Let The Old-Timers Tell You.

About 950 Notre Dame graduates were asked in the alumni questionnaire last spring: "What advice would you give a young man entering Notre Dame?" Here are the chief results:

214 answer: Study Hard. Characteristic qualifications of this advice are the following:

"I am not addressing the New Notre Dame man from the mountain tops of senescence, but I know from my own life that he is not old enough to see the great opportunity ahead of him. He should attend every class, take notes, make lists of recommended books, and do all the work possible, rather than reduce his work to a minimum. He should try to develop politeness and good speech. I would caution him not to think that he has a monopoly on ignorance simply because his classes spread out a great array of knowledge before him."

"The world pays only for what you know and for what you can do with your knowledge. Cheating and loafing may get you by in college, but the world wants results."

"Throw yourself into your studies, forcing yourself in what you don't like. You'll do plenty that you don't want to do after you get your diploma."

212 advise: Take Full Advantage of All Religious Opportunities. Among these 212, 60 said: "Become a daily communicant." Here are other remarks:

"True Notre Dame spirit starts at the Communion rail. Get it there!"

"Let the other fellow be the wise guy. You attend the Sacraments as often as possible."

"Above all, build a good religious foundation for your after-life. The materials are to be had at Notre Dame."

"Pray, young man, pray. And when you get through there may be good enough in you to last the rest of your life. Pray and meditate."

105 caution: Keep the Rules.

"Discipline," one alumnus philosophizes, "is the need of the age. But no one gets it unless he's made to take it."

"You may think you can get away with infractions, but infractions are the only things that can do away with you."

"Obey the rules. It's foolish to sacrifice a career for a dumb escapade. I came close!"

79 tell you this: Go in for Dramatics, Debating and the like.

"I once declined a call for a little speech at a class dinner simply because I couldn't make it. Don't follow my bad example."

"You will learn to meet people and to stand on your feet and speak if you take an active part in campus doings."

59 say: Become Acquainted with the Priests and Professors.

"You will get from contact with certain Fathers things that are not written in the books; and these things will help you when you clash with the world."

"Don't be too timid to know intimately the priests and your professors. Call at their rooms. They can be an influence stronger and better than any other contact in life."

42 coach you to Spend Your Time on the Campus. "There are dance halls all over the world. There is only one Notre Dame."
