Iran defies U.N. order to end war

Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain - Iraq said its war jets attacked four tankers shuttling oil along the Iranian coast in a 20-hour span ending Sunday night, as Baghdad kept up pressure on Iran's vulnerable oil lifeline.

The attacks coincided with a new warning by Iraq of all-out war if Iran fails to accept a cease-fire demanded by the United Nations.

Iran retorted that it would pursue its "holy war" against Iraq's secular government until President Saddam Hussein was toppled. The Persian Gulf neighbors have been at war since September 1980.

Shipping officials based in the Persian Gulf confirmed the first three Iraqi attacks.

They could not immediately verify a fourth raid that the official Iraqi News Agency said was carried out after dark Sunday against a "very large naval target" off the coast of Iran. That phrase usually means a tanker sailing between terminals on Iran's gulf coastline. INA, monitored in Cyprus, said all the warplanes returned safely.

Iran also accused the United States of mistreating 26 Iranian seamen who were repatriated to Tehran on Sunday after U.S. helicopter gunships attacked and disabled their minelaying landing barge in the gulf.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said the U.S. navy kept the captured Iranians bound and "savagely imprisoned" below decks on U.S. warships, and that the Americans tried to induce the prisoners to defect.

IRNA was also monitored in Cyprus.

"For political propaganda purposes, the Americans offered to give the crew members political asylum, but they were met with a negative response by the Iranians," Ali Rabizadeh, an Iranian navy petty officer, was quoted as saying.

DUI task force seeks state funds to remain effective

By NATASHA WILSON

A local task force working to prevent drunk driving tried to persuade state officials at a public hearing to provide continued funding for its program.

"The purpose of the meeting was to update the state on the task force's work," said Rex Rakow, the chairman of the St. Joseph/Elkhart Counties division of the Governor's Task Force to Reduce Drunk Driving. The force, which was created in 1984, currently has 20 members who meet once a month to plan various anti-drunk driving campaigns, said Rakow, who is also the director of security and police at Notre Dame.

"The statistics show our activities have had a positive impact on drinking related accidents in our area. The bottom line is saving lives that might be lost in traffic accidents involving alcohol," he said.

Rakow credits the force's success with its involvement in both the educational and enforcement processes of preventing drunk driving.

Initially, the force's main function was to provide extended surveillance of the areas with high accident rates and drunk driving incidents, according to Rakow.

Then, the members, who were mostly law enforcement officials, began to receive support from the local media, courts and educators and eventually the force's role in the community expanded to an educational one as well, Rakow said.

In addition to working with county educators and law enforcement agencies, the task force also coordinates educational activities at Notre Dame, according to Rakow. Various campus organizations, especially Bacchus, have co-sponsored with the force alcohol awareness programs for students, Rakow added.

"The force's intent to reduce drunk driving and the fatalities associated with it, fits into one of the goals of Bacchus," said Vince Willis, past vice president of the Notre Dame chapter of Bacchus and current member of the organization's National Board of Trustees.

This "informal relationship" between the two groups has resulted in events such as last year's alcohol awareness week on campus, Willis said.

As part of the program, police officers on the task force demonstrated the use of breath testing units in the residence halls and reviewed the procedure used when pulling over suspected drunk drivers, according to Rakow.

The officers actually analyzed the blood alcohol levels of some students. "I think the students were surprised at their levels and

Iran's president proposes arms trade for hostages

Associated Press

KUWAIT - A Kuwaiti newspaper said Saturday that Iranian President Ali Khamenei told Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres that he would help secure the release of American hostages in Lebanon in return for U.S. arms.

The daily Al-Rai Al-Aam said Khamenei made the proposal during a three-hour meeting Tuesday with Peres in New York where the two were attending the U.N. General Assembly session.

In Jerusalem, an Israeli Foreign Ministry official, speaking with the condition he not be identified, said the ministry had no knowledge of such a meeting.

Al-Rai Al-Aam said that after the meeting, Peres conferred with Secretary of State George Shultz.

The article said, "Peres told Shultz that Khamenei expressed readiness to secure the release of Americans held hostage in Lebanon in return for an arms shipment that includes ground-to-air Hawk missiles and spare parts for (Iran's) U.S.-made Phantom jets." It attributed its report to unidentified U.S. State Department officials.

Bush meets with Polish leaders

Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland - Vice President George Bush met Saturday with Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski as he began a four-day visit to Poland with a declaration that he would seek to promote freedom in a way that does not "disrupt or divide" the communist country.

"We seek only to play a constructive role in bringing about the national reconciliation that everyone in Poland desires and to promote the cause of freedom," said Bush, the highest-ranking American official to visit this nation in a decade.

"I want to make clear that our intention is not to disrupt or divide, nor is it to interfere," he said.

Bush, who meets Sunday with officials of the banned Solidarity trade union, met with Cardinal Jozef Glemp, head of the powerful Roman Catholic Church in Poland, and separately with Catholic intellectuals in a day that combined the ceremonial with the official.

Moving around the austere looking Eastern bloc city in a shiny black American limousine, Bush also laid wreaths at the Polish Tomb of the unknown soldier and at a memorial to those killed in the Warsaw Jewish Ghetto Uprising against the Nazis in World War II.

A few thousand Poles turned out to see the American vice president, even though the Polish government did not publish a detailed schedule for his visit.

Bush's official trip to Europe took on a slightly political cast when a camera crew paid for by his campaign organization began taping his appearances for future campaign commercials.

The vice president is expected to announce his candidacy for the 1988 Republican presidential nomination on Oct. 12.

Robert Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court is opposed by Americans by a 2-to-1 margin, according to a Louis Harris survey taken last week. In a telephone survey of 1,249 adults between Sept. 17-23, 57 percent said they were opposed to Bork's confirmation while 29 percent were in favor, the New York Daily News reported Sunday.

Let's throw Spuds back into the pound

The world is going to the dogs. This fact became appallingly clear to me when I surveyed several retail stores for my home paper last summer to determine what was the bestselling T-shirt.

If you thought people actually cared that this summer marked the 200th anniversary of the constitutional convention, you are terribly deluded. Hardly anyone would be caught dead with the Liberty Bell, Statue of Liberty, bald eagle, or any other such tackily jingoistic symbol on their chest.

No, the shirt to which people were flocking in droves featured Spuds MacKenzie.

I don't know about anybody else, but I think we've just about hit the bottom of the barrel with this latest American icon. Things were bad enough when the height of cultural expression consisted of posting rock stars or stupid quips on our chests. But now we've positively reached the dregs. Now the essence of American culture is embodied in some shiftless, hedonistic English bull terrier, the ultimate "party animal."

So what does Spuds have that Thomas Jefferson doesn't? He likes to drink beer, the only places where you can find him are night clubs, yachts and beaches (remember: he's a "real happenin' dude"), and he virtually has his own harem of scantily clad playmates. What could be more American, someone might interpose? Forget Jefferson. Everybody wants to be a "party animal" these days. So now we have one. Subconsciously, I am sure, every red-blooded, football-watching, beer-guzzling American male says to himself when he sees Spuds, "if only I could be more like him!" and as a result Anheuser-Busch sells more beers. We've come a long way since the day when Thomas Edison and George Washington were cited by Joe Average as heroes. For that matter, we've come a long way since the day when this country's idol was John Wayne.

Spuds alone would be bad enough, in my opinion, but unfortunately he (although I am told "he" is really a "she") seems to represent not just a stupid fad, but rather an increasing trend toward triviality in general. We hear continually about how everything in the universe is evolving inevitably toward perfection and increasing sophistication, yet let the progressivist explain this: up to the 1920s, the majority of America's idols were statesmen, entrepreneurs and generals; then starting with the '20's people paid homage primarily to sports heroes; then starting with the '30's almost everybody worshipped actors and actresses; then beginning in the '60's cults formed around rock groups; and now at last in the '80's the evolution of Americana has reached its Omega Point: a debauched dog wearing a tank-top.

In general, everything these days seems to me to be becoming more and more like a cartoon. Those mawkish little Smurfs and Care Bears are just the start of it. Drive through the most recently built section of any town and all you see are bright, plastic signs and golden arches as though you were passing through a lolly pop factory. Go to almost any restaurant, and all you will find are plastic chairs, plastic tables and people with stupid paper hats making you feel as if you had just entered a Fisher-Price play set. Just look at how we dress. Almost everybody, myself included, wears bermuda shorts, boxer shorts, T-shirts, and oversized sweatshirts -- as if we all lived in some Peanuts cartoon strip.

These days things have become so cartooned and lampooned that our leading politicians deliver speeches that sound like Johnny Carson monologues. Even the priests at this university feel they have to tell jokes in their homilies to be listened to, to the point that one starts to wonder if one is in a chapel or a low-key nightclub.

Whatever happened to those days when our architecture was sober and dignified, adults dressed like adults instead of children, and Presidents didn't have to be stand-up comedians to survive politically? Quite frankly I've had enough of anything cute, cuddly, fuzzy or gooey. Let's throw Spuds back into the pound, ban the Smurfs, and not feel obliged to trivialize anything that could possibly be of significance, from politics to sex to religion.

Yet does anybody care about what I am saying? No. The first thing the people at this paper want to do with my article is to decorate it with yet another cartoon!

Thanks to you...

it works...

Author: Casey and Saudis planned covert operation

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The late CIA director William Casey turned to the Saudi Arabian government for money and help when it became clear that his own effort to create a secret anti-terrorist force was not going to work, according to excerpts published Sunday of a forthcoming book by Bob Woodward.

"He's lying about that," Sophia Casey, the wife of the late CIA director, said of Woodward's account.

Woodward issued a statement saying he stood by his version of the story.

The book also describes Casey as an action-oriented man who was "struck by the overall passivity of the president. . ." And the book says that Casey, although a student of President Reagan, never "figured him out."

"It's absolute blasphemy. My husband loved the president," she said, adding that she was outraged when she read that Woodward wrote her husband was "struck by the overall passivity of the president."

Woodward also provides details of what he says was Casey's deathbed confession of his knowledge of the diversion of Iran arms profits to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Casey's impatience with the CIA's emphasis on intelligence gathering rather than covert action reached a peak in 1985, when the administration was anxious to assert itself in the Middle East after terrorists had bombed U.S. facilities in Beirut, the book says.

Candidates debate arms control

Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa - Six Democratic presidential hopefuls, finding themselves in rare agreement with President Reagan on arms control, sought Sunday to spell out their own positions on defense, a topic which has bedeviled the party in the past.

The candidates agreed to debate Sunday before an arms control group, and several made major speeches on the subject in the past week.

As they spell out their positions, most of the Democrats have taken shots at Reagan's military spending and programs like the "Star Wars" missile defense system, but they have generally backed the new arms control agreement.

Republicans, on the other hand, have split, with Vice President George Bush backing the agreement, and conservatives like former Delaware Gov. Pete duPont criticizing the deal.

The agreement, expected to be signed later this fall at a summit meeting between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, would eliminate an entire class of intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

Some hopefuls worried that appearing "soft" on defense has cost Democrats badly in past elections, but one candidate, Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee, argued that the GOP is facing problems this time because arms control has become a powerful and popular issue.

The debate, the latest in a series of joint appearances by the Democratic hopefuls, comes as the field regroups after Delaware Sen. Joseph Biden's decision to drop out of the race because of allegations of plagiarism and misrepresentation of his academic record.

Those who agreed to appear include Gore, Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, civil rights activist Jesse Jackson, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt and Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois.

how near they were to the legal (driving) limit (.10)," Rakow said.

"Everyone who saw that program said they would have to think more about driving after drinking alcohol (in the future)," Willis said.

"The force has always been an available resource for our anti-drinking and driving campaigns," Willis contends.

"We are making a good impact, but we still need to reach more students. We hope to continue this year in our efforts," Rakow said.

The task force, however, needs state funding to accomplish its goals, according to Rakow. A few months ago, when the state threatened to cut off their funding, the force members vowed to continue volunteering their services in the St. Joseph and Elkhart communities, Rakow said.

"Our people are that committed to the program," Rakow added.

Rakow said he is fairly confident the state will continue to provide resources for the program. One positive indication, he noted, is the state's recent request for the force to expand its coverage to 25 counties in Northern Indiana in order to help those areas establish similar committees.

Chinese premier defends purge of party dissidents

Associated Press

BEIJING - Premier Zhao Ziyang defended the Communist Party's purge of dissident members, but said in an interview broadcast Sunday that intellectuals are free to voice their opinions outside the party.

"I don't think this is a crack-down," Zhao told NBC's Tom Brokaw in a rare interview broadcast in the United States on the Sunday morning program "Meet the Press."

Zhao has also been the party's acting general secretary since Hu Yaobang was ousted last winter. He said he does not want the job permanently.

"I think I'm not that fit to be the general secretary," Zhao said. "I'm more fit to look after economic affairs."

Zhao has made similar statements in the past, but nonetheless is widely expected to be given the top party post at the 13th party congress, which begins Oct. 25.

He told Brokaw, "There is a regulation in the Communist Party of China that the party member should observe the direction from the party. And I think this matter will be finally decided upon" by the congress.

Hu lost his post as general secretary after being criticized as too soft on pro-democracy student demonstrators. Both Hu and Zhao rose to power as protégés of top leader Deng Xiaoping.

As premier, Zhao has been the main implementer of market-force economic reforms advocated by Deng to reduce the role of central planning.

Zhao, 68, has given few interviews to Western reporters since taking office in 1980. The "Meet the Press" program begins a week of special NBC coverage of China during which the "Today" show and

"NBC nightly News" will be broadcast from Beijing.

Asked about dissidents jailed for criticizing the Chinese leadership, Zhao said, "so far as I know, there is no such case, for people to be unfairly treated or even arrested or jailed simply because they have criticized . . . the leadership. Of course . . . if people violate the law, it will be another case."

Terrorists threaten U.S., Greek talks for accord

Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece - A time bomb believed placed by left-wing terrorists exploded early Sunday outside an American military store in downtown Athens, causing severe damage but no injuries, police reported.

Witnesses said the blast smashed windows in the hangar-sized building, uprooted trees on the sidewalk and shattered nearby storefronts.

"My whole house shook with the loudest noise I've ever heard," said Panayotis Emvalentidis, a nightwatchman at a car showroom across the street from the U.S. post-exchange building that was closed at the time.

The bomb, left beside a tree, exploded at 1:15 a.m. outside the commissary used mainly by American servicemen from the Air Force base at Athens airport, said a police spokesman.

He said a leftist group, the Revolutionary Popular Struggle, asserted responsibility for the bombing in a telephone call to the Eleftherotypia newspapers.

The Popular Struggle group has claimed responsibility for more than 200 bombings around the city since 1975, but none of its members has been arrested. The group's last attack against an American military target was in September 1985, when five cars were blown up outside a seaside hotel used as a recreation center by U.S. servicemen.

Last month the group said its members were responsible for a bomb blast at the Finance Ministry in the city center and an August attack that damaged a tax office in the southern town of Leonidion.

In March 1986, the extremists took responsibility for a bombing that toppled a statue of the late President Harry Truman in central Athens.

Sunday's attack came shortly before Greek and U.S. officials are to start talks for a new agreement on U.S. bases in Greece.

Socialist Premier Andreas Papandreu has backed away from past pledges to shut down the bases after the current agreement runs out in

Frosh council initiates members

By GREG LUCAS
Senior Staff Reporter

The initiation meeting was held for the new members of the Freshman Advisory Council last Thursday night at the Morris Inn, said Emil Hofman, dean of Freshman Year of Studies. Hofman, who retired last year as long time freshman chemistry teacher and nemesis, remained Dean of Freshman year and advisor to the Freshman Council.

"The Freshman Advisory Council provides a liaison between the freshmen and the Freshman Year of Studies," said Hofman. The council consists of a rector appointed representative from each hall, Hofman said, adding that rectors are asked to look for articulation, responsibility and service-mindedness in potential representatives.

Speakers at the initiation meeting included Pat Cooke, student body president and Dave Kinkopf, Sophomore class president who spoke on leadership and the role of the Freshman Advisory Council, Hofman said.

According to Hofman, both Cooke and Kinkopf served on the Freshman Advisory Council in their freshman year. "The FAC becomes a training ground for campus leaders," Hofman said.

Mike Larson, representative from Cavanaugh Hall, said "I see the Freshman Advisory Council as an outstanding opportunity to expand my horizons and form a bond with fellow freshmen."

Artificial insemination to save exotic animals

Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - Veterinarians at the Louisville Zoo, who successfully transferred a zebra embryo into a quarter horse in 1984, are now testing artificial insemination and embryo splitting as ways to save endangered species.

"They're in the forefront. They really are," Dr. Joe Flanagan, staff veterinarian with the Houston Zoo, said of his colleagues in Louisville, who are led by Dr. Bill Foster. "We in the zoo business... know that Bill Foster is working with exotic equines, and no one else is really doing that. If I have a question, I call Bill."

In the zoo's most unusual project, scientists early next year intend to extract a living embryo from an onager, a wild ass, split it, return half to the natural mother and implant the other half in a domestic mare.

If the project succeeds, the result would be identical twin onagers with different mothers, Foster said.

Another project will focus on finding effective artificial insemination methods for zebras.

The Institute for Museum Services last month awarded the zoo a $10,080 grant to support the artificial insemination research, and Zoo Foundation Chairman Bert Klein has allocated $25,000 for the embryo project.

Foster said much of the zoo's inquiry is focused on reproduction in exotic equine species - wild horses and horse-like animals including zebras and onagers - because it ties in with Kentucky's horse industry.

He said the purpose of the projects is to learn more about the ways in which the animals reproduce, with the ultimate goal of increasing the numbers and genetic diversity of threatened and endangered species.

Sometime in February, Foster and Dr. Scott Bennett, an equine veterinarian from Simpsonville, plan to flush a 6-day-old embryo from the uterus of a female onager borrowed from the Mesker Park Zoo in Evansville, Ind.

Shiite faction holding hostages

Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon - A pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem faction holding foreign hostages in Lebanon threatened to kill Tunisian government leaders if seven fundamentalist convicts are executed in that North African Arab nation.

The threat came in a type-written Arabic statement issued by Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, and delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut along with a photograph of American hostage Terry Anderson.

"We consider this step as a declaration of war on Moslems not only in Tunisia but throughout the world," Islamic Jihad's statement said.

"Unless the Tunisian regime reverses its unjust sentences and releases all the imprisoned strugglers, it will bear the responsibility for this step which will only end with the uprooting and elimination of the regime.

"Either freedom for the strugglers or war which we will not confine to a specific time or place."

The black-and-white photo showed Anderson in a dark striped shirt looking straight at the camera. The picture was similar to five other photos of Anderson released in November and December of 1986 and January and February 1987.

Anderson, 39, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, is the longest held hostage among the 23 foreigners missing and believed kidnapped in Lebanon. He was abducted March 16, 1985.

In addition, Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite is missing after he vanished last January during a mission to attempt to mediate the release of some of the hostages.

Islamic Jihad, which claimed responsibility for Anderson's abduction, also holds another American and at least three Frenchmen. The group's new statement made no threats against the hostages.

The release of Anderson's picture appeared to be only meant to authenticate the statement.

"The price for the execution of our struggling brothers will be big heads of the leaders of the Tunisian oppressive regime," the statement said.

Alcohol policy ripe for revision

About six years ago, the administration found they had a problem. They thought the students were abusing alcohol, so the administration studied this problem and looked for a solution. As a result, the Alcohol Policy was created. This banned open containers, kegs, loud parties and just about everything else associated with college fun. It also promoted something known as responsible drinking. After some protest, the campus became sedate, serene and dull. All drinking, except for S.Y.R.'s, was pushed into rooms or off campus, where the administration could not see it. Since they could not see as many people drinking as they had before, it seemed the problem had been solved.

third and long

But had it? Ask yourself, has there ever been a time when you weren't able to drink when you wanted to because of the Alcohol Policy? If there was no alcohol policy, would you drink more than you do now? I doubt it. Sure it's a pain in the behind that you can't walk around with a beer in your hand but has that ever stopped you from drinking? The majority of drinking occurs at parties, not while walking around. While loud parties and open containers have disappeared from campus, student drinking continues to be a problem.

In fact, the alcohol policy may have made the situation worse. By pushing drinking into the rooms, the university has given problem drinkers a shield to hide behind. They can hole up in their room and abuse alcohol all they want, and no one will say anything about it. It seems, as far as the university is concerned, as long as you are quiet and in your room, you can drink yourself into oblivion if you want. Is this promoting responsible drinking? By severely restricting social drinking, the only thing some people will do now is drink to get drunk.

For those socially adept drinkers, the only option was to move off campus and escape the watchful eyes of Rectors and R.A.'s. This move has brought about two more problems: drinking and driving and off campus parties getting broken up by police. In the past year, two people have been killed by Notre Dame students driving under the influence of alcohol. Problems at the parties have also become worse; many have been ended by the local police with their noise meters, ticket booklets, handcuffs and hungry pets.

In creating the alcohol policy, the university forced drinking off campus. They moved their problem out into the City of South Bend. Accordingly, the City of South Bend has taken action to solve this problem. You really can't blame South Bend for becoming upset with the University and its students. Local residents shouldn't have to deal with a University problem. The local police have enough to worry about without worrying about rowdy college students. They have to do what they can to serve the local residents (the dogs are a bit much, though).

In response to the drunk driving (D.U.I.) problem, the administration has released a four page list of sanctions and punishments for students arrested for D.U.I. That is well and fine, but it does not solve the problem the Alcohol Policy has partially created. Instead of eliminating the situations where drinking and driving would occur, it punishes the offenders after the act has been committed.

Perhaps the administration believes the threatened sanctions will frighten the potential drunk driver to think twice before getting behind the wheel. The problem is: Have you ever met a drunk person who is frightened easily or thinks twice about anything? Of course not. A sober person might read about the punishments and vow not to drink and drive, but after a few beers, all rationality goes down the toilet. If scare tactics worked, the threat of arrest and prosecution would reduce drunk drivers, but it doesn't. Why does the administration think that the loss of parking privileges would stop a student when the threat of arrest won't?

The administration's proposal also does nothing about the off campus party problem, which seems to get worse every week. The relationship between off campus students and local residents has just about reached the breaking point. Pretty soon, this problem will reach the point where the University will have to act on it.

So what is their next step? Many people believe it will be a completely dry campus. This, besides being extremely childish and unfair, will not solve the problem. The off campus situation would mushroom into something dreadful. What if the administration decides to expel anyone, on campus or off, illegally in possession of alcohol? Legal ramifications aside, it would be virtually impossible to enforce.

What the administration must realize is that no matter what they do, we will still drink. No matter what sanctions or penalties are threatened, people, in general, will still drink. Prohibition proved this in the twenties. Having examined all this, there might be another logical and possibly effective solution open to the administration. Maybe it's time to modify the alcohol policy.

If the alcohol policy were modified, the major parties (which means the major drinking) would return to campus. This would mean three things. First, the social life on campus would improve. Second, Notre Dame's image in the community would improve because off campus parties would be reduced. Thirdly, the instances of drinking and driving may be reduced.

There are some problems with this idea, I know. Some people might question the legality of a more open drinking situation. Underage students might be exposed to more drinking. I doubt that. Underage students drink as much as they want to right now, and sometimes more. A more liberal policy will not change that.

Another problem deals with drinking and driving. If the major parties were held on campus, off campus students would still cause a problem. My only possible answer to this would be that less people live off campus so less people would be driving to an on campus party than would be driving to an off campus party. It's a very weak answer, I know, but it can't be any weaker than a list of sanctions.

My idea might work and, then again, it might not. I believe, however, it is a viable solution which not only deals with the D.U.I. problem but the off campus party situation as well.

The alcohol policy has not really promoted responsible drinking the way the administration had hoped. It has only forced drinking behind locked doors and off campus. It may have disrupted and even destroyed lives. Considering this, isn't it about time to re-evaluate and modify the alcohol policy?

Just who are Dick and Jane?

And why are t

accent editor

Students first heard of Dick and Jane through their personals to each other in The Observer: "DEAREST JANE - THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SENIOR. My life is empty since you left me for Notre Dame. . ." and "TO DICK, MY VERY OWN MAGNUM P.I. Your personal brought tears to my eyes and a throb to my heart. . .

Every day, as regular as the weather, a new personal would appear. Every day a new snippet of sappy love-longing and sighs would make people choke on their lunch. Student interest grew: "Who is this Dick?" "Could two people possibly be so sappy for each other?" The questions remained unanswered, and the personals continued. In fact, they became, despite all predictions, even more ga-ga eyed and love-lorn.

Interest in the mysterious lovers peaked last week when a half-page ad appeared in The Observer: "Jane - will you marry me? Dick."

Everywhere from the dining halls to the Huddle a cry arose, "Are these two for real!?"

Well, yes and no. The story of Dick and Jane begins far away from Notre Dame at another school, the New York Academy of Window Display Modeling. Dick and Jane met there during their freshman year and were inseparable from then on.

Somehow, Jane was able to keep up the hectic pace of maintaining a relationship with Dick while studying at the Institute and moonlighting at local clothing stores. Even though she was happy with her life, Jane felt the need to move on, and at the end of her junior year decided to transfer to the school of her dreams, Notre Dame.

Dick, a strong, silent type, was a year older than Jane and stayed behind to model in a local clothing store. Jane has been having some difficulties since she transferred into Notre Dame her senior year. She is by nature a quiet person, so people sometimes think that she lacks personality. But she isn't a dummy. Because Jane was having trouble adjusting to life under the Dome, the senior class officers took it upon themselves to adopt her.

According to Diane Fitzgibbon, senior class president, Jane has the perfect personality to be involved in student government, "she spends hours and hours working in the office, and I've never heard her complain yet." Fitzgibbon says that despite the fact that

The happy couple shares a quite moment on the romantic Notre Dame camp

Jane was "quiet at first," she has become a social force on campus; she has attended tailgaters, the bars, SYR's, Thursday night bowling, and even a few parties where she has been known to lose her head. Fitzgibbon attributes

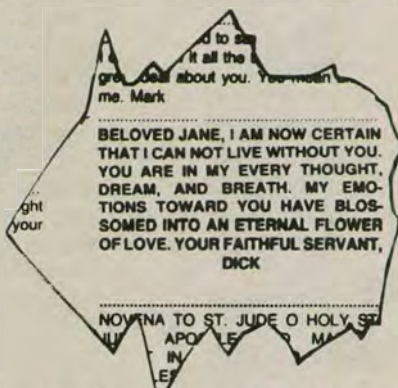

Jane's popularity to her outgoing nature, "She's a lot of fun and a great dancer (though she doesn't like to lead). She puts Janet Jackson to shame." Even though Jane seemed to be happy, friends sensed that there was a void in her life -- she missed Dick.

And Dick missed Jane. Since she left for Notre Dame, he had kept himself busy working in department stores, but none of the other girls in the windows made him feel as alive as Jane could.

Then, when neither of the two could stand to be apart from each other any longer, they met on the road trip to the University of Michigan. In Ann Arbor both Dick and Jane realized how deeply they needed each other. Despite the fact that some people have accused the two of being "stiff," "plastic," and "unresponsive to others," Dick and Jane have a fire between them that can only find release in words. After the weekend they began to write to each other in the personals of The Observer in order to keep the flame alive between them.

During this time, Dick was secretly moonlighting at Goodwill in order to save money for a ring. Then, last week he proposed to Jane, and she immediately accepted. Their whirlwind courtship is at an end, and they will both be married next Saturday.

Now their lives are filled with planning the wedding: "Dick and Jane want to share their happiness with all of the students today on the Fieldhouse Mall. They're going to be serpaingning for senior class president last year, Diane Fitzgibbon came up with the idea of a weddingless reception.

"Someone asked for a Bachelor party as well as a reception. This naturally led to a bachelorette party, engagement party, rehearsal dinner and mass," Fitzgibbon explains the evolution of Dick and Jane, "We thought it would be funny to have some people to actually get married. Since none of us really wanted to get married, we decided to get someone who would." Since Dick and Jane came to campus, they have become the focus of much attention. "People love them. They have been flocking to the office to meet them. Student Activities has really been great. All of the secretaries have come down to see them," says Fitzgibbon.

In celebration of Dick and Jane's engagement, the senior class has declared Sept. 28 to Oct. 3 to be Wedding Week. Festivities begin today at 4 p.m. on the Fieldhouse Mall with a wedding cake ceremony. There will be an engagement party Tuesday night at 9 p.m. at the Senior/Alumni Club, and Wednesday night Chips will hold a Bachelorette bash with no cover charge for ladies. Thursday is the boys' night out with a Bachelor party at the Linebacker Lounge from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. Friday, Dick and Jane get together for the Rehearsal Dinner at Jeremiah Sweeney's from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. with a free buffet. Things come to a climax Saturday with the weddingless reception which promises to be the social event of the season. Dick and Jane say that students can go in groups rather than in couples, because students can meet other people. A semi-formal dance complete with wine and beer will be held in two locations. The first three hundred students to buy tickets will go to Mitchell's Indiana Club; the next three hundred and fifty will be going to Knights of Columbus Hall. Transportation will be provided by school buses adorned with cans and toilet paper. The first bus will leave the main circle at 9 p.m. and will continue to run all night. Tickets cost $7 and will be on sale Monday and Tuesday in the class office from 4 to 7 p.m.

Despite the fact that Jane is getting so much attention from the men of Notre Dame, Dick remains unfazed. According to Fitzgibbons, "Dick is very secure in the relationship," says Fitzgibbon "He's the strong silent type and doesn't mind all of the attention that Jane has been getting."

Jason Scheff in his first Notre Dame appearance

Chicago 'recital' turns concert

accent writer

More people showed up for Monk Malloy's presidential inauguration at the ACC Wednesday afternoon than at the Chicago concert appearing on the same stage on Friday night. The popular new president outdrew one of pop music's most successful acts, and one can only wonder what would have happened if Monk had a guitar strapped around his neck at the inauguration. The roof of the arena surely would have been raised with excitement. South Bend Mishawaka baby boomers comprised most of Chicago's audience, perhaps rounding off their evening after a pleasant dinner at Bob Evans. Few Notre Dame/St. Mary's students turned out for the show, probably discouraged by the $15 ticket price.

Chicago divided its program into two parts separated by a twenty minute intermission. The band explained that Part One would feature a hit parade of their most popular songs of the past, while Part Two would focus on the band's more recent material. They opened the show with a jazzed up version of their recently re-recorded hit "25 Or 6 To 4" from Chicago 18, their latest album. The remainder of Part One consisted primarily of medleys of the band's oldies including "Saturday in the Park," "Searchin' So Long," "Wishing You Were Here," and "Color My World."

The band proceeded through the first set in such a controlled, rehearsed fashion that one would have had a better time listening to their greatest hits tape through a Walkman in the library. Jason Scheff, the vocalist who replaced the popular Peter Cetera, appeared almost uninterested, clearly showing that he did not enjoy singing material which he had no part in creating.

The repeated medleys were an insult to the audience, and the playing of these songs appeared almost as an obligatory gesture. Although Chicago's play was crisp and the sound in the arena first rate, the band lacked the spontaneity and the unabashed, free-form song variation that Chicago's audience has grown to expect. The band, on the last leg of its Chicago 18 tour, did not possess enough energy to keep people's attention. Many audience members sat through the first set with the enthusiasm one would reserve for watching the Bork confirmation hearings on television.

The second half of the show was a marked improvement of the first. With the required playing of the oldies under their belt, Chicago's band members rolled up their sleeves, greased their horn valves, turned up the amps, and swilled a shot of Jack Daniels. They were finally ready to play. Scheff, the lead singer, came into his own, making up for his lackluster first set by spitting out some distinctive vocals to some of the newer material off Chicago's last two albums. Guitarist Bill Champlin was impressive, cranking out some gut-wrenching riffs, and the band's trademark horn section was sonically sound.

Chicago clearly felt more comfortable with its new material, including "Stay the Night," "Hard Habit to Break," and "Will You Still Love Me."

The previously reserved audience got onto its feet, and some sporadic dancing broke out. The recital was turning into a concert.

Despite a modest turnout, Chicago had a good time on stage.

During the second set the band clearly demonstrated its ability to produce slickly crafted pop arrangements on stage. Chicago appreciated its audience and reciprocated with a more than expected two-and-a-half hours of music. It's too bad the band turned down the Observer's invitation for an after-concert cocktail at the Senior/Alumni Club. Maybe the DJ would have played "Color My World."

Who's the richest?

It seems that two biggest business magazines cannot agree on how many billionaires there are in the United States and Japan. In its July 27 issue, Fortune reported that the U.S. trailed Japan in billionaires 21 to 22. Forbes came back on Oct. 5, and put the U.S. ahead of Japan by a score of 40 to 24. Then Fortune's issue a week later put the total of U.S. billionaires at 47, Japan 4.

"Obviously, Fortune is a little confused," said a Forbes reporter, "but we have never changed our estimates." Fortune could not be reached for comment, but suggested, however, in the story that there was some difficulty in uncovering hidden fortunes.

The richest businessman, according to Forbes, is Yoshiaki Tsutsumi from Japan. He controls a $70 billion empire and has a personal fortune of over $20 billion. A Business Briefs tip on getting there: buy real estate in Japan. Almost all Japanese billionaires acquired their status by shrewdly buying land.

Recently an employment brochure was being distributed at a local Taco Bell. On the cover, four smiling, attractive models beckoned prospective employees with bright expressions that said, "Come on, this is fun!" The brochure promised a great group, not only to work with, but to be your best friends as well. It also promised frequent raises. A girl behind the counter had this to say about frequent raises: "I have worked here for four months." No raise yet.

As for the supposed great group of people to work with, well... Taco Bell has some problems. The shifts can run as late as 5:00 a.m. and are mostly limited to meal hours. Taco Bell is also a favorite spot for obnoxious party-goers, always fun to deal with at 2:00 a.m. on a Friday night.

With a complex menu that keeps expanding, polyester uniforms, very low wages, and all that grease, one is amazed that Taco Bell has any workers at all. Needless to say, Taco Bell has a hard time retaining quality workers, let alone models like the ones pictured in their brochure. In the words of one anonymous former Taco Bell employee, "That place was Taco Hell."

A rose by any other name: business monikers changing

By BRIAN P. MURRAY
Business writer

Last year was a record year for corporate name changes. Over 1300 companies emphasized their change in image by adopting a name that symbolized their new direction and purpose.

However, many of the names represent cutie buzzwords, made by joining two other names.

Take Unisys, for example. After Burroughs and Sperry merged, the employees were asked to submit names. From thousands of entries comes Unisys, an obvious suggestion about the merger, synergy, and the "strength of two," as stated in their ad campaign.

An even worse example is Trinova, the new name for Libby-Owens-Ford.

Though many people did not know what Libby-Owens-Ford made, it sure sounded like a lot. Fruit, glass, cars? A great business name deserving respect.

But Trinova means nothing. The change in names is fairly obvious: tri, meaning three, and nova, suggesting a star. Since Tristar was taken, Trinova was chosen.

As if there aren't enough star companies already, along comes Navistar, a rebirth of old International Harvester.

International Harvester was once a mighty industrial company. But in these Yuppie times, heavy industry is out. Cheese and wine and cute business quips like Navistar are in.

UAL jumped on the bandwagon when it felt that United Airlines did not describe its hotel and rental car operations. From alliance and aegis comes Allegis.

Two words, one stupid, meaningless name. The stock price fell almost ten percent on the announcement of the new name.

Of course, some companies have justifiable reasons for changing their name, especially when they diversify.

USX needed to shed the steel image of US Steel when they diversified into energy.

USX at least rejected "Maxus" and "Amcon", both whippy names. In addition, USX took its name from its stock exchange symbol, a move that appreciates the real reason for corporate America.

Combining words or sounds can have its dangers.

Houston Natural Gas and InterNorth almost picked the name Enteron for the merged company. Enteron is another word for the digestive system, from the mouth to the other end. Though the words fit, i.e. gas and enter north (exit south), the company chose Enron.

Exxon almost chose the name Enco, which means stalled car in Japanese.

Fortunately, the mistake was caught in time.

In reviewing the recent name change trends, a simple process becomes apparent. Take two syllables that symbolize a forward looking company of growth and strength but above all else, the result must sound cute.

Southland Corp., owner of 7-11 stores, would become Slurpco.

Finally, this writer suggests a new name for the University. "Endee", signifying the hope that college will come to an end.

U.S., IMF disagree on deficit

Associated Press

Treasury Secretary James Baker gave an optimistic view of the world economy Sunday after a gloomier set of predictions was announced by the International Monetary Fund.

The IMF's "World Economic Outlook" said sluggishness early this year roused concern that activity would slow down this year and next.

It added that this concern was increased by large surpluses and deficits in trade and growing friction on the issue, fears of a further decline of the dollar in Europe and Japan, low prices for goods produced in the Third World and the decline of bank lending to the area.

"In the United States we expect real growth in excess of 3 percent for both 1987 and 1988," Baker told the IMF's Interim Committee, which makes its major decisions.

"Other countries are also putting into place policies to promote global growth and a reduction of external imbalances. Japan, for example, is moving to implement a stimulative fiscal package and tax reform, both of which should support domestic demand" according to Baker.

Baker's statement was made to a closed-door meeting.

The IMF, meanwhile, issued a report saying the U.S. budget deficit would shrink significantly this year but will rise through 1990, despite predictions to the contrary by the Reagan administration.

"There continues to be uncertainty about the timing and extent of future fiscal corrections because compromises between the U.S. administration and Congress on ways to cut deficits have proved to be extremely difficult to achieve," the IMF staff said in its annual economic outlook issued for meetings of the 151-nation IMF and the World Bank in Washington this week.

The report was referring to the conflicting fiscal positions staked out by President Reagan and congressional Democrats.

Reagan steadfastly opposes tax increases and is trying to stave off military spending cuts demanded by the Democratic majority in Congress.

Compared to a 1986 U.S. budget deficit of $220.7 billion, the IMF staff published a table showing estimated deficits of $163 billion for fiscal 1987 ending this week, $173 billion for 1988 and $179 billion for 1990.

The Reagan administration projects the deficits at $158 billion for 1987, $123 billion for 1988 and $90 billion for 1990.

The IMF said its estimates were based on no further changes in the U.S. tax system or spending programs.

The report noted "signs of weakness in private consumption in the United States" after four years of providing the engine for economic recovery.

It predicted that growth in U.S. domestic demand would slow to an annual rate of 1.75 percent to 2 percent in 1987-88, compared to 3.5 percent to 4 percent for 1985-86.

Improved export competitiveness should stimulate U.S. economic growth and weaker domestic consumption "should be largely, if not fully, offset by a sizable increase in U.S. real net exports," the IMF said.

Giants clinch tie; NL East race tightens

Associated Press

ATLANTA - The San Francisco Giants clinched a tie for the National League West title Sunday, spoiling Phil Niekro's farewell game by routing the Atlanta Braves 15-6 as Candy Maldonado hit a grand slam and drove in six runs.

San Francisco cut its magic number to one over second-place Cincinnati, which beat Houston 4-2. The Giants can clinch their first playoff berth since 1971 by winning Monday night in San Diego, or if the Reds lose to Atlanta in Cincinnati.

The Giants also put a disappointing end on Niekro's career. The 48-year-old knuckleballer signed to pitch one final game for the Braves, but he wound up allowing five runs on six hits with six walks in three-plus innings and got a no-decision.

Niekro, who failed to hold a 5-0 lead, left the mound with his head bowed to a four-minute standing ovation, his seventh of the day from 26,019 fans on Atlanta's final home date of the season.

Reds 4, Astros 2

CINCINNATI - Buddy Bell's two-run triple highlighted a four-run eighth inning Sunday that carried Cincinnati past the Houston Astros 4-2 Sunday.

Cincinnati rallied in the eighth off starter Bob Knepper, 8-17, who took a three-hitter into the inning. Singles by Dave Collins, Dave Concepcion and Tracy Jones scored Cincinnati's first run and Knepper left after inducing Dave Parker to force Jones at second.

Mets 12, Pirates 3

NEW YORK - Bob Ojeda won his first start since coming off the disabled list on Sept. 1 after missing three months, and Kevin McReynolds drove in four runs as the New York Mets defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates 12-3 Sunday.

The Mets now trail first-place St. Louis by two-and-a-half games in the National League East.

Expos 5, Phillies 3

PHILADELPHIA - Tim Lincecum hit a bloop double that was lost in the sun and scored on a wild pitch to break an eighth-inning tie, and the Montreal Expos went on to beat the Philadelphia Phillies 5-3

Sunday to stay alive in the National League East race.

Montreal now trails first-place St. Louis by three games. The Expos start a four-game series with the Cardinals Tuesday night.

Cubs 7, Cardinals 3

CHICAGO - Bob Dernier, a last-minute replacement in the starting lineup, had a lead-off home run, double, and scored twice to lead the Chicago Cubs over St. Louis 7-3 Sunday as the Cardinals' magic number for clinching the National East title remained at five.

The loss, coupled with New York's 12-3 victory over Pittsburgh, reduced St. Louis' lead to two-and-a-half games gave last-place Chicago a league-leading 203 homers this season.

AL Roundup

Detroit salvages one from Jays

Associated Press

TORONTO - Kirk Gibson's 13th-inning single drove in the go-ahead run and the Detroit Tigers stayed close in the American League East race by beating the Toronto Blue Jays 3-2 Sunday, averting a sweep in their four-game series.

The Blue Jays' magic number remained at five and their lead over the Tigers dropped to two-and-a-half games. The two teams finish the season with three games at Detroit next weekend.

Jim Walewander started the 13th with a walk off Jose Nunez, 5-2, the fifth of six Toronto pitchers. Walewander went to second on Lou Whitaker's sacrifice and scored when Gibson's soft fly ball bounced off the artificial turf and over center fielder Lloyd Moseby's head.

Orioles 9, Yankees 5

BALTIMORE - Rene Gonzales broke a 5-5 tie with a double as the Baltimore Orioles rallied for five runs in the seventh inning to defeat the New York Yankees 9-5 Sunday and snap an eight-game losing streak.

The rally came after the Orioles had fallen behind 5-3 in the top of the seventh by allowing three unearned runs on two errors by shortstop Cal Ripken Jr.

Twins 8, Royals 1

MINNEAPOLIS - Kirby Puckett, Gary Gaetti and Kent

Hrbek homered in Minnesota's five-run first inning and Bert Blyleven pitched a five-hitter Sunday as the Minnesota Twins clinched at least a tie for the American League West title with an 8-1 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

The magic number is one for the Twins, who last won the AL West in 1970.

Angels 11, Indians 8

CLEVELAND - Mark McLemore drove in four runs with a pair of bases-loaded singles and Don Sutton earned his 320th career victory in his first relief appearance since 1980 Sunday as the California Angels defeated the Cleveland Indians 11-8.

Sutton, 10-11, who is in 11th place on the all-time win list, gave up three runs and four hits in 4 1-3 innings.

Mariners 5, Rangers 3

SEATTLE - Pinch-hitter Dave Hengel's three-run homer off Mitch Williams in the eighth inning gave the Seattle Mariners a 5-3 victory over the Texas Rangers Sunday.

It was the sixth consecutive loss for the Rangers and third straight win for Seattle.

Brewers 9, Red Sox 6

MILWAUKEE - Robin Yount delivered a two-run single for his 100th RBI of the season, capping a four-run sixth inning Sunday that gave the Milwaukee Brewers a 9-6 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Boston led 6-1 in the fifth and took a 6-3 advantage into the sixth behind rookie Jody Reed's three RBI, but reliever Wes Gardner walked the bases loaded and was replaced by Bob Stanley, 4-15.

said even though the plays were successful, they were not a surprise.

"We worked on that in practice because Louisville did the same thing last week and we made some corrections late in the week," he said. "Those plays were just blown coverages."

Purdue may not have been surprised by the plays, but Johnson said he was.

"Purdue double-teamed Tim Brown the whole game and that opened things up for me," he said. "Tim is such a team player and he gave up his numbers today for the team. I was surprised to see the ball so much today because it's not normally in the game plan, especially for me to catch the ball out of the backfield so much."

After Andrysiak fumbled on the first drive of the second half, the offense dominated, scoring four times and controlling the line of scrimmage.

"(At halftime) we went over what we could run against them," said Irish center Chuck Lanza. "We knew that we could run many plays at will. It was just a matter of going out there and not defeating ourselves. We beat ourselves in the first half. It was just a matter of coming in here and saying 'hey, let's get together.'"

"You like to establish the run. No tricks. You know the ball's coming right up the middle. That's what a 4-3 defense is. You line up on that side and show us what you got. That's the way we like to play."

That attitude was put to use when the Irish found themselves down, 20-17, in the third quarter with the ball at their own nine. A screen to Green was good for 21 yards on the first play. Eleven straight running plays put the ball in the end zone and Notre Dame would not trail again. Johnson, Green, Pernell Taylor and Tony Brooks consistently pounded into the Boilermakers' defense to sustain the drive.

Compared to that long, methodical drive, the next Irish scoring attack was completed in no time. Twenty-three seconds to be exact.

Tim Brown, 'held' to 148 total yards, beat freshman Steve Jackson for a 49-yard touchdown after another long attempt to Johnson just missed.

"We threw an out-and-up pass to Tim Brown early in the game and it was overthrown," said Holtz. "Brown said he could beat his defender on a down-and-up pattern pattern if he was given another chance. That's when he scored his touchdown."

That gave the Irish a 31-20 lead that sealed the game. For the offense, the three miscues could not dim its best performance of the season.

"They're good," said Purdue head coach Fred Akers. "They made the big play just enough to keep their drives alive. That kept our defense out on the field and then they really wore us down."

Invitational tests Irish tennis

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame women's tennis team received some good news and bad news during this weekend's individual-flight Irish Invitational at Courtney Courts.

On the positive side, the Irish saw strong play from freshman Ce Ce Cahill and junior Natalie Illig for a second consecutive week, the recovery of freshman Anne-Marie Dega from injury and an encouraging debut performance from freshman Cathy Bradshaw.

However, Notre Dame also suffered two major setbacks, as fourth-seeded sophomore Alice Lohrer and sixth-seeded sophomore Resa Kelly were sidelined for the rest of the fall season. Lohrer will undergo arthroscopic surgery on her knee this week, and Kelly will receive final word on her status tomorrow after reinjuring a knee on Sunday. Kelly was ahead, 6-3, 5-1, in her match before her knee gave out.

"She (Kelly) had a ligament problem before, and now they think there's a cartilage problem too," said Irish head coach Michele Gelfman. "We're hoping we'll have her back by January."

"I give Alice the purple heart for the weekend," added Gelfman, "because she was hurting, and she didn't complain once. She didn't want to let the team down and her partner down. By the time we went to doubles play, she was hurting really bad."

While Lohrer and Kelly became new names on Notre Dame's injured list, Cahill was busy adding names to her personal list of victims. Proving her championship performance the previous weekend at the Midwest Invitational was anything but a fluke, Cahill blew past her four opponents to win her singles draw. Cahill won her first two matches by scores of 6-2, 6-0, and 6-1, 6-1, won 6-2, 6-0 in the semi-finals on Saturday, then blew past Purdue's Erica Adams in Sunday's final, 6-2, 6-0.

"She has more intensity than anyone I've ever seen and more determination than anyone I've ever seen," Gelfman said. "I didn't expect it to be quite so easy for her. Erica Adams is a ranked player. The scores weren't close, but it took about four games in the set for her to get into her rhythm."

Cahill contributed to both Notre Dame championships over the weekend, as she teamed with sophomore Stephanie Tolstedt to take the second-seeded doubles flight title. Cahill and Tolstedt fell behind 0-5 in the first set of the finals, and roared back to win the match 7-6, 6-0.

"They were down 5-0, and I told them that I was going to watch some other matches and they'd have to settle this between themselves," Gelfman said. "They were down 5-2 in the tiebreaker also. It was incredible. They had so much momentum and adrenaline that they just destroyed them and ate them alive in the second set."

Illig, who won her singles flight at the Midwest Invitational last weekend, took second this weekend. In the same bracket, Bradshaw placed third in her first taste of college competition, losing only to Illig in the semi-finals. Dega, who was out with an injury to her foot and a scratched cornea early in the season, also got her first experience of college play.

"For Natalie, it goes to show how she's improved her performance. She's gotten progressively better, and has held up very well in tight situations," said Gelfman. "I was very pleased with Bradshaw. She really rose to the occasion. Dega had a slow start this weekend, but finished up strong. I look for bright things from both of them."

Notre Dame's other top finisher was freshman Kim Pacella. The Toledo, Oh., native placed third in her singles flight.

Akers said. "They were a little too much for us physically when they started pounding it at us."

"I thought the two turning points were the interception (a Stan Smagala interception after which the Irish scored on Johnson one-yard plunge) which tied the game and sent them in into halftime with some momentum. Then we regained the momentum, and they needed another (score). They got what seemed like a 100-yard drive. They engineered a very good offensive drive. I think that took a lot out of us, and showed us some of their depth."

The Irish opened the scoring on a Ted Gradel 25-yard field goal in the first quarter. They then went up 10-0 on Johnson's first touchdown run, this one for six yards, to cap off an 11-play, 81-yard drive. Johnson finished with 69 yards on 14 carries and two pass receptions of 51 and 39 yards - both of which figured prominently in the Irish scoring drive.

At that point it looked as if the battle for the Shillelagh (trophy given to winner of Notre Dame-Purdue game) would be a shellacking, but the Boilers came back on two second-quarter touchdowns - the first scores the Irish had allowed in an opening half this season. The first score came on an eight-yard pass from Doug Downing to Brad Schumacher who had fallen on the play.

"I was either tripped or just fell down," Schumacher said. "You've got to give Doug credit for hanging in there and sticking with me. I saw the ball coming when I was on the ground and had just enough time so I shot up and got it."

The Boilers scored again less than two minutes later after Jerrol Williams intercepted Andrysiak. Two plays later, Downing hit a streaking Calvin Williams at the goal line for 22 yards out to Boilers up, 14-10.

Briggs hit an 18-yard field goal after a Green fumble to increase the Purdue lead to 17-10 before the Irish knotted the game at the half.

"We were just executing well," Downing said. "It felt good. I was really fired up to play Notre Dame - and it's nice to do well - but you remember that later. You always remember you lost the Notre Dame game the last time you played them and that's tough."

After going up 24-20, the Irish scored again on a 49-yard hook up between Andrysiak and Tim Brown. Two more Gradel field goals (from 49 and 28 yards) and Corny Southall's 57-yard interception return sealed the Boilers' fate.

"It was a fine game," Holtz said in retrospect. "We got down 17-10, and I didn't know how our football team would react. I sort of liked what I saw. It was not a great performance by us. I think we had three turnovers, and they were all critical."

"We had an awful lot of big plays. I thought our defense stiffened up and made things happen in the second half."

Men's harriers 2nd at Catholic meet

By GEORGE TRAVERS
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame men's cross country team placed second overall as it hosted the National Catholic Tournament Friday at the Burke Memorial Golf Course. The Irish were beaten out by the favorite, Loyola of Chicago.

Coach Joe Piane and his harriers learned an important lesson during the race. The key to winning a race like the National Catholic is to run as a team, something Notre Dame failed to do.

Loyola of Chicago was led by Eddie Slowikowski (24:24) who edged Irish senior Dan Garrett by less than two seconds to place first in the overall race. Other top Loyola runners were Marc Burns (3rd) and Jim Westphal (6th). The Ramblers also placed 13th and 16th to finish with an impressively low score of 39.

The Irish may have had a chance if they could have stayed together and ran as a team. The only other Irish runner in the top ten was sophomore Mike O'Connor who placed 4th (24:51). Ron Markezich finished 11th overall for the Irish (25:13). Rounding out the Irish top five were senior Mike Smoron (21st) and freshman Pat Kearns (26th). Notre Dame finished with a total of 64 points.

The rest of the top ten finishing schools were Marquette (121 pts), Fordham (150 pts), Canisius (167), Loras (170), St. Thomas, St. John's, Walsh and Lewis. The surprise of the race was Loras College who placed sixth despite not having a single runner in the top ten. Loras ran consistently throughout and surprised a lot of people.

Irish captain Dan Garrett felt Notre Dame ran well, but could have done a lot better if they incorporated more teamwork.

"We learned a lesson yesterday that can help us at the Notre Dame Invitational," said Garrett. "We didn't run as a group and Loyola did. That was the biggest reason why they beat us."

"Eddie (Slowikowski) and I shared the lead for most of the race. We were trying to force each other to take the lead during the middle. Then at the end he outkicked me. He did the exact same thing to me last spring in the 1500-meter race. I should have expected it."

Coach Piane believes Loyola perfectly exemplified how to run a team cross country race.

"To be a successful cross country team," said Piane, "you've got to run as a pack. All you need is your top 5 guys running well and together. Dan (Garrett) and Mike O'Connor ran together for most of the race but our other runners broke into splinter groups."

"You've got to compliment Loyola for running such an aggressive race. It's obvious that they won because they ran as a team. You can't pin the blame on anyone because we ran well, but not as a team."

Notre Dame did run extremely well, placing second in a field of over twenty teams. The Irish next run on October 2 when they host the Notre Dame Invitational.

Women runners seventh in meet

The women's cross country team improved one spot from last year in Friday's National Catholic Championships, but Irish coach Dan Ryan was still not pleased with the seventh-place finish.

"I'm a little bit disappointed in the time gap between our runners and our finish," Ryan said. "We were beaten by Detroit who we soundly beat two weeks ago at the Detroit Invitational."

Villanova ran away with the 21-team meet for the second consecutive year with 40 points. Vicki Huber and Kathy Franey took first and second places for the winners.

"Villanova is still missing some of its top runners, but still ran a strong race," Ryan said. "They have incredible depth. They have one of the strongest programs in the country." St. Thomas and Depaul tied for second with 102 points. Fordham and Detroit rounded out the top five with 120 and 138 points followed by Holy Cross at 159 and the Irish at 161. Six teams were added to this year's meet and Notre Dame defeated all of them with the exception of Fordham.

Junior Theresa Rice led the Irish for the second consecutive meet with a seventh-place finish. She toured the course in a time of 18:54.8.

"There was the opportunity to run well, and she took it," Ryan said. "She was running with the leaders. There's no question she is one of the best runners in the district, but she has a little more speedwork to do."

Freshman Jenny Ledrick took 20th place with a time of 19:25.5 and co-captain Julia Merkel finished 23rd at 19:33.3. Rounding out the scoring for the Irish was Kathleen Lehman in 43rd place and Wendy Murray in 67th.

Ryan and his team still felt the effects of the injury to junior Terry Kibelstis, one of the top runners.

The Irish will host the 10-team Notre Dame Invitational Friday at Burke Memorial Golf Course.

Irish overcome pesky Boilermakers, 44-20

Anthony Johnson does the high step as he enters the endzone in Notre Dame's 44-20 win over Purdue on Saturday. Johnson scored three touchdowns on runs of 6, 1, and 8 yards.

2nd-half surge keys victory

By DENNIS CORRIGAN

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. - For the first time this young season, the Notre Dame was put to the test Saturday at Purdue. Going into the locker room at halftime tied at 17, The Irish did a little cramming and came back to pass with flying colors.

Behind Anthony Johnson's three scoring runs, the Irish rallied twice to defeat Purdue, 44-20, and kept their record a perfect 3-0. The loss kept the Boilers winless at 0-2-1.

The Irish had two turnovers in the first half and opened up the second with a Terry Andrysiak fumble on their sixth play. The Boilers went back on top when Jonathan Briggs kicked a 50-yard field goal, the second longest in Purdue history and the longest ever in Ross-Ade Stadium.

Then the Irish went to work. Starting on their own nine, the Irish drove the rest of the field to go on top for good on Johnson's third score of the game. Except for an opening screen pass from Andrysiak to Mark Green for 21 yards, the drive was straight ahead running.

"The 91-yard drive (officially 81 because of a dead-ball penalty after the kick-off return) after they went ahead 20-17 and we started first and 20 on our nine was very critical," Notre Dame head coach Lou Holtz said afterward. "We came in at halftime, and I told our offensive line if we don't win this football game I'm not going to give you the chance to say we didn't do it."

The 12-play drive consumed 4:56 of the third quarter and from there the Irish defense limited the Boilers to just 87 total yards in the second half.

"When you're playing someone that's not a highly-ranked ballclub, you tend not to have the right attitude," said Irish center Chuck Lanza. "Coach Holtz knew that things like that were going to happen. It took us until the second half and halftime. We came in here and regrouped."

For Purdue head coach Fred Akers, what looked like the makings of a pleasant day instead turned into another afternoon of frustration.

"They did what they had to do in the second half," Purdue head coach Fred

Offense kicks into gear for the win

By RICK RIETBROCK

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. - More than in any other game this season, Notre Dame got their points the old-fashioned way against Purdue. They earned them.

The Irish piled up 476 yards of total offense in surviving a first-half scare in Saturday's 44-20 win over the Boilermakers. Unlike Notre Dame's previous two games, the defense did not give the ball to the offense in opportune field position this time. Not counting Corny Southall's interception return and Mike Griffin's fumble recovery on Purdue's 10-yard line in the fourth quarter, the offense scored on drives of 57, 81, 72, 81, and 49 yards.

The offense's stick-it-to-them performance, especially in the second half, was a welcomed sight for Head Coach Lou Holtz.

"Once we got decent field position, we were going to establish a beach-head," he said. "We were going to establish a running game. We were fortunate enough in that situation to do it."

"We had some great runs, some great blocking and it's probably the most crisp that we've looked this entire year."

It appeared as though the Irish were returning to habits of earlier years in the first half. The offense gained 276 yards, but turned the ball over twice in the second quarter, setting the stage for 10 Purdue points.

First, an Andrysiak pass was intercepted by Jerrol Williams on the third play after Purdue's first touchdown. Purdue scored a touchdown two plays later to take a 14-10 lead.

Next, a 61-yard drive by the second unit ended at Purdue's 22 when Mark Green couldn't keep control of a Tony Rice pitch. Williams was there again to recover the ball for the Boilermakers.

Those miscues kept the Irish from taking a lead in the first half and dimmed some of the offense's bright spots.

Mark Green rushed for 48 yards, but the big plays were provided by fullback Anthony Johnson. The sophomore scored on six- and one-yard runs and also hauled in two passes for 90 yards, beating Purdue linebackers badly.

"We felt that they would double cover Timmy Brown and we'd be able to get the fullback open," said Holtz. "We did have people open, but that's the risk you take. There were two and even three guys on Timmy. That means you're going to get some other people open. It wasn't any stroke of genius. I'd have done the same thing Purdue did. We'd never gone to our fullback. We'd never made any threat that we might even be going deep with him."

Irish whip Bowling Green, take win streak into 'crunch' week

By BRIAN O'GARA
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame volleyball team continued its winning ways this weekend, defeating Bowling Green and improving its record to 11-2.

The Irish won the contest in a three-game sweep, winning 15-3, 15-7, 15-9, and are currently riding a seven-game winning streak. Off to its best start ever, Notre Dame also seems to be improving as it heads into a difficult week of four matches.

"We played well in spots and poorly in others," said Head Coach Art Lambert, "but I noticed a distinct improvement over our play in the Bradley match last week."

The Irish were led by Mary Kay Waller's 19 kills, a career high for the 6-0 junior. Zanette Bennett, also a junior, recorded 17 kills and pulled out 12 digs to help the Notre Dame defensive cause.

As a team, the Irish hit for a .476 kill percentage, their best hitting performance since setting a school record .539 last October 3 against Marquette.

"It took us too long to adjust in the first game," said Lambert, "but we played well as the match went on. We did a good job covering up on defense. They are working together as a team - with six people out there blending and working together to help each other out."

Notre Dame now enters a busy week of volleyball, beginning at Northwestern on Wednesday. The Wildcats are currently ranked No. 15 in the nation, and will be a challenging test for the Irish, who are looking to break into national rankings themselves.

On Thursday, Notre Dame will face DePaul in Chicago, then travel to Butler for a Friday evening match. The Irish return home on Saturday for a 7:30 P.M. match with Iowa.

"This is crunch time," Lambert said. "This is where we begin to find out just what we're made of. After this stretch, we are at home for a little while."

"Now is when we begin the season," continued Lambert.
