Beirut blast kills Lebanese official

Beirut, Lebanon (AP) - President-elect Bashir Gemayel was killed Tuesday in a bomb blast that shattered his Christian Phalange Party headquarters in east Beirut.

Earlier reports had said Gemayel survived, while eight of his party members perished and at least 50 others were wounded.

The sources said Gemayel's body was found in the rubble of the building on Saissine Square a few hours after the explosion at 4 p.m. (10 a.m. EDT). It occurred as the 34-year-old president-elect prepared to address a rally of 400 of his followers.

The Phalange Party's radio station had reported earlier that Gemayel survived unscathed and walked away from the rubble. It said cheers went up from a crowd in the Christian neighborhood, church bells rang and Phalangist militiamen fired their guns to celebrate the report that Gemayel had survived. It even attributed a quote to the president-elect, reporting he said, "I'm safe. Thank God this incident is past."

The radio station went off the air several hours later as reports raced through the war-ravaged city that the president-elect was dead.

Lebanon's state radio made no announcement, but a few minutes after 11 p.m. (5 p.m. EDT) it began playing solemn, classical music.

His death appeared certain to bring a new wave of bloody fighting between Lebanon's right-wing Christians and Moslem leftists. It also threatened the delicate links Israel had created with the Lebanese Christian militias following the 1975-76 civil war between the Christians and an alliance of Moslems and Palestinian guerrillas.

No group asserted responsibility for the bombing. Munitions experts an estimated 400 tons of explosives were used for the device.

Israel invaded Lebanon June 6, forcing the Paletine Liberation Organization guerrillas to be evacuated from their strong hold in Moslem west Beirut, and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin had been pressing Gemayel to formally recognize the Jewish state.

Gemayel was elected president on Aug. 23 by Parliament in a special session that was boycotted by a number of Moslem legislators. He was to take office Sept. 23.

He had survived two other attempts on his life in the bloody conflicts here that pitted not only the Moslems against the Christians but also involved fights between different Christian factions.

The explosion ripped down a third of the building that housed the neighborhood Phalange Party headquarters in the Ashafieh district of Christian east Beirut. Witnesses at the scene had claimed they saw Gemayel walking away from the rubble.

According to the sources who reported Gemayel's death, President Elias Sarkis informed Premier Shafik Wazzan of the death. Lebanon's population is about equally divided between Christians and Moslems, and by tradition the president is a Christian and the premier a Moslem.

Scheduling causes crowded lines

By MICHOLE MADDEN
News Staff

Inefficient class scheduling is apparently the cause of overcrowded lunch lines this year, but the new food service director refuses to sacrifice quality to alleviate the problem.

Since the number of meal plans has increased by only 126 from last year, the problem seems to stem from the administration's scheduling of classes at the noon hour.

Some of the proposals for decreasing the waiting time have included assigned dining halls, closing North Dining Hall's deli lines or preparing food that can be more rapidly served. The director of the Notre Dame Food Service, Bill Hickey, however, refuses to compromise food quality or student convenience to reduce the wait.

Having directed Food Service programs in four other major universities, Hickey is enthusiastic about his first year with Notre Dame's Food Service. He has already made many improvements in food quality, variety, staff spirit and communication with the students.

"Food Service is a vehicle to bring the student community together," Hickey said. He has many ideas for the upcoming year including Saturday night candlelight dinners, special holiday extravaganzas, picnics, and the "Lettuce serve you" logan designed to strike up enthusiasm within the staff. He genuinely feels that Food Service should be targeted at and should work with the needs and concerns of the students.

Much of the congestion at lunch could be avoided if students would try to eat lunch before 12:15 and after 1:00. They should be aware that there are genuine efforts being made to improve the atmosphere, food, and serving line problems if they are willing to cooperate.

Their suggestions, complaints, and compliments are welcomed and encouraged, because student attitudes can make all the difference.

Students to open flower shop

By JERRY WHOOLEY
News Staff

A new florist will open its doors to the Notre Dame community tomorrow at 12:30 in the LaFortune basement adjoining the Nazz.

The flower shop is a direct response to a campus facilities questionnaire distributed by the Office of Student Activities. The questionnaire cited LaFortune as the most under-utilized facility on campus.

Students have complained that the Student Center does not supply enough services and this innovation is one example of the expansion of the facility, according to Jim McDonnell, director of Student Activities.

A student study group recently attended conferences at universities across the nation and found Notre Dame lacking in several areas of student service. McDonnell initiated the idea of a student flower shop and brought it to Student Union Director, Steve Strake, for consideration.

Strake approved the idea and contacted Marianne Meyers, Hillary Clement, and Kelly Bernard concerning the proposal. Clement and Bernard achieved notoriety for their private flower service HK Enterprises which operated here last semester. They accepted the proposal and will act, along with Meyers, as co-managers.

Several private merchants had recently approached Notre Dame and requested permission to open up a flower shop. Father John Van Wolvlear, vice president of Student Affairs, felt that it would be more advantageous for this to be a student-run business and, therefore, denied the request. He, together with Vice President of Business Affairs, Thomas Mason, approved McDonnell's idea and gave the go-ahead.

The shop will be strictly student operated and Meyers, a finance and accounting major, will handle the necessary bookkeeping. The managers maintain that the plant quality promises to be excellent, while the prices will be the lowest in the area. The shop will be supplied by several South Bend wholesalers making the low prices a reality.

The Student Union invested the initial capital to finance the shop's opening. Costs included remodeling of the room, a floral display case, plant inventory, utilities, and other necessities. Once the shop establishes itself, the Student Union will share in the profits and use them to further improve student services.

The shop boasts an extensive inventory including corsages, cut flowers, floral arrangements, and potted plants. They will deliver and special orders can be made two days in advance. A special box will be provided for late night orders and the management is currently looking into the possibility of a teleflorist service. They are also open to suggestions from students.

The flower shop will be sponsoring a mum sale Saturday in conjunction with the home football opener against Michigan. They hope to begin the tradition of selling mums at various home sporting events. The shop will also provide the Welcome Back daises and

AFROTC celebrates 35th year

The Notre Dame ROTC program provides many benefits for everyone involved, according to United States Air Force Colonel John D. Miles.

Speaking yesterday at a luncheon celebrating the thirty-fifth anniversary of the Air Force ROTC program on the Notre Dame campus, Miles also pointed out that the ROTC program is the "largest single source for newly commissioned officers in the armed forces."

The affair, which was attended by local educators from Notre Dame, Saint Mary's, Bethel College, and the University of Indiana at South Bend, also served as a chance to provide area college-level authorities with an understanding of the advantages of having an ROTC program.

Miles cited that over eighty-three percent of the enrolled ROTC members at Notre Dame are receiving scholarships. This statistic, according to Miles is "the highest of any university in the country." Miles also added that "one out of every ten students on campus is enrolled in our programs."

"Notre Dame ROTC is the largest source of scholarship money available to students here" said Miles in his presentation, "and in 1982 we provided our members with over three and a quarter million dollars in scholarship funds."

Miles also alluded to the major drawback of the ROTC program; the possibility of "academic overload." In defense of this charge, Miles was quick to mention that "our students have certainly demonstrated the ability to cope with this problem."

Noting that the ROTC at Notre Dame is extremely competitive, Miles stressed the importance of a good academic record backed by participation in extracurricular activities in order to gain admittance into the program. Other important qualifications include passing a medical examination, and a personal interview.

"We are looking for a well-rounded, active student who exhibits the potential to be a leader," said Miles. Miles also asserted that his trainees are "very much involved in campus life as well."

Other benefits of the ROTC program include several field days, social dances and ROTC sponsored athletic teams. ROTC members also have the opportunity to teach courses and participate actively in community work, especially at Logan Center.

Miles sees the Notre Dame ROTC as an outstanding program which consists of many "super young adults who are well-prepared for life beyond college."

"The Judeo-Christian Vision and the Modern Corporation," edited by Rev. Oliver F. Williams, C.S.C., adjunct associate professor of management, and John W. Houck, professor of management at the University of Notre Dame, was published recently by Notre Dame Press. A collection of twelve essays by economists, theologians, philosophers, corporate executives and business scholars, the book issued from a conference convened at Notre Dame by Houck and Williams in April, 1980. From diverse areas of study and commitment, the essayists examine the possibility of harmonizing traditional religious claims with modern corporate procedures. Among the Notre Dame essayists are Denis Goulet, William and Dorothy O'Neill, professors of education for justice; Kenneth P. Jaeson, associate professor of economics; William P. More business leaders took their undergraduate degrees at the University of Notre Dame than at any other American Catholic college or university, according to a survey done by Standard & Poor's Corporation. The fourth study of the educational backgrounds of more than 50,000 top executives and directors included about 500 institutions of higher learning in the United States. With 553 business leaders holding Notre Dame undergraduate degrees, Notre Dame was first among Catholic colleges and universities. Fordham University was second with 312. Notre Dame was 11th among the nation's private universities, where Ivy League schools dominated the top positions. When compared with all colleges and universities, Notre Dame's production of business leaders from baccalaureate alumni was 23rd. Yale University, with 1,697 executives and directors, was first in undergraduate degrees, and Harvard University, with 1,366, was second. — The Observer

President Reagan says Purdue University's fund-raising group, the President's Council, is "the best in the American spirit of commitment and voluntarism." In a congratulatory message to the council on Tuesday, Reagan said the council has involved business and professional leaders to help pay for Purdue's graduate studies and research programs. Reagan praised the group for its rapid growth to more than 1,300 members and for its contributions to Purdue. Council members have given the university $35.7 million, $7.7 million during the last fiscal year, university officials said. The President's Council was founded in 1972, early in the presidency of Arthur G. Hansen, who wanted it to serve as the backbone of a new effort to raise funds from private sources. — AP

Well-known author John Gardner was killed in a motorcycle accident, State University of New York at Binghamton officials confirmed yesterday. He was 48. The accident occurred in Oakland Township in Susquehanna County, Pa., approximately two miles away from Gardner's Pennsylvania home, officials said. Highlights and Lowlights

Saturday's nighttime football game against Michigan is being heralded coast to coast as an event of immense significance. Thousands of inches of newspaper space have been devoted to the fact that the team is going to play the same game under artificial light that they've been playing since the turn of the century under sunlight.

The game is one of the hottest topics of the year on campus. Yet conversation tends to focus on the lights, the stars — or the tailgaters — rather than the game itself. The name of Notre Dame and the word "football" are intertwined to the point where the two are nearly synonymous. But is this obsession with "a game" warranted?

Financially speaking, the appeal of football cannot be denied. Football is big business at Notre Dame and certainly the profiteering prospects are endless. The bookstore alone probably does enough business in one football weekend to finance the landscaping repairs made necessary by a slew of tramping alumni all season long. And what better organized donation drive than a weekend directed toward the loyal alum making his annual pilgrimage to see the ol' team "win one for the Gipper?"

Likewise, the new Senior Bar is "expected to make twice the profit as the former one did," according to Dean of Students James Roemer in a Sept. 1 Observer article. Senior Bar is also expected to uphold the tradition of being a pre-game must for all of Saturday's fans past the age of 21. This is in addition to the keggers and tailgaters taking place all over Green Field.

It is a sad comment on our society that alcohol is such an integral part of our recreation.

The danger involved in alcohol abuse is particularly serious for Saturday's game against Michigan. Starting the game at 8 p.m. means more than seven additional hours of drinking beforehand. All-day pre-game festivities combined with late night driving conditions after the game make the potential for disaster on Saturday very real.

But the problems of college football are not limited to the fans in the stands. The term "collegiate sports" these days, particularly regarding football, is in many respects a joke. The amateur-in-name-only status of most college teams contradicts everything the teams were meant to stand for.

Stories abound concerning rule violations ranging from the practice of players being given cars and condominiums to being paid for non-existent jobs on campus. The University of Southern California is presently on probation because an assistant coach was found selling the free tickets the players are given. Arizona State and Oregon are also on probation. And these are only the teams that were found to be at fault.

What this boils down to is that players are being paid in the manner of professional athletes for what is supposed to be a contest of amateurs.

At its essence, football is a war game. The teams are armies, using a ball as an excuse to annihilate each other. Certainly no one can say we send the team out on that field each week in the name of camaraderie. Football has gone beyond merely competition; those players are out there for blood. It is fast reaching the point where an injury or maiming on the field is the only sure sign of an "exciting" game.

Notre Dame, as one of the nation's most respected colleges, and an avowed Catholic institution, should examine more closely this "game" which has become a cornerstone of her reputation. College is supposed to acquaint us with the higher aspects of life, not the base.

This Saturday night at the Michigan game, between attending tailgaters and buying countless Irish football memorabilia, we should take a closer look at what has become the Notre Dame football tradition. Perhaps some light will be shed on something more than the field.

I'm not saying money, alcohol, and athletic prestige are the only motivations behind football at Notre Dame. Certainly they weren't in the University's earlier days. But we should re-examine the emphasis that football has taken at Notre Dame. Perhaps it began with the best of intentions, but somewhere along the line our priorities became confused. And it seems no one is noticing.

Notre Dame has a well-deserved reputation comparable to any other university in the country. Allowing that reputation to rest on the success or failure of a football team is ridiculous. Notre Dame should stand on its own merit. When you are part of a great institution, you don't have to win a football game to prove it.

Princess Grace dies from accident injuries

Monte-carlo, Monaco (AP) — Princess Grace, who gave up her career as Oscar-winning film star Grace Kelly for a storybook marriage to Prince Rainier of Monaco, died Tuesday night of injuries suffered in an auto accident. She was 52.

The official Monaco government press service announced in a statement from the palace that Princess Grace died of "an intra-cerebral vascular hemorrhage."

On Monday, it had been announced that she had suffered a broken leg, ribs and shoulder when her car crashed off a twisting mountain road coming down from the French town of La Turbie. Her younger daughter, Princess Stephanie, was also in the car, which plunged 120 feet off the road, but Stephanie escaped with minor injuries.

The official statement said that Princess Grace's health "deteriorated during the night" and on Tuesday.

"At the end of the day all therapeutic possibilities had been exceeded, and her Serene Highness The Princess Grace died," it concluded.

Princess Grace, daughter of a Philadelphia bricklayer-turned-millionaire, made just 11 movies before she gave up her acting career in 1956 to marry Monaco's Prince Rainier and move to the small seaside principality wedged between the French and Italian Rivas.

She won an Academy Award as best actress in 1955 for "The Country Girl" in which she starred with Bing Crosby.

She was also a favorite of director Alfred Hitchcock, who preferred statuesque blondes for his movies. She appeared in three of his films — "to Catch a Thief" with Cary Grant, "Dial M for Murder," with Robert Cummings and "Rear Window," with James Stewart.

She met Rainier at the Cannes film festival in 1955, and the romance flowered when he spent Christmas Day at the home of her parents.

The couple had two daughters, Princesses Caroline and Stephanie, and one son, Crown Prince Albert. Princess Caroline was married briefly to Frenchman Philippe Junot, but they divorced in 1980 and had no children.

Grace Patricia Kelly was born Nov. 12, 1929, in Philadelphia. Her father, the son of an Irish immigrant, had gained fame as an Olympic oarsman and began a successful career as a building contractor working in as a bricklayer.

After graduating from the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, Grace Kelly made her professional acting debut in a revival of her Pulitzer Prize-winning uncle George Kelly's "The Torch Bearers." A few months later, she made her Broadway debut as the captain's daughter in "The Father," which ran for several months.

As a young actress in New York, she appeared in such TV dramas as "Kraft Television Theater" and "The Philco Television Playhouse," both NBC. "Studio One" on CBS and "The Somerset Maugham Theater" on ABC.

She made her movie debut in 1951, appearing in a small role in "Fourteen Hours," a film shot in New York.

Arafat meeting seen as Vatican switch

JERUSALEM (AP) — A senior Israeli official said Tuesday that by meeting PLO leader Yasser Arafat, Pope John Paul II will be breaking the Vatican's tradition of neutrality and shifting to the side of the Palestinians.

Plans for Arafat's papal audience, scheduled for Wednesday, brought an emotionally charged reaction from Prime Minister Menachem Begin, who compared the PLO's actions in Lebanon to Nazi treatment of Europe's Jews in World War II.

Israel believes the papal audience gives political legitimacy to the Palestine Liberation Organization at a time when the PLO's power is in decline after its crushing defeat by Israeli invasion troops in Lebanon.

The senior official, who asked not to be identified, said he saw the meeting as a change from the Vatican position of neutrality to support for the Palestinians. "Even if the pope only shakes hands with Arafat, it would be considered with utmost gravity by Israel," said the official.

The Vatican says the pope's meeting with Arafat has no political significance and that its concern for the Palestinians is humanitarian, not political.

But the Israeli official said the Vatican was guarding its relations with the Arab world to protect Catholics who live under Arab regimes. He said the church was thus "giving in to political blackmail."

Voter registration today

Student Government has announced a voter registration drive to be held today and tomorrow, September 15 and 16. Members of the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's community may register between the hours of 10 and 3, in the LaFortune Student Center. Individuals wishing to register are requested to bring a student identification card or a valid driver's license.

Persons registering at this drive will be qualified to vote in St. Joseph's County and State of Indiana elections. Tucker stated that "Students wishing to vote by absentee ballot in their home district should contact their local election board." He stressed urgency in doing so, as the deadlines for registering and requesting absentee ballots vary from state to state.

Soviets involved

Pope targeted for Polish ties

New York (AP) - NBC news reported yesterday that it had uncovered evidence suggesting that Pope John Paul II was targeted for assassination with the knowledge and perhaps the assistance of Soviet and Bulgarian intelligence agencies.

NBC said the pope was targeted because of his connection to the Solidarity labor movement in Poland. NBC also disclosed that the Pope sent a handwritten letter to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev in 1980 in which he threatened to "lay down the cross of St. Peter" and lead the resistance by his Polish countrymen if Soviet troops moved in.

The letter, delivered by a Vatican envoy, sparked a secret shuttle mission between Moscow, Rome and Warsaw that led eventually to a temporary easing of the Soviet-Polish attitude toward Solidarity, NBC said.

The NBC report came after a nine-month investigation by correspondent Marvin Kalb and reporter Bill McLaughlin. The network released details of the investigation today in advance of the airing of a documentary, "The Man Who Shot the Pope — a study in Terrorism." It will be broadcast Sept. 21.

NBC traces what it calls an unbroken line from Mehmet Ali Agca, the Turkish gunman convicted for the May 1981 shooting of the Pope organized crime elements in Turkey, the Bulgarian secret service and the Soviet KGB.

NBC said bank records show that Agca deposited $10,000 two months before the assassination of Turkish newspaper editor Abdi Ipecki. Agca was convicted of the murder, but later escaped from a maximum security prison in Turkey. In addition, Agca had large sums of money deposited for him in Turkish banks while he was a student at Istanbul University.

NBC says that Agca appears to have been backed financially at every step of the way by organized crime in Turkey and that the Bulgarian secret service has strong ties to the Turkish syndicate.

NBC quotes Vladimir Sakharov, a former KGB agent who defected, as saying that information held by the Bulgarians would also be known by the KGB.

12 primaries

Voters decide on Reaganomics

Voters in a dozen states and the District of Columbia settled primary elections Tuesday, with Reaganomics and the merits — or demerits — of incumbents among the issues that marked the season's biggest crop of nominating contests.

Senior senators from Vermont and Nevada — Robert T. Stafford and Howard Cannon — had opponents who argued that years in office had made them forget the problems back home. Clent Zablocki, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, faced a similar challenge.

In a conservative-liberal confrontation, Democratic Gov. Edward J. King of Massachusetts locked horns with Michael Dukakis, the man he ousted from the statehouse four years ago.

Dukakis taunted King as "a cheerleader for Reaganomics," and said the King campaign was pocked by corruption. King emphasized a law-and-order stance, and called Dukakis a big spending liberal who raised state taxes and would again.

President Reagan's economic policies were a debating point in assorted primary contests, including several that involved candidates for Congress and governor who looked past token opposition to the campaign for the Nov. 2 general elections.

Wisconsin became the first of nine states to ballot on a nuclear freeze proposition, deciding by referendum whether to urge that the United States seek to negotiate a verifiable "nuclear weapons moratorium and reduction" with the Soviet Union. The Reagan administration opposes an immediate freeze, but the State Department said the Wisconsin wording was ambiguous and might not be contrary to Reagan's insistence that weapons reductions should come first.

Ten states settled contests or ratified unopposed candidates for governor, 10 more for senator. Among them, the primary states had 61 House seats, and new members of Congress will be chosen this year in six of those districts, two because of retirements, four because of reapportionment.

Mayor Marion Barry Jr. was up for Democratic renomination in the District of Columbia against former Cabinet secretary Patricia Roberts Harris and two city council members. The victor is virtually guaranteed election.

Wisconsin approves anti-nuclear vote

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Wisconsin voters gave overwhelmingly approval yesterday to the nation's first statewide referendum on a nuclear weapons freeze, approving the measure by a 3-to-1 margin.

With 382 of 3,625 precincts reporting, the vote was 58,861 or 76 percent to 18,640 or 24 percent.

The Reagan administration refused to take a stand on the referendum on the ground that its wording is ambiguous.

Supporters had predicted approval of the measure, which is non-binding, despite a drafting error on the referendum ballot. And they had said that approval would send a message to Washington to begin immediate negotiations on the halting of nuclear weapons proliferation.

A mistake in the wording of the question, the omission of "weapons" from the referendum as sent to county clerks by the state Elections Board, created some confusion. But the publicity focusing on the error was expected to increase rather than diminish voter interest on the issue.

Residents of Brattleboro, Vt., voted overwhelmingly yesterday for a nuclear weapons freeze proposal. With 2 of 4 precincts reporting the vote was 526 yes, 65 no.

A similar proposal was approved overwhelmingly Saturday by voters in Austin, Texas. In a straw vote in conjunction with a school bond referendum, the freeze was endorsed by more than 4 to 1.

Deadline draws near for UAW, Chrysler

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — A midnight strike deadline hung over negotiations between Chrysler Corp. and the United Auto Workers as bargainners sought agreement yesterday on a new contract for 83,200 autoworkers.

Meanwhile, negotiators for the UAW and General Motors of Canada Ltd. reached a tentative agreement on a new contract about 12 hours before the current pact for some 33,000 workers expired at midnight.

Contract talks were continuing yesterday between the UAW and General Dynamics Corp. of St. Louis, the nation's largest defense contractor. A contract covering 5,200 former Chrysler Defense subsidiary employees also expires at midnight.

In the Chrysler talks, bargaining began early in the day. "We're going to try to piece this thing together," Thomas Miner, Chrysler vice president of industrial relations, told reporters as he walked into the building where talks were being held.

UAW president Douglas A. Fraser has warned that Chrysler's 43,200 working U.S. autoworkers would strike at 12:01 a.m. this morning if there were no new agreement, unless the two sides were so close that the current pact could be extended for "a couple of hours, a couple of days."

Another 40,000 Chrysler autoworkers are on indefinite layoff. They too are covered by the contract and vote on any agreement.

Economic policy

Middle-road taken by Democrats

Washington —(AP)— House Democrats are preparing a pre-election economic manifesto that looks past the nation's current woes and ignores past party calls for full employment. Instead, the thrust will be on long-term investments in economic growth and a call to rebuild the country's transportation and water systems, according to Democratic sources.

The report, which the House Democratic Caucus plans to release this weekend, stakes out a middle political ground on which party liberals and conservatives alike can stand for the November congressional elections, said the sources, who insisted that their names not be used.

"This is a consensus document that is much more centrist oriented rather than self-consciously liberal," said one. After two years of Reaganomics, he said, the report reflects a shift in economic policy debate toward more conservative approaches.

"The hope is this will be the hymn which all Democrats will sing," he said.

Democrats supporting the policy statement range from liberal Charles B. Rangel of New York to Charles W. Stenholm of Texas, head of the conservative Boll Weevil coalition.

Although unemployment is at its highest levels since World War II, sources involved in drafting the statement said it offers no short-term, job-creating programs and makes no reference to the full-employment goals of the Democratic-sponsored Humphrey-Hawkins Act of 1978.

The report also deplores budget deficits, sources said.

"This proposes a long-term economic policy. There are no quick fixes," said a source, adding that traditional Democratic calls for "pump-priming" economic stimulus programs "are largely absent."

"Will this provide instant relief (from the recession)? I'd have to say, 'No,'" said the source.

He said the report does propose a public jobs program but only indirectly, as part of a broader plan for rebuilding the nation's crumbling "public infrastructure" — such as highways, bridges and water systems.

"This is our public works program, but we didn't want to call it that," said the source, noting Democratic sensitivity about being portrayed as big spenders on pork-barrel projects. "We didn't want the White House to be able to hit one out of the park."

By some estimates, it will cost the nation $1 trillion over the next 10 years to rebuild its infrastructure.

Sources said the key word in the manifesto is "investment." It refers to the need to create conditions for economic opportunity in the future through public and private investments to encourage development of new, high-technology industries and revitalize older basic industries.

The principal authors of the report were Rep. Gillis W. Long, chairman of the House Democratic Caucus; Rep. Timothy E. Wirth of Colorado and Rep. Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri.

Three months?

Reagan wrong on abortion issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan claimed Tuesday that babies have been born after only three months of pregnancy "and have lived, the record shows, to grow up and be normal."

An official spokesman later acknowledged that Reagan had mis-spoken, saying the President actually had in mind a single case in which a 4-month-old fetus had survived. "He knew," said the spokesman, "But he said three instead of 4."

But the purported source of the President's information about the 4-month-old fetus told The Associated Press he had informed presidential aides of it only after questions arose about Reagan's original statement. Moreover, he said, it was he who told an inquiring presidential aide that the first statement was wrong.

Reagan's claim that 3-month-old fetuses had survived was made to a group of editors of religious journals yesterday afternoon. It ran contrary to a statement by the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology that there was no solid evidence that fetuses less than 6 months old can survive.

In a brief filed with the Supreme Court two weeks ago, the college maintained there was "no unambiguous documentation that an infant born weighing less than 601 grams at a gestational age of 24 weeks or less has ever survived."

Reagan volunteered the statement as he talked at the White House about anti-abortion legislation that is stalled in the Senate by a filibuster.

The President said he has been critical of so-called human life groups "because they have not rallied behind a single measure" in Congress, but are divided on what kind of legislation they want.

Congressional hearings, Reagan said, have shown that it is difficult, if not impossible, to determine when life begins.

Therefore, he added, "If you cannot determine when life begins then doesn't simple morality dictate that you opt for the fact that it's alive 'til someone can prove it dead?"

The President added, "I happen to believe the unborn child is a living human being. I think the fact that children have been prematurely born, even down to the three-month stage and have lived, the record shows, to grow up and be normal human beings, that ought to be enough for all of us."

Initially, Deputy White House press secretary Pete Roussel said he did not know where the President's information about surviving 3-month-old fetuses came from, and would check.

Nuclear presents and a future

For the majority of the world's population there has been, so far, only one consequence of the nuclear age: recurring nightmares. Perhaps we have all had dreams and nightmares of nuclear holocaust, or visions of nuclear accidents. Yet, to most of us, that is all that the horrors of nuclear energy shall ever be — possibilities and fictional scenarios.

Robert Lloyd Snyder

then mid-week

I remember a conversation from last year which occurred about the time of the declaration of martial law in Poland. We were discussing the avenues of action available to the United States in the way of sanctions, etc., when someone facetiously suggested that the United States should "nuke" Poland and then the problem would be solved. Another person (who had perhaps had a few too many beers) interjected that such action should not even be comically contemplated, as the Soviet Union was the only country on earth irresponsible enough to actually use atomic weapons.

Hiroshima. The sound of the word triggers mystical connotations even in the minds of many people who are unaware of its importance in international history. Hiroshima — perhaps the most significant event in the history of the United States, and possibly the one occurrence for which the United States will be long-remembered (and judged) after this generation, the United States, and the current world order are history. The United States of America, the only country in the world to be irresponsible enough to use atomic warfare against a civilian population.

It is difficult to come to a completely rational position, either "pro" or "con," where the issue of nuclear energy is concerned. A great many people separate the issue of "nuclear weaponry" from the issue of "nuclear energy." It is very difficult to find people who are actually in favor of nuclear weaponry, but it is very easy to find those who are in favor of nuclear energy.

I was formerly one of those who favored the benevolent use of nuclear energy. Indeed, I felt that nuclear energy was indeed as safe as the government has contended, that the issues of nuclear energy and nuclear weaponry could be separated, and that the contention that nuclear energy was the best energy option open to the world in the face of dwindling oil reserves.

This was the position I held before the fiasco of Three Mile Island. I believed that the disposal of nuclear waste could be safely handled before the revelation that the nuclear waste disposal site which is but ten miles from California contains dozens (and possibly hundreds) of barrels of nuclear waste which have cracked and are leaking lethal amounts of radiation into the Pacific.

I believed that the issues of nuclear energy and nuclear weaponry could be separated before President Reagan signed an executive order in 1981 which for the first time in U.S. history gave the go-ahead to the Defense department to reprocess the nuclear waste from our conventional nuclear reactors into high-grade plutonium for usage in nuclear warheads.

I had more confidence in the sanity of the world's international powers before Israel's bombing of an Iraqi reactor last year. I found myself differentiating between knowledgeable and intelligent works of nuclear-related literature (see Strobe Talbott's Endgame and William Buckley's column) where knowledge in nuclear matters only serves to further ignorant and biased personal opinions.

I can see no rationality in an arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union. The "zero-sum" thinking which dominates the nuclear policies of the United States is truly beyond my comprehension. Every year it seems that we spend billions of dollars on a system of defense that we shall probably never have to use, and that we would probably never have to use if the world's superpowers could achieve some type of across-the-board nuclear arms reduction, and put an end to the world's largest game of "chicken" and macho politics.

The entire scope of nuclear power seems filled with uncertain possibilities, deception and "Cold War" thinking. The world's biggest crap shoot is happening right before our very eyes, on our television screens and in our newspapers, in our halls of government and those of the Soviet Union and other world powers, in reality and our imaginations. The issue seems so far removed from our individual lives that we often dismiss such issues as the games that world powers play, until we realize that the stakes in the international nuclear "crap shoot" are our lives.

More bucks for bombs?

The United States will be spending more than $175 billion this fiscal year on weapons, soldiers, sailors, ships, airplanes and all the paperwork it takes to prepare to fight a war. In 1984, we'll be spending $247 billion. I don't know what a fiscal year is, let alone how much money $247 billion is. I know it's a lot, though, and so do other Americans.

Last week, many congressmen returned to Washington after a summer vacation and said there were people back home who didn't like the idea of all this increased spending on the military.

Andy Rooney

A Few Words

It's tough for any of us to figure out what we ought to be for or against when it comes to military spending. For one thing, we know so little about what's in the minds of our potential enemies. We don't even know whether they're enemies or not. We don't know for sure whether they're any more apt to drop a bomb first than our own generals are.

I often wrestle with the problem in my own mind and what follows are some random arguments I've presented myself with in relation to President Reagan's big military buildup:

"I want the United States to be the strongest nation on earth."

"Baloney! What's the difference? So maybe we're only second strongest or even fourth. We still have all the weapons we need."

"No one in his right mind is going to start a nuclear war."

"Yeah, but a lot of people who could start one aren't in their right minds."

"If we had only half as many nuclear weapons as we have now, we could still destroy all of Russia, and they could destroy us with what they have. Why does either country need more nuclear weapons?"

"Nuclear weapons are so terrible that no one will ever use one."

"You want to bet?"

"If any country drops a bomb, they'll be destroyed themselves."

"That's not going to stop a dictator in some small, depressed country that has nothing to lose from dropping one."

"Why do we need tanks if we have nuclear weapons?"

"Because there are going to be a lot of little wars in which no one quite dares drop the bomb."

"If Yasir Arafat had the bomb, do you think he would have dropped it on Israel a few weeks ago?"

"Israel has the bomb. Do you trust Menachem Begin with it?"

"We have 490,000 military personnel in foreign countries right now. That seems like a lot for peacetime. It seems like too many."

"We're spending $4 billion to train a small, highly efficient fighting force to fight little wars, free hostages and things like that. It seems like a good idea. Most of our big Army and Navy units aren't really much good, if you want to know the truth. Peacetime armies never are much good."

"The Falkland Islands war proved either that warships, aircraft carriers and submarines are no good at all or that they are the only things worth spending money on. I forget which that war proved. Whichever it is, we ought to abandon either the Army or the Navy."

"One good reason for the military buildup is that it provides a lot of jobs here in the United States."

"The worst reason in the world for making weapons is to provide jobs. Making weapons takes money from the rest of the economy, where we need it for practical things like bridges, roads, houses and refrigerators. Military equipment is good for nothing if you don't fight a war with it. All you can do is throw it away in a couple of years."

I guess I'm like the congressmen's constituents back home. I'm opposed to spending more money on the military. No one who spent four years in the Army as an enlisted man trusts the generals to decide how to spend 35 cents of every dollar we have. My opinion is that they aren't smart enough to handle that much money. Of course, I've always been an enlisted man, even as a civilian, and I don't trust bosses of any kind.

Ballyhoo for bicycle paths

Dear Editor

Notre Dame has one of the most beautiful college campuses in all the Midwest. It has been easily enjoyed by millions because of its "all pedestrian" nature. With cars restricted to specified areas in and around campus, the campus' beauty admirer is able to nonchalantly stroll the beautiful pathways. In addition to cars, though, should not bicycles be restricted to certain areas, too, because of the inconvenience they cause?

Undeniably, though, the ride of a bicycle through the campus is one of the most exhilarating experiences on the campus. Anyone who has enjoyed a ride through the freshly fallen leaves would never opt for bicycles to be banned from campus; however, could not the university pave black-topped bicycle paths through and around the campus to improve biker-pedestrian traffic flow?

To avoid such difficulties, the University should pave professional-looking bicycle paths which would be segregated from the now-existing people-paths. (How about a path around the lake?) If paved, they would enable pedestrians to more pleasurably stroll the campus, once they know the "perpetual bike look-out" would be greatly limited to bicycle paths and their resulting marked intersections, only. Also, not having to dodge, tail-gate, or run over slow-moving walkers would be a long-awaited convenience to the cyclist and walker alike. If the university is not able to pave the well-needed paths, though, could not the bikers move slower when either passing a fellow student, executing a turn onto another path, or cutting through a quad football game? Not only would countless students be thankful to the University and its cyclists, but also hundreds of squirrels who dangerously meander down the existing all-purpose paths.

The Chairs by Eugene Ionesco

features

Eugene Ionesco, one of the greatest playwrights of the twentieth century, captures the difficulty that people have in their interactions with others.

As the Old Man and Old Woman show, we settle for the customary, noninformative, "Hello, this is..." We then continue onto the next unfamiliar face and repeat the same dialectic sequence.

Each name the Old Man proffers to the other guests corresponds to a specific, distinctive person. The person that stands before him is unique with behaviors and mannerisms exclusive to that individual.

Ionesco purports to identify each guest by a name that has been given to that face. A closer reading of the script reveals Ionesco's description of the difficulty of such interactions in a point of distinct irony.

In the stage directions, he described the reality of this situation. He has given us faceless names by telling us that the guests are invisible.

After finishing The Chairs, I recalled some of the many occasions here at school when I have participated in massive first semester, "let's get to know people" introductions. The obvious four questions were always asked — "what is your name, what is your major, where do you live, where are you from..."

A few of the people that I met in those crowds have since become close friends. However, the greater part of them have become nameless faces, invisible except for the fact that I once met them and then dismissed them for one reason or another.

The irony of Ionesco's play hit home when I realized that I had doomed many people to an eternal state of invisibility by refusing to pursue their acquaintance. I have always considered myself to be open-minded. I have tried to maintain a standard of awareness to the uniqueness of the individual; so much so that I would never dismiss the experience of any individual for a trivial reason such as what their major is.

I discovered that I had been deceiving myself. I was reacting as prejudicially as those I had criticized for being close-minded.

Prejudices exist according to our personal likes and dislikes. When we encounter other people, those prejudices surface. At Notre Dame, the "four big questions" facilitate the process of discrimination.

My sophomore year abroad proved to be the heaviest piece of evidence against my claim to open-mindedness and for my prejudicial nature.

I managed to embed myself in the "invisibility scam" while on the Saint Mary's Rome Program. All of my Notre Dame woman prejudices told me that Saint Mary's women were to be avoided, so proverbially put, like the plague. Given that conditions warranted my living in close quarters with 45 of them for the entire academic year, avoidance was absurd; but ignorance and invisibility were not. To my chagrin and joy, I discovered that they were no different than Notre Dame women and in many instances, I found that I liked them better.

That kind of prejudicial attitude imposed unnecessary difficulties on my life. I can only hope that by trying to maintain a sense of openmindedness that I was able to see them for what they were and not for what I thought they were.

The beginning of this semester refocuses my attention on the memories of that semester in Rome and on my own first semester at Notre Dame.

The questions with their regimented responses bring me laughter and tears. I laugh amazed at the shallowness of the inquiries. I cry, grieving at the shallowness of the inquiries. The incidence of Arts and Letters majors mumbling to themselves, "Oh, well. An engineering major," is altogether too high.

What is lost by not seeing what is there is not nothing. I would hope that after reading Ionesco I would not fall victim to the "invisibility scam" again. He has challenged me to see people as faces with names that I won't forget.

Challenges are hard to meet but people aren't.

Mac's MIRAGE

Since Lindsey Buckingham and Stevie Nicks, an obscure Los Angeles duo with one ignored LP under their belts, joined Fleetwood Mac in 1975, the Mac has become one of the most popular bands in America. Also, in a medium where popular success and critical acclaim are almost mutually exclusive, their albums have done well on both counts. In the seven years since their emergence out of obscurity, they have displayed a mastery of the studio that no band since the Beatles has shown. This continues on Mirage, Fleetwood Mac's fifth album since Buckingham/Nicks joined up.

Beginning with 1975's Fleetwood Mac, the band has shown a flair for writing memorable pop songs and at the same time never regressing into blatant commercialism. 1977's Rumours became the first album in modern times to yield four top-ten singles, and also sold around 12-15 million copies (the largest-selling LP in Warner Brothers Records history; Fleetwood Mac is second, by the way).

The 1979 Tusk was a big risk. Very few established acts take chances once on top; Fleetwood Mac did so and succeeded admirably, putting out one of the three best two-disc sets in rock history. Yet it was too chancy for many buyers, and putting out the most radically different song on the LP (the title song) as the first single did not help much — the LP sold "only" four million. A year later, Fleetwood Mac Live showed that they sound good live and do not necessarily need million-dollar production costs backing them up.

Mirage seems to strike a happy balance between the adventurism of Tusk and the pure pop of Rumours. There are songs like Nicks' "Gypsy," the LP's second single, which has parallels to other Nicks classics like "Rhiannon," "Dreams," and "Sara" without sounding like a clone of them. Nicks' three tracks show that her songwriting priorities remain with Fleetwood Mac, since only "Edge of Seventeen" on her recent solo album is as good as any of them. Then there is Buckingham's "Eyes of the World," which is the closest Mirage gets to the more off-the-wall Tusk tracks like "The Ledge" and "That's Enough for Me": distorted guitars, twisted voices, Mick Fleetwood's primitive drumming.

If all one could do with an album is draw parallels to the past, then it might be OK, but not really excellent. As usual, the band does move in other directions. "Hold Me," a song Christine McVie wrote with Robbie Patton (a fairly obscure singer who has had a couple of medium-sized hits), is one of the few duets you'll ever hear Fleetwood Mac do. McVie and Buckingham team up on this, which was (deservedly) one of the big hits of the summer. It's hard to put my finger on exactly what makes this so good. Maybe it's the piano; maybe it's the blend of the voices; maybe it's the production of Buckingham and the usual Mac production team of Richard Dashut and Ken Caillat. Actually, it's not any one thing; it's the entire effect of everything put together that makes it a great song.

Other than the previously-mentioned "Eyes of the World," Buckingham's songs are not as far out as his Tusk offerings, but they offer many of the same qualities. A couple almost seem unfinished; they fade out just when they seem to be getting to the point. One thing you can never say about Lindsey Buckingham is that he is predictable. The best of Buckingham on Mirage is "Empire State." The lyrics are mildly interesting, but again it is the band's incredible sophistication in the studio that makes this more than an ordinary song. Again, only the Beatles have ever used the studio in quite the manner that Fleetwood Mac has and yet not become totally dominated by it.

As usual, this album was preceded by rumors of Fleetwood Mac's inevitable breakup. The rumors were even stronger this time because of last year's solo albums from Mick Fleetwood, Stevie Nicks and Lindsey Buckingham, and another in the can from Christine McVie. However, every time this has happened, Fleetwood Mac has come back sounding more together than ever. On Mirage, they have combined the best elements of Rumours and the best elements of Tusk and come up with an album truly deserving of the word "classic."

Trivia quiz 48

Life isn't easy. Neither are most of my trivia quizzes, as I showed you last week. I asked you to identify some famous (or not-so-famous) alter egos of well-known artists. Here are the answers:

1. Eivets Rednow — Stevie Wonder (now wasn't that one easy? He did an LP of harmonica instrumentals in 1968 under that name.)

rock trivia

2. The Blue Ridge Rangers — John Fogerty (former lead singer of Creedence Clearwater Revival; he had a hit with "Jambalaya" in 1973)

3. The Hawk — Jerry Lee Lewis (a couple of instrumental piano tracks in the early 1960s)

4. Bob Guy — Frank Zappa (a 45 before the Mothers of Invention came to be)

5. Arvie Allens — Ritchie Valens (one 45 in 1958; he took the name from his initials and his last name)

without the "V")

6. Ben Colder — Sheb Wooley (of "The Purple People Eater" fame, he recorded a series of imitation drunkard records throughout the 1960s)

7. True Taylor — Paul Simon (he recorded the first version of "He Was My Brother" under this name in 1963)

8. The Henhouse Five Plus Too — Ray Stevens (a chicken-clucking version of "In the Mood" in late 1976)

9. Larry Lurex — Freddie Mercury (of Queen; the name was a takeoff on the then-popular British artist Gary Glitter — "Lurex" recorded a version of "I Can Hear Music" in 1973)

10. Runt — Todd Rundgren (his school-days nickname, under which he recorded an album which contained "We Gotta Get You a Woman")

So much for those. This week we look at some groups which have had personnel changes over the years. In each case I ask you who came in when someone left. So let's begin.

Who replaced...

1. Pete Best as drummer of the Beatles?

2. Joe English as drummer of Wings?

3. Peter Gabriel as lead singer of Genesis?

4. Kevin Cronin as lead singer of REO Speedwagon? (He, in turn, was replaced by Kevin Cronin.)

5. Terry Kath as lead guitarist of Chicago?

6. Al Jardine in the Beach Boys? (He, in turn, was replaced by Al Jardine.)

7. Florence Ballard in the Supremes?

8. Peter Green and Jeremy Spencer in Fleetwood Mac?

9. Randy Meisner in the Eagles?

10. Rick Wakeman as keyboardist of Yes, the first time Wakeman left? (Hint: he also replaced Mike Pinder of the Moody Blues in the same capacity.)

The Indiana Pacers will play a group of NBA All-Stars in a benefit basketball game in Indianapolis Sept. 25 for the United Way.

Proceeds from the 1:30 p.m. (EST) game at Market Square Arena will go to the United Way of Greater Indianapolis, which serves 67 local agencies.

Players on the NBA All-Star squad will all have Indiana college backgrounds. They will include Indiana University's Isiah Thomas of Detroit, Mike Woodson of Kansas City, Ray Tolbert of Seattle, and Notre Dame's Kelly Tripucka of Detroit.

A few tickets remain for the all-star basketball game featuring Adrian Dantley, Kelly Tripucka, Austin Carr, and 15 other former Notre Dame players who will be returning to the ACC this Saturday to participate in the Logan Center Benefit Basketball Game. The game is being organized by Notre Dame assistant basketball coaches Gary Brokaw and John Shumate, both former Irish All-Americans who will play in the game. Tip-off is set for 1 p.m. on Saturday, just seven hours before Notre Dame opens its 1982 football season against Michigan at Notre Dame Stadium. Tickets are $6 in the lower arena and $4 for upper arena. Tickets are selling fast at Gate 10 of the ACC. — The Observer

Dear LLP:

Devine rejects USFL job

PHOENIX (AP) — Former Notre Dame Head Coach Dan Devine, citing "a strong sense of loyalty and obligation" to his present employer, said yesterday that he has turned down a possible position with the Arizona Wranglers of the new United States Football League.

In an exclusive interview with the Associated Press, Devine said he has chosen to remain as executive director of the Sun Angel Foundation — the main booster organization of Arizona State University.

"It's like a marriage," he said. "When you get married, you don't say 'I'll stay with this until something better comes along.' I was brought here to do a job. My future is tied to ASU."

But Devine reiterated that he may return to coaching if Indianapolis, ever receives an NFL franchise.

"That's the only thing that could get me back . . . if I'm not too old by that time," said the 57-year-old Devine, who posted a 198-83-15 record in a combined 33 years of coaching at Arizona State, Missouri, Notre Dame and the NFL's Green Bay Packers.

"If the Indianapolis job becomes a reality and I feel I am the least bit interested and I was contacted, I would talk to them. I'm leaving the door open," Devine said. "I think people wanted me to leave a hair in the door with the Wranglers, too. But I wouldn't feel comfortable that way. I felt that a conflict of interest was bound to arise."

Devine was hired by the Sun Angels last Feb. 15, but had been considered the top candidate to become head coach and/or general manager of the Wranglers even before the franchise moved here from Los Angeles in August.

"In fairness to everyone, I thought this is time to clear the air," Devine said, reading from a terse two-paragraph statement his secretary was to deliver to other media members last night.

"I didn't want to have a press conference because I thought it would be presumptuous for me to turn down a job I never really had. But if I didn't withdraw my name, nobody would."

Speaking from a corner booth of a Phoenix hotel coffee shop, Devine said he reached his decision "over the weekend" after discussions with Wrangler co-owners Jim Joseph and Brad Liebman.

Sources say the two parties mutually soured on one another after Devine desired part-ownership of the team, a yearly salary in the $300,000 range and wanted to hand-pick his squad members, front office personnel and assistant coaches.

Former Irish Coach Dan Devine has turned down a job that wasn't even offered — as coach of the USFL's Arizona Wranglers.

LATE START — This year's season opener is the latest start for the Irish since the 1973 opening-day victory over Northwestern on September 22.

DUERSON FOR THE DEFENSE — Tri-captain Dave Duerson has been a starter in the defensive secondary since the third game of his rookie season. A versatile performer, Dave has played every position in the defensive backfield. He also leads all Irish players on the Irish roster in minutes-played over the last three seasons.

Duerson is one of the premier punt-returns in Notre Dame history. If he returns 23 or more punts this season, he will become the Irish career record-holder in that department.

FULL HOUSE — Notre Dame Stadium is in its 53rd season of Irish Football. Saturday night will be the 45th consecutive capacity crowd of 59,075, and the 93rd packed house in the last 94 games.

CALLING THE PLAYS — After several seasons of shuttling players in from the sidelines to call the plays, the Irish will use arm signals to call the plays from the sidelines this year.

Another new wrinkle is the use of the 25-second clock, which limits the time a team can take between plays. The rule is enforced at the option of the home team. N.D. plans to use it, with clocks to be situated adjacent to the scoreboard in each endzone.

STRENGTH OF SCHEDULE — Five Notre Dame opponents this season are included in this week's AP Top Twenty. They are: No. 2 Pitt, No. 8 Penn State, No. 10 Michigan, No. 15 Miami (Fla.), and No. 19 Southern Cal. Nobody said it would be easy.

GO GET SOME KICKS — The Notre Dame soccer team, now 1-1-1, is looking to iron out its difficulties as it seeks its first-ever NCAA playoff bid. Today the Irish host Valparaiso and on Friday Ohio State comes to South Bend. The Irish must do well against teams in their region to obtain a bid, so do your part and go to a game.

WEDDING BELLS — Two members of the athletic department staff were married over the summer. Congratulations to John Heisler, Associate Sports Information Director, and his new wife Karen Croake, a former Assistant Sports Information Director. Also tying the knot over the summer were Football Trainer Skip Meyer and Pam Colangelo. Many happy returns.

would go for naught. However, once again, the Irish fought back and won the first game.

Notre Dame used the momentum that they had picked up to sprint out to a fast lead in the second game. Utilizing some Michigan State mistakes and playing exceptional defense, the Irish jumped out to a quick six-point lead.

The Spartans fought back again, closing the gap to 11-7. Just as it appeared that the party might be over for the Irish, though, they buckled down and won the last four points of the game for the victory.

The Irish once again were rolling in the third game as they jumped out to another early lead. The score went to 11-7 in Notre Dame's favor and it looked like a sweep was imminent, but Michigan State fought back, winning eight straight points for a 15-11 victory.

In the fourth game, the Spartans finally used their size to an advantage, spiking hard shots at the feet of the Irish players. They jumped out to an early lead and stopped another Notre Dame comeback attempt to win easily.

Going into the last game things did not look too promising for the Irish. Michigan State was playing well and had the momentum.

Again, Notre Dame showed that they were going to play tough. They took the early lead and forced the Spartans into some critical mistakes. Sensing a victory, the Irish played almost flawlessly on their way to a 15-11 romp, thereby taking the best-of-five match, three games to two.

"I'm really pleased about the fact that the girls came back after they lost momentum," said VanSlager. "It's typical to lose momentum, but the girls put their heads together and decided to get the job done."

Freshman Karen Bauters looked very impressive in leading the team's offensive attack. She served well and scored consistently through all five games.

All the other players did well also. McLaughlin, Josie Maternowski, Mary Jo Hensler, Terese Henken, Tracy Bennington and Julia Pierson ran their offense well and played excellent defense.

"It is nice to have a victory over a strong team early in the year," said VanSlager. "It's good psychologically."

"The girls learned to win. They now know what it takes to be successful."

Ironically, a volleyball coach from a South Bend high school brought her team to the game to let them watch and learn from Michigan State's team.

They did get a good lesson, but it came from the other side of the court.

Irish women top rivals, injuries

By DAVE STANG
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame women's tennis team was victorious yesterday over Wheaton College, its Division III opponent from Wheaton, Ill. The team overcame numerous injuries to post an easy 7-2 win.

The major injury belonged to Sue Panther at No. 1 singles, who was forced to default during her match against Jane Nelson because of pain in her back. At No. 2 singles, Laura Lee ignored her sore ankle to win 6-3, 6-1 over Wheaton's Linda Beturian. Freshman Mary Colligan had an easy time with Laura Lindstrom, 6-0, 6-0. The No. 4 Notre Dame singles player, Lisa LaFratta, defeated Pam Moorman of Wheaton 6-2, 6-3. No. 5 Cathy Schnell beat Kate Werner 6-1, 6-2. At No. 6 singles, Notre Dame's Camille Cooper overcame a pulled muscle in her leg to defeat Jan Nelson 6-2, 6-0.

Coach Sharon Petro was rightfully concerned about her team's injuries.

"I'm nervous about all of our injuries, but once we're past them, we'll be tough," she said. The injuries forced Petro to shake up the doubles alignment. Because the second and third doubles teams each moved up a notch, Lisa Gleason and Louissa DeMello were given the opportunity to play doubles together for the first time. They played well at No. 3, where they defeated Wheaton's Kate Werner and Jan Nelson 4-6, 7-5, 6-4. At No. 1 doubles, Colligan and LaFratta lost to Jane Nelson and Laura Lindstrom 6-7, 2-6. Yesterday's No. 2 team of Schnell and Roemer beat Wheaton's Moorman and Buturian 6-3, 6-0 in an exciting match.

"Wheaton wasn't as tough as in the past because they've lost some players to other schools due to scholarships," reflected Coach Petro. But she related her happiness with the team when she said, "Everyone played well, especially at singles."

CFA schools win TV suit against NCAA

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A federal judge has ruled in favor of two college football powers who sued the National Collegiate Athletic Association for the right to negotiate their own television contracts, University of Oklahoma officials were told yesterday.

U.S. District Judge Juan Burciaga of Albuquerque, N.M., who presided in the suit brought by Oklahoma and the University of Georgia Athletic Association, mailed his decision to the Oklahoma City federal court to be filed later today, said a clerk at his office who refused to be identified.

A University of Oklahoma official who asked not to be identified said yesterday the plaintiffs were told that Burciaga ruled in their favor but expected the NCAA to appeal the case. The ruling would not be announced until today, he said.

Andy Coats, the Oklahoma City attorney who represented the plaintiffs, said, "We understand that there was a rather lengthy opinion and that it holds generally in our favor."

The two schools claimed the NCAA violates the Sherman Antitrust Act in controlling the televising of college football and asked Burciaga to allow them to make their own deals despite a $263.5 million NCAA contract with two television networks.

Tom Hansen, assistant executive director of the NCAA, said yesterday in Kansas City that association officials had not heard that Burciaga had reached a ruling.

"There could be so many different rulings that could go against you," he said.

Stuns MSU Volleyball team comes of age

"I'm happy."
That was Notre Dame volleyball coach Sandy VanSlager's reaction after her team pulled off a huge upset against Michigan State last night in the ACC Pit.

The victory marks the high point in the history of volleyball at Notre Dame. Michigan State, the Big Ten champs last year, came into the game with outstanding credentials. The match went to the maximum five games before the Irish prevailed 17-15, 15-7, 11-15, 9-15, 15-1.

The Irish showed that gutsy, smart play can overcome physical disadvantage. Their opponents had an incredible height advantage as their shortest player was as tall as Notre Dame's tallest. Some of the Spartans were more than a foot taller than the Irish players.

"It shows that height isn't always the key," said VanSlager. "You can have the height, but not the skill."

Nevertheless, at the beginning of the match, it appeared that the Irish were awed by the Spartans' size. They played hesitantly as the Michigan State blockers forced them into some weak shots. Quickly they were down 13-4 and it appeared that the Spartans would romp as expected.

Then Mary McLaughlin took her turn at the service line. The freshman standout from Santa Barbara, Calif., gave Michigan State all kinds of trouble with her serves. The Spartans started to collapse as the Irish caught up and took the lead.

Michigan State regrouped, taking the lead 15-14, and it appeared that the tremendous Irish comeback

Faust reverses field

Coach Gerry Faust got his channels slightly crossed at the first of his weekly press conferences for local and national media yesterday.

Early in the conference, Faust explained to the writers that he and his staff had not seen game films of Michigan's 20-9 win over Wisconsin last week, and that the lack of those films was hampering his team's preparation for Saturday night's game.

According to Faust, Michigan would not provide a game film because Notre Dame was unable to return the favor. "I wish I could have seen the film," he said. "But I understand why they wouldn't give it to us."

The comments puzzled one writer, however. The Michigan-Wisconsin game was on live TV in Wisconsin, and Bill Jauss of the Chicago Tribune wondered why Faust hadn't thought to have somebody videotape it.

After a short pause, Faust admitted that he had, in fact, had the game videotaped "by a friend," and had watched the tape on Sunday, the day after the game.

"But," he quickly added, "that's not the same as having the game films. It's hard to analyze a game from a TV tape. The one I saw had a lot of close-ups."

Faust assured the writers that videotaping opponents' games violated no NCAA regulations.

Who'll replace Crable?

Kelly sizes up linebackers

By MIKE RICCARDI
Sports Writer

Since its revival in 1978, the Notre Dame-Michigan football series has featured four very physical ballgames. And while Saturday night's matchup promises to be no less hard-hitting, the Irish will have to do battle without the help of Bob Crable, the defensive anchor for the past four seasons.

Irish Linebacker Coach George Kelly, a 14-year sideline veteran, had the responsibility of reconstructing Notre Dame's defense around a new leader in the middle. Last year, disappointing line play meant overwork for the linebackers. This year, with support from up front, the tackle stats might go down, but overall effectiveness should increase.

Replacing Crable in the middle will be the responsibility of Mark Zavagnin, a two-year starter on the weak side and the second-leading Irish tackler in 1980 and 1981. The 6-2, 228-pound Zavagnin made 94 stops last fall while picking off three enemy passes — tops on the team. The defensive captain is not huge, but very quick, with excellent field sense, and a knack for being around the ball.

Cincinnati Moeller-alumnus Mike Larkin will eventually join Zavagnin on the inside of Notre Dame's 5-2 defensive alignment. Larkin won the starting position after an impressive spring season and a solid showing in May's Blue-Gold game, but is temporarily sidelined with a shoulder separation. The 6-1, 209-pound sophomore looks undersized at first glance, but raw speed makes him excellent on pass coverage.

On the strong side, two-year starter Joe Rudzinski is battling 6-3, 225-pound junior Rick Naylor to regain his starting position. Shoulder injuries hampered Rudzinski in 1981. Naylor, a junior out of Moeller (he was Crable's), is the successor at middle linebacker is the biggest Irish linebacker at 6-3, 225, and was the top replacement among the linebackers last season. The 6-3, 224-pound Rudzinski should compete for significant playing time if he remains healthy. Joe Bars, a 6-5, 225 sophomore, provides strongside depth.

Rick DiBernardo and Tony Furjanic lead the list of freshmen in camp, and while neither should crack the lineup this week, contributions could come sooner than expected. Californian DiBernardo and Chicagoans Furjanic and Ron Weisenhofer came to Notre Dame last month as consensus prep All-Americans.

Irish Items

Author's note: For the past three years this column has been written by Bill Marquard. While no one can possibly hope to fill his shoes, I will attempt to continue IRISH ITEMS in the same tradition.

THE SERIES — Michigan holds an overall edge with a record of 11-4, the only Notre Dame opponent this year to boast a series edge. Since 1978 the Irish and the Wolverines have split two games, with Notre Dame winning two spinetingers, 12-10 in 1979 on the foot of Chuck Male, and in 1980, 29-27 on Harry Oliver's last-second 51-yard field goal.

IRISH NIGHT LIFE — Saturday night's game under the lights is a first at Notre Dame Stadium. In night games away from home the Irish have a 15-4-1 record — including one Gator, two Orange, and two Sugar Bowl wins. The 1980 season was the last time Notre Dame played under artificial lighting, when they beat Arizona 20-3. Also in 1980, the Irish played indoors under the lights, in the Superdome against Georgia at the Sugar Bowl.

The lighting units will be mounted on the end of a 140-foot retractable boom fastened to one of six tractor trailer trucks surrounding the stadium. Musco Mobile Lighting, Inc., of Oskaloosa, Iowa, will provide lighting not only for the stadium, but for all surrounding parking areas as well.

COPING WITH CARTER — Gerry Faust and Bo Schembechler will each have trouble defending against the offensive output of an opponent named Carter — tri-captain Phil for the Irish and speedster Anthony for the Wolverines.

Phil Carter was last year's leading rusher with 727 yards in 165 carries and has a career total of 1,694 yards in 378 carries. He is presently Notre Dame's 13th-best career ground-gainer. Phil is joined on the Irish roster by two other Carters — Mansel, a junior a defensive end, and Ray, a freshman tailback.

Michigan's Anthony Carter has 118 career receptions for 2232 yards and 29 touchdowns. Six of those receptions have come against the Irish — resulting in two touchdowns. The Wolverine speedster also returns punts (62-637 yards) and kickoffs (49-1246 yards).

"Anthony Carter is the type of ballplayer who can dominate a game by his sheer presence," says Faust. "He may only catch a couple of passes per game, but just the fact that he lines up out there on the outside every play drives a defense nuts. You can never afford to give him any kind of room because he'll kill you."

FOR OPENERS — Notre Dame stands 80-8-5 in season openers. That figure includes a 57-7-3 record at home. Notre Dame's also faced Michigan in the '79 season opener, winning 12-10. Last year the Irish debuted with a 27-9 victory over LSU for Gerry Faust's first collegiate victory.

ON TELEVISION — Notre Dame owns an overall 38-31-2 mark in televised games, including a 27-21-1 figure in contests televised nationally. The Irish have now lost four consecutive nationally-televised games, dating back to their 7-0 win at Alabama in 1980. In addition to the Michigan game on ABC, Notre Dame also will appear on national television against USC, to be broadcast by NCAA newcomer CBS.

PLAYING POLITICS — Five members of the '82 Notre Dame team got their feet wet in the political arena this summer — serving Washington, D.C., internships with members of Congress. Spending at least a portion of their summer working in Washington were Dave Duerson (Ind. Sen. Richard Lugar), Rod Bone (Ill. Rep. Edward Derwinski), Brian Behmer (Ohio Rep. Ronald Mottl), Jack Shields (Mass. Rep. Joseph Early), and Kevin Griffith (Ohio Rep. Clarence Brown).
