

Goals set for voter registration

by David Bender
Staff Reporter

Three thousand registered students by Monday is the goal of the student government's current registration drive. Registration chairman Rich O'Connor said he was not satisfied with the turnout so far but "response is picking up."

Student leaders hope to establish a Notre Dame "lobby" in the Indiana State Legislature by a strong registration count of Notre Dame students.

The campaign in its present form, tables at the dining halls and in La Fortune, will shift to a higher gear by tonight, reported O'Connor. "A telephone campaign will be launched beginning this evening, and will continue through the weekend with the operation winding down by the end of the weekend", says the chairman.

"Those who have already registered will have their names crossed off a computerized student body list, while the rest will be contacted and reminded of the importance of registering to vote in Indiana", finished O'Connor.

The registration is currently being conducted by "deputized" students, but under the responsibility of St. Joseph County, stated Student Body President Pat McLaughlin. The SBP feels that it was the student government's job to provide the vehicle for the drive, and put it into operation, but from that point on it is and has been the responsibility of the county.

There are six reasons why students should register to vote in Indiana, McLaughlin explained, but the main one is to create enough political punch to influence a change in the Indiana state legal drinking age from 21 to 18.

Figures from the 1972 elections indicate that Notre Dame cast 39 per cent of the vote of this precinct in the Presidential race, while the University students accounted for 44 per cent of the precinct vote for governor, and 54 per cent for county treasurer. 61.4 per cent of the Democratic vote in the last Congressional election was cast by Notre Dame students.

"In 1972, 2,000 votes would have swung any election in the county...", reported O'Connor. A student bloc vote of 2,000 or more in the Assembly election November 5 will have a strong impact on the stands of the candidates on the drinking question," added McLaughlin.

The student government currently plans to invite the two candidates for this district's representative in the Indiana State House to the campus so students will have a chance to evaluate the two men, and hear their views on the lower drinking age proposal. O'Connor feels that politicians generally respect their electorate, and if the barrier to their election is a "no" vote on lowering the legal age for drinking, then "They will certainly vote in our favor".

What are the chances for a lower drinking age bill to be passed soon? McLaughlin refused to speculate but O'Connor ventured that the chances are good that such a bill could be passed by late January or early February when the newly elected state legislators take office. "It all depends, once again on how many registered voters we have to confront the candidates with," reiterated McLaughlin and O'Connor.

Besides the lower drinking age issue, O'Connor feels there are five other major reasons why Notre Dame students should register to vote in Indiana.

Student Body leaders hope a large voter's registration by students will strengthen their lobbying efforts.

He points out that a student spends 9 months a year for four years at Notre Dame. "Most students are not concerned too much about change within their own state because there is no great effect on them. There is a direct effect of Indiana laws on the student, however, and he is consequently more concerned with what is happening at ND".

Federal Census reports count Notre Dame students as Indiana residents, and students should have a say in spending any Federal grants that arise out of such a report, he argued.

Two other points cited by O'Connor are the short thirty day residency requirement, and the fact that no other registrations, such as drivers licenses, vehicle registration, etc. need be changed. It is just as easy to cancel your registration here as it is to make it, adds O'Connor.

The immediate effect of the voter registration drive in lowering the drinking age will not be known until Bob Ducomb and Dick Bodine (this district's assembly candidates) come to Notre Dame and explain their feelings on the drinking issue. The long range impact will be known at the polls November 5 and in the next session of the Indiana legislature.

Moreover, O'Connor pointed out that a student spends about $5,000 a year in Indiana and is therefore entitled to have a say in the state politics.

Wernig new VP of Student Affairs

Position filled at SMC

by Pattie Cooney
Contributing Editor

Many St. Mary's students are asking who the new Dean of Students is, now that Kathleen Mullaney is gone. The answer is that there is no longer a dean of students at SMC.

Instead of a dean of students, now there is an Assistant to the Vice President of Student Affairs. Miss Stevie Wernig, was appointed assistant to Dr. Mary Alice Cannon, Vice President of Student Affairs. "The new office was created in an attempt to set up each of the four vice-presidents with the same systems," explained Wernig. "Furthermore, the dean was viewed as a discipline figure, rather than an educator or someone here to help the students." "In a community government system, no one person should bear the brunt of the discipline problems that come up. For instance, I will be working closely with the Hall Council, Hall Directors and the Judicial Board; group decisions are usually superior to individual decision," Wernig added.

Wernig's new position is similar to Gail Mandell's position as assistant to the Vice-President of Academic Affairs. "I see my role as a coordinator and a facilitator, to help people get things done, which is what Gail Mandell does in the academic area," noted Wernig.

The Student Affairs offices, with the exception of the health service, are located on the first floor of Le Mans Hall, north of the lobby. "The idea of any student affairs office is to be a one-stop area where students can get help, and if we can't help them directly we'll refer them to someone who can," said Wernig.

Others working in Student Affairs are Karen O'Neil, Director of Housing; Dr. Suzanne B. Areson, Director of Counseling; Gail Ritchie, assistant to the Director of Counseling; Tom Ott, counseling intern; and Verna B. Wood, R.N., director of Health Services.

Wernig was recently Director of Student Affairs at St. Joseph's College in Connecticut. Wernig graduated from St. Mary's in 1968 and studied for her masters in college administration at the University of Denver. "One of the best things about this job is the relaxed atmosphere. Everyone is friendly and really interested in helping the students and getting to know them personally," she commented.

WARNING

Students are warned that a young man posing as a magazine subscription salesman is going door to door in several residence halls without the necessary approval of the Dean of Students. Notre Dame Security has been notified and is investigating.

The man went door to door yesterday in Zahn Hall and sold an estimated $160 worth of magazines, according to Zahn rector Fr. Thomas Tallarida.

The man also sold subscriptions in Flanner Hall Tuesday and Keenan Hall yesterday.

The man is described by Notre Dame Security as a tall black male of 23 or 24 years of age, weighing about 140 pounds, with medium length hair. The man claimed he was Ed Kelly and he worked for "Opportunities Service Company".

Security has been given a sketch of the man.

New assistant dean of students

Mrs. McCabe appointed

by Norman Bauer
Staff Reporter

Mrs. Mary Clare McCabe, formerly of the R.A. program, has been appointed as Notre Dame's first assistant dean of students. She replaces Fr. Terry Lally who has moved up to assistant vice president of student affairs.

In speaking of priorities, the new assistant dean noted that a major goal of the department should be "to create opportunities for students to become responsible decision-makers in the areas of their own lives."

Over the past three years McCabe has been active in the campus program for instruction of dormitory resident assistants. This year for the first time, the RA's will receive two credits for their in-service training and for their participation in weekly lecture and discussion sessions.

In her new capacity, McCabe stresses the need for communication. She has observed Student Life Council meetings and plans to attend a session of the Hall President's Council soon. She says she is always available for consultation.

On her agenda for the next month are meetings with representatives of the Northern Indiana Drug Abuse Center and the South Bend Council on Alcoholism. After these discussions, McCabe will meet with various campus officials and staff members on these areas of major concern.

McCabe has had experience in counseling and guidance. She has served most recently as an assistant in Ackerman's office and has worked as a volunteer counselor at the Elkhart County Probation Agency.

Communication and opportunities for students in decision-making will be stressed by Mrs. McCabe in her new role of assistant dean of students.

Area police checking local bars

by Matt Yokom
Staff Reporter

South Bend Police checked for underage patrons and outside drinking in two Notre Dame student bars early Tuesday morning. The check at Corby's and Nickie's resulted in the arrest of a 26 year old South Bend resident outside of Nickie's.

The incident occurred when police stopped a student leaving Corby's with a cup. The student did not have an alcoholic beverage which would have been against the law. He was underage but was not arrested for leaving a bar.

The officers then entered the bar, looked around, and talked briefly with the bartender. Upon returning to their squad car they discovered that beer had been poured on the vehicle.

The officers then entered Nickie's and checked identifications for proofs of age. All proved to be of legal drinking age.

While in Nickie's the police asked the bartender not to serve a patron that the officers considered intoxicated. The individual then left Nickie's; The police believed that he was having trouble walking and arrested him for public intoxication. The man charged was not a Notre Dame student.

Bartenders at the two bars felt that the problem of underage students is not only a problem for students but also for the bar owners. Joe Mell, part owner of Corby's, felt that while students can get in trouble for fake ID's, the majority of blame is put upon the owners.

The bars can be fined, put on probation, or face the possibility of being closed, explained a Nickie's bartender Tom Gilholly. Another bartender felt that usually police weren't looking to bust a student but that blatant violations, such as drinking outside, may lead to students being arrested and initiate police checks of identifications.

There also is periodic surveillance of taverns and bars by the South Bend Police and the Indiana State Excise Police. Both organizations have out of uniform officers that spot check the bars. A possible city-wide crackdown on vice may result from allegations made by police officers that their superiors told them not to make arrests in certain sections of the city. The Notre Dame bar area was not one of those areas that officers had specified. Several bartenders felt that the Excise Police, a part of the Indiana Alcoholic Beverage Commission, were going to be in the area for awhile. The Excise police not only spot check bars but also respond if a complain is filed of the South Bend Police ask them to come into an area.

Local student bars remain under the watchful eye of city police.

No decision reached yet on psychology building

By Catherine Brown
Staff Reporter

Plans for the building, located between La Fortune Student Center and Hayes-Healy Center, are presently under consideration.

The move of the psychology department to its new home in Haggard Hall on the North Quad has left Hoynes Hall, or the "old Psych Building" as it is more popularly known, locked up and unused so far this year.

Fr. James T. Burtchaell, university provost said, "The decision concerning the building's use lies with the Officers of the university, as do all decisions about academic buildings".

Burtchaell mentioned that "several possibilities are being discussed" but that no plans have been decided upon. The provost refused to comment further on the possibilities for the building's use, saying it would be "premature" to do so. Burtchaell did predict that a decision regarding the future of Hoynes Hall would be made "sometime this semester".

Hoynes Hall's history has included a great diversity of names and inhabitants. The original structure, built in 1890, was called the Institute of Technology, and housed the engineering department.

Since that time, fire, which occurred "around the end of the nineteenth century", according to Jay J. Kane, assistant director of Information Services, reduced the original three-story structure to its present two-story form.

Physical changes, however, are not the only transformations that Hoynes Hall has undergone. University Archivist Fr. Thomas E. Blanz noted that the building has successively lodged the engineering department, chemistry department, the Hoynes Law School, the architecture department and most recently the psychology department.

As a result of the recent move of its last tenant, the hall is not being used for classes or any other purpose.

Campus security keeps close check on illegal parking

by Chris Bock
Staff Reporter

Cars parked illegally or receiving more than five citations will be towed away, according to Arthur Pears, chief of Notre Dame security.

Cars failing to display a registration decal will also be towed away. The cars will be taken to local towing companies where a fee will be charged for the release of the car. Pears explained that security has a problem with students failing to register their cars every year.

"Everyone who owns a car knows the rules," Pears stated. "We encourage everyone to read the student manual, particularly the section on traffic regulations."

A statement, not a rule

The time has arrived for this university, through the Student Life Council, to establish their position on sexual morality, on and off campus, with a written statement. A statement - not a rule.

Hopefully, Father Hesburgh's veto, announced at the SLC last Monday, indicates a profound disappointment with the decision the council yielded last May. The closeness of the vote, and the penalty of exile from the campus would seem to have been obvious causes for his dissatisfaction.

But more importantly, his veto must now serve as a measure to everyone of this university that legislation of an enforceable law on sexual morality is not possible. Father Hesburgh recognized an inadequacy in the proposed law as well as in the existing law and with complete knowledge of the genuine debate with which it was drawn. May his interpreted concern be the model which is copied.

With last Monday's announcement of Father Hesburgh's veto of the compromise ruling passed last May, the door of ambiguity was again swung wide open.

That door now needs to be shut once and for all. And neither the SLC, Student Affairs or Father Hesburgh are going to accomplish this by searching for an all-inclusive law on sexual morals. Morality can not be enforced, it can only be taught.

This fact must be recognized and then followed by a statement of position rather than an enforced law by the University.

Referring to an undisclosed letter from Father Hesburgh, which without explanation is uncharacteristic of the University president, Brother Just Paczesny, vice-president of Student Affairs, announced the veto of the sexuality rule passed by a narrow 11-8 margin last spring. The rule was so vague that when seven different members of the SLC were asked for their interpretations after its passage last year, seven different and conflicting views were expressed.

The proposed rule had specified that any on-campus student found involved in sexual relations outside of marriage would be asked to leave the "on-campus community." Alas, a comparison of off-campus living to a penal colony?

So now the original rule remains in effect with its designed ambiguities. Although the rule states only a belief "that sexual union should occur only in marriage," subsequent interpretation by the Dean of Students office has included the unwritten rule of suspension for a "suspected" violator as fanning in the Dillon Hall Case last year.

But we are now at a different time, and let us hope a new era. Notre Dame should be expected to guide her men and women morally into that new era. But our need now is for her defined and stated guidance - not a rule.

Our Catholic tradition deserves no less.

Let us then leave the responsibility for enforcement of this statement to each student and other members of the Notre Dame community. Let the University instruct, not dictate. Only for those with a shallow and insincere regard for their fellow man will this proposal seem absurd.

Let each of us compromise our policies and not our principles.

In which we meet the Frantic One

fred graver

It was two thirty-two, this he knew well. The Frantic One took a quick look at the gold detex box, calculated in his mind what it was for, and then ripped open the door.

He had no idea what he was doing. He was led up finely carpeted stairs towards a library. His escort's voice said, "Follow me."

"Might as well as not."
The escort then entered into large, solid oak door. The Frantic One stood watching him like a poor man seeing his last five dollars stashed into a savings account.

He did not follow the escort, moving instead toward a vision in the library.

She sat at a desk fifteen feet high. She was in charge of the books on the upper three shelves of the library, where the Frantic One had never looked.

She had a beautiful.....He tried and tried, but couldn't think of a word for it. He just knew that he was seeing a beautiful.....

He would make his move, but not without calculation.
With a feeling of relief, he retreated to the bathroom. There, he saw the usual urinals, stalls, a water fountain, and a large oak table with chairs around it. This is where the anti-intellectuals met. There were copies of MAD magazine strewn on the table, and a copy of "The Waste Land" with a bloody knife stuck into it.

He bent down to take a drink from the fountain. It left the fountain, rose to a great height, then came cascading down like a waterfall. Just like a waterfall. Like the waterfall on a Coor's can, all silver and metallic with distinguishing black lines running through.

He caught himself in the mirror.
And awoke.

"Amazing," he thought, "I look just like myself when I dream."
The alarm went off.

"Jesus, I hate that," and he truly did hate waking shortly before the alarm. He felt cheated, like a gambler who knows beforehand the outcome of his bet.

He went into the shower. The drains there had been backed up for years, and small creatures and plants had begun to take root. In fact, the room had begun to resemble hot, muggy Hawaii in its finest, early primal moments. Before missionaries had come in.

On a good morning, emerging from the stall to dry, a young Hawaiian beauty would reach from the flora to hand you a hollowed coconut filled with warm nectar, a lily floating atop the steam.

"At best," he thought.
Dressing, he faced the awesome task of reconciling his shoes. The laces had long since lost the proper sense of belonging to their respective eyelets. To make them work at all, he had to compromise and negotiate each section of lace with each eyelet. The shoes ended up looking like the demise of the Eiffel Tower.

The laces protested this arrangement, but with some sweet talking, the Frantic One could make them do anything at all.

Everything struck him as having the wrong angles in relation to everything else when he walked out the door.

The people, particularly were in distorted perspective, were set in the wrong positions. This irritated him.

The feeling passed quickly, though, to make room for an older and more familiar one, a set attitude of disdain.

He hated people. He despised them, had little use for them, had even less use for them when they needed him. He shunned them, resisted them with a passion.

As a child he spit a lot. Like a snake.

This served to support his theories. Those people are supremely stupid, he believed. When he felt inferior, he could think about these kind of people and regain his spirit.

He made up characters, stories, lives for each of them. The details were vulgar, so he knew they were stupid because of the way they lived.

He placed them on a mental list:

--Dame Antigone DuMont. The closest thing to Margaret DuMont, foil of the Marx Brothers, he had met. She wasn't a bad looking girl, in fact he would have easily admitted to what a nice body she had, but she put him off by the way she was so tight, so hard to get to. She was also, as he once said, "the biggest downer on campus." One night he told her date to pray to St. Jude, patron of "hopeless causes."

--Eddie Doublemonger. Senior, switched from Pre-Med to American Studies in the latter part of Junio year, after it became awesomely apparent he wasn't going to make it. He still had a pre-med strain in him, though, and would confound the Frantic One occasionally with comments like "get to the blood and bones of this, then we can discuss it" or "to understand, we must pick apart the brains and vital organs of an argument."

--(). Just another blank in life's parentheses. Typical status-quo zero. Big smile for others, if they fit into the plan. Really didn't care if a smile came back just wanted to keep in practice with the flashy stuff.

--Tubs. To understand this man's body, you had to have the kind of mind that can comprehend just what made tail fins so appealing on old Cadillacs. His eyes were too big for his head, which was too big for his neck, which wasn't big enough at all for his huge torso, which carried two wimps for arms, and his legs ended in sharp wing-tipped-tail-fins of feet. He sweated a great deal with the exertion spent making the professor KNOW Tubs was involved in the class.

Fantasizing, list upon list, exhausted him by the end of class, and it took most of the walk to lunch to regroup his vital energies.

Soon, he found himself would up and ready. He saw a writer "friend" of his and figured on ripping into him for a while.

Poll reflects on Infirmary

by Mary Fran Hayes
Staff Reporter

Notre Dame Student Infirmary received a generally favorable response from students polled in a recent survey. Student responses have already led to a "speeding up of services," said Sr. Miriam Doloras, infirmary administrator.

"The questionnaire was an attempt to get the students' attitudes about the infirmary in such areas as how they were received by personnel and were they satisfied with the services they had used," Sister said. "I was disappointed that we did not have a larger response to the survey," she added. The questionnaire was given to 347 students entering the infirmary, and 560 other students responded to a mailed questionnaire. The students were men and women, on-campus and off-campus, freshmen and upper classmen.

"The infirmary was given a favorable response by most of the students who had used it, but the response was unfavorable from those who just had hearsay evidence," explained Sister.

One change has already come about as a result of the survey. "There was a problem of too much traffic in the Clinic, and we felt that student's privacy was being invaded," stated Sister. "Upon realizing that most of the traffic was due to excessive allergy cases, we moved the allergy services and established specific hours for allergy treatments, thus speeding up the services of the infirmary."

The final results of the survey should be ready for publication soon. Sr. Miriam Dolores stressed that she needs to know the opinions of the student body before she can enact any changes.

One question that she felt students had was why the infirmary did not have x-ray equipment. "X-ray equipment is expensive and requires the services of a radiologist. Since the infirmary has no idea of how many students a day will need this service, to add a trained radiologist to our staff would be an added expense. The hospitals are close enough to campus so that the inconvenience is not that great."

Off campus life on campus

Augusta Hall experiments

Augusta Hall was opened this year as an experimental living arrangement for a small number of responsible seniors. Forty-six girls live in the SMC hall which is trying to create a different kind of experience in community living for Saint Mary's students.

Marty Kabbes, the senior who introduced the concept of using Augusta, said the idea struck her one night last October when she and some friends were discussing the pro's and con's of living off-campus. They finally decided to look for a way to get "off-campus life on campus," Kabbes said. The whole idea included self-responsible dorm regulations and thus more independence for the resident.

Kabbes said Dr. Edward Henry, former SMC president, was very enthusiastic about her idea and helped her to guide the proposal through all the channels before reaching the Board of Regents. The proposal encountered difficulty because the Board of Regents couldn't predict whether Saint Mary's enrollment would increase enough to move forty students into a new dorm.

Once the Board of Regents passed the proposal, letters were sent out to all seniors and workshops were held for interested students last March. "The workshops decided exactly how the dorm would be run and under what rules.

Students are completely "running their own show," said Dr. Susie Areson, SMC Director of Counseling. "They make their own rules except for male visitation hours which have to follow Saint Mary's regulations."

After workshops, Kabbes continued, "There were room picks where everyone decided where they wanted to live. We sat and talked till everyone was happy."

Augusta Hall Representative Moira Londergan said "Augusta is much more a community than any other dorm, and is a good transition before graduation, where everything will be your own responsibility."

"There is much less tension because there is no fear of authority and no one is subject to the Judicial Board. There is no problem of stealing, because with a small group, everybody knows everybody and is very cooperative. Augusta is also more conducive to studying," Londergan concludes.

Augusta resident Mary Ellen Vonesh said the "atmosphere is a lot freer. It's nice to know we have the choice of making our own rules. All the kids are really close."

The choice of making rules and enforcing the visitation rule is up to the students alone, Kabbes observed. "But," she explained "the temptation just isn't there. On the ground floor there is a living room, a parlour, a library and a dining room to entertain men in, and two big meeting rooms on the first floor."

Londergan added, "It's (Augusta) run like a home, and I hope to see the project expand."

Angela Davis to lecture

by Maureen Flynn
Staff Reporter

On September 20th Dr. Angela Davis will appear at Stepan Center to lecture on "The Fight Against Racism and Political Repression."

A prominent black militant, Davis' claim to fame includes being fired from UCLA, becoming the first black woman on the FBI's most wanted list, standing trial for murder and numerous speeches and organizational projects.

In 1969 Davis was fired from her position as acting assistant professor of philosophy at UCLA because of her membership in the American Communist Party. At the time she was working with the Che-lumumba group, an all-black collective of the Communist Party.

Following legal action and protests by faculty and students Davis was reinstated at UCLA.

Her work with political prisoners at the time brought her into close contact with Jonathan Jackson, one of the Soledad Brothers. In a 1970 attempt to free Jonathan's brother George at the Madison County Courthouse Jonathan, a hostage judge, and several other people were killed.

When police discovered that the guns used in the Los Angeles shootout belonged to Davis, a warrant was issued for her arrest. Under California law, the owner of a weapon used in a crime is subject to indictment on a charge of complicity in that crime.

Davis eluded the police and went underground, becoming the first black woman to be listed on the FBI's ten most wanted list.

In the meantime, the American Communist Party set up hundreds of Angela Davis Committees across the country. The campaign to free her and other alleged political prisoners spread to Europe, Africa, the USSR, and South America.

Police finally apprehended Davis in late 1970. In 1971, before she went on trial, George Jackson was killed in prison while reportedly attempting to escape.

The prosecution in the Davis case argued that Davis had conspired with Jonathan Jackson in the liberation attempt because of her love for his brother. The defense, in turn, argued that Jackson and Davis were on such close terms that he could easily have taken the weapons from her apartment without her knowledge, and that he did indeed avail himself of the opportunity. Davis was acquitted by the jury.

In the past three years she has travelled in the U.S. and abroad, making public addresses and delivering her personal thanks for the support given to her. Davis is currently active in the National Alliance Against Racism and Political Repression, and the speaker's fee for her lecture will be donated to that organization.

The lecture itself is free to students, and begins at 7:30 p.m. Davis' appearance has been arranged and financed by the Black Studies Program, the Notre Dame Student Government, the New Frontier Society, Ujamma, the Center for Civil Rights, the Black American Law Students Association, and the Black Cultural Arts Center.

Renovation to be completed soon

By Bob Mader
Staff Reporter

Renovation of the Placement Bureau offices on the second floor of the Administration Building will be completed October 23, according to Mr. Richard Willman, Placement Bureau director.

The renovation, which was begun last June, consists of new paneling, carpeting, and painting in one office and three interviewing rooms.

Willman describes the new facilities, which will be used by over 1200 employers seeking qualified graduates, as "being among the finest in the nation."

A cost estimate of the renovation was not available.

the Frantic One

"Hey, Garolfo! I read that crap you wrote the other day. Geez, what gar-BAGE. Who are you trying to communicate with, mongoloid paraplegics?"

"Hey," Garolfo said, "why don't you go take a flying..."

"Too bad you can't come up with anything original. Guess the old Frantic One's just too much for you. I should do an expose on the incredible limits to your mind. When can I start?"

Garfalo just kept on walking.

The Frantic One really dug on those conversations. He enjoyed the feeling of superiority and adroitness that revolved from them. He liked to think of them as enrichment for the soul.

After lunch he went to his room for a nap. Opening the door, a moment of admiration was given to the stark, empty character of the place. He relished telling visitors it was his "little pits." He felt that it prepared him; stripped him down, made him empty and unburdened for the fight.

He lay on the unmade bed and considered trying to have the same dream.

It was one of his pasttimes, recapturing old dreams. Sometimes, rarely though, he could swear that he had picked a dream up exactly where he left it.

This afternoon was not one of those times.

He considered some other dreams, lost or forgotten, but none of them seemed worth troubling with right now.

And they were trouble. Every time he fixed his sights on one, it would scamper off like fearful does in the forest.

"Jesus," I hate that," he thought. Roliing over, he gained a more comfortable position; sleep began to flow around him, swimming toward the bait he offered.

ND Accountants score very high on CPA exam

Professor Ray M. Powell, Chairman of the Department of Accountancy, announced last week that over 30 per cent of 42 Notre Dame undergraduate majors have passed all four parts of the uniform CPA exam. Nationally, only 6 per cent complete it on the first try.

Of 30,000 taking the test, Notre Dame undergrads received 2 of only 60 Honorable Mention Papers. Rick Keenan received the Indiana Gold Medal, and John Bava the Silver.

While most of the students went with major National Public Accounting Firms, others were accepted at Chicago, Yale, Texas, and Harvard law schools. Some will do graduate business study at the Harvard Business School

In all, 17 passed the entire test, 12 passed three parts, and 8 completed two.

Less graduate study

Career interest shown

by Bill Brink
Senior Night Editor

Notre Dame graduates continue to be career-oriented and less inclined to enter graduate school according to a survey of the class of '74 conducted last May.

Results of the survey show a decrease for the third straight year in the percentage of undergraduates going on to graduate school. 45 per cent of those polled this year expressed intent to enroll in graduate school, compared to 47 percent in 1973 and fifty per cent in 1972.

Despite the decline in overall interest in graduate training, interest in professional areas of study has been rising. The number of Notre Dame graduates applying to law, medical, and business graduate schools increased this year.

Dean Malone, director of the graduate division of business administration, said that though interest in professional graduate work has increased, the desire for graduate training in the disciplinary areas has decreased. The net result is an overall decrease in the number of undergraduates enrolling in graduate school.

Malone pointed out that continued work in non-professional fields usually leads towards a teaching career. "But," he added, "because of the oversupply of teachers today, the historic and traditional graduate areas leading to scholarly careers are decreasing in percentage of students. Many schools today have less student enrollment, so they need less teachers."

The survey also revealed that of those students entering a career directly after graduation, two-thirds had accepted job offers by May 1st. Malone saw this trend as a concern for their economic future. He said students were "taking the opportunity while they've got it. Opportunity is the key. The students are interested in an early career with economic opportunity hooked into it."

Malone added that many graduates enter careers and attend part-time law or part-time business school at night. "These people are not reflected in the survey's figure," he said.

Though the survey covered only Notre Dame students, Malone felt that the decrease in graduate school enrollment was a national trend.

Dean Thompson, of the College of Arts and Letters, also cited the reduced demand for college teachers as the major cause of the decline in graduate enrollment.

"It's simply a matter of economics. There's not a lack of interest, the students are concerned about humanities. But it's just a dead end as far as a career is concerned. Or at least they think so."

Thompson said that those students pursuing careers immediately after graduation are just trying to get a handle on a job and take the opportunity. "It's really the norm, nationally, for a student to have four years of education and then go off into the job market. An M.A. or Ph. D. has never been the normal goal of students."

He agrees with Malone that the trend towards decreased graduate enrollment is not limited to Notre Dame, but is a nationwide one.

Vincent Raymond, associate dean of business administration, agreed that the reduced job market for teachers is important, but also stressed financial consideration as a major reason for the decline in graduate enrollment.

"It has a lot to do with the students ability to support themselves through graduate school. I think a lot would do it if they thought a job was waiting at the end, but many can't support themselves and don't want to burden their parents with graduate expenses," Raymond said.

He also pointed out the student's desire to make money and become economically independent. "They are concerned about making that bread when they leave so they are grabbing the job they can get."

Drew Mahalic - a switch to hitter

If striving for the good of the team is the mark of an unselfish football player, the Drew Mahalic personifies unselfishness.

A high school All-American and Michigan Player of the Year as a quarterback in high school, Mahalic came to Notre Dame with an open mind.

In a meeting with Coach Parseghian during my freshman year," says Mahalic, "he told me I'd be given a shot at quarterback. But, he asked me if I would be willing to switch to linebacker (where Mahalic also played in high school) if it didn't work out.

"It only took one look at Tom Clements in practice and I knew it would be in my own and the team's best interest if I made the switch to defense."

Now known as an intense hitter, Mahalic says the switch "wasn't as difficult as I first expected. I knew I could cover passing situations, being an old quarterback, but learning how to come up and meet a big tackle or guard head-on was a problem. I needed a lot of work on technique.

"Reckless abandon is what Coach Kelly says I needed," remembers Mahalic of his early days as an Irish linebacker. "It was the one thing I needed to work on in order to excel as a linebacker. I didn't have it naturally, but have tried to develop it."

Now in his third year as a vital cog in the Irish defense, Mahalic still isn't sure he has acquired that needed "abandon." "But Coach Kelly hasn't used the term with me nearly as much since my sophomore season," adds Mahalic.

Credited with 136 tackles during his first two years behind the front four, Mahalic ignores individual efforts and credits the "coaching staff and the overall Notre Dame concept" with any success the Irish have achieved recently. "Coach Parseghian is so organized," says Mahalic, "that we enter each game confident we won't be outcoached. We know if we do what the game plan calls for - if we implement - we'll win.

"That simple word pride is what we need this year. We have to avoid complacency in order to accomplish what we want this year. Winning the national championship was naturally the high point of my time here, but I strive for the present. I've always felt that if a guy plays as well as he can at the present, the future will take care of itself. We have to totally commit for 60 minutes each week--then our goals will be accomplished."

Regardless of the outcome of the current season, Mahalic says he is totally content in his choice of attending Notre Dame. "I knew I wanted to go to Notre Dame when I was little and living in New Jersey," remembers Mahalic. "Many people there have more or less adopted Notre Dame as 'their' school I was one of them.

"I was so sure I wanted to come to Notre Dame that I didn't even realize the excellent educational opportunities available here until after I'd arrived. As it turned out, I'm fortunate that Notre Dame has so much to offer other than football."

Mahalic, who feels he has matured both physically and mentally since arriving on campus, finds a remark by Howard Cosell the closest thing to a personal motto he tries to live by.

The comment by Cosell, made in reference to the Miami Dolphins was "Any team can achieve excellence. The mark of a true champion is to achieve consistency of excellence."

"Perhaps one can't actually achieve perfection," reflects Mahalic, "but that goal is what keeps me going--it gives me something to strive for."

Drew Mahalic, quarterback turned linebacker displays his reckless abandon staving off a Georgia Tech blocker in Monday night's ball-game.

The Irish Eye

Questions and answers

Monday night's opener against Georgia Tech began as much more than just the first game of the season. It was a test, a comprehensive test designed by Ara Parseghian and his coaching staff to determine just how well the 1974 Irish had recuperated and redeveloped during the fall preseason.

There were a lot of questions, and as in most exams, some were answered and some were not. But as the results were pieced together, one would have to say the Irish scored in the high nineties.

"I'm immensely pleased with our performance," noted Ara. "I think we're going to be a good football team."

The test featured five distinct questions. How much damage had been done by preseason injuries and suspensions? Was the loss of speed significant? Was Steve Niehaus suited for a defensive end position? How would a green secondary react under fire? How good was the kicking game?

The Irish answered these questions as if they had a month to prepare, which coincidentally they did. The only problem that remained somewhat unsolved was the situation of the defensive backfield.

"The secondary lacks some speed," judged Parseghian. "But it's hard to evaluate after one game's performance. Georgia Tech didn't pass that much. Next week when we play Northwestern we'll face an excellent passer in Mitch Anderson. Right now inexperience is the big problem, and we'll see how they react to the pass, but there's no question they can play ground defense."

Sophomore strong safety John Dubenetzky proved this. Dubenetzky was in on no less than ten tackles including the time he dropped Tech quarterback Dave Myers for a three yard loss on fourth down from the ND one.

If there was any question about the speed of Steve Niehaus at defensive end Georgia Tech's speedy split end Jimmy Robinson can answer it. Niehaus outran the shifty Robinson as the latter attempted an end around and dropped him for a 17 yard loss.

"Steve was a little hesitant about playing outside at first," explained Defensive Line Coach Joe Yonto, "like a boxer who's sparring for the first time. Once he became comfortable with the situation he did a remarkable job. We watched the films this morning and Steve was in on at least fifteen tackles. And as far as his speed is concerned they don't come any faster than Robinson and Steve tracked him down without too much trouble."

"Niehaus did a damn good job," added Parseghian, "he played his position well."

Two other people who played their positions well were punter Tony Brantley and freshman placekicker Dave Reeve. Reeve had a 22 yard field goal and four PAT's while Brantley averaged 40.3 yards on three punts, and more importantly did not allow a runback. "I was very pleased with our kicking game," allowed Ara, "especially on punts and kickoffs. Reeve and Brantley performed very consistently for us.

But the big question concerned the preseason losses and the absence of speed in the lineup.

"The loss of speed is significant," explained Parseghian. "It's apparent that we don't have a Eric Penick, a Bradley, or an Al Hunter, and now with Art Best gone we've lost all our speed. This game was a test to see just exactly how much damage had been done. We evaluated our assets and that evaluation has proven correct. We have lost some speed, but then again we have a Tom Clements, a Wayne Bullock, and a Pete Demmerle to build things around. And that's a damn fine nucleus."

It proved to be much more than just a nucleus last Monday night. Clements, Bullock, Demmerle, and company aced that test.
