University alumnus serves as Mideast intermediary

By PATRICK MULLEN

The United States government and the Palestinian Liberation Organization held unofficial negotiations between August 1981 and May 1982, The New York Times reported last week, and John Edwin Mroz, a 1970 Notre Dame graduate, served as the mediator for these undisclosed talks.

From 1975 to 1981, Mroz was executive vice president and director of Middle East studies at the International Peace Academy. It was in this capacity that Mroz wrote the book Beyond Security which consists of private opinions of various Arab and Israeli officials about the Middle East conflict. Mroz compiled the information during various trips to the area.

In his book, Mroz concludes among other things that peacemaking efforts are hindered greatly by "publicly enunciated demands to an adversary to accept some rigid preconditions prior to formal negotiations."

This includes Israeli demands that its right to exist be recognized by the PLO before talks can be opened between the two groups.

This "recognition" of Israel is precisely what Mroz was trying to obtain from the Palestinians.

In an interview with The New York Times, Mroz said "If I could get Arab recognition of Israel, there's nothing I could do that would be more important in my life."

Father Robert Griffin, University chaplain, remembers Mroz when he was at Notre Dame, and recalls him as a "very pleasant and open young man" and "a natural politician."

Griffin said Mroz was also very ambitious and interested in doing good in his life. According to Griffin, Mroz probably had John F. Kennedy's saying "Ask not what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country' chiseled over his bed."

Mroz, a government major specializing in Soviet affairs while at Notre Dame, was a very active and energetic student.

In a time when student activity on campus was abundant, Mroz was one of the most industrious students.

As a sophomore, Mroz was chairman of the Second Annual Sophomore Literary Festival. In background information in story below

what Information Services Director Richard Conklin remembers as one of the best years in the festival's history, Mroz brought Norman Mailer, Joseph Heller, Ralph Ellison, Peter DeVries, and Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. to Notre Dame.

Norman Mailer, a personal friend of Mroz, even screened the international premiere of his movie, Beyond The Law, at Stepan Center.

In 1968, Mroz became chairman of the Student Union Academic Commission. According to the 1969 edition of Dome, Notre Dame's yearbook, Mroz "built the SUAC from what was essentially a one-man operation to an organization encompassing more than 100 students." During his time as chairman the commission sponsored an Abortion Conference, a controversial Pornography Conference which achieved national attention, and a Distinguished Speakers Series including such prestigious speakers as Al Capp, Charles Schulz, Ronald Reagan, and Edward Kennedy, a personal friend of Mroz.

In 1969, Mroz ran for Student Body President on what he called the "progressive ticket." His platform for the election featured a commitment to academic freedom and a proposal to establish referenda on

US-PLO negotiations fall short of success

By PATRICK MULLEN
Senior Staff Reporter

The negotiations between the P.L.O. and the United States, which were not revealed until last week, lasted from August 1981 to May 1982 and were finally ended when the Israeli army invaded southern Lebanon in June.

The problems between the Palestinians and the Israelis remain unsolved to this day, largely due to the difficulty in resolving formalities such as P.L.O. recognition of Israel and consequent U.S. refusal to establish a direct dialogue with the P.L.O.

At the time, John Mroz was vice president and director of Middle East Studies at the International Peace Academy in New York. The academy is an institute that provides training in diplomacy and peacemaking for diplomats and military officials from 114 nations.

In conjunction with the Academy, Mroz went on various information-gathering missions to the Mid East and spoke with more than 175 government leaders and non-government officials in order to update the understanding of the private thoughts and views of these various officials. As a result of these private talks, Mroz wrote the book Beyond Security, which received good reviews among both the Arabs and the Israelis.

It was due to this book that Mroz was approached by a member of the P.L.O. in New York with close ties to P.L.O. head Yasser Arafat. The P.L.O. wanted to negotiate with the U.S. using Mroz as an intermediary.

Since the Ford Administration established the U.S. policy in 1975, the United States government has refused to recognize the Palestinian group unless they recognize Israel's right to exist and accept United Nations Resolutions 242 and 338.

Because of this policy and the United States's close ties with Israel, the U.S. government has not been able to join in any direct talks with the P.L.O., an impediment which many Arab leaders find restrictive in attempts to establish peace in the area. Mroz's activities, in fact, were not official and he was not paid for his involvement as an intermediary.

The negotiations were initiated after then-Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig got President Reagan's approval, but were kept confidential in order to avoid likely Israeli protest. The Israelis are not fond of any kind of talks between the U.S. and the P.L.O. Former Ambassador to the U.N. Andrew Young resigned after it was found he had held an unauthorized meeting with the P.L.O. representative there.

Flying back and forth between Washington and Beirut, Mroz held 50 meetings for 400 total hours with Arafat. The effort was all but forgotten in Washington because Haig and others hadn't had much confidence in the results of the initiative at its outset.

The talks, however, almost resulted in an agreement in late May when the P.L.O. promised to reply to the latest U.S. proposal. Unfortunately, no reply was ever given after the Israelis invaded Lebanon on June 6.

The U.S. attempted to re-establish negotiations by sending Mroz to meet Arafat in Tunis, but Arafat refused to meet with him. The Palestinians felt as if they had been betrayed by the U.S. when it gave the Israelis "a green light" to invade Lebanon.

Shange initiates Literary Festival

By CHRISTOPHER RYAN

"I am compelled to write because it's in my genes," said Ntozake Shange, a black writer and the first of the six literary figures to be featured during this week's Sophomore Literary Festival.

The writer also told last night's audience at Washington Hall, "I'm not searching for why I write, it just comes to me."

After reading some of her works last night, many in the audience would have to agree that her talent is purely natural and certainly something that "just comes" to her, for the entire audience seemed to be mesmerized by the portions of her works that she read for over an hour.

The works that she read, mostly poems, engrossed the audience not necessarily because of their style or form, but more because of her feelings about the black's status in the United States and around the world. Her poetry revealed the many injustices that blacks, particularly black women, must bear and suffer in everyday life. A dominating tone of anger and rage over the plight of blacks around the globe was the prevailing message that Shange successfully got across to her audience.

It is said that any writer who reads their works before an audience is capable of bringing out an added dimension for the audience toward both experiencing and understanding the work. Standing alone behind a simple blue podium, Shange proved to be an entertaining performer, as she successfully made her written words come alive for her audience. Making use of an expressive tone of voice, as well as hand gestures and facial expressions, the writer brought forth her poetry more vividly and with added meaning.

Shange read excerpts from some of her well-known published works, including poetry from her most popular work For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide/ When the Rainbow is Enuf, a collection of poems exploring the everyday trials of black women.

In Brief

A dozen governors will discuss the crisis concerning the possible shutdown of interstate highway projects with Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole and most of them, in Washington for a winter meeting, plan trips to the Capitol to pressure local congressmen. State and federal officials warn the entire construction season may be lost because of a political standoff in Congress blocking release of $5 billion in road money. But Indiana Gov. Robert Orr, head of the National Governors' Association's transportation committee, said the money may be locked up another three to six months, which he called "disastrous." — AP

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger told a skeptical group of the nation's governors yesterday defense spending does not contribute materially to the federal deficit. But the governors offered a plan to cut $60 billion from the military over five years to cut the red ink by nearly two-thirds. Virginia Gov. Charles Robb, a Democrat, said not a great deal has changed in the past two decades: "The names of the weapons systems have changed. But two things remain the same. The major threat is still the Soviet Union and the major problem is money." Weinberger dismissed criticisms of the economic impact of defense spending, saying it is in part responsible for the economic recovery. — AP

A 6-foot-long mountain lion tried to vault a moving car on Interstate 15 in Helena, Mont., but instead was hit by the car and killed. "At first it looked like he was going to hit the windshield, and I thought, 'What am I going to do with a lion in my lap?'" said the driver, Charles Lidman. The 130-pound lion struck the grille on the left front of Lidman's car Wednesday night and was knocked back into the median and died, Lidman said. Lidman estimated the damage to the vehicle at about $1,500. — AP

SMC parents weekend successful

By DIANNE McBRIEN
News Staff

The 1984 Saint Mary's Sophomore Parents Weekend was a well-planned success, according to sophomores and their parents interviewed yesterday.

Most parents cited the Class Mass, celebrated Saturday afternoon in the Church of Loretto, as one of the weekend's high points. "I was very impressed with the Mass," commented Pat Cain of West Hartford, Connecticut. "It was lovely."

Other activities were praised by both parents and their daughters. All said Saturday evening's dinner dance was well-organized and enjoyable. "We had a wonderful time at the dance. We were impressed to see how many parents turned out," remarked Carol and Jim McCauley of Houston.

Other parents enjoyed the Faculty Open House. "It was great that it was all in one building — I thought we would have to visit each department in its building," said Marie Bettinger of Coldwater, Mich. Her husband Dick added, "We enjoyed meeting our daughter's teachers. Now we know who she's talking about." Their daughter Mary Lynn said the Sophomore Variety Show was a success. "I found out that I know a lot of people with a lot of talent."

What did parents like best about the weekend? "Everything," said Mary Jean and Richard Grammens of Findlay, Ohio. Commented Jack Ahern of Park Ridge, Illinois, father of Emily: "It was a blast!" Parents agreed with their daughters that the best part of the weekend was the chance to see one another.

Chairman Mary Beth Lavezzorio was pleased with the weekend. She said all events were well attended, especially the dinner dance which was attended by 1,003 persons. Lavezzorio noted the weekend was the activity most participated in so far by the Class of '86, and said any problems in organization had been minimal and were easily solved by the committee. "It was well worth the time," she said. "I think we can call this one of the best weekends ever."

Marine base labeled vulnerable to terrorists

Associated Press

WILMINGTON, N.C. — Camp Lejeune, the North Carolina home base of the U.S. Marine contingent off the coast of Lebanon, is virtually unprotected against the kind of terrorist attack that killed 241 troops in Beirut, a newspaper report says.

The Wilmington Morning Star said its reporters entered the base without passes through gates routinely open to traffic. The reporters, driving two vans laden with empty boxes to simulate explosives, were unchallenged entering the base or while on it, the newspaper said.

To show how easily the base can be infiltrated by outsiders, the reporters taped letters to the underside of the toilet tank top in a bathroom in the home of a senior 2nd Division officer and atop a locker in the women's toilet on the second floor of 2nd Division headquarters.

Maj. Gen. Alfred M. Gray Jr., commander of the 2nd Division from which the Marine peacekeeping force was chosen, said the Marines were aware of the newspaper's investigation but decided to let it proceed as a counterterrorism exercise.

"We were aware of the plan from the early stages," he said, adding that the information came from military intelligence as well as FBI, state and local law enforcement officials. Gray said there are security measures on the base which are not apparent and that the Marines did not want to invest the time, money and manpower to counter something that was not an actual threat to the base.

However, the newspaper quoted a source with the FBI in Wilmington as saying the bureau had no knowledge of any such probe.

The empty boxes in each of the vans could have held enough dynamite to seriously damage a building if the vans penetrated the interior, an explosives expert with the Wilmington Police Department said.

At no time did the investigative team encounter concrete-filled barrels, concrete barriers, bomb-sniffing dogs or other security measures like those put into place at key Washington buildings.

Students among volunteers aiding neighborhood revitalization work

By TIMOTHY GIANOTTI
News Staff

Revitalizing neighborhoods is what National Housing Services is all about, and its people are hard at work in South Bend — especially in the northeast section of town.

Coping with such problems as transient student residence, lower income occupants, apathetic and negligent landlords, high interest rates on home loans, government destruction of salvageable houses and expansion of local institutions — namely the St. Joseph Hospital — the NHS of South Bend embarks on its sixth year of community service.

"We are fighting an uphill battle," temporary Development Coordinator Margarita Howard says. Between the politics and the apathy, Howard feels she is fighting a multi-fronted war.

One problem is the lack of money to work with. NHS is locally funded and operated, and the dollar is not always easy to find. In order to achieve reform in "target areas" (specific, bounded residential sites), the organization must depend on businesses, financial institutions and individuals for contributions. In most cases, residences of such areas cannot change their environment without help.

Help comes in many different packages. One of the foremost means of resident assistance is low-interest, long-term loans which provide the means for structural, cosmetic and operational renovation in dilapidated houses. But even when banks are willing to loan capital at a three or four percent annual rate, problems don't automatically vanish. Many people cannot afford the payments.

The NHS counters this by offering loans to residents who cannot meet the normal commercial rates. These loans, called "revolving loans," design their repayment terms to fit the ability of the borrower to pay. Theoretically, there is no reason why any home within a target area could not be brought up to code.

These loans also encourage something which is considered essential to the revitalization of communities — home ownership.

Much of the present housing is rental, and the majority of landlords are not concerned with upkeep of the property, Howard says. She sees these "absentee landlords" as major contributors to the run-down state of many residential areas.

Home ownership, as opposed to rental, is much more conducive to the pride of a neighborhood, says Hesther Herring, a student leader of NHS involvement. The NHS endeavors to spark local initiative for action, and cannot succeed without community support. Thus, neighborhood pride is a needed motivating force.

Permanent figures in the community are more willing to put in time and effort than someone who is temporary or "just passing through," adds Howard. This is why Howard sees student off-campus residence as a real obstacle to her efforts.

"Most of the neighborhood has a problem with students," she said. "They don't feel responsibility to the community." Another problem confronting the northeast area in particular is the expansion of St. Joseph's Hospital. Need for new building space and parking facilities is forcing many people out of their homes. The NHS is presently working on the relocation of these persons, but complications are anticipated and feared.

"It's going to have a horrible effect," Howard predicts. Work for relocation has already begun, but Howard notes, "Cost might be prohibitive."

Despite the problems the hospital is causing now, Howard anticipates that it will eventually be a supporter of the revitalization campaign.

The NHS is a local, autonomous suborganization of the Neighborhood Reinvestment Program, a public, non-profit corporation based in Washington, D.C. It is one of 172 such suborganizations across the country.

Any questions concerning the campaign for the revitalization of local communities and opportunities for students to help can be addressed to Herring.

Since its publication, it has also been adapted for Broadway.

After reading portions of her works for over an hour, Shange opened herself up to questions and discussion from her audience. The ensuing period brought out many of her feelings as a literary figure and writer.

Commenting on the status of black women in the United States, a theme of many of her poetic works, the writer said the status of black women is currently in a "precarious state" and getting worse. In the last decade, she said, an optimistic view of improving the black women's status has diminished considerably.

LeMans gets Mass

By LAUREEN WOLFE
News Staff

The first of many Sunday evening Masses in the LeMans Hall chapel will be celebrated Mar. 11 as the result of a petition signed by approximately 400 LeMans residents requesting a Mass there.

"I think we should have a Mass here because it is a beautiful chapel," said junior Anne Gallagher, a LeMans resident. "For a dorm with such a large population, LeMans should have its own Mass."

Senior Bridgett Dolan, a LeMans R.A., also saw the chapel as an appropriate setting for a Sunday Mass. "First of all, it's a beautiful chapel and very traditional. Secondly, it's ridiculous to not have a Mass in LeMans when there are 500 students in the hall. The 7 p.m. Mass at Holy Cross is crowded and we need another Mass."

Convenience is another aspect LeMans residents were looking for. "It will be easier since I live in the dorm," said freshman Suzanne Hammer. "I found walking all the way over to Regina Hall to be a hassle."

According to Father Thomas Reed, Campus Ministry received the students' petition Feb. 6. Campus Ministry then discussed with student government and Regina Hall staff the possibility of moving the 10 p.m. Regina Mass to LeMans Hall. The musicians and ministers of the Mass agreed and are now discussing alternations of the chapel.

More space has to be made for musicians and seating has to be rearranged for a community-type setting. Campus Ministry wants to have the chapel set appropriately for a Vatican II liturgy. Father Reed would like to have the congregation seated in such a way that everyone can see one another rather than staring at each others' backs. He would also like to have the seats closer to the altar.

Saint Mary's students can now attend Sunday Masses in LeMans Hall chapel by the first Sunday of Lent.

important issues.

Mroz lost the run-off election to Phil McKenna after having won the preliminary election by 10 votes.

After losing the election, Mroz worked for his opponent and helped establish the liaison office between Notre Dame and Saint Mary's. He was also involved in the 1968 Mock Convention.

To two of Mroz's acquaintances, his participation in the Middle East negotiations comes as no surprise.

Lynn Leone, a student at the Notre Dame Law School, remembers Mroz as an outstanding student and inspiring person as well as an "affable guy." Mroz, who Leone says was the kind of person who wins "Mr. Congeniality" contests, was extremely well-known and well-liked.

She credits him for her involvement in student politics, which started her interest in campus and national politics that still lasts today.

According to Leone, Mroz had the same effect on many other students.

Dennis Olechna, who is working on a doctoral dissertation at Notre Dame, has known Mroz for 20 years. He describes Mroz as a "very involved individual," and says Mroz has reached this level of international importance because he is willing to work hard and volunteer time. According to Olechna, Mroz has the ability to "infuse himself into situations and meet a lot of people."

After graduating Mroz went back to his home state of Massachusetts to get a Masters degree at Northeastern University. While there he taught political science and, says Leone, he had the same inspiring effect on his students there as he had on his classmates while at Notre Dame.

Mroz went on to receive a Ph.D. from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy.

Since then, Mroz has participated in scores of conferences and policy planning groups, and has been in-involved in many community civic and education organizations.

He has been a member of the International Civil Aviation Organization, a panel of the United Nations, and has been an active member of the Notre Dame Club of Boston.

He is currently president of the Institute for East-West Security Studies, an organization which he co-founded. The institute does policy-oriented research on military, economic, and political aspects of security.

According to Olechna, Mroz is still active in government and was recently involved in doing background research for the Conference for European Security.

Notre Dame election system needs change

Two weeks ago, Notre Dame students went through the process of electing a student body president. Usually the elections generate little excitement among students, who soon after election day forget all about it. This year's election had a new twist: a write-in ticket that filled the last days of the campaign with controversy.

Brian McKeon

Two students, billing themselves as The Alternative, entered the race at the final hour. Claiming they had missed the mandatory candidates' meeting, they decided to attempt a write-in campaign. Simple, right? Just go out and encourage students to ignore the names on the ballot, and write in theirs instead.

However, Chapin Engler and John Dardis, "The Alternative" candidates, discovered that they faced a roadblock. Because of a clause in the election rules, only candidacies which have been declared by a certain date are allowed on the ballot, and then counted by election officials. Otherwise, write-in hopefuls must plead their case before the Student Senate and hope for approval from that body. Fortunately for Engler and Dardis, they received the senate's okay.

Even with senate approval, there remained a small problem. Any student wanting to cast a vote for Engler and Dardis had to write "The Alternative" on their ballots; nothing else would be counted in the final tally. A number of ballots written for "Chapin and John" were thrown out. This seems rather questionable. Who did the election officials think the votes were for?

In regular elections in this country, voters have the option to ignore the names on the ballot and write in the candidate of their choice. In some states, this can be a difficult process. Nevertheless, the choice remains in the hands of the voter. Any ballot marked with a person's name will be registered in the final tabulations.

Not so at Notre Dame. If I were to walk into my dorm and write-in a vote for myself, my ballot would be disqualified. Why? My name, clearly written on the ballot, would leave little doubt as to my preference. Unfortunately, without official sanction of my candidacy, I would be out of luck.

The rules in place prohibiting write-in candidates serve their purpose. This provision seeks to give structure and order to the campaign. Obviously, election officials don't want a write-in campaign spending more money or time allowed the other candidates. Fair enough. But if all candidates play by the rules, what difference does it make if they made it to some boring meeting?

Historically, write-in candidates have little chance of victory. Their main effect is to siphon off votes from the other candidates. The great appeal of a write-in vote lies in the fact that the voter may register a protest; if the voter dislikes the choices on the ballot, he or she may write in any desired name.

This process is all part of the crazy game we in democratic societies call elections. As the rules stand now, Notre Dame's system seems undemocratic. A student's vote will be disregarded if it does not select one of the "official" candidates. Thus, the voter's choice becomes extremely limited. We are told that we may only vote for a, b or c. Period.

Notre Dame already has enough rules restricting our freedom. Let's at least change one rule over which the students still retain some control.

P.O. Box Q

Right stuff?

Dear Editor:

The other day it was quite amusing to read a flier promulgated to say the "ND Conservatives for the Right Stuff." The flier, which represents 100 percent rhetoric and 0 percent substance, clearly intended to encourage conservative students to sign up for the Mock Convention, as Glenn delegates, by equating their candidate with Ronald Reagan.

The assertion that John Glenn is the conservative Democratic choice, in step with Ronald Reagan, is mistaken. None of the Democratic candidates are their party's version of Reagan, including Glenn who has blasted the Reagan administration throughout his campaign.

We believe the Democratic candidate who would most appeal to moderate-conservatives at Notre Dame is Reubin Askew. Askew stands apart from Glenn and other moderate to liberal Democrats on such key issues as the economy, foreign trade, abortion and defense spending.

We would like to encourage all Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students to take part in the upcoming Mock Convention, and we would hope that they, when choosing a candidate to support, would focus less on rhetoric and various polls and more on the man, his record of public service and his stands on the issues.

Dented car

Dear Editor:

On Monday, Feb. 20, I went into the D-2 parking lot on the northeast part of campus to get my car for an errand run. When I finally found it, I was taken aback by the dents I saw on the hood. Surely I had to be dreaming, but no, I also found footprints which undoubtedly caused the damages.

Instantly I felt anger. But within a few hours, I felt disappointment — not only because I will have to pay for the damages, but also because such destruction probably was the result of tomfoolery on the part of a fellow Notre Dame student.

Done in drunken stupor? Perhaps. Done as part of a childish game? Maybe. But done, nevertheless, with no conceivable reason at all.

As a student at this great Catholic university and a member of a quite civilized society, I think if our moral standards do not dictate to us that jumping on another's car is an infringement on and abuse of rights, then common sense should tell us that such action is bound to do damage. No one enjoys finding new dents, bumps and bruises whenever he or she goes into the parking lot. I know I don't. For my blue Honda Accord sedan, this was the second time in less than four months.

I make this humble, though probably far-fetched, request: If you have any sense of morals and were involved in this little incident, I ask that you please help me pay for the damages. Otherwise, I ask that you please refrain from such nonsensical activity in the future.

Alcohol abuse

Dear Editor:

There seems to be very little discussion about what the alcohol problem really is. Certainly everyone admits there is a problem, but what is it?

The problem, in my opinion, is this community's reliance upon alcohol as a social lubricant; a social crutch if you will. The feeling among the students is that alcohol is somehow necessary to life at Notre Dame.

The reaction of the administration to the "Problem" and the reaction of the students is precisely that . . . reactionary. We seek to regulate a symptom, rather than attacking the root cause itself.

As a former graduate of the University, I was surprised at the drinking on campus when I returned last year. Not that it occurred at all, but the fervor and wild abandon with which the students attacked their alcoholic rations.

The common attitude was that of a Hawkeye Pierce: "to drink to escape the horrors of war." Anyone who thinks that Hawkeye didn't have a problem is sadly mistaken.

I think it is time to address the questions of social life on campus, the dearth of cultural events both at the University and in South Bend and the ways in which the students employ keggers and cocktail parties to fill the gap.

Such an investigation might provide useful information on how we can reduce the importance of alcohol at Notre Dame without resorting to the "overt regulation" students fear.

Campus comments: Who is your favorite professor?

Photos by Thom Bradley

Dr. Emil Hofman. He really helps the freshmen get involved in the whole ND life, as well as teaching chemistry.

Prof. Steven Hurtt. He was my first architecture prof, and the one who made me realize that architecture was what I wanted to major in.

Amalia de la Torre. She has a cute way of teaching class because she gets confused with English the same way we get confused with Spanish.

Professor Harrington (Economics 115) is my favorite. He presents the required material clearly, and even injects some humor into the course.

Edward Cronin. He takes personal interest in his students and teaches wisdom, not only the memorization of facts.

It's spring — and it's baseball time again

by Chris Fraser
features columnist

Hope, they say, springs eternal. Truer words were never spoken for the loyal baseball fan who emerges from hibernation each year about this time armed with old predictions about the new season. Surely, the fan argues, their will be joy in Mudville this year.

These baseball fans — and I proudly include myself in this category — are something of a different breed. Yes, we watch football and probably basketball and maybe even bowling or golf once in a while, but our hearts are tied to the grand old game. We do not care about USFL scores but we desperately want the early reports from spring training.

To the non-baseball fan, it is often hard to understand why this game, this game where the majority of the players spend most of their time either lounging on the bench or sunning themselves in the field, attracts so much attention. The game, such people claim, is slow. The players, they say, are lazy.

Ah, but rather than lament it, we baseball fans relish the leisurely pace our game provides. We enjoy the strategy, the cleverness, the chance to grab a hot dog and a beer between innings. We see the art in 1-0 games and we love such things as pine-tar controversies that drag on for months — especially when either one goes against the hated Yankees.

Hard-nosed football fans scream for broken bones and flashy passers. But baseball fans are content with a morning sports page filled with last night's boxscores. And we eagerly look forward to the Sunday paper which provides the opportunity to examine the batting average of each and every major league player. What more could anyone ask for?

Some people have said that baseball fans are obsessed with statistics. This is true. But as any political observer can assure you, statistics are handy tools that can be twisted to tell you just what you want to hear. Such a trick is quite useful for the fan who wants to believe, say, that the Cubs will win the pennant.

Of course, baseball fans are characterized by such unnatural optimism. Perhaps it is for this reason that spring training is such an exciting time of year for the lover of the national pastime. Indeed, before each season, we are certain our team is headed for the World Series and before each game we are convinced our team will win.

Alas, the experienced fan knows that their loyalty often leads to frustration. It seems that disappointment is inevitable in this sport because baseball fans, unlike the fans of some sports, link themselves inexorably to the fate of one and only one team. Thus, while fans of golf or tennis enjoy marveling at how the skills and talents of professionals compare with their own meager weekend efforts, we baseball fans live or die based on the fortunes of our team.

This, I know, is not always easy.

As a lifelong fan of the New York Mets, I have been forced to defend the feeble performance of my team on more than one occasion. I must confess that there have been a few times when I've vowed to divert my loyalty or even to give up the sport entirely, but it just doesn't work. Once you have a team, you're stuck with it. I suppose I'm lucky I'm not a Cubs fan.

I can remember way back in 1969 when it was my team that was on top. Though a mere second-grader, I raced home from school to catch the last few innings of the World Series games between my beloved Mets and the Orioles from Baltimore. If only I'd known how good I had it. I didn't even have any champagne to toast their amazing victory. But, like a true fan, I can still name the starting lineup.

I was a little older when my Mets returned to the Series in '73. But this time they fell to Reggie Jackson and the Oakland As. Sure, that hurt but it was better than the next 10 years which were marked by five managers, disasterous trades, and more last-place finishes than I care to remember.

Still, I can't help but love the game. I love the home runs and the strike outs, the stolen bases and the relief pitchers. I love to hate the Yankees and Pete Rose. I love the Cracker Jacks and the funny uniforms. I love the heckling crowds and the managers who kick dirt on umpires.

Oh yes, and I especially love it all this year because I just know the Mets are going all the way.

'From dreams to reality'

by Rebecca Hetland
features staff writer

The Black Cultural Arts Festival has traditionally been a way for the Notre Dame black community, though small in numbers, to let the campus know it is alive and thriving. This year's festival, with its theme, "From Dreams to Reality: Directions for Black America," is no exception. It is a celebration of the contribution of blacks past and present, coinciding with national Black History Month, and has been a opportunity for many students to display exceptional talent.

During the month of February, Notre Dame's black community, made up of 145 graduate and undergraduate students, has participated in and enjoyed the many events which have been staged. Piper Griffin, president of the Black Cultural Arts Council (BCAC), explained that the BCAC and the Black Cultural Arts Festival committee were formerly one in the same, but because of the growing popularity of the festival, it was decided that the two should be made separate organizations, with the BCA Festival being run by its own chairman. This year, Ruby Anderson, a Notre Dame senior, has assumed the position.

"This is a very important year for blacks since 1984 marks the 30th anniversary of the famous Brown vs. Board of Education case, as well as 20th anniversary of the Civil Rights Act of 1964," said Anderson.

Consequently, the main focus of this year's festival is on the black political sphere. A special guest speaker, Mary Francis Berry, made a great impact on her audience as she spoke about the rights of today's blacks and the changes that have taken place. Berry, a civil rights commissioner who gained national attention when she filed suit against President Reagan after he fired her from her Carter-appointed office, won her suit, and in doing so, established the independence of the commission from presidential jurisdiction.

Among other events being staged throughout the month, the most recent took place last Saturday: the annual talent show, which was held in the Library Auditorium. Senior Hester Herring served as chairman for the event which was attended by approximately 200 people.

The talent show, always a highlight of the festival, featured a variety of acts ranging from solos and duets to calypso dancing and a spoof on Boy George and the Bees.

The atmosphere was informal and amicable, with emcee David McGaffey keeping the audience grinning between acts. Phyllis Washington's Calypso dancing seemed to convey the overall feeling of the show with its radiant ease and happiness. Danny Harrison's skit, "Here's Black Childhood," which brought much laughter from the seats, ended with the statement "Being black is an experience, so thank God I'm black. Thank you Momma."

On the lighter side, those who attended got the chance to see Margaret "She's on Target" LaChapelle don her safari duds in the 1984

A panorama of 'pain, struggle and victory'

by Lester Flemons
guest features writer

The next time you find yourself walking through the revolving doors of the Memorial Library, it might be worth your while to retrace your steps into the main corridor. At the end of that hall, directly across from the library auditorium are three, easily missed windows which encompass 200 years of pain, struggle and victory. The black history display covers everything from the pre-Civil War abolitionist movement to today's civil rights movement, divided into three distinct periods.

The first window presents the major Negro history makers of the pre- and post-civil war era. Included in this section of the display are such great black civil rights leaders as Frederick Douglass, Booker T. Washington, and W.E.B. Dubois. All of whom were instrumental in the evolution of black America. Also included in this section of the display are the anti-slavery poets who devoted their lives to writing about the harsh and unfair treatment of negroes. Growing frustration and tension between blacks and whites erupted in the race riots of the early 1900s. Lynchings and vivid discrimination were also characteristic of this period.

The second window of the display progresses into the early 1950s and 1960s, perhaps the most instrumental period in the history of the black movement. During this period, black civil rights programs gained more prestige and notoriety than in the previous 50 years. Courageous civil rights leaders such as Malcolm X, Angela Davis, and the unforgettable Martin Luther King Jr. lead a freedom movement which would drastically improve the black man's position in America. No longer did blacks have to sit in the back of buses, drink from separate water fountains, or live in certain neighborhoods because of their race.

The 1970s and 1980s, the subjects of the third and final window, characterized the continued progression of blacks in politics, business, religion and sports. The emergence of Negro mayors, business executives, congressmen and even a black presidential candidate serve as proof that the civil rights movement is still very much alive.

The display, in conjunction with black history month, offers an educational view of the evaluation of the black man in America. President of the Black Cultural Arts Council, Piper Griffin initiated the idea for such a display. Jethro Kiles, curator of international sports and games and David Sparks, chairman of the exhibits committee organized and set up the exhibit. Most of the materials used in the display are from the black history section in the library. Fred Wright, assistant professor of Government and head of the Black Studies program, also contributed many books and a great deal of insight in the display.

ality' — a celebration of progress

Mock Fashion show. Piper "Moo-Moo" G. "fin sauntered on stage decked in red slippers, robe, turban and gloves to the delight of Moo-Moo lovers, and Joel "Jackson" Autry slithered on in his mysterious trenchcoat, Michael Jackson style, only to reveal a rather interesting bikini top and slinky bathing suit beneath it. Hopefully, the real fashion show to be held this Saturday will show more of this type of attire . . .

Eleanor Walker and Edward Junkins demonstrated their talents in a duet, and many others joined in the show, which, judging from the overall crowd response, was a great success. James Patterson finished it off with excerpts from the Martin Luther King speech, "The Drum Major Instinct." The poignant message wrapped up the event nicely and left the audience with some points to ponder.

Included among the speakers for the festival was the husband and wife team of Ruby Dee and Ossie Davis. Dee, an actress for many years, whose credits include major roles in "Gone are The Days," "A Raisin in the Sun," various other television roles, and many more contributions to the Arts, read poetry along with her husband who is also known throughout the film and poetry world. James Patterson, an active participant in the festival, praised the two for their "incredible creativity and uniqueness of presentation."

On February 11th, a play by Notre Dame senior Sandra Hodge, "Living Memories," was presented. The play dealt basically with a young black student (played by Hodge) who was three days away from graduation at a predominantly white university. Each of the four scenes consisted of a flashback representing different segments of the student's life. Although there was a distinct message concerning the difficult challenges of being black in a predominantly white school, the message, Hodge explained, goes far deeper.

"The first scene, where a little boy expresses his grief over having no father, and the last scene in which the Baptist minister stresses the responsibility of sharing your success, are virtually colorless — they carry universal messages for all races. The other two scenes, one in which a black high school athlete faces the prejudice of his teacher, and the other in which the main character, as a freshman in the college from which she eventually graduates, begins to doubt her belonging in a primarily white school, still have their universality, though they confront the race issue head-on as well," said Hodge.

Indeed, the theme of Hodge's play which stresses the sharing of one's success, is what the Black Cultural Arts Festival is all about. It is a celebration of success in the black community, and the expression of the desire to share that success with others.

Hodge's play recieved great praise from those who witnessed its debut, and may be presented again for the South Bend area.

The final event of the celebration is the annual BCA Festival Fashion Show, "Silhouettes," which will be held Saturday, March 3rd, at the Monogram room. Tickets can be bought in the BCAC office for $5, or at the door for $6. Chairmen for the show are Regina Howell and Eleanor Walker.

Anderson summed up the overall impact of the month-long festival when she said, "It is very unifying and it reaches past the Notre Dame community. It has so many different things to offer in education and entertainment and it gives the chance for students to share their talents and feelings. Since it is a celebration of the contribution of blacks to our past and present, it promotes a heightened awareness of black culture. Too often, this awareness is not as keen as it should be."

A reader's guide to off-campus living

by Chip Block
features columnist

There has been a lot of talk about a massive exodus from the dorms if alcohol is banned on campus. Being an off-campus student, I thought I might pass on a few hints to help prospective city dwellers get started. Living off-campus can turn out to be expensive and bothersome if a few precautions are not taken.

First, an apartment or house must be chosen. If apartment life suits you, then picking the proper location should rank first on your list. Always try to rent a second floor apartment above a Southern California beach bunny. This is not for social reasons, though that doesn't hurt, but for economic reasons. The beach bunny will try to keep her apartment at a balmy eighty degrees and the rising heat will warm you all winter. As her monthly heating bills closely resemble the national debt, you sit cozy in your apartment and pay only for the lights and your electric typewriter.

Similarly, check out your neighbors before renting the apartment. So not be influenced by romantic endeavors. The most important criteria when ranking the girls next door is how many meals a week they will make for you. When living off-campus, you must perform two of the most painful chores known to man: eating what you cook and cleaning the pans you have burned. When the neighbors provide dinner you not only get a good meal, but you also don't have to clean up afterward. Be polite, always bring along a small carton of milk to show the neighbors that you appreciate their generous gift.

After moving into your new apartment, you will find it necessary to buy a few essentials. Learn how to create multiple uses for each household object, this saves money. For example, a smoke detector can double as a fire warning system and a timer for the oven. When the smoke detector goes off, dinner is cooked. If you like your food rare, move the detector closer to the kitchen. The telephone works well to organize a messy apartment. The more important an object, the closer it should be placed to the phone. When the object is needed you can follow the cord through the dirty clothes stacked on the floor, past the pile of old newspapers, over the couch, around an uneaten sandwich and finally to the phone and the important objects.

Mail can help make your new apartment or house feel like home. If you don't have a lot of friends, then just tell the Navy that you will graduate in May and your mailbox will be full everyday for the next six months. Another trick for drawing mail is to never pay bills on the first notice. I can guarantee that the telephone company will write again.

These are just a few hints you should consider before moving off-campus. Remember, without money-saving tips like the ones I mentioned above, you won't have enough money to buy beer. And that is why you moved off-campus in the first place.

Award of the week: This week's award goes to the maintenance department for letting the pothole at the entrance to the C-1 parking lot grow to such huge proportions. The pothole has become a blessing in disguise. Tourists have started arriving to see the giant crater and there have even been rumors that the university will soon offer burro rides to the bottom.

players saw action for Notre Dame on the course of the night, and regardless of which players coach Mary DiStanislao put on the court, Xavier could draw no closer than eight points the rest of the way. The Muskateers received no help from the officials either, as they had three starters foul out in the final eight minutes.

"It felt good to really be in command of the game all the way through," said Schueth. "We really established ourselves well tonight. That's something we've got to do more consistently. It would be great if we could come up with two solid back-to-back games with a win on today against Illinois-Chicago."

It was appropriate that the Irish had a solid victory in the final home game for veterans Mullins and Klauke, both of whom have made important contributions during their careers. Mullins has captained the squad for the last two seasons, while Klauke is the first woman to receive an athletic scholarship at Notre Dame.

"It felt really good, to win, and to be able to step in and contribute to the victory," said Klauke, who netted six points in the con test. "I'm really thankful to have had the opportunity to play for Notre Dame. I'm going to miss playing, and I'm going to miss these people."

Meanwhile the Irish, now 5-3 and tied for second place in the North Star Conference, must win their last four games in order to finish above the .500 mark for the season.

Tonight women face Illinois-Chicago

CHICAGO, Ill. — The Notre Dame women's basketball team, fresh off a victory over Xavier University on Saturday night, will swing right back into action tonight as they travel to Chicago to face the Lady Flames of the University of Illinois-Chicago.

At 11-13, the Irish need a win as they attempt to salvage what has been a disappointing season.

The Flames, who are suffering through a 7-19 season this winter, are led by 6-0 sophomore forward-center Tracey Manuel, Illinois-Chicago's leading scorer at 18.5 points per game and its leading rebounder with an 11.5 average.

In addition, coach Barbara Leahy depends on junior forward Erin Maloney, who averages 9.3 points and 6.5 rebounds per contest. Leahy also has received great play of late from freshman Linda Larson, who adds an additional 8.5 points and 7.1 rebounds per game to the Illinois-Chicago attack.

Leahy, in only her second season as head coach at Illinois-Chicago, is already familiar with Notre Dame. Last season, Mary DiStanislao's Irish handed the Flames an 88-61 defeat at the ACC, as forward Trena Keys sparked Notre Dame with 18 points in a reserve role. Frontline starters Mary Beth Schueth and Ruth Kaiser added 13 points apiece in the Irish victory, while Manuel had 17 points in a losing cause for the Flames.

The Irish have never won at the UIC Pavilion, however, suffering two defeats in the past four seasons. Notre Dame will attempt to end that streak, as well as climb within a game of the .500 mark, when they take to the court tonight.

thing but commit fouls in any of these formations.

Sluby remained calm, however, and he hit 11 of 20 attempts from the floor and eight of 12 from the line.

"We thought we had to take (Sluby) out of the game," Marquette coach Rick Majerus admitted afterward. "He's a great player; he's a great scorer. He scored on our box — he's just so confident."

Majerus said he wanted to lay more man-to-man and box-and-one on Sluby, but his players ran into foul trouble. Three of Marquette's starters eventually fouled out of the game.

Sluby owned what was perhaps the most exciting play of Saturday's game. With about 8:20 left in the game, Sluby's jumper from the foul line was blocked by Dwayne Johnson, creating a fast break for Marquette. Johnson got the ball back and went up to jam the ball home, but Sluby came from behind him and slammed the ball into the seats instead.

"He had just blocked my shot," Sluby recalled, "and I was mad because I didn't ball-fake him. I just wanted to get back down and stop the play."

By this time, the Warriors were struggling unsuccessfully to stay in the game, and they never again came closer than six to the Irish.

The small-but-vocal Marquette contingent of fans proclaimed for the last time, "We are...Marquette," only to be answered by the Notre Dame students, "Who cares?"

The game was iced with 17 seconds remaining, when Donald Royal slammed home Notre Dame's 65th point of the day. Richard McCormick added a layup to end Marquette's scoring for the game at 56.

Royal was the second-leading scorer for the Irish, with 13 points, six rebounds, and three blocked shots. He shot 67 percent (four for six) from the floor, and 71 percent (five for seven) from the foul line.

Notre Dame coach Digger Phelps was impressed with the play of this 6-7 freshman from New Orleans, who has been starting in place of the injured Tim Kempton.

"I think Donald Royal has really handled this (starting) well," Phelps says. "He's been patient, and he's playing with a lot of confidence, now."

Royal says he is now comfortable in his starting role, although he was not, at first.

"In the beginning, when I first started, I demanded a lot from myself," Royal says. "I had to come into a groove. It took a few games for me to get settled with the game, and I feel right at home, now."

Other leaders for the Irish were Scott Hicks, with nine points, and Ken Barlow, who had 11 rebounds.

High-point man for the Warriors was Dwayne Johnson, with 18. Marotta had 10 points and 11 rebounds for Marquette, and Copa added 11 points to the losing effort.

Phelps said afterward that Notre Dame's defense had been a key factor in the second half.

"We really kept mixing our defenses," the Irish coach said, "and I thought we did a better job of forcing them to take outside shots, which gave us the long rebound situation."

"The thing about Marquette," Phelps continued, "is that they can get hot, and that was my concern about them. No matter what defense we were playing, I was worried about their outside shooting."

Majerus said he thinks that turnovers were a major cause of his team's loss.

"We were our own worst enemy in turnovers," Majerus said. "We got the ball on the break and turned it over. In two-on-one situations, we don't take the ball to the basket."

Majerus also attributed the loss to the Notre Dame offense, which handled the Marquette defense well.

"We wanted to play the box," the Warrior coach said, "but they got some easy baskets off the other guys (besides Sluby in the box at the start of the second half. They made a nice adjustment."

Sluby said that he had been hoping in the first half that the Irish could make that adjustment.

"I was just hoping some of the other fellows could hit a few open jumpers and drive the gaps," the Irish swingman said.

Phelps concluded that the game was a fitting end for Sluby's and Cecil Rucker's careers at Notre Dame.

"I think for the seniors it was a great way to go out," Phelps said. "That's part of the tradition we've always had here at Notre Dame. It was a big win for us."

The Irish will conclude their regular season on the road next Saturday at Dayton.

Five minutes later, however, Dearborn's Ryan Willette took a pass from Craig Aittama, deked Irish net-minder Tim Lukenda, and flipped the puck into the net to put the Wolves up 4-1.

Then at 12:53, co-captain Joe Bowie rifled a drive that bounced off Pardo's shoulder and into the goal to pull the Irish within two.

Notre Dame continued to apply pressure, and on a powerplay at 17:54 Tim Reilly stepped out from behind the Dearborn goal to hit Steve Ely near the top of the circle on the right wing side. Ely's blast through a screen took Pardo by surprise, and with just over two minutes to play, the Irish trailed by just one.

With 51 seconds remaining, Lukenda was lifted in favor of an extra attacker. The Wolves' Joe Chartier was then whistled for tripping at 19:39 giving Notre Dame a six-to-four man advantage. But aggressive defense by Pardo and his teammates kept the swarming Irish from capitalizing.

"We controlled most of the play, but tried to be too cute with the passing," said Irish mentor Lefty Smith. "We were looking for a special shot instead of just taking one. They capitalized on some of our mistakes and that hurt. But it was good to see a strong comeback after being down."

Gary Charison's goal at 7:12 of the opening period was the only score in the stanza. But the Wolves came close five other times as four shots found posts behind Lukenda and another was blocked by a Dearborn player, who had wandered in back of Lukenda as he came out to cut the angle on a shot from the right boards.

Doug Hervey then got the lone goal of the second period at 5:33 as he and Larry Massa found themselves alone in front of the Irish goal.

With Dearborn up 2-0, Lukenda made two fine, sliding saves in the final two minutes of the period, stopping both Massa and Hervey on breakaway attempts.

Lukenda had 25 saves on the night, while Dearborn's Pardo had 24.

Saturday was a different story for Notre Dame as it came out flying and wasted little time jumping into the lead.

In fact, it took just 25 seconds for Metzler to take Bob Thebeau's pass from the right wing and beat Chuck Irwin to the open side and put the Irish up 1-0.

"Tonight we were ready for them right from the start," said Parsons. "Scoring quickly then set the pace for the whole game."

Chartier then slid one past Lukenda on a nice set-up by Win Dahm to tie the score at 4:26.

Just 30 seconds later, though, Thebeau's slapshot from the blueline cleanly beat Irwin and the Irish were back in front 2-1. Reilly and Ely had the assists.

There was no scoring then until 15:38 when Notre Dame picked up a shorthanded goal, its eighth of the season, to go in front 3-1. Bowie intercepted a Dearborn clearing pass and fed Parsons in the slot where he fired a wrist shot high to Irwin's glove side for his first tally of the night.

Willette, then scored for Dearborn on a powerplay with just six seconds remaining in the period to keep the game close.

Jim Hatt replaced Irwin in the Dearborn goal at the start of the second period.

The Irish then picked up their fourth goal of the night at 8:23 of second period as Chapman rocketed down the right wing, stopped in the corner and quickly turned to find Parsons, whose drive from the center of the face-off circle eluded Hatt to his stick side.

At 2:18 of the final period, Notre Dame notched its lone powerplay goal of the night as Tony Bonadio's rifle shot from the right side, near the top of the circle whizzed through the legs of Hatt.

Greg Everson then cut the Irish lead to 5-3 at 6:12.

Parsons completed his hat trick just 25 seconds later as he took a pass from Metzler breaking in on right wing, and rammed it in from the left corner of the crease, past a sliding Hatt.

Notre Dame made it 7-3 at 12:28 when Jeff Badalich skated from the right corner, faked once and flipped the puck high over Hatt's glove.

The second Dearborn powerplay goal of the night rounded out the evening's scoring. Willette beat Lukenda from the top of the left circle with just 2:50 left to play.

"A key factor in tonight's success was our forechecking," said Smith. "We were playing the body more and it allowed us to get a few more turnovers inside. We also moved the puck much better; and it helped in getting a better flow going."

"We took shots rather than looking for the perfect play," said Bowie. "Everyone skated well. It was a real team effort."

Lukenda made 22 saves in earning the win. Irwin and Hatt teamed up to make 27 stops in a losing cause for Dearborn.

Dearborn now stands at 17-19 on the season.

Smith's 16-year career-record is now 274-261-28.

Irish scalp Warriors led by Sluby's 30 points

By PHIL WOLF
Sports Writer

It was a great way to finish the regular season at home.

Senior Tom Sluby exploded for a career-high 30 points in the ACC Saturday to lead the Irish past Marquette, 65-56.

"(This victory) feels really good, because I didn't want to go out losing to Marquette," Sluby said afterward. "Every year this is a big game, and it was pretty important for us to win."

The game was exciting from the opening tipoff, as the two teams traded baskets to tie the game at two, four, and six.

Joe Howard scored first for the Irish following a Marquette turnover 46 seconds into the game. The Warriors then came back with a slam dunk by Tom Copa, who received an excellent pass inside from Marc Marotta.

The next time the Warriors had the ball, Marotta had it stripped away by Sluby, and Donald Royal hit an easy layup with an assist from Joe Howard.

The Irish slowly began to slip into the lead, and they held a 15-10 advantage with 9:32 remaining in the half. Eight consecutive points for Marquette, however, gave the Warriors a three-point edge, 18-15, with 7:21 left in the first half.

Notre Dame never let the Warriors lead by more than five, and Royal cut the difference to one with two free throws 1:48 before halftime. Marquette's four-corner offense then could not generate any points for the rest of the half, which expired while the Warriors held a 29-28 advantage.

The Irish regained the lead when Jim Dolan hit a 15-foot jumper from the right baseline after 36 seconds had elapsed in the second half.

The Irish started to get the offensive rebounds that had eluded them in the first half, while the Warriors committed sloppy turnovers at the other end of the court. Scott Hicks was effective as point guard, and Jim Dolan also came up top on occasion to help Notre Dame build up a 12-point lead, 52-40, with 9:16 left on the clock.

Sluby continued to run up points, and the Warriors seemed helpless to stop him. They tried a box-and-one defense on him, they tried a two-three zone, and they even tried a little bit of man-to-man defense. The Warriors were unable to do any-

Women thrash Xavier in seniors' home finale

By LARRY BURKE
Sports Writer

It had been a long time — nearly a month — since the Notre Dame women's basketball team had won a game in a thoroughly convincing fashion. The Irish did it Saturday night, holding the upper hand from start to finish in a 91-77 victory over the Lady Muskateers of Xavier University.

The win raised Notre Dame's record to 11-13, and kept alive the team's hopes for a .500 season (there are four games remaining). During a campaign in which the Irish have seen more than their share of disappointments, there were a lot of bright spots in Saturday's victory.

This was particularly true offensively, as Notre Dame netted its third-highest team point total in its seven-year history. The team's 96 points against Marquette in the season opener set the record.

Individually, it was a balanced scoring attack that paced the Irish to victory, as five players scored in double figures, led by center Mary Beth Schueth's 19 points. Forwards Trena Keys (12 points) and Carrie Bates (11 points), as well as guard Laura Dougherty (10 points), also sparked the Irish attack.

Notre Dame also got strong support from its reserves, led by forward Ruth Kaiser's 11 points, as well as the contributions of seniors Theresa Mullins (one of the Irish co-captains) at guard, and Jenny Klauke at forward, both of whom played their final game at the ACC.

Schueth and Keys scored the first two baskets of the game, enroute to a nine-point halftime lead, 41-32. Notre Dame was especially dominant on the boards in the first half, as they outrebounded Xavier 19-6.

"We were really concentrating on rebounding, especially in the first half," said Schueth. "That's because we had a team-low for rebounds in our last game against Detroit."

Notre Dame was outrebounded by a 35-22 margin last Saturday.

The Irish also helped their cause by shooting an impressive 65 percent in the first half, as they used a run-and-gun style of play to pick up high percentage shots.

"We intended to run on them," said Schueth. "We figured if we had

Hockey team splits season finale

By ED DOMANSKY
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame hockey team earned a split this weekend with the University of Michigan-Dearborn as it closed out regular-season action for 1983-84.

An Irish rally fell short on Friday as the Wolves hung on to take a 4-3 win. Saturday, behind a three goal and one assist performance from Adam Parsons, Notre Dame turned things around and came away with a 7-4 victory.

The Notre Dame record now stands at an impressive 22-4-1.

The final action of the season comes next weekend when Notre Dame plays host to the Central States Collegiate Hockey League playoffs. Friday, Marquette will meet Iowa State at 6 p.m. and the Irish will take on Illinois State at 8:30 p.m. The consolation game is scheduled for Saturday at 5 p.m. with the championship contest slated to get under way at 7:30 p.m.

Friday's loss marked the first such setback for the Irish on home-ice this season. They had won eleven straight until that point.

Notre Dame trailed 3-0 until the 5:46 mark of the third period when Parsons, with help from linemates Mike Metzler and co-captain Brent Chapman, beat Wolf goalie Brick

Defensive line coach accused of rule violation

By PAUL MCGINN
Executive Editor

Bishop Harris, Notre Dame's new defensive line coach, reportedly exchanged money for football tickets as an assistant coach at Louisiana State University, charged a former L.S.U. player, according to an article in yesterday's New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Clyde Bishop, a former wide receiver at L.S.U., reportedly told an NCAA board of inquiry that Harris, in the fall of 1981, "would bring him cash in an envelope in return for the (player's allotted) game tickets."

The story also said Bishop and another former L.S.U. player, Donald Polk, "claimed that assistant coaches helped them illegally sell game tickets, in some cases for more than 30 times the face value."

Contacted by The Observer last night, Harris said, "I'm not going to lower myself to his level to respond to that. I don't know what the hell he's talking about."

"He didn't play but one year," said Harris. "He flunked out of school after his first semester. I think it's just sour grapes on his part."

Neither Bishop, now a member of the track team at Texas Southern University in Houston, nor Notre Dame Head Football Coach Gerry Faust, who is vacationing in Puerto Rico, could be reached for comment by The Observer.

Dean Guidry, a senior offensive lineman at L.S.U., told the Times-Picayune that while he could not prove coaches and players did anything illegal, many things seemed questionable.

"To tell you I've seen it or have proof would be a lie, but it's obvious it's common knowledge," Guidry said.

Bob Brodhead, L.S.U.'s athletic director, who began his duties June 1, 1982, said "I do not know of car, clothes or ticket sales. If I knew it and there were evidence presented we would do something about it."

Former head football coach Jerry Stovall, who was fired by L.S.U. Dec. 2, 1983, also denied knowledge of the alleged ticket sales.

"It's absolutely absurd," Stovall said. "In four years as head football coach at no time did any player ask for anything illegally."

"At no time did any assistant coach suggest anything illegal immoral or unethical," Stovall added.

Last April, the NCAA had announced it was beginning a preliminary investigation into the L.S.U. athletic department after it heard claims that students were receiving money and gifts from wealthy L.S.U. alumni who football players nicknamed "money men."

If substantiated, the claims made by Polk and Bishop could lead to sanctions or probation of L.S.U. by the NCAA.
