$20,000 spent on Yale recipes called waste by some cooks

A recipe file purchased by University Food Services from Yale University this summer is a waste of money since many of the recipes do not work, according to several dining hall cooks.

The cooks, who asked not to be identified for fear of jeopardizing their jobs, said they have had "major problems" preparing dishes when adhering to the recipes. "A lot of the recipes just don't work... and will take massive changes," one of the cooks said. "It's a waste of the University's money to buy these."

Director of Food Services William Hickey countered that the purchase was a wise move. "I think it's the best recipe system in the country. I recommended it to the institution that they buy it and the institution took my recommendation."

The University paid $20,000 for more than 1,000 recipes which were first used at the outset of this school year. Yale sold similar recipe packages to Duke, Princeton, and Columbia universities.

Examples of recipes that do not work, according to the cooks, are beef bourguignon over noodles, hungarian goulash over pasta, and tacos.

One cook related an incident earlier in the semester concerning a duck dish which was prepared strictly according to the recipe and sent to the serving counters at North Dining Hall. When the duck was carved, "blood started gushing out and they sent it back." The cook said the duck was undercooked because dining hall supervisors insisted on "sticking to the recipe."

Hickey said he has heard of "grumbles of this cook or that cook" but believes "these recipes have been tested and used at an institution for years and years and they do work. They work very well."

The cooks, however, are not alone in criticizing the file. Duke University Assistant Food Services Director Lowell Adkins, who bought the same recipe file from Yale for $20,000, said his staff "has also had some problems" with the new system. "The bottom line is that Yale has a set of cooks and clientele different from Duke's cooks and clientele," he said. "It's not that the recipes are bad; it's just that they have to be modified to fit our situation."

Hickey said he has "great faith" in the quality of the recipes. "I worked at Yale for seven years as part of a management team that redefined the recipe file system... I know the people who made (the recipes). I had a hand in it myself."

Noting that "there is no plan to change (the recipe file)," Hickey said he was willing to "work with anyone who has problems" preparing the recipes though "no one has come to me directly."

Deb Garrard, Food Services manager of marketing and nutrition, said she has received recipe complaints from some cooks, but added "it's rare that something is totally wrong and we can't serve it."

"There are a lot of adjustments to be made," she conceded. "Every time I walk through the kitchen I get stopped by a cook waving a (recipe) card."

Yale recipes with severe problems have been revised or thrown out, with old Notre Dame recipes used instead, Garrard said.

One of the main drawbacks to the Yale file is that the recipes are

Abigail McCarthy to address SMC class of '84 commencement

By AMY STEPHAN
Assistant News Editor

Abigail McCarthy, author, ecumenist, and lecturer, will deliver the commencement address of Saint Mary's 137th graduation, Saturday, May 19.

Abigail McCarthy

A mother of four, McCarthy is the Board President of Carroll Publications; President of Herald Communications, Ltd.; Director of the Dreyfus Corporation; and Coordinator of the National Conference on Women, The Economy, and Public Policy.

As a staff columnist for Commonweal, a journal of public affairs, literature, and the arts, McCarthy addressed topics ranging from the Bishops' pastoral letter to the gender gap in politics.

She is also the author of the critically acclaimed memoir, Private Faces/Public Places and the novel, Circles, a Washington Story.

McCarthy has been involved in ecumenism as vice president of Church Women United, an alliance of 26 million Protestant, Orthodox Jew, and Catholic women, and as a member of the Bishops' Committee on Education and Ecumenism.

An alumna of the College of St. Catherine at St. Paul, Minn., and the University of Minnesota, McCarthy has lectured at educational institutions including Harvard, Fordham, Georgetown, Boston College and the University of Southern California.

She has received six honorary doctorates including one from Catholic University. Other awards include the Avila Award from the College of St. Teresa, the Vie Veritatis Medal from Elms College, and the prestigious Trinity Award, presented only three times in the history of Trinity College.

"Abigail McCarthy epitomizes everything Saint Mary's stands for or wants to stand for," said Karen Heisler, public information officer at the College. "The administration was very excited to get her."

McCarthy was chosen from among the nominations submitted last spring by this year's seniors, faculty members, administrators, Regents and alumnae. The Academic Council reviewed the nominees and submitted a list of candidates to the Board of Regents, who must approve all honorary degree recipients.

"Since Saint Mary's is a women's college, we generally try to find a prominent woman to speak," said Heisler. "Abigail McCarthy has a reputation as an excellent speaker."

The College will also award honorary degrees to architect Evans Woollen, who designed the award-winning Cushwa-Leighton Library and supervised the renovation of the Haggard College Center; Robert Beck, chief executive officer of the Prudential Insurance Company; and Sister Olivia Marie Hutcheson, Superior General of the Congregation of the Holy Cross.

Mary Kelly McLaughlin, a 1942 graduate of Saint Mary's and leader of California's Education for Parenthood project, will receive the President's Medal.

ND graduates enter Indiana state and US Congressional elections

By RICHARD INGRASSIA

Two Notre Dame graduates are now on the campaign trail in Indiana.

Timothy Roemer, son of Dean of Students James Roemer, is running for the Democratic nomination for 8th district representative to the Indiana State House of Representatives. He received his BA from the University of California and his MA from Notre Dame.

David Barrett

David Barrett, who received his BA from Notre Dame, is vying for the Democratic nomination for Indiana's 3rd district U.S. Congressional seat.

Barrett, 32, has been a Michiana resident for 14 years, and is a native of Alexandria, La. He said his 'grassroots campaign' is based on getting to know his district's constituents and fighting for them.

"My decision to run for this office," said Barrett, "comes after many months of thought and consultation with friends and political veterans. I have determined that the only way to pursue the campaign for Congress is to devote fulltime efforts to the campaign now ensuing."

Barrett resigned from his position as Public Affairs director at Channel 34 Public Television to realize this goal.

"First and foremost, in addition to voting and taking a lead in addressing national and international issues, a member of Congress must fight for his own district, particularly in the area of jobs," said Barrett.

He also maintains that there must be a more equitable and less wasteful use of federal dollars. "Human service programs must not be the exclusive target of cutbacks, as they have been in the Reagan administration. Also, there is considerable waste in the military budget."

Barrett believes the United States should not "stumble" into military conflicts. He proposes, "We should 'send in the troops', as the saying goes, only when we have a strong sense of the longterm purpose of such a strategy. In Lebanon and in Central America as well...

diplomatic efforts are likely to prove more fruitful than armed intervention."

Another platform of Barrett's is an effort to reach a mutually verifiable nuclear arms freeze with the Soviet Union. "While America must be second to none in military strength, we must recognize that the nuclear arms race threatens the life of every human being," holds Barrett.

Barrett plans to walk from one end of the six-county district to the other later this year, to meet with the constituents of his district and talk to them about their needs.

Roemer plans to campaign for the

A second Bloomington woman, Linda Sparks, testifies Ms. Koone introduced her last year to the 56-year-old Krueger, who said he could help her make money. Their testimony was heard on the opening day of the trial. Ms. Koone testifies that Krueger had between five and ten phones in his house. # Olympic theme, new activities to highlight this year's AnTostal

By MARY CAROL CREADON
News Staff

Spring fever may be raging in epidemic proportions on campus, but what promises to be a cure is still several weeks away.

This year's AnTostal could be the best ever, according to Chairman Dave Jakopin, who notes that the festival will have an Olympic theme this year.

In true Olympic tradition, a torch bearer will lead a procession of gladiators to the mud pits.

And what would the Olympics be without the grueling decathlon event? According to Jakopin, the AnTostal decathlon may not be as competitive as the original, but promises to be just as entertaining.

These are just two of the many activities being planned by the AnTostal committee in the spirit of the Olympics, said Jakopin, who adds that suggestions for other activities are welcome.

In addition to the popular events from preceding years such as Ugly Man on Campus, Bookstore Basketball, ultimate frisbee, the Dating Game, and the various mud pit escapades, there will many new events, said Jakopin. These include a slam dunk contest, an air band competition to be performed during the breaks of the Saturday night band, and a Newlywed Game for married or engaged students only.

Jakopin urges all students to participate in the planning by offering suggestions for events and/or helping to run an event themselves.

There will be a second organizational meeting this Sunday, Feb. 26, in Cushing Hall at 7:15 p.m. for all those interested.

Mismanagement of funds for last year's festival have raised concerns over the finances for this year's event. An audit conducted by the Notre Dame Internal Audit Department in October of last year revealed the theft of $3,000, a $2,000 loss from the Heat Wave concert, the theft of $600 worth of sound equipment, and $800 worth of damage to two rented vehicles.

Jakopin said many changes were made to guarantee that such problems would not occur this year.

For example, the AnTostal committee does not have its own checking account as it did last year, so its spending will be more closely monitored. Also, the Student Activities Office stated that the 1984 AnTostal "will receive its funds in the same manner that all other Student Activity Fee money is expended — either by means of a receipt or invoice, processed with the Student Government Treasurer's Office."

The AnTostal budget has decreased this year but Jakopin said the committee is planning many new events that will be inexpensive to run.

Jakopin and the AnTostal committee have been cautious in their choice of this year's band because of the financial disaster last year. Arion, a more dance oriented band from tepan Center Saturday night.

Jakopin has high hopes for AnTostal '84. He said his main goal is to have enough publicity to ensure awareness among the students of all the activities and full participation throughout the week.

SMC group promotes campus awareness of nuclear issue

By MARGARET GRAY
News Staff

Millions of Americans watched the TV nuclear drama, The Day After, last November, including a group of Saint Mary's students and faculty members who viewed the program in the Haggar College Center.

But for this group, "The Day After" didn't end with the final credits.

A panel discussion after the movie raised the question, "What do we do now?" Group members were not comfortable with dropping the issue just because the evening's discussion was over.

Participants in this discussion met several additional times to discuss the nuclear issue and eventually organized the Saint Mary's Peacekeepers — a group dedicated to educating and involving the Saint Mary's community in the nuclear issue.

The Peacekeepers, in conjunction with Justice Education, Campus Ministry, and various other groups organized a three-day program on Feb. 12-14.

The program centered around the moving of the Union of Atomic Scientists' "doomsday" clock — an imaginary clock which indicates how close to nuclear war the group perceive us to be — "at three minutes to midnight," said Robert Hohl, reference librarian at Saint Mary's and a member of the Peacekeepers.

The program's approach to the nuclear issue was three-fold. The upcoming presidential elections necessitated a practical approach, said Hohl.

Members of the campus were urged to study candidates' platforms and to consider their stances on the nuclear issue before voting.

An educational approach was used, said Hohl, because faculty and staff on the committee believed they had a responsibility as educators to make students aware of the issue and to instill in them an understanding of it. They decided that the best way to do this would be through the classroom.

With the help of Dr. William Hickley, Vice-President and Dean of Faculty, a letter was sent to faculty members asking them to devote some of their class time to the discussion of nuclear arms and its connection with the particular class. This combination of films, videotapes, and class discussions afforded students an opportunity to educate themselves on nuclear matters.

Because this is a moral issue, said Hohl, it was also approached within a religious context. Prayer services and homilies based on the context of the Bishops' Letter, "The Challenge of Peace" encouraged everyone to pray and to work for peace. The idea was stressed that prayer could be a source of strength if everyone joined together.

Great emphasis was also placed on hope, said Hohl. Even though the nuclear situation often appears grim, members of the campus community were urged never to lose hope. To impress this idea upon the campus green ribbons were distributed and worn; green representing the traditional color of hope.

Revised Mardi Gras to include game night

By CHRISTOPHER RYAN
News Staff

Mardi Gras will take on a new look this year with a revised Dance-A-Thon and a Notre Dame version of the Newlywed Game.

The major addition to the Mardi Gras festivities this year is a Game Night scheduled for Saturday, March 10, in the North Dining Hall, where students can play a variety of board games for a $2 fee.

The highlight of Game Night will be "The Roommate Game." A takeoff on the television gameshow "The Newlywed Game," roommates will be quizzed to determine which pair knows each other best.

Roommates wishing to be contestants in "The Roommate Game" may either contact Karen Klocke, the Mardi Gras chairwoman, or sign up at the Ombudsman desk in the LaFortune Student Center.

Entitled "All Night Long," this year's Dance-A-Thon will be held in the South Dining Hall, Friday, March 9 and will feature a pajama hour and square dancing.

Contestants will dance from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. but less adventurous dancers may attend from 9 p.m. until 1 a.m. for $3. This four-hour segment will feature the band "Phase" and a disc jockey.

A pajama hour will follow, featuring prizes for the best pajamas, milk and cookies, and a bed-time story to be read by an undisclosed celebrity.

To keep the evening hopping, a square dance with a professional caller has been scheduled from 4 a.m. to 6 a.m.

Students must sell at least one ticket booklet (10 tickets per booklet) to be able to participate the full 12 hours. Ticket booklets will be available in the dining halls through next Thursday.

The student selling the most tickets to the four-hour dance will win a color television, with a stereo going to the student placing second.

Those students who either buy a ticket to the dance-a-thon's 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. dance, or sell at least two booklets of tickets, will be eligible to win door prizes including free pizzas and dinners at local restaurants. The grand prize will be a trip to New Orleans, for their version of Mardi Gras.

Two movies will kickoff the week's activities. The original film production of The Jazz Singer will be shown Tuesday night, March 6th. The second film of the week Showboat, will be shown Thursday night, March 8th. Showtimes and locations of the films are to be announced.

The Student Government hopes to raise some $10,000 from its Mardi Gras activities, of which $6,000 will be given to local charities. The remaining $4,000 will be used to cover expenses.

Phone-a-Thon expected to raise over $65,000 in pledges to College

By JENNIFER BIGOTT
Staff Reporter

The 10th annual Phone-A-Thon will take place at Saint Mary's during the week of Mar. 5-8 at Haggard College Center.

Donations from the Phone-A-Thon provide an important source of income for the College, said

Nancy Orr and Tracey Paunicka, student organizers of the event.

Last year, 110 volunteers reached 2650 alumnae, raising approximately $65,000 for the College which far surpassed the original goal of $50,000, said Lisa O'Shea, assistant director of development.

This year, O'Shea hopes at least 4,000 alumnae will be reached, enabling this year's goal of 65,000 to become a reality.

More money can be expected to be raised this year, due to an additional 6 phones to be used in the Phone-A-Thon, raising the total number to 24.

A projected 200 volunteers consisting of alumnae, faculty and students are expected to sign up to work this year, O'Shea continued.

The workers will contact alumnae, recording pledges on computer sheets that each volunteer will have. Remittance envelopes are then mailed out to those who choose to donate. The money must be sent in by Thursday, May 31, "to make the fund year . . . that's why it's in the spring," said O'Shea.

Those who agree to volunteer their time will be entitled to a 5 minute free phone call anywhere in the continental U.S., courtesy of Saint Mary's College.

designed to feed 25 to 100 people and they are actually being used to feed over 5,000, she explained. In revising the recipes to accomodate Notre Dame students, changes have to be made in cooking procedure and ingredients, dining hall administrators say.

Several cooks further questioned the feasibility of the recipes since key ingredients seemed to be missing. For example, one cook noted the file included a recipe for chicken noodle soup without chicken and one for beef noodle soup without beef.

Garrard said such recipes are not necessarily "wrong," but a different way of making the dishes.

Several of the dining hall cooks said they have taken it upon themselves to make minor changes to the recipes, even if their supervisors are against it. "We can't be proud of what we're putting out once we see the end result," one cook said. "We've been getting hassled from the line ladies and the students because they know how we normally cook."

Hickey has insisted that the cooks comply with the recipes — at least the first time the dishes are prepared — in order to "establish a standard . . . Control is in the recipe itself. They (the recipes) are the standards of the operation."

During the summer, food services will be converted to a computer-based operation, with menus, orders, and recipes all filed into the system. With the recipes under rigid standards, food services will be able to prepare for the change now, Hickey said.

He added, however, that the initial preparation of the food through the computer system during the summer would be "interesting" since some minor problems might crop up.

One cook said the situation is "totally frustrating . . . It's getting worse, not better."

But Hickey remained steadfast: "The current Yale recipe file is what we are living by right now. There are no plans to change it."

In his platform, Roemer attacks the Indiana Bureau of Motor Vehicles system which sends revenues to the coffers of the political party in power. "Last year," the candidate said, "Michigan received more than $238 million from license plate sales alone, while we in Indiana are looking for an estimated $250,000 in taxpayer's money missing from the Mishawaka branch."

Roemer would like to see motor vehicle fees go to education, improvement of the state's economic base, and maintenance of roads and highways.

Roemer, 27, is optimistic about his first try for office. He has extensive experience on the campaign staffs of candidates for political office in California and Indiana, and has worked as a research consultant for the New Energy Corporation. ## One way to get things done at Saint Mary's

Saint Mary's Housing and Residence Life department was playing "telephone" when it decided to reserve rooms in each dorm for underclassmen — the message which trickled down to the students barely resembled the message released from the office.

Students first learned of plans to integrate the dorms months ago. But at that time they were told that spaces, not specific rooms would be reserved. Poor communications forced students to pressure Residence Life into heeding their complaints about blocking rooms.

Last Thursday, Residence Life posted floor plans. Rooms which some students think are choice suddenly were reserved, though the department seemed to think the rooms were the least desirable ones. Had Residence Life allowed room selection to take its course, keeping quotas for underclassmen in each dorm (as was eventually done), it would have seen which rooms nobody wanted and avoided the whole mess.

The communication breakdown between Residence Life and students occurred after the decision to block off rooms and before the floor plans were posted.

Saint Mary's "telephone" game went like this: Residence Life supposedly informed hall directors and student government. Hall directors supposedly told R.A.s., who knew of the blocks at least three weeks before room selection. Yet most students did not know about the blocks until the plans were posted.

That students got the rooms unblocked within hours of room selection shows their power to effect policy. That College President John M. Duggan responded to the students' plea is commendable.

But why must students go to the top to get a receptive ear? Some in student government got involved in the final attempt, but where were they weeks ago? It took a last-chance petition from the Sophomore Class Council to get the ball rolling.

When Residence Life and student government turn a deaf ear to complaints, students have no recourse but to take the initiative and go straight to the top.

The Russia nobody really knows

So the rejected suitor finally made it and became the bridegroom.

The thing to say about the accession of Konstantin Chernenko to the top Soviet power post is that it could have been much worse. It could have been a Party tyrant like Age. Chernenko became the nostalgia candidate. His passing-over the last time around became the Road Not Taken.

Thus the struggle seemed to be an age-group confrontation, between the Old Guard (Chernenko, Tikhonov, Ustinov) and the "Young Turks," aged 60 or less. But in reality it was a struggle between the pre-Andropov Brezhnev group and the younger group who seized power even before Andropov and have been turning Russia into a KGB state.

With each power succession we learn again how little we know about the internal workings of the Soviet Union. The emphasis of the "Kremlinologists" has been on the economic and defense picture. But when it comes to the Soviet leadership — aside from the externals of the "pecking order" — our Intelligence is wholly in the dark.

One reason is the total secrecy of the Soviet regime. Despite the spate of books, the Soviet leadership is the Russia nobody knows.

The atmosphere is that of a Byzantine court, with a central figure who wears the imperial trappings of power, and a circle of courtiers, each with his own satrapy in a loose assemblage of feudal fealties.

The veils of secrecy are reinforced by the fact of total media control, total police control, total KGB control. The accountability of each leader is only to the Party and state bureaucracy. There is no accountability to the people, and therefore no publicity, no public debate, no public knowledge of decisions taken.

Throughout there is a paranoid fear that any disclosure will be a disclosure to the Western enemy. Hence the rise of the KGB to dominance. Even the military is subordinate to it.

Chernenko is a carry-over from an earlier Russia — the Brezhnev pre-Andropov era, when the Party and state bureaucrats ran the show. It is as if the Andropov interregnum were only a bad dream. Like Brezhnev, Chernenko is oldish, sickish, with a love for the trappings of power.

Yet there is a newer and more frightening Russia, run by arrivistes whom Andropov had picked even before he came to power — KGB-dominated, police-state-oriented, depersonalized, dehumanized. Chernenko will be lucky if he doesn't become a prisoner in his own kingdom.

As for the Americans, the Intelligence scene is dominated either by CIA and military intelligence or by the big liberal funded "institutes" who see detente everywhere, or by the right wing institutes who see the enemy everywhere.

We have never developed an intellectual elite trained to study the Soviet Union without ideological blinkers. As long as this remains true, Russia will continue to be the unknown country.

P. O. Box Q Endorsing SBP's

Dear Editor:

Even though I am a senior at Notre Dame, this is the first year I have intently perused your paper during campus elections. It was a depressing experience when I consider my outspoken support for you during your crisis over independence with the Golden Dome.

I was incensed at your flagrant lack of professional journalism in endorsing anyone for SBP. The Observer is one of the very few sources of campus news, it is unfair to all concerned to endorse any candidate for any campus elected office. You thereby take advantage of the uninformed voter by possibly swaying his or her vote for one candidate or another, and, of course, damage the chances of other qualified people who are candidates also.

Such an act as this can only be categorized as unprofessional. Please, for the sake of fairness, refrain from doing this in the future.

Charles R. Hutti Jr.

Editor's note: The Observer does not take advantage of uninformed voters. The editorial board believes it acts in the best interests of the community by complementing its thorough news coverage with a responsible endorsement.

The Observer spent three hours interviewing the candidates and discussing the content of the editorial. It is the paper's responsibility to share its opinions with students, encouraging them to look at issues not presented in the platforms or at the public debate.

Miss Manners

Patience is a virtue in instructing parents

by Judith Martin

Back when the world was orderly, adults possessed all the desirable social attributes and practical skills, and children were eager to acquire them. There were powerful incentives for children to be polite, in their wish to imitate the civilized behavior of those in control and in their anxiety to learn how to control things themselves.

Now that youthful behavior is inexplicably admired by the elders of the society, and a major skill — the ability to understand and use computers — is more often found in the young than the old, what is to make children polite?

Only, Miss Manners is afraid, the same sense of charitable kindness and pity, of noblesse oblige that traditionally required adults to be good to children.

Here, then, is a plea to children whose parents apply to them in the hopes of learning computer skills or some other areas of youthful wisdom, such as teenage slang or hair-feathering. Be patient and tolerant.

Basic teaching skills, when the learning is voluntary, require great amounts of courtesy. (Adults, too, will profit from knowing this, if they should be so fortunate as to be in possession of knowledge their children want.)

The first is a respectful attitude, in the face of the obvious fact that one person is knowledgeable and the other isn't. We pretend that is simply an accident, easily rectified, and that the ignorant person possesses the ability to master the material with diligent application. Remarks such as, "Don't you even know that?" or, "Maybe you'd better not try," not to mention, "How can you be so clumsy (stupid, dense?)" are therefore not allowed.

As in so many issues of manners, the appropriate phrases, "You're doing fine," "This just takes practice," and "Don't be discouraged," emphasize politeness at the expense of literal truth.

Officially, therefore, there is no such thing as a dumb question. The ability to listen respectfully to a — well, to an idiotic interrogative — and to respond to it with apparent thoughtfulness is one of the severest tests of a good teacher.

Allowing the adult to make his own mistakes is another hardship on the clever child. The temptation to take it away and say, "Here, let me do it," is overpowering but must be resisted. How else are adults ever going to grow to be self-sufficient?

And the teacher must steel himself to bear repetition — repetition of questions, of mistakes, of self doubts.

The bright child will suspect that this course of instruction accustoms the instructor to many virtues — respect, generosity of praise, toleration, patience — that characterize the better forms of etiquette. (There are nastier forms of etiquette, such as sweetly encouraging people to make fools of themselves, but those are in the post-graduate program, to be taken after you have mastered the niceties.) Indeed, the best teaching, as the best teachers are tiresomely fond of saying, teach the teacher most.

If that is not sufficient incentive to undertake the education of one's elders with sensitivity for their feelings, Miss Manners will add a threat. At the rate things are going, present children will one day find themselves at the mercy of their own children. So if they don't make the most of their superiority now, the chance will be lost forever.

Dear Miss Manners About two months ago, I mentioned in a letter to an acquaintance that I wanted to have her come to my house for dinner. Later, I saw this person again, and asked her to dinner, but didn't specify a day.

Now I realize that I don't really want her as a dinner guest, but I feel obligated to invite her for a specific day and time, because of my past statements. Would it be rude to refrain from issuing a real invitation?

Gentle Reader Couldn't you possibly have realized and refrained before? No, or you would not have posed the problem.

Miss Manners will allow you to let this matter slide, grouping it with such meaningless conventional statements as, "We must get together some time," although you have overstepped the vagueness which makes the lack of intent understood. But you must, in turn, promise to rid yourself of the careless habit of babbling in a hospitable manner to people you do not wish to entertain.

Dear Miss Manners My mother and father will not let me have parties at home. They say we live too far out in the country, although I have many friends who live in my area.

My friends agree that we could have a good time without a lot of people coming. On my 11th birthday, I had a party in town at a restaurant. But I still want to have a party at home. What should I do? What should I tell my parents — that it's not fair?

Gentle Reader Better tell them more than that — enough to convince them that you could hold a party that was fair to them and to the family property.

Instead of going to your parents with a complaint, go to them with a plan — how many people you would invite (including character recommendations on each), what you would do to prepare, how you would keep the guests entertained, how you would react if one of them got out of hand, and how you would clean up afterward.

Miss Manners assures you that a child with an eager look and a list is practically irresistible. A child with that old whine about things not being fair is highly resistible.

Steve Martin not a funny man in The Lonely Guy

by Chip Block
features columnist

An advertisement for a Steve Martin comedy special on cable television credited him with "an unpredictable brand of humor." Martin proved the advertisement true with various stage gags and funny stories. Unfortunately, his film career has not produced the same unpredictability. I recently viewed Martin's new film "The Lonely Guy." I predicted that it wasn't going to be funny and I was right.

To be honest, I really had hoped the film would be worth watching because I always liked Steve Martin. However, I believe it is time for Steve to return to the stage and leave the movies to Steven Spielberg, bloody shootouts, and teenage sex films designed to squeeze as much nudity into an R-rated picture as possible.

The film tells the story of a man, dumped by his live-in girlfriend, trying to learn the ways of a single, unattached male. Martin plays this poor-soul, trying to beat the monster called loneliness, with Charles Grodin, another lonely guy, as a sidekick. That is all there is to the movie: a two line plot.

Believe it or not, the lack of a plot is not this movie's biggest problem. The movie simply lacks unity. Each scene seems like a one-act vaudeville skit without connecting to any other. "The Lonely Guy" is more like an hour and a half of Steve Martin videos on MTV. There are some running-gags throughout the film, but they are few and not very funny. I can envisage the writers of this film sitting at a large oval table, each saying "hey, wouldn't it be funny if Steve did . . ." and no two writers listening to what the other has to say.

A good example of this picture's lack of continuity can be found in the opening scene. An unseen narrator starts telling the story until the camera zooms in on Martin, who then takes over the narration. About three minutes into the film Martin stops narrating — only to start again, a half hour later. Sometimes Martin even talks directly into the camera, for no apparent reason. It's all rather confusing.

Another problem with this film is the way it treats some very delicate subjects. Scenes meant to create laughter create sadness. The audience can only partially identify with the characters because of the way the material is presented. For example, at one point in the film, Grodin contemplates suicide while standing on the edge of the Manhattan Bridge in New York. While he stands there, three or four bodies go flying by and splash in the river. This is supposed to be a joke on the number of suicides in New York, but if the audience identifies with Grodin's character, they are seriously concerned with his life and won't laugh at the sick humor. If the movie had been a Monty Python film where the fate of the characters really doesn't matter, the flying bodies would be funny. They are not in this movie.

The film does stumble on some interesting viewpoints of loneliness. In one scene Martin wakes up in the morning and starts talking to his pillow. He pretends the pillow is a lady who he has just met, and he makes small talk with his imaginary friend. I wondered how many other men are so lonely that they talk to pillows, or chairs, or even cardboard people. The scene is supposed to be funny but instead it is provocative. Unfortunately, the movie contains a little bit of everything . . . except humor.

Most of the acting cannot be evaluated because of the poor quality of the script. Grodin does sustain his drab character well and Steve Martin gives a few funny expressions. Everybody else is buried with the lousy writing.

I guess the best way to rate this film is to say that you're better off to wait for it to be shown on Home Box Office than to pay four dollars at the movie theater.

The Bindery

A new insight on C.S. Lewis

by Beth DeSchryver
features staff writer

C.S. Lewis' The Dark Tower and Other Stories, contains not only several previously unseen works of Lewis, but also some perceptive insights into the how and why of the author's writing. Lewis' friend and editor, Walter Hooper, prefaces this posthumous collection with commentaries on the unfinished works. The book not only reveals ideas latent in Lewis' mind but the beginnings of concepts and characters which appear in his later, major works.

Almost half the book consists of "The Dark Tower," a fragment of a novel salvaged from C.S. Lewis' notebooks before they were burned.

The story introduces an interesting character, Dr. Elwin Ransom, who states that space travel is impossible at this time, unless one could also travel through time.

The story portrays Dr. Ransom as a secondary figure in the development and use of the chronoscope, an invention which Ransom and his Cambridge friends believe can see into another time. Gradually, they realize that the world viewed through this device does not represent any known past, and it cannot fit the future. The true nature of this Othertime is not realized until Scudamour, one of the machine's inventors, is psychologically transferred into his future Othertime double.

Scudamour finds himself trapped in a horrible world. It is a place where men with giant strings protruding from their foreheads turn others into automatons. They worship an idol consisting of a number of bodies with one huge, evil looking head. Scudamour attempts to discover what this world is and how he can return home.

The original manuscript was missing several pages, and frustratingly breaks off during Scudamour's investigations of Othertime's experiments on time. What this fragment does reveal are some of Lewis' ideas about time and time travel. It also provides an outline of themes and characters which would later be used in the published sequels to Out of the Silent Planet, Perelandra and That Hideous Strength — particularly the latter.

Hooper's preface is especially helpful in pointing out these elements. He provides an essay concerning possible endings Lewis may have had in mind for the novel — based on comments and writings of the author — combined with a knowledge of Lewis' personality.

The book also contains some completed short stories of Lewis, as well as another fragment of a novel, most of which center around psychological or mythological themes. These are approached only superficially, with references to probable sources for Lewis' ideas. Without spoiling the endings of these stories, I will say that they surprise the reader.

Because C.S. Lewis did not revise "The Dark Tower" for publication, it tends to be a bit wordy in places — but it is still enjoyable, suspenseful, and fascinating. I would highly recommend The Dark Tower and Other Stories to anyone — especially to those who have read Lewis' other works. My advice: don't skip the preface. It is invaluable tool for a better understanding of both the stories and the mind of C.S. Lewis.

DePaul avenges loss to Dayton

Associated Press

ROSEMONT, Ill. — Kevin Holmes, Tony Jackson and Dallas Comegys led a second-half surge last night that powered fifth-ranked and revenge-seeking DePaul to a 79-59 college basketball victory over Dayton.

The Blue Demons, 20-2, avenged a 72-71 loss at Dayton Saturday in a game in which they blew an 11-point lead, a defeat that cost them No. 3 ranking.

This time the Blue Demons held fast once they broke open the game and left the Flyers with a 15-9 mark to deal Dayton's NCAA tournament hopes a serious blow.

Holmes finished with 19 points, Jackson had 17 and Comegys added 14. Dayton's Roosevelt Chapman led all scorers with 27 points.

The first half was nip-and-tuck with DePaul finally forging a 32-30 lead on a tip-in by substitute Lemone Lampley.

Comegys scored to open the second half and then Holmes hit two successive baskets and DePaul never relinquished the lead.

With Holmes, Comegys and Jackson scoring with consistency, the Blue Demons suddenly turned the game into a rout.

HOUSTON — Michael Young scored 22 points and Alvin Franklin hit eight of his 16 points in the closing minutes as third-ranked Houston broke away from Rice last night for a 70-54 Southwest Conference victory.

The victory gave the Cougars a 24-3 season record and extended their winning streak to 37 consecutive league games.

Houston is 13-0 in SWC play going into Sunday's showdown against 11th-ranked Arkansas at Hofheinz Pavilion. Rice dropped to 9-15 for the season and 5-9 in conference play.

Houston took control of the first half when Rice went scoreless over a 2:07 span while the Cougars were scoring seven unanswered points.

Franklin turned the game into a rout midway in the second half when he hit four straight baskets for a 59-41 Houston lead.

Akeem Olajuwon scored 13 points for the Cougars, and Mike Cunningham and Tyrone Washington added 15 points for Rice.

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Freshman Tim McCalister, playing with a stress fracture of the right leg, scored 31 points and Jan Pannell dropped in five points in overtime last night to boost eighth-ranked Oklahoma past Kansas 92-82 and into at least a share of the Big Eight championship.

Calvin Thompson drilled a 25-footer at the buzzer to forge a 74-74 tie and keep the Jayhawks alive.

All-American Wayman Tisdale added 28 points for the Sooners, who improved to 23-3 overall with the victory and 10-1 with three games left in the Big Eight. Kansas, which trailed by seven at halftime but briefly led by three in the second half, dropped to 16-8 and 7-4, second place in the league.

Tisdale, who leads the Big Eight with almost 28 points a game, hit a three-point play to put the Sooners on top 70-64 with 1:46 to go. But Kansas freshman Mark Turgeon sank two unanswered baskets and Kelly Knight dunked a follow shot to cut Oklahoma's lead to 71-70 with 30 seconds left.

Kansas fouled McCalister with 17 seconds left, and the freshman guard calmly sank both free throws to make it 73-70.

Michigan-Dearborn and Alabama-Huntsville made you look past the league and gave hope for the rest of the season."

Notre Dame now sports an impressive 21-3-1 overall record and a 13-2-0 CSHL mark with two non-league-regular-season games and two playoff games remaining. And Mike Metzler has played an instrumental part in the team's great success.

"My goal this season was to score 20 goals," he says. "The two I got last weekend gave me that. Now anything else is a bonus to the team. I also hoped we could win 23 to 25 games, and we certainly still have a chance at that."

Along with hockey, Metzler has been a member of the Notre Dame baseball team since his junior year where he has played first base, third base and served as a designated hitter. "I played in five of eight games this fall and did well," he says. "Fall baseball is a stepping stone to the Spring, so I am very optimistic."

As his four years under the Golden Dome slowly wind to a close, Metzler has begun to reflect on his Notre Dame days.

"I'll miss playing the sports," he says. "After this, I can still play, but here the goals are more defined. You're really working for something."

"The friends I've met here, I'll always have. What I'll miss is not being able to see them in person a lot."

Career-wise, Metzler is undecided. He has been interviewing with different companies and hopes to land a job near his home.

"Knowing I made it through Notre Dame and received a degree will provide a real sense of accomplishment that no one can take away," he says.

"We will be part of an elite crowd," he adds. "Too often, though, it is easy to get caught up in that, and be thought of as a stereotype; but I like to be myself. Everyone needs a sense of individuality. You can't be yourself if you're trying to be something you're not. I just want to be Mike Metzler and what he stands for."

Irish

battle might be inactivity. With the NIT not beginning until March 13 at the earliest, the Irish will have to keep sharp the next three weeks if they hope to be ready to face the NIT field — competition that will be much tougher than Manhattan.

But there is one blessing to the upcoming two-games-in-13-days stretch. It will give Phelps' Irish a chance to heal the injuries that have reduced them to a nine-man traveling roadshow and deprived them of any rebounding edge.

"Hopefully we'll have (Tim) Kempton and (JoJo) Buchanan back in a month," said Phelps. "Remember, we were 14-5 when Kempton got hurt. With him in the lineup, we'll be back to that level."

And, just maybe, back here to the Garden for the NIT Championship.

Irish Items— Joe Howard, with 10 points and 5 assists, was the game's MVP... Royal played all 40 minutes. "He was a real plus for us, especially inside," said Phelps.

Steelers' highest-paid player ever Woodley traded to Pittsburgh

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — David Woodley, banished to the bench last season despite quarterbacking the Miami Dolphins to the Super Bowl in 1982, became the highest-paid player in Pittsburgh Steelers history Wednesday after being acquired for a third-round draft choice.

The Dolphins, committed to 1983 rookie sensation Dan Marino, also may get an undisclosed 1985 draft choice from the Steelers, who are worried about the sore right arm of veteran Terry Bradshaw.

"There's a great opportunity here for David to take the reins," Coach Chuck Noll said. "We're not sure... about Terry, but we expect it to be just about the same situation as last season."

Bradshaw, 35, had surgery in March on his right elbow and played in just one game in 1983. He said he won't know until just before training camp if he can play.

Woodley, at 23 the youngest quarterback to start in a Super Bowl, now becomes the likely starter for the only team in NFL history to win four Super Bowls. The only other quarterback on the Steelers' roster is seldom-used Mark Malone.

"I'd like to win a Super Bowl here," said Woodley, benched a month into the Dolphins' 1983 season.

Woodley, a free agent, and his agent, Howard Slusher, negotiated with Steelers' executive Jim Boston for over a week before reaching contract terms. Woodley then had to go through the formality of re-signing with the Dolphins, since he was a free agent, before he could be traded to the Steelers.

If the Steelers had signed Woodley as a free agent, they would have lost two first-round draft picks under the NFL's compensation rules.

Woodley, once a Louisiana State quarterback and termed a better runner than passer, reportedly will earn nearly $700,000 a year for three years.

Once the NFL's lowest-paid starting quarterback, Woodley didn't deny the hefty numbers, nearly twice the reported $350,000 salary that Bradshaw, a future Hall of Famer, was paid last season.

"I spent four years with Miami as the lowest-paid quarterback in the NFL," Woodley said. "I was the third lowest-paid quarterback in the NFL when I played in the Super Bowl. I've had my time."

Steelers President Dan Rooney does not believe Woodley's signing will upset what previously has been a carefully maintained salary structure. Veteran stars Jack Lambert, Franco Harris and John Stallworth are paid considerably less than Woodley.

Bouts

thing the club could not afford with the decrease in attendance.

A conflict with dates was also a big problem. The ACC officials had allowed the event the days of February 18, 20, and 25. The Boxing Club felt that it would be better off holding the fights at a later date. It also felt that the finals should be fought soon after the semifinals. The five-day gap between the 20th and 25th was too much.

The members of the club decided to look for alternatives and found they could use Stepan Center for a minimal fee. The better atmosphere was an added bonus. Scheduling was also made easier as the club was able to get three good dates — a Sunday afternoon (March 4), a Wednesday night (March 7), and a Friday night (March 9).

Realizing that the change in location was not enough to draw more people to the fights, the club also made a push for more fighters and more campus awareness. By sending letters to former fighters who had "retired" and emphasizing the importance of this year's event, the club received an outstanding turnout of boxers.

"We have 60 fighters this year, which is the biggest field since I've been here," says Perino. "We only had 46 last year, so we've had an increase of 14 boxers in just a year."

The group's efforts are also being rewarded as far as advertising the fights is concerned. An attractive poster has drawn a good amount of notice, not only on campus, but also in South Bend.

The club will find out how successful its efforts are when it sells tickets next week. The tickets, which will be sold in the dining halls at lunch next week, cost $3 for the three-day package. The club's ultimate goal is to match 1977's total crowd of 10,000 for the three dates. Last year's attendance figure (5,000 in three nights) was one of the lowest ever.

Irish defeat lowly Manhattan, avoid late upset attempt, 63-58

By CHRIS NEEDLES
Observer Special Writer

NEW YORK — Perhaps it was fitting that Digger Phelps came back to Madison Square Garden last night for the first time in three years. In his last visit here, you may remember, Phelps became Public Enemy No. 1 in Tulsa, Okla., because of his supposed bias toward Syracuse while doing the color commentary during the 1981 NIT Championship telecast.

Now, Phelps hopes to return here again in about a month for the NIT Final Four — this time as a coach. Of course, his crippled Notre Dame team will have to win a few more games between now and then before they can start dreaming of a two-night stand on Broadway.

None of those games, however, will be as easy as last night's contest against Manhattan. Or, as easy as last night's game should have been. The Irish sleepwalked, 63-58, over the lowly Jaspers before 9,592 boozed-up fans at the Garden. The victory raised Notre Dame's record to 16-10 and pretty much clinched a spot in next month's NIT — as long as tournament officials just look at the record, and not the scores of individual games like this one.

"We're a young team and we needed a win like this on the road," said Phelps after the game. "We lost our composure a little bit at the end and missed a few free throws, but I'm happy with it."

Notre Dame used 24 points from senior Tom Sluby and a solid 15 points and 8 rebounds from freshman Donald Royal to fight off a scrappy Manhattan team that now has won just eight games in 26 outings this season.

The Jaspers' Tim Cain battled a tough collapsing Irish defense all night, managing 20 points and drawing rave reviews from Phelps.

"That Cain is a winning player," he said in regard to the 6-8 junior forward. "He reminds me a lot of Chris Mullin of St. John's the way he hustles and never gives up."

Notre Dame clearly was the superior team, but just couldn't shake Manhattan. The Jaspers shot 55 percent for the game, held their own on the boards, and kept mistakes to a minimum (13 turnovers). Unfortunately for them, the Irish committed just 8 turnovers and hit enough free throws (27-36) to stave off the upset.

The Irish led 30-25 at halftime, and stretched their advantage to 11 points, 48-37, with 6:58 left before Manhattan began pecking away. The Jaspers got within three points with 12 seconds left, but were out of timeouts and thus could not stop the clock.

Now, with just two games remaining (Marquette Saturday and Dayton on March 3) in the regular season, Notre Dame's toughest upcoming Forward Donald Royal and the rest of the Irish held off a late rally by the Jaspers of Manhattan last night, winning the game 63-58 and raising their record to 16-10. Royal scored 15 points and pulled down 8 rebounds in 40 minutes for Notre Dame.

Bengal Bouts hope popularity returns

One of Notre Dame's oldest athletic traditions will be facing a crucial test in the next two weeks as it tries to stop a drop in popularity that could eventually affect its survival.

That tradition — the Bengal Bouts — is entering its 54th and, perhaps, most important year with a new location and a determined effort to assure the Bouts' survival for 54 more years. However, the Notre Dame Boxing Club, which supplies the fighters, faces a tough fight as it tries to deal with dwindling student support for its attempt to raise money for the Bengal Missions in Bangladesh.

"This is a very crucial year for the fights," says Angelo Perino, one of the presidents of the Boxing Club. "(It) promises to be one of the most exciting, action-packed shows ever, but it all depends on the students' support to keep the program going."

The members of the Boxing Club are not sitting around waiting to see if the students and South Bend residents show up, however. They have been searching for advertising and trying to increase student awareness of the Bouts. Also, in an attempt to eliminate some major expenses, they have decided to move the fights out of the ACC and into Stepan Center.

The move could prove to be the boost the Bouts need. Holding the fights in the ACC was becoming more of a burden than a benefit. Although the facilities are very comfortable and convenient for NBC, who televised the Bouts until last year, the excited, "smoker-type" atmosphere was lacking.

"The atmosphere in the ACC was a bit too conservative," explains Perino. "It has those plush seats that let people lay back and relax too much. Also, it's so big the crowd noise gets lost."

By moving the fights to Stepan, the Boxing Club hopes to return to the excited atmosphere of the Old Fieldhouse, the site of the fights before they were moved to the ACC. The temporary stands that had been used for hockey games will be moved into the building, supplying seating for approximately 4,000 persons. The acoustics of the building should provide for a very noisy event.

Finding a better fighting atmosphere was not the only reason for the move, however. There were also financial and scheduling problems, as the rent was increasing and the number of available dates was decreasing. It was costing the Boxing Club thousands of dollars to use the arena for three nights, some-

The 1984 Bengal Bouts are fast approaching and are set for March 4, 7 and 9. This year, the 54th annual fighting of the Bouts will prove to be a particularly important one as they have been moved to Stepan Center from the ACC in an effort to increase attendance. Mike Sullivan's story above.

Senior captain

Metzler provides leadership

Mike Metzler may not wear a "C" on his jersey, symbolizing "captain," but the senior right wing from Niagara Falls, N. Y., is certainly a respected leader of the Notre Dame hockey team both on and off the ice.

"Mike has excellent leadership qualities," says head coach Lefty Smith. "He's a hard worker with a great attitude. He makes the most of himself as far as the team is concerned, and I think they respect him a great deal."

Metzler first tied on a pair of skates when he was four years old, and a year later, he was playing organized hockey.

"We had a big back yard, so my father always built a rink," says the 5-11, 175-pound marketing major. "I enjoyed skating, so I thought I would try hockey."

The Ontario Minor Hockey Association was Metzler's home league until his sophomore year in high school. The league featured mainly Canadian competition which added a big plus to Metzler's early development as a player.

"When you're young, you learn most of your skills, and from then on, you just develop them," he says. "Playing Canadians made each player develop a lot faster, so when we played teams from the States, it showed, because we beat them badly."

After ten years of competition in the OMHA against teams from Toronto, St. Catherine's, Hamilton and the like, Metzler decided it was time to look toward the future.

"I wanted to go to college," he says. "The travelling was demanding and I needed more time to think about schoolwork, so I decided to play for my high school."

While playing for Niagara Falls High School, Metzler twice scored seven goals in one game. And during his junior and senior seasons, he won the Section Six Federation Hockey League scoring championship.

"It was a big thing for me," he says, "a real accomplishment."

Along with earning three varsity letters in hockey and the honor of captain his final two seasons, Metzler also garnered four letters as a member of the golf team, and another four as a member of the baseball team.

When it came time for college, Metzler hoped to play hockey at Notre Dame. "I was hoping for a scholarship," he says. "But that was right when Notre Dame imposed the moratorium on scholarships, so when I talked to Lefty (Smith), he wasn't sure if they would have hockey. I would just have to apply and see what happened."

That made his situation a little more difficult, but when the acceptance letter arrived, things began to fall into place.

"I was really pleased when I was accepted," he says. "It was the best school I applied to, so I figured — go for it."

As a freshman walk-on, Metzler saw no varsity action, but was happy just to have made the team. A deep thigh bruise, suffered shortly after Christmas, then kept him off the ice until the season's last week of practice.

"Sophomore year I was optimistic," says Metzler. "I played in nearly half of the games, and did fairly well." He contributed four goals in ten games. "I wanted to play more, but we had a good team that year, and just being a part of it was fun."

Despite playing in 35 of the 36 games last season and scoring seven goals and dishing out eight assists, the eventual announcement of hockey's drop to club status was a real disappointment for Metzler.

"I thought I had a chance for a scholarship this season," he says. "I worked hard to get where I was, and with the dropping of the varsity program, it was lost."

Playing this season in the Central States Collegiate Hockey League, Metzler was not sure what to expect. "We had some good players coming back, and I heard our schedule was supposed to be pretty good," he says. "After the first weekend with Illinois State and Northwestern, though, I had serious doubts about club hockey." The Irish outscored the two opponents 37-4 in three games.

"Knowing we would play better teams like St. Thomas, Lake Forest,
