WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Nixon, barking on a public campaign to clear his name of the stain of Watergate, told 4,000 cheering businessmen Thursday that "I was elected to do a job and I'm not going to walk away until I get that job done."

Flashing his campaign-style "V" sign with arms outstretched, the President extolled his major achievements this year and listed inflation and the energy crises as two problems he was busy solving for the future. In a 30-minute speech before the National Association of Relators that was interrupted six times by applause, Nixon blamed Watergate on the mistakes of "overzealous people" in the 1972 election campaign—"mistakes I would not have approved of, mistakes I would not have tolerated, but mistakes for which I must accept responsibility."

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The House voted Thursday to spend $1 million on an investigation into whether grounds exist for the impeachment of President Nixon.

After a bruising partisan battle, the House voted to increase by $1 million the budget of its Judiciary Committee to conduct the study. Eleven impeachment resolutions have been introduced, many of them citing Watergate scandals and the firing of special prosecutor Archibald Cox as reasons for impeachment.

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Vice presidential nominee Gerald R. Ford, facing his toughest questioning yet, told a House committee Thursday there is evidence President Nixon has a credibility problem and, if confirmed, Ford will work to solve it.

The Senate Rules Committee, which previously questioned Ford, meanwhile initiated possible perjury action against a lobbyist who disparaged Ford's ethics. The Senate committee also decided to vote next Tuesday on the nomination of the Michigan Republican as vice president.

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A federal judge Thursday refused to dismiss criminal charges against Egil "Bud" Krogh Jr., who headed the clandestine White House "plumbers" unit.

The decision, handed down in a written opinion by U.S. District Judge Gerald A. Gesell, cleared the way for Krogh to be tried on two counts of making false declarations similar to perjury in connection with a Watergate grand jury's investigation of plumbers unit activities.

Meantime, the Senate Watergate Committee was told that American Airlines contributed $55,000 illegally to President Nixon's 1972 campaign not to buy favors but for fear of what might happen if it didn't. American's former board chairman George A. Spater testified that, "It's like the old medieval maps that show a flat world and a 'terra incognita' full of terrifying animals on the fringes. It's an unknown world with a lot of beasts in it and you don't know what the beasts are."

NEW YORK (UPI)—Stock prices rebounded slightly Thursday after four straight sessions of sharp declines on the New York Stock Exchange. The turnaround developed in the early afternoon after the Senate rejected a measure that could have led to gasoline rationing by Jan. 15 and the Commerce Department announced a $2.1 billion surplus in the nation's balance of trade for the third quarter.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which had been off about seven points at midday, closed with a gain of 4.67 points at 874.55. That ended four consecutive declines that had carried the average of 30 Blue Chip stocks down by almost 63 points since Nov. 8.

AUSTIN (UPI)—An all-white jury Thursday convicted Darrel L. Cain, a former Dallas police officer, of murdering a 12-year-old Mexican-American whom he suspected of being a burglar by shooting the youth point blank in the head.

The jury will return Friday to decide whether Cain killed the victim, Santos Rodriguez, with the malice. The penalty for murder with malice ranges from two years to life in prison, without malice, it is two to five years in prison.

U.S. military affected

Arab embargo cuts petroleum supplies

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Arab oil embargo has denied the U.S. military nearly half of its petroleum supplies and forced it to invoke a little-used act giving it priority over civilian users, the Pentagon said Thursday.

Arthur I. Mendolia, assistant secretary of defense for installations and logistics, said the Defense Department would have to make up its loss of 300,000 barrels of foreign oil a day from domestic supplies.

He disclosed that the 1950 Defense Production Act had been invoked on Nov. 1 for the first time to force petroleum producers to meet Defense Department requirements before filling civilian orders.

Major reductions have been made in military operations, he said, but one to two per cent of the already shrunken domestic supply would have to be diverted to the armed services.

Of the foreign producers who previously supplied more than half the services' daily requirement of 650,000 barrels, only Iran still allows sale to the United States, he said.

To meet the crisis, he said:

—The 300,000 U.S. troops in Europe and the 60 ships of the U.S. 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean have been forced to dip into their war reserves.

—Military flying hours have been cut back 18 per cent.

—Navy ships have been ordered to reduce steaming days 20 per cent; ships returning from overseas will lower speed; and ships based on the continental Atlantic and Pacific coasts will spend 54 days out of every three months in port.

—Armed forces vehicles have been put under a 50 miles per hour speed limit.

Burtchaell: new calendar is 'extremely reasonable'

University Provost Fr. James Burtchaell last night called the new Academic Calendar an "extremely reasonable" plan. Speaking on WSND's weekly Contact, Burtchaell said the calendar was the product of serious consideration "at much greater length than any student protester would give to the subject."

The calendar, which includes the start of classes before Labor Day, has drawn criticism from several students and faculty members.

"I don't think dissent before the fact has much value," Burtchaell commented. "We're working on well thought-out convictions. They may be wrong, but we'll only know that they're wrong after we've lived with it." He added that the plan would not be reconsidered in light of possible protest.

negative aspects

The Academic Council, which officially released the calendar today, considered at least 30 negative aspects, he said.

"Labor Day," he noted, "was the largest single problem. It was with great hesitancy that we made such a significant change. But we were trying to fit in a decent semester between two terminal dates, Labor Day and Christmas. We were finding that it was simply too pinched."

Responding to charges that the early start cost students working days, Burtchaell said that the choice had to be "a matter of balance."

"Certainly it is important for students to be able to maximize summer income every year, as our expenses increase every year," he continued. "On the other hand, what is the income earned for? It's earned for the learning experience at the University. If on the one hand, we are persuaded that fatigue minimizes the value of time near the end of the semester, we have to balance that with the fact that starting early minimizes or at least curtails earning power."

A semester without a break, he charged, is "too relentless." Studies produce fatigue and require rest periods, he added.

"We feel that in past years, going all the way to Thanksgiving left the people too worn out, faculty as well as students. We tried this year to have a very short semester break, actually just a long weekend. We're going to try a longer semester break more toward the middle of the semester."

Students who objected to a similar fall break two years ago, he noted, not only took advantage of the Spring break but, in many cases, "left early in order to lengthen the break."

"minor problems"

Problems with leasing of off-campus housing and with travel time over the mid-semester breaks did not pose problems substantially different from those faced already, the provost continued.

Football games scheduled over the mid-semester break is also a problem, he said.

"We tried to get a calendar which didn't interfere with student convenience in attending those games. If the calendar turns out to be satisfactory with its new change, then I expect we can turn it around and co-ordinate future game arrangements with our break."

other topics

Burtchaell also explained the formation of a committee to complete a "major history" of Notre Dame to be ready for the university's 150-year birthday in 1992. The committee will be composed of faculty members and will extend current historical studies into "the Hesburgh era," he said.

He also announced the completion of a report from the Committee on University Priorities which will appear in the December issue of Notre Dame Magazine.

Registration slated before Labor Day

The University of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's College have adopted an academic calendar for 1974-75 which includes their first pre-Labor Day start of classes.

Orientation and counseling for new students is scheduled August 24-26, with registration August 27 and classes starting Wednesday August 28.

Starting classes early, College and University administrators noted, will enable a nine-day midsemester holiday from the end of classes Friday, October 25, to the start of classes Monday, November 4.

Fall term classes end December 13, with exams scheduled December 16-20. Spring term starts January 15 and ends May 6, with exams scheduled May 8-13. Commencement in 1975 is set for Saturday, May 17, at Saint Mary's and Sunday, May 18, at Notre Dame.

In changing to a pre-labor Day start, Saint Mary's and Notre Dame join a trend in higher education which has seen the number of schools using such a calendar grow from 205 in 1968 to 860 in 1972, according to an American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Counselors survey of 2,475 institutions. The so-called "early semester" calendar is now the most popular in American higher education, according to the survey.

Dr. Edward L. Henry, president of Saint Mary's and Rev. James T. Burtchaell, provost of Notre Dame, also announced that they have established an inter-institutional calendar for the period 1975 through 1977. "A common academic calendar, the two noted, "is necessary to the future of the successful student exchange program we have had since 1965."

Is there going to be a Pep Rally for the Air Force Game; if so, when?

The plan, as it now stands, is to hold a pep rally in StepanCenter on Wednesday night, November 21, at 7 p.m. The band, to the best of our knowledge, is expected to be there along with all senior varsity football players. The program is to include the introduction of all senior players and, hopefully, a special guest speaker who personally knew the late Coach Leahy, either a member of his immediate family or just a friend. As of now, this is the way things stack up. It also should be noted that there is an effort underway for an outdoor rally on Tuesday, but this effort is separate from the Stepan Center event scheduled for Wednesday. Finally, the Air Force game itself is being dedicated in honor of the late Coach Leahy.

Who do I talk to about donating food for Thanksgiving Baskets?

Chris Amato who lives in 400 Morrissey is the student co-ordinator in charge of the operation of which you refer to and can be reached at 3638. His efforts are under the guidance of Fr. David Schlaver of the Student Activities Office.

Is there a way one can send a telegraph by phone?

Call 800-325-5200 which is a toll free number to get a telegraph sent and a bill mailed to you.

When is An Tostal scheduled for in the Spring?

An Tostal is slated to be held on the weekend of April 18, 19, and 20th. This is a Thursday thru Saturday period. For further details one should get in touch with Pat McLaughlin at 3693.

University concerned

Students' evaluations important for faculty

by Jack D'Aurora
Staff Reporter

"Obviously, students can't be given the last word as to who's going to be hired, who's going to be fired, but we would like to think that the students' views on the teaching characteristics of the faculty can be made known," stated Assistant Dean of Arts and Letters, Richard Thompson, in reference to teacher evaluations. "The university is concerned that the classroom instruction be done as well as it can."

The instrument for evaluation was drawn up a few years ago by a committee consisting of faculty members from all of the colleges and students. It was then submitted to all faculty members for criticisms and recommendations. The form is in two parts: an essay evaluation and a computer grid sheet.

"The aim of the evaluation is the improvement of teaching. The essay section, seen only by the teacher, gives every student the opportunity to comment anonymously on the strengths and weaknesses of all of his teachers," continued Thompson.

"We can't guarantee that the teacher will take these things into consideration, but if there is a consensus reached by the students, we would think it would be important to him to consider the things he might do to improve the teaching," Thompson added. "We know there have been changes in teaching practices and introduction of different materials as a result of these essay evaluations."

The computer grid sheet supplies the deans and department chairmen with information as to a teacher's personality, his knowledge of the subject he teaches, and the structure of his course. "When there is a consistent failure on the part of the teacher to reach the levels that are reached by the majority of teachers here, the chairman of the department has an obligation to talk with the man to make sure he does something about improving the level in which he teaches," continued the dean. The results of the computer sheets are compiled by the beginning of the second semester.

Thompson would "like to see the teachers put more emphasis in this thing." "If the students, as a whole, feel that the teaching is inadequate then they'd better let us know, and the only formalized way is through the use of the instrument that we have provided," he concluded.

Violence on upswing in troubled Ireland

By FRANK JOHNSTON
BELFAST (UPI) — The Irish Republican Army's Provisional wing attacked a police station at Keady, County Armagh, Thursday with gunfire and bombs, seriously wounding an officer, police said.

Later, a bomb planted in a car blasted a busy street in Belfast's Roman Catholic Lower Falls Road area Thursday night, injuring 15 persons. Police said none of them was seriously injured.

A passerby reported the car and police were trying to clear the area, crowded with evening rush hour traffic, when the bomb exploded.

In Londonderry, a youth fired eight shots from a pistol at a security checkpoint, wounding three soldiers, none seriously, an army spokesman said.

The policeman was injured in a pair of explosions set off outside the station, 37 miles southwest of Belfast.

The blasts at the police station were followed by a 30-minute exchange of gunfire with soldiers inside the building during which a Russian-made rocket was fired at an army helicopter circling low, missing it, police said.

Sporadic gunfire echoed Thursday in Roman Catholic areas of Londonderry where IRA guerrillas attacking a British patrol during the night killed 14-year-old Kathleen Feeney by mistake, the British army said.

The girl, sister of a member of the Londonderry city council, was the second Catholic accidentally slain by IRA gunmen in 24 hours.

Her death raised the fatality toll in four years of strife among Northern Ireland's minority Catholics, majority Protestants and security forces to 903.

Another Catholic, 61-year-old John Lundy, died early Wednesday in Belfast after he strayed into the line of fire of IRA gunmen attacking a British observation post.

Traffic into Belfast was disrupted during the morning rush hour when two bombs were discovered in an abandoned milk truck on a main road. British explosives experts defused them.

Acuna to speak on Chicanos

"Political Ideologies and the Chicano Movement" will be discussed by Dr. Rudolph Acuna of the San Fernando Valley State College history department at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, November 27, in the faculty lounge of the Memorial Library.

The lecture, is free and open to the public. It is part of the Notre Dame department of anthropology and sociology's Mexican-American Lecture Series.

According to Brother Ryan

No energy conserving in effect on campus

by Melissa Byrne
Staff Reporter

"The University has not yet formulated a policy concerning the conservation of energy on the Notre Dame campus," said Brother Kieran Ryan, assistant vice-president for business affairs. Ryan expects an elaboration of federal conservation standards and state guidelines to be released early next month. "At that point the University will cooperate so as to be consistent with the outside world," said Ryan.

The University Power Plant can burn coal, oil and gas. "Coal is our primary fuel supply. However, we do use a little oil," said William Ganser, chief engineer. Ganser indicated the University is being allocated oil at the same rate as last year.

"We anticipate the situation will grow worse," said Ganser. The Notre Dame Power Plant uses gas in the summertime because it is more economical.

"Power conservation cannot be carried on from the power plant," said Ganser. "The conservation has to be done from the consumer end, that is the students, faculty and administration."

Ryan said a possible conservation measure may be the extinguishing of outside library lights. "We probably won't be illuminating the library because these lights are not a safety factor," said Ryan. They are merely decorative.

"However, we could not forego any campus lighting because these lights are necessary safety measures," Ryan added.

Ganser indicated air-conditioning may have to be limited this spring and summer. "We can limit air-conditioning by furnishing less cool air," said Ganser. "But with electric power it's either go or no go."

No conservation policy has been determined for St. Mary's College. "We will be moving into a program which will be compatible with what the country is expected to do in terms of conservation," said Sister Basil Anthony, SMC vice-president for campus affairs.

Other universities in the area have adopted policies to comply with President Nixon's requests for energy conservation. Michigan State University President Wharton announced heat will be reduced to 70 degrees in MSU residence halls, classroom and office buildings; amount and hours of fresh air circulation in MSU campus buildings will be reduced and heat supplied to sparsely occupied campus buildings will be cut back during term breaks.

President Henderson at Ohio State University issued a similar statement. However, Henderson appointed a committee to study the energy crisis as it affects the University. Also, Ohio State University motor vehicles are requested not to exceed a maximum 50 mile per hour speed limit.

The OSU student newspaper, The Lantern, said the University is in no immediate danger since they have their own physical power plant and enough extra fuel to supply a 10 day back-up if an emergency develops.

Indiana University President John W. Ryan asked the chancellors from the various campuses within Indiana University to submit reports on the remifications of closing down their entire operations for a short period during the winter months. The administration also announced there will be no Christmas lights on campus this year.

Conservation activities are nothing new to Indiana University. The Utilities Conservation Committee at IU reported saving $150,000 in their six months of operation. The committee cut down on lighting in the library reading rooms and residence halls and on the outside lighting of buildings.

Motels filling up

For New Orleans reservations

by Ann McCarry
Staff Reporter

Now is the time to make plans to accompany the fighting Irish to the Sugar Bowl, in the event that the bid is extended and accepted. Sources report that almost all of the major New Orleans motels and hotels are booked up already for the New Year's weekend of the game.

Most hotels are booking for a three-or-four-night minimum only, demanding full cash payment on reservation. No credit cards are being accepted. Rooms in the French Quarter run about $80. Others can be found for around $30 to $40.

Rooms are going fast, and a lack of accommodations may drive fans to locations such as Baton Rouge, which is 80 miles away, or Mobile, Alabama, 180 miles away. Students are reminded that New Orleans is noted for having strict vagrancy laws.

Authorities advise students planning to attend the bowl or spend the weekend in New Orleans to take plenty of spending money and be forewarned: drinks on Bourbon Street run between $3 and $4. The famous Pat O'Brien's pub, however is just around the corner and is reputedly very hospitable to Notre Dame students.

CILA Christmas card drive considered success

The CILA Christmas card drive was a success, according to Mary Beckman, CILA secretary.

"We sold more than 40,000 cards which is more than twice as much as we sold last year," she said.

The funds from the Christmas card sale will be used to support CILA projects. These projects include caring for the aged in Mexico, tutoring in Mississippi, working on an Indian reservation in South Dakota and administering to the poor in the West Indies.

Because of the Christmas card response, Beckman said, "We're reconsidering the projects we worked on last year and evaluating ones for next year."

CILA is considering expanding to new projects in Panama, Appalachia, and New Orleans. A new tutoring program has begun in South Bend.

"This year we are beginning to tutor chicano high school students in South Bend," Beckman explained. "And we have another project with the elderly in South Bend. These are just the beginning."

Fr. Don McNeill, theology professor and CILA advisor, will offer a course next semester in the sociology and government departments entitled, "Religion and World Injustice." Although the course is not a CILA course, Beckman expressed the hope that students interested in CILA projects would take the course.

CILA is sponsoring a series of speakers and films aimed at increasing the educational and consciousness of Notre Dame.

Bud Drinkers, can you figure this out?

Joe walked into a bar one day wanting to buy 4 quarts of Budweiser. His friends Bob and Fred were less thirsty and wanted to buy only 3 quarts each. This particular bar sold only Bud on tap, and either in 3-quart pitchers or 5-quart pitchers. Using these pitchers as measures, pouring the Bud from one to the other, how did the bartender measure out exactly 3 quarts for Bob, 3 quarts for Fred, and 4 quarts for Joe?

ANSWER: First he filled a 5-quart pitcher. From that he filled Fred's 3-quart pitcher. Then he poured the remaining 2 quarts into Bob's pitcher. He filled up the 5-quart pitcher again and used it to top off Bob's pitcher, giving him 3 quarts and leaving Joe with 4; then charged them all for quarts and labor and drank a 5-quart pitcher himself.

$300,000 added

Reactions vary over salary budget

by Paul Colgan
Staff Reporter

Surprise, delight and confusion appears to be the faculty reaction to Fr. Theodore Hesburgh's announcement Tuesday during his talk to the faculty that he was considering adding $300,000 to next year's faculty salary budget.

All those approached by the Observer welcomed the anti-inflation move but with reservations because they weren't sure what Fr. Hesburgh specifically intended to do with the money.

"I think that it is a confusing issue at the moment," replied Bernard Waldman, dean of the College of Science. "It's good news, though," he added. "People usually go to his speeches expecting something."

When asked for a clarification of his proposal, Fr. Hesburgh declined to comment.

Other sources within the administration felt that because Fr. Hesburgh's proposal came as a surprise to everyone, including his fellow administrators, he was probably "thinking out loud."

One source observed that in regards to how the money will be used for faculty salaries, "He (Fr. Hesburgh) is the only one who knows."

Joseph Hogan, dean of the College of Engineering, felt that Fr. Hesburgh's explanation as a move to combat inflation was significant. "Fr. Hesburgh's comments show he realizes the problem and wants to do something about it," Hogan replied. "The challenge facing the whole university is meeting the inflationary pressures on salaries."

"For the College of Engineering, the priority for the budget is to keep salaries moving up but inflation outstrips us," Hogan explained. "What we consider successful efforts are hurt by inflation."

As to the specifics of Hesburgh's proposal, Hogan said, "It is hard to put in context without knowing the status of overall finances. You have to have the overview he has."

"a move on faith"

Dean of the College of Business Administration Thomas Murphy said Fr. Hesburgh's proposal "was very clear proof that the President (of the university) gives very high priority to the faculty in the university. "He is putting it (the surplus operating cash) where he feels it will do the most for the university."

Murphy offered as a precedent for Fr. Hesburgh's proposal the commitment last year by the University to underwrite the whole Blue Cross-Blue Shield health care insurance program for all faculty members and their families.

Murphy noted that the proposal to put the $300,000 into the salary base meant a longterm commitment by the university to maintain a higher salary range. This would take strict economy all throughout the budget he added. "There could be a point in time in the future where we could face no across-the-board increases."

Fr. Hesburgh's proposal was for Murphy "a move on faith that we will be able to keep up with the salary increase."

As a sidenote, Murphy mentioned "There is hardly a man here who couldn't make more money in another endeavor, especially with their level of education." He felt the faculty's "Love of this life and love of the work" gives them a strong devotion to their teaching duties. The university realizes this and to help as much as they can according to Murphy.

"Delighted to hear about it was the reaction of Robert Waddick, Assistant Dean of the College of Arts and Letters. He welcomed the plan of putting the extra money into the salary base because "I would prefer it over a couple of years."

Waddick cited the fringe benefits, such as the Blue-Cross-Blue Shield coverage, as factors that made up for the cost of living raise expected by not received the year before.

"just keeping up"

Professor Dennis Dugan, chairman of the Department of Economics and President of the Notre Dame chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP), felt the proposal was not enough.

Given the current rate of inflation, 6 to 7 percent, the salary increase is "just keeping up with inflation," Dugan replied. Fr. Hesburgh's proposal of using the additional $300,000 for salaries would give an approximate average salary increase of 6 percent.

"Things are measured in terms of the rate of inflation and you just can't come out even," Dugan replied. "Compared to others in the economy, we are stagnating."

If the salary increase came down to a question of attracting and maintaining a good faculty, Dugan noted "It's not a good selling point to say Notre Dame keeps up with inflation."

Dugan was unable to attend Fr. Hesburgh's talk because of a class conflict but he felt that from what he read in the Observer and heard from his colleagues, "the faculty should get a little more because of what the faculty does." "Who is more vitally associated to the educational function than the faculty," Dugan replied, after explaining that only 30 per cent of the tuition increases in the last few years has some towards faculty salaries.

Dugan also told the Observer that the AAUP was preparing a report on faculty salaries and the economic status of faculty members within the university. "There are different sides to this question," Dugan explained. The report is to be released in late November.

Final countdown on Skylab 3 liftoff

By Charles E. Taylor

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI)—The final countdown began late Thursday night for a 9:02 a.m. Friday liftoff to send the Skylab 3 astronauts into space for the holidays.

With floodlights playing over the giant Saturn rocket, the countdown resumed on schedule at 10:59 p.m. EST after a last long hold to give the launch crews a rest.

Astronauts Gerald P. Carr, Edward G. Gibson and William R. Pogue went to bed early to be well rested for their planned 9:02 a.m. blastoff.

They will be making the longest manned space flight ever, and the last by American astronauts before the joint fiasco with the Russians in 1975.

The mobile service structure was rolled back from the 22-story booster rocket during the evening and shortly after the countdown resumed, ground crews working under a criss-cross of search light beams began preparations for loading more than 150,000 gallons of liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen into the Staurn 18.

The astronauts got a final medical checkup and flew T-38 jets Thursday morning then spent the afternoon relaxing and saying goodbyes as the countdown rolled along. Smaller-than-usual crowds gathered to watch the take off.

Egan captures frosh presidency in SMC election

by R. Thomas Thues
Staff Reporter

Sue Egan won the Freshman class elections yesterday capturing 138 of the 251 ballots cast. Her running mates were Maureen Tomshack, vice president; Nan Jenkins, secretary; and Kim Reiken, treasurer.

Egan's opponent, Mary Ellen Carter, received 92 votes leaving a total of 18 abstentions and 3 invalid ballots. Carter's running mates were Liz Coughlin, vice president; Beth Costello, secretary; and Mary Costello, treasurer.

According to Election Committee Chairperson Patti Kampsen the voter turnout was 50 per cent of the freshman class.

"I would have liked to see a bigger turnout, but 50 per cent is relatively good," said Kampsen.

Kampsen thanked the students for their cooperation during the 10 a.m. - 6 p.m. election.

Architect projects shown

by R. Thomas Thues
Staff Reporter

Outstanding architecture projects from the past eight years are being shown at the ISIS student gallery.

The "Visionary Architecture" display was designed by Ken Knevel, a fifth year architecture student, and the Architecture department in an attempt to illustrate the quality of art in futuristic design. According to Gerald M. Beckles, a fourth year art student, the exhibit contains

"plans that made an impression on the faculty."

All models in "Visionary architecture" are constructed to scale. The hope of the Art and Architecture departments is to project the compatibility of the two disciplines.

Among the most outstanding projects is the 1967 Warren Fellowship drawing of a futuristic living complex by Michael James Plantz, a former student.

Further information can be obtained from Knevel through the Architecture department.

POWs exchanged in Middle East

By United Press International
Red Cross mercy planes shuttled between Cairo and Tel Aviv Thursday, flying Egyptian and Israeli prisoners of war home in the first major breakthrough in putting the Middle East cease-fire into effect. U.N. forces took control of Israeli checkpoints on the road from Cairo and relief trucks reached Suez City, blockaded by Israeli troops for three weeks.

But even as the Egyptian-Israeli POW swap began, Israel and Syria reported exchanges of tank and artillery fire along the cease-fire line in the northern Golan Heights. No casualties were reported.

Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Dayan was at Lod airport when the first batch of Israeli POWs arrived from Cairo.

"Now we are seeing the first expression of settling things," Dayan said, "not only in the return of prisoners but also in food to the (encircled Egyptian) 3rd Army and the status of the U.N. force."

"Finally, we have reached a coming to terms as, if I can say it, human beings, through talking and negotiations and not through tank and airplane fire."

Political observers said the implementation of key provisions in the cease-fire accord signed last Sunday by Egyptian and Israeli army officers was expected to clear the way for full scale Middle East peace negotiations—probably in Geneva early in December. But they cautioned that differences between the Arab and Israeli viewpoints on a settlement were so wide real peace might be a matter of years instead of months.

The first phase of the POW exchange involved 26 Israelis, including nine who were captured during the 1970 war of attrition along the Suez Canal, and 412 Egyptian soldiers, many of them wounded. An Israeli medical spokesman said the repatriated Israelis were given "fair treatment" and were "in fair condition."

The POWs were flown aboard Swiss commercial planes chartered by the International Red Cross. The flights between Tel Aviv and Cairo were the first direct commercial flights between those two cities since Israel became a sovereign nation 25 years ago.

Egypt reported it captured 238 Israelis while Israel reported 8,394 Egyptian POWs. The exchange, which is expected to last at least one week, did not apply to the 175 Arabs captured by Israel on the Syrian front and the 100 Israeli POWs believed held by Syria.

Dayan told newsmen at Lod that Israel had made "far reaching" proposals to Syria for an exchange, including an offer to permit 15,000 displaced Syrian villagers to return to their homes on the captured Golan Heights.

Israel has expressed considerable concern over the fate of Israeli soldiers captured by Syria during the 17-day October war.

Liao to give talk

Dr. Tak Ho Liao, researcher and practitioner in acupuncture, will give a short talk and demonstration in this technique, Sunday, November 18, in the Library Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Dr. Liao began his research in this traditional Chinese practice in 1967 during the Great Cultural Revolution, or Red Guard Movement at the Peking Medical Science Institute. The movement was a national effort to integrate Chinese with western medicine.

Dr. Liao, who has also done cancer research, will give additional talks to groups in East Lansing, Chicago, New York, and Washington, D.C.

ND Glee Club scheduled for Midwest tour, TV appearance

The Thanksgiving Week tour for the University of Notre Dame Glee Club will include concerts in five states and a Chicago television performance. Each year the 40-voice group travels an average 6,000 miles during fall and spring tours to bring its music to more than 20,000 persons.

This year's concert tour opens at 8 p.m. Tuesday (Nov. 20) in the Thomas More High School of Milwaukee where sponsors include the Notre Dame Club of Milwaukee and the Thomas More Foundation. The Notre Dame Club of Green Bay and Fox Valley will sponsor a similar concert the following evening at St. Norbert's College.

No concerts are planned for Thanksgiving Day as the Glee Club travels to Chicago and a 7 a.m. live television appearance on the "Kennedy and Company" show on WLS-TV Friday. They leave immediately after this show for an 8:15 p.m. concert in Miller High School, Marshalltown, Iowa, which will be sponsored by St. Mary's Church of that city.

All proceeds of a concert at 8 p.m. Saturday in the Boy's Town auditorium near Omaha will be used for food and medical care for Vietnamese orphans. This concert honors an Omaha member of the Glee Club, Philip Conroy, who traveled through Vietnam last year and returned with 17 children for adoptive families. Co-sponsoring this concert with Adopted Parents of Vietnamese Children are the Notre Dame Club of Omaha and the United States National Bank.

En route home the Glee Club will present a final road concert in the Kewanee, Ill., High School at 7:30 p.m. Sunday for the benefit of the Knights of Columbus. The annual fall concert on the campus will be at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday (Nov. 28) in Sacred Heart Church.

The newly appointed director of the Glee Club, Dr. David Clark Isele, will be making his first tour with the singing organization, which dates back to 1915. An organist, composer and former faculty member of the Eastman School of Music, Isele succeeds Daniel Pedtke who retires last spring after serving as director for 35 years.

On this year's concert program are an opening series of light-hearted songs which have been favorites of all-male singing groups through the ages. They include "Vitrum Nostrum," "Amo, Amas I Love a Lass," "My Heart Commends Itself to Thee," "Glorious Apollo" and others. These are followed by a medley of religious songs which include "Lord's Prayer," "God So Loved the World" and "With a Voice of Singing."

The Notre Dame Glee Club will be on tour in five states and a Chicago television performance.

Light classical and Broadway tunes, featuring the quartet and solo voices of the Glee Club, make up the third portion of the program. In this grouping are "The Water is Wide," "MacNamara's Band," "Clancy Lowered the Boom," and Dean Pedtke's ever-popular "Halls of Ivy." The final songs reflect favorites of audiences who have heard the group on network television shows and tours abroad.

They include "The Battle of Jericho," "People," "Climb Every Mountain," and the traditional show-stoppers, "Notre Dame We Hail Thee" and Victory March."

Kill The Calendar

The Observer reaffirms its stance in opposition to the new calendar that was released by the university today. It creates more difficulties than the benefits that are supposed to result from it.

The argument concerning the economic deprivation of students still stands. The last week of August is a work week that is highlighted by the September Labor Day weekend. For many summer employees, that weekend is financially the best of the summer. Likewise, many students face jobs that require staying on until Labor Day and the new calendar prohibits this. Overall, it can result in a $150 to $250 loss for the student and considering the cost of attending Notre Dame, that is a significant loss to most.

Dr. Burke in arguing the university's side claims that it is feasible that many students do not work right up until Labor Day. Yes, that would be feasible except there are no figures to backup Dr. Burke's side. Rather, there are petitions from two years ago with the signatures of 3000+ students on them in opposition to the calendar...signatures that would tend to substantiate the side that student's jobs are endangered.

Further in this defense, Dr. Burke argues that moving the end of the semester closer to Christmas would create travel problems for students who live faraway. Yet, he never equates the distance problem with the students who must now make travel arrangements for the mid-semester break. Compound the additional travel cost with the small summer vacation pay checks and it seems obvious that there is a larger problem there.

The statement also says that students have themselves lengthened the existing breaks so as to create for themselves, mid-semester breaks. The university can offer no convincing argument that will verify that this will not happen even with the new calendar. Watch it will continue to happen.

Finally, the argument on trends is funny to hear from Notre Dame which tells its students that trends are not important on every other issue except the ones where it is effective for their argumentation.

Sign the petitions circulating in your halls and oppose the new calendar. Make it clear to this university that the student body stands solid in their opposition to this insensitive move. After all, it is the students who have to study under the schedule and the faculty—who earlier this week voiced their disapproval—who have to teach under it, yet it is the administration and their forces in the Academic Council who have forced us to kowtow to this new schedule. Don't let it happen.

Hill Street

The Rodent Affair

dan barrett

Karl Malden was saving San Francisco, Harry was doing his homework, and Beth and I were making hot cocoa when disaster hit our house on Hill Street last night. What started out as an innocent scratching sound ended up in a repeat performance of one of the most outrageous scenes imaginable.

The whole episode starts weeks ago on an atypical Sunday evening; it was atypical because it was one of the few times that all four of the residents of Hill Street ate dinner together (of course Beth was there, too.) But it was an uninvited guest that entertained us that night. For right after dinner, the five of us spotted a new house mate: a mouse.

There he was, sticking his nose out from around the stove, watching our every move with those beady little eyes, and generally reconnoitering newfound terrain. Figuring that our rent and food bills were as high as we could afford, and knowing the terrific fecundity of the little devils, four of us decided that the new guest had to be removed. Beth, for a change, wasn't saying much of anything. As a matter of fact, she was looking rather ill.

We chased that damn mouse from its lookout point on the stove; under the kitchen cabinet; from there to behind the refrigerator; and finally into the living room, all the time wondering how so little a thing could possibly escape from such a determined effort by four college seniors. But our guest did much more than escape. He (It had to be a 'he' in a guys house) sent us into hysterics with his 90 degree turns, changes of speed, and general ability to avoid us.

Being a supremely entertainer, however, Gene (you can't have a house pet without a name) saved his best for last. After a zero to one hundred MPH in nothing flat start, he turned left without breaking stride and disappeared down our cold air return.

Being the good guys that we are, we decided that we would claim victory without a corpse because nobody, not even Gene, could survive that suicidal lunge. And when our mouse trap failed to get anything but dust, which we can get by ourselves pretty easily, we celebrated our guests total demise.

But last night we saw another mouse. This time, though, the mouse knew enough not to poke his snout into the light. Instead he was chewing away under the kitchen cabinet as determined to chew a tunnel into the wall as he could be. We knew we were up against it when we realized that the inch crack between the wall and formica cabinet allowed him almost total immunity for his operation. Smart little beasts.

"Drop something on him," I suggested, never realizing that if we missed we couldn't retrieve our bludgeon. "Well then tie a string on a knife and we'll guillotine him." So there we are, Harry asking for an executioner's mask and waiting for a chance to drop the knife down the crack, John holding the flashlight so we could see the potential victim, Frank banging on the other end of the stove to chase him down to the trap, waiting to call out at the right minute for the dropping of the blade. Beth wasn't saying much of anything again. Strange.

As if you couldn't guess, we missed, the mouse crawled back into his domain under the cabinet where we'd forget him save his methodical gnawing on our hose, and Karl Malden saved San Francisco while we were away.

Finally, Beth said something, "Take me home."

Charity B-Ball

Saturday, the third annual charity basketball game will be held at the Convo for the benefit for the poor families of South Bend. You really can't say a whole lot more than support this worthy cause. But consider it in this light. Besides doing what you can with your donation to help the poorer families of South Bend have a nice Thanksgiving, you will also get to see the dynamite Notre Dame basketball team for a bargain price.

The organizers still need help, however, for the distribution of the turkey dinners to the South Bend families. If you've got time or can make time, call Al Sondej at 7077 or Denny Brennan at 2961. They really need your help to make Thanksgiving a lot nicer for some area families. Pitch in and give a hand.

The Observer has become a lunchtime tradition at Notre Dame.

But despite its avid readership, few people are aware of how the paper reaches the dining halls and why it occasionally arrives late. Equally unknown are the facts behind news coverage, ad management, and production methods.

And so, readers -- a day in the life of the Observer.

The daily routine begins ...

by Jeanne Murphy
Staff Reporter

At ten o'clock in the morning the Observer office is desolate. The serene quite is interrupted occasionally by the sythmic sounds of the UPI tape machine and the music from the Huddle juke box loating up to the fourth floors.

However, this lonely peace does not last forever. The office becomes alive as the members of the the Business Staff trickle in one by one to start a new day and create a new Observer.

The first person to break the office silence is Paddy Swiney, assistant advertising manager. Her first task is to collect the mail at the post office and sort it out.

She then checks the black book, which is not a book with special telephone numbers, but a book with ads listing the column space, size and total amount of inches of the ad. She puts all copy orders for ads in a folder.

Her next chore is to check the commission book for advertising salesmen. Each salesman comes in every morning with his contracts and gives them to Paddy who in turn puts them into the black book according to whatever date they will be used.

"There isn't much to do in the morning until the paper comes in," she explained. To bide her time, she reads previous issues of the Observer, writes letters, or reads from the 'library' which Jerry Lutkus brought her, or she will sit at her desk for a while glancing through the Sears Catalogue.

When the paper finally comes in, she has a number of daily jobs to perform. First, she gets the paste-up sheets, which are the copies of ads from that day's paper that has just returned from the printer. She tears off the ads putting them either into the file if they are not going to be run again, or attaches them to copy orders if they are going to be used the next day. She peels off the mast-heads and headlines which are used regularly every day.

After she has finished this activity, Paddy answers phone calls about classified ads. She explained that people do not understand that all classified ads must be paid for in person and before 1:00 the day before publication.

"All hell breaks loose at 12:00 noon," she exclaimed. While salesmen are running in and out, she takes care of their business and cuts out paste-up sheets. The news editor and day editor come in and reporters call for assignments. This is the busiest time in Paddy's day.

At 1:00 she types ads and sometimes articles. When typing ads on theyellow tape process, she does not know whether she is typing correctly. She sees any mistakes in typing or spelling when the ads are ready for lay-out.

During late afternoon hours, she answers the phone and finishes copy orders.

On Mondays she picks up new time cards and on Fridays she picks up pay checks.

Paddy's job is strictly as an assistant advertising manger. She does not know how the business staff works at night, nor does she handle any aspect of the news end. Her job is another specialization in the total workmanship of the Observer.

John Kloos, senior management major, is the advertising manager. He developed the department in the beginning of the year and makes sure that it functions systematically throughout the year.

The advertising staff consits of Paddy, six salesmen including Kloos himself, and two layout men, Rick Nauman and Ken Kampman.

The salesman meet with Kloos every two to four weeks for brief meetings to check on procedures and outcomes. Kloos is concerned now with finding methods to avert the slump in advertising which comes in February.

The salesmen receive a ten per cent commission on every contract they bring in and a fifteen per cent commission on every new contract, Kloos explained.

Although he tried to recruit saleswomen, he received no volunteers. Advertising supports the paper, the University does not," he continued. The Observer is not funded by the students, nor is it a profitable business, making money. According to Kloos, the paper is run by its advertising. "If we don't make money off of advertising, we don't have a paper," he emphasized.

Lee Gentine

This past year, the Observer raised the prices for ads, and as a result, Kloos explained that there was a loss in advertising, especially from national advertisers.

The Observer accepts any type of advertising. "We sell and they buy," he said. The majority of advertising comes from South Bend merchants, while a small percentage comes from campus organizations and national advertising from New York.

Kloos feels that "Observer advertising is a decent deal for South Bend markets because there is a well-defined market here at Notre Dame with 10,000 people of the same age." But for other businesses in the area, it does not pay to advertise in the student paper. One business which fully reaped the profits from advertising is the Windjammer, Kloos continued, which caters in men's hair styling.

The Observer is listed in the National Educational advertising Service catalogue. Thus, companies from all over the country could advertise in The Observer, such as Budweiser, stereo equipment companies, Icelandic Airlines, Van Heusen Shirts, Paulist Fathers, and other schools, universities, and graduate schools.

Kloos does saleswork as well as managing the department. Last year he was a salesman, and "liked to get out and see people." He also does design work for ads.

The Business Staff

Business Manager Lee Gentine handles all the finances of the paper. His major job is "handling of all accounts receivable, accounts payable, cash receipts and cash disbursements."

He also does work of a general matter spending a lot of time on the phone requesting contractors to pay, prepares income statements, coordinates books, and works the payroll.

When Lee comes in at 1:00, he checks the mail and then marks checks receiveable. He deposits receipts daily and works on accounts payable. He explained that The Observer pays their bills on a fifteen day term.

He regards the Observer as an "automatic do-it-yourself" because it receives no money from student government or from the University. Every year the students are asked to pay an optional fee of two dollars per year, which contrary to popular opinion, does not pay for the Observer, but provides cash and working capital expenses, he said.

Gentine explained that The Observer is a non-profit paper so that any profits which happen to be made are put back into The Observer to develop a better paper. Income varies from month to month, according to Gentine, and it "runs up and down depending on the volume of advertising. Sometimes we lose our shirts," he explained.

"The Observer is not the most profitable paper on student campuses, but considering the work that people put into it and the late hours, we strive to bring the best possible paper we can provide," he said.

Lee works with the general accounting office on campus with Mr. Tom Kirshner, senior accountant in the general accounting office. The Observer holds two university accounts in the office. Lee also works directly with the personnel department because the Observer payroll is now on the University computer.

"My job is not easy but is is enjoyable," Lee commented. He said jokingly "I do have staff problems."

Gentine is directly responsible to the editor-in-chief, "no-hair Lutkus", but his job is a 'business' in itself.

They call her "mom" because she brings candy and sweets and adds that womanly touch to the mechanical business office of the Observer. Her name is Mrs. Ceil Popovich and she is the business manager's secretary.

Ceil performs the daily routines as business secretary between 12:30 and usually 3:30. Although she does not leave until her work is finished depending on how heavy the advertising for the particular day is.

Her basic job is billing for all advertising that runs in the paper.

When she comes in, she gets the paper and checks through with contracts and ads.

She then makes an invoice to each account whether paid or not and bills all accounts. She mails out invoices posting for accounts payable and accouants receiveable listing the date and amount and the invoice.

"The place can't run without Ceil," expressed Lee Gentine. She just works for the business office of the Observer. She has been working on the staff for three years now, and her job has remained the same. Every year she works with a new and different staff, but does not find it difficult to get used to new faces.

Prior to working on the Observer, Ceil was a secretary for Dr. Lawrence Baldinger, former director of the pre-med department. Here she worked directly with the students and feels that they respect her. She has been with Notre Dame since 1952.

She believes that the Observer is a "great little newspaper" and loves working with the students on it. "I know how much work goes into the paper because Iwork on it also," she said. "I don't think the majority of people reading the paper know how much work goes into it," she continued.

Ceil appeared to sum up the general consensus of the people working on the business staf by commenting that "we would not bje with the paper unless we really want to—including me!"

A day in the life ...

The backbone of The Observer is the reporting staff, which works without pay and often without recognition. To give the reader a better idea of a reporter's procedures, methods of reporting, and deadlines, we followed a randomly chosen reporter through a day of work, and came up with the following story.

By Jane Thornton
Staff Reporter

Shortly after noon last Tuesday, Paul Colgan, Observer staff reporter, dropped in the third floor La Fortune Observer office for an assignment. Speaking with day editor Jim Rosini and news editor Tom Drape, Colgan considered several possible articles and decided to cover President Theodore M. Hesburgh's faculty address.

Drape advised him to wear a coat and tie, and to scan the faculty for reactions afterwards.

Colgan arrived at Washington fifteen minutes early to allow time to prepare his notes for the speech. Afterwards he chased professors down, scoring two rebuffs and two comments; hoping to clarify the $300,000 University budget surplus issue raised during the speech, Colgan conferred with Provost James T. Burtchael.

Afterwards he recessed to let the ideas sink in. "I have to let the event separate from the writing, Colgan explains. "I wrote it mentally on the way home and considered several different ways of writing it before I decided."

Colgan wrote the "meaty parts" first, in this case the Carnegie Commission review and the $300,000 surplus question, then supplemented it with details.

"I knew what the lead should be (the $300,000 surplus) by the reactions of the people afterwards," he claimed. "It's what would draw people to the article."

"My basic format," Colgan continued, "is that I write the news lead and the relevant points of the whole speech. First I present the issues and then explain them so it's clear and in an order of decreasing importance."

Elaborating on his writing style, Colgan claimed his technique is based on instinct. "I don't have a logical mind," he stated, "so I go by instinct and it's usually pretty good."

In newswriting Colgan aims for as many direct quotes as possible, pointing out that "what makes a speech article really difficult is that it is spoken and you're always looking for good quotes and you always think you've missed it."

Around midnight, after rewriting the lead three times, clocking in two hours writing and two hours typing on "one of those lousy Observer typewriters," Colgan missed the deadline.

"I hate deadlines," the journalist grumbles. "I can't do anything on a time schedule. That's why I rarely make the 8 o'clock deadline. I've frustrated many a copy reader keeping him up past midnight."

Colgan, a second semester senior, began working for the Observer this semester and also contributes to the Scholastic. He foresees a career in journalism, typical of many Observer news reporters. His particular interest is magazine writing because it emphasizes analysis and interpretation.

Assigning and collecting the news stories

by Al Rutherford
Staff Reporter

At eleven o'clock each day, The Observer news staff begins to work, starting with news editor Tom Drape. The responsibilities of news editor are numerous. Tom, a junior American Studies major, is in charge of not only the reporters, photographers, day editors and copy editors. Tom coordinates the activities of each of these staffs, making them a responsible segment of the Observer.

Tom's main job is to find the news. Once this is done, he organizes a story sheet, which in turn is assigned by the day editor. His day on the paper starts around noon-time. He begins by sorting through news releases, story leads, "On Campus Today" announcements, and holdovers from the day before.

During the day, Tom sets aside time to assist the staff reporters with any problems. "I try to point reporters to possible news sources and suggest various story angles," commented Tom.

Deadlines are also set by the news editor. He checks in periodically during the day to assign priority stories for the next day's edition. Again at work later the same night, Tom makes sure that important articles are laid in. He then begins preparations for the following day's issue.

St. Mary's Editor

Maria Gallagher, St. Mary's editor, is the equivalent of Notre Dame's news editor. The only difference is that the volume of news is smaller.

"Basically, it involves knowing what is going on newsworthy on the SMC campus," commented Maria. "Then I call in the day's stories to the news editor Tom Drape."

Maria is the Observer's representative to St. Mary's. While on her campus, she is contacted about writing columns, sending in stories, or just general criticism. She works with a staff of about ten reporters and helps them with any problems of writing stories.

"I try to help by directing them to news sources and how the reporters should start their stories," explained Maria.

In addition to her editor's job, Maria is also active in reporting, photography, layout, and writing columns and features for the paper.

Day Editor

The day editors' job commences around noontime each day. A story sheet, consisting of various articles, is comprised through discussions between the day editor and the news editor. The stories are then given a priority rating according to their importance. Along with the stories, photography must also be considered.

Phone calling is next on the agenda and can sometimes prove to be difficult. Reporters who have signed up for a particular day are called and given a choice of articles which might interest them. Photographers assigned to each day are also called and informed of their assignments.

"The difficult part is trying to contact the reporters between classes," commented Marlene Zloza, one of Monday's editors. "If it becomes late in the afternoon, and stories are still unassigned, many times I'll have to go to reporters assigned to other days."

While the whole process of assigning stories goes on, the day editor also rewrites public relation (PR) articles. "We try to keep the PR's current," stated Marlene. "After choosing various PR's for the day, they are sent to the typists." On Campus

Today" articles are also compiled and readied for typing.

Answering the phones and taking messages for the other editors is also part of their obligations. Anyone needing information or extra copies of the Observer is sent to the day editor. Students calling in stories requiring coverage are also forwarded to the day editor.

Day editors start as staff reporters and attain the post when it is vacated. Marlene, commenting on the job of the day editor, stated, "we try to keep the day editor as the central person. In this way, the day editor is familiar with everything going on."

Wire Editor

Ann McCarry, wire editor, is in charge of supplying the paper with fresh United International Press (UPI) articles. The UPI machine, types up stories from all over the world. The wire editor, reporting to the office at lunch time, analyzes the schedule of upcoming articles typed up by UPI. Also at time time, Ann resupplies the machine with paper and tape.

Around dinnertime, Ann returns and selects lead stories for that night's layout crew. This often includes editing and occasional rewriting.

"There's only two major difficulties connected with my job," says McCarry, a three-year veteran of the Observer. "First of all, I have to decide what copy will be most interesting to the readers. Secondly, the Chatterbox has an insane sense of timing. It breaks down at least once a week."

Back up in the office again around midnight, Ann checks to see that there is sufficient copy typed up and stories updated. The maintenance of the UPI machine is also the wire editor's responsibility. In addition to her editor's duties, Ann also reports and writes columns and various features.

Insights and Supplements

Art Ferranti and Dan Barrett are the executive editors. Ferranti, a senior sociology major, hands out most of the "insights." "Insights are either of a description-explanatory type or an in-depth look at a current topic," said Ferranti. Ideas for insights and supplements come up from reporters or from the editors.

Supplements are a joint effort by the executive editors usually focusing on a theme such as this one. Barrett, a senior majoring in pre-med, himself oversees the copyreaders and is a part-time advertising salesman.

The Night Shift

... and goes and goes and goes ...

by Gary Allietta
Staff Reporter

It was almost midnight Monday night. Robert Baker was just finishing a correction in the headline for Tuesday's article on the academic calendar. Someone had misspelled 'calendar.'

Before Robert had a chance to even think of the headline for the article, however, a lot of other people were responsible for getting the story printed.

The beginning

Kurt Heinz brought the article in at about 9 p.m. Monday night. Possibly the way he had written it was good enough for publication, but often reporters misspell words, use wrong punctuation, or make other small mistakes. Therefore, most newspapers, including The Observer, have a copyreader check over incoming articles to look for errors.

Monday's copyreader was Marlene Zloza, who explained that a copyreader does more than just read copy. "He should go over the story with the writer, and help with any rewrite. Also if a story isn't in by around 10 p.m., he should call the reporter to see what's wrong."

The copyreader is also in charge of the story sheet, a list of the day's news with reporter and picture assignments for each story, and the time the article comes in.

Most copyreaders have at least a year of reporting experience, and occasionally have to cover a late-breaking story or rewrite a UPI story. Usually, though, their duties end around midnight, when most articles are in.

Marlene was not really sure why she took the proofreading job. "I wanted to do something as a follow-up to reporting," she said. Or maybe it had something to do with the sign on the copyreader's desk: "Office of the Copy Editor ... Main cog in The Observer Machine."

A coded Story

At around 9:45, Kurt's article was ready for production. Marlene put it in a stack with some other articles for Carole Rechtensteiner or Barb Norcross to type.

Art Ferranti

Actually, news is not typed at The Observer, but rather it is punched out in code on narrow strips of heavy paper, which are fed into "Hal," the compugraphic. Typists seem to think the computerized typewriters are easier to use than regular ones.

"It's a lot easier," Barb said. "On a regular typewriter I can get about 75 words a minute. On this one I can go faster because I don't have to return, or make paragraphs. It all happens automatically."

The keyboard for the computerized typewriter is the same as for a regular one. However, all letters, symbols and numbers are converted to a numeric code. Stories are typed out in a continuous stream because there is no carriage reset, and paragraphs are noted by a special character.

Barb added that the only difficulty with the computerized typewriter is that it "always breaks down."

After the story has been coded onto paper strips, it is ready to go through "Hal." Hal is the compugraphic machine which converts the string of coded numbers into a typed, spaced article. The machine derives its nick-name from the computer in the movie "2001".

Basically, Hal is nothing more than a computerized camera. The machine is equipped with a set of plastic strips, similar to film negatives, which contain all the characters and symbols used in writing. Different strips are used depending upon what size print is desired.

Before each story is run through, a film cartridge is also inserted into Hal. As the paper strip is decoded, the character on the plastic strip corresponding to the coded number moves in front of a tiny light beam which shines on the exposed film. It essence, a picture of the article letter by letter forms on the film.

Tom Wich, the compugraphic operator Monday night, developed the story film and hung it on the "News line," a piece of string stretched across the window between the typing room and the office.

Now that the story had been typed, it was ready to put in the paper almost. Each page of The Observer is fifteen inches long and five columns wide. Kurt's article was one column wide and about three feet long. A little editing was needed.

The most important job of the night editor is designing each edition of the paper. Along with his assistant, he has to fit the 15 to 20 stories per night into corners and around advertisements, and size each of the pictures that go with a story.

Robert Baker was Monday's night editor. In a rare free moment, he detailed the night editor's duties. "He has to check stories for typing mistakes, position a story by its priority, and write headlines," Robert said. He noted that the only qualification needed to be a night editor was "endurance," for most work from 7 p.m. until 3 or 4 a.m. the next morning.

Robert's assistant is Tim O'Reiley, who noted that the two jobs were basically the same. The only major difference between them, he said, was that Robert "does the front page."

Layout for The Observer is sort of a community affair. The ad department does the ads, sports writers do the sports, and the night editor does the news.

As news comes out of the compugraphic, the night editor checks its priority. High priority stories are placed closer to the front of the paper and higher on the page. Articles are checked according to space available and unimportant material is edited with a razor blade.

Layout is facilitated by the fact that the newspaper is photo-copied, so only dark

Highlighting The Observer specialty teams

sports

by Terry Keeney
Staff Reporter

Sometimes Vic Dorr, Observer Sports editor, wonders what his priorities are as a Notre Dame student and a sports writer. Is he student first and sports writer second? Or vice versa?

"With this position on the sports staff, you begin to realize just how lucky you are," Dorr remarked. "Where else in the country can you go over to the ACC and sit down with Ara, Digger or Lefty. Sometimes I am not convinced we're not here just to cover a national championship."

Dorr, a senior American Studies major, is in charge of what he describes as his sports staff "team." "I'm very team-conscious. If I were to compare us to a football team, I would say we have skill at all different positions," Dorr explained.

Dorr's teammates on the sports staff include Greg Corgan, Peggy Lawlor and John Fineran. Corgan covers the major sports and does the page layout for publication every Monday and Wednesday. His column "Extra Points" is a weekly feature. Peggy Lawlor, a St. Mary's senior, has similar duties and helps Corgan on Monday and Wednesday.

Fineran, who works for the Sports Information Office, is featured in his column "Blarney Stone(d)". Although his specialty is hockey, Fineran covers all sports "with a distinctive flavor," Dorr noted.

The basic tasks of the sports staff are the same as those for the other Observer pages. Only the staff must do all the work—writing, editing, and layout on their own.

"What we do is no different from what everybody else does," said Dorr. "We write

our own stuff and proof it and do page layout ourselves."

Several years ago the sports staff did very little of their own writing. The sports page was filled with national sports. Little attention was given to Notre Dame sports.

Dorr pointed out that the emphasis on ND sports, begun by last year's sports editor Jim Donaldson, has been completed. Most of the ND sports are covered by the staff.

Sam Yanucci covered interhall football this year. Pete McHugh wrote about JV football. Hal Munger and John Turchan cover cross-country, soccer and rugby. Dorr has traveled to all the away football games except Rice.

"I'd hate to see the sports page fall back to what it was four years ago," said Dorr. "Now you don't find anything but ND sports on the sports page."

features

by Terry Keeney
Staff Reporter

"The features page can include virtually any kind of article," noted Kathy Schwillie, features editor. Perhaps any reader of the features page can affirm that statement. For the role of the features page is quite unique.

The features page consists not of news items, but of articles of human interest. Traditionally the page includes reviews of concerts, books, movies and plays as well as commentaries and special articles. Yet emphasis is primarily on culture.

"I see the features page as a review of culture on campus as well as human interest stories and viewpoints," Schwillie said.

One of the most important cultural events on campus is the rock concert. The concert review is not the assignment of one individual writer. Pat Small, Rick Thues and Butch Ward have all covered concerts this year.

"We try to get a variety of reviewers instead of just one concert reviewer," Schwillie explained. "The reasons are obvious - different people have different musical tastes."

The Student Union, ACC, and the Morris Civic Auditorium provide complimentary tickets for concert reviewers. "The Student Union always gives us excellent seats," Schwillie added.

Joe Abell, managing editor of the Observer, has contributed book review of new science fiction. Casey Pocius, a graduate student, has reviewed new art exhibitions at the University Gallery.

Although the features page has no permanent staff, there are weekly features. Art Ferranti, Observer executive editor, writes a weekly column entitled "Little Big Screen" which previews coming TV and movie highlights.

Fr. Robert Griffin, rector of Keenan Hall, writes "Letters to a Lonely God" which appears every Friday. The Office of Campus Ministry contributes weekly articles, authored by Director Fr. William Toohey or Associate Director Fr. Thomas McNally.

The features page includes articles of general campus interest such as Mike Kulczycki's feature of Oktoberfest at the old Kamm brewery. Editor Schwillie gets ideas for these stories from different sources.

"People come to me with ideas," she said. "If I think of something, I usually ask somebody to write an article about it."

Besides assigning articles for the features page, Schwillie is responsible for "laying out" the articles in preparation for publication.

The features page is published three or four times each week, usually opposite the editorial page.

Circulation and Subscriptions

by Art Ferranti
Executive Editor

It is now Tuesday morning. The paper has been printed and wrapped at Rhodes Publishing (Countryman's Press) in Mishawaka early Tuesday morning. All that is left is its distribution and delivery. At ten in the morning, the circulation staff begins its operations.

Headed by manager Frank Zaletel, a senior majoring in engineering, the circulation staff (Frank or Matt Cavanaugh picks up the papers at Rhodes'). On Tuesdays and Thursdays Cavanaugh performs the run. The bundled papers are loaded by Matt into The Observer's 1970 Ford Econoline van. From the printer's, he heads back to Notre Dame making his first stop at the ACC athletic offices.

Two bundles are dropped off next at the Library basement for the faculty. The guard at the Northgate receives a few copies as the van enters the main body of the campus. The North Dining Hall receives a major portion of the papers next, followed by a stop at LaFortune where bundles are left at the Observer offices and at the off-campus office. Special quarter-folded copies are also left at the office for subscriptions.

The South Dining Hall is next on the schedule of stops also taking number of bundles. Moreau Seminary, the ROTC buildings, Morris Inn, and the bus stop at the circle follow respectively each receiving a small allotment of papers.

At St. Mary's approximately 700 papers are left in the dining hall. A bundle is dropped off at LeMans hall for the faculty, administration, and department heads. Linda Holtcamp delivers those papers to their respective offices Monday through Friday. The last stop for the van is Pandora's books.

The other duties of the salaried circulation manager include van upkeep (approximately $16.00 a week goes to gas alone) and the recirculation of old papers at a recycling center. It takes from one and a half to two and half hours for the daily run to be completed.

Matt Lam is the subscriptions manager, also on salary. Lam, a senior business major from Hong Kong, comes to the office at 11:00 a.m. Monday through Friday to update the files and collect the mail. He returns at one and inserts the 400 quarter-folded papers in brown bags for addressing. He also prepares the daily form for the Post Office.

From Monday to Wednesday Jackie Schimizzi comes in and addresses the bags on the machine. Al Hamilton works on Thursdays and Fridays. The machine uses aluminum hard-backed plates with each address embossed on them. The plate slides under the machine's roller which inks the address on the bag. The Observer leases the machine on a monthly basis but the selling price is eleven hundred dollars.

The bags are bundled into piles for cities and states (six or more of a certain city or certain state qualifies it for a bundle) and inserted in the postal bag. Lam or Hamilton usually brings the bag to the Post Office. The process takes one to one and a half hours. The little address box on page two is required by Postal Law in order to keep the second class mail rating. It takes a week to ten days for the paper to reach its destination. All circulation and subscription workers are paid. The total circulation (including subscriptions) for the Observer is 12,000 daily.

Of course, by the time the van has pulled out to pick up the papers, Paddy Swiney, the assistant ad manager, has come in and the whole cycle of putting out The Observer begins again.

The final circulation stop -- Pandora's

Type, cut, and paste -- production work

matter such as ink will be picked up. When the paper goes to press, it is a collection of raggedy edges, transparent tape and light blue reference lines, none of which are spotted by the printer's camera.

Kurt's article was finally edited by Robert and Tim at 11:30 and became a five column spread at the top of page three in Tuesday's Observer.

The night editor's final responsibility is to take the layouts to the Cooperative Publishing Co. in Mishawaka and leave them in the night depository.

Other Jobs

While all of the people mentioned work one or twice a week to get an edition printed, several others are responsible for certain daily jobs.

Howard Halle, production manager, is in charge of hiring (and firing) typists and compuographic operators. He is also responsible for maintenance of the machines. That means "I'm always on call," Howard said. "They can call me to fix a machine anytime - even at 4 a.m."

Butch Ward edits all the letters and columns that appear in The Observer. He views his position as that of "coordinating" the need for reflecting the opinion of The Observer with the opinion of the student body. He said that anybody can submit a column but editorial space is reserved for members of the editorial board.

Letters To A Lonely God nobody till somebody loves you

reverend robert griffin

There is a special mood of exasperated excitement about being a priest in New York City; it's as if you were an employee working for a very powerful company, with a Boss who has influence over absolutely nobody. I remember walking through Times Square one day, bringing the Blessed Sacrament to a sick man who was living in a welfare hotel on W. 47th Street. My mood was a playful one, like a contestant on a telecast of "I've Got a Secret" — the secret being, of course, that I was a travelling companion to the sacramental Lord who plays games of "You've Got a Secret" with wafers of mystical bread.

here comes jesus

In His earthly lifetime, everyone in town was sensitive to the nearness of the Lord; even blind men tapping their white canes through the shoving crowds of a Jerusalem mob would suddenly become excited with the realization: "Here comes Jesus." In New York, there is no such intuitive recognition. I remember, on the day I speak of, coveting reverence for the Eucharist — or at least as much attention as the billboards were getting — as I passed a Times Square theater dedicated to the arts of bump-and-grind. I suddenly said to a lady I met who was flashily wearing the scapulars of faith: "I'm bringing communion to the sick."

Through my coat, I showed her the shape of the watch-size communion case I was carrying in an inside pocket. I thought she might genuflect, or hum "Panis Angelicus", or take up a collection for the support of her pastor. Instead, she only touched the lump in the coat that sheltered God, and said: "Father, do you have a little change you could spare me?"

At such times, God must murmur to Himself over and over again the words of Rodney Dangerfield: "I don't get no respect."

I remember the night scenes of summer when the street preachers would proclaim the redemption of the Lord all over Times Square; and every time they opened their mouths, I felt that the Holy Ghost was being called out at first base. There would be a great silence from the heavens in the night skies that hung over Manhattan, as though Omnipotence were indifferent to the earth; yet I knew Jesus was there on the sidewalks with me, as excited as I was over the noise, the traffic, and the flashing of neon lights. But when the preachers would shout his name, it was embarrassing to listen. If I had not known Him already, I would not have believed in the Lord whose mercy and grace was touted on the street corners like the cheap merchandise of itinerant salesmen.

paper napkins

Afterwards, I would go into the coffee shops, hoping to touch the lives of friends I would meet there with the reality of Jesus. I think of an ex-wino named Joe who would sit on a counter stool in Childs', starving to death over a plate of mashed potato and gravy. Joe had cancer of the throat, but he might have recovered if he could have given up smoking. Instead, he would light up one cigarette after another; and gagging, he would heave up every bite of food he attempted to swallow. The waitress was a friend who loved Joe very much; and she would let him sit there for a couple of hours at a time, because he had no place else to go.

He would cough away his life into paper napkins, which the waitress would bring him in stacks six inches high. When Joe finally died, he weighed less than eighty-five pounds, a pitiable example of those who would rather fight than switch.

the perils of virtue

I think of a personable young chap named Rocco, who would come into the Muffinburger stoned with grief each evening, and buy coffee for the prostitutes. It was rumored that Rocco used to be a cop who, in his rookie days, had fallen in love with one of the syndicate call girls. But when she tried to quit the syndicate and go virtuous in matrimony, she had been dropped by pimps out of the window from the top floor of an Eighth Avenue hotel. Rocco was one of the policemen who found her dead on the sidewalk.

Rocco was later fired from the department, so it was said, for his rough handling of pimps, when he met them, whether on duty or not. When I met Rocco, I always felt that he was ghosted by the memory of a face smashed into concrete on the 45th Street side of the Royal Manhattan Hotel, and that seemed as much truth as he ever dared to face.

Whatever the truth in the tales told of Rocco, the clearest, most vivid recollections I have of New York are the God-haunted moments when I felt Jesus inside me like a second self, walking among shadows of death on the New York street. Yet I have no sense of making Jesus real to anyone, least of all to Joe and Rocco. Like the street preachers of evangelism, my best words of faith seemed a betrayal of a God whose beauty is beyond the resources of any language I now know.

Yet we do speak of God when we love one another. A priest cannot beat an old lady over the head with a sacrament, and say: "Here is Jesus." But a waitress can allow a dying man a place at her counter, and she can bring him napkins for his sickness that say more about human caring, through which God's love is revealed, than all the drumbeats of the Gospel that try to lift sinners into the arms of the dying Christ.

In emergencies, a napkin is as near as we need to get to a gift cup of cold water to those suffering friends whom the Lord called the least among his brethren.

Current Hang-ups the art of josef albers

casey pocius

Pop, Op and Warhol fans take note: the grand-daddy of them all has a new show at the Notre Dame Art Gallery. Still going strong at eighty-five, Josef Albers continues to turn out work at an enviable pace. His latest effort, entitled "Formulation: Articulation," is being exhibited now through December 31st. A set of sixty-six prints and lithographs, it represents yet another step in the artist's lifelong experimentation with color and form.

Albers' work is hard to describe. Like all art, it must be seen to be fully appreciated. I can remember my first encounter with his "Homage to the Square" series: a short trip to the Gallery that ended up in long hours of observation and contemplation. At first glance the work seemed simple and austere but a closer look revealed many layers of subtlety and expression. Albers reduces painting to its simplest constituents: color and line. What I first took for playful hard-edges soon became something infinitely more complex and exciting. I saw color react with color in a fight for control of the picture space. Of course, neither of them could win because they were conceived and executed as a whole. The same phenomenon occurs with line. My first impression was one of calm. Then things began to happen, the experience changed. The colors became violent and competed for my attention, ghost images came and went, the shapes began to expand and contract yet always returned to their original physical bounds. All in all, the work was charged with an action and intensity that belied my initial expectations.

Albers' insights into the field of color perception alone would have marked him as a great innovator, but that is just part of his art. Born in Bottrop, Germany in 1888, Albers was a contemporary of such masters as Picasso, Mondrian and Mestrovic. His first lithographs, executed between 1916-19, were done in the Expressionist manner. In 1920, Albers enrolled at Walter Gropius' Bauhaus school at Weimar, where he was later to gain his first fame as a teacher. He became interested in stained-glass windows and began a series of glass paintings which, in retrospect, give the first evidence of his use of the square as a distinct form. He also designed furniture, creating the first bent laminated chair intended for mass production. Albers' theoretical preciseness was always equalled by a precision for craft, echoing his avowed esthetic that "in producing art I please myself and educate others to see."

Upon the closing of the Bauhaus in 1933 Albers emigrated to America, where he became one of the most influential proponents of Bauhaus ideas on design methods and educational reform. While teaching at Black Mountain College in North Carolina from 1933 to 1949, he worked mostly with oil on masonite, evolving geometric forms with the square gradually emergin as his dominant theme. In 1950 he moved on to Yale University, where he became chairman of the department of architecture and design. It was there that Albers began working on his renowned series of paintings and lithographs, "Homage to the Square."

In reducing that shape to a basic concentric arrangement, Albers anticipated the abstract, geometric direction that art was to take in the 1960's. His exploitation of the fact that two chromatically proximate colors, when combined properly, can produce a third color also made him a forerunner of the Op artists who experimented with perception.

For thirty years, Albers' paintings and lithographs have been an exploration of the basic problems of color. Although he personally prefers the term "interaction" to "vibration," there is in his work a distinct sense of motion. Colored planes advance and recede within the picture space while their shapes expand or contract. What outwardly looks so modest in fact contains much depth; one could easily spend hours in front of the work, getting into its psychological as well as visual effects.

Striving for simplicity but not simpleness, "Formulation: Articulation" is an important collection by a truly significant artist. Whether you're a serious student of art or just like to come and look, you owe it to yourself to see this show. Come for a minute, stay for an hour. You will be amazed.

a thanksgiving wish

Thanksgiving Day is, above all, an American institution. The turkey and pie, the football mania, the gathering of the family to bow their heads, survives only because there is a place in everyone's heart which has remained innocent at a time when innocence tags along like Diogenes looking for a home in the heart of an honest man.

It is harder today to participate in this ritual than I can ever remember. The voices at the dinner table will probably be able to do nothing more than echo the sadness of a time gone sour.

And yet, in what is left if my own innocence, I am hoping for just a moment during the day when the darkness will subside for a moment, perhaps to reveal that for all the sin and sorrow, this is still a world of more kindness than we have allowed.

To be able to see that perhaps we have only temporarily tossed away our chances for happiness, and have not lost them entirely, will be enough to give me reason for thanks.

Editor:

Your editorial of September 24, concerning the United Farm Workers and Gallo, has come to our attention.

We presume that you are seriously concerned with truth and complete information. Regrettably, you chose to advance a strong opinion and advocate a boycott of our wines without being adequately informed.

Recommending in public print a boycott of a responsible company's products is a grave action, not just free expression of an opinion. It seems unusual to us for a journalist to fail to seek out facts at the source and make thorough analysis before taking such a position.

Your interest in this matter, we trust, continues, and therefore, we wish to present you herewith, over our signatures, factual information which should enable you to speak as Abraham Lincoln once did, stating, "I'm always glad to admit I know more today than I did yesterday."

Gallo farm workers are union farm workers and are in the union of their own free choice and have the highest combination of wages and fringe benefits of any farm-field labor in the United States.

We signed a contract in early July with a union that presented us signed petitions which were verified to represent the majority of our employees. Then, this contract was ratified by the overwhelming majority of our employees. The contract provides substantial increases in wages and fringe benefits.

Minimum base pay is $2.76 per hour, ranging upward to $3.57 per hour, averaging about $3.00 per hour. Harvesting grapes on a piece-work basis averages pay of about $5.00 per hour. Many will run up to $9.00 per hour.

In addition, the contract provides for:

- Paid Pension Plan
- Paid Vacations
- Paid Holidays
- Premium Paid Overtime
- Paid Funeral Leave
- Grievance and Arbitration Plan
- Paid Health and Life Insurance
- Rent-Free Housing for Most Permanent Employees
- State Unemployment Insurance
- Voluntarily Paid by Gallo (not required by law for farm labor)

This contract cannot be changed or cancelled by an arbitrary action on our part. A boycott cannot "persuade" us to do something we have no legal nor moral right to do.

Now, may we comment: This unfortunate conflict between two unions could have been avoided if farm workers were included in the federal legislation which operates to insure workers in other industries government supervision of elections for the purpose of protecting an absolutely free and secret ballot in choosing a union affiliation.

We are strongly for such legislation and urge all others, such as yourself, to write their congressman and senators to back such legislation. This will be the most direct, long-lasting way to help farm labor.

And also, please think of this: Obviously the behavior of any company reflects the attitudes and policies of its management. Significantly, this company is personally owned and managed by its founders, the Gallo family. Therefore, we have always had a feeling of direct, close relationship with our employees and personal concern for their welfare and happiness. Our performance in this regard stands on a record of more than 40 years of demonstration, not just words.

As you think about this matter, we'd like to ask you to consider this summary: Our farm-field workers are union workers and are in a union of their own choice. They have the highest-paying contract of any farm-field workers in the continental United States. It's a minor detail, but regarding the Teamster-UFW lettuce squabble, we have never, by word or deed, taken any side in this. Any statement contrary to this by anyone is pure prejudicial fiction.

Sincerely,
Ernest Gallo
Julio Gallo

(With the letter was enclosed a chronological statement of what occurred between the UFW and the Teamsters as the Gallo Co. recounts it.)

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees for the Robert F. Kennedy Medical Plan, held on January 24, 1973, the suggestion was made to Cesar Chavez by Robert Gallo that the parties agree to meet as soon as possible for the purpose of renegotiating their collective bargaining agreement due to expire on April 18, 1973.

A letter dated February 1 was sent to us by the UFW union requesting a meeting to renegotiate the agreement. The letter was not, however, accompanied by a list of desired changes which the union had agreed to submit under the terms of the contract.

Several phone calls were placed to the union negotiator during the month of February requesting that meetings be set up between the two parties. These phone calls went unanswered, so finally a letter was sent to the union requesting that the dates of March 29, March 30, and April 12 be set aside for negotiation meetings.

There was no reply to our February 28 letter so a follow-up letter was sent on March 12. Finally, the union agreed to a preliminary meeting on March 22 for the purpose of discussing "ground rules" for the forthcoming negotiations. Such a meeting was held and it was agreed the first negotiation session would be held on March 29 with another session scheduled for March 30.

On March 28, 1973, the union notified us that they would have to cancel the meetings for March 29 and 30. The union's negotiator faithfully promised that a meeting would be held the following week and the union would notify us as to the exact time and date. The union failed to comply with this commitment, although the contract was due to expire on April 18.

On April 18, 1973, a telephone conversation took place between representatives of the union and company. We pointed out that although the contract was expiring, work would be available to all employees. A request was made to tentatively schedule our first meeting for April 25. A letter to the union was sent on April 18 confirming the telephone conversation and the tentative meeting date of April 25.

The first negotiation session with the UFW was held on April 25, 1973, at which time the union submitted to us only their noneconomic proposal to the company.

Subsequent meetings were held on May 2, 8, 9, and 11. During the meeting on May 11, the union voiced concern that Teamster representatives were allegedly observed on our Fresno and Livingston ranches. We responded by stating that neither Teamster nor UFW representatives would be permitted in the fields during working hours and that a letter to this effect was sent to all supervisory personnel on April 24. After settling this point, negotiations continued into the late afternoon with the next meeting scheduled for May 14. However, upon returning to the Livingston ranch, it was learned a meeting between several employees and Teamster representatives at an employee's house on the ranch property was in the process of being broken up by UFW supporters, including a number of outsiders.

At the start of the May 14, 1973 meeting, the UFW presented us with a letter from Cesar Chavez containing a number of charges against certain company representatives. The union refused to continue the negotiations until we replied to the Chavez letter.

The charges were answered in a letter to Mr. Chavez on May 17, 1973, and in the same letter the union was requested to put a stop to the threats being made to workers by the Union Ranch Committee members, who were attempting to coerce employees into signing UFW cards. With the letter to Chavez was a copy of a letter which was distributed to all employees advising them that they would not lose their jobs for signing or not signing a union card.

On May 21, 1973, a telegram was sent to Cesar Chavez advising him that, contrary to his understanding, we had not received notification that Teamsters represented our workers and that the company remained ready to continue negotiating with the UFW. A meeting was subsequently arranged for May 29. During the meeting on May 29, it was pointed out that we had made no attempt to bar UFW representatives from the Livingston ranch so long as they did not enter the fields and interfere with the workers during working hours. The union agreed we had made no such attempt to restrict their activity.

It should be noted UFW representatives were free to visit camps and housing areas without any restrictions and that they were not interfered with when they talked to workers before or after working hours.

Further negotiation sessions were held on May 31 and June 1, 4 and 18. The time delay between the meetings of June 4 and June 18 was due to the UFW representatives being unavailable during this period. Progress to date had been slow with the union taking an unmovable position on several of their proposals.

It should be noted that in 1970 a new agreement was concluded after three meetings. Already, in 1973, ten meetings had been held.

On June 20, 1973, what turned out to be the final negotiation session took place. At this meeting we pointed out that the union still had not submitted its economic proposals, and that the in the previous eleven meetings, we had demonstrated considerable flexibility in our positions on all resolved and unresolved issues. Yet the union to date had failed to indicate any degree of flexibility in their position on three key items (hiring procedures, method of determining employee seniority, and union discipline of employees), which significantly departed from present contract language. It was left that the next meeting would be called by the UFW.

On June 25, we received a letter from the Teamsters claiming to represent the majority of our field employees. The same day, our employees were notified that we had received this representation claim from the Teamsters. Cesar Chavez was also notified by telegram on June 26.

Before a meeting could be scheduled with Teamster representatives to verify their claim, the UFW established a picket line at our ranches on June 27.

On June 29, those employees who stopped working on June 27 were advised that they should report to work the following day or be permanently replaced.

The Teamsters submitted to us copies of signed petitions from workers requesting that the company recognize the Western Conference of Teamsters as their exclusive bargaining agent. In the absence of any legal mechanism to determine employee preference, and due to the fact the two unions could not agree on an election process, we made the verification which was accomplished using personnel and payroll records. It should be noted that our recognition of the UFW in 1967 was based on a check of signatures on cards submitted by that union.

In a letter dated July 6, we advised all employees that we had been presented with petitions by the Teamsters, that we had checked the signatures on the petitions and found that a majority of our employees had selected the Teamsters to represent them, and as a result, we would recognize the Teamsters as the bargaining agent. Of the 250 employees covering all four ranch locations and including those who had failed to report for work on June 27, there were 138 verified workers' signatures requesting Teamster representation. On July 10, a contract was consummated. Ratification meetings were held at all four ranches, and by written secret ballot the new agreement was ratified by a 158-to-1 vote and the contract was put into force.

This factual account can be substantiated by correspondence and meeting minutes. The purpose of this letter is not to make charges against any organization or individual nor do we feel it is necessary to answer unsubstantiated allegations directed against this company. The purpose is to let you know the facts in order that you can judge whether or not we as a company acted in good faith. The weight of the evidence seems to indicate that the Gallo farm workers did freely choose and are represented by the union of their choice, and that for them, this has resulted in the best contract for farm-field labor of any in the United States. As you are aware, we believe that union representation should be determined solely by the true will of the actual workers concerned.

One final point: Unfortunately, throughout the above period of time, none of those who claim to speak most authoritatively for the good of those workers employed by us has made any attempt to determine the true feelings of these employees, who were working for us last April and are still working for us. Why, as we subsequently learned, did several delegations of employees contact the Teamster offices in Modesto and Merced requesting the Teamsters to represent the employees on our ranches? Why were the majority of signatures favoring the Teamsters obtained by employee solicitation and not through efforts of Teamster organizers? Why were meetings between interested employees and Teamster organizers constantly disrupted by UFW supporters? Finally, why did the UFW choose to postpone and delay our reaching any agreement that would face ratification by the workers at our ranches?

84 campus newspapers call for impeachment

Amherst, Mass., Nov. 12—Eighty-four college and university newspapers, including the Notre Dame Observer, have called upon the House of Representatives to impeach President Richard Nixon.

In a joint editorial to be mailed to the members of Congress today, the newspapers commit themselves to the removal of a President who "has forsaken rule by law."

"Richard Nixon now rules by fiat and force," the editorial states. "He is no longer a legitimate leader. The President must be impeached. No amount of legal double-talk or political timidity can obscure this fact."

Together the newspapers represent more than one million students from 29 states. They have a combined circulation of nearly 700,000.

"At a time when popular commentators delight in discussing nationwide student apathy, Mr. Nixon's repeated abuses of power have rekindled the outrage of the late 1960's," the newspapers state in a letter accompanying their editorial. "We cannot stand idly by while countless revelations of corruption, illegality and deceit shatter the faith of the American people in their governmental system."

Included on the list of signatories are newspapers from large state schools: The Michigan Daily, the Minnesota Daily, The University of Tennessee Daily Beacon, the University of Washington Daily — as well as those from well-known private institutions: The Harvard Crimson, the Stanford Daily, The Yale Daily News and The University of Chicago Maroon.

"The impeachment of Richard Nixon is prerequisite to the restoration of confidence in our system of government," the newspapers state. They call on members of Congress to "overcome political timidity and put aside partisan considerations. In this time of national crisis, their duties under the Constitution are clear. They fail to act at the nation's peril."

The editorial was originally drafted by the editors of the Amherst Student, the newspaper of Amherst College, a small liberal-arts school in Western Massachusetts. It was circulated to campus newspapers across the country.

Almost all of the newspapers which endorsed the editorial also printed it, along with a list of signatories.

"Many papers have called already for impeachment," the Amherst Student editors state.

"This editorial is not intended as a replacement for those expressions of dissent. It is designed instead to fulfill the need for one national statement of student sentiment to reinforce and amplify these individual statements."

'Super Bomber' slated

A reunion of former athletes of St. Joseph's Grade School will highlight the school's annual "Super Bomber" sports smoker Friday night, according to the chairman, Mike McIntyre. The smoker, which will get underway at 8 p.m., will be held in the school gymnasium. It is again open to women, McIntyre added.

At least three of the school's former athletes have been captains of Notre Dame's football team and many have attained prominence as college stars, coaches, athletic directors and officials. Among them are Jim Tansey, Rocco Lupresto, Louis Ferraro, Joe Lazara, Jim Marchewicz, Jim Powers, John Murphy, Rick Seall, Tim Howard.

Bobby Roe, Roland Chamblee, Bill (Zip) Roemer, John Taylor and Tom Kruyer. Also Bob Turnock, Maury Hoban, Jim and Steve Rudasics, Terry, Steve and Eric Smith and Pat Filley, as well as some of the distaff stars of the recent past, Mary Doran, Mary Hoban, Kathy Lauer and Maureen McCarthy.

Sponsored by the school's athletic committee, the smoker proceeds will go to the St. Joseph sports program, athletic Committee Chairman, Joe Karwowski, said.

Maury Hoban is chairman of arrangements, entertainment and contest awards; Jim Humphrey, food; and Marie Virgil, decoration.

Nixon 'won't walk away'

By EUGENE V. RISHER
WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon, embarking on a public campaign to clear his name of the stain of Watergate, told 4,000 cheering businessmen Thursday that "I was elected to do a job (and) I'm not going to walk away until I get that job done."

Flashing his campaign-style "V" sign with arms outstretched, the President extolled his major achievements this year and listed inflation and the energy crisis as two problems he was busy solving for the future.

In a 30-minute speech before the National Association of Realtors that was interrupted six times by applause, Nixon blamed Watergate on the mistakes of "overzealous people" in the 1972 election campaign — "mistakes I would not have approved of, mistakes I would not have tolerated, but mistakes for which I must accept responsibility."

Then, bringing his audience to its feet for a one-minute standing ovation, the President declared:

"As far as the President of the United States is concerned, he has not violated his trust and he is not going to violate it."

As for demands for his resignation or impeachment, Nixon repeated a refrain he has stressed in a week of private meetings with members of Congress and Republican party leaders and elected officials. "I was elected to do a job," he said, referring to his goals of world peace, domestic prosperity and national tranquility.

"I can assure you that regardless of what some of my good intentioned friends and honest opponents suggest, I'm not going to walk away until I get that job done," he said.

The speech was the first of four scheduled public appearances within the next few days that will carry Nixon to Florida, Georgia and Memphis. In addition, he continued his meetings with legislators Thursday, answering questions for 78 GOP congressmen over breakfast, for about 50 Democratic congressmen at lunch and for a final group of Republican senators in late afternoon.

On Saturday night, the President planned to address a meeting of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association on television in Orlando, Fla., followed by a question-and-answer session.

A rector's job: involvement

by Ambrose Benkert
Staff Reporter

Among them are a psychologist, an accountant, and a lawyer. Their span of personal university education encompasses the 40's, 50's, 60's, and 70's. They enjoy different pastimes and in many cases have different backgrounds. Yet there is a unifying force holding together these twenty men and women: they are all rectors of Notre Dame dormitories.

The rector is one who must fill many roles: counselor, friend, community member, academician, disciplinarian, and spiritual guide. Each enjoys the challenge of working with students, yet each sees the experience in different terms.

"Rectoring is just a house-keeping," says Fr. Leon Mertensotto of Lyons. Fr. Dave Schlaver, of Dillon, says "It's where the action is." Kathy Cekanski, of Breen Phillips, says the rector "must jump into the trenches and see where the kids are at." Fr. Bill Presely, of St. Edward's sees the rector as a "facilitator for personal growth within the framework of the residence hall." Fr. Tom Chambers tries to help his Morrissey students develop in four ways: academically, socially, emotionally, and spiritually.

Aim at 'community'

All rectors try to develop a community, or unified spirit, within each individual hall. Yet they recognize how nebulous and intangible the concept of community is. "The students need a place where they can have some sense of identity," says Fr. John Mulcahy of Flanner. "A true community spirit is one in which people can live together and have concern for each other," says Mertensotto. Sr. Karen Anne Paul, of Badin, considers a community "an environment where people respect and care for each other and are sensitive to each other's needs and feelings." Fr. Robert Friggin, of Keenan, sees hall unity growing out of several communities which combine in a "fusion or enthusiasm to pride and accomplishments."

To foster such a spirit within their halls, rectors employ a variety of ingenious ideas. Alumni holds a "Las Vegas Night" which involves a casino atmosphere and is open only to hall members and their guests. Morrissey stages a "Mr. Morrissey" talent show contest. Badin put out a bi-weekly newsletter. St. Ed's hold an NFL night during which popcorn is served in the TV room. Breen Phillips groups people by home town, class, major, and birthday. Grace residents participate in programs designed to aid the elderly and the retarded and also arrange social gatherings with families in South Bend. Many halls use hall fellows programs and the liturgy to try to promote a community.

Most rectors feel they must show personal initiative. "I try to hit people on a one-to-one basis," says Joanne Szafran of Walsh. Fr. Andy Ciferni, of Holy Cross, tries to be present at every interhall athletic activity involving his hall and takes the time to play football, handball, and to eat with the students. The formation of a community is most difficult in the women's dorms due to both their newness and their lack of a stay hall system, yet Sr. Jean Lenz, of Farley, finds no problem in this area because, at the beginning of the year, the old residents of the hall made sure that the spirit and traditions were passed on.

Despite the emphasis placed on bringing people together, rectors do not want their halls to become isolated in the context of the overall university. Fr. Carl Ebey, of Fisher says, "There should not be unity at the expense of the other halls."

The rectors also differ in their assessment of the principal problems they face. Fr. Eugene Gorski, of Howard, feels he does not have problems but merely faces challenges. Fr. Matthew Miceli, of Cavanaugh, the dean of the rectors, sees the major difficulty as "getting to know your men well." Fr. Michael Zang, of Sorin, is disappointed to "see the result fall short of the goals." Reconciling his pastoral, which he considers pre-eminent, with administrative duties such as giving out keys perplexes Fr. Thomas McNally of Grace. Bro. Just Paczesny, of Alumni, admits he "can't fathom parietal hours. I don't know how the university expects us to enforce them." He is also concerned about the over-consumption of alcohol, wondering why "two students drink four cases of beer every Friday night."

Ciferni feels his greatest task is to "elicit a sense of social responsibility" from the students. Several rectors who also serve within the administration cite lack of availability as their biggest problem.

The need for discipline

While none of the rectors relishes the administration of discipline, all recognize to some extent the need for it at certain times. They agree with Schlaver who says "The best discipline is self-discipline." Sr. Paul feels that "discipline is not a major issue" because the students are mature enough to employ self-discipline. Fr. Terry Lally, of Stanford, finds the matter

Observer Insight

"one of the easiest things. I've never had a discipline problem I felt I couldn't handle." Discipline is basically seen as a positive tool. As Gorski puts it, "The goal of a disciplinary act should be educational both for me and for the hall." Cekanski thinks it important for the rector to get "the whys and wherefores of the situation." Some rectors decentralize discipline by relying on the RA's or judicial boards to levy penalties.

Although they are virtually unanimous in their endorsement of co-education (Presley calls it "the greatest thing that every happened to Notre Dame"), they differ in their conceptions of its impact. Gorski doesn't perceive any immediate impact because "there aren't enough girls around yet." Fr. Thomas Tallarida, of Zahm, thinks co-education is only beginning to have an impact on the North Quad because there were no women there last year. Fr. Griffin admits, "We have not reached the point where the hall ceases to be a male ghetto."

The benefits of co-education

Yet others see a more substantial effect as a result of the mixing of the sexes. Fr. James Riehle, of Pangborn, finds two ways in which the presence of women has helped the social situation. It helps "get rid of the boorishness and locker room attitudes" and it elevates the men by making them more socially aware.

Just notes the decline in "Hard core X-rated pornography on the walls." In the women's dorms, the major problem has been one of adjustment; Szafran cites the "fish bowl" atmosphere which is just now beginning to disappear. In a larger sense, most rectors would agree with Chambers, who said "Coeducation strengthens us because it opens us up to the real world where men and women can exchange ideas."

Optimistic about hall life

The rectors are universally optimistic about the future of residence hall life at the university. Tallarida points to the fact that students refuse to leave overcrowded dorms as evidence of a "fantastic potential for human growth" that exists in the halls.

Many feel that because of this overcrowding there is a need for the construction of new residence halls. Some say the stay hall system denies flexibility to the students, while others believe it is essential for the development of community.

Gorski bases his optimism on the belief that, "The central staff of the student affairs are much more concerned and aware of the challenges in the halls."

Ciferni feels that if the new guidelines are successful, there will be a decentralization of power back to the halls where it belongs. While Mertensotto laments the fact that so few rectors are in-

Sam's Thanksgiving surprise thwarted by Chicago thieves

By LAWRENCE C. FALK
CHICAGO (UPI) — Sam is just a wino.

He is well known to those who live in the expensive apartments on Belview Ave. just a block off famous Rush St. here. He does odd jobs for $2 or $3, buys a bottle of wine or three, and then sleeps it off in some alley or doorway.

At least, that was how things were for Sam until recently.

A few months ago he started doing odd jobs at the Pizza Hut restaurant on Belview—washing the windows, sweeping things out and the like. That augmented his income, somewhat, but it still all went for those bottles of booze about which he was so fond.

Then, when the cold weather neared, Mike Smith, manager of the restaurant, suggested that Sam sleep in.

"You could help clean up every night, and then you'd have a warm place to sleep," Mike says he told Sam. "Besides, you could be a sort of night watchman, too."

And that, considering the neighborhood, was not such a bad idea.

Sam agreed. Mike still paid him $2 a night to help clean up and that money—along with the rest from the odd jobs—still went for booze. Sam shuffled into the restaurant each evening before closing time, helped stack chairs and sweep, and then—feeling the effects of those endless bottles—curled up in a back room to sleep.

"I kept the heat on at night," was the way Mike explained it. Until last week, Sam was always right on time. The door would open 45 minutes before closing time. Sam never forgot.

Monday night he did not show up. Just as Mike was finishing the cleaning alone, there was a knock on the door.

It was Sam. More scraggly than ever. Bruised. A bit bloodied, too.

"I was rolled. They took all my money," he explained. "I had $50."

"Where did you get $50?" Mike asked, thinking every cent has been going into Sam's booze fund for years and years.

"Well, I've been saving it. You been so nice to me—you and Sue and Cathy (the two waitresses).

"I was gonna surprise you all, with a big Thanksgiving Dinner. I just figured I'd come by your place Thanksgiving, with all the stuff, and cook you a dinner."

"Now, I guess I won't."

Sam shambled back to his place to sleep. And soon—because of the day's drinking and the beating he took—he was asleep.

Mike walked back, leaned down, put $30 in Sam's pocket and went home.

Opinion

Dellinger, Hayden-- fred graver they told you so

David Dellinger and Tom Hayden, two of the Chicago Seven conspiracy trial defendants, will speak in the LaFortune Ballroom, Tuesday, November, 27, at 8 p.m.

A great deal has happened since that famous trial, which symbolized for many the political struggle for change during the late 60's and early 70's. People have finally started to become aware of the darkness and corruption which was pointed out to them by a growing number of voices calling for change in the middle 60's.

The members of the Chicago Seven were among those voices, and in many ways were among the most outspoken of them. At the Democratic Convention in 1968, these men organized the dissident voices of the nation, and went forward to the political leaders who had gathered to decide on their candidate for President to tell them that they were tired of the lies and the sins which they saw happening every day within the system.

They were not exactly welcomed by the city of Chicago with open arms and wide smiles. The police department infiltrated their ranks with confederates, hoping to abort the protests. Weeks before the convention, the leaders of the movement were assigned police to tail them everywhere they went.

In a recent article in New Times magazine, Tom Hayden wrote: "They proposed to follow us for Convention Week, at a distance of about ten feet. We went to the bathroom. They followed. We went to lunch, they sat at the next table. We drove to a meeting, they tailed. When they were close enough, they would make remarks about 'getting' us or 'arresting you every time you're in the streets.'"

Brought to trial several months after the convention before now-infamous judge Julius Hofman, the defendants accused by the State of Illinois of "crossing state lines with intention to incite riot" originally numbered eight. But Judge Hofman took personal offense to defendant Bobby Seale of the Black Panthers, and in a move typical of his sense of justice, had him bound and gagged and finally totally removed from the courtroom.

The trial was a sham and a circus. The defendants were fond of showing the absurdity of the situation by showing up sometimes wearing judicial robes or making animal noises when state's witnesses were testifying.

Judge Hofman was not the epitome of courtroom decorum, either. Besides gagging Seales, he frequently called the defendants names, and muttered under his breath what he would do if he were a juror.

Which all explains fairly well why the Chicago Seven are currently back in court. Not to re-try the case, but to determine whether the previous trial can be considered legitimate. It is ironic, to say the least. Even more, it is another symbol of our times. The paranoia felt in the late sixties has returned in full force. The awareness of political corruption has again reached a peak, and once again the courts are the battleground for a war being waged against the power dragons.

Tom Hayden and Dave Dellinger offer a particularly unique sense of perspective on the events of the last few years. Having once lived with the jeers of the public, they now view the political situation with the feelings of one who has foreseen the future.

As Hayden wrote, "Those of us who were initially indicted are now free and some of those who indicted us have now been indicted themselves, and both developments have occurred because more and more Americans have become aware of the danger to their constitutional rights. Radicals have long been accused of paranoia, of indulgence in conspiracy theories. Now, with the shadow of Watergate reaching far beyond the radicals, I keep thinking that perhaps this "Paranoia" will be so widely shared that it will become common sense. Living in fear may be crippling at first, but people who can overcome fear of authority have a proud future."

Creaney appointed to Faculty Athletics Board

by Terry Keeney
Staff Reporter

For the first time in its history the Faculty Board in Control of Athletics has a student member. Fr. Theodore Hesburgh has appointed Mike Creaney, former Notre Dame football player, now student freshman assistant coach, to the board.

The Faculty Board in Control of Athletics oversees all university intercollegiate athletics. According to the Academic Manual, "It is specifically empowered to make recommendations to the President on athletic policy."

Creaney, introduced to the board at its meeting on Wednesday, sees his role as student representative as unique. He can provide an "inside point of view" on athletics the board has never had.

"I think it's just a better input," observed Creaney. "I can give a better view of the team - or the locker room view."

Creaney felt that this contribution was especially valuable when the board discussed a possible post season bowl bid. The board must approve any Notre Dame bowl appearance.

One of the things we discussed was the bowl situation," said Creaney. "That's where I had the most effective impact. I gave them a more active input than they ever had."

Fr. Edmund P. Joyce, executive vice-president of the university and ex-officio chairman of the board, thought that the time had come for student representation on the board. His com-mettee is following the trend set by other University committees in admitting student members.

"When they revised the Academic Manual, they put students on nearly all University committees," Joyce noted.

"There is no reason not to have a student on the board as long as he is serious and responsible. And we think we have that student in Mike Creaney."

Joyce explained that Creaney's role would be exactly like that of any other board member. He will have all rights and privileges, including a vote.

Creaney joins ten administrators and faculty members on the Athletic Board. They include Joyce, Vice-president for Student Affairs Dr. Philip Faccenda, and two faculty members from each of the University colleges.

Unfair evaluation bugs bunnies

By EDWARD P. BUTLER
NEW YORK (UPI) — Is it the ravages of age, "loss of bunny image" or unappreciated union activity that had four fired Playboy Bunnies hopping mad Thursday?

"They really have been terminated because in our quarterly rating they lost the bunny image," Playboy Club manager Mario Staub said.

"The bunny mother and the assistant bunny mother rated the girls and put the results in sealed envelopes, which we sent to the international bunny mother," he said.

A total of six girls from the New York Playboy Club lost their bunny image in the recent ratings, Staub said, but the "international bunny mother from Chicago came to New York herself and reversed the rating on one girl, so she stays."

Four of the fired bunnies, all over 28 years old, have asked the state Human Rights Commission to get their jobs back for them. They accused management of sex and age discrimination.

Nancy Phillips, one of the fired bunnies, said Playboy literature lists such things as "sagging breasts" and "drooping derrieres" as defects that can cause loss of jobs.

Staub said, "I never came across anything like that in the company. Loss of bunny image means we feel the girl has lost her fresh, attractive appearance. It can happen after a month or after years."

Staub was asked for a more specific definition but had none.

"No, I don't believe stale is right. They are just not attractive, at least not to me," he said.

The bunnies, who work as waitresses in the club, are members of Local 1 of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartender International.

Union President David Siegal said as far as he is concerned "management wants to get rid of the girls because of their union activity."

Patti Columbo, 31, one of the fired bunnies, said the dismissals resulted because she and the others were trying to eliminate the bunny image clause from their new contract which comes up in June.

"Some of the younger girls signed our petition, but came back and asked to have their names taken off the list. Management gets all the young girls together and instills fear into them," she said.

She also said management wants to eliminate seniority and retention of benefit rights from the new contract.

New York's club with about 70 girls is the largest, she said, adding the others have around 20 bunnies each but the bunnies outside Manhattan are not as militant.

"There are no other girls like the New York girls. They are fighting for all their rights."

Wendy believes

If men can take shirts off, women should too

By CHERYL ARVIDSON
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Wendy Berlowitz believes that if men can take their shirts off in public, women should be able to do the same.

To protest this "clothing double standard" Wendy is traveling across the country taking her tops off, but she finds people more interested in sight seeing than her message.

"All they want me to do is take my blouse off," said Wendy, 25, Norman, Okla. "They don't want me to talk; they don't want to hear what I have to say."

Wendy and her husband, Jim, have staged "bikini auctions" in seven U.S. cities since July 27, but during the weekend they entered a "new dimension in protest." They moved to the nation's capital and Wendy stripped to the waist in the White House during a Saturday morning tour.

Surprisingly, she wasn't arrested because, according to a Secret Service spokesman, she wasn't staging a formal protest. Security officers quickly covered her up with a suit jacket, hustled the tourists out the door and took her away for questioning.

In her other protests, Wendy has been subjected to cat calls, jeers and obscenities, and on five occasions she's been thrown into jail on indecent exposure charges. In Washington, all she received was stunned silence.

Wendy and Jim began to plan their protest in May, 1972, when she taught a class in freshman English at the University of Oklahoma in the nude and was fired. It took them a year "to get our heads together" and decide on the next path to take.

They have an act called "Jim and Wendy's Traveling Wild West Front (Not Side) Show" which consists of Wendy's theme song — "I'm All Covered in Clothes" — a brief speech on topless philosophy and a request for donations for Wendy's halter top. She then removes the halter and the protest is over, usually in about five minutes. Then she is carted off to jail with Jim always remaining out of the area so he's free to bail her out.

Both Jim and Wendy have been disowned by their parents.

Despite their determined effort to make their protests relevant, Jim says they've only been able to draw "15,000 dirty old men" to their demonstrations.

"If they really agreed, they'd be up on stage with us, not out in the audience," adds Wendy. "I'm not trying to have nudity declared legal—that would be a losing battle right now. But I definitely should be granted the same privilege as a man. I should be able to take my shirt off in public."

Volunteers still needed

Volunteers are still needed to conduct a collection for CARE's Worldwide Drought-Flood Emergency Fund before and after the Air Force game on Thanksgiving Day.

The donations will be used to aid millions of disaster victims in Asia, Africa and Latin America. The effects of droughts and floods in these areas is devastating. Food shortages caused by such disasters can result in retarded growth and brain damage among infants.

Almost all funds donated go directly to the disaster areas because little is spent on the administration of CARE. In fact, eight dollars of relief aid is given for each dollar donated.

CARE has already sent $750,000 in emergency relief supplies including food, water and medical supplies. After CARE administers to the immediate needs of disaster victims, it establishes programs to make the people self-sufficient.

Anyone interested in helping to collect money for CARE at the game should contact Fr. Tom Stella (6536) or Alan Sondej (7077).

Bush will not speak

Republican National Committee Chairman George Bush will not speak at the Notre Dame Law School on Tuesday, November 20. According to Andy Nickle of the Notre Dame Student Bar Association, Bush has decided to accompany President Nixon to the Republican Governor's Conference next week.

The president announced yesterday in a speech before the National Association of Realtors that he would address the National Republican Governor's Conference in Memphis, Tennessee on Tuesday. Bush in his capacity as Republican party chairman will join the president.

Nickle pointed out that Bush will arrive on campus Tuesday night for the Republican dinner for former Treasury Secretary John Connally.

Students protest

by barricading
doors of school

ATHENS (UPI) — Thousands of students barricaded themselves inside the Polytechnic school Thursday to carry on a marathon anti-government demonstration that brought 10,000 other protestors to the scene by nightfall.

A picture of President George Papadopoulos, who took over Greece following a coup, was burned.

The throng, shouting anti-government slogans and handing out leaflets, grew rapidly at mid-afternoon after police moved away from the school.

Police earlier had moved in to clear busy Patision Street and the gardens of the Archeological Museum next to the school.

involved in teaching. Mulcahy hopes that there will be an attempt to professionalize the job through training.

Co-ed dorms a possibility

Several rectors foresee the possibility of having a married couple serve on a hall staff. Co-ed dorms are not expected in the near future, mainly because of the lack of a suitable facility. However, McNally thinks his own hall might become co-ed, saying "It would be a natural way to go." Just thinks co-ed dorms are a possibility in the future "as we become more sophisticated," but emphasized that a special structure would have to be built. If this were done, he feels it would work like a hotel where "nobody worries about morality." Perhaps, though, the rectors' visions of the future are best summed up by the rector who says, "I don't know. I'm not a fortune teller."

Polls, bowls, Falcons face Irish

"It will give us additional time to recover, and it will give us additional time to get ready for Air Force." But even though Air Force ("a strange team," observed Ara. "They played Penn State to a 19-9 loss, and then lost to Navy by a sizeable margin") is Notre Dame's next regular season opponent, the Falcons will be thrust from ND's attention on Saturday night, when the Irish are sure to receive an invitation to play Alabama in the Sugar Bowl.

The Sugar Bowl picture began to solidify last weekend, when Bear Bryant and his Alabama seniors challenged the Irish to a showdown in New Orleans on New Year's Eve, but now, with Pittsburgh out of the way and Notre Dame idle on Bowl Bid weekend, things are rapidly crystallizing.

The Irish, unbeaten and untied, are certain to receive a bid on Saturday evening, and are virtually certain to accept it. And 'Bama, unless upset by Miami this weekend, is certain to be ND's opponent. "The significant thing to remember about our bowl policy," said Ara, "is that Father Joyce has indicated from the beginning that our procedure will always be to select the competition first, and then worry about the site."

"It isn't the name of the team that dictates who we'll play, but their stature, their relative position in the polls. Now, our goal this year is the national title, and in order to win the title we have to go unbeaten and defeat a team ranked above us in a bowl game. And the only such team we have a chance to play is Alabama."

"I talked the different aspects of the game over with our captains on Monday, and then discussed it with the team on Monday night—and by a hand vote the team indicated the desire to play in a bowl game and indicated a desire to play the best competition available. So there was really never much question about where we'd go."

The only question now is whether the Sugar Bowl package will be glittering as brightly on New Year's Eve as it is now. The Irish have two games left on their schedule, and so does Alabama. And the Tide, ranked number two nationally, will play LSU at Baton Rouge in the last game of their season. And Penn State and LSU, the other unbeaten teams who can accept a bid to the bowl of their choice, also have a pair of regular-season outings still to be played.

"I don't agree with early bowl invitations at all," said Ara. "They can extend the invitations on November 17 now, and the bowl committees are in such intense competition now that if we don't accept a bid right away, they'll probably go somewhere else."

"Certainly I hope this thing will be reviewed," he emphasized. "I'd like to see a new policy established where no bids for any of the late bowl games (The Cotton, Orange, and Sugar Bowls) can be extended before the end of the college season."

"That way we wouldn't have to worry, and we could let the bowl committees battle it out. But as it is now they'd rather gamble and with two unbeaten teams at this stage of the season than wait until everything is finished."

But "when everything is finished" this year, at least one-half of the Sugar Bowl's gamble should have paid off. And when everything is finished, regardless of how it is finished, Ara Parseghian will have another bowl invitation to his credit. And possibly, at last, he will have his perfect season as well.

Defensive back Mike Townsend intercepts a bomb in last year's ND-Air Force game. The two teams will meet again next Thursday at Notre Dame.

North American ice playoffs scheduled

by John Fineran

The U.S. college hockey season will not end on the evening of March 16, 1974, according to this week's Hockey News. The long-awaited meeting between the U.S. collegiate champion and the one from Canada will take place the weekend following the NCAA championships in Boston (March 14-16).

The one-game showdown, which will be known as the North American championship, will be held in Toronto this year, and a site to be determined in the United States next season. The two teams will be playing for a symbolic trophy and all players will receive a watch commemorating the championship game.

The international contest is a first for the NCAA. "We look forward to a lengthy association with our Canadian counterpart and expect to consider additional competition between the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union (CIAU) and NCAA champions in other sports," Walter Byers, the executive director of the NCAA, said.

"This should be quite a stimulus to intercollegiate hockey in both Canada and the United States," CIAU executive director Robert Pugh said. "I'm very, very happy that this is coming to fruition this year."

Wisconsin's 'Red Army'

A "Red Army" from the North invaded South Bend last night. This same "Red Army" has already laid to waste such towns as Minneapolis and Boston. Before mass hysteria reaches feverish proportions, before anyone picks up the phone and calls for Dr. Kissinger, let it be known this "Red Army" is the Wisconsin Badgers, and they are here to lay rest to Notre Dame's Fighting Irish on the Athletic and Convocation Center icefield tonight and tomorrow evening. Save the women and children!

Wisconsin is an impressive unit which has used General Bob Johnson's maneuvers to win the national championship last year and to be the undefeated (6-0), number-one ranked team in the nation so far this season. Notre Dame, 1-2-1 after last weekend's two losses at Michigan State, is tied for fifth in the WHCA and in the nation's latest poll of coaches.

"We're disappointed with the two losses," General Lefty Smith said. "But they are history. We face a great challenge in Wisconsin."

If General Smith has any battle plan, it is to stop the three platoon leaders of the Badgers, Centers Dennis Olmstead, Gary Winchester and Dean Talafous.

"Their centers are leaders," The General continued. "They set the pace for the rest of the lines."

Winchester, particularly, impressed Smith. "He's one helluva player." The Irish General said. "He's a good all-around player, and he has been a pest to us in the past."

Winchester centers for Dave Pay on the left and Billy Reay, Jr. on the right. Pay scored the winning goal in last season's final playoff battle between the two "Armies," while fans will recognize Winchester's right wing as what he is—the son of Chicago Black Hawks coach Billy Reay.

Olmstead's line is young to the WCHA wars. Right wing is manned by a new recruit, Dave Otness, while the left wing is patrolled by sophomore Steve Alley.

"Olmstead is the same type of player as Winchester," the General continued. "Last year, as a freshman, he impressed the daylights out of me."

Talafous' Corps is an all-junior one, and the biggest line the Irish have faced this season. The wings are Don DePrez on the left and Tom Machowski on the right, and both are identical in height (6-2) and weight (190 lbs.).

"Talafous is a big (180 lbs.), rangy (6-4) center," Smith cautioned. "He broke open the NCAA tournament last season and has done the same in key games this year."

Everyone knows the best defenses win wars, and the Badgers have one the best. So good in fact is the Wisconsin defensive flanks, General Johnson has moved Machowski to right wing in place of captain Stan Hinkley. Hinkley is resting in a hospital behind the South Bend lines with a broken leg.

Two recruits, Jim Jefferies and Brian Engblom, are assigned duty with the first unit. "They are two outstanding freshmen," Smith said.

Pete Scamurra, another youngster who enlisted at Wisconsin this fall, will team with Bob Lundeen on the second platoon, while senior Dave Arundel and sophomore John Taft patrol the third flank.

"Taft, Lundeen, Scamurra and Arundel are all good," Smith reflected. Junior Dick Perkins returns to protect the Wisconsin "ammo-net." General Smith called him "extremely good in close." "Perkins is very active smothering shots," Smith reflected. Perkins is backed up by junior Doug McFadden.

Indeed, this "Red Army" is Hun-like, a terrifying squad. They'll come at the Irish in waves. Notre Dame will need all the artillery power it can muster to defeat this group. Some of it, hopefully, will come from the capacity crowds (4,493) which will be on hand both evenings.

Wednesday pep rally slated for Air Force

The Air Force pep rally, the last home rally of the year, will take place on the night before the game, Wednesday, November 21 at 7:00 p.m. in the Stepan Center.

This rally for the undefeated and national championship-bound Irish will have two special features. Since the Air Force game is this year's last home game, the rally will salute all the seniors who will be making their last home appearance for the Blue and Gold. The rally will also pay special tribute to the recently deceased legendary coach Frank Leahy. Coach Leahy's widow, his family and several of the Notre Dame greats who played under Coach Leahy will be special guests at the rally.

Regrettably, a number of students will have already left for Thanksgiving, but for those who will be staying for the game, don't miss this rally for the undefeated Irish. Come out to salute the seniors and tribute Coach Leahy. That's Wednesday night at 7:00 p.m. at Stepan Center.

Streaking Badgers return to ND

by John Fineran

The long years of waiting for Irish football fans ended splendidly last October 27 as Notre Dame beat arch-nemesis, Southern Cal., 23-14. The Trojans had been the defending national champions of 1972.

Tonight and tomorrow evening, the Irish hockey team will meet another defending national champion, the University of Wisconsin. It has been a long eight months for lefty Smith's ices since that disappointing loss to the Badgers, 4-3, in the final WCHA playoff game.

"The team is looking forward to playing Wisconsin, and so am I," Smith said. "Wisconsin is coming in number-one, and they'll remain that way until they're beaten."

"It will be a challenge for us to rebound against them after losing twice decisively at Michigan State."

The Irish did lose decisively

8-5 Friday and 9-5 last Saturday night. And not only did the Irish lose decisively on the ice, they lost All-American defenseman Bill Nyrop, too.

Nyrop, a senior from Edina, Minn., will sit out tonight's contest (7:30 p.m.) because of a game misconduct. Under WCHA rules, a player given a game misconduct must sit out his team's next game.

Nyrop's problem last Saturday night was arguing too strenuously about a minor penalty for holding.

There is however, some good news from the North Dome of the ACC. Eddie Bumbacco, the WCHA's leading scorer and a consensus All-American choice last year, was cleared of any wrongdoing in his spearing penalty on Saturday night at State. He will take his normal shift tonight at left wing.

Right wing Ray DeLorenzi, who leads the Irish in scoring so far this season with three goals and six assists, will also appear tonight against the Badgers. Last Saturday night, the "Hawk" sustained a shoulder injury which first appeared to be a shoulder separation. However, after medical consultation, it was found that DeLorenzi suffered only minor nerve damage.

Finally, Ian Williams, a tri-captain and the league's second leading scorer, will be making his 1973-74 debut tonight at right wing against the Badgers. Williams had been sitting out a four-game league suspension for an incident following last year's disappointing final loss to the Badgers.

"Ian's return will certainly help us offensively," Smith beamed. "He complements Bumbacco very well."

Still, the availability of these three forwards will mean nothing if the Irish continue their play of last weekend. Because of these lackluster performances, Smith has made some changes in his lineup.

Freshman Brian Walsh, who had tallied four goals and an assist as Williams' replacement, will move to center between Williams and Bumbacco. The man he is replacing, Pat Conroy, will move to center on the second line between DeLorenzi and senior left wing Larry Israelson. Israelson has been a pleasant surprise this season, picking up where he left off last year, by scoring four goals and three assists in the first four contests.

Ric Schafer, the senior tri-captain who had been between DeLorenzi and Israelson, displaced freshman Alex Pirus at center of the third line. Pirus, instead, will move to right wing on the line, while another newcomer, Clark Hamilton, will remain on the left.

The fourth line remains the same, senior Mike Tardani centering for a pair of sophomores, Tim Byers (right wing) and Jim Augustine.

Wisconsin Badgers thwarted Ian Williams (5) and Eddie Bumbacco (15) in last year's WCHA finals. This weekend the pair will attempt to turn the tables on their Big Red tormentors.

Nyrop's loss to the Irish blueline also necessitated a shifting in the Notre Dame defense. Senior Tri-captain Steve Curry will team up with freshman Jack Brownschilde on the first unit, while Les Larson and Pat Novitzki will man the second unit. Paul Clarke, who was on the third line last weekend, will be the fifth man on Friday night, and when Nyrop returns Saturday, Paul will be teamed with him.

The only player not changing his position will be senior Mark Kronholm at goalie. Kronholm played an instrumental part in last year's miraculous finish (the Irish won 15 of the last 18 games in the WCHA.) He will be backed up Friday night by senior Don Smith and on Saturday evening by Dave Caron, a promising freshman.

Both games are sellouts (WSND will carry the games on campus, while WNDU (1490) will carry the games in the South Bend area.) "The sellouts both nights should give us a psychological lift," Smith concluded.

For a look at the defending national champion Badgers, please turn to the column on page 19.

Possibility of perfection faces Parseghian again

by Vic Dorr
Sports Editor

If, during the course of a ten-year career, one of the nation's best-known college football coaches compiled a record of 82 wins, 15 losses, and four ties, won one national championship and finished second twice, appeared in three post-season bowl games in four years and numbered opponents such as Texas, Southern Cal, LSU, and Missouri among his victims, than that coach's career might be called a successful one, right?

And that same college coach, having achieved all those things during his career, might be said to have very few goals left to accomplish, right?

Wrong. Particularly if the coach happens to be Notre Dame's Ara Parseghian.

The veteran Irish mentor, who treats every game of every season as a personal challenge, always has the national championship as his long-range goal. But this year another goal and another challenge are a bit more immediate.

For Parseghian's '73 Irish team is two-and maybe-three games away from presenting the ND coach with the one prize his coaching career has never before achieved: an undefeated, untied season.

The '73 Irish are currently 8-0 and ranked fifth nationally, and with only two games yet to be played—a Thanksgiving Day home appearance against Air Force, and a December 1 road finale against the Miami Hurricanes—they are indeed close to giving Parseghian the perfect campaign he has so long sought.

But the Irish coach, always cautious, isn't taking anything for granted. Even with eight-and-oh and two-to-go.

"An undefeated season is one of our biggest objectives, of course," he said. "But don't forget, we've been this close before—three times in the last ten years, in fact. Three times we've taken an unbeaten team into the last two games of the season, and look what has happened to us each time."

"In 1964, we played Southern Cal out on the coast in our last game, and lost our unbeaten season in the last two minutes. It was the same thing in 1970. We went out there 9-0 and came back with a loss on our record. In '66 we tied our ninth game of the season—that game with Michigan State."

"So we've been close to the goal before, but different quirks have always kept us from our final objective."

But these quirks usually, have come in the form of USC's Trojans or MSU's Spartans. This year the only remaining obstacles are Air Force and Miami.

"No," admitted Ara, "we don't have to worry about Southern Cal out there, but we do have to play Miami down there. And you know what Miami has done in the Orange Bowl this year. They beat Texas, and they very nearly beat Oklahoma. And before Miami we've got to worry about Air Force. They're a dangerous team, too. They'll be trying to make their own season at our expense, and we never know what's going to happen when we play them."

Parseghian's Irish, however, don't have to worry about playing anyone this weekend. They're currently in the middle of a 12-day preparation period for the Thanksgiving battle with the Academy's Falcons, and the ND coach, for one, was glad to see the scheduling break arrive.

"I welcome it," he said, "and I welcome it most of all because it will give us a chance to recover from some of our injuries. We got pretty banged up in the USC game (center Joe Alvarado and fullback Russ Kornman were both lost for several weeks), and last week Clements and (offensive tackle Steve) Neece both took some lumps. It was just getting to be one thing after another."

"So we're glad to have this break," he repeated.

Frank Pomarico

Captain's Corner

The last line

Notre Dame 31, Pitt 10. Boy I'm glad that one's over. Pitt was really a tough team. I'd say they were as good as any team we've faced this year. As for Tony Dorsett I would go as far as to say he is the best back we've played against this year. Well, looking forward to the Thanksgiving Day game with Air Force, it should be a real tough battle. We always seem to have a rough time against them. In 1969 the score was 13-6, and last year the final was 21-7, so we've never really blown them off the field. This year, however, we'll try to change things a little bit.

I'd like to mention something about our team's last line of defense—the defensive backs. And they are Reggie Barnett, Tim Rudnick, Luther Bradley, and team captain Mike Townsend.

The defensive backfield has the job of covering opposing receivers. However, they are also called at times to catch a breakaway runner or tackle a big fullback cracking through the line. Notre Dame in the past has had great defensive backs such as Clarence Ellis, Tom Schoen, and Tony Carey.

The tradition has been continued this year with Mike Townsend who will probably make every All-American team possible. On the field Mike flows with such grace you'd think he was supernaturally endowed. Of the field Mike is a fun-loving guy. He has a good sense of humor, with a good outlook for the future. Mike also has a very special talent for being able to communicate with all kinds of people. He is truly a rare person, and should be very successful in whatever he decides to do.

Tim Rudnick is also a senior, and has started the last two years. Tim is one of the quickest guys on the team, and has a very competitive attitude. After practice Tim likes to lead a colorful life. He always seems to be on top of the action no matter how big or small it may be.

Junior Reggie Barnett put in a fine performance last year, and is even better this season. On the field Reggie intimidates his opponents verbally as well as physically. Off the field Reggie is pretty much wrapped up in his studies, but he also likes a bit of the good life. He is basically a quiet person with a good head on his shoulders. Another plus about Reggie is that he'll be around for another exciting year.

Last but not least is Luther Bradley. Luther is called the "old man" because he has patches of premature grey on the top of his head. The only freshman in the secondary, Luther has had a tremendous year so far coming up with five interceptions. Since he also is a quiet person, not many people have gotten to know him very well. But one can see he's a fine person with a pleasant personality. He has a great future ahead of him, and could become one of the greatest defensive backs that has ever played here at Notre Dame.

Getting back to Air Force, it is the ninth step toward our impossible dream. I tell you Notre Dame just can't be denied. Go Irish, beat Air Force.
