Sheehy-Welte announce candidacy

By Ann-Therese Darin

Yesterday Junior Jane Sheehy, McCandless Hall president, and Sue Welte, Sophomore Class president, announced their candidacies for student body president and vice-president of St. Mary's.

"Both of us feel that next year is going to be crucial with the decision of coeducation at stake," stated Miss Sheehy. "We feel that we have something substantial to offer."

Sue Welte

Besides experience with hall government, she and Miss Welte also believe that their ticket is strengthened by Sue's work in class government and by their participation this year in the Executive Cabinet of the student body president.

Miss Sheehy is also on the Student Affairs Committee and co-chairman of the residency report on coeducation being sponsored by the joint student governments.

"Student government has been very good this year," she commented. "They've made a real attempt to include people."

Both she and Miss Welte feel

that "students usually abdicate their responsibility after casting their votes in the election — they are disillusioned by the power structure of the college. Hopefully next year students will be given their rightful place in the community government — the one-third of the power that they are entitled to."

Besides working as Sophomore Class president, Miss Welte also sits on the Judicial Review Board. Last year, she was in the freshman class senate and the Regina Hall Council.

Questioned on whether they were running in conjunction with a Notre Dame ticket, Miss Welte replied, "No — we think that you have to be able to work with anyone. No one can predict who is going to win."

They plan to campaign floor to floor in order to "not only discuss our platform with the students, but also to listen to what they have to say. Student government can only be a catalyst for student opinion," they agreed.

Assembly approves co-education proposal

By Matt Cavanaugh

The Student Government proposal for co-education passed at last night's session of the General Assembly by a 652 to 71 vote after section seven of the proposal, dealing with black concentrations, was deleted by an overwhelming hand vote.

In other action by the assembly, the controversial Experimental College proposal passed after about 45 minutes of heated debate, 467 to 443. Also, the Jim Werner proposal that the University Scholarship Committee consider "only initial conditions" in revocation of scholarships, and that "the Office of Financial Aid be investigated" was tabled until tonight's session. The Co-ed Proposal will also be submitted to a campus-wide referendum this Friday.

According to Student Body Vice-President Mark Winings, there were over 1000 students at the opening of the assembly. He said that the reason only 921 people voted on the Experimental College Proposal, and only 728 voted on the Co-ed Proposal, was "because the crowd was deleted after the opening discussions."

The argument over section seven of the Student Government Proposal arose when the point was made from the floor that this section dealt with a "race issue" and not an issue of co-education. At this point, the chairman of the assembly, Student Body President Dave Krashna, relinquished the chair to Winings to speak in favor of the section from the floor. Krashna claimed that the University was increasing tension by not allowing black students to determine their own affairs. He said they have found that "requesting things does no good," and that "the only way to get anything is to demand it."

Krashna said that this section was included in the proposal as an emphasis of the problems facing minority groups at Notre Dame. After much debate the assembly voted to delete the section from the Student Government Proposal.

James Werner, a student who recently lost his scholarship due to what he contended was "University discrimination" proposed that "Any information not associated directly with a Notre Dame-Students Academic achievements is to be considered absolutely impertinent to the subsequent procedures in awarding, renewing or revoking academic scholarships and all other forms of academic finances." Werner claimed he was "trying to preserve the freedom of financial aid recipients in their activities at the University." An amendment was made to the effect that "only the initial requirements of the scholarship would be considered when revocation is threatened." The Werner Proposal, tabled because of the length of the debate involved will be reconsidered tonight.

The Experimental College designed to be "a more total living and educational experience for the students involved" was opposed by Holy Cross Hall President, Joe Stankus. He opposed the displacement of the Holy Cross Hall residents and claimed that "the Experimental College will not further the question of co-education, and it will add to the housing problem now facing Notre Dame." In defense of the proposal Bill Wilka emphasized the need for experimentation in the University and said that rejection of the proposal would "turn the tide" of the enthusiasm that has been built up for co-education. The vote showed that 467 of those in attendance favored the proposal while 443 opposed it.

At the end of the assembly Mike Conway, author of a proposal for co-education in Pangborn and Regina halls, asked that his proposal be tabled in favor of a similar one concerning Flanner Hall and Regina Hall.

Hendrick tosses name into SBP ring

By Kevin McGill

Sophomore Chip Hendrick announced his candidacy for the office of Student Body President yesterday, promising to "bring a new outlook on an old tradition," and taking the stand that Notre Dame is not ready for co-education.

Hendrick is a transfer student from Saint Joseph's College in Rensselaer, Indiana, but said he spent much time every week on the Notre Dame campus last year. He hopes that he can look at campus problems a little differently from the other candidates who he claims see Notre Dame only from the inside. He does not plan to name a running mate until he begins campaigning.

Sighting co-education as the major issue at the present time, Hendrick thinks that "next year will be a year of frustration" if Notre Dame goes co-ed prematurely. He says that the problem is only two years old, and that it hasn't yet been given a chance to work itself out.

Hendrick favors the continuation of policies as they are, with

Mooney declines debate

Student Body Presidential candidate Don Mooney said yesterday that he and his running-mate Dan Sherry would not campaign hall-to-hall together as was suggested by their major opponents, John Barkett and Orlando Rodriguez. Barkett and Rodriguez had suggested this method of campaign in their declaration of candidacy on Tuesday night, "to promote interest in the campaign and to allow the students to evaluate the candidates at close hand."

Mooney's original statement said that he did not want to "debate", because he wanted to avoid "the overly political aspects of student government that we feel must be de-emphasized." However, after Barkett's campaign manager, St. Ed's Hall President Bob Weaver, pointed out that Barkett desired a "discussion of the issues" and not a "debate", Mooney retracted his earlier statement and said, "We don't want to do this essentially because we don't have the time and because we have different halls to emphasize than John would."

Mooney continued, "Dan, myself, and also Cathy and Missy would like to campaign together as much as possible. We would like to bring out a different approach from John, an approach which probably wouldn't be suited to common discussion."

Mooney's revised statement also said that "we feel that because of the political atmosphere around here during campaigns it would probably be a debate anyway."

Suspension plan viewed

The Student Senate Constitutional Subcommittee last night agreed to pass an amendment out of committee recommending that Student Government be suspended for a year.

A petition to put the bill before the student body is presently in circulation and is expected to have the necessary five hundred signatures by the Senate meeting scheduled for tonight.

The bill was sponsored by Sorin Hall Senator Chuck Ryan who contended that "I may not vote for the amendment myself. But I think that students have a right to vote on this question; from what I've seen the proposal has really raised some excitement."

There will be a meeting of all Student Body Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates at 4:30 on Friday afternoon in SBP Dave Krashna's office.

NYU basketball tickets needed

The proposed plan to donate student basketball tickets to South Bend children for the New York University game has received little response. So far only nine student tickets have been donated and the goal of 100 tickets was hoped for.

Tickets may still be donated for this game by turning student passes into the athletic ticket office at the Convocation Center. The office is open from nine to five and tickets will still be accepted today and tomorrow.

It is also hoped that some students might donate a few hours of their time to drive these children to and from the February 23rd game. The children will be picked up around seven o'clock from either Lincoln or Harrison Schools. Twenty drivers are needed and anyone interested is asked to call 283-1145 or 283-1488.

This program is only a pilot stage but it is hoped that the procedure can be repeated on a much larger scale next year if this plan works.

University Forum awaits fate

By Greg Rowinski

The University Forum has been inactive this year, so far, with its plans still "unsettled" for the second semester, according to Chairman Donald Sniegowski. The decision regarding its continuation next year will be decided in this term.

The Forum has, since its inception in May, 1969, found it difficult, in the words of Professor Sniegowski, to "find its place" amidst the multitude of campus organizations already considering the topics that would be of concern to the Forum. Sniegowski still maintains that the Forum is "a good idea," but it will remain "on standby" until there is a specific reason to convene it.

The Forum itself was the brainchild of Fr. Hesburgh, to establish an "all-University forum." This group incorporated the six segments of the University. These segments are administration, faculty, undergraduates, alumni, trustees, and graduate students. This body was not legislative. Rather, its objectives were twofold: to listen to the total university community and to advise and recommend the proper authorities.

Trustee approval was reported to the entire University in May, 1969, by Fr. Hesburgh. Three members, and one ex-officio member, were elected from each of the six interest groups.

Although it was intended to meet in the fall of 1969, the Forum did not open its proceedings until February, 1970. At this three-hour meeting, officers were elected. An open meeting, concerned with "student dissent" followed, said Sniegowski.

The Forum was convened twice in spring 1970. Each meeting proceeded with a different format as the group sought to get settled, explained Sniegowski. At the first of these spring meetings, the Forum listened to those from the university community interested in using the opportunity of the open forum. A "fair number" of interested non-members, mostly students, added Sniegowski, attended the session. After the open portion, the Forum met privately.

The Forum then convened in May and dealt with the topic "Notre Dame as a Christian University." A panel presented a program; Fr. Toohey also chaired a panel of the Campus Ministry.

After these three get-togethers, a consensus of Forum members agreed that in spite of the amount of time and effort spent, the group had still not discovered its role.

The Forum remained dormant during the first semester of the 1970-71 academic year, partly because the members agreed that in the "rushed" conditions of that period, any meeting would be of "dubious" value, said Sniegowski.

Sniegowski added that the idea of the General Assembly may have removed some of the motivation behind the Forum. The students were the most interested in the idea of an open forum in Sniegowski's view, as shown by their attendance at past Forum meetings. Still, few, if any, representatives of the other five segments have attended the Assembly.

Student Union fares well financially

By Milt Jones

According to SU Director Bob Pohl and Comptroller Brian Nagle, "the Student Union did quite well financially in the first semester. Every commission profited except the social commission."

Pohl pointed out, however, "some groups that were budgeted to break even turned in profits."

The Social Commission profited $6,500 on concerts in the ACC during the first semester. But SUC lost $8,000 on the shows held in Stepan Center. These were Luther Allison, Pacific Gas and Electric, and Rare Earth. The commission lost $5,000 on the Rare Earth concert alone.

Pohl commented that "having such expensive groups in Stepan was our main mistake. This led to the big losses incurred there."

SUC lost $1500 on concerts overall, and is now operating with a $4,500 deficit.

"We plan to make the budget balance with the $1000 we profited from the Supremes Concert, Contemporary Jazz Festival, and two other scheduled concerts."

The Cultural Arts Festival has approximately $4,500 left to operate with. In addition to their original budget of close to $6,500, CAF profited $4,800 on patron cards this year. However, the patron card profits have been depleted, as well as a portion of the festival's original allotment.

During the first semester, Student Services Commission also showed an over-all profit. The service organization of the Commission, which handles refrigerator rentals, buses to O'Hare, club activities, student trips and other such matters picked up $300.

The Commission was originally expected to profit $150, and

according to Pohl, "they should continue to stay ahead in the second semester."

The publications division of Student Services Commission was predicted to break even. However, this facet of the organization brought in $250 over expenses.

The Observer took over control of the publication machines as of the second semester, and this will no longer be a part of Student Services Commission.

The student press, third subdivision of SSC, ran a deficit first semester. However, Nagle commented, "this was due to the fact that they bought all their inventory for the entire year at the beginning of the first semester. During the second semester they should balance their budget, because they have the bulk of their expenditures behind them."

Feature films such as "The Graduate," and "Bonnie and Clyde" profited the Cultural Arts Commission $6,000.

"The Graduate" was the most profitable film to date," Pohl commented. Cinema '71 has pulled in $2,800 to date. However, 50% of these profits were allocated to Black Maria Cinema Studios, an experimental film group.

The Academic Commission was budgeted $19,000 at the beginning of the year. They have spent $12,000 to date, but they have contracted all their speakers for the second semester. "No more speakers will be contracted as far as we know, and with salaries and other necessary expenditures they should break even," according to Nagle.

Finally, the Student Union Administration, which was budgeted $4,200 has spent $2,600. However, this has gone to major expenditures of remodeling, equipment, and supplies to last the entire year.

Nagle commented that he was "quite pleased with the results of the first semester. I'm also optimistic about the second semester. We plan to tighten things up and keep the individual commissions within their allotted budgets."

There were several errors in yesterday's Observer story about the Flanner Academic Commission report.

Of the 419 St. Mary's students who were questioned, 81% not 31% said they would be willing to live in a co-ed Flanner next year.

Also if Regina were to become co-ed the only areas where both men and women would be allowed is the lounges and study rooms in the hall.

Finally if Flanner were to become co-ed only maid service in each student's room would cease, not maid service in lounges and study rooms.

ND Marketing Symposium improves salesman's image

By Tim Burke

The Fourth Annual Marketing Symposium, which was held all day yesterday at the Library Auditorium, featured discussions, movies, and a role-playing session. This year Miles Laboratory, Inc., manufacturers of Alka-Seltzer, participated in the Symposium along with approximately 300 Notre Dame students.

The Marketing Symposium, which is part of the Paul D. Gilbert Lecture Series, was divided into three parts. A morning session centered around sales and marketing, an afternoon session analyzed various aspects of advertising, and a noon luncheon

Student gov't suspension text

Realizing the possibility of ineffectiveness in our present student government and being somewhat sensitive to the growing criticism by the student body to this effect, we the undersigned propose a radical but temporary change in the structure of the campus-wide student government and move the following:

1) That all provisions of the present constitution outside of this revision shall be suspended as of 1 April 1971.

2) That on 1 April 1972 this revision and the suspended constitution shall be invalid and that the undergraduate members of the Notre Dame community may effect any of the following actions:

a) re-institute the suspended constitution without this revision.
b) allow the constitution and this revision to remain invalid.

c) institute whatever new form of community government they may deem fit at that time.

3) That during the year set forth above the official student government of the University of Notre Dame du Lac (necessary for reasons of practicality and accreditation) be the students and rest in their residences. As such the various residences should organize as the members see fit.

4) That any student activities fee or any other sum which would ordinarily be channeled to the constitutional student government be distributed per capita to the various residence organizations. The members of each residence organization should recognize their obligation to share their funds to as to benefit the entire Notre Dame community.

5) That a residence organization be understood as any group of undergraduate students represented by a member in the student senate as outlined in the current constitution or, forseeing the possibility of an exchange of residence halls between the University of Notre Dame and St. Mary's College, any hall government set up in such an exchange.

6) That the residence organizations should recognize their obligations to provide an outstanding academic, social, cultural, and service program either as individual groups or by pooling their funds and working collectively.

Let it be understood that this proposal is not a product of any animosity general or specific nor meant as a condemnation or a criticism but rather is drafted with the intent of facilitating a change to a simple and residence-centered community government.

was provided for guests in between.

Dr. Hugh Furuhashi, Head of the Notre Dame Marketing Dept., Dr. David Appel, faculty moderator of the Marketing Club, and Bob McCarthy, President of the Marketing Club coordinated the events of the day, with the aid of fellow Marketing Club officers.

According to McCarthy, the goal of the program was to provide a format that was "entertaining, as well as educational and informational."

The Symposium opened with a presentation by two executives of Miles Laboratory: Mr. Roy S. Morris, National Field Sales Manager, and Mr. Frederick G. Di Orio, who is Vice President of Sales, spoke on sales as a profession, and on the image of the salesman.

McCarthy stated that they are trying to improve the image of the "high-pressured door-to-door salesman."

Next on the agenda was a half hour movie entitled "How to Make a Sales Call on a Retail Buyer." The movie portrayed a real sales call from opening instructions to final contracts.

Following the movie the company executives presented a role playing session: Di Orio and Morris played the parts of salesmen and Kevin Moore, treasurer of the ND Marketing Club, was the buyer in a simulated headquarters sales call. A question and answer period followed the performance, and ended the morning session.

Concerning the purpose of the morning session, McCarthy stated "We are trying to explain that sales is a very sophisticated activity, which involves more than just walking away and smiling

DA JUDGE

We don't know what Father Riehle was thinking about when he decided to suspend Messrs. Hannahan, Badger, Brennan and Holbert prior to their trials, but we suggest that the Administration's Enforcer redirect his thought patterns before he can be accused of prejudicing legal hearings and acting in lieu of the court.

Fr. Riehle has, of course, both prejudiced the four students' legal hearings and acted in lieu of the court. Painfully, he has acted incorrectly; Hannahan and Badger were acquitted, and charges against Holbert were dropped. Yet these three people are still under indefinite suspensions, subject apparently exclusively, to Fr. Riehle's considered whim.

It is the job of the courts to determine guilt or innocence. When Father Riehle prejudged the four and by prejudging them "clear and present dangers to the University" effectively found them guilty of violations of the Indiana drug code, he seriously endangered their chance of receiving a fair trial. Furthermore, he acted in extraconstitutional arrogance; assuming that he personally was as competent or more competent to judge guilt or innocence than was the Indiana Judicial system.

Now that Mr. Justice Riehle's decision has been reversed by the Real Courts, we would suggest that he lift the suspensions of Messrs. Hannahan, Badger and Holbert. In order not to further jeopardize Mr. Brennan's academic career and his chances of receiving a fair trial, we suggest Fr. Riehle remove Mr. Brennan's sentence.

Dave Lammers

The Drug Suspensions

Father Riehle's suspension of Mark Hannahan, Donald Badger, Tim Brennan and Don Holbert for their arrest in last December's drug busts is as blatant a case of injustice as I have ever seen at Notre Dame. The decision to suspend the four students raises serious objections to the judicial procedure at Notre Dame. It was not until now that the situation could be publicly discussed because the trial of Hannahan and Badger last Tuesday prevented certain things from being revealed before the trial. That trial resulted in the acquittal of Hannahan and Badger, and yet Father Riehle remains undecided whether to remove the suspensions and absolve himself of his act of double jeopardy.

What right does Father Riehle hold that allows him to suspend students before they are brought to trial in the civil court? He claims that keeping these students at the University presents a danger to the student body. And yet all four students continued to attend classes. Charges against Mr. Holbert were dropped, and Father Riehle knows it; Mr. Hannahan and Mr. Badger have been declared not guilty of the misdemeanors they were charged with by the civil court, and yet on Wednesday afternoon the Dean of Students was "undecided" as to whether he would drop the suspensions.

By what right does Father Riehle prolong the mental suspense of these two men until Friday; by what right does he continue the University punishment of suspension while the civil court has declared them innocent? The answer to these questions is simple: the Dean of Students, in loco parentis, is the accuser, judge, and executioner of any person who is perceived by the Dean of Students to be guilty of wrongdoing.

Mark Hannahan's case is illustrative of this power. On November 6, Hannahan was working at a gas station on Eddy Street, when he was introduced by his boss to a young man who happened to be a policeman in disguise. The agent asked Mr. Hannahan if he could find him some acid, for he had fallen on hard times and wanted some dope. Mr. Hannahan, in the presence of witnesses, replied that he neither used dope or had any to sell. After some pleading by the narcotics agent, Mr. Hannahan agreed to put him in touch with someone else who possibly might have dope for sale, which resulted in Hannahan's arrest in December. The defense attorney, had the need arisen, would have pleaded that the agent had engaged in "mental entrapment"; as it turned out Mr. Hannahan was acquitted for other reasons.

And so Mr. Hannahan, who has forsworn dope, was charged with a most dubious misdemeanor. Conviction would have prevented him from attending Ohio State Medical School. Suspension from the University before the civil charges were judged in a civil court is blatant double jeopardy. And most unbelievably, after the charges against Mr. Hannahan and Mr. Badger proved false Father Riehle remains undecided whether to end the suspensions and remove himself from his present position of double jeopardy.

Or consider the case of Tim Brennan, whose case will not come before the courts until late spring. Is Mr. Brennan to be prevented from graduation because the Dean of Students judges him to be guilty before he is tried by the courts?

And what about the appeals procedure, which South Bend attorney Thomas Singer describes as "a farce, a bowl of mush." Students are granted the right of counsel, but what kind of counsel? Students who know nothing of the rules of evidence or of the art of confronting witnesses? In short, a student accused of a misdemeanor is in the hands of Father Riehle, who can be either merciful or severe, depending upon his opinion. Given that situation of personal judgment, what fate befalls those students who contract gonorrhea, or fight with non-students, or are accused of drunkenness or recklessness, or break the law by destroying their draft cards? Obviously, punishment, if any, depends on Father Riehle's judgment, and if you happen to be an athlete or a friend of the Dean you can count on preferential treatment.

Father Riehle's aversion to drugs is understandable. But men that are awaiting charges, men that have been acquitted, and men whose charges have been dropped deserve fairness and retribution. Apologies should be extended by Father Riehle to those he has wronged. Justice must be removed from the personal judgment and execution of Father Riehle.

And if I may be extremely self-righteous, Father, when Peter and Jesus were rapping about how many times to forgive, what did they figure out?

Daniel V. ----- On Student Government "I Hope Nobody Reads This Column"

There seems to be a general consensus among student government t functionaries that student apathy is destroying the effectiveness of student government. I don't wish to dispute the fact that student government is losing its effectiveness, but rather to discuss its meaning.

Perhaps apathy is a virtue in this situation. Perhaps the students are trying to tell the student politicians something. Perhaps they should listen to the sound of silence and reflect on it.

The politicians should start asking themselves whether they have created their own problems by not adjusting to the new mood of the students.

The problems of improving hall life have largely been solved. Co-education is coming and forceful student leadership is not needed to bring it to fruition.

Things aren't perfect but the students have been judiciously placated. You will never find a student who will admit he is satisfied, only lovers and drunks will admit that, but his silence is mute evidence of his lack of concern.

But while the students (as a collectivity) sees little in his immediate surrounding to spend his construction energy on, student government does. If there are no issues they will create them. The senate, tenure, & the Jim Werner case failed to capture the students imagination. Now, the politicians will turn to an ungeneral assembly in search of issues.

They may find them. If you search hard enough you always will. But they will not be a reflection of the will of the student. And when student government fails to reflect the views of the student, it will lose its effectiveness. To the extent it has occurred student government has lost its effectiveness.

There are times in the history of any organization in which forceful leadership is needed and there are times (too terribly short) when virtue lies in moderation. Those of us who have spent several years at Du Lac know the former times all too well. They were a time of conflict in which we rejoiced in the successes of Rossie and McKenna even if we were a bit unhappy over the fact that rhetorical enmity sometimes carried more weight with the administration than did rational persuasion.

But now the times are different for the real issues have been decided. But student government has failed to see the chance that this necessitates in their position. They have ignored the thought that this is a time for "benign neglect" because it is a distasteful policy for those who want to demonstrate their power.

However, it is not a strategy in which progress will not be made. It is but one in which mutual accommodation will be the order of the day.

Someday the administration will again be reactionary enough to earn the students active disdain. But this is not that time. Students are not interested in student government in the way student government envisions itself. They ignore the discussion of it, they ignore articles that address themselves to the subject. Articles like this.

But that's fine with me. I welcome the new era of student "apathy", I would be happy if no one read this column.

Bus Stations S---k!

A long time ago some perverted fiend originated the myth that bus stations are fascinating, unique areas where all levels of society gather for a massive interaction creating a paradise for sociological study.

"It's really neat to just sit in a bus station and watch people" claim the pseudo-psychologists. The myth is still a popular one but please realize it is nothing more than a myth.

Bus stations s---k!

Pornography runs rampant. Homely girls read obscene books. They sit salivating over finger-worn copies of Naked Come the Dildo and the recently acclaimed classic Eco-Sex. The more advanced bus stations, (presumably because the establishment was losing too much revenue from the open rack display), have installed safe, clean, sanitary coin-operated, book machines.

Pinball machines echo noisily.

Old men gather to remember when.

Pals wait patiently. They're never in any hurry but they never sit still. They'll find 1001 different ways to cross their legs and they can always spot the next trick before he gets both feet inside the door. The guys get the hard up look on his face and he'll pay for anything at this point. She leads him out the side door. Neither one is smiling. Her face, worn and tired, mirrors pathetic existence.

Bus station snack bars possess the matchless ability to prepare hamburgers in such a fashion that when one picks it up one's fingers become coated with a slimy, warm, rancid grease. The hot coffee isn't and the fresh pastry is stale.

Headlines glare from nameless newspapers: "The Many Men in Jackie's Love Life", "I Sold My Body Because I Wanted A Baby".

The buses are never on time and inevitably if you wait more than fifteen minutes, you always wait alone. Sitting in the Toledo depot waiting for a bus from Cleveland which is 2 1/2 hours late can cause one's mind to do strange things. At such times even thoughts of the Golden Dome elicit favorable responses.

People sit. Alone. Depressed.

Middle America waits silently.

The absurd reality of it all.

Indeed. Bus stations s---k!

Blue Hills foundry

The bushes flattened in the wheezing wind as it swept, crazy, off the water and I drove out in the quiet morning on County Trunk C, bound for the Blue Hills Foundry.

The Blue Hills Foundry is in this old barn (weathered, gapped, leaning boards that the wind sails through). It sits in the boondocks, in the hills east of Rice Lake, Wisconsin, looking like a refugee from a Dust Bowl Ballad.

Last summer, beardless with my hair chopped to High School length, I went there to work: to make sewer steps, water bug bootjacks, boat anchors and bells and, maybe, some subtle Revolution. You know, throw in a few quiet interjections here and there, a few insights, a few nifty analogies illustrating the similarities between NFO milk dumpings and student striking. Meanwhile my hair and beard were getting longer, my hands were getting more calloused, the summer was growing hotter.

Then one day this rough old dude George Michalski (who is damn near 60; has spent half his life logging; rode freights from the boondocks to Chicago in depression days; has been busted about 20 times for getting drunk and disturbing the peace) reckons to me: "What do you think of all these college students and niggers who riot?" Oh Jesus, I thought. Oh Jesus! George was a huge guy standing over me, booted and lumberjackish, looking like he was about to disturb the peace. Bravely, though in a soft voice, I said back: "Well George, usually any trouble is played up by the media, usually there's good reason for student's and black people's rebellion, usually the police and the administrators are the first ones to really screw up the situation! I was just about to throw in something about the NFO or how the little man in the woods gets screwed or some other something George could relate to when he surged fiercely forward and bellowed: "Goddam right, that's what I thought. Them college students and niggers are the only ones with any brains. I don't care who riots, as long as they riot. They keep those bastards at the top from gettin' smart. Them unions are all gettin' smart and fat-assed, 'cept for that Chavez guy. Some of these dumb guys around here say to me 'why don't you use your vote?' Votes, sheeyit! Votes don't mean a goddam thing no more. What we need in this country is a Revolution." I damn near fell over in amazement. And then my boss, Herb, reckoned "We gotta tear this country down. We gotta tear it down 'til we can catch up with it again." Then I did fall over. Far Out! Redneck Revolutionaries.

Shamefaced I recalled my earlier doubts and down lookings on these back country men. My wrong thoughts that the only things George and Herb could rap on were cars and cows and fishing and logging and farming; my crooked convictions that their minds were stuck fast in the ultimate nihilism of American "Progress."

And they are everywhere, quiet in the back country, grumbling and grudging as the state slowly stomps and sits on them, as the state creeps closer and eats up their rights crumb by crumb by crumb: they wait (slow-burning) not saying much (slow-burning) until that awful and, perhaps, inevitable moment when they must (we must) burn faster or vanish before that cold, bitter, loveless wind that is sweeping and whipping, swifter and stronger, 'cross the country.

Many people would laugh at this story, yet act as though they do believe. Such is the case of any girl who feels she can't be whole without the love of a man. Actually, she is cheating both herself and her lover if she thinks that she be only part a person to enter a love relationship; for love is one instance where two halves do not make a whole.

But if you must be a woman to love, then what is a woman and how does a girl become one? Some would have you think that womanhood is a matter of age or sexual experience. It isn't so. Being a woman means knowing yourself, and accepting yourself for what you are.

Certain preconceptions about women sometimes stand in the way of girls' getting to know themselves. Traditionally, in order to be called "feminine" (and God help the girl who was not!), you had to speak, dress, and act in a certain way. So instead of each girl confronting herself and determining what suited her as an individual, a girl simply accepted the feminine role. In Homer's time all females were typecast in that manner. It is written how the women of Troy would go out each day to the city walls and watch as the men battled on the plains beyond. As the fighting would draw to a close, the women would retire to their rooms and receive the returning warriors. The men would find pleasure in their arms, and no doubt entertain the women with stories of what had happened in the "outside world" that day. The men were the thinkers, the doers. Women, the watchers-at-the-walls.

All that was so many years ago that we automatically assume that it has no relevance to our own modern lives. But how many of us still play the Helen Game? We spend our time trying to recreate the face that could launch a thousand ships (or at least the proverbial seven Notre Dame guys), while men are out building ships and sailing them to new lands. A girl who is truly to know herself must refuse to be

Mike McQuestion

Only a few of the people were into the stock rhetoric; to my companions, it seemed to be just another anti-war rally. Yet, I couldn't help wondering why the 8,000-odd students had filled the fieldhouse—most seemed bored. And hadn't a new wave of student apathy swept the universities, leaving the movement high and dry?

The Laos invasion had come and gone at Notre Dame. It was the furthest thing from my mind as I passed through Milwaukee that afternoon. It would be good to see old friends again, and there was always plenty to do in Madison. A refreshing weekend away before the new semester became too serious.

Now the rally-leaders were calling for a march to the state capitol. I could sense a growing excitement—the prospect of a confrontation. Outside, Jeff seemed suddenly animated; "We gotta stick together or they might get one of us alone." Other people were hastily forming affinity groups as the march began.

My arrival Friday had been greeted with a variety of horror stories about the University of Madison police forces. Feelings were apparently bad on both sides, so I was only mildly surprised to see a regiment of Madison's finest approaching the head of the rally in full riot gear. Tension was high now—apparently they wanted to split us into smaller groups at the first corner. "Hell no, we won't go" gave way to "Off the pigs", and the first canister of tear gas landed to our right. We immediately split to the left.

By now, the violence had begun. I saw a couple of students knocked down and dragged to an awaiting panel truck. Ice chunks were flying over our heads. Some brave souls were shouting to split up and meet at the capitol any way we could get there, fully aware that police observers restricted by those stereotyped roles that were old even when Homer wrote of them. You, as a girl, must honestly come to terms with who you really are, and what you, yourself, here, now, want out of life.

Understanding yourself, you must then go on and positively affirm and accept yourself. For truly you can love no other until you first have learned to love yourself. It is as Kierkegaard has written: "No girl who is not so proud really knows how to love..."

Probably the thing a girl finds it most difficult to have pride in is her mind. She's always been concerned about her figure, and worked to develop her personality, but her mind has been considered relatively unimportant. Everyone knows boys don't want girls with brains. So by the time she arrives at college, a girl is oftentimes afraid to become intellectually involved. She will perform adequately academically, but shy away from functioning intellectually. In other words, she'll make decent grades—that makes her a suitable match for an up-an-coming college grad—but she won't get excited by ideas. Thought will be a 9:00-10:00, Monday, Wednesday, Friday thing rather than an integral part of her daily life. And the college coeds speech is littered with defensive phrases designed to explain this phenomenon; "My grades aren't important—he needs a good average to get into law school/med school/grad school...", "You don't need an 'A' in chemistry to be able to cook!", and "It's not the grades that matter, it's the 'college experience'." Translation: I don't really care about my education, I'm here husband-hunting.

Unfortunately, the universal fear that showing her brains will lessen a girl's chances for dates is not unfounded. Any male who is unsure of his masculinity will feel threatened by a woman who is secure in her femininity and sure of her personhood. But should you give up your self in the hopes of maybe winning someone else? No, you must place a higher value than that on yourself and dare to be you. Remember when things seem difficult, what Shelley has said to you, who dares to be an individual:

"My Song, I fear that thou wilt find but few

Who fitly shall conceive thy reasoning..."

Whence, if by misadventure, chance should bring

Thee to base company (as chance may do),

Quite unaware of what thou dost contain,

I prithee, comfort thy sweet self again,

My last delight! tell them that they are dull,

And bid them own that thou art beautiful."

And remember too, even if boys do dislike girls who show their intelligence, men do not. By being herself, a woman may lessen her chances of finding a male, but she will have improved her chances of finding a real man. For only a real man can cope with a whole woman and not feel threatened. And the relationship between two people who are both adults and both individuals is a thing of beauty and by far surpasses the kind of relationship had by two people, each of whom feels inadequate alone. The person who really loves is the one who "...has comprehended the deep secret that also in loving another person one must be sufficient unto one's self." (Kierkegaard)

So what about you? Don't you deserve to be yourself? Doesn't the man you would love deserve a real woman rather than a girl? You don't have to play the Helen Game, women don't have to be watchers-at-the-walls. It's much more exciting out on the plains where the people and the ideas are interacting and real life is going on. Be not, then, as Homer's Helen, but rather as Tennyson's Ulysses, who would say to you:

"Come, my friends, 'tis not to late to seek a newer world."

A hollow victory at Madison

were probably calmly snapping pictures of suspected leaders. I felt the mob psychology now—some sort of an amalgamated hatred; out of control.

Jeff proved to be a brilliant strategist; leading our group as well as about twenty-five other followers on a zig-zag course to capitol square, successfully out-flanking cops on every corner. We were the first there; I could feel a sense of triumph, looking back to the streets of people, all struggling to the goal we had already gained.

It took a while to sense the hollowness of our victory. What had started under the pretense of an anti-war march had degenerated to a raging street battle. It seemed strange that only now was I thinking ethics.

After a while, most of the demonstrators had reached the square. They filled the streets, blocking traffic and forcing more police aggression. A sarcastic "America the Beautiful" perhaps best typified our feelings, having "won" the street battle. Much to the relief of the amassed police, no one attempted to enter the capitol building. We climaxed and died within ten minutes.

I found it difficult to draw any profound meaning from the ordeal. Later that night, Jeff and I discussed the afternoon's events, and what he thought to be the University of Wisconsin climate in general: "You see Leo, we're frustrated with the whole scene. . . I mean, the Madison pigs are out to get us. . . they don't give a shit about the war, they just enjoy putting us down. . ." I wanted to ask how many students he thought gave a shit. . .

I returned to Notre Dame's relaxing apathy the next day, wondering how much longer it could last, and whether I was glad to be back, or not.

Nixon discusses renewal of peace talks

WASHINGTON (UPI) - President Nixon warned North Vietnam Wednesday that "we are not going to make any more concessions" at the Paris peace talks and that time was running out for meaningful negotiations with the United States.

He refused, at an impromptu White House news conference, to speculate whether South Vietnam might extend its Laotian offensive into North Vietnam. But, he added: "I'm not going to place any limitation on use of air power."

He specifically ruled out use of tactical nuclear weapons in Southeast Asia.

While U.S. troops will continue to withdraw as swiftly as their safety can be guaranteed, the President, said, American forces will remain in South Vietnam until Hanoi released all U.S. prisoners of war.

During his 40 minute session with newsmen, the President said that as the United States proceeds with its troop pullout, it will have increasingly less influence over the course of events in Indochina.

His message for the leadership in Hanoi presumably was that if serious negotiations do not begin soon in Paris, the North Vietnamese will find themselves dealing with a government in Saigon that is less willing to negotiate reasonably.

For his part, he said, the United States is not prepared to go further than the negotiating position he advanced in a major speech last October. At that time, he proposed a mutual cease fire at existing military positions and an expanded Geneva style conference on the entire Indochina problem.

"I do not want to suggest there will be any more concession," Nixon said. "We are not going to make any more concessions."

He asserted that the Cambodian campaign early last summer had severed Hanoi's only other major supply line into South Vietnam. If the present assault against the Ho Chi Minh Trail network in Laos is a success, he said, accelerated U.S. troop withdrawals can be expected.

Responding to strong Communist Chinese protests over the Laotian operation, Nixon indicated he had no fear that Peking would commit troops to the conflict.

"As far as the actions in southern Laos are concerned, they present no threat to Communist China," Nixon said. "They have no reason to react to it."

Chip Hendrick eyes SBP

Saint Mary's gradually increasing its enrollment, helped financially by Notre Dame.

"St. Joseph went coed two or three years ago," he said, "and based on what happened, I'm sure that everybody will be let down if Notre Dame does. I think that we should have the discussion of a problem on an idea, with the members of this community, which will lead to a commitment based on intelligent investigation rather than emotion or spur-of-the-moment interest."

The base of Hendrick's social ideas centers on university life rather than hall life. He wants a real Student Center at Notre Dame and at Saint Mary's which will be used, rather than the library, for social gatherings, and says he has "several ideas to erase boredom on campus, especially in the second semester."

With a healthy university life, Hendrick feels that hall life will fall into place.

Hendrick would leave Student Government basically unchanged, instituting an executive and a representative board which he will describe in his platform. However, he wants to give government a new look. He advocates regular section meetings within the halls to keep everyone informed of what the student government is doing.

Hendrick wants to set up a council to try to work to find a solution to the war in Indochina. The council would include an administrative member able to donate much time as moderator.

Hendrick also favors minority recruitment to make the University "well-rounded" and believes that that program needs more funds. He would like to investigate the program to be assured that everything is going as it should.

On a number of smaller issues, Hendrick thinks that money is being wasted by the Administration, money that could be used in other areas such as minority recruitment. He said that sophomore cars "is an excellent chance to test the responsibility of today's freshman, but the real problem involved is space, and there just isn't enough."

He would also like to see the language requirement changed for students of the University.

Hendrick at present has no campaign manager and states that he wasn't "to show everyone how hard I can work for Notre Dame, and that my running is not just a political thing." He hopes to reach as many students as he can in his campaign and to see Father Hesburgh, President of the University, if possible during the campaign, to discuss the issues involved with him.

SMC coffeehouse closure due to lack of interest

By Maria Gallagher

St. Mary's coffeehouse, which for 3 years served as a place where students could go for coffee and folk entertainment, has been dissolved, according to managers Cece Fortune, Kathy Hilgart, and Diane Miller.

In an interview yesterday, the three girls cited a lack of interest on the part of students as the main contributing factor to the closing.

"The coffeehouse as such is no longer as needed as it was before as it was on college campuses. They are dying out all over the country," Miss Fortune claimed.

The coffeehouse, which was closed on and off last year, was taken over in June by the three girls who aimed at making it a place for students, for the expression of art, for social exchange, for studying, and for a dialog between the individual and the community.

A secondary purpose was to raise money for a scholarship to be made available to anyone who needed it. Last June the managers gave a $500 scholarship, and this past December $1300 was given to two seniors to enable them to finish their studies at SMC. The managers stressed the need for the coffeehouse's patrons to know that the money taken in was used to student financial aid.

The empty coffeehouse, now under the jurisdiction of the SSO, failed to open after Christmas because of lack of student backing during the first semester. However, the managers feel that their aims are vital, but cannot be realized within the structure of a coffeehouse. They have proposed that a student union be created to manage a place for students embodying their four ideals. The need was stressed for a large group representing the entire student body (namely the Student Government) to manage such a place.

The student union commission would assume full responsibility to the SSO, as well as the benefits extended to other SSO commissions. A student union manager should head this commission, and be chosen as other SSO commissioners. Funds would go towards its improvement or to the SSO, as opposed to a scholarship, the girls said.

No decision has yet been made concerning the future of the defunct coffeehouse. Anyone having any other suggestions for the use of the empty space should contact Diane Shahade, SSO chairman.

Mooney campaign

In commenting on Mooney's revised statement, Barkett said, "I really don't understand where they got the idea of a debate. The headline in the Observer was a mistake. I thought we made it clear to them that we wanted a discussion of the issues."

Barkett said that he thought that the best way to interest people in the campaign and thus to talk to more people was to have coordinated campaigns.

This, he said would stimulate discussion.

Barkett also said that even if his opponents' schedule were already made up it could easily be changed "if they were interested in giving the students a good, close look at the candidates and their issues."

"This would give the best possible exposure," he said.

Barkett said "If Mooney's approach is not suited to common discussion, 'then what is it suited to?'"

As to Barkett's fear of the talks turning into a debate, Barkett said, "This will only happen if one of the candidates wants it that way. I have already said that I don't, and Don certainly doesn't, so I can see no problem."

Rick Wohlhuter- he expects to win

by Vic Dorr
Observer Sportswriter

Rick Wohlhuter is a winner. Track coach Alex Wilson realized this when he recruited him from high school. Follower's of Notre Dame's fortunes in track and field realized this as soon as Wohlhuter began performing as an Irish freshman. And now, some three years after his ND debut, Wohlhuter is forcibly proving this point to nearly everyone who competes against him. In fact, over the course of the past two years, Wohlhuter has only been beaten twice.

One of these instances came last weekend, at the hands of Michigan State's Jim Casselman.

"It really surprised me," said Wohlhuter. "I hadn't expected to have much trouble in that race." The race of which he spoke was the 600 yards, the event in which he holds the NCAA title. This was the first competition 600 which Wohlhuter has run this season, and he plainly upset to have lost it. He realized though, that meets such as the one last weekend do not carry a great deal of weight.

"Except for the dual meets," he pointed out, "the NCAA meet is really the only thing that matters in indoor track. Everything else is on an individual basis. There are no team winners announced in meets like the one last weekend, so individual places are the only things to compete for. Of course there are team winners in dual meets, and there will also be a team winner selected in the NCAA meet." As captain of this year's squad, Rick is well qualified to comment on the progress of the 1971 indoor track unit. He has, after all, led them to wins over Miami of Ohio and Ohio State in their only two dual meet match ups.

The team has completed its dual schedule, but the toughest competition is still to come. During the next four weekends, the Irish runners will be participating in the Central Collegiate Conference meet, the Ohio State Invitational, the ICAAAA meet, and, of course, the NCAA meet. Wohlhuter feels that the team can do reasonably well in meets such as these.

"We don't have a whole lot of depth," he said, "but we do have several fairly good individuals. And because of this, we should be able to make out alright in meets where the points are pretty well split up."

But because track is first of all an individual sport, Rick is giving much consideration to the opposition that he will be facing in the weeks to come.

"The competition that we had last weekend was the roughest that we've had all year. But for me, anyway, things shouldn't be too bad until the NCAA meet. I really don't expect to lose until then." Wohlhuter's caution when referring to the upcoming showdown in Detroit (site of the NCAA meet) is justified. Although he is the defending champion, Rick will be hard pressed to defend his title in the 600.

Rick Wohlhuter, Captain of the ND track team

"The guys who'll probably give me the most trouble are Tommy Turner (Murray State) and Audrey Hardy (Tennessee). Both of them ran in the 600 last year."

Despite all of its fanfare, indoor track is just a tuneup for the more demanding outdoor season. The months spent inside are used to develop speed, strength, and endurance. They are more or less of a competition tuneup. Even the indoor meets are planned - with several extra running events, for instance - so that the athletes will be well prepared when the outdoor season gets underway.

"I've been trying to develop my strength this winter," commented Wohlhuter. "That's why I didn't run the 600 in our meet with Miami (he ran the mile, instead). I'm trying to get in shape for the outdoor season. I want to get some distance work in, so I'll be ready for the 880." The 880 is the event that Rick will run once the team moves outside, and strangely enough, he considers this event to be his best. Besides running in the half-mile, Wohlhuter also runs a leg of the mile relay for the outdoor squad.

But neither he nor any of his teammates are looking ahead to the outdoor season. They may be looking ahead, but only to the indoor title meets which now face them. And as for Rick Wohlhuter's defense of his 600 title in the NCAA meet, his opponents are at a definite disadvantage. Because Rick Wohlhuter does not expect to lose.

Baseball's Injustice

© 1970, Los Angeles Times

Really, sometimes I think Baseball as an industry is run by the Krupp family. On second thought, cannon-makers have more heart. You know what they've done now? They've segregated the Hall of Fame!

I ask you!

They have taken Baseball's shrine, Cooperstown, and turned it into a "Sorry, I can't serve you here-but if you'll step around to the back" place.

They have told Satchel Paige they're going to let him in but he's to bring his House of David uniform with him. He's back to the Chattanooga Black Lookouts, the bus league. He's barnstorming again. He's in the comedy wing. He's on the Baltimore Elite Giants. The Indianapolis Clowns. He's an end man. Mr. Bones. He gets in the Stepin Fetchit Room, I guess.

Great gobbles of sheep shears! Who's in charge here, Senator Claghorn? Who in the world got the bright idea to dust off and put back the "Colored Only" sign in this day and age? Where have these guys BEEN?!

Tell me it's a practical joke. Allen Funt is going to jump out any minute and break up and say "Smile, you're on 'Candid Camera!'" There's no other rational explanation.

The situation is this: "Baseball's" Hall of Fame is actually run by, and its rules laid down by, a board of directors. While it includes baseball men such as the chairman of the board, former baseball commissioner Ford Frick, as well as Bob Carpenter of the Phils, league presidents Joe Cronin and Chub Feeney, the present commissioner, Bowie Kuhn, Tom Yawkey of the Red Sox and former league presidents Warren Giles and William Harridge, it also includes sewing machine heirs, foundation presidents-monied residents of upper New York State. It is a private organization which has Baseball's sanction but is not governed by Baseball. One Paul Kerr is president. Stephen C. Clark, Dr. James Bordley III, Edward Stack and Howard C. Talbot are officers of the company. It is a tourist attraction - 3,000 people a day go through it in summer, 200,000 a year.

It argues that its rules are inflexible. Let us see.

For admission, an ACTIVE player must have been out of the game five years and get 75% of the vote of the baseball writers.

But, there is a "Veteran's Committee" which consists of a dozen men (players like Bill Terry, Frankie Frisch, executives like Giles, J. Roy Stockton and so on) and they can elect WHOM THEY WISH from a roster of players, managers, executives, umpires and, presumably, ushers and traveling secretaries, provided it has been 20 years since they left the game for players and five years since retirement for execs. This year, the Veterans Committee whisked SEVEN men into the Hall of Fame, one executive and six players. They are as full-fledged members as Babe Ruth or Ty Cobb. They get to eat with the family.

Five years ago, this committee amended its own rules to admit Casey Stengel by lowering the five-year retirement to six months, provided the honoree was 65 years of age or older.

Impaneling a 10-man committee, 80% of which is comprised of black players, writers and broadcasters to select (at the rate of one-a-year) great players from the old Negro leagues for a special section of the Hall is a clumsy, self-defeating attempt to right a wrong by compounding it. Every school boy knows Satchel Paige belongs in the Hall of Fame. So does every Hall of Famer.

A man who twice struck out 22 major leaguers in a game, who won 12 games in relief (and saved 10 others) for the old St. Louis Browns, who may have been the worst team ever to play the game, when he was at least 46 years old should not be in the back of this bus. No one who ever pitched or batted against Satch was consulted in this move, you may be sure-not Joe DiMaggio, Dizzy Dean or Bob Feller, none of whom is ashamed to say he was the greatest. But this notion of Jim Crow in Baseball's Heaven is appalling in its own right. I can't think of a more terrible idea. To have kept Satchel Paige from playing in the white leagues for 24 years and then bar him from the pearly gates on the grounds he didn't play the required 10 years is a shocking bit of insolent cynicism, a disservice to America.

What is this-1840? Either let him in the front of the Hall-or move the damn thing to Mississippi.

ND meets Rams in Garden

Notre Dame, Ind. - Notre Dame's basketball team heads into another demanding road trip hopeful of producing victories that will help reach the plateau that coach Johnny Dee has established for entry into a post-season tournament.

The nationally ranked Irish quintet, with a 14-6 overall ledger, faces Fordham in New York's Madison Square Garden Thursday night (9 P.M.) and then West Virginia in Morgantown Saturday afternoon (1:30 P.M.) in a regionally televised contest.

Thursday's game with surprising Fordham, now 18-1 and ranked among the nation's top 20 teams, is the second game of a Garden doubleheader that features Temple and Manhattan in the opener. And from all indications the appearance of All-American Austin Carr and company will attract the first sellout crowd (19,500) ever in the new Garden for a regular season college game.

Carr, who has received excellent support in recent games from senior Sid Catlett (9.6 ppg., 9.5 rebs) in addition to steady forward Collis Jones (22.9 ppg, 12.0 rebs), is second nationally in scoring with a nifty 37.2 average. He has scored 38, 36, 37, 36, and 46 points in his last five games.

Carr, who scored just 29 points in Notre Dame's 91-76 victory at home over Fordham last year, has a total of 2,158 career points in 64 games, an average of 33.7 and third only behind Pete Maravich (44.2) and Oscar Robertson (33.8).

"I said before the season that if we could finish with 17-19 victories against the schedule we play we would be deserving of an NCAA bid," said Dee, who hopes that regular center John Pleick will be able to play after missing the last two games with a bruised heel.

Fordham, its only setback this year a one point decision to Temple, is anchored by forward Charlie Yelverton. The Ram ace scored 20 points in last Saturday's 76-72 win over rival St. John's and is averaging 22.9 ppg.

Gustafson wins, Irish lose

by Bruce Kennedy
Observer Sportswriter

Heavyweight Phil Gustafson scored another first period pin, but Notre Dame's wrestler's fell to Western Michigan 27-13 in the ACC last night. Their season slate now stands at 6-8-1.

Gustafson's win was his 33rd in a row at Notre Dame and he stands 15-0 this season.

Bob Habig also registered a pin, and Rich Esposto managed an 11-10 decision, but WMU won the other seven matches and stayed ahead of the Irish the entire meet.

Tom Ciaccio, 118 pounds, took an early 5-0 lead but could not advance further and lost 8-5. Then Steve Moylan (126) was pinned in the first period, and Chris Paige (134) lost an 11-6 decision, giving WMU an 11-0 lead.

Esposto's win and Habig's pin closed the gap to 11-8, but Western Michigan won four straight matches and clinched the meet.

Bob Bennett (158) and Kurt Bottjer (167) were defeated in third period pins, so ND then needed three pins to salvage the match. But John Imhoff (177) was topped 5-0, and Rick Aselage (190) suffered a 10-2 defeat. Gustafson's 47 second pin followed, but the meet was lost, 27-13.

The wrestlers will participate in the Wheaton Tournament Saturday and will meet Illinois Tech Wednesday

What's so special about Beechwood Ageing?

We must be bragging too much about Beechwood Ageing.

Because we're starting to get some flak about it. Like, "Beechwood, Beechwood... big deal." And "If Beechwood Ageing is so hot, why don't you tell everybody what it is?"

So we will.

First, it isn't big wooden casks that we age Budweiser in.

But it is a layer of thin wood strips from the beech tree (what else?) laid down in a dense lattice on the bottom of our glass-lined and stainless steel lagering tanks. This is where we let Budweiser ferment a second time. (Most brewers quit after one fermentation. We don't.)

These beechwood strips offer extra surface area for tiny yeast particles to cling to, helping clarify the beer. And since these strips are also porous, they help absorb beer's natural "edge," giving Budweiser its finished taste. Or in other words, "a taste, a smoothness and a drinkability you will find in no other beer at any price."

Ah yes, drinkability. That's what's so special about Beechwood Ageing.

But you know that.

after getting the door slammed in your face."

A luncheon was provided for about 185 students, faculty, and company representatives at the Morris Inn, courtesy of Mr. Paul D. Gilbert, president of Gilbert Clothing Stores in South Bend. Job opportunities in Marketing were discussed in a question and answer period, which was conducted after the noon meal.

The afternoon session opened with an audio-visual presentation in the Library Auditorium. A 30 minute film segment traced the history of actual Alka-Selzer commercials during the past five years.

McCarthy felt that this film was one of the "highlights of the day. Most people don't realize how entertaining commercials are when you watch them closely," he explained.

McCarthy noted that Alka-Selzer has recently changed their advertising agency and felt that "they would be an excellent company to explain agency principles relations."

Last December, Miles Laboratory, Inc., switched from the Doyle, Dane, and Bernback agency (who also handle Avis rent-a-car advertising) to the Mary Wells, Rich, and Green Agency (who also handle Braniff Airlines). Many people criticized this switch, which involves about $23 million worth of advertising annually.

Miles Laboratory answered the criticism by announcing that they were faced with decreasing sales, and that merely because a commercial is entertaining, it doesn't necessarily follow that it will sell products.

Two discussions followed the film segment. Once centered on sales results and advertising campaigns. The second analyzed the effect of research methodology in the Alka-Selzer advertisements.

The two discussions were led by Mr. John Ridenour, Manager of Marketing Intelligence for Miles Laboratory, and Mr. Calvin Hodock who is Manager of Marketing Research. Both gentlemen participated in the question and answer period which followed.
