

Rosary Indulgences Today.

Visits for the Rosary Indulgences begin at noon today and continue till tomorrow evening. Reception of the Sacraments today or tomorrow is a condition to the gaining of the Indulgences.

Van Wallace Day.

Thursday, October 8, is the last day of the Novena to the Little Flower. It will be called "Van Wallace Day." On that day every student of the University is invited to remember in Holy Communion the gritty lad whose broken neck has kept him away from school for the past fifteen months. We must not wait for Father Brooks and his converts from paganism to do all the praying.

Novena for the Team.

There were more injuries in last Saturday's game than are usual for a Notre Dame team. Perhaps we haven't prayed for the boys as we should. The Mission came earlier than usual this year, and the Novena for the team had to be deferred. A Novena begun Friday morning will end on the day of the Army game. It is suggested that it be made to St. Joan of Arc, Patroness of the Army game for the past three years.

How to Tell a Freshman from a Senior.

1. Observe his wall decorations. A senior is generally proud of his mother's picture, and is willing to let the wall decorations harmonize with it.
2. Within the lifetime of the oldest inhabitant it doth not appear that any senior ever insulted a girl passing by on the campus.
3. It is not customary for seniors to talk and laugh in the presence of the Blessed Sacrament.

(It should be noted that this analysis is not final. One may mistake a sophomore for a freshman, but there is no great harm in that.)

Pro Palais.

"Dear Father: We cannot deny that the characters mentioned in the Bulletin do exist at the Palais Royale, and that the dancing of a certain class is as far from wholesome as are the dancers. All of us know that a certain number of students may always be found at the Palais; but does that signify that the dancing of the students is, as a whole, unclean? I am sure from my experience that the number of students engaging dances from the wrong type of women is very small indeed. Someone always does the wrong thing, no matter where he may be.

"The Palais, the only public dance hall in South Bend where decent fellows and girls can go with at least a feeling of self-respect, should not be labelled an occasion of sin, as that would be unfair to the majority of us, who are in the habit of forming a party of good friends to go there for clean amusement. Could we go to the old Tokio and retain our self-respect, to say nothing of retaining our desirability with the Prefect of Discipline?

"Do the freshmen recognize the tough dancers as students? If they are not sure, I would suggest that they make sure before they damn the Palais for all of us.

"-- Corbyite."
