See below.* If volunteers don't hurry it looks as if we'll have to discontinue adoration early as Friday.

Thanks to The Loyal Guard.

There is a large number of students on the campus who may or may not be strutting lifeguards on somebody's beach this summer, who may or may not come back next fall with heavy muscles and a nut-brown tan, and yet, for all that, deserve plenty of credit.

They are the strong, young army of the Lord which priests face, more or less regularly, morning after morning, at the Communion rail and at Mass. They hold up the Communion average through snow and rain, through heat and cold, in season and out of season, the year round.

Some faces in that army are prominent, some are not so prominent. But, thank God, almost every leader on the campus and almost every outstanding athlete is included in its ranks.

Anyone who has had much to do with these men knows that they, last of all, look for extraordinary credit. They seem too conscious of their own shortcomings for that.

But they have caught the high, traditional ideal of what a Notre Dame man should be like, and they try humbly and honestly to realize that ideal in their own lives.

It is a pleasure and an inspiration to work with such men, and this Bulletin wishes to thank them frankly and sincerely and simply for all that they have done this year to maintain on the campus the high religious standards of Notre Dame.

They Look to You.

A well-dressed young man stood as sponsor at a baptism. When he should have been reciting the Creed he kept silent.

The priest urged him a second time--"Please recite the Creed."

"I don't know it," replied the young man.

"Don't know the Creed? How often do you go to church?"

"Two or three times a year," was the reply.

"To Communion?"

The sponsor nearly suffocated in indignation. "Communion? What do you expect me to be, a priest?"

Father Blocker, A Franciscan, tells the story in St. Anthony's Messenger, for April, in an effort to kill off a silly notion of Holy Communion not yet extinct in the land.

"At Notre Dame, famous for fervor as well as for football," continues the good Franciscan, "the greater number of students according to an annual Religious Survey, are daily communicants. If others can do it, why not you?"

Remember this summer at Communion-time, that many a young man in the church will turn his eyes expectantly to you!
