Callaghan sensed committee on alcohol policy to be secret

By SARAH HAMILTON
News Staff

Student Body President Brian Callaghan admitted last night that he "had a good idea" he would not be able to report the proceedings of the Committee on the Responsible Use of Alcohol before he accepted a position on that committee.

After a forum on "The Dry Campus Issue" last night with Father William Beauchamp, chairman of the alcohol committee, Callaghan stated that the confidentiality of the whole situation had been stressed.

"It's been very difficult for me," Callaghan said, noting that he felt caught in "a Catch-22." As Student Body President, he said he has a responsibility to represent the students, yet he cannot inform them of alcohol policies being considered. Callaghan said, however, that if he were not on the committee, the students would lose a voice in the decision-making process.

Callaghan said resigning from the committee was "an idea I've thought about." But, he added, "I think I can be more effective" by retaining a position on the committee.

According to Beauchamp, Callaghan was selected for the committee by Provost Timothy O'Meara, as was most of the committee. "Brian was appointed by the Provost as Student Body President, not as Brian Callaghan," he said.

Concerning the confidentiality of the committee, Beauchamp said that no word was handed down from a higher authority. "We agreed amongst ourselves... once we started considering alternatives... We said this is to be between us." Defending the committee's secrecy, Beauchamp repeated the stand he expressed during the forum. He said that the trustees asked to see the committee's report before it was published and therefore nothing could be released until then.

The format of last night's forum allowed for both Beauchamp and Callaghan to present opening statements. These were followed by a question-and-answer period with approximately 100 students who attended the first of the Accent Lecture series.

Beauchamp said it would be "at least a question period, I don't know if we'll give answers or not."

Beauchamp said that the alcohol issue centers around the whole drinking situation, including the problem drinkers" and the question of University liability but transcending both of these. "There is not a simple solution to it."

One of the most discussed possibilities was the idea of a 21 campus, (a campus where no underage drinking is allowed).

Callaghan opposes this idea. "I'm against it. I think it would be inviting a lot more problems."

In his opinion, the restrictions presented by a 21 campus policy would not do anything to improve the drinking problem. Callaghan said that he can support such restraints only after the whole social structure of the campus is changed. Callaghan advocates that the dorms no longer be the center of social life. He suggested that the "stay hall" system might be abandoned to eliminate the "frat" images that have developed among the halls. In the stay hall system, residents are not required to change dorms periodically.

Callaghan had earlier maintained that a 21 campus was "fine, but not really helping students... you have to change attitudes."

At the forum last night, Callaghan mentioned disciplinary measures against students who abused alcohol, more social alternatives to

Rector of Carroll Hall receives HPC award

By BUD LUEPKE
News Staff

The Hall Presidents' Council gave Father Steve Gibson, rector of Carroll Hall, the HPC Rector Award at its weekly meeting last night.

"He (Gibson) was the obvious choice," said Mike Carlin, HPC chairman. Gibson was chosen for organizing freshmen bowling trips, building a bar, remodeling the hall's kitchen, buying a pinball machine, and giving spiritual leadership within the hall.

Each hall president was asked to submit a paper telling why his or her rector should receive the award. No one was obligated to submit an entry. A winner and four honorable mentions were chosen. The four are: Father William Borden, Pangborn Hall; Father Mario Pedi, St. Ed's Hall; Brother Victor Grzeskowiak, Stanford Hall; and Father Eugene Gorski, Howard Hall.

This is the first year of the HPC Rector Awards. "We want to recognize the rectors for their work," said Carlin. "We are not criticizing any of the rectors." Carlin also said the purpose of the award was not to motivate the rectors toward bettering themselves, although he said this could be an effect.

Also discussed at the meeting was the possibility of subscribing to The Wall Paper Journal, a poster-like publication dealing with the job market and college life. The bi-weekly publication is put out by the publishers of Nutshell and American magazines. The Wall Paper Journal, if accepted by the HPC, would appear in the dorms and LaFortune. Glass wall casings for the journals would be provided by the publisher.

Karen Klocke, chairman of Mardi Gras Week, also announced that activities including a dance-a-thon and a board games night will take place during Mardi Gras Week, March 6 — 10. Mardi Gras Week helps fund organizations like CIA and Logan Center. Klocke is asking that each hall choose a charity for the week.

McGarvey named Scholastic editor

By AMY STEPHAN

Kathy McGarvey has been named editor in chief of Scholastic magazine for the 1984-85 school year.

McGarvey, a junior Program of Liberal Studies major from Drexel Hill, Penn., sees the magazine as an

Kathy McGarvey

"initiator of ideas rather than a reporter." She said she would like Scholastic to "challenge the individual thoughtwise in both campus and outside concerns."

"I see journalism as a responsibility and a creative endeavor. When used well it can really be a service to the community," said McGarvey.

"I'll have a lot of help from some really good people on the staff," she said, adding that she is confident the new staff will produce "an excellent magazine next year."

Excellence is a keyword for McGarvey, who plans to stress excellence in writing and "the kind of thought and analysis that goes into it."

McGarvey has not been on the Scholastic editorial staff before, working as a reporter for the magazine this year. She spent her sophomore year in Innsbruck, Austria, with the foreign studies program.

"She impressed us with her competence," said Jim Ganther, current Scholastic editor in chief. "She is a very thorough reporter."

Ganther said McGarvey's enthusiasm and freshness of vision were important factors in her selection. "I am very proud to have her as a successor, I think she's going to do a dynamite job," he said.

McGarvey said she was unaware that the past three Scholastic editors in chief have been members of the charismatic renewal group, People of Praise, and doubts that the group had a significant impact on the magazine.

According to Ganther, McGarvey will begin training for her new position immediately and will officially begin her term as editor April 1.

Student, faculty leaders satisfied with input on alcohol

Editor's Note: The following is the second in a series of four articles examining the role of alcohol on the Notre Dame campus and proposals to implement a new alcohol policy.

By CAROL CAMP
Senior Staff Reporter

Despite allegations by some students that their views have not been adequately represented, both student and faculty leaders maintain that the Administration has accepted outside input concerning possible changes in the alcohol policy.

The Committee on the Responsible Use of Alcohol is considering recommending to the provost in April that underage drinking be barred on campus.

"Any student who had something to say had a chance to say it," said Mike Carlin, chairman of the Hall Presidents Council.

Student Body President Brian Callaghan maintains that he and Carlin have been two of the committee's most outspoken members.

"Mike and I have been two of the most vocal and probably most 'liberal' members," Callaghan said last week. "We did not see the need for major rules changes."

Callaghan said one reason that there has been dissatisfaction with this year's student leaders is that students fail to realize the necessity of working "within the system."

He added, "It's really difficult to take heat for something when you've represented the students as best you could. It's hard to take the rap when people who don't understand the committee's work say, 'You're letting this happen.'"

Callaghan said that a dry campus would "not help the (alcohol) problem. It would just shift it so that it would no longer be a University burden. They wouldn't have to worry about the incongruities in their policies."

Similarly, Callaghan sees a '21' campus as "fine, but not really helping students... You have to change attitudes."

As an alternative, Callaghan has endorsed the HPC alcohol policy which would focus upon punishing individual students for drunkenness. He also supported the senate alcohol policy which calls for improving alcohol awareness on campus.

Both policies were devised after the HPC and Student Senate received advice from meetings conducted in 16 dorms on campus. Consequently, Callaghan believes that "students have had more input than any other group." Carlin agreed with Callaghan. "We sent letters to 20 hall presidents, RA's and class officers. We sent representatives of the commission to the dorms. If they're going to take anything away, it needs to be replaced with something else. The main focus has to be the social life on campus."

In addition to seeking student opinion, the committee solicited the views of faculty members and rectors. Theresa Godwin Phelps, chairwoman of the Faculty Senate's student affairs committee, distributed a questionnaire to faculty members which asked for their views on the alcohol problem.

The survey dealt with such topics as faculty members' perception of student treatment of alcohol, the faculty's role in any change in University policy and whether or not they believed that alcohol abuse was also a con-

In Brief

Notre Dame has officially suspended its five-year boycott of Nestle products, according to Father John Van Wolvlear, vice president of Student Affairs. The officers of the World Hunger Coalition, the student group which originally proposed the boycott, told Van Wolvlear that they are satisfied with Nestle's agreement to comply with the World Health Organization's infant formula sales code. Notre Dame began the boycott Feb. 27, 1979, when 72 percent of the student body voted for removing Nestle products from the University Food Service organization. The students charged that the company's infant formula marketing practices in underdeveloped nations were responsible for thousands of infant deaths. In March, 1982, the students reaffirmed the boycott in another referendum. Notre Dame's suspension will affect the two dining halls, vending machines, the Deli in LaFortune Student Center and the Huddle. — The Observer

A Flanner Hall sophomore lost approximately $20 to two men who accosted him in the student parking lot east of Juniper Road at 8:45 p.m., Sunday. The student was treated for a minor cut on the forehead after he was struck by one of the assailants. The student told security officials he was returning to his hall from the parking lot when the two men approached him and demanded his billfold. They threw the billfold back after taking the money and ordered the youth to sit down until they were out of sight. They reportedly left in a southeasterly direction. The first assailant was described as five feet-10 inches tall, about 165 pounds, white, and wearing a ski mask, cloth jacket, blue jeans and hiking boots. His accomplice, also in his mid-20's, was described as six feet-two inches tall, about 215 pounds, black, with medium length hair, wearing a brown leather jacket. — The Observer

God, country, Notre Dame

Every man sent out from a university should be a man of his nation, as well as a man of his time. — Woodrow Wilson

Margaret Fosmoe
 Managing Editor

Most of us won't notice anything special about today. If today was Feb. 22, 1884, however, it would be quite memorable. Even as recently as 15 years ago, Feb. 22 caused much ado under the Dome.

For more than 120 years, the commemoration of George Washington's birthday at Notre Dame was surpassed in prominence only by the annual commencement exercises. Today it is remembered by a lack of mail on the previous Monday, if it is remembered at all.

Father Sorin initiated the annual Washington's Birthday Exercises in 1849. Students were given a holiday (unheard of today) to honor not only Washington, but America itself. Certain traditions evolved with the celebration. The caps and gowns of graduation were first worn on Washington's birthday. The senior class presented an American flag to Notre Dame each year that was first flown on commencement day. Speeches were given, patriotic songs were sung and plays were presented. Since the 1880s, most of the festivities centered in Washington Hall, which was dedicated to Washington and ornamented with paintings from his life.

The Father of our country gained such recognition largely through the efforts of the Father of our University.

It is said that when Sorin came to America, he knelt and kissed the earth, symbolizing his adoption of this country as his own. To Sorin, Washington represented all that was admirable in the American spirit.

Sorin was one of the most loyal public relations men the United States could have asked for. He required all his priests to learn and use English. American history was an important part of the early Notre Dame curriculum. He traveled widely and purchased lands throughout the United States. He, a French priest, was determined to make Notre Dame a great American university.

Certainly there have been American heroes to equal George Washington. There have been better presidents, better speakers, better statesmen. The Washington's Birthday Exercises were important to Notre Dame, not so much because of what the celebration represented for Washington, but what it represented for the University. The event was a sort of political Christmas that helped students to grasp the obligations of being a citizen. It was an annual formal acknowledgment of the "God, Country, Notre Dame" carved in stone above the east entrance to Sacred Heart.

Notre Dame acquaints us well with the religious and collegiate applications of that phrase. The national implications are sometimes overlooked however. Beyond "The Star Spangled Banner" at football games, nationalism is often viewed as a topic separate from university life. Sorin would be appalled to learn that the Fourth of July — the day he choose for Notre Dame's first commencement exercises — is greeted with a lack of fanfare and classes as usual for summer session students.

In Washington's age, statesmen were the most talented and respected members of the educated class. In our own age they are christened politicians and viewed with disdain. A more maligned and ignored profession than modern politics is hard to imagine. This is why the Washington's Birthday Exercises were allowed to die.

Yet the declining reputation of the politician is the best of reasons for continuing the tradition. Notre Dame needs an annual reminder of its duties as an American university. Every student who leaves the University must have a firm sense of his obligations, not only to God and Notre Dame, but also to his country.

No one but a student has such a broad field of knowledge with which to mend the tattered image of the American leader. If the blackened view of the American political system is to be cleaned up, a link must be reestablished between American scholarship and American politics. If it is to be accomplished at all, it must be accomplished through the universities.

Students criticize DuLac policies

By BILL KRAIS
News Staff

The DuLac manual, which establishes rules for student life at Notre Dame, drew heated criticism from a small group of students who met last night with the DuLac Review Committee of the Student Senate's Judicial Council.

The committee will present a list of proposed revisions to DuLac to Dean of Students James Roemer.

Committee members Joe Roveta, Bill Bergamo, Piper Griffin and Karen Ingwersen and the dozen students who showed up at the open forum raised serious objections about the preamble, university rules and regulations, and residence hall regulations sections.

The committee members blamed the small turnout on the scheduling conflict with the alcohol rules discussion between Student Body President Brian Callaghan and Father William Beauchamp, chairman of the Committee on the Responsible Use of Alcohol.

The committee complained that the rules and regulations are not compatible with an equitable society. The preamble to DuLac states, "Due process in a university is not necessarily the same as due process in the civil courts with its more elaborate precautions which are required to protect the accused from abuse." In this passage, the administration implies that the accused will be presumed guilty, and that rights protecting the accused will be virtually ignored, committee members stated.

Further, the committee pointed out inconsistencies between the regulations and the punishments. Roveta said, "the rules and regulations are unclear so as to give the administration leeway in interpreting violations. Such interpretations lead to unjust punishments."

"The directives passed out by the Dean of Students are automatic additions to DuLac," said Griffin. The committee said that students may be punished for breaking a rule published in a directive yet never declared in DuLac.

According to the committee, the greatest problem is the inability of students to directly affect administrative policies. Committee members said the rules and regulations are produced without student input.

The committee asked that any additional ideas or suggestions be forwarded to Roveta, 351 Zahm Hall.

Roemer has not established a deadline for receiving the committee's recommendations, according to Roveta.

drinking — both on and off campus — and stricter enforcement of rules at parties by hall officials, as articles to be included in the committee's report to the provost.

Although Beauchamp would not release the committee's recommendations, he said, "The committee is definitely leaning in one direction." Beauchamp said he hopes the committee will be able to submit its report to the provost by April 1. The deadline for retracting housing contracts without forfeiting the $200 deposit is April 6. Beauchamp added that he does not foresee O'Meara rejecting the committee's recommendations.

cern of the faculty.

According to Phelps, faculty response to the questionnaire was "excellent." She commented, "Many people feel that there is a problem — only a minority feel that it is not a faculty problem. Most feel that there should be more emphasis upon educational programs. Whatever is done, it has to be more than just laying down the law."

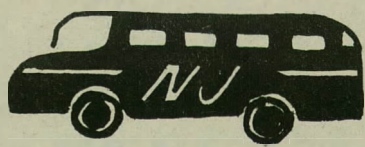

Rectors also submitted verbal and written statements to the Committee on the Responsible Use of Alcohol. Several rectors encouraged members of the committee to speak to students at hall meetings. Father Thomas King, rector of Zahm Hall, noted that committee members "came to Zahm Hall first and solicited input for over two hours."

Father Eugene Gorski, Howard Hall rector, expressed confidence in the committee's final report: "The rectors have made very ample contributions to the committee, and it is my feeling that they will come out with a policy that is intelligent and sensible."

While giving suggestions "called for a little more initiative on the part of the rectors," Lewis Hall Rectress Moira Baker said rectors have had "every opportunity to air their views."

Asked if they had noticed an increase in the number of alcohol-related incidents in their halls this year, several rectors acknowledged that they had not experienced any additional problems. In Lewis Hall, for example, Baker said the number of alcohol-related cases was "about the same. There are always one or two problems that you wish weren't there, but nothing unusual."

Something missing in Mondale campaign

Walter F. Mondale strides across this state like the Jolly Green Giant. He dominates the polls, needs two planes for his news media contingent and makes appearances that are better advanced than Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's at the Normandy beaches. Rooms for him materialize at unplanned stops, couches are moved in, and reporters are told, before they get off the bus for the night, what motel rooms have been assigned.

Richard Cohen

The Cohen Report

And yet there is something missing. Call it enthusiasm, call it emotion, call it anything you like. The Mondale campaign walks, talks and acts like that of the dominant front-runner. It just does not feel like one.

Instead of excitement, there is a sense of duty or obligation about this campaign. The operative word is "restore" — a word Mondale frequently uses. If elected, he will "restore" government programs eliminated or cut by President Reagan, especially those that help the aged and the poor. He will "restore" the traditional dialogue with the Soviet Union that has resulted in every recent President but Reagan reaching some sort of arms agreement. He will "restore" a sense of fairness and once again obligate the government to do the right, as well as the economical, thing.

It is all good stuff and if you are poor, aging or out of work, wonderful to hear. But it makes Mondale the candidate of the recent past, specifically of the Carter administration, a kind of monarch in exile waiting for the restoration.

And it pits him, should he win the Democratic nomination, against Reagan, the candidate of the nostalgic past, a man who cites his all-but-imaginary hometown of Dixon, Ill., as a model for America — a movie-set town of virtue and neighborliness whose reality most Americans fled. This is what Reagan did, choosing Pacific Palisades and Rodeo Drive over Dixon and Main Street. No matter. In a contest, the nostalgic past, which is anything you want it to be, beats the recent past, which is worse in memory than in reality.

This must have occurred to Mondale and his staff. So maybe this is just his strategy for the primaries, an attempt to unify the Democratic Party around the ideals of the recent past before he leads it on to something new and bold. The trouble is that boldness is not a Mondale attribute. His decency is matched only by his cautiousness. Unlike George McGovern, who now basks in post-Vietnam and Watergate vindication, Mondale has never known what it's like to stake out a lonely position and see the country move his way.

On Vietnam, for instance, Mondale was late in opposing the war. In an interview here, he now says that's the chief regret of his public career. But he was also among the last of the Democratic candidates to call for a Marine withdrawal from Beirut, something he says he does not regret.

When it came to the Marines, Mondale says, there were so many things to consider — and there were. Because of his experience, his knowledge, he sees many trees — maybe more than the other Democratic candidates. What he sometimes can not see is the forest.

So the Iowa campaign is one of trees. For organized labor, Mondale offers loyalty and nary a hint of disagreement. For the teachers, he has an education program. For the elderly, he vows that Social Security and Medicare shall remain inviolate. And for the farmers, he promises that once again the world will be their market. Only once, when Mondale told how the women's movement had enabled his wife, Joan, to "grow and blossom," did he seem to speak from the gut — and that, for many who heard him, is where the remark was received.

Other than that, though, the Mondale campaign is a trough from which a voter can feed. There is something here for everybody — something good, something necessary. He will help them when they are hungry, educate their children, restore and protect their jobs and comfort them in their old age.

But there is something missing, too, and you can see it in the faces of the people who come to see Mondale. They walk away like shoppers in a supermarket. They have bought the essential. For the vision, they will have to go somewhere else.

The real Notre Dame security

Security here at Notre Dame has been plagued by many misconceptions held by students. Last semester, I dealt with our security more closely than most students. At the USC game, I was struck by an usher while trying to run onto the field after our victory.

This incident resulted in many interviews

John Tallarida

with an investigator and a deeper insight into the Security Department of our university.

Two major misconceptions which many of us hold are that members of security are uneducated people with weapons and flashing lights, and that they are here to police the students.

"I think a lot of people don't realize that many of our officers have had experience," says one investigator. The amount of education that many of our security personnel have had is surprising.

Glenn Terry, the head of security since September 1979, has 26 years of experience as an investigator with the South Bend Police Department, ten of which were spent as Division Chief. He is also a graduate of the FBI National Academy, a professional management school aimed at bringing management up to date on current trends.

Rex Rakow is also a graduate of the FBI National Academy as well as being the assistant director of security since the position was established in October 1979. He has been a sworn officer for 20 of his 33 years.

Presently, he is a trustee of the International Association of Campus Law Enforcement Administrators and he recently received his Masters of Science and Administration from our university.

Like their superiors, many of the 100 members of security are equally qualified. Forty-five are uniformed, and about one-third are sworn officers who have gone through the Indiana Law Enforcement Academy.

The remaining uniformed personnel have attended many seminars dealing with rape, evidence, fingerprint and other related subjects. Of these 45 individuals, nine have B.A. degrees, including three Notre Dame graduates. Of these nine, two have their masters.

The remaining personnel are students and hall frontiers who take care of the ACC, Snite, halls, front gates and parking lots.

Another misconception is that security is here to watch us. "They (the students) get the idea they are being policed and they do not understand that we are here for their protection," an investigator, Anne Schellinger, observes.

"The problem is outsiders coming in," she says. Many students do not realize the difficulty of patrolling the Notre Dame campus, which covers 1253 acres. To accomplish this task, there are usually ten individuals per shift, two or three of whom are officers.

The shift includes two mobile units, two or three groundsmen, an investigator and dispatcher. The mobile units are responsible for University Village, Bulla and Juniper road, and all University property on Douglas.

The groundsmen are responsible for locking and unlocking the buildings as well as patrolling the campus. The two investigators follow up on calls, reports of suspicious persons, thefts and burglaries. As Rakow sees it, security is here for the protection of life and property.

However, this goal only compromises about 5 percent of their total duties. Mainly, Rakow says, "We are a service organization." These services include manning the gates, transporting money from the Huddle, Oak Room, Bookstore and other similar places, and the transportation of around 3500 students per year to the hospital."

Another common misconception is the widely accepted belief that security has a quota for parking tickets written every year. Rakow explains, "Decals, parking fees, anything we collect, any money we collect, goes back to the depository account and we are restricted as to what few things that we can buy out of that account." The officers are not out to make a quick buck from your mistake.

Many students are also oblivious to the personal feelings of the officers. "They (security personnel) are protective of the students, like they would be to a little brother or a little sister," says Rakow. "The officers we have really make the system work. They care about the students."

The Notre Dame Security Department is an institution that cares a great deal for the people it protects and takes a great deal of pride in its work.

P. O. Box Q

"Second class"

Dear Editor:

Notre Dame has the reputation for being one of the country's foremost Catholic universities and is particularly concerned with the scholarship and reputation of its theology department.

I'm sure many students value highly their theological education as one way of affirming, reformulating or rethinking their beliefs about God, and perhaps enriching their faith. But this aspect of our education is steadily being compromised by the present philosophy of the department as to how to preserve our Catholic character in this field.

Though undergrads are not privy to information concerning how the department's philosophy is formulated or how it translates into practice, from the headline article in last Friday's Observer (Feb. 17) concerning Prof. Stanley Hauerwas' possible job offer at Duke, one can extrapolate what I consider to be a trend toward substantially downgrading the Catholic theological education we can receive at Notre Dame.

Non-Catholics as well as Catholics with a deep conviction to their own religious beliefs and traditions can create an openness among students, inviting them to examine their own faith.

Father Richard McBrien, chairman of the department, stated that "the department is at once Catholic and ecumenical," and that "those who aren't Catholic should regard themselves as full members of the department with full participation" in the department. I would hope that each faculty member has full participation!

What is going on in that department that has apparently led to a less than cooperative atmosphere? How can any non-Catholic professor help but feel like a second-class citizen when the pervasive attitude of the department supports token ecumenism? Can we expect top theologians, Catholic or non-Catholic, to flock to this expanding department, new theology building or no?

If Notre Dame wants students to obtain an examined, reflective and rich education in Catholicism, it should create an open, receptive, and diverse atmosphere for top theologians of all faiths.

hurt. That's the thing we've lost. Now we've got to take what's left and get some confidence back by winning the rest of our games. We've got to look at ourselves to get things done."

Manhattan, which was a respectable 15-13 last year, has managed to avoid any serious injuries this season. That is about all they've managed to do, however, recording their victories against relatively weak Ivy League teams from Brown, Harvard, and Yale, while losing to such unimpressive teams as Seton Hall, Fairfield, and Hofstra.

The Jaspers are led by 6-7 junior forward Tim Cain, who is averaging 20.8 points and 6.1 rebounds per game. Guard Jim Hauffer, a 6-1 junior, provides an additional 14.3 points per contest.

Another player the Irish must watch is 6-5 sophomore guard Maurice Williams, Manhattan's leading rebounder at 7.6 rpg, and their third leading scorer at 9.6 ppg.

Defensively, the Jaspers play a 2-3 zone, which means that the Irish will get plenty of scoring opportunities from the wings. Phelps said he would not be surprised to see a box-and-one concentrating on Tom Sluby, however.

The Irish plan to take advantage of the outside scoring chances and use their superior height and rebounding abilities to pound the boards and score easy baskets via the fast break.

The Georgetown basketball team was upset last night by St. John's, 75-71. The Hoyas, now 23-3, trailed by as much as 22 points en route to the loss, which snapped a 10-game Georgetown winning streak. The Hoyas cut their deficit to 72-69 with 48 seconds remaining, but Mark Jackson iced the Redmen's victory with a free throw and a fast-break basket. St. John's held Patrick Ewing to just 11 points for Georgetown, while Chris Mullin exploded for a career-high 33 points to lead the Redmen. — AP

The ND Rowing club will be meeting tonight at 10 p.m. in LaFortune's Little Theater. All those planning on travelling with the team to Austin, Tx. during break must attend and bring the $50 deposit. If you can not make the meeting, call Joe at 8198 or J.T. at 1414. — The Observer

Mal Moore has been promoted to Assistant Head Coach of the football team. Moore will continue his duties as coach of the running backs. He is replacing Jim Johnson, who left after the Liberty Bowl. Moore has received many coaching offers from other schools since coming to Notre Dame, making his promotion understandable. — The Observer

Cheerleaders wishing to try out for the 1984-85 squad must attend a meeting on February 27 at 7 p.m. in LaFortune. The captain of next year's team will be Bill Thallemer. Call him at 233-4331 for more details. — The Observer

The Notre Dame men's swimming team lost a dual meet last night to Bradley, 69-43. The loss makes Notre Dame's final dual-meet record 7-4. The only bright spots for the Irish were Tim Bohdan's victory in the 1000-yard freestyle and Dan Flynn's second-place finish in the 200-yard butterfly. Bohdan missed the varsity record by 1.1 second in his event, while Flynn surpassed the pool record in the 200 fly, only to lose by .1 second to Bradley's Rob Schackle. — The Observer

An interhall swimming meet is scheduled for February 28. Hall representatives must turn in a list of entries to Dennis Stark the day before the meet or the interhall office, C2, ACC. For more information on the ten-event meet, call swimming coach Stark at 239-6222. — The Observer

VanderVelden takes gold Two fencers make Jr. Olympics

By MICHAEL J. CHMIEL
Sports Writer

A squad of seven Irish fencers faced top competition from across the United States over the weekend in Portland, Ore., and came away with a gold medal and two spots on the 1984 U.S. Junior Olympic fencing team.

The Portland tournament, which is limited to fencers under the age of 20 on Jan. 1, 1984, involved three rounds of round-robin fencing, followed by two rounds of direct elimination. Sixteen fencers were matched up in the final round of tough direct elimination.

In the foil, fifth-ranked sophomore Mike VanderVelden (27-6 on the season) captured the gold medal and qualified for one of three spots on the U.S. foil team, which will fence in the Junior World Olympics in Leningrad, over Easter.

Freshman foiler Charles Higgs-Coulthard, who is leading the Irish fencers with a 39-3 record, finished sixth in Portland, but he also qualified for a spot on the U.S. foil squad, since he finished second-best in the country in total number of points scored for the year.

"Mike VanderVelden did a great job," commented Notre Dame head coach Mike DeCicco. "Charles (Higgs-Coulthard) looked like he was going to win the thing right off, and all of a sudden it turned around, and Michael was the one fencing for the gold medal — it's to their credit."

Among the other Irish fencers in Portland, freshman Kevin Stoutermire (18-6 on the season) finished fourth in the sabre, and sophomore Tony Consoli (18-2) finished fifth. Sophomore sabre man Don Johnson (25-5) finished eighth.

A surprise fencer who was able to make the trip and fence, despite an injury to his ankle, was sophomore sabre man John Edwards (ranked second in the U.S. prior to this event).

"I couldn't move at all," commented a disappointed Edwards who is 27-1 on the season and managed to finish in the top twenty with a valiant effort in this sabre competition.

"The sabre men, all but John Edwards, made the finals, which was a plus," said DeCicco. Coach DeCicco believes that having the Junior World Olympics in Leningrad is attractive to all fencers. This attractiveness brought all of the top fencers to Portland, which is an expensive venture for each fencer in itself.

As a result of this top competition, the Irish proved to have the two best under-20 foilers in the country. VanderVelden and Higgs-Coulthard will represent the United States in Leningrad ranked first and second, respectively.

"One of the things that we have on our team this year that I'm excited about is that we have a number of young people, and all of them seem to be having some varying success, and that augurs well for the immediate future," commented DeCicco. "If you get that kind of help in a program like ours, it augurs well, not only for the immediate future, but also for the next four or five years, (and) that's what excites me right now."

The Notre Dame men's and women's fencing teams will continue their seasons this weekend as they travel to Illinois to face rivals Illinois and Wisconsin on Saturday.

Faust names Christoff as Irish Defensive Coordinator for 1984

By MIKE SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

With spring football just around the corner, Head Football Coach Gerry Faust has been taking care of some loose ends before he begins his fourth season in charge. Yesterday, he took care of the loosest end of all by naming former Stanford defensive coordinator Andy Christoff to the same post on the Irish staff.

The naming of Christoff fills the final opening on the 1984 coaching staff, a spot which became available when last year's defensive coordinator, Jim Johnson, left the team last month to take a similar position with the Oklahoma Outlaws of the USFL. It also ends a long hunt for a person with enough experience to improve the erratic Notre Dame defense.

If Christoff's success last year with the Stanford defense is any indication of what is to come for the Irish, then Faust may have found himself an excellent coach.

Despite spending only one year on Paul Wiggins' staff, Christoff was able to turn the worst defense in the Pacific 10 into one of the best. The Cardinal went from last in pass defense in the conference to first, and from last in total defense to sixth.

While this success obviously made him a leading candidate for the Notre Dame job, it was his work at Oregon, where he spent six seasons as defensive coordinator and secondary coach, that first drew the attention of Faust.

"Andy originally caught my eye two years ago when we played at Oregon," said Faust in an official statement. "We were awfully impressed with their defense that day, and that impression stayed with me."

The impression of that 13-13 "tie" with the Ducks has stayed with more than Faust, but the excellent performance of the Oregon defense kept the Irish from avoiding the huge upset. The game represented one of the highlights of Christoff's career at Oregon.

Prior to his six-year stint at Oregon, Christoff spent some time as secondary coach at Idaho (1970-71), New Mexico State (1972), and New Mexico (1973). He also served as assistant head coach and defensive coordinator at his alma mater, Idaho, from 1974 to 1976, before joining Rich Brooks' staff at Oregon in 1977.

"Andy did a super job at Stanford last fall, and he has eight seasons of experience as a coordinator," said Faust. "He also has coached all three areas of defense, so he should be comfortable working with any phase of our system."

The 38-year-old Christoff will have the responsibility of rebuilding the Notre Dame defense, which was largely ineffective by the end of the regular season. With some outstanding freshmen joining the defense in the fall, and with some receivers switching to defense to add some depth to the secondary, the Irish should show improvement immediately under their new coach.

Need a win

Basketball team meets Manhattan

The Notre Dame men's basketball team was never more in need of a big win than it is right now.

Coming off their fourth consecutive loss at the hands of Brigham Young on Saturday, and having dropped five of their last six games, the Irish are looking to get back on track tonight as they face the Jaspers of Manhattan at Madison Square Garden.

The Jaspers, who have compiled a dismal 8-17 record this season, should not provide Notre Dame with a major test. However, the Irish, who are sometimes their own worst enemy (particularly on the road, where they are 2-7 this season), cannot afford a letdown. Nor can they get caught looking ahead to Saturday's big matchup with Marquette. The Irish have already lost any chance for an NCAA Tournament bid, and a loss tonight would make their chances for an NIT bid extremely slim.

Speaking of the NIT, if the Irish should receive an invitation, and then manage to avoid last year's early disappointment and advance to the semifinals and championship game, they would be back in the Garden again in late March. So tonight wouldn't be a bad time for Notre Dame to set a winning precedent in New York City.

They will have to do it without the services of sophomore starters Tim Kempton and JoJo Buchanan, however, as both will miss the game with injuries. Kempton, who has sat out the last three games, has a stress fracture of the right leg. He is not expected to play again in the regular season, but could possibly return if the Irish receive an NIT bid. Buchanan, suffering from recurring knee tendinitis, has missed Notre Dame's last two games and will remain a question mark for the remainder of the season.

Junior Joe Howard has been filling in as a starter for Buchanan, while freshman Donald Royal has taken Kempton's spot in the front line, with sophomore Ken Barlow moving to center. According to coach Digger Phelps, who took only nine players to BYU, the Irish haven't been anywhere near the same without their regular starters.

"The injuries made us a different ballclub," says Phelps. "We've just got to get these other people in a situation where they believe in themselves. Royal and (Cecil) Rucker have to help us on the front line, and Howard has to be our point guard. We're doing the best we can and we're asking some people to do things we haven't asked them to do before."

"For the guys who haven't been playing, it's their turn now to go out and do it. That's what we're trying to get across to them. It's difficult because when we were playing well a month ago, we were doing it playing basically six people. They developed into a group that made people look at us after we beat Villanova and Maryland. But now, it's like being a December team all over again. At this time of the year you shouldn't have to worry about personnel adjustments; you should be in a groove ready to go for it. That's where we were before Kempton got

Irish seniors hope to gain tournament bid

Irish Items

Hello again, everybody!

Well, last week could have been worse for the Notre Dame basketball players — they could have had to eat in the dining hall Saturday night. Other than that, everything that could go wrong did go wrong for the Irish cagers, who have now lost five of their last seven outings. There is no doubt the 15-10 Irish will not be invited to the NCAA tournament, but an NIT bid may be salvaged if Digger Phelps and Co. can turn things around.

That turnaround must begin tonight as the Irish travel to the Big Apple to take on an absolutely abysmal Manhattan squad at Madison Square Garden. Following that game, the Irish return to the Athletic and Convocation Center for their home finale of the regular season when they play host to a tough Marquette club Saturday afternoon. It will possibly be the last time for seniors Tom Sluby and Cecil Rucker to play at the ACC, and hopefully they'll get a chance to bow out in style.

Speaking of style, it would be nice if some of it rubbed off on the student body. The display of toilet paper hurling and chants you wouldn't want your mother to hear that occurred at the DePaul game didn't do anything to enhance Notre Dame's image on national television. Now make no mistake about it — the team needs spirited support from the student body, but let's see if it can be done in a classy mode this Saturday.

Jasper Jive . . . To say Gordon Chiesa's Manhattan team is not that good is an understatement. The Jaspers were 7-17 entering last night's game with Army, after taking a 20-point drubbing from Fordham Saturday night. They also own an unimpressive 1-11 ledger in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference.

However, if there is a bright spot on this Manhattan team, it is the outstanding play of junior forward Tim Cain. Cain was ranked 14th in the nation in scoring last week with his 23.0 average. Unfortunately for the Jaspers, with the exception of Cain and center Bill McLellan, they just don't have the horses to play with the Irish.

Marquette Marks . . . OK, so this year's Marquette team doesn't feature any flashy players like Dean "The Dream" Memminger, Butch Lee, or Doc Rivers, but coach Rick Majerus has several solid players on this Warrior squad.

Balance has been the key to success for the 15-8 Warriors. Junior forward Dwayne Johnson paces the Marquette scoring attack with 14 points per game, while also leading the team in rebounding. Meanwhile, sophomore guard Kerry Trotter pumps in 11.5 points an outing, while holding the team lead in assists. On the inside, the Warriors get lots of help from senior forward Marc Marotta, who loves to play a physical game.

Both teams love to play good defense, so look for a score in the 50's or 60's. One thing going for the Irish in this one is Marquette also has had road problems. Hopefully, the Irish will add to the Warriors' woes on Saturday.

What's Wrong With the Irish? . . . That question has been put to me several times in the last week, and all I can say is if I knew the answer, I'd be the coach. However, it doesn't hurt to take a few educated guesses at the problem. Obviously, injuries have hurt. Anytime a team loses two starters from its lineup, it is bound for trouble. However, injuries alone provide a lame excuse (no pun intended).

One factor which should be noted is Notre Dame has lost a lead in the second half of four of its last five losses. This second-period letdown could be attributed to the fatigue caused by a lack of depth, poor free-throw shooting which has plagued this team, or some other intangible reason.

It just might be the Irish are being beaten by better teams, but the records of some of the teams to whom the Irish have lost makes that statement hard to swallow. Maybe it's just one of those things that happens to a team, but that comment doesn't solve much either. Rest assured, Phelps and his staff are racking their brains trying to find a solution, but an answer to the problem is needed soon.

Pick of the Week . . . Not only does Saturday mark the final home game for the Irish men's team, but it is the day of the curtain-closer for the women's home season as well. Mary DiStanislao's Irish will take on Xavier in a North Star Conference game Saturday night at 7:30.

It will be the final appearance for seniors Jenny Klauke and Theresa Mullins. While neither player has seen a plethora of playing time this season, both have made valuable contributions in their four-year Irish careers. Klauke and Mullins came to Notre Dame in DiStanislao's first year and had to take their share of lumps as an inexperienced Irish squad was battered by superior opposition. However, they laid the foundation for a successful program to build on, and have taken their reserve roles graciously. It would be most appropriate to give them a big send-off on Saturday night.
