Brosh discusses Jerusalem furor

By MARY AGNES CAREY

Staff Reporter

The practicality of Arabs and Jews living peacefully together in Jerusalem was the message of Ambassador Zvi Brosh, special advisor to the mayor of Jerusalem, to a large crowd in Haggar Hall last night.

"This belief is based on mutual and common progress," Brosh said, "it is not a utopian belief. We see the administration of Jerusalem as something to experiment with and adjust to the needs and necessities of all," he said.

Brosh, explaining "I'm here on a very special mission," is part of the Jerusalem Committee which meets today and tomorrow with University President Fr. Theodore Hesburgh. Brosh said the group will "convene and look at what we're doing — take stock of the tremendous work that's been done in Jerusalem — peek into the looking glass and see what lies ahead."

Brosh said, "a firm hand and a clear-cut mandate to get us back on the road economically" is the purpose of the upcoming June elections in Israel, and he added any economic recovery program must be "realistic and effective. At best, the economy will stay put."

The Ambassador noted, however, that Jerusalem "must preserve its unity as a city and its status as the sovereign capital of Israel," an overall purpose "that is shared by everyone."

Despite a temporary stalemate in settling economic and political issues with Egypt, Brosh views Jerusalem as "one bright light." According to Brosh, Jerusalem will "forge ahead" to raise the standard of living of the city's Arab inhabitants "to what Jewish inhabitants have enjoyed for 30 years," as well as the city's efforts to "renovate, renew, and rejuvenate" itself to become "a more beautiful city to live in and visit," he said.

Brosh noted Jerusalem's improvements in water distribution, drainage systems, and increased preservation and rebuilding of historic sights of all religions as some of the city's recent measures to improve life for Arab inhabitants. Brosh added that making "a city that is capable of a flow of 600,000 Christians coming to Jerusalem each year to worship at their holy places" as "the task we enjoy most."

Maintaining the "tranquillity of day-to-day life," the ambassador explained, requires "new solutions to different problems every day," and he assured the Arab residents of Jerusalem "that this is not a passing phase." Brosh noted the extension of free education through high school for both Jewish and Arab children, with all schools governed by the Jordanian cur-

St. Edwards' construction to finish in August

By TIM VERCELLOTTI

Senior Staff Reporter

With the help of Mother Nature the reconstruction of St. Edward's Hall is on schedule, according to Fr. Michael Heppen of the Housing office. Heppen foresees an August completion date.

"I would anticipate moving into the main building in August," Heppen said. He was hopeful that the new four-floor annex would also be ready at that time, but was unable to make a statement pending confirmation on that date from the builders.

Donald Dedrick, director of the University's Physical Plant, designated August 1 as the tentative date of completion for both buildings.

Regarding room assignments for the 1981-82 year, Heppen stated that residents of St. Ed's "will be eligible for room picks according to the rules established by Fr. Mario Pedi, rector of the hall."

According to Pedi, the assignments will be conducted as in past years, with preference going to seniors. The picks in each class will be determined by an in-hall lottery.

Should the unforeseen occur, and the annex is not completed by the beginning of the fall term, students who have chosen rooms in the annex will be housed elsewhere until the work is completed. "I will have something for them," Heppen stated.

Among the features of the resurrected dorm will be an increased amount of social space, an elevator, and room for 50 additional students, raising St. Ed's population to 187. Due to graduating seniors and the small number of residents from this year's freshmen class, only one-third of the hall will consist of upperclassmen.

When construction is completed, St. Ed's will feature singles, doubles, triples, and quads. The safety features of the dorm include a sprinkler system, and smoke detectors. A "Second Empire French Mansard" roof will top the building. The exterior of the annex will consist of "Notre Dame" brick, similar to that used in building Lewis Hall and the Infirmary. "Its going to be an attractive dorm," Heppen commented.

According to Dedrick, workers are presently applying a coat of brown plaster to the interior of the first floor. Old wiring and plumbing have been replaced and the sprinkler system has been installed. The second, third, and fourth floors are in various stages of the same operation. Cinderblocks for the annex are being laid and Dedrick anticipates that this stage of construction will take approximately four weeks.

Heppen estimated the total cost of reconstructing St. Ed's to be around $1.5 million, much of which will come from insurance payments.

Drugs: Feds find stash, no cash

Narcotic baron Nicky Barnes went to prison but yielded a mere pittance of his heroin fortune to the government. The wealth of the dissolved Black Tuna gang remained virtually intact. Yet in those cases and scores of others, the government had the legal right to claim wealth accumulated in the lucrative drug smuggling market.

The government has had that authority for more than 10 years but has used it rarely and with modest success. Justice Department officials and congressional critics offer several reasons for the failure:

Narcotics agents, more attuned to the buy-and-bust approach, have been taught little about the financial investigations necessary to trace and claim cash, property and other assets acquired with drug money.

Prosecutors, more intent upon winning criminal convictions of drug traffickers, have neglected the necessary procedural steps to seize assets.

Judges, in the interest of protecting defendants' rights, have refused to freeze assets the government has attempted to seize.

Smugglers, ever more sophisticated in international finance, have developed ingenious methods of spiriting their fortunes beyond the reach of U.S. authorities.

Justice Department and Drug Enforcement Administration officials say they are fixing some of the flaws in the seizure operation, but congressional critics remain skeptical. They expect to present the Reagan administration with recommendations for strengthening enforcement of the seizure laws.

The General Accounting Office, the congressional watchdog agency, is due to complete a report this month detailing those recommendations. Among the proposals will be a call for the DEA to recruit agents with training and experience in financial investigations.

WEDNESDAY FOCUS

The Black Tuna case, cited by Justice and the DEA as one of their biggest and best narcotics investigations, illustrates the difficulties of seizing assets.

The sensational Florida trial last year ended with convictions and long prison sentences for Robert Meinster and Robert William Platshorn, described by the government as ringleaders of an international marijuana smuggling operation which used the code name Black Tuna.

Prosecutors said the gang amugged $300 million worth of marijuana into the U.S. in one 16-month period and operated for five years.

The government seized only $132,000 in Barnes' car at the time of his arrest

A holy "jihad"

Summit calls for war

TAIF, Saudi Arabia (AP) — The 37-nation Islamic summit displayed unity on the emotional issue of Jerusalem yesterday and rallied behind new calls for a "jihad" or "holy war" to wrest the Holy City from Israeli control.

Both Morocco's moderate King Hassan and PLO guerrilla chief Yasser Arafat urged united action to regain Arab sovereignty over Jerusalem.

After the speeches, Arafat — dressed in a battle jacket and checked headress — walked arm and arm with the North African monarch from the glittering $300 million conference hall.

However as the summit neared its end, differences remained over the handling of such divisive issues as the Iran-Iraq war and a resolution to condemn Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Iran and Libya have boycotted the summit and Egypt and Afghanistan have been suspended from the 42-nation Islamic Conference.

In his speech, Hassan was careful to define "jihad" as a "moral and material struggle" rather than a military campaign against the Jewish state.

Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Fahd sounded a call, which has broad emotional appeal to the world's 800 million Moslems, last July after Israel's Parliament declared the predominately Arab sector of Jerusalem part of its unified and "eternal capital."

The eastern sector of Jerusalem, captured by Israel from Jordan in the 1967 Mideast War, is the site of Islam's third holiest shrine, the Al Aksa Mosque.

The threat of an Arab oil cut off and U.N. condemnation of the Israeli action caused 13 South American and European countries to move their embassies from Jerusalem to Tel Aviv.

The Moroccan monarch headed a committee that drafted the Islamic summit's anti-Israel strategy and a "Jerusalem document" is expected to be unveiled today in the final session of the four-day summit.

In his speech, Hasan said Islamic leaders should have resorted to "jihad" the "day Israel annexed Jerusalem.

The Justice Department has decided to ask various U.S. courts for a 30-day delay of any action on claims against Iranian assets while the Reagan administration studies the agreements that led to the hostages' release. Department spokesman Mark T. Sheehan said yesterday the government plans to file statements of interest with district courts which have before them more than 300 outstanding claims by U.S. banks or companies against the assets, which had been frozen. Under executive orders signed by former President Carter, those cases would be prohibited from going to trial and the claims referred to an international settlement commission. The Reagan administration has said that it intends to honor the agreements that are consistent with U.S. international law. The 30-day delay is designed to allow the administration time to study details of the agreements. — AP

Legislation that would remove 2 million people from the food stamp program, for a savings of $495 million in 1982, was introduced yesterday by Sen. William Proxmire. "Clearly the food stamp program is out of control," said Proxmire, D/Wis., a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee. "Steps must be taken — and taken now — to put some restraint and rationality into this runaway program." Proxmire's bill would restrict the number of people eligible to participate in the program by reducing the amount of money the government disregards in computing an applicant's income. — AP

President Reagan is likely to lift the remaining controls on oil prices today, a White House official said yesterday. The action could raise gasoline prices as much as 12 cents a gallon while adding $7 billion to the federal treasury through increased tax revenues collected from the oil companies. The White House had planned to announce the action yesterday, according to a White House source who asked not to be identified, but held off at the last minute because most of the day was devoted to the arrival of the hostages freed from Iran. About 25 percent of all domestic crude oil and all gasoline and propane are under the price controls imposed nine years ago. Their removal began in June 1979 after then President Jimmy Carter announced a new program in April 1979 that would have lifted all controls by Sept. 30, 1981. The controls had been imposed by President Richard M. Nixon as part of his wage and price control program and were continued through several periods of oil shortages. — AP

A power struggle between Iran's clergy-dominated hardliners and President Bani-Sadr's secular moderates escalated yesterday, with the president charging that opponents had twice plotted to assassinate him in the past two months. The hardliners, rallying behind Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai, claimed Bani-Sadr's supporters attacked and ransacked their Islamic Republican Party's headquarters in the northeastern city of Mashhad, chanting "close the nest of spies." Islamic revolutionaries used "spy nest" to signify the U.S. Embassy in Tehran during the 444-day hostage ordeal that also became a focal point in Bani-Sadr's struggle with the clergy. Bani-Sadr recently stepped up his criticism of the handling of the hostage crisis, claiming the agreement with the United States negotiated by Rajai and his hardline associates will return to Iran only a portion of the $11 billion in funds frozen after the hostages were seized on Nov. 4, 1979. — AP

In celebration of freedom, the 52 hostages delivered from Iranian bondage took the salute of their countrymen yesterday. President Reagan coupled his homecoming tribute with a vow of "swift and effective retribution" should terrorists ever again seize American citizens. From a platform draped with an American flag for each of the former hostages, Reagan said the world must understand that "there are limits to our patience." Rejoicing in the return of the hostages, freed just as he took office a week ago, Reagan said there were no words better than the simplest to express the feelings of the nation: "Welcome home." "Our flight to freedom is now complete," replied Bruce Laingen, deputy chief of the mission in Tehran when the hostages were taken. "Mr. President, I give you ... 53 Americans who will always have a love affair with this country and who join you in a prayer of thanksgiving for the way in which this crisis has strengthened the spirit and resilience and strength that is the mark of a truly free country." — AP

Plan? What plan?

Throughout the past two decades, the subject of integration has caused much consternation in American society. This issue, which includes abolishing racial segregation in public schools, has recently come into the limelight with the over-publicized cases in Boston and Louisiana. "Busing," the only option, thus far, that has made a successful stab at desegregation has garnered a nasty reputation.

Invariably, the affected communities will split. Feelings and attitudes that were thought to be nonexistent will suddenly surface and the issue develops not into individuals discussing a problem but one of a white race pitted against a minority race.

Desegregation finally surfaced in the classic case of Brown vs. the Board of Education of Topeka, Kan. in 1954, in which the Supreme Court ruled that "separate institutions were inherently unequal." Although a milestone in the advancement of human rights, the case failed to generate a nation-wide interest in civil rights. It was not until ten years later when Lyndon Johnson signed the long-awaited Civil Rights Act of 1964 that the issue of desegregation captured the attention and dismay of the American people.

One year ago South Bend was slapped with an ultimatum from the Department of Justice. It had to desegregate its school system by the fall of 1981 or face the wrath of the federal government. This decree did not initially lead to friction as one would expect, but, rather, it pulled the community together. Numerous committees were set up to explore all the facets of a desegregation plan. Morale was high. Enthusiasm overflowed. People banded together with a common goal in sight. Unfortunately, this pinnacle of collective peace and cooperativeness soon toppled into a fragmented mass of public frustration, bitterness and despair.

The actions that precipitated the downfall of community solidarity were twofold: (1) The school board received only a very small portion of a federal grant which resulted in a cutback of several committees and (2) the Department of Justice forbade the South Bend School Corporation to release any information on the desegregation plans to the public prior to the it's approval of the plan the public. The bottom line — only school board members were allowed to review the options made so far. Committee members who had worked closely on the plans felt cheated and angered by the board's decision to exclude them from any decision-making process.

This act of secrecy shot to pieces any chance for a peaceful acceptance of desegregation. Mud-slinging rumors circulated. South Bend School Superintendent James Scamman lost his credibility as a public administrator. And the city now faced the growth of various factions pushing for their own interests — groups that once worked in unison.

Inside Wednesday

The turning point occurred this past December when one board member, in the name of fairness, leaked to the newspapers what he believed to be the final outline for desegregating the school system. Later, when questioned about this disclosure, Scamman simply said that it was only one of four possible options. Needless to say, this evasive answer only added fuel to the already out-of-control fire.

It is important to realize that James Scamman was earnestly working for the good of the community. He failed, though, to understand the complexities of human nature and that too much change at one time will inevitably result in a social paranoia. People do not like to feel cornered; and in this particular case, the parents of South Bend school children felt threatened by Scamman's vision for the future. Not only did Scamman want to successfully desegregate the schools, but he desired to change the overall structure of the South Bend education system as well. The modification of the structure would center around three changes: alternative schools (open classrooms, diversity of class selections, etc.), an upheaval of the "grade separation" structure (that is, grades K-7 would be changed to K-5 and so on), and finally because of declining enrollment some of the schools would have to be permanently closed. Parents simply became scared.

The school board wanted the final vote on the plan to be wrapped up by the fall of '81, yet things looked quite bleak for any kind of settlement. They had set Jan. 26 as the final day to hear public opinion on the desegregation options, however, this date was delayed due to the increasing wide-spread plea of "No Public Input." The final day has been rescheduled for Feb. 26, which the school board feels is ample time for the public to voice their opinions. Whether this month delay will produce any solid commitments to a desegregation plan remains to be seen and heard. What it boils down to is whether South Bend can get back on its feet again.

St. Catherine's Medal

SMC honors achievement

By LINDA WEEKS
News Staff

Each year, Saint Mary's College awards the St. Catherine's Medal to an outstanding sophomore or junior student to recognize unusual undergraduate achievement and to give encouragement and incentive during the middle years of undergraduate study.

This award is sponsored by Kappa Gamma Pi, the National Catholic Honor Society with which Saint Mary's is affiliated.

Each January, the Committee on Academic Standards invites members of the Saint Mary's community to nominate those students who best exemplify the high ideals of Catholic womanhood. The committee gathers information on the candidates and invites each girl to reply to her nomination. According to Mrs. Marcy, Academic Affairs Director, it is often difficult to get the candidates to reply because "they usually don't like to toot their own horn." The committee carefully reviews each candidate and selects a winner on the basis of academic achievement and service to church, college, and civil community.

The committee announces its decision in the early spring, and the winner receives the St. Catherine's Medal at the Honors Awards Convocation at the end of the year.

Patricia Burke, now a senior, received the 1980 St. Catherine's Medal for her outstanding academic achievements and her involvement in several charitable organizations. Patricia, a residence advisor in Regina Hall, is involved in CILA, helps students prepare for the Ireland Program, and has been involved in the Urban Plunge program. Women like Patricia illustrate the ideals and values signified in the St. Catherine's Medal.

Iran: is it really over?

Anthony Walton

It is hard to believe that the hostage crisis is actually over. It went on for so long that it seemed to become like another fact of life, especially with the periodic media overkills with sudsdings into 'normalcy' as the drudgery wore on.

The numbering of the days in the newspapers became some sort of strange calendar without any concrete meaning, and the television news now seems somehow lacking without the daily punctuations: "and as day so-and-so of the hostage crisis comes to a close, there is no breakthrough in sight."

It goes without saying that we are all tremendously relieved that it is finally over. But how do we look back upon this unique incident in U.S. history? There is no single analysis or interpretation that can be assigned to tie it all up neatly and file it away. In fact, even in resolution, I don't find the Iranian experience answering any questions, but rather creating batches of new ones which in turn generate more.

The first and most obvious question is whether or not the crisis was handled correctly by the Carter administration. Recalling the first few weeks of the seizure, I remember many demonstrations and calls for retribution, but most of this calmed as the weeks wore on, and as the weeks turned into months, most people seemed to forget the issue, or at least it lost its emotional content. The nation returned to business as usual.

In retrospect, I think Carter's gradual defusing of the situation was the best way to handle it for one reason: it saved at least 52 lives, likely hundreds more, potentially thousands. If one has any regard at all for human life, this has to be the final conclusion. It is easy to speak of "national interest" and "geopolitical considerations," but the fact is that only 8 men died as a result of the whole incident, and this is to Carter's credit. He preserved the peace at a very touchy time. An incident much less significant than this one ignited World War I. Carter's handling of the situation is to be saluted.

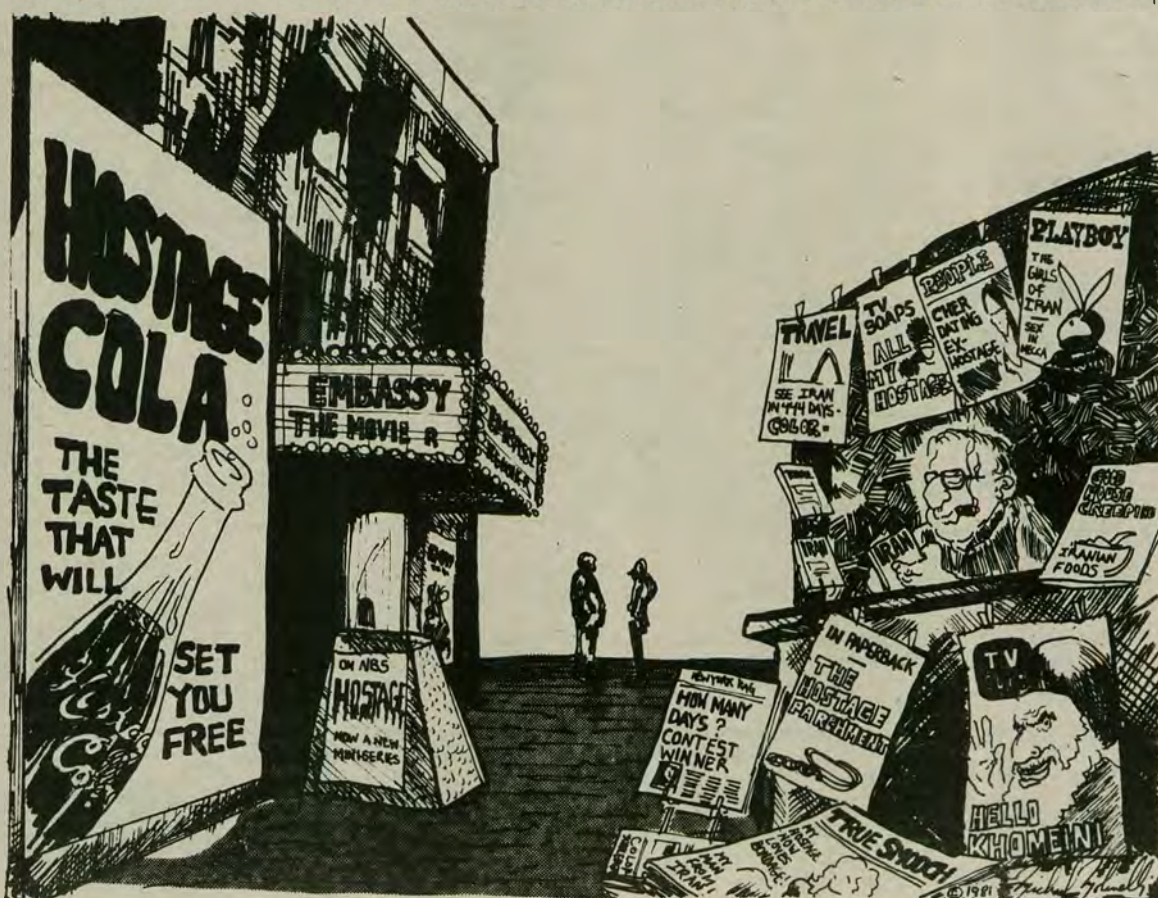

It is also necessary, however, to look at what might have happened had the crisis been handled differently. One possible solution might have been to hand down a deadline to the Iranians, which if not complied with would have resulted in the bombing of a city or strategic facility. This policy would have probably resulted in the hostages being killed, and then the U.S. would have been left with only a revenge alternative and it would not have done any good to kill a lot of innocent Iranians. So again, I think that Carter's handling of the situation was prudent. (Besides this, the failure of the rescue mission illustrated the problems involved with any quick strike military retaliation in this specific instance.)

Another consideration is the shrewd manipulation of many facets of the situation, especially the media, by the Iranian government. They probably would not have been a match on a battlefield, but they were a formidable psychological foe.

For example, consider the Christmas videotapes of the hostages. Just as the pressure was building for another military excursion, the Iranians injected a factor of humanity into the situation. Until then, the media had been used to intimidate and coerce the U.S.; now the captors were using it to seduce and disarm the American public. We saw the hostages as human beings instead of 52 reasons to nuke Iran, and it became hard to speak of any kind of life-endangering action because we had come to know the hostages as people, and they assumed an almost neighborly role.

This was a master stroke by the Iranians, and at the risk of sounding like a Commie baiter, I wonder if the KGB was in on it, because it was classic use of television psychology and propaganda.

I hope the U.S. learned a few things from the crisis, most prominently that we can't trust our "friends." No country really came to our aid, and what token sanctions that were proffered came after coercion. Every one of the traditional "allies" feared offending either the Arabs or the Iranians.

"AREN'T YOU GLAD THIS HOSTAGE THING IS OVERWITH?"

At present, this sheds a foreboding light upon the word "alliance." If nations allow the oil question to dictate foreign policy there will be a new era of "every nation for itself" that will undermine any attempt at unified Western action. Perhaps this should be the strongest lesson of the crisis, as it was taught before to no avail during the Arab Oil Embargo. The industrial West has to free itself from Middle East oil dependence or else. What will it take to drive this fact home?

Another lesson that should not be lost in the rhetoric of the crisis and its solution is in how to avoid a repeat in the future. The U.S. cannot afford to overlook the kinds of problems that caused the crisis. The best prevention would be to develop better intelligence operations in order to be more aware of changing political climes in unsettling countries. (The CIA, however, should never again be allowed to meddle in the affairs of another country.)

The U.S. cannot be held or considered responsible for unpopular rulers like the shah. There is potential for a rerun in several countries. What would happen if leftist (or rightist) guerillas in El Salvador seized the embassy there in order to bring down the government? It would be more prudent to let developments in countries take their own course rather than courting possible resentment by supporting unpopular regimes.

Also, this is more desirable than relying upon military brutishness to insure security. In the Iranian instance strong military action would not have accomplished much more than to solidify Arab and Iranian resistance, and most likely it would have brought the Soviets into the equation. They would have liked nothing better than to have an excuse to send some advisers into Iran. Military might is no longer a panacea. (This raises another interesting question as to what good are nuclear weapons when military needs are more likely to require quick "hot-soit" flexibility?)

All in all, I'm very glad that, if this had to happen, it happened with Carter in control rather than Reagan. If Reagan had been president then, a good number of us would probably be in Teheran cradling M-16s.

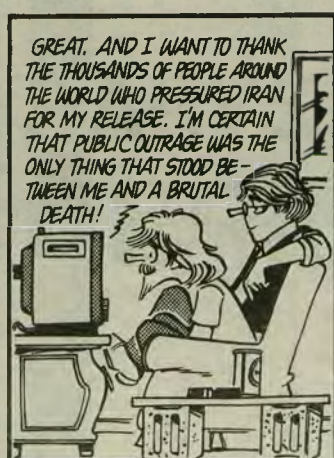

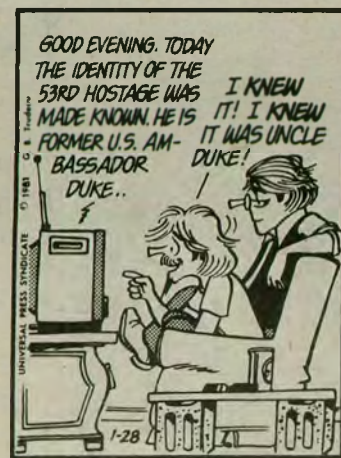

Something else occurred to me while taking in all the hoopla surrounding the return of the hostages: I wish people would leave them alone and not try to make heroes out of them. As psychologist Herbert Gold said, they are not heroes, they are victims. I think they need their privacy to ease their return to as normal a life as possible, and they don't need People, National Enquirer, or even Time for that matter, prying into their lives. But, these days the country needs something to cheer about.

I think, however, that if there were any heroes involved, they were the eight men who died in the rescue mission, and one very maligned president, Jimmy Carter.

little more depth at the guard position since Deb Hensley has been coming around, but that's it."

Dallessio feels that the guard spot is indeed a crucial one, and he points to Notre Dame's senior captain, Maggie Lally, as the key to Irish success.

"I think Shari (Matvey) is an excellent player, and they have some good freshmen, but Maggie is the one who has to do it in the clutch," he says. "She is their leader on and off the floor and the key to the team."

Going up against the 5-0 Lally will be Saint Mary Maureen O'Brien.

riculum (allowing more job opportunities), as well as the introduction of adult education as important measures taken to benefit Arab residents.

Brosh stated "hardly any terrorism" existed in the city, and said the "threat of terrorism hangs more over the Arab population than the Jewish population." The ambassador noted that although no Arab has been a member of the Jerusalem city council due to fears of "exposing a threat to the city's tranquillity," Arab residents still discuss issues and concerns with city leaders through various committees. "The Arabs are not exposed to the glare of the cameras," he said.

According to Brosh, Jerusalem can be viewed as "a pattern that proves co-existence between Jews and Arabs is not only possible but beneficial for both. Together we can find a way," he said, "for Jerusalem to remain the united capital of Israel, and give Arabs, in their inhabitation as a minority, every possible control over their own lives."

Brosh responded to audience questions concerning several issues. In an inquiry about the future population of Jerusalem, Brosh explained that the city's population by the year 2000 will not exceed 650,000 (the current population is 400,000) in order to maintain Jerusalem as a city one may "drive through." Noting the difficulty of population control, Brosh admitted that Jerusalem has "urban problems like any other city."

Answering a question about Jerusalem's plans for its Arab residents, Brosh repeated the importance of allowing the Arabs to run their lives as independently as possible.

Concerning the lack of Arab residents in city government, the ambassador noted the Arab's fear of "very acute terrorism" as the major reason. Brosh, commenting on the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), stated the PLO endorses both terrorism and "the elimination of Israel."

Today's opening session of the Jerusalem Committee begins at 4 p.m. in the Center for Continuing Education and is open to the public.

Rucker delights

Irish bleed Big Red, 80-57

By GARY GRASSEY
Associate Sports Editor

As freshman student-body-favorite Cecil Rucker's off-balance 19-foot jumper fell through the net with 5:02 left to play, the Notre Dame basketball team erupted with a season's supply of high-fives, and Digger Phelps, in a rare display of courtside delight, just sat back and smiled.

The Notre Dame coach and his squad were as happy as last night's jubilant sellout crowd, as the ninth-ranked Fighting Irish overcame some first half sleep-walking to storm past Ivy League also-ran Cornell 80-57. The win advanced Notre Dame's record to 13-3 and upped the Irish winning streak to five.

"For the first three or four minutes we were still in the Maryland game," said Phelps, recalling Notre Dame's nationally televised three-point victory over the Terrapins Saturday afternoon in College Park, Md. "By the second half, we decided to be patient, work the ball inside and play good defense. The most important thing right now, though, is getting some rest — we're mentally tired."

Overmatched Cornell, now 4-10, actually stayed with the Irish for about six minutes as 6-9 center Alex Reynolds, game-high scorer with 21 points, hit a turnaround jumper in the lane to bring the Big Red within 14-12.

But the Irish got four quick points from freshman Joe Kleine to pull ahead 24-18 and, following two Reynolds free throws, received seven straight points from the back-court tandem of Tracy Jackson and John Paxson — one coming on a technical free throw by Paxson after Reynolds grabbed the rim on a missed dunk attempt — to lead 31-20.

Cornell capitalized on an abundance of Irish fouls, including three each by starting center Tim Andree and Kleine, and left the court at intermission down 41-32. Reynolds was 7-of-9 at the charity stripe in the half.

But Big Red coach Tom Miller wasn't surprised by what happened next.

"They just stuck it to us," said the former assistant to Bobby Knight at Indiana. "We're not very talented and they (Notre Dame) are a helluva ball team. It's a credit to Digger and his team coming off a game with Maryland to comeback and play a team like us consistently and intelligently."

Notre Dame got the balanced scoring it's been enjoying all year from Paxson (team high-point man with 15), Jackson, Kelly Tripucka, and Orlando Woolridge as the Irish moved to a 66-42 bulge midway through the final 20 minutes before Phelps began emptying the bench for showtime.

By the time Woolridge treated the audience to a customary slam dunk and Jackson fed Tripucka behind his back for a gimme deuce, the cat-calls began for Rucker.

The 6-8 Washington, D.C. native, whose physique and charisma reminds Irish followers of Woolridge's infancy stage three seasons ago, wasted no time canning one long-range jumper and hitting a shorter encore bucket from the foul line.

In addition to getting his wish to "play some people", Phelps was especially grateful for the contributions of Andree and Kleine, who despite eight fouls between them, produced 12 points and eight rebounds from the center position.

"Timmy's getting confidence every game," said Digger. "We've told Tim if he stays in the three-second lane he can do things offensively. Reynolds was the type of player Tim and Joe needed to go up against to get ready for things coming up."

Jackson finished the evening with 14 points. Tripucka and Woolridge added 13 and 11 respectively. Reynolds was Cornell's lone double-figure scorer.

HOOP-LORE — Digger and the team will catch up on some much needed rest by taking today off...the Irish coach is leery of Saturday's South Carolina clash...the Gamecocks have had a mediocre season but did upset Marquette in Milwaukee two weeks ago...senior swingman Gil Salinas will not undergo knee surgery despite strained ligaments and torn cartilage, however the 6-11 veteran will require a knee brace and a period of rehabilitation that may stretch to the end of the regular season...Notre Dame has now won ten straight at home.

Belles seek first victory

By BETH HUFFMAN
Sports Editor

Saint Mary's will play host this evening to Notre Dame's women's basketball team in the Angela Athletic Facility at 7:30 p.m. The Irish hold a 8-0 record in the home-and-home series, including a 71-52 romp Dec. 8 in the ACC.

"I think they have an edge playing at home," says Mary DiStanislao, who is in her first year at the Irish helm. "They'll be psyched up."

But, the Belles' third-year coach,

Jerry Dallessio, does not see the home court as an advantage.

"Home court advantage for us really doesn't mean too much because half the students in the stands will be rooting for Notre Dame," says Dallessio, whose team is 3-2 in the AAF.

DiStanislao, whose squad is 6-8, also cites the "half-moon backboards" as posing a possible "perceptual problem" for her squad. But, again, Dallessio does not feel the backboard situation will had to his team's advantage.

"Most of the Notre Dame shooters, as far as I can see, aren't backboard shooters — most girls aren't backboard shooters," says Dallessio, who also serves as the athletic director at Saint Mary's.

Besides, most of the Notre Dame girls have played in our gym before."

With the mental game points aside, the two squads match up fairly even.

"I don't see where we have an edge," says DiStanislao. "We have a HOME SWEET HOME — The Irish basketball team has enjoyed remarkable success on its home floor in recent years. Heading into last night's matchup with Cornell, the Irish roundballers had won nine straight games in the friendly confines of the ACC dating back to last year's thriller against DePaul.

Since the building's dedication in late 1968, Notre Dame teams have won over 85 percent of games they have played in the ACC (156-27 record). Their performance over the last eight seasons has been even more remarkable, since the Irish had lost only nine of their last 114 home games going into last night's contest.

Digger's squads suffered an uncharacteristic two home losses to North Carolina State and Marquette last year after having dropped only one home game per season for the three previous campaigns.

The ACC hardwood should thus be a welcome sight for the Irish, who play nine of their remaining twelve regular season contests at home.

BOOK LAG — Notre Dame obviously had academics in mind when it plotted this basketball season. With a weekend trip to North Carolina State and two jaunts to Chicago (Virginia and DePaul) the only road trips left on the regular season slate, the Irish basketball players will have only missed three days of class this semester when tournament time rolls around. Having missed the first class day returning from San Francisco and last Friday due to traveling to Maryland, the basketballers face only one more Friday off prior to the North Carolina State contest.

One really wonders how the athletes at many universities manage to study at all because of extensive road schedules. By taking advantage of the month layoff between semesters for travel, Notre Dame has managed to reconcile both academics and athletics.

NO TICKET, NO GAMEE — Both the DePaul and Virginia games, to be played at the Horizon arena in the Chicago suburb of Rosemont, are for all practical purposes sold out. The DePaul contest is a home game for the Blue Demons and the regular visitor's allotment of 200 tickets is gone. Notre Dame's tangle with Ralph Sampson and the Virginia Cavaliers is a home game for the Irish, the first matchup in a regular home-and-home series to be played on neutral courts (home games on neutral courts?). Virginia's home games in the series will probably be played in the Capital Centre in Landover, Md., closer to the Cavaliers' home turf (or wood).

The Notre Dame ticket office is completely sold out of tickets for this year's inaugural contest, and Ticketron in Chicago had only 400 ducats left as of last Friday, most if not all of which have been sold. The only alternative for students who wish to purchase tickets for the Virginia game would be to buy tickets through one of the three or four dorms on campus which reserved tickets. It is also possible that the Student Union may offer a ticket/bus transportation package.

One of the purposes of the Notre Dame/Virginia series is to give the alumni of the two universities an opportunity to watch their teams. Chicago and Landover both afforded large arenas in concentrated alumni areas.

JUST WHEN YOU THOUGHT IT WAS SAFE TO GO BACK ON THE COURT: MAGIC II — Fans of women's basketball should be in for a treat on Saturday when the 13th-ranked Lady Gamecocks of South Carolina invade the ACC for a 4 p.m. matchup with our own Irish women's team. The Lady Gamecocks are led by All-American 6-1 Sheila Foster (17.4 points and 13.0 rebounds per game) and Evelyn Heavy Evy Johnson (16.2 points and 5.8 rebounds), 5-10 sister of NBA star Magic Johnson.

BEAT THOSE...ROOSTERS! — Although tipoff is listed at 1:30 p.m. on Notre Dame tickets, this Saturday's Irish basketball tussle with South Carolina will start at 8 p.m. The Irish own a 7-4 ledger in the series with South Carolina, which dates back to 1969. The Irish prevailed 90-66 last year in Columbia and have won seven of their last eight games against the Gamecocks.

HOOPSTER HIGHLIGHTS — Sophomore guard John Paxson continues to lead the Irish basketball team with an average of 36.9 minutes per game, over four minutes above Orlando Woolridge's second-place 32.4 minute mean. While chipping in 9.5 points per contest and hitting field goals at a 52.4 percent clip, the penetrating Paxson has dished out a team-leading 77 assists for a 5.1 average.

Classmate Bill Varner leads Irish subs with 6.1 points and 19.2 minutes (almost one half) per game, while freshman Tom Sluby has added 3.9 points and 16.5 minutes.

CATCH A LENSFUL — Observer Sports Editor Beth Huffman, the first woman to break the male bastion of sports editorship at Notre Dame, is scheduled to be Digger Buy Ponies Phelps' guest on the coach's show to be aired at halftime of the South Carolina game.

Those of you who are at the game may want to set your automatic Beta Maxes back in the dorm to catch this historic moment.

IT SURE BEATS THE WORLD CANNONBALL AND BELLYFLOP CHAMPIONSHIPS — For the third consecutive year, NBC will videotape the finals of Notre Dame's Bengal Bouts boxing tournament for broadcast as a segment of Sportsworld. The finals of the annual tournament, proceeds from which go to the missions, will be held in the ACC on March 7.

A WEIGHTY POSITION — Bill Allerheiligen, who was the football strength and conditioning coach at Kansas State for the past two years, has been named to coordinate the strength program for all intercollegiate varsity teams at Notre Dame.
