Miller released on bond after arrest

Former wide receiver linked to fraudulent check-writing scandal in Texas

Former Notre Dame wide receiver Michael Miller was released on $5,000 bond yesterday, one day after Texas police arrested him on an indictment charging him with organized criminal activity in what authorities say was a fraudulent check-writing scheme.

Miller, who was dismissed from Notre Dame Tuesday, surrendered to the Fort Bend County Sheriff's department Wednesday.

"He showed up with an attorney in one hand and bond in another," Fort Bend Sheriff's Detective Rodney Glendening said Thursday.

Arraignment was scheduled for Nov. 21 in Texas state court in Fort Bend County, just southwest of Houston. Miller faces as much as ten years in prison if convicted.

Glendening said Miller and two former high school classmates allegedly purchased over $50,000 worth of merchandise and airline tickets over the past 18 months with stolen checks.

Miller was suspected to be involved after his name showed up on an airline ticket, Glendening said. The ticket was allegedly bought with checks that were stolen.

"Several guys in Houston, Texas, have legitimate checking accounts, go to police departments and report the checks stolen and sign affidavits that they are stolen," Glendening told the Associated Press. "In the meantime, they (the thieves) go on shopping sprees."

Authorities said Miller was among a group that went through Houston's

After the conversion of Cavanaugh nearly 70 freshmen in Flanner and Grace find themselves

Stuck in the Middle

By Katie Murphy

The Observer/Rob Finch

A number of Notre Dame students may boast of spending their nights toiling over books in dorm study lounges, but there are few who can truthfully say that they sleep there every night.

This year, nearly seventy freshmen in Grace and Flanner Halls have this privilege. Nine study lounges in Flanner and eight in Grace have been temporarily changed into four-person dorm rooms to accommodate the displacement caused by Cavanaugh's conversion to a female dorm.

"This is partly a result of Cavanaugh going down," said Father William Seetch, the rector of Flanner Hall.

Cavanaugh Hall, which contains 242 beds, was changed to a female dorm this year to help preserve the 45/55 percent ratio of women to men undergraduates. The Board of Trustees decided last November to maintain this ratio as a part of the University's gender-blind admissions policy. Since being implemented three years ago, this policy has resulted in a larger enrollment of women undergraduates.

"Freshmen must live together. You can't just put them anywhere."
– Kevin Cannon

Cavanaugh is the second dorm in three years to be converted. In 1992, Pangborn Hall welcomed its first female residents.

The conversions of Cavanaugh as well as Pangborn were intended to alleviate the severe shortage of campus housing for women. In previous years, more women than men have lacked campus housing. Ideally, the waiting lists for male and female housing should be fairly even, according to Kevin Cannon, director of Residence Life since September 1.

"If Cavanaugh had not been converted this year, the University would now be facing a long waiting list for housing for women. Typically, females have a tendency to stay on campus longer than men," said Cannon. "As it is now, we have no empty spaces for men and only a few for women."

The situation is not permanent, however. Next year, "It may happen that 50 women have to live in lounges," according to Cannon.

"Our main goal is that all of our freshmen get rooms on campus," said Cannon. "But we don't know year to year exactly how many upperclassmen are going to stay or how many are going to return to dorm life after studying abroad."

Catholics hurt by media bias

By CHRIS WILSON
News Writer

News stories about Catholicism have become "pre-programmed" and often retain some anti-Catholic residue, according to Peter Steinfels, a former religion writer for the New York Times.

In a lecture yesterday entitled "How the Media Cover Catholicism: Reflections of a Perpetrator," Steinfels, also a writer for the Catholic magazine Commonweal, spoke on how Catholicism is perceived by the media.

Steinfels, who currently holds the Welch Visiting Professor of American Studies at Notre Dame, said such stories are "often stale, and failures of imagination." When writing about Catholicism, he said, the press has been locked into the old journalistic rule of repeating the same few stories, only re-packaging them for the readers in order to seem fresh, new, and interesting.

One of these recurring stories concerns the church and its position on abortion. According to Steinfels, many reporters are one-minded, and "there is rarely any debate in newsrooms on abortion, birth control, or celibacy." Consequently, bias often creeps into those reporting on Catholic stories.

However, Steinfels believes this is often counteracted by professionalism and good journalistic practice. Despite any such bias prevalent among the media, he feels that media coverage concerning abortion and the church "is fairer than it was three, four, and five years ago."

Steinfels stated that another example illustrating how the media contribute to poor news coverage about Catholicism is the reporting of sexual abuse of minors by priests. Steinfels contends that because priests are representative of the church's traditional standards of sexuality, the media are gleefully ready to seize the issue of sexual abuse by priests in order to expose the church's failures to meet its own standards.

He further says the press has been irresponsible and has failed to

Honor our veterans, not Rambo

Eric Ruethling
Photographer

Today is Veteran's Day. Actually, it is Armistice Day, which signifies the ending of World War I back in 1918 when President Woodrow Wilson declared a "day of mourning" for America . The name was changed in 1954 to Veterans Day in order to honor all of America's soldiers from every war or conflict.

Despite early importance, it is hardly remembered in these times. One would be hard pressed to find any specials on TV—especially on a Friday night—and usually it is only ROTC or VFW who have anything significant.

May 5th is a similar day in the Netherlands. Honoring all the fallen Dutchmen during World War II, it is a very serious occasion. Documentaries fill the state owned channels with file footage of resistance efforts and stormings of Nazi occupied buildings. At five o'clock, there are two minutes of silence. No talking on TV and most people bow their heads and reflect upon the fallen. For the outside observer, this is a very powerful moment.

Why the stunning difference? As a country that was born and raised by blood and fire, one would think that more attention would be given to the fallen. For a country which often calls upon its men and women to help preserve a way of life, both domestic and international, one would expect a deep respect for those who have done such. I find it disturbingly lacking.

Here in America, there are very few who have any personal attachment to our veterans. The public at large is reluctant to peer into any sort of book, much less a history book, outside of school. Many depend on movies and TV shows as their guide to the US soldier. However, soldiers and vets are often pictured as unstable, as druggies or drunks, and are usually deeply troubled. Considering when the majority of entertainment media focus on the military today it usually views only the Vietnam conflict, thus earning many of these men a very bad name. Oliver Stone may call this a stereotypical truth, but I find it very different.

There are several veterans who are a part of my daily life. Dan McKeown, whom I worked with the past two summers, often walked point for patrols in Vietnam. Jay Krueger, a father of a friend, was a machine gunner for light infantry. Randy Vieth, also the father of a friend of mine, was a radio man often connected with patrols deep into dangerous territory. My father is also a vet, having served with the artillery division of the third Marines.

I have never heard of any Stone-esque tales out of any of these gentlemen. None of them rant and rave, or are crazy (though Dan likes square dancing). None of them are druggies or drunks, or go around beating their family.

I don't doubt that perhaps some of what Stone packages and labels as the truth may have gone on. I also see a resemblance to his characters and other movie characters portrayed in the typical Vietnam movie, both before and after Platoon. Let's face it. In the land of Lorena Bobbitt and O.J. Simpson, the outrageous tale is favored, sensationalized, and preferred to the normal, regardless of reality.

Overweight teenagers growing in significant numbers

ATLANTA

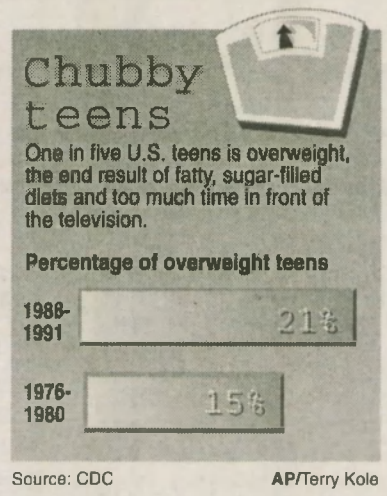
One in five American teens is overweight, the government reported Thursday, and experts are blaming everything from too much junk food and TV to lack of exercise and baggy, figure-concealing grunge clothing.

Through the 1970s, the percentage of overweight children ages 12 to 19 held steady at around 15 percent, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. But that rate had jumped to 21 percent by 1991.

The increase was not much of a surprise because the CDC had previously tracked a similar trend among overweight adults, from 25 percent to 33 percent, said Jeffrey Lancashire of the CDC's National Center for Health Statistics.

"We all — adults, adolescents and young children — eat in the same environment and have access to the same healthy and unhealthy foods," he said.

But while baby fat can melt away as a child's hormones shift into adolescent overdrive, too many overweight teens end up struggling with their weight the rest of their lives.



"Unlike with adults, we have to be careful about instructing adolescents to go on diets," he said.

"We know that at least some of these overweight adolescents will grow up to be overweight adults," Lancashire said. That means they will also run a higher risk of heart disease, diabetes and arthritis.

The report didn't examine by how much the teens were overweight, or how much body fat they had — a key indicator of health.

What caused the increase among overweight teens also isn't clear, Lancashire said, though other studies point to too much fat and sugar in children's diets and a sedentary life spent in front of the television.

Lancashire said the CDC would prefer to encourage exercise rather than dieting, for fear teen-agers will go overboard.

Cartoonists prepare for politicians

Get ready for more caricatures of a politician with grayish, big hair and a pudgy face. Except now Newt Gingrich, not Bill Clinton, may be dominating the editorial cartoons. "It'll be great drawing a speaker of the House named after a lizard," laughed Steve Benson of The Arizona Republic. Well, actually a newt is an amphibian. But this isn't rocket science. "Newt's cut out of the mold cartoonists like. There's that shock of hair, and he speaks his mind without much forethought," Benson added Thursday. "We have a whole new cast of characters. This is going to make great and invigorating upheaval on the editorial pages." "It's morning in America for me. I've been born again professionally," said Signe Wilkinson, a Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist for the Philadelphia Daily News and a self-professed liberal. "The electorate never lets us down." The satirists who spoof politicians are gleeful because the crowd taking control of Congress is straightforward about what it stands for. "This is a cartoonist's dream. There's nothing more fun than triumphant windbags," one cartoonist said. A cartoonist looks at national trauma the way a plastic surgeon looks at crow's feet or cellulite. It's too bad, but it's a living. We thrive on disaster."

Pistol refused to White House shooter

COLORADO SPRINGS

The ex-convict accused of shooting at the White House was stopped from buying a pistol a month earlier when a gun dealer ran a background check on him.No such on-the-spot check was required when he bought the rifle he allegedly used at the White House. "The law did what it was intended to do in terms of preventing Francisco Duran from purchasing a handgun on Sept. 30," said Jim Borowski, head of the state bureau of investigation's crime information center. The bureau runs checks on prospective handgun buyers in compliance with the Brady handgun control law Congress passed in February. The owner of High Country Wholesale Firearms, James Wear, said Wednesday that Duran tried to buy the pistol on Sept. 30, about two weeks after buying the semiautomatic rifle seized in the Oct. 29 incident at the White House. On his handgun application, as on his earlier application to buy a rifle, Duran did not mention his felony assault conviction, Wear said. Felons are barred from possession of firearms. While federal law does require rifle buyers to fill out a questionnaire, there is no waiting period for a background check before the purchase is completed. The Brady Law includes a five-day waiting period so authorities can check handgun buyers' backgrounds.

IRA charged in killing, straining truce

DUBLIN

Two suspected IRA gunmen were arrested in the killing of a postman in Northern Ireland today, the first slaying linked to the IRA since it declared a truce Sept. 1. No group claimed responsibility for the attack, which cast a pall over prospects for peace in the British province, riven by political and sectarian strife for a quarter century. The Irish government canceled just-announced plans to release Irish Republican Army prisoners, signaling the strong belief by both the Irish and British governments that the IRA was responsible. There was no immediate reaction from the British government or from Sinn Fein, the IRA's political allies. The two sides are expected to begin talks soon in hopes of finding a political solution to Northern Ireland's turmoil. Northern Ireland police said two prominent IRA members were arrested after gunmen fatally shot a 54-year-old postman in the head and back in the border town of Newry, 30 miles south of Belfast. Police did not immediately identify the victim, but local media reports said he was a Catholic who had worked in the town's main post office for 30 years.

Hillary Clinton hurt by personal losses

LONDON

Hillary Rodham Clinton says deep personal losses she and President Clinton have suffered in the past two years have diminished the significance of bad publicity and criticism. "In the last 20 months we have suffered the loss of my father and mother-in-law and the tragic death of our friend Vince Foster. That puts things into somewhat of a perspective," Mrs. Clinton said in a BBC interview. "Those were very deep personal losses to the president and me and stacked against those the adverse publicity, the partisanship, the name-calling that seems, unfortunately, to be a part of American politics today, seem somewhat insignificant. It is, on occasion, hurtful." The first lady also spoke of mistakes the Clinton administration made in pushing for health care reform and of the Clintons' efforts to preserve their privacy. Mrs. Clinton said she didn't feel angry when the administration's health care plan ran into trouble, and said she and the president worked very hard to preserve their privacy. The news media also have cooperated in giving their daughter, Chelsea, the opportunity to be "a normal teenager," according to the BBC.

Perry: Homosexuality moral in some cases

By MORRIS KARAM
News Writer

Homosexual behavior could in certain circumstances be considered moral, according to Northwestern University Law Professor Michael Perry.

In his lecture yesterday, Perry responded to an article entitled "Law, Morality, and 'Sexual Orientation'" written by Oxford University Professor John Finnis in order to refute Finnis' premise that homosexual conduct is always morally wrong.

"Finnis is right when he says a sexual union between man and woman in marriage is a single reality," Perry said. "But why can't any relationship, such as man and man or woman and woman, be a single reality?"

In addition, Perry criticized Finnis' view that the only moral form of sexual activity involves post-marital intercourse aimed at child bearing, stating that "what drives his (Finnis') position is his view that any sexual conduct is morally illicit if it doesn't allow the two people to experience it as a procreative union.

"In order to be an acceptable sexual relationship, why does there have to be children and mutual affection?" Perry said. "He fails to explain why an acceptable sexual relationship can't be true of any monogamous relationship if it is intrinsic and life-long. A life-long sexual relationship affirms the sexuality of lovers, even if it isn't procreative."

By arguing an agreeable relationship to be one based on longevity and mutual trust, Perry justified his belief that homosexual relationship can be morally compatible.

Latin economies seek growth

By KELLY MOORE
News Writer

By combining the east Asian model with North American economic philosophies, it is possible for Latin American countries to find a successful middle ground, according to Peter Evans, professor at the University of California at Berkeley.

Evans explained the successful east Asian state through Singapore's economic prosperity. Singapore is at the top many world economic categories.

The bureaucrats in Singapore are not only rewarded with a distinctive status, but also with material rewards, like $560,000 annual salaries for cabinet members. By doing so, Singapore is able to lure competent government workers who will be careful with public funds and work well with the private sector.

Latin American countries, however, are unable to replicate this model due to historical factors unique to East Asia, namely the effects of World War II and American occupation of that area. Instead, Evans proposed Latin America combine "state initiatives" with the North American ideas of social action.

What Latin America needs to do is encompass capital and labor.

In other words, there needs to be a connection between state controlled economics and local mobilization of the programs made possible by these funds, Evans said.

The more involved the people become in this process, the better.

If information is allowed to flow in both the direction of the bureaucrats and the direction of the industrialists, the success of these programs is greatly increased, said Evans.

Evans thinks there are several lessons to be learned from this economic example. To Evans bureaucracy is key to a prosperous economy.

"Bureaucracy is not an enemy but a scarce resource, " said Evans. Building a bureaucracy is hard, and once it is built, difficult to keep up with, said Evans.

But an effective bureaucracy increases the capacity of the state to produce. Latin America countries, however, often consist of unequal social structures, making it difficult for the state to "address different interests as a whole." It is therefore conceivable that a successful Latin American state would encompass east Asia's ideas of bureaucracy taking into consideration the unequal social characteristics in those states.

This sort of balance will move a Latin American state towards a more prosperous economy, Evans concluded.

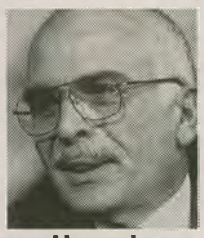
Hussein makes trip to Israel

By SAID GHAZALI
Associated Press

ZEMACH, Israel

Shaking hands with well-wishers and kissing a baby, Jordan's King Hussein put a warm human face on his peace treaty with Israel on Thursday, becoming only the second Arab leader to publicly visit the Jewish state.



Hussein

Hussein arrived in northern Israel by helicopter and spent nearly three hours talking with Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. He promised he would visit Jerusalem soon, but gave no date.

While the peace treaty preserved the Jordanian king's nominal control over Muslim holy sites in east Jerusalem, the Palestinians, who see east Jerusalem as the capital of their future state, want that role for themselves.

A visit by Hussein to Jerusalem could provoke violence.

The king took a 10-minute stroll from the helicopter pad to the nearby Beit Gavriel cultural center on the shores of the Sea of Galilee, where the Bible says Jesus walked on the water.

He shook hands with an Israeli army officer and students in a crowd of several hundred that gathered to see him. He also stopped to kiss a baby girl.

It was Hussein's first public visit to a country he has often visited secretly. He is the only Arab leader besides the late Egyptian president, Anwar Sadat, to openly visit the Jewish state.

U.S. Embassy workers killed during robbery

By CHRIS TORCHIA
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE

Two Haitian employees of the U.S. Embassy were shot and killed during a robbery Thursday, and a third employee was critically wounded, U.S. authorities said.

The employees were accosted before noon while driving to a bank in the capital to pick up 110 pay packets for embassy staff, according to an embassy statement.

A Haitian citizen witnessed the employees "in trouble" and called U.S. authorities.

Military police rushed to the scene but the two employees had been slain, the embassy said.

"All indications are that this was a criminal act, an armed robbery with no political motivation whatsoever," it said.

Slain were Kesnel Jean-Paul and Sandra Rigaud, both in their mid-20s. U.S. and Haitian authorities were searching for a suspect, the embassy said.

'Sister Patty' fills multiple roles of rector, advisor, friend

By MYRNA MALONEY
Assistant Saint Mary's Editor

After waking at dawn, she leads an 8:15 a.m. prayer service three days per week for those students who wish to attend, accompanies them to the dining hall for breakfast, and then returns to her apartment in the basement of Le Mans Hall.

Throughout the rest of the morning she welcomes students who seek her advice — to solve problems or just to be a good listener and confidante.

Her afternoons might include various student appointments, planning residence hall section events, to which she is frequently invited and which fill many of her evenings, and preparing for retreats.

This, for the past year and a half, has been what constitutes a typical day in the life of Sister Patricia Riley, sister in-residence at Saint Mary's.

"Upon my return to Saint Mary's four and a half years ago, I worked in the Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Cross membership office in Bertrand Hall. There, I met with people who were interested in joining the religious life and shared with them what that life is like in today's Church. It was basically a process to discern whether God was calling them," Riley said.

"It was during my second year here that the Sisters asked me to move into Le Mans Hall to serve as sister in-Residence," she continued.

Homesickness, roommate difficulties, and academic stress are common topics Riley sees in the faces of those who come to her. In addition, she meets regularly with residence advisors and hall directors in an ongoing attempt to enhance the college experience for all students.

"Students come to me for many reasons — sometimes just to talk. The part I play is pretty much that of a listener. I like to be available at all times for any student, and I have even learned to distinguish the urgency of one type of situation from another just from the knock on my door... especially the ones at 11 p.m.!" Riley said.

"I love working as sister in-residence because I get the excitement of sharing in young people's lives and seeing the growth that takes place in the years students spend here. If I had one piece of advice for students, it would be for them to be patient with themselves because a lot will happen, but they have to give it time. Whether it's educational development or spiritual development, results don't happen immediately but rather over a long-term period," Riley said.

Riley was raised in a Northern California farming town with a population of 2,000, attended the elementary school there run by the Sisters of the Holy Cross, and recalled her memories of the Sisters as "...very human. They were constantly reaching out to the people of the town."

After graduating from a public high school, she entered the Congregation and studied at Saint Mary's. After receiving her vows, Riley returned west and became involved in elementary education for 25 years. She spent ten of those as a teacher and the latter 15 as a principal in three different schools.

She also worked in a parish without a priest in Utah, organized various retreats, and spent time with young adults.

"I love young people and have always found working with them to be rewarding. There's never an end to the variety! The Sisters of the Holy Cross have played such a huge role in the success of Saint Mary's, and I like to be a part of that and want to see that tradition continue. I'm grateful that I have had the opportunity to meet and work with so many wonderful people in my life and have had so many different experiences," Riley said.

University receives grants in support of research

Special to The Observer

The University of Notre Dame received $2,072,560 in grants during September for the support of research and various programs. Research funds totaled $1,158,381, including

• $175,641 from the National Science Foundation for research by Scott Bridgham, assistant professor of biological sciences, on climate change on boreal peatlands

• $120,209 from the Environmental Protection Agency on the interactions of zebra mussels and rusty crayfish by Gary Lamberti, assistant professor of biological sciences; David Lodge, associate professor of biological sciences; and others

• $120,000 from the US Department of Agriculture for research by Jeffrey Feder, assistant professor of biological sciences, on the genetics of rhagoletis.

• $99,402 from Utah State University for research on sequencing batch biofilm reactor engineering using fungi by Robert Irvine, professor of civil engineering and biological sciences and director of the Center for Bioengineering and Pollution Control; and James Earley, assistant faculty fellow in civil engineering

• $77,850 from Rutgers University for research on energy analysis and diagnostics by John Lucey, associate professor of aerospace and mechanical engineering; William Berry, professor of electrical engineering; and others

• $72,674 form the US Department of Energy for research by Robert Schuler, director of the Radiation Laboratory and Zahm professor of radiation chemistry, on radiation's effects on matter.

• $68,348 from the National Science Foundation for collaborative research by David Lodge, associate professor of biological sciences, on herbivory and plant resistance

• $60,250 from the National Science Foundation for research by Anthony Michel, McCloskey dean of the College of Engineering and Friemann professor of electrical engineering, on robust stability in power systems

• $60,000 from the National Science Foundation for technician support for the inductively coupled plasma mass spectrometry research facility

•$50,000 from the US Institute of research by Raimo Varynen, Regan director of the Kroc Institute for International Peace Studies and professor of government and international studies, on conflict resolution and peace prospects in southeast Europe.

• $46,000 from the National Science Foundation for a graduate research fellowship program administered by Peter Diffley, associate dean in the graduate school.

• $31,824 from Purdue University for research by Paul McGinn, associate professor of chemical engineering, on processing of textured superconducting microlaminates

• $30,000 from the National Endowment of the Humanities for research Michael Detlefsen, professor of philosophy, on constructive philosophies of mathematics

• $30,000 from the National Endowment for the Humanities for research by Paula Higgins, associate professor of music, on Fanny Mendelssohn Hensel.

• $30,000 from the National Endowment of the Humanities for research by Susan Youens, associate professor of music, on Franz Schubert and his poets

• $22,212 from the National Institutes of Health for research on the molecular basis of lactofferin-protein interactions by Douglas McAbee, assistant professor of biological sciences; and Maheshwar Sitaram, a graduate student

• $22,000 from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for research by Richard Carlton, assistant professor of biological sciences on methane cycling and release from sediments

• $15,000 from Purdue University for research by David Lodge, associate professor of biological sciences, on predation in zebra mussels

• $ 10,949 from Brookhaven National Laboratories for research at the Brookhaven Multiparticle Spectrometer by John LoSecco and Neal Cason, professors of physics, and other people

• $5,000 from ACS Petroleum Research Fund for synthesis and study of photoresponsive receptors and catalysts by Bradley Smith, assistant professor of chemistry and biochemistry

• $5,000 from Intel Corp. for research by Robert Stevenson, assistant professor of electrical engineering, on enhancement of compressed images

• $3662 from the US-Poland Sklodowski-Curie Joint Fund for research by Umesh Garg, professor of physics, on exotic shaped of nuclei

• $2,360 from the US Department of Agriculture for research by Gary Lamberti, assistant professor of biological sciences.

Awards for facilities and equipment totaled $247,841, including

• $213,859 for an ultrahigh-speed camera for research by James Mason and Joseph Powers, assistant professors of aerospace and mechanical engineering, and others

• $33,982 from the National Science Foundation for equipment and facilities for research in high energy physics by Neal Cason and John LoSecco, professor of physics, and others.

Okay, you've been at N.D. for two months and realized that the weekends here seem to be getting extremely mundane. In English:

You have discovered that either you drink or study! Well, not anymore if you join

Flip Side

The great new group that is dedicated to providing non-lame, fun activities (or those not involving alcoholic beverages) for the Notre Dame community. We haven't been around very long, but already we are one of the fastest growing student groups on campus. Why? Because we provide activities students want!

Sound good so far? Here is how to get involved:
Call Mary at 4-4904 or John at 4-1410 and we'll get you registered.

We even have a little get-together planned during the Florida State game for anyone who wants to hang out with members of the ND and SMC community. We're talking wide screen TV! If that's not enough, we have refreshments too! This is better than SYR's! Why? Because you get to sit down and watch football with your mouth full and you don't have to pretend that you know how to dance (like I do).

Finally, and best of all, we plan our activities according to what you want to do! So if there is anything that you see happening at other colleges (like fun) that you would like to see here, join FLIP SIDE and make it happen. Call us soon!

An increase from last year in the number of upperclassmen living on campus may have also affected the male housing crunch. Since the University assigns freshmen housing only after the upperclassmen lottery has been conducted, the space available for freshmen varies every year. In addition, according to University policy, freshmen must live with other freshmen. Even if there was space for a student in a room of sophomores, juniors, or seniors, a freshman would not be able to move into the room.

"This University does its best to house everybody it can on this campus. But freshmen must live together. You can't just put them anywhere," Cannon said.

Historically, the tower study lounges have been the sources of any extra dorm space.

However, even though the tower study lounges were constructed for the dual purposes of study space and residential use, the actual conversion of the study lounges into dorm rooms has incurred penalties on some dorm residents. Not only do returning Flanner and Grace students lack quiet study areas, but the lounge residents are faced with an awkward room location and more noise than other rooms.

"For the upperclassmen who have lived here before, they have lost their dorm study space," said Seetch. "(The Flanner) downstairs study lounge has always been crowded, so I notice more students going to the library."

According to Father Terence Linton, the Grace Hall rector, the Grace staff avoided this problem by converting part of the basement into a study lounge.

"I have not seen anything out of the ordinary in this respect," said Linton.

Both rectors, however, observed that the study lounge rooms do not fit naturally into sections. The study lounge rooms on each floor are located near the elevators and the stairwells and in the hallway which connects the two sections.

"It's not so much cramped as it is awkward. What section do these residents belong to?" Seetch said.

"Our sections have always been very well-defined. The study lounge residents seem to waver between the two sections on each floor," agreed Linton.

In order to integrate the study lounge freshmen, the resident assistants on each floor have made conscious efforts to include the study lounge residents in one section or another, according to Seetch and Linton.

Other problems unique to the study lounge room have also confronted the Grace and Flanner staffs and residents. Windows frame the single door which leads into the room, and the lounges do not contain individual controls for the heat or air conditioning. Study lounge residents also encounter more noise than normal tower residents.

"We really like the room, but we can hear everything above and below us. We can even hear when someone turns on a radio," said David Fantz, a Grace freshman. "The noise is really a big problem."

Shawn Nigg of Flanner agreed.

"We really love the great big window that we have, but you can hear other people through the vents very easily," said Nigg. "Also, since it's one room, there's really no way to separate it (into social and study space)."

Over the past three months, however, the study lounge residents seem to have adjusted to their unusual dwellings.

"The good thing is that we have some room here, and it's bigger than the other rooms," said Flanner freshman John Polhemus.

"We're pretty much like all the other rooms," agreed Nigg.

fully report the entire issue. The media have been inadequate in reporting instances of false accusations of clergymen, and often relies on rumors and unproven allegations when reporting about sexual abuse. Also, the media fail to report on the efforts of the church to seek therapy for accused priests and other efforts taken to ameliorate the situation.

Also contributing to the poor media coverage of Catholicism is the poor attitude of the church concerning the manner it is portrayed by the press, he said.

Adding to the problem lies "in the structures of the church, where there is a damage control mentality in relation to the press."

Instead of engaging charges of Catholic-bashing, the church should "engage in well-documented criticism of media biases, and should work to see that its positive stories receive increasing media coverage, he said.

A hope for meaning...

One year ago this weekend our grieving began. In light of the events of the past week and the many emotions we have experienced, it is now time to examine what exactly the death of Mara Fox and the acquittal of John Rita mean to us as members of a community and a family. We must not let Mara Fox's death be meaningless.

The undercurrent of emotions rising from perceived moral injustice cannot be allowed to overshadow Mara Fox's life. We must look past the verdict and try to find tangible meaning in this tragedy that is Mara's death. We owe this to Mara, to her family, to her friends and to ourselves.

When trying to come up with some profound reason that explains her death, frustration emerges long before revelation. Right now, we're not so sure what impact the loss of Mara's life will have on us, but as we progress into the future, and look back, Mara's impact and presence will be tangible.

In finding meaning, we make our anger or sadness or whatever emotion productive. Finding meaning is a gradual merger of our own personal identity with a communal experience—it is not an immediate occurrence. It is not trite to say that Mara was sacrificed for a greater good, for this is the essence of why we have faith that a greater, more benevolent order will emerge. The profound pain Mara's family and friends experience every day is virtually unimaginable to most who did not know her, yet all of us feel loss and will be forever changed by her brief presence with us. It is our obligation as her classmates, friends, teachers and mentors to muster the courage to face our frustration in finding purpose and meaning.

We cannot give you a map for finding these answers. Though it is a different, uncharted journey for each of us, we can have comfort in knowing that we are not alone in our search for meaning. Moreover, we can have solace in realizing that years from now when we look back upon our Notre Dame encounter, we will see how the passing of Mara's life has changed our own destinies.

Until tragedy occurs, it is very hard to convince anyone that they are mortal and fallible. We have such a sense that these things do not happen to these kinds of people. The reality of the situation is quite the opposite. Mara Fox is like us. John Rita is like us. Simply knowing that "it could happen to you" is just not enough.

■ DISPELLING MYTHS

Election '94: Pork 1, Democracy 0

DJ Sarafa

In Tuesday's election, the American people once again manifested their discontent with the United States political system by voting the controlling party out of power. Faith in "the system" is said to be at an all time low, and Americans continue to wonder what is going wrong in the political arena. The fundamental problem with politics, as I see it, is that pork barreling has created an intrusively large government, funded by excessive taxation.

The size and power of government has been constantly increasing as a result of pork barrel politics, in which each representative and senator is implicitly entitled to their own project if they play by the rules of the game. This translates into the creation of an inordinate number of projects created to satisfy voting constituencies and which are very difficult to eliminate; nobody wins votes by taking money or projects out of their constituency. Over the years these government projects or programs simply pile up and our government paternalistically continues to push its way into our lives. Such paternalism is displayed by the increase in regulatory actions, social programs, and monitoring by our government. If this paternalism continues to grow it will be the impetus for sweeping change in our political system.

As a result of the growth in government, our system has become a perversion of the system created by our Founding Fathers. The post-revolutionary American liberalism allowed one to live a sublimely individualistic life, basically unadulterated and free from governmental intrusion. The solution to our modern problem is a modern day revolution, based upon the same values and principles articulated in the American Revolution. This is an admittedly bizarre argument, but consider the following historical parallels between then and now.

The American Revolution was premised upon destruction—the destruction of a tyrannical system of governance; the colonists desired the Revolution more for what it would destroy, than for what it would create. The Revolution was, first and foremost, a protest against intrusive state intervention by the King of Britain: excessive taxation, the obstruction of justice, and the erection of an inordinate number of offices, to name a few. The Revolution sought to case aside unjust and paternalistic authority, and to replace it with a government that would "derive it just power from the consent of the governed."

Our country is currently faced with similar problems. Taxes are at extraordinarily high levels and are taken from several areas of our lives. Our paychecks have state income tax, federal income tax, and FICA tax deducted from them. Personal income tax ranges from approximately 10% to 40% of one's income. We also pay sales, sin, capital gains, and luxury taxes, some of which have been on the rise. The revenue accrued from these taxes, for the most part, funds government programs that are unnecessary, or that can be more effectively done by the private or nonprofit sectors; such as prison detention, and social and welfare services, respectively. The government spends out money in the manner in which it deems proper, rather than allowing us to spend how we chose. They make decisions for us, implying that we cannot make such decisions on our own. This treatment amount to paternalism, which is defined as excessive governmental supervision.

Paradoxically, I believe that a prerequisite to the abolition of paternalism will be the emergence of more paternalism. Things will get worse before they get better. The average person will not fight against the existence of our large, paternalistic government until its actions have become prohibitive to them—for they have too much to lose by fighting against big government (i.e., they would have to give up benefits they individually receive and those their constituency receives). The "revolution" against paternalism will eventually emerge with the election of a radical libertarian style president such as Ross Perot. This is not to say that Perot is the person for the job, or even that the country is ready for this move; rather, it is to say that people will eventually become so dissatisfied with modern politics that they will select an independent, anti-political president that will make changes such as simplifying the tax code to one page rather than one million, or that will reduce the size of government by one half.

The American colonists revolted against the British only after suffering from a great amount of repression and paternalism. If we allow politics to continue to increase the size and power of government, we will suffer from the same experience the colonists did. Inevitably, as a result of tyrannical paternalism, we will once again engage in revolution to free ourselves and reassert the radical individualism upon which this country was built.

■ BEYOND FREEDOM ROCK

Build the future, skip dessert

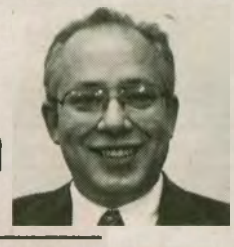
Would you give up your dessert to feed a hungry child?

Well, sure, if someone stands there in front of me and asks. But would I do it on my own?

That was the question a group of activists placed before the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's Community back in 1969. Do you think Alex Keaton was born when "Family Ties" went on the air in 1982? Nonsense. We were just as diverse, just as selfish, just as concerned with our own personal rights, back in the idealistic ol' Sixties.

The idea was that students would sign away their desserts, and the money saved would be donated to a South Bend Breakfast Program, so that little kids could have a meal before school.

Pete Peterson



Hard to argue with that. After all, the desserts at college suck anyway. Besides, part of building a new society is making sure everyone gets a crack at the gold ring. You can't learn if your belly is growling. So trade in a lousy pudding for the future of a needy child.

Of course, the program was popular, and some 2,000 students signed up right away to donate their desserts to the breakfast program. That number later swelled to 3,070. With those numbers, organizers estimated that they could provide a healthy, nutritious breakfast to about 600 local youngsters.

But it wasn't that simple, according to the administrations of each school. Food service was provided by contract, and whether or not the students ate dessert was, under the terms of the contract, largely irrelevant.

According to some vocal students, however, whether or not ARA Food Services was willing to go along with the gesture was also largely irrelevant.

It was unfair, several letters to The Observer insisted, for students to be publicly confronted with a choice between poverty-stricken toddlers and those wonderful crappy puddings with the dried-up skin on the top. In front of your friends, what are you going to say, "To hell with the kid, gimme my pudding?"

And yet, after all, isn't that what freedom is all about? The freedom to blow off underprivileged children in the name or empty, self-indulgent calories?

It was coercion, several Notre Dame students protested. And a Saint Mary's writer pointed out, with prim logic, that they weren't going to really save any money after all because the students who weren't going to have any dessert would simply be eating more of the other food offered at the meal. So there wouldn't really be a savings to the food service, would there? Well, would there?

It's easy to be snide about today's young people and to say that we in the older generation were more generous, more idealistic, more concerned with helping other people. But I think it's important to note that we certainly had our share of horse's rear ends in our day too, despite the way we ignored them and insisted that society try to improve things.

I was talking the other day to a friend who was a few years too young to really claim citizenship in the Woodstock Nation, but who was old enough to know that, just as today's college students (except at Notre Dame, of course) have their LUGs (Lesbians Until Graduation), so too, we had our HUGs—Hippies Until Graduation.

It was very important to come across as an idealistic iconoclast, in them thar days. But let's face it, most people don't really give a damn about anybody but themselves, and they certainly didn't expect to live in some dirty little hovel after graduation so they could improve the lives of nasty people who don't even speak English properly or dress right.

Well, yeah, some people did. Some people went into storefront law or social work or just lived these abysmal, depressing lives with abysmal, depressing people. Yuck-O!

And there were certainly those who managed to live middle class lives while doing good things to improve the society in which we live. You talk to Domers from that period, and you'll find plenty who became active in community-based social movements, either full-time or as part of their personal dedication to making this world a better place.

But I promise you, it was no larger a number than come from your own ranks. I've met enough people from the current college crop to know that there are plenty of people who want to help the poor, to leave this planet better than they found it, to try to make life more endurable for the less fortunate.

Enough, certainly, that there is no practical reason why I shouldn't just grab myself a dessert in the dinner line. In fact, I think I'll grab two, because there's probably some self-righteous prig who isn't having dessert at all.

Anyway, I've earned an extra pudding. I worked very hard today, and anyway, if I don't eat an extra pudding, I'd probably just eat more vegetables so why not, right? Why don't you have one, too?

Hints for the masses, PDA victims

Dear Editor:

Regarding "PDA: Get a Room," the Fresh Thoughts column on November 7, you were quite right when you thought to yourself, "Dave this is none of your business." Maybe you ought to consider the seminary if such scenes nauseate you. Besides, if it nauseated you so much, why did you find it so necessary and irresistible to stare at the couple? If you are in the library to study, then study. The couple could not have been making that much noise considering they kept their clothes on!

'Here's a little hint: either join the crowd and quit wasting paper, join the seminary, or transfer to the Catholic School for the Blind!'

As for infringing on your study time... please. It could have just as easily been some anxiety-ridden freshman tapping his pencil for hours straight. Would such a pencil tapper then become the object of an editorial?

Here's a little hint: either join the crowd and quit wasting paper, join the seminary, or transfer to the Catholic School for the Blind!

■ CAPITOL COMMENTS

Irish academics rolling over athletics in polls

Notre Dame today is approaching the point that the Democrats were at on election day. The Irish personae among many other universities and the voting sportswriters is not quite where it should be, regardless of this season's below average record. Several factors cause Notre Dame image problems not unlike those of the Congressional Democrats prior to the recent Republican election landslide.

Academically, The University of Notre Dame is ranked among the elite in the country. However, for the past three years, the university's academic ranking in the U.S. News and World Reports top twenty-five colleges was its lowest category. The trouble with that category is that it is based on the opinions of other colleges' deans, administrators, and admission staffs. This year, while Notre Dame rated nineteenth overall, the Irish rated lowest of any in the top twenty-five in this category.

Last year the football team should have been named the national champion by virtue of the head-to-head contest with Florida State. However, the sportswriters voted Notre Dame number two when the final votes had been counted. One writer in Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania (home of Joe Namath) loathes Notre Dame and voted them not one, two, three, or even possibly fourth as the last reasonable position...but number six! Argue that Auburn, while on probation, was still a better team. Argue that Florida State was better but had an off-day in South Bend. But sixth?

Turn next to the NCAA administrative committees which are composed of member schools. Father Hesburgh and Father Joyce were both active participants of many committees. Yet the image of the Irish being holier than thou often times killed many measures that were initiated by the university during their tenure. It was better to have another school recommend a rule change and have Notre Dame quietly vote for it.

Gary Caruso

This past September when Michigan beat ND with a last second field goal, sportscasters and writers attending the Pitt game in Pittsburgh were watching those final seconds on monitors. They took time out of their reporting to watch a great finish, regardless of who triumphed. However, when the ball split the uprights, the sportswriters burst into a great cheer (not for old Notre Dame). So much for the unbiased voting structure of the polls.

Maybe the NBC contract is not quite as large an issue today as it was during its first few years. But the recent renewal brought it into the public's eye again. How many schools can command such a contract? None to date. Obviously, jealousy definitely exists throughout college football land.

Speaking of jealousy, how about that Sugar Bowl against Florida? Remember the one that Cheerios belonged in, but Notre Dame did not? Ignore the fact that The Irish beat Florida. Also ignore the fact that Notre Dame games draw a viewing audience like professional teams do every football week of every football year. The holier than thou team jumped above other teams with fewer losses to attend the Sugar Bowl. At least that is the impression beyond the borders of South Bend.

So there you have it. I have just laid out conditions that make Notre Dame in the football community the same as Democrats in the political arena. After all, Democrats had both houses of Congress as well as the White House. They let their ranks vote against their proposals. They let that division fuel a Republican, partisan stand on many issues, thus failing a majority of votes. Furthermore, they let the Republicans define them in the campaign as immoral, big spenders, typical taxers, and ineffective.

The Republicans nationalized their themes in their "Contract With America" a few weeks ago. They pledged to do certain things during their first one hundred days as the majority or the American public can kick them out. This gimmick put popular issues on a table without much explanation. The voters bought it, but now the Republicans must produce.

I believe that the Democrats got a bad rap just like Notre Dame gets. I further predict that most of the Republican efforts will backfire eventually. Maybe it will take four or six years, but watch how their simple rhetoric deals with complex issues. Most importantly, hope that other universities do not take a page out of the Republican playbook. They just may muster enough sympathy among themselves to mount an effort against the Irish. I can see the forces coming from those who cannot have TV contracts, cannot bump others in the bowls because of their national following, or those who cannot crack the top twenty-five poll, let alone sit atop it all at number one.

Watch out Irish! If Liberty University ever turns from politics to organize a football following, you may become the Democrats of the college polls and never again crack the top twenty-five.

Of Dads and Daughters

BY LESLIE FIELD
Accent Writer

Many Saint Mary's Seniors will experience a touch of nostalgia this weekend as their fathers come from around the world to share a very special and potentially humorous weekend with their daughters during Senior Dad's Weekend.

This is a time that has always been looked forward to by students as a senior highlight. It is no wonder why. Imagine the look on 1994 Saint Mary's graduate Nellie Sanford's face when she saw her Dad, Jack, jamming' to those hot sounds at the Linebacker.

1993 graduate Lisa Luedecking will never forget the look on her mother's face when her dad, Bob, decided to go along with all the other dads and relive his own senior year of college at The Commons on Saturday night. They still talk about it, but that is no surprise considering the great efforts put into this weekend by both the Senior Class Board and the students.

Allison Obuchowski, Chairperson of Senior Dad's Weekend, has been working diligently with her committee since May of last year to ensure that this weekend is as rewarding for the Class of '95 as it has been for classes in the past.

"I hope it is as much fun for everyone else as it has been for me," Obuchowski said.

With a theme like "You Are My Sunshine," it undoubtedly will be. The committee has planned a number of activities for the dads and daughters to attend together. They can head over to Angela Athletic Facility on Friday night from 9 p.m. to 12 a.m. for the ever popular Casino Night. Here, a dessert bar as well as an open bar, will be available while students and friends tend to the gambling tables, blackjack being the most sought after.

If all goes well, daughters and dads can pick up their prizes later. In past years, the prizes from Casino Night have ranged from televisions (a hot item for all dads as long as it comes complete with a remote control,) to huge bottles of mouthwash.

On Saturday, the committee has planned "Party With Your Plaid Dad" at the 100 Center to watch the Notre Dame/Florida State football game. Saturday night, Clarissa Dalloway's Coffee House is open to those who opt to stay away from the South Bend bar scene.

For many, however, Saturday night will be a time when all of those hard working dads will get a chance to see where a pretty heavy chunk of their tuition money is really going: the bars. From the Linebacker to Corby's to Coach's, you can be sure to see a lot of dads out with their daughters in a fashion that is bound to make some mothers pretty nervous.

Senior Katie Morland's dad, Tim, is coming in from North Carolina. Katie wants to make sure that he gets a good feel for the campus life at Saint Mary's. "I want him to meet all of my friends and see where we hang out."

Laura Longo's Dad, Charles, is coming in from Dubuque, Iowa to join in on Casino Night as well as Party with the Plaid. Longo is taking her father to the Carriage House for dinner. "I'm looking forward to spending time with him because it is one of my last weekends with him in my senior year."

Kara Manion's dad, David, is coming in from Belgium for the weekend. Manion is excited that he is making the long trip.

Jennifer Nicola's parents, Judie and Norm, are coming in for the weekend from Canton, Ohio. It will be an extra special weekend for the three of them because Nicola is getting married in June.

"I'm looking forward to everything, to be able to sit down and talk to my parents when we don't have to worry about the phone bill," Jennifer said. "That will be great."

After all the craziness of Friday and Saturday night, a mass will be held for the dads and daughters on Sunday in the Church of Loretto at 9 a.m. This is a weekend that should be a memorable one for all and one that will be looked forward to by many classes to come.

ROTC to honor war veterans

By LARRY WARD
Accent Writer

Across the country today Americans will celebrate Veteran's Day. Today Americans honor those valiant men and women who fought and died for our country. Moreover, this is the day that all Americans should warmly thank all of those living men and women who courageously defended our country.

The University of Notre Dame will join with the rest of the country today in celebrating Veteran's Day. The most visible form of Notre Dame's celebration will be the ROTC Veteran's Day Retreat Ceremony.

At 4 p.m. this afternoon, a mass formation of members of the Air Force, Army, and Navy ROTC units will converge at the South Quad Flag Pole to honor our nation's veterans. Together, ROTC students from Notre Dame, Saint Mary's, and Indiana University of South Bend will assemble to take down the flag in a ceremonial manner.

To further honor the nation's veterans, all members of the University's ROTC units will be required to wear their uniforms all day today.

The highlight of the ROTC Veteran's Day Retreat Ceremony will be Rear Admiral Larry R. Marsh. Rear Admiral Marsh, the Director of the Office of Program Appraisal in the Office of the Secretary of the Navy, will speak of the importance of Veteran's Day as well as the importance of the United States Armed Forces.

The Retreat Ceremony was organized by the Cadet Joint Military Council. The Cadet Joint Military Council is composed of a representative from each armed service and a Commander from the Navy. Notre Dame is the only university in the nation with such an organization within their respective ROTC program.

Nelanie Hamilton, Public Affairs Officer of the Cadet Joint Military Council, stated "The Cadet Joint Military Council believed that the ROTC Veteran's Day Retreat Ceremony would be a terrific opportunity for all Notre Dame family members to reflect on the courage displayed by those men and women who fought and died for our country."

Hamilton encourages everyone to attend the event, which is expected to last approximately forty five minutes.

If you are unable to attend the ROTC Veteran's Day Retreat Ceremony, be sure to remember those men and women who fought for your freedom.

Renola

in Renola's game which has been the most important to the Irish.

"Last year Jen made the saves she was supposed to make," Petrucelli said. "This year she's made the big saves, the game-winners."

Renola's big saves include stopping North Carolina all-American Tisha Venturini in a one-on-one breakaway, helping preserve a 0-0 tie with the Tar Heels. A similar snub against Portland's Shannon MacMillan, one of the most prolific scorers in the country, lifted the Irish to a 2-1 win over the Pilots.

"Those saves were against great players and great teams," Renola said, "and that's why I remember them. Last year I didn't really play well in the big games, and that's what people remember."

That recognition, according to Renola, is indicative of some of the pressures and peculiarities of her position.

"Because of my position, it's really easy to be the goat. If I make a mistake, the ball goes into the back of the net. At other positions, that isn't necessarily true."

"But it's just as easy to get all the praise. Against Portland everyone told me what a great game I had, but I really only made one save—it just happened to be a great one."

For Petrucelli, though, it has been Renola's great saves that have illustrated her great strides.

"We knew that Jen would be a great keeper," Petrucelli said, "but she's come along faster than we expected. Right now she's playing like a junior or senior."

Renola attributes that maturity to experience she gained while playing for the Irish last season and for the under-20 national team last summer.

"I can't really pinpoint any specific reason why I'm playing better this year, other than that I have more experience," Renola said. "As a goalie, it's a constant decision-making process and you just have to react, and with more experience I'm able to make better decisions."

And while game-winning saves against top-10 teams may be the most noticeable manifestation of Renola's progress, she has had some of her best performances in games of little importance.

Against Midwestern Collegiate Conference opponent Xavier, for example, Renola withstood a ten second flurry of three point-blank shots midway through the first half, then saved another breakaway in the second period.

"I had one of my best overall games of the year against Xavier, when we won 7-1," Renola said. "But it kind of goes unnoticed, because if I miss a couple saves we still win 7-3."

No matter who the Irish are playing, though, there is no goalkeeper Petrucelli would rather have in his corner.

"She's as good as any keeper I've seen," he said.

And for Petrucelli, that's not just good.

"She's awesome."

ND rallies to look past disappointing season

By MICHAEL DAY
Sports Writer

Down, but not out.

After losing five consecutive games, including being upset twice by Illinois-Chicago last weekend, one would think optimism would be running low on the Notre Dame hockey team.

However, that is not the case, at least according to head coach Ric Shafer.

"We are still a good team," said Shafer. "We're just in a desperate need for a victory. We've had a good week of practice, and I know that if we play to our capability, we'll be fine."

After starting the season strong with nonconference victories, the squad finds itself at the bottom of the CCHA standings heading into tonight's game against Ferris State.

The team's disappointing start can be partly attributed to the tough competition in the CCHA. The Irish lost a pair to defending national champion Lake Superior and suffered a tough setback at the hands of No. 6 Bowling Green.

"The teams we've played are part of the reason," said Shafer. "We just need to be more opportunistic and take advantage of our scoring opportunities."

Ferris State, 2-3-1 overall with a 2-2 mark in CHHA play, visits South Bend for a game tonight and one on Saturday. The Bulldogs are lead by senior right wing Tim Christian, who leads the team with six goals and 11 points. Rich Nagy earns the starting nod at goaltender and is 1-3 as a starter with a 4.12 goals-against average.

Women's basketball signs two recruits

By K.C. GOYER
Sports Writer

Letitia Bowen has big feet, and when the only senior on the women's basketball team graduates this year she'll leave big shoes to fill. Luckily for the Irish, Sheila McMillen and Danielle Green have signed National Letters of Intent to try Notre Dame on for size.

Beyond the all time leading scorer of her high school, conference all-star, and AAU prominence achievements which are typical of the caliber of players already part of Muffet McGraw's team, McMillen also boasts a First Team All-State selection, an AAU National Championship, South Bend Tribune Player of the Year, and a listing on Street and Smith's Honorable Mention All Star team.

"We're extremely pleased that Sheila signed with us," McGraw said, "She's a great three point shooter."

McGraw also cited McMillen's ball handling, driving to the basket, and ability to the control the tempo of a game as skills that will make McMillen an asset to the team.

In addition to McMillen, Notre Dame signed Danielle Green, a 5'8" guard out of Chicago's Roosevelt High School. She will bring versatility as a player to the Irish next year, as a guard averaging 12.0 rebounds per game.

Netters play for perfect record in regular season

By BETSY BAKER
Sports Writer

Seven down, three to go. These numbers describe the Notre Dame volleyball team's performance in the Midwestern Collegiate Conference thus far this season.

The Irish will complete regular season play in the MCC this weekend when they host Wisconsin-Green Bay on Friday night, and La Salle and Wisconsin-Milwaukee on Saturday. The Irish are currently undefeated at 7-0 in the conference, with three of those seven victories occurring in the last five days.

On Wednesday night, the Irish defeated the No. 4 team of the conference, Loyola. Loyola brought a 5-2 conference record into the match, 23-7 overall. The Irish won the match in three games 15-5, 15-3, and 15-11.

In the third game, Loyola gave the Irish a bit of scare by shooting out to a 9-5 lead. But under the lift of senior co-captain Christy Peters, who played her first game in eleven games due to an extended illness, the Irish successfully completed the game and the match.

Freshman Angie Harris continued to dominate Irish opponents as she led the team with 17 kills, 10 digs, and 4 service aces. Harris set an Irish single season service ace record with 63 aces, with four matches remaining in the regular season. She also holds the single match service ace record, which she set when she broke her own record with eight service aces against Texas earlier last month.

The Irish look to complete their undefeated season in the MCC this weekend, which is important as they head into the MCC tournament next weekend. The conference does not offer much competition for the tenth ranked Irish, and this is expected to be evident this weekend. Wisconsin-Green Bay is seventh in the MCC, and Wisconsin-Milwaukee and La Salle line the floor of the conference with the ninth and tenth position.

The Irish will in no way look past this weekend, mostly because it will be the last regular season home games in the careers of the team's senior co-captains Nicole Coates and Christy Peters. Both Coates and Peters have been two of the most outstanding and exciting players in the history of the Notre Dame volleyball program. One of the most significant of their accomplishments have been captaining this year's team.

"Being captain has been a little more significant because we have a greater responsibility in the team's performance and character," said Coates.

Miller

Galleria shopping mall and purchased "bags and bags of expensive clothing" and three sets of expensive tires and wheels. The group then allegedly stopped at a drive-through beverage store where they spent $200 on liquor.

Miller and others were caught on video tape using checks they said had been stolen.

"We were able to videotape them using checks to purchase something," Glendening said.

It was also learned that Miller was indicted and sentenced to six months probation and ordered to pay a $200 fine in 1993 on a misdemeanor charge of assualt and bodily injury.

The charge involved a female student in a dormitory at the University of Houston, according to Harris County, Texas, court records. It was not known if Notre Dame officials knew of the 1993 indictment.

Fort Bend police also said two checks stolen from the Houston area were located last March by police at Best Buy, 6502 Grape Road in Mishawaka, a report that was confirmed by Mishawaka police. It was not known whether the stolen checks had any link to Miller or any connection to an investigation which took place last April when stolen merchandise was found in an apartment where gas and utilites were registered to Miller. No charges were pressed after the investigation found only insufficient evidence.

"It sounds like he had the same scam up there that they had down here," Glendening said. "Down here, it's a big check scam. Miller's just on the tail end."

Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz was called August 19 by Glendening and was told by the detective that he needed to talk to Miller. The detective did not inform Holtz that Miller was being investigated.

"I told him I was investigating an airline ticket purchased by Michael Miller with a stolen check," Glendening told the South Bend Tribune. "The conversation was brief."

After contacting Holtz and talking with Miller, Glendening telephoned Lt. William Held of Notre Dame Security to assist him with the investigation.

Glendening said Miller maintains he was the middle man in the airline-ticket exchange. The two other men arrested with Miller were Ron Chaney and Jordon Williams. Both were classmates of Miller at Willow Ridge High School in Sugarland, Texas.

According to Glendening, the investigation began late last June after Miller purchased airline tickets with a stolen check for himself and a Notre Dame teammate. On Oct. 25, indictments were returned against Miller and his two former high school classmates. On Nov. 4, Glendening sent copies of the indictment to Hedl.

Notre Dame officials reportedly only became aware of the investigation when the indictments were sent to the University last week.

Two Notre Dame players who reportedly bought tickets from Miller were also questioned but will not be charged. "We are going to give them the benefit of the doubt," Glendening said. "Hopefully, they were just being stupid."

Notre Dame and Holtz would not comment on the matter, but Notre Dame's head coach said he had not talked with his Miller. The Irish face Florida State in Orlando Saturday.

"Anything about the matter has to come from the University," Holtz said. "I've taken the same approach with the team. I haven't discussed it."

Stanford

between number 2 Stanford and number 3 Off Campus is the real championship matchup between the league's two best teams.

Off Campus enters the game coming off a 20-0 drubbing of Alumni. "We feel we have the best defense in the league," captain Dave Dettore said, "but Stanford probably has the most potent offense."

Stanford's offense revolves primarily around running back Chris Pollina. Pollina has broken for gains of near fifty yards virtually every game this season. "If we can shut Pollina down, we'll be alright," Dettore said.

Crime quarterback Chris Hammond is coming off a big performance in which he threw for two touchdowns and ran for a third. Dettore feels that if the offense can get some points on the board, the defense will do the rest. "We don't have much respect for the small dorms," he said despite Stanford's superior ranking.

The key to the game will be whether or not the Studs can penetrate the Crime defense on the ground. "We don't think anyone can run over us," Dettore said.

Flanner ready to meet fourth-ranked Zahm

By JACK MACLEOD
Sports Writer

They say lightning never strikes twice, and Zahm better hope it doesn't.

Last week the Gamecocks of Flanner Hall played their best game all season, yeilding no turnovers and upsetting top ranked Carroll 7-6.

"We were extremely lucky to play a flawless game last week," Too Keller said. Keller captains a squad that entered the playoffs ranked eighth and has gotten little respect from press and opposition. The top seed is gone and Flanner finds itself still alive in the semi-finals.

"We're just happy to be here," Keller said of his team's suprising advancement. While the Gamecocks have not been considered a serious playoff contender this year, they have made semi-final appearances in three of the last four years and will not be intimidated by the more intense game atmosphere.

Keller attributes Flanner's success to their team play, as several reserves have stepped up to fill in for the injured center and middle linebacker Josh Quinn.

The 'Cocks will play the role of underdogs once again this week, as they face a fourth ranked Zahm team that has been hot recently as well. Zahm hopes to build on the fourth quarter game-winning drive they put together last week to beat Keenan.

"We've been inconsistent in our drives all season," Dave Bozanich said, "so hopefully we can pick up where we left off last week."

Too Keller admits that Flanner is "a little worried about Zahm's speed," but according to Zahm captian Bozanich, they will have much more to contend with than the Zahm's players.

Off Campus vs. Stanford

For the second straight year, the "Game of the Century", will be held on the campus of Notre Dame. Last year, No.1 Florida State played No. 2 Notre Dame; this year, top-ranked Pangborn will battle 2nd-ranked Lyons.

Maybe the game isn't that big. It is that big, however, to the two teams involved.

"There is excitement and intensity involved in playing a good team," Pangborn quarterback Mary Kraft said.

Lyons (6-1) is coming off a decisive 13-0 win over Pasquerilla East. Key in the win was tough defense and adequate offense.

"I think we played well as a team," Lyons tailback Jenny Layden said.

Pangborn (6-1) played tough defense as well in their 6-0 victory over Lewis.

"Our defense played outstanding. They kept us all in it," Kraft said.

The big game will take place at Cartier Field on Sunday at 3 p.m.

Siegfried vs. Off Campus

In Sunday's second matchup, one team hopes it doesn't see five injured players again. The other hopes to continue injuring opposing defenses.

Siegfried (5-0-2) was involved in a game where five players left the game due to injury.

"That was a rough game," Siegfried cornerback Sam Spencer said. "Everyone got injured and nobody was clicking. We won because we had a "bend but don't break" defense, and stuck it out and won in overtime."

Off-Campus (5-1-1) wide receiver Michelle Drury thinks her team has played well.

"We are really starting to come together as a team, and our offense and defense are playing well."

Spencer voiced concern of Off-Campus's offense.

"They have some good running backs and wide receivers and a tight end. They're an offensive power."

Off-Campus is worried about Siegfried's offense too.

"Their quarterback is really good, so we need to keep up our quality play on defense," Drury said.

The game will take place at Cartier Field on Sunday at 4 p.m.

Mexico Seminar

The Mexico Seminar is a one-credit service-learning opportunity in Oaxaca, Mexico. During two weeks in late spring/early summer, Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students provide service to a variety of people while experiencing the realities of Latin America directly. Cosponsored by Maryknoll, the program seeks to provide intercultural exchange through shared work experience in the context of a faith community. Students participate in fundraising efforts to lower costs.

Cross country teams compete for championships

By KATE CRISHAM AND SARAH O'DONNELL
Sports Writers

Dorothy Parker once said that the definition of guts is "grace under pressure". If this is true, then the Notre Dame men's cross country team will be in need of some serious intestinal fortitude as they race in the NCAA District IV championships tomorrow.

The 15th-ranked Irish need to place third or higher in Saturday's meet or receive an at-large bid in order to advance to the NCAA championships in Fayetteville, Arkansas next week. According to head coach Joe Piane, his team understands full well the gravity of the situation.

"This meet is the first round of the NCAAs," said Piane. "Without a successful weekend, there is no championship for us."

Fortunately, Piane's squad has performed best this year in high pressure situations. After an inauspicious start, including a season-opening loss to Georgetown and a third-place finish at the National Catholic Invitational, the Irish went on to capture the Midwestern Collegiate Conference championship. Now Piane hopes that his team will be able to hit their stride when it really counts—at the national championships.

Notre Dame placed fifth at last year's championships, largely with the help of graduated senior and four-time All-American Mike McWilliams. Although this year's squad has no such front-runner, Piane is relying on his bevy of talented, veteran runners, including seniors Nate Ruder and John Cowan and junior Joe Dunlop, to lead the Irish.

"We've got a good group of runners and we're the defending champions," said Piane. "The key is making sure we're in the top three."

According to Piane, Notre Dame's primary competition will come from Big Ten teams Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Illinois.

"Mid-America Conference teams like Eastern Michigan and Ohio University are also talented, and Marquette may test us as well," he said.

Cowan, Ruder, Dunlop, juniors Joe Dunlop and Derek Martisus, sophomore Matt Althoff, and freshmen Jason Rexing and Will Clark will be racing for the Irish.

According to Piane, the women's team is ranked 16th in the country, and stands a good chance of moving up in the polls after Saturday's NCAA District IV Championship.

The top two teams in the 5,000 meter race will qualify for the NCAA's, and there is the possibility that the third place team will receive an at-large bid. This, however, is no guarantee. Piane is optimistic about his team's chances of a strong finish.

"I think the ladies are capable of being in the top three. They need to run well to be in the top two. I think that if we receive third, our chances of an at-large bid are very good," he said. "So, our main goal is to qualify for the NCAA and, secondly, to finish no worse than third."

Piane explained that after scoping out the competition and evaluating his team's performances throughout the season, his goals are not unrealistic.

"Fourth-ranked Michigan and eighth-ranked Wisconsin are our two biggest competitors," he said.

In order for the Irish to finish in the top three, they need to have two women place in the top 10, two place in the top 20 and one finish in the top 30.

He is looking to seniors Kristi Kramer, Maureen Kelly and Sarah Riley to lead the charge.

"Last year, Riley was our first All-American, another of our best kept secrets," said Piane.

Teamwise, the coach said that at this point in the season, their biggest strength is that they do not have one runner who will win the race; they have five runners who can run extremely well.

"Our weakness is that we don't have that one runner. So, I guess our strength and weakness are almost the same thing," he said.

In addition, the team has been injury-free the entire season, something Piane feels is a definite positive for Saturday's race.

Moss arrested on drug charge

By ARTHUR SRB
Associated Press

MADISON, Wis.

Wisconsin tailback Brent Moss, a Rose Bowl MVP on the verge of breaking the school's career rushing mark, has been arrested on a cocaine possession charge, police said today.

Moss was suspended from the football team pending resolution of the case, coach Barry Alvarez said. Wisconsin has two games left and Moss is in his last year of eligibility.

Moss, 22, was arrested Wednesday night on the city's South Side on a police charge of possessing crack cocaine with intent to deliver, Lt. Jill Klubertanz said.

He was carrying four-tenths of a gram of crack with a street value of $50, police spokeswoman Dorothy Doheny said.

"I am shocked with Brent's apparent involvement in this matter," Alvarez said a university statement. "It's tragic whenever young people get inolved in drugs in any manner. Our immediate concern is with Brent and his teammates' welfare."

Moss also was accused of speeding and failing to signal a turn, Doheny said. She declined to elaborate on the circumstances of Moss' arrest.

A 21-year-old man who was a passenger in a car driven by Moss was arrested on a police charge of delivery of crack cocaine and open intoxicants in a motor vehicle, Doheny said.

Moss remained in custody this morning, Klubertanz said. No formal charges had been filed by the Dane County District Attorney's Office. No court appearance was scheduled.

Swim teams face Naval Academy

By GARRETT KERN
Sports Writer

While the Notre Dame football team is playing Florida St. on Saturday, the Notre Dame men's and women's swim teams will be competing against the Naval Academy in Annapolis. The men and the women are coming off terrific team performances this past weekend both in the Notre Dame Relay meet and dual meets versus Texas Christian University and Bowling Green University.

This will be the first meeting between the Naval Academy and Notre Dame and the Irish are ready. Coach Tim Welsh has assembled a balanced team with the energy of youth combined with the big meet experience of the upperclassmen, "This meet will be a good indication of where we are as a team."

This will be the Navy women's third dual meet of the season. They will be taking wins over Georgetown and the University of Richmond into the meet.

The Irish women will be lead by a strong freshman class headed by distance swimmer Shelly Hotchkiss and flyer Lauren Relay. Senior captain Cara Garvey is confident in the attitude of the team.

"After [the Notre Dame Relay meet] the team came together and focused on what needed to be done to win."

The Irish men's team will be bringing a win over Bowling Green and a great performance in a losing effort to TCU into Annapolis this weekend. The Irish will be relying mainly on the experience and talents of the upperclassmen to combat a strong Navy freshman class .

Belles prepare for grudge meet with Calvin

By JENNIFER LEWIS
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

After losing to Calvin College in last year's dual meet, the Saint Mary's swim team finally gets to seek revenge. The Belles will face Calvin this Saturday at Rolf's Aquatic Center, promptly at 2 pm, for their second dual meet of the season.

Calvin has always been a strong swim team, according to coach Greg Janson. Last year Saint Mary's placed first in several events, but Calvin dominated the second, third, and fourth place positions, allowing Calvin to take the meet.

"Calvin worked us pretty hard last year," Janson said. "We match them pretty well this year, and we plan to give them a run for their money."

Natalie Cheeseman and Jennifer Dyjak are two juniors to watch in Saturday's meet. Both of their times have improved consistently from the first meet. Shannon Kelleher will push to improve her times in the 1000 freestyle and 500 freestyle, and Allison Smith will be tested in the 200 Butterfly.

The swim team is a young team, consisting of eleven freshman, three sophomores, eight juniors, and four seniors.

"We have a lot of good freshmen, who are backed up by a lot of upper classmen," said Katie Northrup. "It will be a close meet."

■ MEN'S SOCCER

Irish aim for NCAA tournament

By THOMAS SCHLIDT
Sports Writer

One step.

One more step and the Notre Dame men's soccer team is in the NCAA tournament. One more step and one save until senior goalkeeper Bert Bader accumulates 300 career saves.

To take this step the (11-9-2) Irish must prevail when they battle Mid-Continental Champion Central Connecticut this Saturday at 7:30 at Alumni Field.

Entering the match with a 15-5-2 record, the Blue Devils boast the better record and a dominant scorer in forward Everton Barrington. Barrington's 52 points this season ranks him first in New England and eighth nationally.

"We're approaching them as their conference champion," coach Mike Berticelli said. "They come in with a better record, they've scored more goals, and given up less. They have very good players, and we have no one in the top ten of scoring like they do."

Compliments aside, the Blue Devil's schedule was not one of the most demanding. The majority of the Blue Devil victories came against Maryland-Eastern Shore, Northeastern University, Onsonta State and Sienna College. Some of their losses came against the University at Buffalo and Maine (Orono).

Yet, this is the type of team that the Irish had difficulty with earlier in the season, i.e. Loyola and Northern Illinois.

"It only matters how good a team you are for 90 minutes," Berticelli explained. "It's like the first round of the NCAA for us."

With the same level of performance, as was demonstrated against their MCC tournament foes, the Irish should be optimistic about their chances.

"The team is real upbeat, and focused on Central Connecticut," Bader said. "There are no other teams to be focused on, this is the tournament. If we don't win we go home."

A main reason for such optimism is the play of Bader.

He has shut down opponent offenses all season. He has recorded seven shutouts and 80 saves so far this season, and was named the MCC defensive player of the week for third week of October.

He has become the career saves record holder at Notre Dame, and, with only one more save, he will break 300 career saves.

He also holds the Notre Dame career marks for shutouts (31), games played by a goalkeeper (76), and wins by a goalkeeper (48).

The Observer/Eric Ruethling
Notre Dame goalkeeper Bert Bader needs one save to reach the 300-career save mark.

"Bert has been very consistent," Berticelli said. "The team needs to know he will make the saves, and he's done that. Team confidence and the team record come from that."

This consistency comes from his focus, and readiness to make to big play.

"I have to make the big save," Bader explained. "The guys in front of me do 99 percent of the work, but, when that one shot comes, I have to be ready. You never know when it is going to come."

Thus, with the readiness of Bader in goal and the recently prolific offense, the Irish are ready to take that step, through the Blue Devils and into the NCAA tournament.

Decisions

By Rian Akey

Experience in making choices has made Jen Renola one of the nation's top goalkeepers

Last season, Notre Dame women's soccer goalkeeper Jen Renola was good.

She was solid.

She was tough.

But she wasn't great.

This season, however, Renola has emerged as one of the top goalkeepers in the country. In 21 starts, she has compiled a .412 goals-against average while posting eight complete game shut-outs and six more with back-up goalkeeper Emily Loman.

But despite her statistics, Notre Dame head coach Chris Petrucelli points to one change

No Rematch

Notre Dame is not looking at George Mason as a chance for revenge

When the Notre Dame women's soccer teams opens NCAA tournament play against George Mason on Saturday, Irish head coach Chris Petrucelli hopes the Irish leave memories of last season behind them.

The Irish were upset 2-1 by the Patriots in the opening round of last year's tournament in Madison, Wisconsin.

"The emotion of a revenge situation isn't necessarily good for either team," Petrucelli said. "We'll be excited enough to play because it's the NCAA tournament."

The Irish will play their usual attacking style in an attempt to score against the Patriot's all-American goalkeeper Jen Mead.

The winner of the opening round game will face the winner of the Washington State-William & Mary match on Sunday.
