Be Ashamed, Notre Dame.

If Van Wallace is going to be cured by a miracle, as his life seems to be prolonged by a miracle, who will receive credit for it? Some of his friends at Notre Dame have done noble by him, others have been notable slackers. And in the meantime spiritual bouquets are pouring in from other schools which are anxious to help. Thank God, Van's mute appeal to Notre Dame spirit is heard, even if there are deaf ears at Notre Dame.

These Ears Are Not Deaf.

The students of the following schools have been generous in their spiritual offerings for Van:

Nazareth College, Louisville.
College of Mt. St. Joseph.
Sacred Heart Academy, Newburgh, N.Y.
Mt. St. Joseph Academy, Springfield, Ohio.
St. Ann's, Freeland, Pa.
Sacred Heart, Early, Iowa.
Holy Name High School, Cleveland.
St. Mary's College and Academy, Notre Dame.

Returns from other schools are coming daily.

A Provincial Superior of the Order of Sisters of Notre Dame promises prayers of 137 religious, 16 novices, and of the children in their schools and orphanages. One child of five stood at the Communion Rail repeating, "Jesus, Mary and Joseph, help." Each time he said "help" he emphasized it by pounding the Rail.

The Sisters of Holy Cross at St. Mary's, including those in the Infirmary, the religious gathered at Kneipp Sanitarium, Rome City, Indiana, and the nuns connected with the schools mentioned above offer their prayers with those of any whom they can interest.

A Jewess writes: "Dr. Mrs. Wallace: As I cannot offer any Masses or Communions, because I am not of the faith, I offer all my prayers and hope through them your son will soon recover. I also express my sympathy to you in your sorrow."

Good News.

An intimate friend of Van's, who saw him February 22, says he has never seemed so cheerful since the accident, he has never looked better, he has never spoken so clearly, and he can move his head more freely.

You.

What are you doing about the matter?
