Senate overrides veto, votes for highway bill

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Senate rejected a personal, last-minute plea from President Reagan and voted Thursday to override his veto and enact into law an $88 billion highway and mass transit bill.

The 67-33 vote, exactly the two-thirds majority necessary, capped two days of political struggle over the bill that became a high-stakes test of wills between the Republican president and leaders of the Senate's Democratic majority.

Democrats reclaimed one vote they had lost in an initial test on Wednesday, but Republicans were unable to switch any of the 13 GOP senators who voted to override the president's veto the day before.

Besides authorizing highway and mass transit projects that the president had opposed as overlaid with pork, the bill permits states to boost the speed limit on rural stretches of interstate highways to 65 miles per hour from the current 55 mph.

But arguments over the substance of the legislation were overtaken by the political fight.

Afterwards, though, the winners and losers alike sought to minimize the impact on the president's influence.

"This isn't going to make or break the president of the United States," said Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd,

Hearing of ND student postponed for second time

By ANN KALTENBACH
Senior Staff Reporter

The pre-trial hearing of the 21-year-old Notre Dame student charged in connection with the accident that resulted in the death of junior Michael Cogswell has been postponed to April 22.

This marks the second time the hearing has been postponed. Originally scheduled for March 17, the trial had been postponed until Thursday.

After the Jan. 29 recommendation of the St. Joseph County Grand Jury, County Prosecutor Michael Barnes said the student will be charged with driving under the influence of alcohol, a Class A misdemeanor.

The charge carries a maximum punishment of one year in prison and a $5,000 fine, Barnes said. The student could also be placed on probation.

On the same day, Barnes said the student was originally charged with driving under the influence of alcohol.

The charge was dropped, however, so the case could be sent to the grand jury for review, he said.

Upon review of the case, the grand jury recommended the student be charged with the misdemeanor.

Barnes said he could not discuss why the grand jury recommended charging the student with a misdemeanor.

He did say, however, "the entire factual circumstances of Mr. Cogswell's death were exposed. And the grand jury, after reviewing the case, made what they thought was an appropriate recommendation."

Cogswell, a 20-year-old Zahm Hall junior, died Dec. 6 from massive head injuries 10 hours after being struck on Saint Mary's Road.

Abortion issue not solved until agreement is reached, prof says

By SHARON HEGG
Staff Reporter

The abortion issue cannot be solved until an agreement on the evaluation of human is reached, according to Professor of Christian Ethics Father Richard McCormick in a lecture Thursday night.

In the lecture titled "The Abortion Debate: The Wider Context," McCormick examined the issue of abortion in the context of moral issues and public policy.

"Abortion, the unjust taking of a life, constitutes a major moral dilemma of society today," McCormick said. "The national debate usually falls to slogan(s), where some master evidence, accurate or not, to support their position."

According to McCormick, in order to address the issue of abortion, "it is essential to submit personal conviction to scrutiny by other people. The Catholic community has been historically reluctant to do this."

Richard McCormick

"In the past 15 years, nearly every Episcopal conference has addressed this issue. It is not only a Catholic issue.

"The substance of the position of the Catholic Church, as I see it, is that human life is a basic gift/good. It is the foundation of all other good. There is human life from fertilization. (For abortion) to be life-saving/life-serving there must be at stake a human life or the equivalent."

McCormick feels that public policy and moral teachings on abortion are integrally related. If fetal life is regarded as human life, it should be protected by law. "The problem is the feasibility of a policy. Is a particular law practical, adoptable? Permissive laws mean injustice to the fetus. Restrictive laws mean injustice to women."

The key problem is not the "definition of personhood--is the fetus a person--nor the

Charity Ball seeks to raise money and consciousness

By KENDRA MORRILL

The third annual Charity Ball to benefit the Catholic Relief Services will take place this Saturday.

Danny Harrison, a fifth-year engineering and French major, founded the ball three years ago. Last year, he studied abroad in France and could not be a part of the ball, but is once again chairman this year. Sophomore Jill Gollen is assistant chairman.

According to Harrison, the ball has been "a thriving success." The ball was inaugurated on April 20, 1985 and raised $11,000. In 1986, $18,500 was raised. The goal for 1987 is $20,000, Harrison said.

He said all benefits will go to Ethiopia and Third World countries, but the object of the ball is not just to raise money.

"The basic goal is to raise consciousness and awareness about hunger and world suffering," said Harrison. "Raising $2 would be OK if it makes 2,000 people aware (of these problems)."

Harrison stressed the need for Notre Dame students to be generous in their giving. "We're so blessed with every-

In Brief

Mormon Church president Ezra Taft Benson surprised many followers when he told women they should stay at home and care for children. Women in and out of the church condemned the declaration, saying the 87-year-old Benson, considered a prophet by the faithful, was out of step with the times and had added a burden of guilt to families with financial problems. Few Mormons believe that many of the 40 percent of the church's female members who are in the work force will forsake jobs and careers as a result of Benson's position. - Associated Press

'Monk' is a regular guy, but don't tell the media

What he reads, wears, eats and thinks has suddenly become important to more than his friends and family.

'Monk' Malloy has become a celebrity.

Room 141 no longer houses merely the Monk Malloy who is president-elect of the University and in-residence at Sorin Hall, but the Monk Malloy who is lionized by "60 Minutes" and the international media. If he were other than a priest, someone might think of packaging him and offering him contracts for endorsing eyeglass frames, tall-men's stores, and basketball sneakers.

Maybe some have.

Under the circumstances, an article in the public interest seems appropriate. Its purpose is to answer a few of the innumerable questions surrounding Monk and to dispel some of the myths and misinformation which circulates concerning the life of the president-to-be of the University of Notre Dame.

His life begins each morning at around 9:30 a.m.—late by some standards—but not when you consider that Monk went to sleep between 3 and 4 a.m. the 'night' before. He does not eat breakfast.

Approximately at 2 a.m., an hour or so before going to bed, Monk has a snack. Frequently, that consists of a bowl of cereal with 2 percent milk and some fruit. Earlier in the evening, he may have a Diet Coke and, once in a while, a bag of cheese flavored tortilla chips or Doritos. He eats a light lunch (vegetables, fruit) and dinner.

He reads The New York Times, The South Bend Tribune, The Chicago Sun Times and The Chicago Tribune each day. When he's on the road, he reads USA Today. Monk flips to the sports pages with special attention to how the Celtics, Bears, and Redskins are doing and with not too much interest in hockey and baseball. His method for reading the Sunday edition of "The New York Times" consists of reading the Travel and Entertainment sections first, saving the front page, the News of the Week in Review, and the Magazine section for last. He sees many magazines, reading "anyone you can think of."

Admitting an "addiction" to crossword puzzles at one time in his life that peaked while he was in San Francisco on sabbatical 8 years ago, he has since kicked the habit of spending an hour each day on the "The New York Times" version. In San Francisco, he also worked through several books of collected Times' crosswords.

He drives a 1982 Chevrolet Celebrity, beige, and when asked what kind of car he would like to drive, he admitted that he has a preference for any kind that runs.

Chris Donnelly

Assistant Production Manager

The last movie he saw was the much acclaimed and honored "Platoon." He agreed with the critics that it was very good. He seldom is around for the evening news on TV, but frequently watches the early morning re-runs at 1:30 or 2 a.m. on the Independent News Network.

He knows that his position at Notre Dame will make him a very visible priest in the country and even the world. What he hopes people will see in him as priest is a sensitivity to other people's needs, a commitment to reinterpreting the Gospel in contemporary terms and a willingness to center his life on other people. All of this can be summed up in the word "service"—service to, for, and on behalf of others.

Monk's Catholic identity has a fallout on the University. The agenda for the president of a Catholic university is to preserve its Catholic character without only paying lip-service to its denominational affiliation. The authenticity of that commitment, he feels, is his to preserve and encourage.

That may be apparent on the "60 Minutes" tentatively scheduled to be aired this spring on CBS. Once it became clear that the producers and interviewers of the show were friendly, Monk said, and following the advice of the PR department, he consented to their interview. It will be one of thousands that come with the territory of being president at Notre Dame.

All seniors-to-be should have received 2 forms in the mail, an application for senior council positions (just check and circle whatever looks interesting) and a Senior Trip Choice Form. Please return both of these to your dorm rep by Friday.

Remember, if you're looking for something else on that resume, working on class events means meeting lots of people and having fun at the same time.

We have come up with some pretty impressive job titles and are really excited about having you on the team.

Malloy calls for committee to study research, teaching

By SHANNON OAKES
Staff Reporter

University President-elect Father Edward Malloy has called for the establishment of a committee to study the optimal balance between research and teaching.

The committee, to be appointed by University Provost Timothy O'Meara, was established because Notre Dame professors are becoming more involved in research.

"Under Father Hesburgh, Notre Dame has developed from a teaching university to a teaching and research university," said O'Meara. "Both must be emphasized and every faculty member should be strong in both."

There has been concern that

Notre Dame professors will look more toward research than toward teaching and thus neglect the education of students. This concern stems from the observation of other universities that have become primarily research-oriented, to the detriment of their students.

"In light of what we've seen happen at other universities what do we do to stop it from happening here?" said O'Meara. He said the committee will strive to answer this question. "It will make specific recommendations, (but) there will not be mathematical solutions.

"The committee will establish proper expectations for the faculty and expectations of the University of how faculty should strike a balance (between research and teaching) and suggest ways to maintain the balance," O'Meara said.

O'Meara said the need for professors to be involved in research as well as in teaching is obvious. "With no research, professors in every field become stale," said O'Meara.

The expectation of Notre Dame towards its professors is in both teaching and research. "To gain tenure there is an expectation of teaching, research and publication, and service," said Executive Vice President-elect Father William Beauchamp. "A professor cannot get promoted without research and publication or if he is an awful teacher," he said.

Kremlin says U.S. soldier defects; Pentagon unable to confirm report

Associated Press

MOSCOW - The Kremlin announced Thursday an American soldier and his West German wife had defected to the Soviet Union and been granted asylum because they feared political persecution.

The U.S. Army in West Germany and the Pentagon in Washington could not confirm the defection, which would be the first by an American serviceman to the Soviet Union since the Vietnam War.

The Pentagon issued a statement, however, saying it was investigating an enlisted man with a name similar to that announced by the Soviets who had deserted in West Germany a month ago. It said it was not certain if he was the same person.

The reported defection came at a time when the U.S. embassy in Moscow was trying to deal with an spy case in which two former Marine guards have been charged with espionage.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov announced the defection at a regular news briefing and said, "They have chosen the Turkmenian S.S.R. for their honeymoon."

He identified the soldier as William Roberts of the U.S. Army, whom he said he had been stationed in West Germany, and his wife as P. Neumann, a West German.

Both have been granted political asylum because "they were afraid of being victimized for their progressive views," Gerasimov said. He said Roberts "had been persecuted" while stationed with the Army in West Germany.

Gerasimov did not say when the couple entered the Soviet Union or give any other details.

Army Maj. Dennis Pinkham, a spokesman for the U.S. European command in Stuttgart, West Germany, said military officials were attempting to verify the report.

Surrogate mother vows to continue fight for the custody of 'Baby M'

Associated Press

RED BANK, N.J. - Surrogate mother Mary Beth Whitehead, stripped of the right to see her daughter again, vowed Thursday to continue her legal battle for the child, saying she'll never stop loving the little girl known as Baby M.

"Until Sara comes home, my fight will continue," Whitehead said haltingly, with tears in her eyes. "We will not accept the decision of one judge as the final determination of a whole society that we should be permanently separated."

"We love each other very much," she said in her first public statement since Tuesday, when Judge Harvey Sorkow issued the nation's first ruling upholding a disputed surrogate parenting contract.

"I believe that there is something so wrong and so harmfully unnatural about the surrogate practice that our New Jersey appellate courts will return Sara to me," she said, adding that she will keep the child's crib set up.

Whitehead named the year-old child "Sara," but since Tuesday's historic ruling the baby has been Melissa Elizabeth Stern in the eyes of the law. The biological father, William Stern, won custody and Sorkow, minutes after reading his 121-page decision, allowed Stern's wife, Elizabeth, to adopt the child.

The case, which brought worldwide attention to surrogate parenting, was sparked by Whitehead's refusal to honor the $10,000 contract under which she was artificially inseminated with Stern's sperm.

The 29-year-old housewife refused to give the baby to the Sterns and, with police officers at her Brick Township home, handed the baby out a window to her husband.

Fire breaks out in mine trapping 53, killing 1

Associated Press

MURDOCHVILLE, Quebec - A fire broke out in a copper mine in the Gaspé area of eastern Quebec, trapping dozens of miners underground overnight. Mine officials said today one worker died but 53 others were found alive.

The miners were found in emergency lunchroom shelters on different levels of the Gaspé Mine, spokeswoman Dominique Archambault said.

By mid-afternoon, 11 of the 54 men who were in the mine when fire began Wednesday night had been brought to the surface, along with the body of the one victim. Only one of those rescued was injured.

Another 29 men were located in a sealed-off and ventilated lunchroom at the 2,600-foot level, and the 13 remaining miners were found in other shelters, Archambault said. "It's great news," she said.

The cause of the fire was not known, but mine officials were ruling out an explosion. The fire started about 2,500 feet below-ground.

The fire trapped the miners during a shift change at 7 p.m. Wednesday, and many of the workers made it safely to the lunchroom area where they have fresh water, ventilation and radio communications with ground level. Mine officials said they would not let the miners leave until the smoke was cleared.

The copper mine, both underground and open-pit, has a work force of 800 and is the major employer in the town of Murdochville, population 3,900. It is located about 250 miles northeast of Quebec City on the Gaspé Peninsula at the mouth of the St. Lawrence River.

Noranda Inc., one of Canada's biggest corporations, owns the mine.

Beirut profs still held captive

Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon - Moslem kidnappers released Thursday a videotape showing U.S. hostage Jesse Turner saying his abductors were determined to trade him and three other educators for 400 Arab prisoners in Israel.

Turner, 39, of Boise, Idaho, said Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine was "firm in its demand" that a swap be arranged. The group had claimed responsibility for the Jan. 24 abduction of the four.

But his voice was barely audible in the poor quality, three-minute tape, which was delivered to the independent Beirut newspaper An-Nahar.

Reporters who saw and listened to Turner on the videotape said they were having difficulty transcribing what he said.

But they said he appeared to be making a new appeal to the American administration to put pressure on Israel to arrange the swap so that their lives would be saved.

Previous communiques from the group said hostage Alann Steen, 47, of Boston, was dangerously ill and might die. It cited high blood pressure and breathing difficulties.

The group said Steen's illness prompted it to renew its offer of the swap, which Israel has rejected.

Steen, Turner, fellow American Robert Polhill, 53, of New York City, and Indian Mihleshwar Singh, 60, were kidnapped at the U.S.-affiliated Beirut University College in Beirut's Moslem sector. Singh is a legal resident alien of the United States.

The release of the new tape came a few hours after students rallied on campus to demand the release of the four teachers held hostage for 68 days.

"All of you stand up and call, call for the release of our kidnapped four," a dozen fine-arts students chanted.

Israelis collect $150,000 for ND scientist's son

Associated Press

The father of convicted spy Jonathan Pollard said Thursday that $150,000 in private contributions from Israel for his son's defense expenses is "spent already."

Morris Pollard, a microbiologist at the University of Notre Dame, said Israelis who gave money were "sore at that government" for failing to help his son.

"It came from the people of Israel, not the government," Pollard said. "These were donations by people on the street."

Defense expenses for Jonathan Pollard and his wife, Anne Henderson Pollard, have been estimated at $200,000. Pollard, 32, a former Navy intelligence analyst, was sentenced to life in prison for espionage. Mrs. Pollard was sentenced to a five-year term for her role in the spy operation.

The defense fund contributions were to be dispatched to Morris Pollard through the Bank of Israel, but the elder Pollard said he has not received the money and doesn't know when it will arrive.

"It's spent already," he said. Pollard said he had no criticism of the prosecution of his son and daughter-in-law.

"I'm not denying his guilt. He broke the law," he said.

"A mistake was made," he said. "We should never spy on our friends. Apparently, it worked both ways."

The attorney, Harold Katz, who holds dual American-Israeli citizenship, has denied any involvement. A Reagan administration source says investigators believe Katz's Washington apartment was used to photocopy military documents obtained by Pollard.

Israeli Air Force officer Aviem Sella has been charged by federal prosecutors with recruiting Pollard to spy for Israel.

He defended Israel against any animosity that may have been aroused by the case. "Israel is the only democracy in the Middle East," he said.

Morris Pollard said his family has received letters of support from 150 Notre Dame faculty colleagues "telling us they love us, that we have friends here."

The South Bend community as well has been generally supportive, he said. "We are living in a haven of kindness here," he said.

In a related development, Israel reportedly has refused to allow an American attorney living in Tel Aviv to leave the country or answer questions from U.S. investigators about the Pollard espionage case.

Pope speaks during Chilean visit

Associated Press

SANTIAGO, Chile - Pope John Paul II told 80,000 youths who packed an open-air stadium Thursday night their faith could transform society. Student orators departed from their texts to denounce the right-wing regime and what one called its "culture of death."

Earlier, slum dwellers thronged to welcome the pontiff but stoned the police who escorted him. Some shared his podium to accuse Chile's military regime of torture, murder and causing their poverty.

The pope told a conference of bishops that he hopes for a quick return of democracy to Chile. He spent nearly 45 minutes with President Augusto Pinochet, who the pontiff has said runs a dictatorial government. Vatican sources described the meeting as courteous but would not reveal details.

Three students departed from prepared texts in the rally at the same stadium where authorities had held thousands of leftists—and tortured and killed many—after Pinochet seized power in a 1973 coup.

"We are desperate and repressed," said student Filamir Landeros. The pope listened intently and the stadium filled with cheers and applause.

Landeros complained of living in a country "where they impose on us a culture of death." It was a twist on Pinochet's own welcoming statement to the pope on Wednesday, when the ruler described the threat of communism as a "culture of death."

John Paul told the youths that if they led lives "rooted in faith and the love of Jesus Christ, you will be capable of transforming society, of constructing a more humane, more brotherly and more Christian Chile."

"Now, in this stadium, a place of sporting events, but also of pain and suffering in past eras, I want to repeat to young Chileans: assume your responsibilities."

The national police said Thursday night that since the pope's arrival Wednesday, 42 police had been injured, one seriously, in clashes with "delinquents who do not understand the meaning of the papal visit."

The police statement did not mention civilian casualties.

Protesters smashed all the windows of two police buses that led the pope on a crisp, brilliant autumn morning to the squalid La Bandera slum, whose 90,000 people are plagued by drug addiction, prostitution and poverty.

Helmeted riot police used their shields to push the crowds back. Witnesses reported seeing several people who appeared to be injured.

The scene was repeated when John Paul left and police fired tear gas into the stone-throwing crowds.

For reasons that were not clear, the local church erected a backdrop on the makeshift stage that depicted wooden shacks but hid the real ones.

People chosen by Roman Catholic priests were brought to the pope's side and spoke out against Pinochet's government to a crowd of several hundred thousand.

University radio and television stations carried the denunciations, but government television cut the sound during that portion of John Paul's appearance and substituted background music.

"I have listened to you with much attention, and my spirit is deeply moved," the pope said. He urged the faithful to "use all means within your power to banish from your country all the causes of unjust poverty."

Reagan issued a statement saying he was "deeply disappointed" by the outcome but vowing to continue the battle against excessive federal spending.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the defeat would help the president by demonstrating his willingness to fight in his final 21 months in office.

Hours before the vote, Reagan had upped the ante in terms of his political prestige by visiting the Capitol to plead with GOP senators to back him.

Fitzwater quoted Reagan as telling the senators, "I beg you for your vote. Give us this vote and let us stand for a majority (within the Republican Party) that can run this party."

But after the extraordinary meeting, Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas told the Senate, "I think it's safe to say no minds were changed."

Reagan, after deciding on short notice to travel from the White House to the Capitol, spent two hours trying to press his case. First he met with all Republican senators, then with the 13 who sided with Democrats in the first vote on Wednesday.

"The president is heightening the stakes by coming up here," Byrd said. "But I don't blame him, giving it the old college try."

At issue was a measure that permits states to raise the speed limit to 65 miles per hour on rural stretches of interstate highways and earmarks more than 100 highway demonstration projects tailor-made for individual lawmakers.

Reagan vetoed the bill last week, calling it a budget-buster that is larded with wasteful projects.

Democrats maintained that the bill is under budget, and said that sustaining the veto would cause the loss of 800,000 jobs during the warm weather construction season.

But beyond the legislation itself, the veto fight became a test of Reagan's standing and prestige after months of political damage caused by the Iran-Contra affair.

'Spring Day on Campus' brings guests to SMC

By JEANNE BARTLING
News Staff

Saint Mary's will welcome high school juniors from nearby states in the College's annual Spring Day on Campus (SDOC) on Sunday. The Spring Day features a variety of events enabling high school students to become acquainted with Saint Mary's.

"We sent invitations to high school juniors in seven nearby states," said Admissions Counselor and SDOC Coordinator Kathleen Rose. Invitations were sent to juniors in Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, and Wisconsin, Rose said.

Mary Pat Nolan, associate director of admissions, said "students who visit SMC are more likely to apply. SDOC gives high school juniors and their families an opportunity to experience SMC at its best. . . it gives them a taste of what life is like as a student here."

The schedule of events for guests and their families include campus tours and a continental breakfast with Saint Mary's students acting as hostesses throughout the day. The activities are meant to allow the high school juniors "to meet and mingle with fellow students interested in SMC," Rose said.

One of the events scheduled for the visiting students is a formal welcome from Mary Ann Rowan, director of Admissions. Dorothy Feigl, acting vice-president and dean is scheduled to give an admission workshop in which she will explain the procedure necessary for admission to the College.

SDOC also features a panel discussion for guests and their parents. Students and parents will have the opportunity to address questions to current students.

Lunch in the Dining Hall will be followed by an Administrator/Faculty Fair. Student Affairs, Student Government, other college organizations and each of the college's departments will be represented.

thing, we can't give enough. We could have the ball every week and it wouldn't be enough."

Harrison said they are hoping for a big turnout. So far, 175 tickets have been sold and "ticket and T-shirt sales are picking up," said Harrison. Tickets can be purchased in both dining halls, from dorm Charity Ball representatives and from Harrison, who can be reached at 283-3476 or at 144 Morrissey. Tickets for the ball will also be sold at the door.

Tickets are $10 per couple and $8 for a single person. Included in the price are refreshments, dancing and fun, said Harrison.

The Law, a popular campus band, and the "internationally renowned" Pat Hyden Jazz Quartet will provide entertainment. Attire is semi-formal.

Harrison said he is "excited and enthusiastic and elated" about the ball. "It's going to be fantastic," he said, "go to the ball to have a ball."

The dance will be held at the South Dining Hall from 9 p.m. until 2 a.m. A VIP party for faculty and staff beginning at 8 p.m. will precede the ball.

Nuclear experts form special team

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS - An international team of nuclear experts is being established and will be available to go anywhere a nuclear accident strikes, an American physician who aided victims of the Chernobyl disaster said Thursday.

"It will be sort of the Red Adair of nuclear energy," Dr. Robert Gale said at a news conference at the American College of Physicians, referring to the famed oil-rig expert known for his skill at capping wells.

"It will fly to the site of any nuclear accident to give advice . . . about response and treatment," said Gale, a bone-marrow specialist at the University of California at Los Angeles School of Medicine.

The team will be made up of five or six people, plus a backup for each member, Gale said.

"We hope to have it functional on the anniversary of the Chernobyl accident - April 26," he said.

should protect the fetal life by law and the policy ought to be under constant review.

"Some say that this is not a realistic policy, that it will force women to have unwanted pregnancies. People will suffer, but people suffer now (by abortions). We must measure the degree of suffering," said McCormick.

McCormick said he does not believe that the decision of abortion should be left to the individual. "Some object, asking what I, a celibate priest, can know about carrying a full term baby. They feel the more experience they have with a situation, the more they know about that situation. Very often, the self involved are self-interested with one opinion. Does one really have to be a soldier in Vietnam to measure the immorality of the war?"

There are many cultural obstacles in getting public policy to be a reality, according to McCormick. The obstacles include: human sexuality, viewing abortion as a private matter and the influence of the media.

"Until we come to grips with the moral factors, there is nothing we can do as a nation. It is my conviction that that is just plain sad," said McCormick.

Widely regarded as America's foremost Catholic bioethicist, McCormick entered the Society of Jesus in 1940. Before joining Notre Dame's faculty last fall, McCormick had been the Rose F. Kennedy Professor of Christian Ethics at Georgetown Uni-question of when human life begins," according to McCormick. "The key problem is the evaluation of human life." For McCormick, this problem is complex and cannot always be solved directly.

The difficulty in public policy lies in the fact that "public policy cannot exist successfully unless there is some ground of agreement. Here, public policy turns to the evaluation of human life, where there is disagreement," said McCormick.

According to McCormick public policy should involve procedures, principles and application. "Matters should be judged in Congress. Through our representatives, we share in the democratic process. I think if (we) turned to an electorate, we would have a remarkably different policy. If we accept the traditional Christian evaluation of fetal life, we

Murder suspect attempts suicide

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA - A man charged with murder after police found half-naked women chained in his basement and body parts in his freezer tried to hang himself in jail Thursday, but was not seriously injured, authorities said.

Gary Heidnik has been held without bail at the Philadelphia Detention Center since being arrested last week and charged with two counts of murder and multiple counts of rape and kidnapping.

David Owens, superintendent of the Philadelphia prisons, said Heidnik used his T-shirt to suspend himself from the shower pipe.

A corrections officer discovered Heidnik, who was being kept in isolation in the adult services wing of the center and was alone in the shower room at the time of the attempt, Owens said.

An officer assigned to watch Heidnik was outside the room but lost sight of him in the steam from the shower, Owens said.

Heidnik was taken to the Guiffre Medical Center, where Dr. James Guiffre said the prisoner had an abrasion around his neck, but was not seriously injured.

Hospital spokesman Frank Craven said Heidnik was brought to the hospital about 10:30 p.m. "with what looks like an apparent suicide attempt."

S. African priest discusses freedom

By MARTIN RODGERS
Staff Reporter

Father Malusi Mpumlwana spoke Thursday night at the Center for Social Concerns as part of the African Studies Program and the International Peace Lecture Series.

Mpumlwana asked his audience to reflect on the historical evolution of the present movement in South Africa which will eventually "bring the downfall of the most inequitable system since Nazi Germany."

In his lecture, titled "South Africa: The Struggle for Liberation," he broke down South Africa's history in this century into three historical periods: the stage of incredulity (1940-1948), the stage of preparation (1944-1983) and the stage of "concerted action" (1983-1986). The latter stage was the ultimate focus of the lecture.

Mpumlwana, a graduate student at the University of Capetown, said the concerted action phase was one where various liberation groups have begun to "pool together." Those who seek freedom and justice have "begun to find each other."

"This concerted action offers new opportunities which I believe will eventually lead to the next stage, that of the government's retreat," said Mpumlwana, who is at Notre Dame continuing his theological studies.

"But this is just beginning and the government still has massive resources."

Mpumlwana said concerted action must bring together South Africa's liberation effort and coordinate with international action and with the Church or religion.

Mpumlwana said the United States has developed a bad image in his country, an image based on "Dallas," "Miami Vice" and Ronald Reagan. But despite this image, Mpumlwana said he has been impressed with the people of the United States and their efforts. He said he was heartened by the volume of consciousness of the American people but that there is a need for them to network.

He suggested the University continue and augment programs and organizations such as the Center for Social Concerns, the Anti-apartheid network and the Kellogg Institute for International Studies.

My Dear Colleagues and Students,

April 2, 1987

I would like to share with you a letter that I recently received from a Notre Dame Junior - Danny Harrison. I want to share this letter because it really concerns us all:

Reverend Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C.
President
Administration Building
University of Notre Dame

Dear Father Hesburgh:

I am writing on behalf of the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's Charity Ball, which will be held in the South Dining Hall on the Notre Dame campus (Saturday, April 4, 1987 from 9:00 p.m. until 2:00 a.m.). Please consider the information enclosed on the Catholic Charity Relief Service (CRS), which has been designated as this year's benefactor of the event. CRS has been selected after careful scrutiny of the many relief organizations available, because it has proven to be a direct and reliable source for the dissemination of funds.

We of the Charity Ball understand that money is crucial in the elimination of world hunger, but for such philanthropic endeavors as ours to remain effective, they must also promote a greater sense of awareness among the people. We of the Charity Ball truly wish to leave an indelible impression on everyone's consciousness. How many times does one throw out the "garbage mail" depicting scenes of hungry and homeless in some nameless third world country? How many times does one cry, "How can I tell if my contribution is being sent to the right places?" And, unfortunately, many misgivings about such charitable organizations are often true. This is why we wish to stress that not only are we a source of aid, but also that the Charity Ball will be a source of education and awareness to all those touched by its presence.

Perhaps we shall raise $20,000, or perhaps we will only raise $10,000. A large sum means very little if one is not conscious that the aid must not stop at this point. Instead, we must continually wage battle against the evils of world hunger. We can only hope that perhaps the Charity Ball is the reason for someone to donate a large sum of money, or for a college graduate to join the Peace Corps. There is so much we wish to foster, but we cannot do it alone. We know that our success - both monetary and enlightening - rests in the hands of the community. Only through the help and support of those dedicated to the ideals which we profess can the Charity Ball be a success. Please help us as much as you can, for you, not us, are the Charity Ball.

The Charity Ball 1987 promises to be an extravaganza in response - not a mere material extravaganza, but a responsive extravaganza of people joined together in human concern. I ask your support as our campus leader who has established himself as a champion against injustice and suffering everywhere.

Sincerely,

Danny L. Harrison

I know many of you also received this letter. The famine in Ethiopia represents an immediate need. I believe that we are challenged to act, to give assistance to our brothers and sisters in Ethiopia.

Our Holy Father, John Paul II, Catholic Bishops and Religious and Civil Leaders around the world have called good people everywhere to generously respond to the plight of the people of Ethiopia. I encourage all to attend this union of family support at the 1987 Charity Ball.

God Bless,

T. M. Hesburgh

Equality in work place needs adequate time

Dear Editor:

Given the recent Supreme Court ruling on affirmative action for women, I would like to give a few opinions concerning women and pay disparity. First, before being attacked as chauvinistic, I would like to point out that all rational people, myself included, support equal pay for equal work. To deny the same pay for equal work would be ludicrous.

Unfortunately, women may be discriminated against due to forced absences. They may get pregnant. Even if a pregnancy is not planned initially, what if a woman changes her mind? Companies are wary of promoting women to positions which they may be forced to leave. Can you blame them? If only for a short time, these 'vacations' can be costly to a business. This is a fact of life.

What can be done? There are no easy answers. Promoting women for the sake of promoting women, or any minority for that matter, can lead to further friction between groups in the work force. What about being promoted on merit, qualifications and performance? Disparities in the past can not be made up over night. Short term solutions are not the answer to a problem that will require long term results. I am not saying that all programs directed toward rights for minorities should be disbanded, but advancement should be based on merit. Programs should be directed at people helping themselves. Progress at another's expense can lead only to resentment in the long run and further hostility between minorities and the 'majority'.

Also, one must be wary in interpreting statistics concerning pay between men and women. Comparisons must be made with care. For example, matching a male factory worker to a secretary is useless. Women have traditionally held the majority of lower paying secretarial and clerical jobs which have lower wages. It has only been in recent history that it has been common for women to go to college and then enter the work force in professional positions. It will take some time for these women to fight their way up the corporate ladder. I wish them all the luck.

Open discussion should include non-dissenters

Dear Editor:

While I did not have the opportunity to listen to Father McCormick in his lecture concerning abortion, I did have the opportunity to read an article of his in the November 8 issue of America in which he argues for the necessity of dissent (and abortion in this domain). His firm conviction about the Catholicity of dissent needs to be addressed.

Fr. McCormick is, of course, a Catholic who, among other things, recognizes the supreme authority of the Pope above all others in doctrinal affairs. "Theologians cannot speak for the whole Church. Only the Pope and the bishops with the Pope can do that." A transgression against this notion is clearly not Catholic.

Where, then, does the role of the theologian fit in? Does he have no "freedom" of thought, of inquiry? Of course he has freedom. Vatican II stated plainly that "faithful persons (possess the) lawful freedom of inquiry and of thought, and the freedom to express their minds humbly and courageously about those matters in which they enjoy competence." Dissent then, as Fr. McCormick is so determined to tell us, is Catholic.

The question then arises: Why was Father Curran stripped of his teaching authority along with Father Hunthausen who had some of his pastoral powers removed? Are the Pope and Cardinal Ratzinger contradicting what Vatican II plainly stated? This is, of course, the complaint McCormick and others of his "liberal" group are leveling at the Vatican and other "conservatives."

The problem, of course, lies in how these two different camps interpret Vatican II's definition of "dissent." The "freedom to express (one's) mind humbly and courageously" both camps must agree upon. But let us examine more closely what Curran and Hunthausen have done. Yes, they exercised their right to "dissent" insofar as Vatican II defined it (both were quite courageous), but it seems they took one additional step that is indisputably not Catholic. Curran, Hunthausen and their supporters on this issue refuse to see that teaching unapproved ideas (Curran) or conducting one's pastoral duties which are in direct conflict with Vatican authority (Hunthausen) do not constitute "dissent" as Vatican II so clearly defined it. This is not the "humble expression" of views not necessarily in agreement with Rome, it is the execution of them. Execution (of whatever sort) of any unapproved doctrine, be it through dissemination in a class room or pastoral powers, clearly necessitates discipline. The liberals' all-too-often-heard gross misinterpretation of "The spirit of Vatican II" is bogus. A boy can "freely inquire" whether it is right for him to set the table; his not setting the table, however, when his mother clearly dictate that he do so, is flagrant disobedience.

With this in mind, let us consider McCormick's abortion discussion. I am not prepared to debate whether his discussion is a humble and courageous expression of his views or an execution of his views. It's probably the former. Nevertheless, let us keep in mind that only the "Pope and the bishops with the Pope can speak for the whole Church"-theologians cannot. Fine. Let us have more of these "open view" discussion. Let us have talks on abortion; let us invite more Maguieres, some Currans; bring in more of these liberals who always get in the New York Times. In doing so, however, let us recognize two things. First, the serious danger we pose for the young minds here who might get the impression that dissent is at the center of Catholic theology. Second, while what these theologians have to say is interesting, we can rest assured that their dissenting views are not Catholic because the Pope and Ratzinger have listened to their ideas again and again and have rejected them.

Finally, I have an idea. Let us arrange to hear a theologian who will not present dissenting views (strange as that might be). While we're at it, why not go for it all and ask Ratzinger? True, he may not be the type of entertainer Maguire is, but who knows -he may even prove to be interesting.

Hagler confident of fight victory

Associated Press

LAS VEGAS - Marvelous Marvin Hagler is aware of Sugar Ray Leonard's popularity, but he also is secure in his talent and in his place in boxing.

"Just because he won a gold medal and became America's sweetheart, doesn't mean I'm a bum," said the middleweight champion, who will fight Leonard in a scheduled 12-round bout Monday night at Caesars Palace.

Leonard is coming out of retirement for the challenge, and a lot of boxing people think the challenge is too late.

Leonard, who won a gold medal in the Olympics almost 12 years ago, has had just two fights in almost 62 months. His last fight was a ninth-round knockout of Kevin Howard May 11, 1984.

"I don't believe he has any business in there with me right now," Hagler said Thursday. "He's been sitting on the other side (outside) of the ring (as a television boxing analyst) and thinking he has the tools to do it."

"That's great. It makes me a lot of money."

Hagler is guaranteed $12 million, and promoter Bob Arum said that Hagler, who also has a percentage deal, should get at least $15 million. Leonard is guaranteed $11 million.

"I need a new breath of air, like something to motivate me," Hagler said of Leonard's challenge, which has been criticized in some quarters because of retinal surgery on Leonard's left eye that prompted him to retire in 1982.

"I'm not thinking about his eye," Hagler said. "He's the one that made the choice. I'm going in there to do a job. My job is to defend the world middleweight championship."

Hagler is a 2½-1 favorite for the bout at a soldout 15,300-seat outdoor stadium. It is being sanctioned as title fight by the World Boxing Council.

The International Boxing Federation recognizes Hagler as champion, but would declare the title vacant should Leonard win.

Leonard has said he doesn't care what titles are at stake because the challenge of fighting Hagler is enough for him.

Leonard also said he will retire again, win or lose.

Gooden: When did the drugs start?

Associated Press

NEW YORK - It was a mild October night in Boston, the fifth game of the World Series between the Red Sox and New York Mets had barely begun and sweat dripped from Dwight Gooden's face.

Perspiration seeped from under the brim of his cap, into his Despite rumors circulating during the 1986 season that Gooden was on drugs, his teammates said they never would have guessed.

"I heard the same rumors that you heard," said Ray Knight, the Mets third baseman, now with Baltimore. "But I never saw any indication of any changes in his per-tried to hide an ankle injury. Then, he was fined for missing a spring workout. Initially, he said he was in a car accident, and that turned out to be untrue.

In April, Gooden, his sister and his fiancée were detained by police at LaGuardia Airport after an argument with a rental-car agent.

At the same time, Gooden's performance fell off. He was 24-4 in his Cy Young campaign of 1985, but 17-6 last year. After giving up 17 hits and eight earned runs in nine innings of two World Series losses, Gooden missed the Mets ticker tape parade. He said he overslept.

Last Dec. 13, he was arrested along with a nephew and three other friends after a late-night fight with Tampa police. Gooden had been pulled over in his silver Mercedes-Benz while on his way back from a basketball game. And, last month, Gooden's girlfriend, Carlene Pearson, pleaded guilty to possession of a stolen .38-caliber handgun that she had tried to carry through a metal detector at LaGuardia on Jan. 30.

"Not waking up? that's glaring. Sweating? it could be a symptom," Yancovitz said. "The mood swings, inappropriate behavior, inability to tolerate the little troubles we have in everyday life ... it's very symptomatic, very suspicious."

eyes and off his chin. Temperature at game time in Fenway Park was 64 degrees and dropping rapidly after a rain-shower.

Gooden had dark circles under his eyes; his face looked drawn. He pulled at his hat, pulled at his pants, pulled at his Mets jersey. He wiped his forehead with his long sleeves. He blew on his pitching hand as if it were cold.

That Gooden was laboring was obvious. He lasted four innings, giving up three runs and nine hits as the Mets lost 4-2 in his second World Series failure.

Was it nerves, or cocaine? could the Mets, or should the Mets, have suspected that Gooden had a cocaine problem?

"Excessive sweating is a symptom of drug use, but somebody pitching under pressure? It's hard to say," said Dr. Stanley Yancovitz, medical director of the Stuyvesant Square chemical dependency program at Beth Israel Medical Center in New York.

"But if you put the pattern together, it's very suspicious that he's had a lot of problems for quite a while."

On Wednesday, the Mets pitcher checked himself into the Smithers Alcoholism and Treatment Center in New York for treatment of cocaine use.

sonality. But then again, I don't know what you look for. What do you look for?

"When I was in his presence, he was always the same," Knight told the New York Post, "and I observed him closely."

Gooden's 1986 season was rife with erratic behavior that might have suggested drug use, Yancovitz said.

Before spring training even had begun last year, Gooden

DON'T EVEN TOUCH THAT DIAL!

WVFI is back on the air

MIKE RESTLE
features writer

It's new! It's improved! It's bigger and better than ever! And what's more, it's back. Yes, WVFI, the Voice of the Fighting Irish (channel 64 on your AM dial), has finally begun broadcasting again. The student-run radio station had shut down just before finals week last semester in order to begin work on a $70,000 renovation project. And as many disgruntled listeners soon discovered upon returning to school in January, the station remained off the air for the next two months as the work continued.

The major project of the renovation was a complete overhaul of what has been said to be the oldest broadcasting system in the country still in use today. Because the conventional method of transmitting radio signals directly into the air requires a very expensive tower antenna as well as hard-to-get FCC licensing, the station instead uses the electrical wiring of the buildings on campus as antennas. That is why the station's signal can only be received on the Notre Dame or St. Mary's campus (or in very close proximity). Repairs were necessary on these wires in the tunnels under the campus, as well as on the couplers in each dorm. Also, an entirely new transmitting system was set up to replace the old one in the studio.

Who's paying for all this? Wonder of wonders, the University finally gave in. The Administration found that it was no longer able to keep dodging the bullet as it had managed to do so often in the past. "A student-run radio station is a waste if the students can't hear it," says Station Manager Kara O'Neill. "We were (finally) able to persuade the Administration to agree with us." So the Board of Trustees approved for the station $35,000 for three years. "We spent two of those in one," laughs O'Neill, referring to the $70,000 project. A loan from the University covered what the appropriation didn't.

The renovations were finally completed during spring break, and on Monday morning after students were back, the highly-touted return of the "new" WVFI

Fischer captures a school and a soul

MATT HYLAND
features writer

Edward Fischer's autobiography "Notre Dame Remembered" captures the spirit of a man and of the place of which he has been a part for most of his life. He tells of people like Red Smith, Knute Rockne, John M. Cooney, John T. Frederick, James Withey, Paul Fenlon, and Thomas Strich, all of whom have brought a certain richness to Notre Dame. He was a friend of Sister Madeleva, who led Saint Mary's through dynamic changes.

His work manages to praise Notre Dame and Saint Mary's without hyped-up sensationalism. His quiet and respectful tone puts Notre Dame in a new perspective. He makes the side of the university seen by students, faculty and staff more meaningful to someone familiar with only the surface of the place.

When asked what he is doing now, he responds, "I'm retired." This does not mean he is inactive, however. On the contrary, he walks every morning from his home, Knute Rockne's old house on Saint Vincent Street, to the Memorial Library, and he later walks the mile and a half to Saint Mary's for lunch. In retirement he has completed nine books, seven of which were written in the Far East. When a book is completed, he begins another the same day. With his autobiography "Notre Dame Remembered" now available, Fischer has already begun "Life in the Afternoon" which is about good ways of growing old.

Self-discipline, he claims, is the hardest and most important part of writing. Even on days when he does not feel like writing, he does anyway. "Writing is harder than teaching," says Fischer. He has to discipline himself more to write. "Not writing would be even more difficult for me," he says. In the classroom the discipline was external. "You are expected to be on time and be prepared; you don't want to look silly. But whether or not I show up at the typewriter each morning, no one knows and no one cares," says Fischer.

"I do my best writing when I'm walking," he says of his lonely walks. Fischer's autobiography tells of a childhood spent mostly in solitude. Even in his office in the library basement, he has a quiet aura about him as he leans back in a chair with his hands wrapped around the back of his head. In youth Fischer spent more time in libraries and with older people than on the playground with peers.

His quiet and humble personality sets the tone for his lucid account of his years at Notre Dame and his youth. Fischer stresses that an artistic humility is essential in writing. "Learning to rewrite is most important. Tolstoy rewrote 'War and Peace' several times," he says. An arrogant writer would consider the first draft as wonderful and not work hard to make it better.

Fischer finds all inspiration providential. "I do what I feel; it's the intuitive push. You can't fight it. You have to go with your feelings," says Fischer. In his book he writes, "Through the years I have learned that when you are supposed to do something you had better go ahead and do it; if you don't, everything goes haywire."

For fifty years he has been working on the basics. "Benny Goodman still practiced the scales everyday, because he said 'If I didn't I'd only be good.' " Fischer also remembers famous Notre Dame characters who stressed the importance of the basics: "Red Smith still read Strunk and White's 'Elements of Style' once each year. Knute Rockne always began the first practice of the season with a review of the fundamentals. Holding up the ball he said 'This is a football.' Joe Savoldi said, 'Slow down coach, you're going too fast.' "

Fischer's autobiography emphasizes the importance the fundamentals involved in clear and concise writing. The professor taught these basics in 361 O'Shaughnessy until his retirement in 1976. He also taught classes in film and design. He is responsible for initiating film studies. "I introduced film studies at Notre Dame and eventually helped pioneer them throughout this country and abroad," writes Fischer. One of the movies his students made was the 1953 film, "Shake Down the Thunder."

Fischer has many tips for those interested in writing: "Don't let the written word get too far from the spoken word," he says. The professor passes his ideas on to today's students through guest lectures he gives to writing classes. He warns student of the clutter and cloudiness of "gobbledygook." "If you have to reread a sentence or a paragraph because of foginess, the writer is stealing your time. People say, 'Time is money,' but that is not true. Time is far more valuable than money. You can't repay a minute."

Fischer's book is also filled with humorous anecdotes that share a remarkable look at the Notre Dame of the past and the changes it has undergone. The reader sees the continuity of the Notre Dame tradition that began with Father Sorin on the shores of Saint Mary's lake.

"Notre Dame Remembered" is being well received. Professor Donald Costello, chairman of the American Studies department, said, "I've never read a better autobiography." Father Hesburgh said of the work, "It's a wonderful book, especially for one who loves this place and cherishes it as I do." Sister Marjorie Jones of Saint Mary's College observed, "I thought no one could put words together as beautifully as E. B. White did, but Professor Fischer does it equally well, and that is pretty close to perfection in my estimation." "Kirkus Reviews," a service for librarians and booksellers, reports the following: "Well-written and big-hearted, this book is great for Notre Damers, and there is much in it for others as well."

EDWARD FISCHER

NOTRE DAME REMEMBERED

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY

became reality. It was well worth the wait.

Broadcasting from its brand new studio on the second floor of LaFortune, WVFI can now be received loud and clear by every dorm on the Notre Dame and St. Mary's campuses. According to disk jockey Dan Janick, "It should be the strongest, best quality AM signal you can receive. That's the feedback we're getting from students. People are even getting us on their walkmans." Gone is the annoying hum and other background noise that had plagued listeners for so long.

Posters around campus proclaim new promotions: prize giveaways (albums, food, clothes, Huey Lewis tickets, etc.), new album reviews, campus events updates each hour, campus personalities as guest DJs, and more. The station is also now a subscriber of and contributor to the College Music Journal, a weekly report on what other college radio stations throughout the country are doing and playing -- sort of a "college Top 40" magazine.

But, more importantly, what hasn't changed is the music. O'Neil assures us that "The music format is still the same." It's still a fairly loose format, but mostly 'alternative progressive music' as we call it."

Translate that into European and American bands that no one's ever heard of before: groups such as The The, Green on Red, Killing Joke, and The Damned. However, WVFI also plays more familiar groups like U2, REM, and the Talking Heads.

Random student poll participant Joe Jarosz, for one, is glad that the station is back on the air. "WVFI is a good change of pace. It's the only place where you can hear that kind of music. I just get sick of hearing 'Hip to be Square' all the time."

But of course, Mr. Jarosz is not the only one who's happy. Student response in general has been extremely good. Says O'Neil, "Requests are up incredibly. DJs sometimes don't get a chance to play their own music; they get so many requests. Now people are requesting songs within our format -- moreso than before -- so that's all very good." (That request line once again is 239-6400 -- and remember to dial 9 first!)

Although WVFI plays, as O'Neil said, mostly progressive, 'college' music, there is a little something for everyone. There are three oldies shows (either Supremes and Chuck Berry-type music or the Doors and Jimi Hendrix, depending on the DJ), from 3-5 p.m. Mondays and Tuesdays, and 9-11 a.m. Saturdays. Heavy metal fans will enjoy tuning in every Sunday night from 9-11, and for the hard-core punk enthusiasts, there is a show 3-5 p.m. Wednesdays just for you. Tuesday nights, 10-11 p.m. feature the popular call-in talk show "Speaking of Sports." Wednesday night, 10-11, is "Radio Free Notre Dame," a campus topics talk show. Album reviews air at 9 p.m. every Monday, and new releases at 9 p.m. on Tuesdays.

But even with all the new offices and equipment, there are still some minor problems. "One is the sheer size of the new studios," relates Mike Iannelli. "When we were over at O'Shaughnessy, the record library was right there in the studio. Now, when someone calls in with a request, I have to run all the way down the hall, find the record, and make it back before the record I'm playing ends. I think they're trying to make sure we get enough exercise around here."

Also, because the station can't be received by off-campus students, O'Neil would like to increase exposure to that group by piping music into the South Dining Hall and LaFortune, but has run into problems there, too. Although the dining hall already has a system in place, the echoes created by the cathedral ceilings are a problem. The system in LaFortune is not really working well, either. These problems must be worked out if the ideas are to materialize. For now though, WVFI will be keeping its fans very happy just the way it is: better, stronger, and refreshingly different.

Tower of Power: making headlines with the News

This Sunday Huey Lewis and the News will play at the Notre Dame ACC. They will be joined throughout their set by the group Tower of Power. "Who is the Tower of Power?" you ask, "And what are they doing on my campus?"

This is a good question. To answer, the Tower of Power hails from Oakland, California. In their own words, they play "funky soul and rhythm and blues." In their early days they were popular in their own right, touring and recording with bands like Creedence Clearwater Revival, Sly and the Family Stone, Elton John and Smokey Robinson. Then in the late '70's they dropped out of sight.

Now in the mid-'80's they are experiencing a big comeback. England loves them and Elvis Costello and Jake Riviera are among their British admirers. Here in America they have been prominently featured on several Huey Lewis and the News albums and are now touring with him. I talked with group leader Emilio Castillo on Wednesday afternoon, about the group's new success.

Ob: You guys have been around for quite a long time, right?

EC: We're going on 19 years now.

Ob: With basically the same lineup?

EC: We've got five original members.

Ob: Your press release says that you've gotten your biggest breaks in Europe. Do you find that Europeans are more open-minded about music?

EC: I think in general there's a trend toward soul music over there, starting in the late seventies. We went over there a few years ago. We've gone back several times since and our market's definitely there. They love soul music and see us as 'the real thing.'

Ob: Doesn't that seem strange since soul is so distinctly American?

EC: Well, I think Americans take it for granted because this is where it came from.

Ob: Are you going to do any solo dates while you're touring with the News?

EC: We'll do eight dates: some small arenas, some colleges, the Bottom Line in New York, and the Letterman show on May 6th.

Ob: Will you be playing with the Late Night House Band?

EC: It'll be their band and our horns. We'll tape during the day and then do the Bottom Line shows.

Ob: How did you get involved with Huey Lewis?

EC: He came up to me at an awards benefit called The Bammys in San Francisco (the Bay Area music awards), and he said to me, "You're Emilio Castillo aren't you?" He said that he and his band had been fans of ours since they were all about 11 years old. He was just going on about how much he liked the band and I said, "Thank you, what's your name?" "Huey," he said. "Huey? Is your band the News? You guys got debut album of the year, right?" But he says, "Oh yeah... but that's nothing, you guys are the greatest and blah, blah, blah." So about a month later he brought his whole band over to the old Waldorf to see us. This was back in '82.

Anyway, they came backstage and they were all excited and we became really good friends. A little while later we did our first tune with him, "Hope You Love Me Like You Say You Do," and I was very pleased to find that they played good, soulful music. I kinda thought they were a punk band or something, at first, but was really pleased with that song 'cause it sounded like Sam and Dave or something.

Ob: Are those your influences? Sam and Dave? The Motown session musicians?

EC: Our influences include all

R and B, Memphis, James Brown, Philadelphia, any soul.

Ob: You seem to have had a real resurgence in popularity these last few years. To what do you attribute that?

EC: Well, for one, we never gave up. We stayed together and toured. We're also an excellent performing band, and I think people get more out of a stage performance. Ob: How have you guys been received on the Fore! tour? Do you get a solo spot?

EC: Oh yeah, Huey features us and says our name loud and proud. He even sings one of our songs, "Nothing's Stopping Us Now." He's a big fan of ours and I wouldn't be doing this if he weren't. Soon it got to the point where the Tower of Power was getting more popular, getting more offers for gigs. But they were all the same kind of gigs. You know, club dates where you have to travel forever, do all this work, and end up getting taken by some club owner. Well, when Huey featured one of my songs on the Fore! album ("It's As Simple As That") and needed our horn section, we signed on. Now we're turning people down when they call for gigs. You know, the less you're around the more they want you and the more you're around the less they want you.

Ob: That must be pretty satisfying, having promoters chasing you.

EC: It is satisfying. Actually, it's funny (laughs). Ob: How is playing for 20,000 people in an arena different from playing for 50 people in a club?

EC: There's no real difference. You play the same way to the hilt.

EC: It is satisfying. Actually, it's funny (laughs).

Ob: How is playing for 20,000 people in an arena different from playing for 50 people in a club?

EC: There's no real difference. You play the same way, to the hilt.

U2's best effort yet

KRIS MURPHY
features writer

In the two years since U2's last album The Unforgettable Fire, rock 'n' roll fans the world over have come to expect a lot from the band. You can't blame them. The Unforgettable Fire is far from perfect, but it had plenty of truly memorable moments and the group's uncompromising idealism and incredible performances have won them a huge and rabid following. Bono, the Edge, Adam Clayton and Larry comprise probably the most popular group in the world.

Records The Joshua Tree

With all the expectations and pressure it's no wonder the band took two years to release its new album The Joshua Tree, but release it they have, and it's a big relief. Instead of becoming pompous and complacent like most former "biggest groups in the world" they've managed to produce the best album of their almost ten-year-old career.

Unforgettable Fire producers

Brian Eno and Daniel Lanois return and they're responsible for the cathedral organ that greets the listener as the album's first sound. Then from somewhere in the background comes the familiar choppy ringing of the Edge's guitar and Bono is singing, "I want to run/I want to hide/I want to tear down the walls that hold me inside." Those words are from "Where the Streets Have No Name" and they sum up the central theme of the album; people are walled in, imprisoned by everything from their government to themselves. This is an album about people struggling with powers bigger than themselves for their freedom. It's also about redemption, a subject they've always been obsessed with.

The second song "I Still Haven't Found What I'm Looking For" deals with that obsession. Bono sings, "I believe in the Kingdom Come/Then all the colors will bleed into one/But yes I'm still running." Musically, the first two songs are typical U2: Edge's eerie droning and the highly assertive rhythm section of Mullen and Clayton.

The next song shows the strong influence of Eno and Lanois. It's called "With or Without You" and it's a strange hybrid. The first half belongs to Eno, a man famous for his incredible synthesizer and weird noise albums in the early seventies. He creates a spare landscape of drums and ping-ponging synth noises over which Bono half-whispers the lyrics. Just when it's starting to get old, the Edge comes roaring through the mix with a beautiful stinging guitar part, and the song dies away. It's an interesting effect, but it sounds like two different songs. Eno and Lanois are both given singing and playing credit on the album so I guess it's no real surprise. Former U2 producer

Steve Lillywhite is also given credit, but only for mixing a few of the songs.

The next song is "Bullet the Blue Sky," a stinging attack on American militarism that features some of Bono's most inspired singing ever and wild neo-psychedelic guitar playing from the Edge. He sounds like a cross between Jimi Hendrix and Bob Mould.

"Red Hill Mining Town" is a very successful experiment with folk instrumentation. It is also a fine third-person account of the effect of Britain's coal strike on a married couple by Bono. "Running to Stand Still" also features country/folk instrumentation in its account of heroin addiction.

"Mothers of the Disappeared" is the album's last song and also its most haunting. The subject is the abduction, torture and murder of thousands of young people in countries like Argentina and Brazil. The music is hushed and an ominous synthesizer is the main instrument that evokes the dread that one would feel at hearing a late-night knock at the door. Bono approaches the tragedy from a mother's point of view; "Midnight, our sons and daughters/Were cut down and taken from us/Hear their heartbeat/We hear their heartbeat/In the wind. . ."

The Joshua Tree is a challenging and consistent statement from one of this decade's bravest bands. The music is stirring and eclectic and the lyrics continually address real problems in an intelligent manner. Bono insists that music can change things for the better and it's hard to argue with this when faced with The Joshua Tree.

Psychedelic Furs in a 'holding pattern'

PSYCHEDELIC FURS

MIDNIGHT TO MIDNIGHT

KRIS MURPHY
features writer

"Heartbreak Beat" the first song on the new Psychedelic Furs' album Midnight to Midnight is seductive, instantly memorable and perfectly played and sung. In other words, it's another great mid-tempo Furs song in the tradition of "The Ghost in You" and "Love My Way."

Records Midnight to Midnight

Psychedelic Furs

The song "Heartbreak Beat" begins with a high, wavering synth note. Some horns kick in and the rhythm section starts to pulse very slowly. It turns into a great song when Richard Butler, lead singer and enigmatic group leader, starts to sing in his hushed, nicotine-ravaged voice, "There's a heartbreak beat playing all night long/Down on my street."

It's a tale of betrayal and infidelity set to incredible horn-playing and a weird distorted guitar solo. As always, though, Butler's voice is the main attraction. His chain-smoking habit of five packs of cigarettes a day gives a unique raspy quality to his singing.

The remaining songs on the album Midnight to Midnight divide its quality. An example of the really good is "Shock" which is built on a grungy fuzz-tone guitar riff and liberal doses of saxophone that seem to jump out of the mix at will. "Angels Don't Cry" is another ballad that is memorable due to a beautiful slow saxophone solo and its great hook.

The title song "Midnight to Midnight" is probably the album's best song after "Heartbreak Beat." As an evocation of New York City, it roars along on the power of plain guitar, bass and drums and Butler's scattershot vocals.

Taken as a whole Midnight to Midnight is a holding pattern. By that I mean that each one of their previous albums found them making some progress. They'd gone from angry post-punks to angst-ridden popsters to excellent song-writers by the time of their last album, Mirror Moves, but Midnight to Midnight finds them covering the same lyrical and musical territory as they were two years ago. Songs like "Heartbreak Beat" and "Shock" make it easy to forget about that, but it would be sad to see these guys get stagnant.

Dawn of the Dead (1978)

Friday, April 3 at 7:30 pm, Snite

Once again George Romero (Night of the Living Dead) unleashes his zombies in an incredibly tense and suspenseful horror film laced with a generous sense of humor. Romero's zombies are particularly apropos in the suburban Pittsburgh of shopping malls, where they seem to be an outgrowth of the postmodern nuclear landscape.

Bananas (1971)

Monday, April 6 at 7 pm, Snite

Allen casts himself as a meek factory worker who runs off to South America, where he leads a revolution and becomes a hero. Full of unusual comic ideas, with a generous dose of sight gags. Here Allen pays tribute to world film history and the classic silent comedians.

Open City (1945)

Monday, April 6 at 9 pm, Snite

The documentary look of the film (partially created by the technical limitations of shooting a liberation film during the actual Nazi withdrawal from Rome) and, most of all, its passionate effort to examine the truth after 20 years of Italian fascism have kept this film a living, caring human document.

Blade Runner (1984)

Tuesday, April 7 at 7:30 pm, Snite

Ridley Scott's visually stunning film has already achieved "classic" status as one of the most significant and influential films of the past decade. For Stanley Kubrick it is simply the best American film since Citizen Kane. Classic or not, this dazzling film creates an unforgettable vision of the 21st century.

All films are screened in the Annenberg Auditorium, Snite Museum of Art.

The Cost of Loving: style at too high a price

KEVIN WALSH
features writer

Paul Weller first came into the public eye as the angry young mod leading the sonic assault of The Jam, one of the primary punk bands that was once as popular in England as Van Halen is here. Weller led the band with a flying-spit intensity which seemed to ignore fatigue.

They had a problem, though. The Jam got too big. Weller's attempts to keep the music fresh were only bogged down by the band's popularity and the demands of its public. The Jam disbanded and Paul Weller formed the Style Council. It seemed like a logical move at the time. Mod culture, upon which Weller based his ideals, and The Jam were steeped in the great soul music of the sixties that, with "The Big Chill," became a sort of a beginner's primer in hip. The Style Council would later return to this fantastic soul tradition and Weller would get back to his roots.

Records

 The Cost of Loving

Well, I think he went right past them, and three albums later, it seems like Paul Weller is bogged down again.

The Cost Of Loving starts off with "It Didn't Matter," a muzak-y love song, which seems as if it may be a partial disavowal of his days with The Jam. He pulls the same schizophrenic trick in "Waiting," which appears to be another love song, but could also be a response to his army of new critics.

The rap song which we have come to expect from a Style Council record is here. It's called "Right To Go" and is another rather generic rap against politics, capitalism, and society, espousing the right to vote with a standard rap group who use a lot of "Check it out's" and "Alright, y'all's."

D. C. Lee, the lovely girl with a near perfect voice who has appeared on all the Style Council albums, has apparently finally been recognized as a full-time member. The band is better for it. She lends the Style Council a graceful soul credibility which it needs, but even she can't save it completely. Her one solo shot, the unlabeled "A Woman's Song," isn't pulled off as successfully as she merits. It is a lullaby from an unemployed divorced woman singing her child to sleep with the tale of her woes. Her voice, as always, is stunning, and the understated instrumentation works well, but the song itself somehow rings false.

The remainder of the album is basic, sugar-coated Paul Weller. A semi-funky bass line curls happily around the harmonies of the two singers as the beauty of the harmonies tries to cover up the lyrics. The only song on the album not penned by Weller, "Angel," points up this problem very well, interestingly enough. It boasts an atmospheric synth line, chiming bells, chilled vocals, but just lousy lyrics.

I really do hesitate to write Paul Weller off as a rock 'n' roller, but this album has as much to do with rock 'n' roll as my grandmother (which is not to put down my grandmother). The Cost of Loving is soothing. It is listenable. It is good rainy day music. It's like Windham Hill with a frosted haircut, a new white jacket, and shiny loafers. It is not rock 'n' roll. And for a man with as a grand rock 'n' roll tradition to uphold as Paul Weller, it's just not enough.

Of boors, basketball and bittersweet goodbyes

Sitting at the dinner table next to his, I wonder what the retiring champ thinks about as he gets ready to hang up the gloves? Imagining Father Hesburgh's stream of consciousness is like trying to guess what went through Rockne's mind as he composed the Gipper speech.

started with the Camelot Interim. At a number of dedications still ahead, Father Hesburgh will be mentioned as the dreamer who saw in his mind's eye what had not yet happened, and asked: "Why couldn't it happen here?" With the help of Notre Dame's friends, the buildings go up.

have much class." I wondered if his wife and children were proud of their tasteless father.

The word "class" is not easily defined, and neither is the word "pornography." Years ago, John F. Kennedy put his finger on Richard Nixon's flaw: "He lacks class." Cardinal Newman wrote, "It is almost a definition of a gentleman to say he is one who never inflicts pain." Watergate caused the nation pain. Stylistically, Nixon was an embarrassment, and that's painful too. Nixon has paid for his sins; nowadays I feel sorry for him. He shows us how a failure in style or class can be fatal if it leaves you paranoid about being the odd man out.

Some people are born classy; you can tell they have class the first time you meet them.

Some people develop their class as they go along. Their instincts are good; they quickly discover how churlish it feels to be lowlife like a guttersnipe. Some people are also-rans with neutered decencies. Though they are not ill-willed, you can't even teach them class as an acquired language. Class, as a code of ethics and a set of manners, should be second nature to you. Politeness requires that you don't embarrass anyone; classiness is harder. It means that you leave them feeling that because of them, everything in sight is coming up roses.

In a world without faith, class could be as helpful as a religion in motivating you to respect your neighbor as you respect yourself. Listen to this, "If I have all the eloquence of men or of angels, but speak without class, I am simply a gong booming or a cymbal clashing...If I have faith in all its fullness, to move mountains, but without class, then I am nothing at all. If I give away all that I possess...and if I even let them take my body to burn it, but am without class, it will do me no good at all. Class is patient and kind. It is never jealous. Class is never boastful or conceited. It is never rude or selfish; it does not take offence and is not resentful. Class takes no pleasure in other people's sins but delights in the truth. It is always ready to excuse, to trust, to hope...class does not come to an end..."

Undergraduates are not allowed to act classless, though they're kicking and screaming "I gotta be me." Class, as part of a Notre Dame education, is something students pay for without wanting their money's worth. I ask seriously: Is it really censorship to be deprived of cheap language embarrassing to the University? Don't students want the departing leader to think Notre Dame has given them better values than that?

What thoughts are on Father Hesburgh's mind as he gets ready to retire? Joan of Arc, on trial for her life, was asked about the mystery nobody can answer, "Are you in a state of grace?" She answered, "If I am, I pray God will keep me there. If I am not, I pray God will put me there."

Perhaps Father Hesburgh prays for Notre Dame to hold onto -- or, if any of it has been lost, which God forbid, to find it again -- the grace that makes us Catholic and Christian. He trusts his successors to set their course by the eternal stars.

The Catholic soul is what gives Notre Dame class and sets it apart. Hesburgh has struggled as a priest to keep the spirit of the age, which is death-bearing, from ruining the school. Do the undergraduates appreciate how important his religion is to him and all the old timers? If he comes back in 100 years as a ghost, he'll check to see if the chapels are still being used for Mass. This will be a sign to him -- not the number of buildings -- that something was done well in the Hesburgh years. How many headaches has he suffered holding the line as an old-fashioned priest, during the times of the great change?

In a season of tainted evangelism, we've never had to apologize for him, or ask what he did with the money raised. Seen at dinner, he seems ready to retire without a backward look. The changing of the guard is a classy act, of which Hesburgh is the star. The Elijah's cloak falling from his shoulders should fit Monk well.

Father Robert Griffin

Letters to a Lonely God

Is his head as tired as mine would be after 35 years? Are these bittersweet days for him?

The word "bittersweet" comes to mind, because he once described something I wrote as bittersweet. He was right; the bittersweetness was there. I could see it after he pointed it out. A university president could experience his final six weeks in office as bittersweetness.

He's reviewing the good times and the bad or feeling scared as well as relieved, like a senior about to graduate, that tomorrow will be different from the time that is still left him on campus, where he has been at home so long.

Like the basketball season, the Hesburgh years will not be over until they are over. When will the last brick be laid, the final cornerstone blessed, of the buildings that go up because a benefactor was impressed with Father Ted? An anecdote in circulation for decades takes this form, though the subject of the anecdote is not Father Hesburgh.

A Notre Dame administrator calls up a contractor to get an estimate on building a mausoleum. The contractor, after studying the specs, says: "It will cost $10,000." "That much?" exclaims the administrator. "Are you crazy? I'm only planning to use it for three days." It's obvious that the story wasn't inspired by the Hesburgh style, since he is immortal. He must be proud of the new facilities as they become available, but he doesn't see them built as though his blood were in the bricks as his monument.

When the first astronaut landed on the moon, the nation recalled Kennedy, who promised a moon landing at the end of the decade that

Reading The Observer, I wondered if he noticed a new note added to the usual complaints: "The new boss understands us; the old boss stood ready to close us down."

This hint of the father being played against the grandfather could make Father Hesburgh's departure bittersweet, if it becomes the fashion. With so much on his mind, perhaps he doesn't pay attention or maybe he takes it in stride.

The hard feeling caused by the suppression of team names reminded me of the time I was introduced to a racketeer who wore a ring set with diamonds that spelled the most common of the four-letter words. I've read the word, heard the word, and perhaps even used the word, in my salad days, when my judgment was green. I was surprised to meet a man who took pleasure in wearing the word on a piece of jewelry. My reaction was, "This bird doesn't

Irish hope to conquer Badgers on strength of freshman Peltier's bat

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

Trying to snap out of a defensive slump that has seen the Notre Dame baseball team give up 20 runs in its last two games, the Irish may not be facing the best team to remedy the situation this weekend in the University of Wisconsin.

The 7-10 Irish are slated to play two doubleheaders against the Badgers at Jake Kline Field. Saturday's action is scheduled to begin at 1 p.m., and Sunday's games will begin at 12 noon. Wisconsin held a 5-10 record going into yesterday's game against Valparaiso.

"Wisconsin's been in the same boat we've been in," said Irish head coach Larry Gallo. "They haven't been able to play many games lately either." The cancellation of yesterday's Bethel game marked the third cancellation of an Irish home game this year.

Although Wisconsin's record is mediocre, it is no fault of the Badgers' starting lineup. Wisconsin holds a team batting average of .326. Centerfielder Mike Barker and first baseman Scott Cepicky lead the Badgers with respective batting averages of .414 and .360.

Those numbers aren't welcome sights for the Irish pitchers, who have seen their team earned run average soar above 4.50 in the last week. Notre Dame plans to start Kevin Chenail, Brian Piotrowicz, and Mike Passilla-- the team's three leading starters-- this weekend, with the fourth starter not yet determined.

"Our pitching's going to have to come around," continued Gallo. "They have to get ahead in the count more often."

Wisconsin's pitching has been the cause of its downfall so far this year. The Badger staff has a 6.44 team ERA. Lefthanded pitcher Tom Fisher has looked impressive with a 1.59 ERA and 19 strikeouts in 17 innings, and righthanded Scott Pelowski has a 3.71 ERA in 17 innings. Beyond that, Wisconsin has not been too impressive on the mound.

The weekend could be a chance for the Irish to drive in more runs, as the Irish have left an average of almost eight men on base each game.

"We've left a considerable number of people on base, but the positive aspect of that we're getting people on base," said Gallo. "The timely hitting will come around. They have to execute and do the things they know they are capable of doing, and we'll get on a roll."

One hitter who has provided some timely hitting already for the Irish has been freshman Dan Peltier. The rightfielder sports a .356 batting average and leads the Irish in home runs (2), runs batted in (16), walks (10), and in slugging percentage (.492). While most freshmen take some time to adjust, Gallo is not too surprised with Peltier's quick start.

"Dan was a good player that came in with a lot of good credentials, and I thought he'd make a contribution soon," said Gallo. "He's been a welcome contributor, and he can become nothing but a better player in the next three years."

Saying Peltier came in with a lot of good credentials is a slight understatement. At Shenendehowa High School in Clifton Park, NY, Peltier was captain of both the football and baseball teams, quarterbacking his football team to the state's top ranking. In baseball, Peltier batted over .500 in both his junior and senior years.

Though he was successful in both sports in high school, Peltier did not take too long to decide what sport to play in college.

"We had like a little league football, and everybody played that, and football was kind of like the thing to do where I was from," said Peltier. "Baseball, I've just always loved, and I played in the backyard with my friends and brothers and friends. I've been playing baseball since I was six years old, starting with tee-ball."

A 6'1", 190-pound lefthander, Peltier turned down offers from Clemson and the University of North Carolina to play baseball at Notre Dame.

After playing in the Albany Twilight League over the summer and posting a .400 average during Notre Dame's fall season, the only adjustment left for Peltier to make was in the field. At high school, Peltier played first base, but he is seeing most of his playing time at right field this season. His three errors early in the season are about the only thing Peltier has had trouble with.

Freshman outfielder Dan Peltier has been an unexpected source of power in the baseball team's lineup. The Irish will take on Wisconsin this weekend for a pair of doubleheaders at Jake Kline Field.

"You just have to get used to judging the fly balls; I'm used to the ground balls from playing first base," said Peltier. "I just need to get my defensive position set because this is my first year in the outfield, and I want to get comfortable."

Peltier has more than compensated for any lapses in the field with his firepower at the plate. Peltier has emerged early in the season as the team's main power hitter, though Peltier does not think of himself that way.

"I still don't think of myself as a power hitter," said Peltier. "I think of myself as a gap hitter, getting doubles and triples, and when the home runs come, that's nice. I don't go up swinging for the fences."

Peltier's quick start has also earned him the confidence of his teammates.

"A lot of players feel if they get on base for Peltier, he'll knock them in," said Gallo. "He and (Pat) Pesavento have been the most consistent players we have. He's had a lot of RBI's. I'm not going to say he's going to come through all the time, but he's been coming through lately."

While Peltier has been one of the few highlights in a season that has disappointed the Irish so far, Peltier feels the Irish are better than their record indicates, and that the team is ready to come on.

"I definitely think that our record doesn't show what kind of team we have," said Peltier. "We've lost a lot of close games in the late innings, and that takes the wind out of your sails to play tough for seven or eight innings and lose. I don't think any team we've played has been better than us."

The Irish will need another impressive meet in the field events, but a solid performance from all is necessary if they are to take all three meets.

"I expect us to do very well," said Piante, "I see no reason why we can't do as well or even a little better in the field events."

Piante added that everyone will participate in their regular events this weekend.

Junior point guard Mary Gavin was named the women's basketball team's Most Valuable Player during Thursday night's team banquet.

Gavin named MVP at banquet

By BRIAN O'GARA
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame women's basketball season came to an official conclusion last evening at the team's year-end banquet in the ACC Monogram Room. Several individuals were presented with awards while the Irish were praised for overcoming adversity during their 12-15 season.

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times," quoted Head Coach Mary DiStanislao. "We lost the wind from our sails for a while, and had our backs against the wall."

"We had to dig deep," continued DiStanislao, "but we found what it was like to be a team. With a little faith, resolve and commitment, we were able to spring forward and grow."

The Irish struggled through the early part of their season, but came alive in the final weeks to win six straight games.

"I have never enjoyed coaching a team as much as I did those last three weeks," said DiStanislao, who notched her 200th career win in a 53-44 upset against No. 23 DePaul on February 21.

Junior point guard Mary Gavin was named the team's Most Valuable Player and presented a plaque by the National Monogram Club. Gavin was also presented with a game ball to commemorate her becoming Notre Dame's all-time leader in assists and steals, with 535 and 188 respectively.

Freshman Annie Schwartz was presented with the Coach's

Award as the "unsung hero." The 6-3 forward caught fire midway through the season and finished with 9.1 points and 4.7 rebounds per game. In the final 11 games, Schwartz averaged 15.2 points per contest, including a career-high 29 points against Detroit on February 11.

The Notre Dame Club of St. Joseph Valley's Student-Athlete Award was presented to junior Kathy Barron, while junior Sandy Botham was awarded a game ball for notching her 1,000 career point in the season finale at Dayton.

Gavin and Botham were named to the first team of the North Star All-Conference team, while sophomore Heidi Bunek was named to the second team.

Lopez seeks top LPGA spot

Associated Press

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. - Nancy Lopez has cut back on golf to have more time for her family, but she still has a definite goal in her sport.

"My goal now is to be No. 1 again," said Lopez, the LPGA player of the Year in 1978, 1979 and 1985.

"I want to be the only player in history to be No. 1 and the mother of two," quipped Lopez, who was scheduled to begin play today in the $500,000 Nabisco Dinah Shore at Mission Hills Country Club.

"I want to keep on winning. My immediate goal, of course, is to win the Nabisco Dinah Shore, which is my favorite tournament."

The 30-year-old Lopez, married to Baltimore Orioles infielder Ray Knight, recently returned to the tour after giving birth to her second child.

Erinn Shea is now 10 months old, and Ashley Marie is 3. Lopez, with the help of a nanny, keeps the girls with her as she travels around the tour.

Lopez, who won an amazing nine tournaments while playing a full schedule on the tour in 1978, said she plans to limit herself to 18 or 19 tournaments this year.

"If I need more work to keep shooting well, I'll add a few as I go along," she said. "That's the schedule I'll keep until Ashley begins school."

"Then I'll only play in the majors and a couple of other tournaments."

Her return to the tour this year has been quite impressive. Lopez has played in four tournaments, with a second-place finish, a third-place finish, and a victory, in the Sarasota Classic in February.

USOC wants eligibility decided

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - Robert H. Helmick, president of the U.S. Olympic Committee, wants the issue of athlete eligibility decided by the organization's House of Delegates this weekend.

"Eligibility is one of the major topics that will be decided this weekend," said Mike Moran, director of the USOC's public information department. "Helmick says the time for talking is over and a final policy needs to be determined."

Testing athletes for the use of marijuana, one of the drugs not on the USOC's list of banned substances since it is not considered a performance-enhancing substance, is also expected to be reviewed. However, Moran doesn't anticipate a decision on the issue.

About 300 delegates will hear reports from USOC committees as the organization continues to prepare for the 1988 Summer and Winter Olympics.

Robert Kane, a former USOC president, is proposing an amendment to Olympic eligibility rules that ban athletes who have been professional athletes or professional coaches in any sport.

Currently the international federations in several sports disagree on eligibility criteria. The International Amateur Athletic Federation recently rejected applications for reinstatement from professional football players Willie Gault, Henry Ellard and Vince Courville.

IAAF president Primo Nebiolo recently announced that former pro football players Stanley Floyd, Mel Lattany and Mark McNeil had been reinstated in accordance with an unofficial policy that athletes who indicate they are finished playing professional football can compete in track.

The International Tennis Federation, however, wants an open Olympics for their sport.

Expansion franchises approved by NBA

Associated Press

NEW YORK - The NBA expansion committee recommended Thursday that the league expand to 26 teams by adding franchises in Charlotte, N.C.; Minneapolis and either Miami or Orlando, Fla., for the 1988-89 and 1989-90 seasons.

The five-member committee recommended that Charlotte be admitted for the 1988-89 season, Minneapolis the following season and the Florida team in one of those two seasons. A decision between Miami and Orlando will be made by the league in October.

Each city would pay $32.5 million for its franchise if the NBA board of Governors goes along with the recommendation when it meets April 22 in New York. A three-quarters vote of the owners is needed for a franchise to be accepted.

"We're extremely delighted. We were such a long shot candidate," said Dan Lohwasser, a spokesman for NBA charlotte. "People even locally didn't give us much of a chance of even making it, much less coming out No. 1. Of course, it still has to get by the NBA board of Governors, so we still have some work to do."

"We won't make any type of real decisions until after April 22," said Bob Stein, the attorney for the group which would return pro basketball to Minneapolis where the Los Angeles Lakers franchise originated. "Now we're just hoping the rest of the league agrees."

"We're excited about having the opportunity to join the league. We are thrilled and flattered that we are being considered like this."

The committee also considered Toronto, Anaheim, Calif. and St. Petersburg, Fla.

"We feel like Charlotte was in such a strong position, having a new coliseum," Lohwasser said. "This is the heart of basketball country, right dead in the center of the ACC; and we had an excellent coliseum lease with the full backing of the city. Businesses came through with season ticket sales we sold 8,900 season tickets."

"It's a growth area and they're businessmen and recognize that we were a viable city for a major league team," said Lohwasser, whose team would be known as the Spirit.

Dillon led Law School Still Sucks over Four Fat Boys and a Cheesehead by pouring in a game-high 10 points. Also, Bill O'Neill scored seven as Liberace, Len Bias, and Three Other Guys Who Got Into Some Bad Crack annihilated Team £140, 21-5.

Papa Sumby and the Flying Eggmen soared over Peeping Toms and Other Mem of Vision by the score of 21-13. Bob "Papa Sumby" Sumberac garnered seven points and 13 rebounds to lead the Eggmen, but it was Mike "Eggroll" Caponigro who delighted the crowd with his stalwart defensive play.

As might have been expected, however, not everyone who took the courts in yesterday's rather inclement weather had his most scintillating performance.

What the Puck obliterated the self-proclaimed Worst Team in Bookstore, 21-3, as the latter was prepared to back up their name's claim by shooting a combined 3-for-41. A formidable challenge was offered nonetheless by Just Call Us Luggage, who needed 71 attempts to score six points against C.J. and the Rastafarians.

The individual futility mark thus far was set yesterday by Chris Hodgson, who bricked his way to an 0-for-17 mark as his Hey Look, There's Corn in My Stool squad was demolished 21-7 by No We Can't Dunk.

"The snow got in my eyes," said Hodgson.

Today is the final day of preliminaries with first round matchups slated for the weekend. And the weather is supposed to be better.

Lohrer sisters to meet when Irish, Buckeyes clash in tennis meet

By SHEILA HOROX
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame women's tennis team will play three duel matches this weekend, but there's no contention as to which team the Irish would most like to beat.

After last week's upset of Michigan, the Irish are bracing themselves for Ohio State, Wheaton College and Southern Illinois at Edwardsville.

The match with Ohio State will begin at 3 p.m. today at the South Bend Racquet Club, and Head Coach Michele Gelfman sees this match as another challenging hurdle for her team.

"Last weekend's win over Michigan proved how hard the team has been working," said Gelfman. "The most important thing we have to do against Ohio State is to have the psychological edge before we step out on to the courts."

An interesting sidelight to the match will be the number one doubles match. Freshman Alice Lohrer will encounter a familiar face across the net, older sister Yvonne.

The elder Lohrer, now a junior at Ohio State, attended Nick Bolletieri's tennis academy before earning a scholarship, while her younger sister opted to attend the smaller Gary Kisl tennis academy before coming to Notre Dame.

"We're very close, we get along great, but I don't like playing her on the tennis court," said Lohrer.

Earlier this year the two squared off at the Minnesota Doubles Invitational. Lohrer and Michelle Dasso got the better of her sister and Michelle DeCosmo, 6-0, 4-6, 7-6 (8-6 tie-breaker).

"The team we played in Minnesota was not Ohio State's number one team," said Lohrer. "Yvonne is playing today with Jody Saunders, and it's going to be another close match."

"It doesn't matter whether we win the doubles match, what's important is for the team to win as a whole," said Lohrer.

Since weather will not be a factor, Gelfman has stressed the aggressive style of play that proved successful against Michigan, especially in doubles action.

Walsh is key for Irish

By KELLY TOWNSEND
Sports Writer

Tomorrow the Notre Dame men's tennis team travels to Ball State hoping to up their record to 14-8. A powerful force for the Irish will be hard-hitting junior Dan Walsh.

Walsh began the season at the sixth spot, but through hard work and a little luck has spent most of the season in the fourth and fifth spots. The key to Walsh's success is twofold. His combination of skill and power has given him a strong baseline game while his attitude gives him a mental edge over his opponents as well.

"In order to win, you need to be intense," said Walsh. "You have to go out there wanting to win."

This intensity has enabled Walsh to establish a 20-1 record so far this season in singles. Along with his singles record, Walsh has teamed up with fellow junior Paul Daggs in the doubles event. This duo has spent almost three seasons smashing opponents. Daggs' powerful serves and volleys compliment Walsh's baseline game. This season, the pair have attained a 10-2 record at the number two doubles spot.

Coach Tom Fallon is impressed by Walsh both as a player and captain.

"Dan is one of the most consistent players," said Fallon. "He sets a good pace for the team. In doubles, Dan and Paul are a good pair. When they are hot, they are a match for anyone in this area. Some days they are just unbeatable."

"Last year Dan did a great job for us. He played at the number one spot at a much higher level than he was ready for. He stuck with it and made it easier for those behind him by taking on the tougher opponents."

This weekend, Notre Dame will be put to the test against Ball State. Last year the Irish took the Cardinals by surprise and won, 5-4. This time, however, the Irish will face a tougher, better-prepared Ball State team.

"Ball State is a lot stronger this year," said Fallon. "They have matured and are ready for us. We're going to need a full effort by everyone to win."

Returning to the lineup for the Irish will be Mike Wallace, who suffered a shoulder injury last week. Wallace's return will give the Irish a little extra drive for this weekend's match.

Will this madness ever come to an end?

Bookstore drives on despite stormy weather

By PETE SKIKO
Sports Writer

The true grit of the hardy Notre Dame Bookstore Basketball player was severely tested yesterday, as near-blizzard conditions, a wind-chill factor in the single digits and long games were the rule on the third day of preliminary contests.

But most of the players heard complaining before their games did so with barely detectable smiles on their faces, secretly eager to brave the deplorable weather conditions that have become standard fare each year of the 16-year-old tourney.

And once the sweatshirts, wool hats, and high tops were donned, the weather helped to produce some incredible efforts -- and some exercises in futility.

On Bookstore Court £9, Hammering Hank, Mike Ditka, and Three Other Guys who Can't Hold a Title put up a good fight but bowed to the Flying Irish, 21-12. Tom "Hammerin' Hank" Hayman, who lost in the semi-finals of the junior welterweight division of the Bengal Bouts this year after taking the title last year, seemed elated after the game.

"Sure, we lost the game, but I had three points," said the senior after shooting a meager 3-17 from the field. "I hadn't scored since I was a freshman. The boxing was just a warm-up for this moment."

Flying Irish center Tom DuPre, a former varsity player for the Air Force, scored 10 points and ripped down 11 rebounds in the win.

In what was probably the longest game of the tournament thus far, Puss disarmed the Loaded Guns, 24-22, in just over an hour and 40 minutes. Things went smoothly until the score reached 20-all, and then an imaginary lid seemed to cover both baskets at Bookstore Court £10. Puss captain Jim Vizzini explained the game's length.

"It was cold and snowy, and I was tired," said Vizzini, who shot a somewhat-less-than-stellar 2-for-7 on the day. "Plus, near the end, things were getting physical inside, and we can't handle the rough stuff. That definitely affected our play late in the game."

In some other impressive performances, Mike Debot shot 9-for-15 from the field and pulled down 16 boards as Team £27 beat Team £516 in a battle of censored squads, and Andy

Searcy hopes to break 47-second mark in weekend meet

By MOLLY MAHONEY
Sports Writer

Tomorrow the Notre Dame track team will travel to Bloomington to participate in three dual meets against Indiana, Cincinnati and Bowling Green.

The Irish will receive the toughest competition from Indiana and will need a good day from each member of the team, including freshman speedster Yan Searcy.

Searcy, a native of Kokomo, Ind., is looking to break the 47 second mark in either the 400-meter dash or a leg of the 1600-meter relay. So far in the outdoor season, Searcy has recorded times of 49.23 at the Willie Williams Invitational and 49.1 at the Notre Dame Invitational.

This meet is of special importance to Searcy because in high school he had narrowed his choices of the schools recruiting him down to Notre Dame and Indiana. Ultimately he chose to run for the Irish.

"Yan is a real hardworker, both on the track and off," said Irish head coach Joe Piane. "He puts a lot of effort into the things he does."

Searcy has had to make the typical transition from high school to college life and looks for improvement in the future.

"It has been a big adjustment," said Searcy, "I've gotten the chance to travel with the team and gain experience for the future."

Searcy and the Irish prepare to face an Indiana squad that is second in the Big Ten and won the Indiana Intercollegiate meet in February. The Hosiers also had several members qualify for NCAA Indoor Championships in March.

The Irish will face Mark Deady, a second-place finisher in the 1500-meter run at the NCAA's, and a strong crew of hurdlers and sprinters led by Robert Kennedy and LaMont Frazier.

The Hoosiers are strong in field events as well, with pole vaulter Danny Burton clearing 17-3 in an earlier meet and shot-putter Rick Jordan expected to be a serious challenge to Notre Dame's Tom Kraus.

"Indiana has a terrific team," said Piane. "They will challenge us from everywhere."

Cincinnati will be a threat as well in the jumps and sprints. The team has two long jumpers who regularly jump 24 feet and hurdlers who have recorded times of 14.3 in the 110-meter highs.

Bowling Green is led by Dave Mora, an NCAA qualifier in cross country who will run in both the 1500 and 5000-meter runs.

The dual nature of this meet varies from the usual quadrangular meet format, but it won't be as complicated as it sounds. The meet will progress in much the same way, only it will be complicated by the use of a unique scoring system which gives each team three separate

Thank you, Father Rocca, for my job well done

I'd like to say thank you to all those involved in the decision to censor the names of teams involved in Bookstore Basketball XVI. I'm in favor of freedom of expression and creativity just as much as anybody else. The reason I say thank you is much more personal.

No longer will I have to drag myself across campus to wade through the list of a particular day's results and next day's schedule in search of words and phrases that might offend the weak-spirited. Last year when technical difficulties at The Observer relented, allowing us to print results and schedules, I went through this routine every night, usually well after midnight. I would sit in front of a terminal and replace offending phrases with ellipses.

This year, thanks to Assistant Vice President for Student Services Father Peter Rocca, I don't have to worry about it. Why? They've taken the editorial decision on what to print and what not to print right out of my hands.

"(The names) were unfit for publishing and they were terribly gross," said Rocca in an article in The Observer on Monday.

Thanks for taking control of my job, Father. You see, what has basically happened here is that The Observer, which has had a long history of maintaining editorial independence, has been censored through the back door. I can't print what I don't have. (No folks, I haven't seen an uncensored list so don't ask me for a copy.) By keeping what has been deemed offensive by the powers that be out of my sight, I don't have to make editorial decisions. Or don't I?

From what I have gathered in the last few days, the decision of what to censor has seemed arbitrary at best. If you have Beer Flatulence From Hell, your name is OK. But if you've got Condoms From Hell, keep them in your wallet because your team has been assigned a number.

If you're hungry you can have Chicken Patties, SMC Chicks and Three Other Things ND Guys

Love to Eat: Daniel Boone, Father Sorin and Three Other Guys can eat Beaver In The Wilderness but if you're looking for Violated Donuts, you have to look for a selection number.

It just doesn't make sense that a team named 4 Nicators and a Married Man was cut, but 4 Guys Who Date SMC and a Virgin makes it.

In the first night of Bookstore, I had to cut a few teams down either because of length of name (remember this for next year: if your name is short, it has a better chance of being printed) or something that might be construed as objectional. Sorry, they were funny.

The point is not everything makes it into the paper. I do check the list nightly. My parents get the paper and while they're interested in the names of the teams (two years ago, my mom took a liking to Your Mother Does Deep Knee Bends In A Cucumber Patch), I know they and a lot of other people out there who get The Observer aren't amused by college humor.

The point is, someone, namely me, does edit the list. I don't need any help, thank you. Judging by what made it and what didn't, I think the editing should be left to someone with a little experience.

Oh, well, at least I can get to bed earlier.
