picture. The big picture is a modern day commentary on suburban life.

The album could have easily been titled Everyday People for its focus on the everyman. The main focus of the album is of humans going through loss, love, and life-altering decisions. Both the music and lyrics coordinate to bring a melodic slice of life. All of these characters are most likely bits and pieces of Folds' own personality. He is able to craft a successful album about himself while improving his own skills as a musical storyteller. Let's just hope future efforts are impressive as this debut.

A Funk Odyssey proves to be a thrilling journey

By ARIENNE THOMPSON
Scene Music Critic

Consistency is overrated. Despite the apparent naivete and shortsightedness of this statement, it does quite accurately describe the tone of Jamiroquai's latest album.

The band's newest release magnificently proves the experimental, genre-bending aspirations of this group who have procured a large non-mainstream following due in part to the massive success of their philosophical single "Virtual Reality" from their 1996 release Travelling Without Moving. Appropriately entitled A Funk Odyssey, this latest album displays the band's subtle reinvention and moves toward a fresher sound.

Jamiroquai is a British funk band fronted by the charismatic and impish lead singer Jayson Kay. Kay (or JK as he is commonly called) is often thought to be the band's sole member, as he is frequently the only person to appear in any of Jamiroquai's videos or album photos.

His creative and musical control on the band is quite evident too, considering that he has written and produced nearly every song the band has recorded. The band is comprised of a bassist, a guitarist and a drummer and is also supplemented with orchestral arrangements — which JK also writes.

The band also prides itself on being multicultural, borrowing elements of Native American and Australian tradition.

Perhaps the most unique factor of Jamiroquai's style is the incorporation of the didgeridoo, which is an aboriginal Australian instrument. The didgeridoo is a tall, hollowed-out log that when blown into, creates a strong, vibrating, reedy sound. This component of their style has characterized every studio release to date with the exception of A Funk Odyssey. The absence of the didgeridoo on this album is further proof of the band's desire to create a moderately new sound.

The album opens with the infectious "Feel So Good," which displays Kay's ongoing fascination with a futuristic space age and the moon. This theme of space travel was very evident on past albums such as the aforementioned Travelling Without Moving and Return of the Space Cowboy, which was released in 1994.

In the same vein of futuristic themes is "Twenty Zero One," in which Kay laments about the evils of the 21st century. He sings, "2001/ It's pornographic, Internet, traffic on the screen/ 2001/ by 2032 you can be me/ Let me help you believe with my semi-automatic gun." These songs are both characterized by strong beats and a funky disco flavor very reminiscent of earlier work.

There are several standout tracks, which introduce a new element to the Jamiroquai experience. The folksy "Black Crow" is a simple, gentle recording that displays Kay's unique vocal abilities and distinct style. "Picture of My Life" is a dreamy, beautifully written song, showcasing a brilliant string arrangement and accompanying guitar.

However, the album's brightest gem is the mesmerizing "Corner of the Earth." Infused with horns, harp, cello and several Middle Eastern instruments the song is nothing short of perfection. With a sound unlike any previously recorded Jamiroquai song, "Corner of the Earth" epitomizes the band's journey into new musical and artistic territory. Jamiroquai's musical adventure is perfectly captured on A Funk Odyssey.

Blending elements of past albums with the innovation of new ideas, this release is sure to please and surprise many hardcore fans.

Love and Theft encompasses Dylan's past and future

By LIAM FARRELL
Scene Music Critic

Leave it to Bob Dylan to finally make current music intelligent and satisfying to listen to again.

In his first studio album since the mortality-obsessed 1997 release, Time Out of Mind, and with his first original songs since "Things Have Changed" for the Wonder Boys Soundtrack, Dylan once again shows why he is one of the most inspirational singer-songwriters in music today.

Recorded with the exceptional backing band from his current Neverending tour, Love and Theft is laced with Mike Bloomfield-type riffs and incredible adeptness with all types of musical styles, making this album one of the best of Dylan's career.

Thematically, this album expands on much of what was explored in Time Out of Mind: mortality, death, regret and a seemingly endless search for a faithful woman. What makes this album stand apart from Time Out of Mind, however, is that it is not nearly as depressing. Many of the songs have a sort of tongue-in-cheek humor that gives each song a wry, self-deprecating look in the mirror rather than a graveyard lament.

The album kicks off with "Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum," a country tinged nonsense song, lyrically similar to many of Dylan's earlier songs like "Subterranean Homesick Blues." Although quickly changing styles into the love-lorn ballad "Mississippi," the album does not bog down in melancholy; even within the context of this song, Dylan knows that "Fortune is waiting/ To be kind."

"Summer Days" is a fantastic old fashioned rockabilly song that sounds like Eddie Cochran in the midst of a mid-life crisis, with the main title working as a metaphor for lost youth.

One of the more interesting aspects of Love and Theft is the different musical sounds Dylan uses throughout the album. "Bye and Bye" and "Moonlight" are jazz ballads about lost love that sound like nothing Dylan has ever done before. These songs share the same space with ballads like "Lonesome Day Blues" and "Cry A While," two rocking blues songs that belong in a roadside bar's jukebox. It all still makes sense in the context of the album however, as these songs simply take different methods of exploring the issues that have consumed Dylan's work in the past few years.

"High Water (For Charley Patton)" sounds like it could have been recorded by Woody Guthrie and is the most socially conscious song on the album, as Dylan reflects on his youthful ideals, when he did not know "You can't open your mind/ To every conceivable point of view." This song is really indicative of where Dylan's music has gone over the years, as politics still takes a back seat in "High Water" to his women problems.

Love and Theft never strays far from Dylan's psyche, and even when his age and his regrets seem to finally be at peace within him, as in the acoustic ballad "Po' Boy (Things will be Alright Bye and Bye)," he remains a troubled songwriter.

The album closes with "Sugar Baby," an incredibly sparse track in comparison to the other layered songs, with a very basic group of guitar, bass and some beautiful accordion work. "Sugar Baby" basically sums up the entire album, as Dylan remains lost in both his love life, "You went years without me/ May as well keep going now," and the theft of his youth, as he now has his "Back to the sun/ Because the light is too tense." Although a very personal and sad way to finish the album, Dylan finally takes with him the knowledge that "Some of these memories you learn to live with/ And some you can't."

After years of inspired rock 'n' roll, Bob Dylan continues to explore the depths of popular music, not to mention his own musical talents, with his latest release, Love and Theft.

Dylan has always been the poster child for ruining your vocal chords, but he seems to have settled into the low growl that is significantly lower than his voice back on his first album. He has always been able to write music that fits his vocal imperfections and that is still the case on Love and Theft. Although its not his best work, musically and lyrically Love and Theft is fantastic — a breath of fresh air among the pathetic music receiving airplay on radio and MTV. And after all, its Bob Dylan — isn't that reason enough to buy it?

Rolen blasts Phillies past first-place Braves

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA

Scott Rolen hit two home runs off Greg Maddux and the Philadelphia Phillies came back from baseball's six-day break to beat the Atlanta Braves 5-2 Monday night and tighten the NL East race.

The Phillies won the opener of a four-game series and closed within 2 1/2 games of Atlanta.

The Braves had won six of seven before the terrorist attacks forced the majors to postpone games.

The game began with fans chanting "USA! USA!" and ended with them cheering. But it took only three batters for Phillies fans to get back in form: They booed after Chipper Jones hit a home run off Robert Person in the first inning.

Person (15-6) won his sixth straight decision. He allowed two runs and six hits in improving to 11-1 since losing to the New York Mets on June 5.

Jose Mesa worked the ninth for his 37th save in 40 chances.

Rolen's homer in the second off Greg Maddux tied it at 1. After Bobby Abreu tripled to start the fourth, Rolen's RBI grounder made it 2-1.

Atlanta tied it at 2 in the fifth when Rey Sanchez tripled and scored on Paul Bako's groundout.

Rolen put the Phillies ahead for good in the sixth with his 22nd home run, which gave him 100 RBIs. He had to be coaxed out of the dugout to tip his hat as fans gave him a standing ovation.

Doug Glanville's sacrifice fly off reliever Steve Karsay gave the Phillies a 4-2 lead in the eighth. A throwing error by Sanchez allowed Jimmy Rollins to score Philadelphia's fifth run.

Maddux (17-9) gave up three runs and six hits in seven innings.

He is 3-4 with a 4.88 ERA since Aug. 1.

Mets 4, Pirates 1

Rey Ordenez's RBI single started a three-run ninth inning, and the New York Mets returned from their trying week off and beat Pittsburgh.

Ordenez's hit — it easily could have been scored an error — and pinch-hitter Mark Johnson's two-run double made a winner of John Franco (6-2), a native New Yorker and the Mets player probably most personally affected by last week's terrorist attacks.

Wearing caps honoring the New York fire fighters, police and rescue workers, plus American flags on their jerseys and hats, the Mets won their 18th in 23 games.

Pirates reliever Mike Fetters (3-2) started the ninth by hitting Tsuyoshi Shinjo with a pitch, then walked Jay Payton two outs later. Ordenez's shot then hit off third baseman Aramis Ramirez's glove and went into left field, with Shinjo just beating the throw the plate.

Armando Benitez finished up for his 39th save. Franco, in the Mets' dugout, got several pats on the back after the final out.

The Mets and Pirates developed one of the NL's best rivalries in the late 1980s and early 1990s, and the Pirates once based an ad campaign around disliking New York.

But this was a night for solidarity, not rivalry, as evidenced by the "I Love New York" buttons the Pirates handed out. There were even as many cheers as boos when Ordenez singled in the lead run.

As the two teams stood along the baselines during a brief pregame ceremony featuring the national anthem and "God Bless America," managers Bobby Valentine and Lloyd McClendon hugged each other.

Marlins 10, Expos 6

Luis Castillo's two-run triple highlighted an eight-run sixth inning as the Florida Marlins beat the Montreal Expos before the smallest Olympic Stadium crowd of the season.

An announced crowd of 3,013 — in fact, no more than 1,000 fans were actually on hand — hushed to a silence for pregame ceremonies to honor the victims of last Tuesday's terrorist attacks.

Both teams lined up along the baselines, and only the hum of electricity for stadium lighting could be heard as four scarlet-coated mounties led a procession of police and rescue service personnel bearing American flags onto the field.

The crowd was silenced once again with one out in the fifth inning when Expos starter Javier Vazquez was struck flush on the front of his batting helmet by a pitch from Ryan Dempster. Vazquez was taken to the hospital for X-rays.

Trailing 6-0 after Montreal scored six times in the fifth, Florida matched a team record in its next at-bat with the seventh eight-run inning in club history.

Vazquez, who had won his six previous starts, left with a 1-0 lead following Peter Bergeron's RBI triple.

Tim Raines and Jose Vidro hit run-scoring singles to make it 3-0, and Orlando Cabrera hit a bases-clearing double to put the Expos ahead by six.

Geoff Blum singled for Montreal's seventh hit of the inning to chase Dempster. Ricky Bones (4-4) got Lee Stevens to ground into an inning-ending double play.

Britt Reames relieved and allowed six straight hits, including Preston Wilson's two-run double, Mike Lowell's RBI single and Charles Johnson's two-run double as the Marlins drew to 6-5.

Guillermo Mota (1-2) allowed Alex Gonzalez's bunt single to put runners at first and third. Center fielder Bergeron charged in on pinch-hitter Andy Fox's shallow fly to keep the tying run from scoring.

Castillo tripled to put Florida ahead 7-6, and Derek Lee drove in the eighth run with his second single of the inning.

The Marlins added a pair of runs in the seventh on Kevin Millar's RBI double and Gonzalez's run-scoring single.

Vazquez allowed four hits in five scoreless innings.

Dempster, who was 5-0 with a 2.30 ERA in six previous starts in Montreal, allowed eight hits and six runs in 4 1-3 innings.

Cardinals 2, Brewers 1

Coming off his no-hitter, rookie Bud Smith allowed only three hits in seven innings as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Milwaukee Brewers 2-1 Monday night.

The 21-year-old Smith held San Diego hitless Sept. 3. He skipped a start after throwing 134 pitches in that outing, then waited for baseball to resume play after Tuesday's terrorist attacks.

Albert Pujols drove in the go-ahead run with a single in the sixth inning as the Cardinals won for the seventh time in eight games and pulled into a tie with idle San Francisco for the wild card lead.

St. Louis is 4 1/2 games behind NL Central-leading Houston.

The game drew a crowd of 30,528 and had a patriotic flavor. It took about 10 minutes for a large contingent of police and firefighters to take their positions before the National Anthem, and fans stood and cheered the entire time.

They cheered again after a 21-fireworks salute before the game.

This time, Smith (4-2), who struck out five and walked one, was limited to 88 pitches.

All three hits off Smith were singles. The Brewers ended a 23-inning scoreless slump with an unearned run in the fifth after right fielder J.D. Drew misplayed Devon White's liner, the ball glancing off his wrist.

White went to second on the play and scored from third on Henry Blanco's one-out grounder to give the Brewers the lead.

Smith's hitless string ended at 11 innings when Jose Hernandez singled to start the third. The left-hander retired the side in order the first two innings, with three strikeouts and three popups.

Milwaukee starter Ruben Quevedo (4-3) lasted seven innings, giving up two runs on six hits with five strikeouts and a walk.

Both of the Cardinals' runs came in the sixth. Placido Polanco and Drew hit consecutive one-out doubles for the first run.

Pujols' RBI was his 112th, tying the team rookie record set in 1953 by Ray Jablonski.

Drew scored standing up on the play, but barely beat White's relay from center field.

Steve Kline retired Geoff Jenkins on a liner to right with the bases loaded to end the eighth, and finished for his eighth save in nine chances.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

Everett suspended after latest run-in

Associated Press

BOSTON

Carl Everett was suspended for four games by the Boston Red Sox on Monday, a day after reporting late to a workout, the latest in a series of penalties against the outfielder.

Everett reportedly berated manager Joe Kerrigan, who had told him to leave when he arrived late. He also had several run-ins with Jimmy Williams, who was fired as manager Aug. 16.

Everett was suspended 10 games by baseball last season for bumping umpire Ron Kulpa and one game by the team this year in spring training for arriving late and missing the bus.

Then he arrived late Sunday. "The club was not pleased with the incident over the weekend and we felt a strong need to sanction the behavior," general manager Dan Duquette said Monday. "We're not going to tolerate this type of behavior."

Everett also was fined an undisclosed amount, but Duquette wouldn't say whether the player argued with Kerrigan, although he referred reporters to stories in Monday's newspapers citing such a dispute.

"The player was late for work on Sunday and there was also a misconduct by Everett in an incident stemming from his being late," Duquette said in a conference call. "The club was not pleased with it, especially in light of what happened" last week.

After terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon last Tuesday, all Major League Baseball games were postponed through Sunday. The Red Sox held closed workouts Saturday, Sunday and Monday at Fenway Park and are scheduled to play Tuesday night at home against Tampa Bay.

Everett would be eligible to play Saturday against Baltimore, the first anniversary of a clubhouse outburst in which Duquette sided with Everett.

Everett had been in the starting lineup for a day-night doubleheader against Cleveland in Boston. He arrived late, told Williams he couldn't play because of a leg injury that had limited his playing time and was replaced by Darren Lewis.

Everett then was involved in a 30-second confrontation with Lewis before two coaches interceded.

Williams, who rarely criticized a player publicly, said Everett didn't call to say he would be late. Duquette said Everett would not be disciplined.

"If I was general manager, I certainly would back the manager," Williams said two days later. "Now if you can't back the manager, then you probably need to get rid of him." Duquette did that last month when the Red Sox were 65-53. Under Kerrigan, they're 7-16 and have dropped out of playoff contention.

With Everett having had problems with both his managers in Boston, Duquette wouldn't discuss his long-term future.

"He's suspended for four games and we made it very clear to him that his behavior was not acceptable to the club and we're not going to tolerate it," Duquette said.

He said he and Elaine Steward, the team's assistant general manager and legal counsel, met with Everett for two hours Monday. Then Everett left the ballpark.

Kerrigan deferred questions about Everett to Duquette, except to say, "I'm just going to say it's an unfortunate incident and I'm going to leave it at that."

Last year, Everett was suspended for bumping plate umpire Kulpa during a dispute over the size of the batter's box July 15. When he returned after the suspension, Everett shouted at Williams in the manager's office.

Before his first spring training workout last Feb. 21, Everett said, "Every year's a fresh start. ... You have to get along, regardless."

Then, on March 27, Everett missed the bus and was suspended for one game and fined.

His contract calls for an $8 million salary next year, $9.15 million in 2003 and an extra $333,333 payment on Jan. 15, 2002.

In siding with Everett last September, Duquette said the player "can do a better job in terms of time," but "it's more important how he produces on the field."

Last season, Everett hit .300 with 34 homers and 108 RBI. Now he's batting .257 with 14 homers and 58 RBI. On Sept. 2, he broke up Mike Mussina's bid for a perfect game with two outs and a 1-2 count in the ninth on a single against the New York Yankees pitcher.

Everett had trouble with other teams.

In 1994, as a member of the Edmonton Trappers of the Pacific Coast League, Everett was suspended for the final road trip after a dugout argument with manager Sal Rende.

In 1997, while with the New York Mets, he was suspended one game in September for excessive arguing and using an obscene gesture in a game against Florida after being ejected by umpire Larry Poncino for arguing about a call in a previous at-bat.

It has been quite an eventful second half for the Red Sox, headlined by a war of words between Duquette and star pitcher Pedro Martinez over the severity of an injury.

The Red Sox also fired pitching coach John Cumberland on Sept. 2 after being swept in a three-game series by the Yankees. Cumberland had been serving as the team's pitching coach since the promotion of Kerrigan.

The players' anger and disbelief over Cumberland's firing touched off a firestorm. Star shortstop Nomar Garciaparra publicly ripped the team and outfielder Trot Nixon also questioned the move.

"The club was not pleased with the incident over the weekend and we felt a strong need to sanction the behavior."

Zanardi still in danger

Associated Press

BERLIN

Doctors performed a follow-up operation on Alex Zanardi on Monday, saying the two-time CART champion was not out of danger after losing his legs in a crash.

"In the moment, he's stable, don't get me wrong. But it could change at any moment," said Walter Schaffartzik, head of the team of doctors treating the 34-year-old Italian. "It's too early to say if he's out of danger.

"But it's my impression that he's getting more stable."

A dozen family members, friends, drivers and CART officials were at the Berlin Trauma Center, where Zanardi was flown after his crash Saturday in the American Memorial 500.

Monday's procedure was to check for fragments or infection.

"Everything looks fine at the moment. There are no infections, the skin looks good, the muscles look good. We hope it stays that way," Schaffartzik said.

Doctors are reducing fluids and drugs to take Zanardi out of an "induced coma." How quickly Zanardi is brought back to consciousness and taken off a ventilator depends on his response, Schaffartzik said.

Zanardi, one of CART's most popular drivers, also suffered a small pelvis fracture and concussion when his car was hit by another traveling about 200 mph. Amazingly, Zanardi escaped internal or head injuries.

"It's a big shock to everybody," said Johnny Herbert, a former Formula One teammate. "You have accidents, yes, but you don't expect something this gruesome."

Zanardi was leading with 12 laps left when he entered the pits. Accelerating out of pit lane, his Honda Reynard spun backward onto the 2-mile oval and into the path of Alex Tagliani's car, barreling by at 200 mph.

Tagliani ripped through Zanardi's nearly stationary car and sheared it in half, with the explosion hurling the red nosecone No. 66 into the air, spewing a trail of debris.

On Sunday, CART chairman Joe Heitzler was allowed by family members to see Zanardi. An openly religious man, Heitzler said he prayed at Zanardi's bedside.

"When I saw him, I couldn't believe how good he looked for what he'd been through," Heitzler said. "He was resting peacefully and his face had color."

The American Memorial 500 — CART's first race in Europe — was supposed to "help heal wounds" from Tuesday's terrorist attacks in the United States.

Instead, it produced its own tragedy.

Zanardi's closest driver friends — Herbert, Jimmy Vasser, Dario Franchitti and Mo Nunn teammate Tony Kanaan — gathered at the hospital Sunday with Zanardi's wife, Daniela.

Also at the vigil was actress Ashley Judd, fiancee of Franchitti, who arrived with friends and family by helicopter Saturday night and remained through Sunday.

Herbert flew in from Atlanta. Tagliani also stopped by, after being released from the hospital Sunday with minor back injuries.

Zanardi has many friends in Formula One, where he had two unsuccessful stints. In a hospital room set up to handle guests and sprinkled with bouquets, Herbert talked optimistically.

"He'll be up and around," he said. "He's a very doting father and he'll want to play with his [3-year-old] son."

Zanardi had not won this season. But Friday he was second-fastest in practice, and Saturday he couldn't wait to race.

"He was ready to rock and roll," Denes said. "I've never seen him so ready to get out there."

NBA

Web site lists Jordan on Washington roster

Associated Press

NEW YORK

He's back! He's back!

Oops, well, he's almost back.

For 90 minutes Monday, Michael Jordan was listed as an active player for the Washington Wizards on the team's Web site. Apparently, someone pressed a button a little too soon.

"Just a clerical error," NBA spokesman Tim Frank said. "Our Internet department was making preparations in case he comes back."

Jordan had all but confirmed he would announce a comeback at a news conference as early as this week. Because of the terrorist attacks, he is now more likely to announce his decision in a more low-key manner, such as a faxed news release, in the next two weeks.

Wizards spokesman Matt Williams said he was inundated with phone calls after Jordan was included on the Web page, tucked alphabetically between Popeye Jones and Christian Laettner.

Jordan was listed as a 6-foot-6 guard, 198 pounds. The uniform, of course, was No. 23.

The Web site also included a brief biography, complete with his career statistics down to such trivial information as the fact that he wore his blue North Carolina shorts underneath his Bulls shorts when he played for Chicago.

Jordan's name was taken off the active roster late in the afternoon by the NBA, which controls the rosters on the Web site.

This would be the second comeback for the 38-year-old Jordan, who led the Bulls to six NBA championships. He retired in October 1993 to play minor league baseball and returned to the Bulls in March 1995. He retired again in January 1999.

At the NBA Store in Manhattan, employees said they were stocking several blank Wizards jerseys that will be embroidered with Jordan's name and number when the comeback is official.

For now, the only Wizards jerseys available at the store are Richard Hamilton's No. 32 and rookie Kwame Brown's No. 5.

"Just a clerical error. Our Internet department was making preparations in case he comes back."

Patriotic fans welcome baseball back

Associated Press

Baseball was awash in red, white and blue and patriotic songs Monday night when games resumed and flag-waving fans returned, ready to pick up where they left off six days ago — when cheering came easier.

From coast and coast and across the border to Canada, the crack of the bat was a welcome sound in a setting that offered decidedly different snapshots than it did before the terrorist attacks on America:

Mets players wearing caps with inscriptions now familiar to millions all over the world: NYPD and FDNY.

Hundreds of St. Louis' finest marching out to the warning track to honor fallen officers in New York.

"USA! USA!" chants, a video tribute and free-flowing tears at Veterans Stadium.

Amid heightened security, six games were played, all in the National League. The one scheduled American League game, between the New York Yankees and Tampa Bay Devil Rays, was postponed for logistical reasons.

Players wore the Stars and Stripes on their uniforms and caps, "God Bless America" was swapped for "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" during the seventh-inning stretch and flags were emblazoned on bases.

"The country is looking over our shoulder," Philadelphia outfielder Doug Glanville said. "You have to go on with your life. Baseball is a fabric of this country. It can be a process of turning things around."

It took only three batters for Phillies fans to get back in form: They booed after Atlanta's Chipper Jones hit a home run.

"You realized the healing had started when they booed Chipper," Philadelphia manager Larry Bowa said after a 5-2 victory.

At Dodger Stadium, longtime Los Angeles broadcaster Vin Scully addressed the crowd, saying: "The president has said it is time to go back to work. Baseball gets up out of the dirt, brushes itself off and goes back to work."

At many ballparks, teams handed out small U.S. flags. At PNC Park in Pittsburgh, the Pirates gave away thousands of "I Love New York" buttons — the fans gave, too, contributing about $100,000 for the New York police and fire rescue fund.

"We thought it was only fitting to come to the ballgame, we thought it was a fitting way to pay our respects to the people back in New York," said Fred Berrios of Gibsonia, Pa.

Baseball postponed games just hours after the attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon on Tuesday. In all, 91 games were called off, the most since World War I.

The Mets' game at Pittsburgh, originally to be played at New York, was shifted because Shea Stadium was still being used as a staging area for the rescue effort.

Managers Bobby Valentine of the Mets and Lloyd McClendon of the Pirates hugged each other as the teams lined up, and New York reliever John Franco shed a tear during pregame ceremonies.

The Brooklyn-born Franco, playing on his 41st birthday, wound up as the winning pitcher in a 4-1 victory. Wearing a New York fire department sweatshirt, he got several pats on the back after the final out.

"Being from New York and all that's gone on, it's just nice to get a win," he said. "It's great to see how the country has come together and to see that baseball's back."

Crowd sizes in St. Louis, Philadelphia, Los Angeles,

Colorado and Pittsburgh did not appear diminished by safety concerns.

"Nobody knows what's going to happen, if fans coming out tonight are going to be excited or subdued, or what," San Diego star Tony Gwynn said at Dodger Stadium. "But two things I do know is that when they play the national anthem, it's going to mean something, and when they play 'God Bless America' during the seventh-inning stretch, it's going to mean something."

The smallest crowd of the season at Olympic Stadium in Montreal — it was announced at 3,013, although no more than 1,000 fans were actually on hand — observed a moment of silence and watched images of the rescue effort in New York. Fans cheered as the color guard walked off the field to John Lennon's "Give Peace a Chance."

Isabelle Lepage, 18, of Montreal brought an American flag.

"I bought it in New York in 1997 in a shop near the World Trade Center," she said. "I wanted to show our solidarity with the United States."

At Coors Field in Denver, red, white and blue ribbons were painted in the grass in front of each dugout. Players from the Arizona Diamondbacks and Colorado Rockies held a large American flag as part of a 10-minute pregame ceremony.

The Diamondbacks were among more than a dozen teams involved in pennant chases.

"In the grand scheme of things, no, it's not very important. By the same token, this is what we do, and we get paid good money to do this," Arizona first baseman Mark Grace said.

Barry Bonds, who needs eight home runs in 18 games to break Mark McGwire's home run record, and the San Francisco Giants were idle. They play Tuesday night at home against Houston.

All 30 teams were scheduled to play Tuesday.

Security was tightened at every ballpark, with fans stopped from bringing coolers, backpacks and large bags into stadiums and cars prohibited from parking within 100 feet of the ballpark. There were also more police and security officers, along with bomb-sniffing dogs.

"I think it's a good idea if it helps people feel safer," said Glenda Harrison of Kirkwood, Mo.

"You realized the healing had started when they booed Chipper."

Sports increase security after tragedy

Associated Press

No coolers will be allowed at NASCAR's race. Backpacks and briefcases will be searched at hockey games. Football fans will be asked to arrive early. Even the Goodyear blimp might not fly.

On the ground, in the sky, at stadium entrances and among tailgaters, security will be increased this week as football, hockey, auto racing and other sports resume.

Baseball returned Monday night for the first time since terrorists attacked New York and Washington on Sept. 11. New security rules were in effect for all six games, including a ban on coolers, backpacks, large bags and parking within 100 feet of the ballparks.

Things will also be different when the NFL reopens Sunday.

Fans will no longer be able to blithely drive into parking lots three hours before a game, tailgate for 2 1/2 hours, then casually walk to their seats just in time for kickoff.

"The commissioner has decided that our No. 1 priority is security," said Milt Ahlerich, the NFL's senior director of security. "Our fans are going to have to be more patient. We're suggesting that they get to the stadiums early and then get to their seats early. We want to alleviate that last-minute game crush."

At colleges with large stadiums, fans were warned to be ready for heightened scrutiny.

The University of Michigan is expecting a crowd of 110,000 for its game against Western Michigan on Saturday.

"Our fans should expect some possible delays, especially if they continue to come in at the last minute," said Bill Bess, the university's director of public safety. "We would like fans to get in the stadium sooner than they have in the past."

Every bag brought into the stadium will be subject to search, and other measures are being taken, although university officials declined to elaborate.

Several schools were working with the Federal Aviation Administration to stop airplanes from flying near stadiums, especially planes dragging advertisements.

Shutting down that airspace could mean a temporary end to a familiar sight.

The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. planned to send its blimps to the Wisconsin-Penn State and Ohio State-

UCLA games, along with the Detroit-Cleveland NFL game.

"We're waiting at the moment for clearance. As always, we will cooperate with aviation authorities," Goodyear spokeswoman Jennifer Arnold said.

Dover Downs officials said Monday that fans will not be allowed to bring coolers, backpacks or large bags onto the race track grounds Sunday for NASCAR's MBNA.com 400 Winston Cup race. In conjunction with the move, the track is reducing the price of concessions to compensate fans.

"While we regret that we have to step up our security measures to this extent, it is, at this time, completely necessary," said Denis McGlynn, Dover Downs' president and CEO.

"We don't know how long the changes will have to be in place. But given the events of the past seven days, we think it is of the highest importance that this race takes place in a completely safe manner."

The first sporting event in the nation's capital since the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon will be Tuesday night's NHL exhibition game between the Capitals and Philadelphia Flyers.

"As always, we will follow the lead of the FBI, Secret Service, Metropolitan Police and other agencies," said Matt Williams, spokesman for Washington Sports and Entertainment. "Fans will see an increased presence at the arena entrances. However, many security measures are never seen by patrons."

College football will not have a blanket set of security rules.

"With 976 different institutions, it is difficult to make policies that are applicable to the broad membership," NCAA spokesman Wally Renfro said. "Security is an issue for most schools every week, but when you're dealing with circumstances that defy logic, it puts a whole new perspective on what precautions you need to take."

Nebraska's game against Rice was pushed back to 8:30 p.m. ET Thursday for a smoother adjustment to the school's first weeknight home game.

A thorough search is planned for all parts of the stadium. Parking is no longer permitted under the stadium and all deliveries are being inspected.

Fans carrying coolers, umbrellas and bags larger than a purse will be turned away. If it's cold, bulky winter coats and blankets will be allowed in only after they are searched.

Thursday night's first college football game — South Carolina at Mississippi State — will have "strong" stadium restrictions in place, said MSU Associate Athletic Director Duncan McKenzie.

Noisemakers will be prohibited in the Starkville, Miss., stadium, and police will restrict parking. Authorities do not plan to install metal detectors, McKenzie said.

Perhaps no team will feel quite as safe as the NFL's Cleveland Browns, whose security director, Lew Merletti, is the former head of the Secret Service and served under Presidents Reagan, Bush and Clinton.

"We couldn't ask for a better scenario from the standpoint of security," coach Butch Davis said. "There isn't a team in the league that has better access to individuals that know more about security."

"We couldn't ask for a better scenario from the standpoint of security. There isn't a team in the league that has better access to individuals."

Tragedies give sports perspective

A week ago, I wrote a column about the Notre Dame/Nebraska football game. I told my roommates how hard it was for me to get across exactly what I wanted to say.

A week ago, I wrote a column that I took turns worrying might come off too sappy or too harsh, and asked my parents for reassurance.

A week ago, my column ran in the Sept. 11 edition of The Observer. Like everything else printed in the early morning hours of that day, it was horribly out of place by the time anyone could have read it.

After the events of last week, sports are rightfully tossed aside. Sports journalism, a mere byproduct of the games, is even more frivolous.

Not until yesterday did the sports world start to turn again, with Major League Baseball resuming its schedule. But now, if Barry Bonds hits 71 home runs, no one is likely to lose themselves in celebration.

Notre Dame campus life will once again take on the face of a college football hotbed this Saturday when Michigan State comes to town. If Notre Dame marches on to the Orange Bowl in January, no one will be detached from what happened just two and a half months before.

So where do sports fit into our lives? That's open to debate.

Certainly, the outcomes of the games don't mean anything beyond the context of a field or a rink and outside the world of diversion.

Whether the Mariners win 115 or Fresno St. captures a BCS bid doesn't mean anything in and of itself.

But the unity, the spirit, the camaraderie, the joy, and — especially in the coming months, the temporary escape that those events produce — is truly unique.

Sports, whether played on South Quad or Safeco Field, give young, middle aged, and old alike something to share in common. More importantly, they give us all a chance to dream big dreams, even if that dream is no more than throwing a ball through a hoop to win a fleeting contest.

They grip us, our attention spans, and our emotions early on in our lives in proportions far greater than their relative importance.

Indeed, they make us cheer and boo and yell and shout and curse and stare on in utter disbelief. They've even been known to make grown men and women cry.

Maybe it's the thrill of competition. Maybe it's the satisfaction from hard work. Maybe it's the feeling of immortality, even if just for an instance, that gushes over us right when the ball leaves the bat on its path over the fence.

Maybe it's the chills we get when 90 gold helmets come out of a tunnel.

Whatever it is that endears sports to us, it's more of a feeling than anything tangible like a box score or a good turnover differential is. Anyone who tells you different is missing the point.

In the days, weeks, months, and years that come, people will speak of "on-field heroics" or "battles at Notre Dame Stadium."

We all know that true heroes are the rescue workers, firefighters, and police who have been searching for victims, many losing their own lives in the process, for the last week.

We know that true heroes were the passengers aboard United Airlines Flight 93 who sacrificed their own lives to keep their hijackers from making it to their target.

We know true battles aren't fought on football fields but involve real losses that extend beyond a championship drive.

We all know, or at least we all should know, that sports are a diversion, and at least for myself, one of the many blessings in life.

Hopefully, with the upcoming football, hockey, basketball and concluding baseball seasons, everyone can feel some of that joy again, even if it is only a two or three hour distraction.

For if anything, sports can bring back some of that comfort we have long felt in going about our daily lives.

Like I said, a week ago, I stared at my computer screen and thought it was hard to write down what I wanted to say about Notre Dame football.

And a week ago, I never thought seeing plane lights flickering across the night sky would seem so special.

The opinions expressed in this column are those of the author and not necessarily those of The Observer. Contact Ted Fox at tfox@nd.edu.

likes to insert fresh legs into the front, and injuries have forced Waldrum to try multiple forward combinations throughout its first four games even more.

And it is an incredible advantage to have a player of Tulisiak's talent and clutch ability to enter the game around the 60th minute, when defenders are not as fresh.

"I'll do whatever the team needs," said Tulisiak. "We have a lot of great forwards, so we'll keep subbing."

But what allows Tulisiak to find the net with such effectiveness coming off the bench?

"The one big part of my game is making effective runs," said Tulisiak. "I'm always moving and creating space, and that makes more scoring chances."

Waldrum knows the source of Tulisiak's strong play when the clock is ticking down in the second half.

"She's athletic, she has good speed," said Waldrum. "She's willing to be a pressing force — and she's willing to defend. She'll give you 20 minutes of that."

Waldrum has more to look forward to. Tulisiak's younger sister, Kate, is a freshman defender for the Irish, and has tasted action in two games so far for the Irish.

The younger Tulisiak seems to enjoy having her big sister right there on the field with her.

"She made it a lot easier for me to feel like a member of the team," said Kate. "She's always lifting my confidence."

Kelly shares her sister's outlook.

"It's fun. We played together in high school," said Kelly. "She's doing really well, she's really talented."

Game-winning goals aside, Tulisiak's role on the Irish soccer team is clear.

"I hope to create a little intensity, and bring something out to the field when I get out there," she said.

Irish return to court

By NOAH AMSTADTER
Sports Editor

For the first time since last Tuesday's tragic incidents in New York and Washington, a Notre Dame athletic team will take the court tonight as the Irish volleyball team hosts interstate rival Valparaiso at 7 p.m. in the Joyce Center.

Brown

Head coach Debbie Brown's team (3-3) returns from a nine-day layoff created when four matches last week were canceled. The Irish last faced an opponent Sept. 9, when they fell to Pepperdine in three games. After also losing to Nebraska and UCLA that same weekend, the Irish used their time off to fine tune their games.

"Individually we had a chance to get better at — our individual passing skills and our individual blocking skills got better over the course of last week," Brown said.

The Irish won't simply be satisfied with a win in tonight's match against the Crusaders, against whom they hold a 15-2 all-time mark. Brown and her squad set goals for tonight's match.

The first of those goals is to score 18 points per game while serving. While the new rally scoring system allows a team to score while the other team serves, Brown stresses the importance of controlling the game by retaining the serve.

"If you don't score points when you serve, you simply won't win," Brown said. "That's just the way it works. We call it 'scoring old points.'"

Notre Dame also set as a goal keeping their hitting percentage over .300.

"I think that definitely is a doable goal for us and could even be a little higher," said senior opposite Kristy Kreher.

Notre Dame's final goal is to score at least three blocks per game in order to maintain success with the ball on the other side of the net.

"I think if we work on skill-specific things, we're going to have very good results [tonight]," Kreher said. "We're pretty much expecting to do very well, keep their points to a minimum."

In Notre Dame's three-game (15-7, 15-8, 15-3) win over Valparaiso last Sept. 12, Kreher led the Irish with nine kills. In the second game, then-freshman Katie Neff came off the bench and started a four-kill stretch as the Irish built an 11-6 lead. Neff is expected to perform a similar role this season.

"Katie Neff is someone who can really help turn things around for us, particularly if we're in a situation where we need to score points," Brown said. "When we're serving, she can be inserted as a blocking sub, as a front row sub."

When Neff enters the game, she generally replaces setter Kristen Kinder. Kinder also saw significant playing time last time the Irish and Crusaders met, playing the entire third game while graduated All-American Denise Boylan took a rest. This season, Kinder has emerged as a solid replacement at setter.

"I think that she's getting to be a very, very good player," Kreher said. "I'm excited to see great things out of her. She's a good leader on the court, very vocal. It's different having a new setter in there but it's definitely not something that's a disadvantage."

Biek said, "I feel like we made a breakthrough tonight. At times we played very well as a team. I don't think they realize how good they are. I'm looking forward to playing [Calvin] at our place."

The Belles received more good news from Jolie LeBeau and Angela Meyers. LeBeau returned from her ankle injury without further incident, contributing seven digs.

In addition, Meyers learned of being named last week's MIAA player of the week. Her stats in two games against Olivet proved to be enough to net her the award.

With three aces and almost five digs per game over the weekend, she showed flashes of what she is capable of.

"I'm very excited," Meyers said. "If I keep pushing myself I feel like I can do this again. However, it's a team game and I couldn't get the hits and digs I do without my teammates."

Having now seen what it takes to compete against upper echelon teams, the Belles will continue their Michigan road swing on Wednesday facing off against

Defensive line prepares for Spartan attack

By ANDREW SOUKUP
Associate Sports Editor

Mediocre is probably the best word to describe the play of the defensive line against Nebraska.

Mediocre in the sense that safety Ron Israel recorded 13 tackles, compared to 11 for the entire defensive line.

Mediocre in the sense that only defensive end Anthony Weaver made more than two tackles.

Mediocre in the sense that coaches are worried how well the front four will handle a much more physical rushing attack against Michigan State this weekend.

"For whatever reason, we didn't play up to our capabilities [against Nebraska]," defensive end Grant Irons said.

Irish defensive coordinator Greg Mattison agreed with Irons' assessment.

Mattison was especially concerned with the play of Wisne and Campbell. In just his third start, Wisne recorded two tackles, while Campbell, in his first collegiate start, made exactly zero.

"I think they're reading too much and trying to make too many plays instead of letting the blocks take you to the plays that are gonna be there," Mattison said.

However, Mattison doesn't seem particularly worried that his two interior linemen spent most of Notre Dame's first game being shoved around by a physical Nebraska offensive line.

In fact, he attributes mistakes made by Campbell and Wisne to inexperience, not to a lack of talent. And they only way they will learn, Mattison said, is to play more downs.

"Until you learn [how to make the right reads], you won't do it in a game," he said. "I think sometimes in practice you can get away with doing that because you're going against a lesser opponent. In a game, you better be right on your game."

While Mattison is concerned with Campbell and Wisne, he heaps praise on Weaver and Irons. While most defensive ends in college football are small and quick, both Notre Dame ends are big, physical rushers — Weaver is 286 pounds and Irons weighs 275. Where offensive lineman can push smaller ends out of the way, Weaver and Irons can simply barrel through the opposing line.

But Irons said the Irish front four aren't lacking physically — they need to be more aggressive from an emotional standpoint.

"Our intensity has to be much higher," he said. "We have to be out there from the very first play and show that we can beat any team."

Clearly, Michigan State is worried about Notre Dame's physical rush. The Spartans lost four of their five offensive lineman, and the Michigan State coaching staff is worried the new linemen will miss crucial blocking assignments.

"Defensively, Notre Dame is very strong and physical up front," Michigan State head coach Bobby Williams said. "The defensive ends, Anthony Weaver and Grant Irons, are as talented as any we'll face all season."

However, the Irish front four will face a much more physical offensive line as well. While Nebraska's running game relied around an option attack, Michigan State sends running back T.J. Duckett between the tackles, presenting a much more physical rushing attack.

And Duckett himself is a dangerous runner. He rushed for 141 yards on 26 carries in the Spartans 27-21 win over the Irish last season.

"He's a big, strong, physical running back, but then you look at his vision out there on the field, for a big running back, he's very agile and knows the scheme of his offense very well," said Irons.

"You gotta be low, you better be tackling or he'll be running over you," Mattison said. "We have to make sure we get off our blocks and try to knock him back."

Irish players say they feel they match up against the Spartans' rushing attack just as well as they matched up against Nebraska's — which might worry Irish fans, since Notre Dame gave up 182 rushing yards against a Husker offense that went stagnant in the second half.

Mattison said he is not sure how well Notre Dame's front four will match up against Michigan State. He doesn't know whether the defensive line will correct their mistakes. And he doesn't know if Notre Dame's performance against Nebraska was a one-time fluke, or rather something that will trouble the Irish all season long.

Mattison only knows one thing.

"Saturday, we'll find out what they can do," he said.

"For whatever reason, we didn't play up to our capabilities [against Nebraska]."

competition, women who played golf were unable to face other Division III competition that they would face in NCAA tournament play at the end of the season.

"By doing it this way, it allows us to outside of the conference and play other teams in our region that we will compete against when they determine who will go the NCAAs," Pekarek said. "So its important for us to start playing these other teams outside our [conference] so that when the NCAA committee looks at who they're going to invite to the tournament, they see that we've played these teams in our region and we're not just playing in our conference."

Pekarek noticed the disparity between MIAA play and most other conference play four years ago during her first season at Saint Mary's. However, as a first year head coach, the other MIAA golf coaches were reluctant to listen to her suggestions.

"Since I was the new kid on the block, they kind of brushed it off and said, 'This is the way we've been doing it and we're not going to change it,'" Pekarek said.

After four years of work with the golf program and some serious research, Pekarek put together a proposal for the MIAA coaches, which she presented at the end of last season. By the end of the spring, the MIAA women's golf program had adopted the new tournament form.

"The surprising thing is, once I actually put the proposal together and presented it, it made a lot of sense to [the MIAA coaches] and I didn't get any disputes, no real arguments," she said.

Under the new rules, the MIAA women's golf teams play three tournaments throughout the season in preparation for the championship tournament, which will be held at Saint Mary's at the end of September.

Although the tournaments have no direct effect on who the conference champion will be, they do play an integral role in the golf season. Play in the three tournaments will help decide who is chosen for MIAA first and second team at the end of the season.

In addition, should both days of the final tournament be rained out, an average score will be taken from the three tournaments and that average will be used to decide who is the MIAA champion.

Pekarek believes that the winner-take-all tournament is a more effective and a more fair way to determine the MIAA champion.

"We put the tournament at the end of our season so you're not penalized for having a couple of bad rounds at the beginning of the season when you've got young players who are getting acclimated to college golf," she said. "That's another reason why I thought this was a good idea."

The Belles played the first of the three non-championship tournaments Sept. 9, and took home their first-ever first place finish. This weekend, pitted against the same teams at a different course, they will be looking to repeat that performance.

Action gets under way today at 1 p.m. at Albion College.

"There were quite a few reasons I thought it definitely needed to change."

Spark off the bench

◆ Senior forward Kelly Tulisiak steps up as valuable weapon, knocks in key game-winning goals to lead Irish

By JEFF BALTRUZAK
Assistant Sports Editor

Throughout her career at Notre Dame, senior forward Kelly Tulisiak has shown that uncoachable knack of coming into the game and finding the net for that key go-ahead goal. Few players possess such a nose for finishing plays, and those who do prove to be valuable commodities on teams with championship aspirations.

So far this season, Tulisiak has made herself synonymous with clutch play for the Notre Dame offense, scoring two game-winning goals off the bench as a member of Notre Dame's rotation at the forward position.

"It was exciting — it felt great," said Tulisiak, referring to her pair of game-winning scores. "I was glad we could pull those games out."

Her first goal came in the Irish's Sept. 2 victory over Hartford, 2-0.

Tulisiak entered the 0-0 game in the 62nd minute, with Notre Dame's offense struggling to finish scoring opportunities. Within five minutes, Tulisiak scored the eventual winning goal when she recovered her own blocked shot and netted the ball quickly.

Tulisiak was just as clutch the next weekend against Indiana. With Notre Dame staring at a 1-1 scoreboard and a Hoosier squad with no intention of bending to the more highly-touted Irish.

Returning to the game in overtime, Tulisiak took sophomore forward Amy Warner's high centering pass and headed it in to give the Irish a 2-1 and a sigh of relief.

"She's probably, statistically, our most effective finisher right now," said head coach Randy Waldrum.

And he would be right. A quick look down the stat sheet shows Tulisiak has scored two goals on just three shots this season, and is tied with sophomore striker Amy Warner for the team lead.

Last year, Tulisiak had four goals on 15 shots for a .267 shooting percentage, unmatched by any other player on the Irish squad. She saw action in 19 of the Irish's 25 games, none of them starts.

Though she does not start, Tulisiak has seemed to fit well into Waldrum's rotating forwards system. The Irish coach

Belles fall to Knights

By MATT MOONEY
Sports Writer

The Saint Mary's volleyball team had its work cut out.

On the road Monday against last year's conference runner-up, the odds were not stacked in the Belles' favor.

Despite Saint Mary's fervent hopes for an upset, the Knights of Calvin College would not disappoint the home crowd. Calvin easily dispatched the Belles in three games 30-21, 30-14, and 30-17.

Head coach Julie Schroeder-Biek said afterwards that Calvin made a believer out of her.

"Calvin's number one in the conference right now. I thought we played better as a team, but Calvin is very good."

Despite the improved play, only one Belle made it to double digits in any scoring category. Junior Elizabeth Albert led the squad with 17 digs, followed by captain and last week's Conference player of the week Angela Meyers, who posted nine.

Schroeder-Biek still felt like improvements were made.

"Neither the scores nor the stats reflected how we played. We had a lot of very long rallies and we were talking more, which we haven't done well yet," she said.

The extended rallies and hard fought points kept game one close. However, the combination of Calvin's strong service game and the Belles' struggle to return it helped Calvin cruise by a nine-point margin.

In the second game, the Belles jumped out quickly to a 4-0 lead. For a moment, it looked like they might get a leg up on Calvin, but the Knights kept coming back. The Belles lost 30 of the next 40 points, dropping the game.

"They have a very tough service and it helped them to break away from us," said Schroeder-Biek.

Calvin had little trouble after that, putting away the Belles in three games.

Still Saint Mary's took away many positives. Schroeder-

Thanks to the efforts of head coach Theresa Pekarek, the Belles golf team will tee off today in the second all conference meet following a major revision of MIAA rules.

Instead of playing eight matches and totaling up team points throughout the season, this year's MIAA champion will be determined at one 36-hole, winner-take-all tournament at the end of September.

Pekarek was instrumental in instituting the change.

"There were quite a few reasons I thought it definitely needed to change," she said.

The first reason Pekarek noted was conformity. Most NCAA conferences, including the Big East, play a single, 54-hole championship round to determine the conference winner.

Since golf's institution as an MIAA sport, the conference champion was determined by eight separate tournaments, with a composite score found at the end of the season. This way of determining a conference champion just didn't agree with other conferences.

In addition to the lack of compliance with other conferences, the eight-tournament season ended on a very dull note.

"I think that number one it was becoming very anticlimactic," Pekarek said. "We would have eight tournaments within our conference. After the second of third tournament you already knew who was going to win the conference championship. It wasn't exciting."

In addition to providing end-of-the-season excitement, the new MIAA season has opened the possibility of playing other teams outside of the conference.

In prior seasons, with eight tournaments facing the same
