Two More Days.

The close of the Easter season is upon us. Friday and Saturday remain before Trinity sunday draws the veil upon the practical Catholicity of some of our friends. Fray for them that they may not make shipwreck of their faith. Faith ishard to get, and it is harder to get back when it is lost. To trifle with Faith at Notre Dame requires desponde foolhardiness.

The -itany of the Damned.

A story is told of an old priest who pleaded long and ardent1, but in vain, for a hardened old customer to accept the Last Sacraments. At last be pulled out his black stole and put it on, and said to the old sinner: "Well, and' if you won't, the least I can do for you is to clant the Litany of the Danned." "Oh, no, Father, not that. Give me time." "Sure and why not? You're as good as in hell already." "Not while there's a breath left in me. I'll be good, Father; I'll be good."

Empty Pockets and Empty Leads.

The Current Commonweal comments extensively upon the following paragraph from Father Burns's Universal-Notre-Dame-Night address:

"All American colleges and universities contain a number of young menwhe lack intellectual ambition or purose. They to to college, not to study, but just to enjoy the experience of college life and to carry away a degree.... They are there, and they cannot easily be got rid of." The address gees on to say that there are other boys who are not there because, although they have good heads and intellectual ambition, Their pockets are empty.

Our Esteemed contemporary stresses the empty pockets; we find the empty heads a more pressing problem. While we should no inveigh against an All-Wise Frovidence for this uneven distribution of brains and dollars, we can at least sugrest to the empty heads that they make a Novena for Sense.

Fifty Golden Years.

The Rev. Daniel E. Hudson, C.S.C., celebrates a double jubiles today, the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood and of his editorship of the Ave Maria. There will be no celebration of this imposing event: even the warmenst affection and worshipful admiration of brothers and friends must respect the deep humility that has made this power in Gatholic letters almost a recluse all the days of his life. We will rejoice for him today, and withe Holy Father, who has sent hims message of singular affection, we will pray that God will give him many more besutiful years in the service of the Mother of God. The statue of the Dome has blessed this place in which we live; and the Ave Maria, which has faithful; mirrore that statue through a long span of years, has carried that blessing toevery clime.

There the survey Goes.

Through interest aroused by a Catholic bank r in New York, a non-Catholic back cresident in Netroit has asked for a copy of the Leligious Survey, which as regards as an invaluable aid to the understa ding of the young sen in his amploy.
