Notre Dame, Ind., May 5 -- The spiritual and intellectual odyssey of Orestes A. Brownson, nineteenth century American philosopher and journalist, is traced in the Brownson Reader, an anthology of his writings published today (P. J. Kenedy and Sons, New York City).

Dr. Alvan S. Ryan, associate professor of English at the University of Notre Dame, has edited and written an introduction to the volume which includes representative essays penned by Brownson at various stages of his controversial career. Associated with several Protestant sects in his earlier years both as a minister and a layman, Brownson became a convert to Catholicism at the age of forty-one. He is buried in the crypt of Sacred Heart Church on the Notre Dame campus.

"Brownson has been denounced by liberals for his conservatism and by conservatives for his liberalism," Dr. Ryan writes in his introduction. He characterizes Brownson as "a seeker, with all the enthusiasm and the passionate intensity of men of that stamp." The central concern of Brownson's life, Dr. Ryan believes, was his "quest for religious certainty" and his "concern about temporal and contingent realities: justice between man and man, political liberty and order, the good of the earthly city."

In Dr. Ryan's opinion, Brownson's most important work was that of the general critic and journalist "although much of his work transcends the limitations of journalism." Brownson was a leading spokesman of the Transcendentalists and was closely associated with Emerson, Hawthorne, and Alcott. He was also regarded as a social reformer and a defender of the Catholic faith.

Dr. Ryan, a member of the Notre Dame faculty from 1943-46 and since 1951, recently was awarded a faculty fellowship for 1955-56 by the Fund for the Advancement of Education. He will spend the year at Princeton University studying and observing the Special Program in Humanities, the Honors Program and the Christian Gauss Seminars in Criticism.

Notre Dame, Ind., May 12 -- A production of "Everyman" starring Helen Oosthoek, the versatile Dutch actress, will be a highlight of the tenth biennial convention of the Catholic Theatre Conference at the University of Notre Dame June 12-15.

More than 1,500 teachers, directors and students of the drama from Catholic high schools and colleges throughout the country are expected to attend the sessions, according to Therese Marie Cuny, Chicago, Ill., conference president. Included in the convention program will be the presentation of several plays and discussions of virtually every phase of theatrical activity.

Miss Oosthoek's version of "Everyman" was first seen on "The Catholic Hour" over the NBC television network last year. Her portrayal of a dozen different roles in the fifteenth century morality play was hailed by the New York Times' critic as "a stunning performance."

A panel of experts will discuss the production of each play after the final curtain.
Notre Dame, Ind., May 19 -- A Provincial Chapter of the Holy Cross Fathers' Indiana province will be convened at the University of Notre Dame on June 17th, it was announced here today by Rev. Theodore J. Mehling, C.S.C., provincial. Thirty-five priests will be delegates to the sessions which are held every three years as prescribed by the constitutions of the Congregation of Holy Cross.

A Solemn High Mass in Sacred Heart Church on the campus will mark the opening of the Chapter which is expected to last about ten days. The obediences or assignments of Holy Cross priests for the coming year will be announced at the conclusion of the Chapter, Father Mehling said.

Included on the sessions' agenda will be the election of delegates to the General Chapter of the Congregation of Holy Cross to be held in Rome during the summer of 1956. Delegates to the June meeting also will review the activities of the province during the past three years and nominate three priests for the office of Provincial.

In addition to the University of Notre Dame, the Holy Cross Fathers' Indiana province operates the University of Portland in Oregon and St. George's College at Santiago, Chile. Its priests serve as missionaries in East Pakistan, conduct missions and retreats in this country, edit several publications, operate parishes, and serve as chaplains in the armed forces and at hospitals and other Catholic institutions. In September the Holy Cross Fathers will open the new Notre Dame High School for Boys at Miles, Illinois, a Chicago suburb.

"Modern Psychiatry and the Catholic Church," a second paper presented by Dr. Ayd, a Baltimore psychiatrist, aroused considerable interest at the Institute and in vocational circles. Other papers recorded in the Proceedings deal with the motivation of vocations and the use of the questionnaire, testing and screening in vocational work.

Notre Dame, Ind., May 21 -- The historical writings of the late Benedetto Croce, Italian thinker and elder statesman, are the subject of History and Liberty, a new book written by Professor A. Robert Caponigri of the University of Notre Dame. The volume has just been published in England and soon will be published in the United States (Henry Regnery Co., Chicago).

Caponigri distills from Croce's works a general theory of history which can be applied to all sciences which use historical documents. He carried on research for the book in Croce's private library in Naples and was there when Croce died in 1952.

According to the author, Croce's conception of history, which permeates all his works, is that history is the work of man's creative freedom and the arena of his ethical action. The Marxian or Communist view, on the other hand, conceives of history as the result of economic determination motivated by the perpetual warfare of social classes. In Professor Caponigri's opinion, the most important implication of Croce's theory of history is the superiority it accords ethics over politics and the consequent denial of all forms of political and social totalitarianism and authoritarianism.

Caponigri writes that Croce originally thought of history as simply evoking scenes from the past. He later came to regard it, however, as a moral drama, man's struggle to realize in the forms of social life his ethical ideals. He also came to regard history as essentially tragic, always open to failure.

Croce was the dominant intellectual figure in Italy for more than a half-century. He sternly resisted Fascism and played an important role in the political reorganization of Italy after Mussolini's downfall. He is credited with swinging Italy to the side of the western powers in the last stages of World War II and with restoring her constitutional life.

Notre Dame, Ind., June 1 — Eighteenth century amphibious warfare is described vividly in The Campaign for the Sugar Islands, a new book by Dr. Marshall Smelser, associate professor of history at the University of Notre Dame. The book, which includes a foreword by Rear Admiral Samuel Eliot Morison, the noted naval historian, was published today by the University of North Carolina Press. Its publication was sponsored jointly by Notre Dame and the Institute of Early American History.

Dr. Smelser's book, in Morison's words, is "a lively account of what is perhaps the most successful amphibious landing in history, between King Agamemnon's at Troy and General Eisenhower's in Normandy." It describes the British assault on the sugar islands of Martinique and Guadeloupe in the Caribbean during the French and Indian War. At the time, the two islands equalled Canada in strategic importance.

The Campaign for the Sugar Islands illustrates that almost all of the elements of twentieth century amphibious warfare were employed, however primitive, nearly two hundred years ago. In his narrative Dr. Smelser tells of flatbottomed landing craft, underwater obstacles, and naval gunfire support against shore batteries. The British forces eventually succeeded in capturing the islands, but only after many hundreds of casualties and after pursuing the French into the jungles and mountains.

Dr. Smelser has been a member of the Notre Dame faculty since 1947. A native of Joliet, Ill., he holds degrees from Quincy College, St. Louis University, and Harvard University where he received his doctorate in 1948. A specialist in early American history, he is a member of the American Historical Association.
Notre Dame, Ind., May 28—A noted scholar who has chronicled the history of Christendom through the centuries says he is "tremendously struck by the solid Catholicism which I find in the United States."

Rev. Philip Hughes, regarded as the outstanding historian of the Church writing in English, described the Church in America as "very, very alive" and its members as "remarkably militant." Father Hughes, who recently became a permanent member of the University of Notre Dame history faculty, said he is impressed by "the physical expansion of the Church in this country and the spiritual growth which it symbolizes."

The bespectacled British historian praised American Catholics' self-confidence as expressed in the Catholic higher education system in the United States. He termed the 247 Catholic colleges and universities in this country as "one of the principal accomplishments" of American Catholics. Father Hughes pointed out that the Church operates no colleges of university type in his native England. Oxford, Cambridge and virtually all of the celebrated European universities were Catholic institutions prior to the Reformation, he noted, but the English hierarchy has been unable to make any serious attempt to establish Catholic colleges since that time.

All British schools, including the Catholic schools, receive government support, Father Hughes said. He pointed out that Britain's schools were all private schools until 1870. Ever since the government started its own schools as an auxiliary to the long existing system it has supported the private schools, Father Hughes said.
The majority of teachers in British Catholic schools are lay men and women rather than members of religious orders, Father Hughes observed. "This is not due to any shortage of vocations," he explained. "That's just the way it's always been."

Catholics in England constitute a much smaller minority than do Catholics in the United States, Father Hughes said. He emphasized, however, that they do not have "a minority mentality." They are represented in all areas of public life and are especially prominent in intellectual and literary circles, he added. Many of the latter are converts to Catholicism.

Father Hughes, who has written several historical works including the three volume History of the Church and The English Reformation, deplored the fact that "far too little" is known about American history in England and on the continent. Next to nothing is known about the history of the Church in the United States, he said. According to Father Hughes, only a few key American presidents and generals are familiar figures on the other side of the Atlantic.

From the historian's point of view, the present time is "an extremely interesting period" in the history of the Catholic Church, Father Hughes feels. In his opinion, the Holy See has exercised "tremendous leadership" in recent years through its encyclicals and administrative decrees. As evidence he cited the social teachings of the Popes and recent changes in regulations for the eucharistic fast. He speculated that Pope Pius XII and his predecessor, Pius XI, will be regarded as two of the truly great popes in history.
The popes' pronouncements are read by virtually all the world's leaders, Father Hughes said, "although there may be little evidence at the time that they are affecting the international scene." But the British historian pointed out that there is always a time lag, even in Catholic circles, between the utterances of the pope and their general acceptance.

Thirty years ago, Father Hughes recalled, people used to smile at papal pronouncements on Communism. "The Holy See is years ahead of the world's statesmen on many matters," he said.

Father Hughes stressed the importance of history in the curriculum at all educational levels. He deplored the fact that history appears to be giving way to a popularized version of the social sciences and civics in many schools. The classics were the first to go, he observed. "Now history is being eased out in many schools and there's no telling what next." A knowledge and understanding of history is particularly important for Catholics, Father Hughes said, for it is important "that they understand historically their own position as well as that of the non-Catholic world." People are often kept away from the Church by what he called "a false view of history." False history, he said, is truly a barrier to prospective converts, he added.

Although he has travelled widely on earlier visits to the United States, Father Hughes continues to be amazed at the "extraordinary candor" of American news commentators, especially when they refer to the President and other prominent public figures. They are much more frank and direct than their British colleagues would be in dealing with the Prime Minister, he said. "Americans don't put people on pedestals as they do in England," Father Hughes observed. "If they do, they don't let them stay there very long."
Notre Dame, Ind., May 31 — Four young men have been awarded Notre Dame scholarships provided by the General Motors Corporation, the University's Committee on Scholarships and Prizes announced today.
