Informal student farewell for Hesburgh tops HPC agenda

By REGIS COCCIA
Assistant News Editor

An informal student farewell for University President Father Theodore Hesburgh and a different perspective on campus alcohol policy were featured at Tuesday night's Hall Presidents' Council meeting.

Student Body President-elect Pat Cooke spoke to the council to announce plans for a student picnic commemorating Hesburgh's retirement. "We're planning a picnic for Father Hesburgh from the students," Cooke said. "It's going to be vital for us to get publicity for this through the HPC."

"It's going to be May 1, to thank Father Hesburgh for his 35 years of service," said Cooke. "We thought it would be appropriate for us to have a mass, with Father Hesburgh celebrating," he added.

Dr. Steve Nelson, director of student activities and the college center at Dartmouth College, spoke to the council about the differences between the campus alcohol policy at Dartmouth and the one instituted here at Notre Dame.

"I'm impressed and I'm enjoying my time here," Nelson said. "Our policy is a bit more liberal than yours. We have what I believe to be a preamble statement which says we are all responsible for one another," he said.

"We tried to steer clear of state law," Nelson said. "We do have a party registration format which requires whenever alcoholic beverages are served, non-alcoholic beverages must also be accessible. We require all parties to have someone check for Dartmouth IDs, to keep high school students and outsiders out," Nelson said.

"We keep alcohol away from athletic events as much as possible," said Nelson. "There are levels (at Dartmouth) where if you break a regulation, you get fined or even go before the conduct board," he said, noting

Baby M's custody awarded to father

Associated Press

HACKENSACK, N.J. - A judge awarded custody of Baby M to her father Tuesday and stripped surrogate mother Mary Beth Whitehead of all parental rights to the child she bore under a $10,000 contract.

In the nation's first judicial ruling on surrogate parenting, Bergen County Superior Court Judge Harvey Sorkow upheld the validity of the contract on the grounds that just as men have a constitutional right to sell their sperm, women can decide what to do with their wombs.

Immediately after William Stern won custody in the landmark case, his wife, Elizabeth, adopted the year-old baby, whom they call Melissa. The child has been in their care while the case was argued.

Sorkow ordered Stern to pay Mrs. Whitehead the $10,000 agreed to in the contract. That money had been held in escrow since the contract was signed.

Mrs. Whitehead, who had vowed to appeal, awaited the ruling at her home after visiting with the baby earlier in the day and then stopping at a church to light a devotional candle.

The Sterns held hands in the crowded, locked courtroom throughout the entire reading of the judge's ruling. They clutched each other when the custody decision was announced.

Sorkow said the Sterns had shown a stable, secure, loving relationship, the ability to provide financially and psychologically for the future needs of the baby and "an ability to make rational decisions in the most trying of circumstances."

"The Sterns live a private, unremarkable life," the judge said. "Mrs. Whitehead seems not to have found the time for family therapy sessions while making herself and her children available to the media."

Sorkow also said the Sterns would better be able to explain to the child her unusual beginnings in the years to come.

The judge said the Whiteheads' life has been marked by domestic and marital instability and that Mrs. Whitehead has been shown to "impose herself" on her two other children.

"Too much love can smother a child," Sorkow said.

The judge, who made no provision for Mrs. Whitehead ever to see her daughter again, condemned her as impulsive

Senator Tower to lecture tonight

By JIM RILEY
News Editor

Sen. John Tower, chairman of the Tower Commission, will lecture tonight at 8 in Washington Hall.

Tower recently submitted the report of the high-level Tower Commission. The report has been described as being critical of Reagan for not being more in charge of the Iran-contra situation, but it said he did not know of the contra-money connection.

The report came down hard on Oliver North and other Reagan aides.

Tower's lecture will be titled "National Security in an Open Society."

"He is heavily involved in one of the biggest issues in Washington, D.C. since Watergate," said John Gormley, chairman of the ideas and issues committee of the the student activities board.

"Of all the investigators, he probably knows the most," said Gormley.

Gormley said he had worked with the agency that arranged Tower's appearances before, and he was able to book Tower before his schedule was filled.

Tower retired from the senate in January of 1985. He has been called a "statesman-at-large," offering advice and service to the Reagan administration.

He began the investigation into the National Security Council's activities in late 1986.

Tower also served as a U.S. arms negotiator until April 1986 at the strategic nuclear arms negotiations with the Soviets in Geneva.

Formerly a Midwestern University government professor, Tower took over Lyndon Johnson's senate seat after winning a special election in 1961. Tower chaired the Senate Armed Services committee and the Senate Republican Policy Committee.

Tower will hold a press conference at The Morris Inn at 4 p.m.

Reagan endorses AIDS education and abstinence

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan gave his endorsement Tuesday to AIDS education in schools but said children also should be taught that sexual abstinence is the best way to avoid the disease.

"We want an all-out campaign," Reagan said, responding to reporters' questions at a state dinner for visiting Prime Minister Jacques Chirac of France.

Asked whether he thought children should be taught about the dangers of the AIDS epidemic, Reagan said, "Yes, I think so - as long as they teach one of the answers to it is abstinence."

He stressed the theme of abstinence and said that he supported instructing children about AIDS and how to avoid it "if you say it's not how you do it but that you don't do it."

Reagan said that education which does not offer instruction about proper values is wrong.

Earlier Tuesday, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Reagan "is fully informed" about the AIDS epidemic but acknowledged that the president wants to stay out of the debate about preventive measures. Fitzwater said the president "thinks AIDS is a

A chronic speeder from New Buffalo, Mich., in a hurry to get from Canada to Chicago, was stopped three times for speeding in one day. It would have been cheaper for him to fly. Trooper Peter Rahm said the 37-year-old Montreal resident was stopped in Van Buren County on Saturday after being clocked at 93 mph. He also was stopped outside Benton Harbor, where he allegedly was driving 83 mph, and near New Buffalo, where he was timed at 80 mph. The man got three speeding tickets and was cited twice for not wearing a seat belt. One major airlines charges $197.13 for a one-way, coach seat from Montreal to Chicago. - Associated Press

Gullibility 'used and abused' in April Fools' Day pranks

April Fools' Day is like Valentine's Day. Everyone recognizes the occasion, but its origins are not universally known. According to the Encyclopedia Britannica, this custom originated in France after Charles IX adopted a reformed calendar in 1564. "A person who resisted changing the New Year's Day from April 1 to January 1 was victimized by pranksters." In France an April Fool came to be known as a poisson d'avril (April Fish), while in Scotland a fool is regarded as an April Gowk (cuckoo).

At any rate, this is the day when everyone's gullibility is used and abused. Having a twin brother or sister is a lot of fun on the first day of April. I felt like I had all the power in the world when, in the first grade, my twin sister and I confused our teachers (very important "significant others" in the lives of seven year olds). That year I had the best April Fools' Day of my life. I was convinced that my teacher, Sister Valeria, lost the part of the Wicked Witch of the West in the "Wizard of Oz" because she was too mean for the role. Meanwhile Jackie's teacher was reminiscent of Glenda the Good Witch of the North. We continued this practice until we were in the fourth grade. (At that time my mom was my teacher, and we figured she probably wouldn't fall for the cute Bobsey twin routine.)

Normally I don't consider myself to be a prankster, but through those few childhood experiences, I realized just how gullible people can be. The realization of having been duped is one of the strangest emotions a human being feels. First, a vulnerability has been exposed, so the person who has just been "had" naturally becomes defensive. This person will experience hot flashes of anger against the teaser. After this emotional outburst, the anger will become self-directed rather than other-orientated. Basically, the gullible party, after being found out, feels extreme overall frustration at the entire world.

Most of the fun of April Fools' Day comes when the teasers can see the fruit of their labors by embarrassing the gullible party to death. Often times, this embarrassment will surface in the form of extreme blushing.

Everyone falls into the "gullibility trap," some more often than others, but no one thinks it will ever happen to him or herself. A classic example of someone falling prey to this trap occurred when one of my uncles had told my grandmother the statue on top of the Golden Dome was not actually the Blessed Virgin, Mother of God, but, in fact, Knute Rockne in a raincoat. Yes, she believed him. I recall vividly how I laughed about it the first time I heard this story, and I thought I would never fall for a line like that. I never did fall for a line like that, but, much to my disdain, I have fallen for others. Now, I think it's enough for me to admit my past mistakes. It is not necessary to publish them because I'd blush too much when I read this over again.

In a day when everyone tries as hard as possible to affect an attitude, it's nice to see people observe a day when it's socially acceptable to kick back and let the little kid come out.

Probably most people will be careful not to fall for corny April Fools' jokes, but, undoubtedly, everyone will fall prey to those mongers, who have a knack to find everyone's gullibilities, at one time or another. Please take this advice to heart for the next time you may happen to fall for a line: go through the typical anger and frustration moods and then plan your revenge on the jerk who set you up. Remember that everyone has a weak spot, so don't get mad, simply get even.

Harvard professor notes increase in technical quality of public policy

By THERESA HARRINGTON
News Staff

In the finale of the Distinguished Visiting Scholar Series Dr. Harvey Brooks, professor of technology and public policy at Harvard University presented a lecture Tuesday night titled "What to Do When the Experts Disagree: Technological Decision Making in a Democratic Society."

Brooks focused on the increasing technical content of public policy and political issues. He also discussed the importance of scientific evidence, scientific judgement and the interpretation of scientific data in legislative, judicial and executive decisions, as well as in political debate.

According to Brooks, there are several models of interaction between policy makers and scientists. They ranged from independent research followed by recommendations to Congressional committees, to options influenced by preferred policy outcomes. Each of these models have weaknesses and strengths, but as Brooks said, "not one best approach clearly dominates... (and) what is needed is variety and experimentation" of them.

One possible cause of weakness in the models, according to Brooks, is the relationship between scientists and legislators that has emerged in the last 10 years. As Brooks said, "in the U.S. Congress the push to success seems to rely on becoming an expert in certain areas. Therefore, they rely heavily on experts... who exaggerate what they know because they are flattered by politicians interested in their specialty."

Within Congress, Brooks said, there is "strong pressure to develop scientific rationale for their decisions" though individual scientists may come to very different policy recommendations which may be unduly influenced by their own political views.

Brooks said he advocated continued improvement of "reports written in response to requests by Congressional committees... (because) high degree of selectivity makes for higher quality of studies."

Two SMC professors selected for endowment

By COLLEEN HARTY
News Staff

Saint Mary's Associate Professor of English Anne Loux and Associate Professor of Humanistic Studies Gail Mandell have been selected for the Lily Endowment Faculty Open Fellowships for the 1987-88 academic year.

Loux and Mandell are among 10 faculty members from independent four year universities and colleges in Indiana chosen for the fellowships.

The awards allow teachers whose needs and aspirations might not be met by more conventional fellowships to pursue work-study and research projects of their own design.

"This is like being able to dream," said Loux. "This grant is really exceptional. It's a personal development grant - a grant that asks you to dream. It's only sometimes that you actually get that chance," Loux said.

Mandell said she feels that an endowment of this sort allows one to become a better teacher. "One is able to propose a research project which other institutions don't offer," she said.

"The Lily endowment crosses disciplines," Mandell said, adding, "It takes you beyond the traditional research areas in your field."

Loux said she will devote the endowment to fiction writing or a personal history entitled "Chicago Mississippi" about growing up in Mississippi. She said she plans to illustrate that "growing up in Mississippi is not that different from growing up in Chicago."

Mandell said she plans to study the question of biography as a form of writing. After reading biographical works and talking with biographers, Mandell said she will report her findings in a pamphlet.

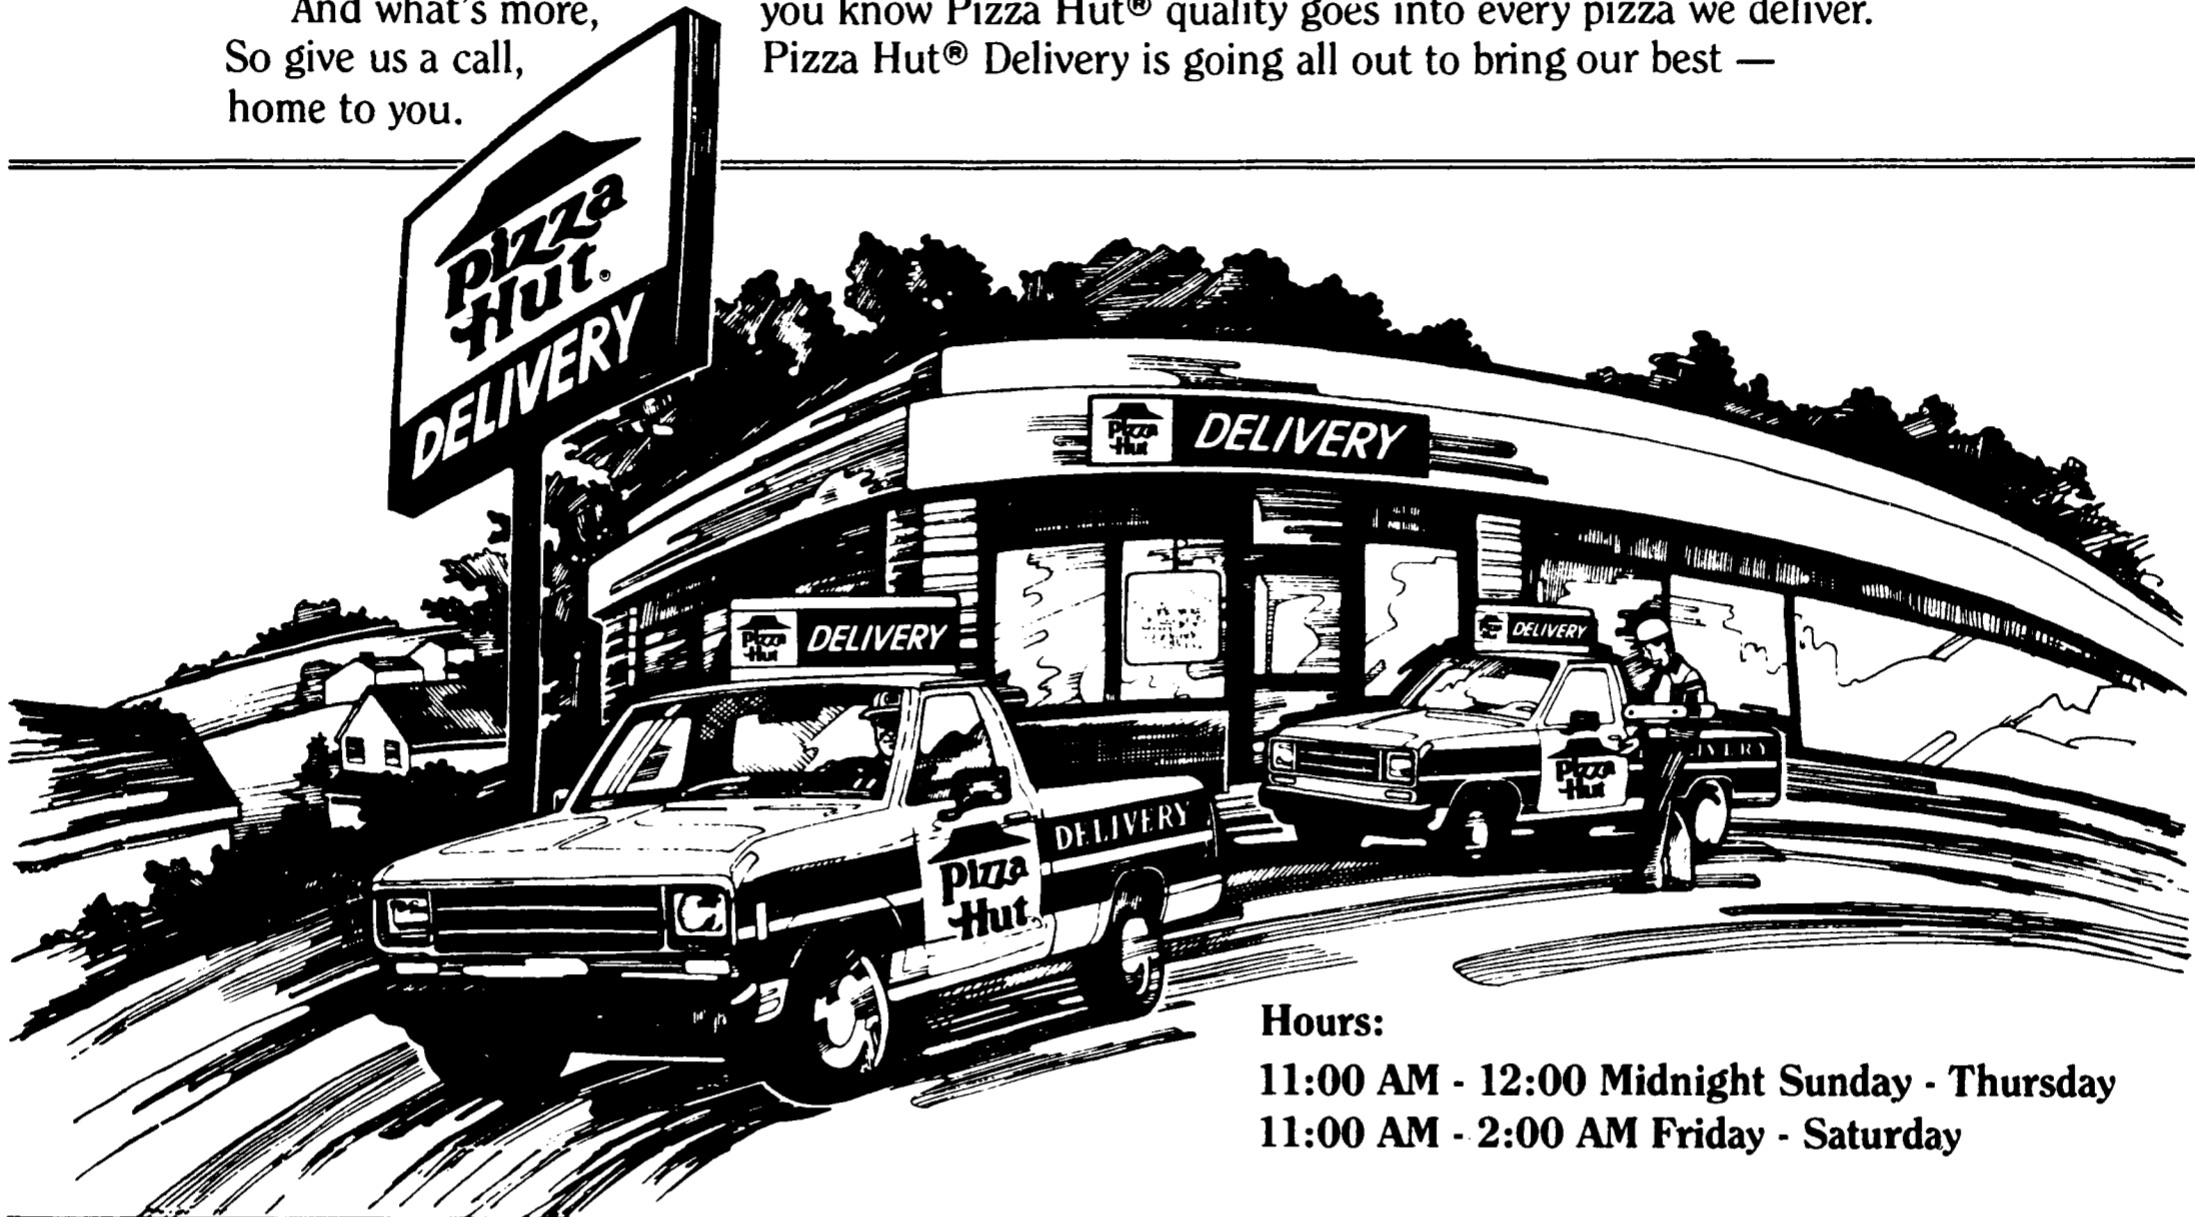

"My ultimate aim is to write a biography on someone and this endowment will help me to decide which one," Mandell said.

Custody

and exploitive and said she either selectively omitted information or lied outright during testimony about aspects of her life.

"This inability to tell the truth establishes a tarnished... environment" for raising the child, the judge said.

Mrs. Whitehead, who was artificially inseminated with Stern's sperm, said she realized during the baby's birth March 27, 1986, that she could not give up her daughter.

She refused her $10,000 fee and fled to Florida with the infant when the Sterns obtained a court order giving them temporary custody. For 87 days she moved from relative to relative, until authorities tracked her down and returned the chubby, blue-eyed girl to the Sterns.

The Tenaflly couple, he a 41-year-old biochemist and she a pediatrician, sued for permanent custody, setting the stage for Tuesday's landmark decision.

The precedent set by the judge's ruling applies only in New Jersey, but will have implications for other courts, religious leaders, politicians considering laws on the issue, adoption advocates, potential surrogates and childless couples.

The child's court-appointed guardian, attorney Lorraine Abraham, recommended that the Sterns get custody and that Mrs. Whitehead be denied visitation rights for at least five years.

The three-month trial stirred up a worldwide debate over surrogate parenting. Opponents maintain the practice amounts to baby selling and exploits women, while supporters endorse surrogacy as one way for couples to achieve parenthood.

The Vatican condemned surrogate motherhood last month, saying it "offends the dignity of the right of the child," and some feminists picketed at the courthouse to support Mrs. Whitehead, saying that no mother should be forced to give up her baby.

The same argument was made by attorneys for the 29-year-old Brick Township homemaker and mother of two other children. They told Sorkow that surrogate parenting should be outlawed because no woman can be expected to agree to give up her child before she even conceives.

Attorneys for the Sterns contended the surrogate agreement reached Feb. 6, 1985, was valid because all involved knew what they were signing. But Mrs. Whitehead testified she did not read the contract until after the custody battle began.

ND freshmen opinion revealed

Special to The Observer

Most Notre Dame freshmen oppose legal abortion, want to raise families, and believe that couples should not live together before marriage, according to a nationwide survey of freshmen entering private universities.

The survey, conducted last fall by the University of California at Los Angeles and the American Council on Education, also found that incoming Notre Dame freshmen were more likely than freshmen at other private universities to describe their political views as "conservative." At Notre Dame 33.5 percent were willing to accept that label compared with 26.8 percent of their counterparts nationwide.

Highlighting objectives they thought "essential or very important," a slightly larger percentage (77.3) of Notre Dame freshmen chose "raising a family" than did their counterparts at other private universities (72.5).

Fewer freshmen at Notre Dame (30.9%) believed that couples should live together before marriage than in the national average, where 46.7 percent tolerated premarital cohabitation.

Notre Dame freshmen seem more enthusiastic about "developing a philosophy of life," with 56.7 percent of them listing that objective as essential or very important as compared with 50.8 percent of incoming freshmen at other private universities.

Significant disparities between freshmen at Notre Dame and freshmen at other private universities occurred in answers to a survey question about legal abortion. In the national average, 57.0 percent agreed "strongly or somewhat" that abortion should be legalized compared with 29.4 percent at Notre Dame.

In a related matter, more Notre Dame freshmen (31.1% compared with 28.3% in the national sample) favor abolition of the death penalty.

In both the national sample and at Notre Dame, a majority of incoming freshmen seem to believe that "nuclear disarmament is attainable," although Notre Dame freshmen are 4.1 percent more optimistic than those in the national sample, where 52.9 percent responded affirmatively to the question. More Notre Dame freshmen (94.7%) were graduated in the top 20 percent of their high school class than their peers at other private universities, 71 percent of whom had achieved equal academic rank. Of Notre Dame freshmen, 48.7 percent were graduated from high school with an A or A- average, compared with the 28.9 in the national average.

Notre Dame was the first university chosen by 84.2 percent of its incoming freshmen; in the national sample, 72.8 percent were enrolled at their first choice.

Notre Dame freshmen seem more hopeful about their post graduation employment prospects than freshmen at other private universities. At Notre Dame, 81.6 percent expect to find a job in their preferred field compared with 72.8 percent in the national sample.

In at least one respect, the hopes of 25.3 percent of Notre Dame's freshmen have been dashed by now. That portion of the incoming freshmen class estimated that "chances are very good" that they would join fraternities or sororities at a University which has never had either.

House casts vote to override veto

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Democratic-controlled House voted 350-73 Tuesday to override President Reagan's veto of an $88 billion highway and mass transit bill, sending the measure to the Senate for the final round of a bruising political struggle.

The margin was 68 votes more than the two-thirds needed to override the president's action on the bill, which couples more than 100 road projects made to order for individual lawmakers with a provision permitting the states to raise the speed limit to 65 miles per hour on most stretches of interstate highway.

The Senate debated the veto for more than an hour Tuesday but postponed a vote until Wednesday.

The only suspense in the House was the margin of Reagan's defeat, where 248 Democrats and 102 Republicans - including GOP leader Bob Michel of Illinois and Republican Whip Trent Lott of Mississippi - cast their votes to override the veto. Democratic Rep. Norman Sisisky of Virginia and 72 Republicans voted to sustain Reagan.

Michel noted the presence of funds in the bill to complete a highway widening project in his district, and said he was making a "very difficult, agonizing decision for the first time in the Reagan presidency" to oppose him on a major bill.

Freshman GOP rep. Arthur Ravenel Jr. of South Carolina reflected the political appeal of the bill when he said, "You can bet your spring petunias this Congress will override the veto. President Reagan, he ain't going to be running in 1988, but I am."

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said the outcome was a "very gratifying victory in the House. Members stood up for their own conviction, standing up to blandishments and pressure" from the White House.

Democrats argued that the measure was under budget, and said a successful veto would cost 800,000 jobs in the coming construction season. A provision permitting states to raise the speed limit to 65 mph on rural portions of the interstate was also politically attractive to Western lawmakers.

U.S. adviser killed in attack on army base

Associated Press

EL PARAISO, El Salvador - Guerrillas raided a major army base before dawn Tuesday, killing at least 43 soldiers and a U.S. military adviser, the first to die during battle in the 7-year-old civil war.

El Salvador's military commander said the American, identified as Staff Sgt. Gregory Fronius, 27, of Greensburg, Pa., was killed by mortar fire near a command post.

The military said 35 soldiers were wounded by leftist rebels who assaulted the base behind a barrage of cannon, mortar and grenade fire. Base commander Col. Gilberto Rubio, who was slightly wounded, said the number of attackers had not been determined.

Officials said seven guerrillas died in the attack on the 4th Infantry Brigade garrison at El Paraiso in Chalatenango province, a rebel stronghold, and some penetrated the camp. El Paraiso is nearly 40 miles north of San Salvador, capital of El Salvador.

"Because of the seriousness of the injuries, the number of dead (soldiers) may increase," said Gen. Adolfo Blandon, chief of the armed forces. He visited the base to assess the situation.

Soldiers on the scene estimated government casualties at about 65 dead and more than 100 wounded.

According to U.S. policy, American advisers do not participate in offensive military action or enter areas where combat is occurring or likely, but may visit "carefully selected and secure sites" such as garrisons. They are armed and may respond if fired upon.

The United States has a self-imposed ceiling of 55 on the number of advisers serving in El Salvador at one time, but fewer sometimes are on duty.

Tuesday's rebel attack was the largest since a June 1986 guerrilla assault on the army base at San Miguel, 86 miles east of San Salvador. The military said 50 soldiers were killed or wounded there, but the rebels claimed a total of 250.

U.S. embassy spokesman Pen Agnew said Fronius was training Salvadoran troops at the El Paraiso garrison.

At the Pentagon in Washington, the Army said he had a wife and child and was assigned to the 3rd Battalion, 7th Special Forces Group, based in Panama.

Pentagon spokesman Robert Sims said the sergeant was part of a two-man team assigned to the area and his partner was not at the garrison when the rebels attacked.

Blandon said the rebels began firing mortars, grenade launchers and a 90mm cannon at 2 a.m., aiming at the command post, barracks and officers' mess. He said 250 soldiers were at the base.

The command post, a barracks and an officers' mess were destroyed and other buildings damaged. Reporters saw at least three destroyed military vehicles.

very serious health problem that should be addressed."

The spokesman made his remarks in the morning, shortly after Reagan joined Chirac to announce an agreement to settle a legal dispute over patent rights to AIDS screening tests.

But on the eve of Reagan's first formal speech touching on the AIDS issue, reporters questioned his spokesman sharply on the president's views on advice being given by others in the administration.

"There's lots of different kinds of advice that people want to give on this issue and the administration has given that advice through the surgeon general (C. Everett Koop) and through (Education) Secretary (William) Bennett and others," Fitzwater said.

"The surgeon general is the primary health officer for the government and he speaks for the administration on these issues," the spokesman added.

Fitzwater repeatedly refused to say where Reagan stands on AIDS education in schools, the question of abstinence vs. the use of condoms or other protective measures.

Japan takes steps to boost imports

Associated Press

TOKYO - Anti-American sentiment among Japanese citizens will grow if the United States goes ahead with penalty duties on up to $300 million worth of Japanese electronic goods, a senior government official said Tuesday.

"The atmosphere in Japan against the Americans would become - not so good. They would think the U.S. was emotional and illogical," said Noburo Hatakeyama, director general of the International Trade Administration Bureau.

Hatakeyama repeated warnings from other Japanese officials that Japan would consider retaliation if its negotiators cannot dissuade the United States from going ahead with the penalty duties. But he did not offer any details on what form the retaliation might take.

"We might get tough. What is important is to ask them to withdraw the duties and ask them to understand the true situation. And we can retaliate after that," if necessary, he told a group of foreign journalists.

Although Japan is striving to cut its huge trade surplus, it cannot make any concessions on semiconductor trade to fend off the planned U.S. penalty duties because it is doing nothing wrong, Hatakeyama said.

"If we offer any concessions, then that suggests we acknowledge having violated the agreement," he said. "But in this case we've done nothing wrong, so there is nothing we can concede."

The Reagan administration said last week it plans to impose prohibitive tariffs on a range of Japanese electronic goods in mid-April to force Japan into compliance with an accord on semiconductors. Japan agreed last year to open its home market to U.S.-made chips and to avoid selling its chips in foreign markets at unfairly low prices.

Trade concerns caused in part by the semiconductor dispute caused the dollar to keep sinking Tuesday in Tokyo to another low. The dollar closed at 145.65 yen, down from Monday's close of 146.20 yen, which had been its lowest point since modern exchange rates were set in the late 1940s.

The steep fall of the dollar, although it should help shrink trade imbalances, has raised fears of recession in Japan and inflation and higher interest rates in the United States.

Hatakeyama said the duties on electronic products, scheduled to take effect in two weeks, would have minimal financial impact, but "the psychological impact would be very big . . . First of all, we are not accustomed to this type of retaliation or game."

Kyodo News Service quoted political sources as saying Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone is considering a package that would meet a range of American demands for greater access to Japanese markets.

19-member committee to plan the inauguration of Malloy

Special to The Observer

The inauguration of Notre Dame's 16th president, the first such formal ceremony in the University's history, will be September 23. In the past, the presidency was a religious assignment of a member of the Congregation of Holy Cross, the community that founded Notre Dame in 1842. Since 1967,

Notre Dame has been governed by a predominantly lay Board of Trustees, who now elect the president.

A 19-person committee to plan the inauguration of Father Edward Malloy as president of the University has been named by Provost Timothy O'Meara, who will chair the group.

Members are Dr. Thomas P.

Bergin, dean of continuing education; Laurie Bink, student body vice president; Father Thomas Blantz, chairman and associate professor of history; Dean Francis Castellino of the College of Science, Richard Conklin, director of public relations and information;

Patrick Cooke, student body president; Dr. Xavier Creary, professor of chemistry; James Gibbons, director of special events and protocol; Father Daniel Jenky, rector of Sacred Heart Church and superior of Holy Cross priests at Notre Dame; Sister John Miriam Jones, associate provost; Sister Jean Lenz, assistant vice president for student affairs; Dean Michael Loux of the College of Arts and Letters; William McLean, assistant dean of the Law School; James Murphy, associate vice president of university relations; Dr. Wendy Schlereth, archivist; Dr. Albin Szweczyk, chairman and professor of aerospace and mechanical engineering; Dr. Lee Tavis, Smith professor of business administration, and Dr. Daniel Winicur, registrar.

An opportunity exists for assisting in finances

Have you ever wondered where your $55 student activity fee has gone? Just what are you getting for it? Would you like to have a role in this budgeting process to determine where this fee is spent? The Student Body Treasurer is responsible for budgeting the $385,000 collected from the student activity fee to the many groups on campus that rely on this fee for their funding. These include: Student Government, Student Activities Board, the Class Governments, the Judicial Council, the Off-Campus Council, improvements for WVFI, and almost 120 other clubs and organizations on campus. Once the budgeting process has been completed in April of each year, it is then the responsibility of the Student Body Treasurer to keep an accurate record of all finances and to disburse all funds of the groups mentioned above.

If you are interested in sharing some of these responsibility, then Student Government needs your help. Every year, during April, interviews are held to select someone to serve as the Assistant Student Body Treasurer. Applicants must be sophomores in the College of Business Administration. The person chosen will have the opportunity to serve for two years and with two different Student Government Administrations. During your Junior year, you will serve as the Assistant Treasurer in a learning capacity to become familiar with the financial operations of Student Government in preparation to assume the responsibilities of the Student Body Treasurer on April 1, 1988.

The Student Body Treasurer has the opportunity to serve as a voting member of the two main decision making bodies on campus, the Student Senate and the SAB Steering Committee. The Treasurer serves as the Chairperson of the Student Senate Budget and Finance Committee. This is perhaps the Treasurer's most important responsibility, the coordinating of budget requests, participating in the allocation process and preparing the final budget. Throughout the year, the Treasurer shall then oversee that the fiscal policies are followed and that all clubs and organizations adhere to their spending guidelines. As a member of the SAB Steering Committee, which sets SAB policy and approves SAB upcoming events, you would have a behind-the-scenes look at events as well as the chance to have input on proposed future events.

One of the best features of both the positions of the Assistant Student Body Treasurer and the Student Body Treasurer, is the freedom to be creative with the position. You have a set of responsibilities and are accountable to the Student Senate and the student body, but you can expand your duties. As the year progresses and as your understanding increases, you will be able to implement more efficient ways to accomplish the same results. This year a computer system has been added to aid in preparing more accurate and timely financial reports.

Involved with this position is a gradually increasing time commitment as the year goes on. Traditionally, as you begin to better understand the financial operations and as you begin to assume more responsibility, the more time you want to spend working with people involved in Student Government and SAB. An enthusiastic team comprised of the Bookkeeper, SAB Controller, Student Body Treasurer and Student Body Assistant Treasurer work together to produce the most useful and accurate financial information.

We encourage you to get involved. Experience is not necessary because everyone is learning together. You will meet a lot of people, many of which will become good friends. If your interest has been sparked, stop up to the Second Floor of LaFortune and pick up an application. If you have any questions, come to the Student Government open house on Wednesday, April 1, from 7:00-9:00 p.m. We hope you'll check it out.

Students asked to join Great Hunger Clean-Up

This is an invitation to all Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students to be a part of the Great Hunger Clean-Up 1987.

Sophia Twarog

guest column

On April 11, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., groups of students will be going out into the South Bend community to do a variety of fix-up/clean-up projects. They will be doing things such as painting, planting trees and flowers, doing minor repairs, cleaning parks, etc. The work sites were located with the help of the mayor's office, the Notre Dame Community Relations Office, and a number of community organizations including the North East Neighborhood Association, Dismas House and La Casa de Amistad.

Prior to the Clean-Up, students will collect pledges from friends, family, faculty members, etc. (It's the same concept as a walk-a-thon). The individual fundraising goal is $30 per person. Every student who reaches this goal will receive a classy Notre Dame ball-point pen, compliments of the Alumni Association.

Additionally, there are prizes for students who collect the most money, including free dinners, gift certificates, T-shirts, and an "Escape Weekend" at the Marriott Hotel. The Grand Prize is a round-trip ticket to anywhere in the continental United States (courtesy of Executive Travel, Inc.). Half of the money raised will be used toward meeting hunger needs here in South Bend. The other half goes to Third World countries, where it will be put into agricultural development projects where it will have a lasting impact.

South Bend is not the only city in which a Hunger Clean-Up will be taking place. On April 11, 61 cities across the nation will be participating in this event. "USA for Africa" has been instrumental in organizing this event at the national level. At Notre Dame and Saint Mary's, the Overseas Development Network, the World Hunger Coalition, and the Saint Mary's Social Action club, as well as a number of other dedicated individuals have gotten the ball rolling.

Sign-ups are Tuesday and Wednesday in the dining halls, in the dorms, and in the Center for Social Concerns Monday through Thursday evening. The Community Service Commissioners are the Hunger Clean-Up representatives in the dorms. They will have sign up sheets and pledge sheets posted outside their doors. There will be a free pizza and/or ice cream party for the dorm with the highest participation rate and possibly another one for the dorm that raises the most money (per capita).

Please note that the Hunger Clean-Up does not conflict with the Fisher Hall Regatta taking place later that afternoon. Also, University Food Services has graciously agreed to extend the hours of the cook-out lunch to 2 p.m. so that Hunger Clean-Up participants can be assured of getting some food.

Join our effort and sign up soon! Hope to see you all out there!

Administration shows poor timing again

Dear Editor:

A few days ago I received a phone call from an organizer of the Bookstore Basketball tournament. After a brief introduction the voice started in with an unsolicited apology. As he continued I soon realized that our team name, "Condoms From Hell," was being censored for the remainder of the tournament and that we would now be known as team 369. When I inquired as to why, he slowly admitted that it was the work of an "external force."

In the March 30 edition of The Observer, this "force" was identified as a joint student-administration panel established as a result of concerns originating in the administration over the appropriateness of the names. Yes, the old Notre Dame "External Force" (which says it all for anyone in Howard Hall this year, for any member of Scholastic or for that matter, for any student who has studied at Notre Dame for more than a semester) acted again.

I do not want to belabor these points, though. Instead, it seems a deeper, more unsettling habit seems to be developing. It seems the administration is developing a chronic case of "poor timing." For example, look how well the Howard conversion was handled: notifying the students during their finals week. The same situation has occurred with the tournament name censorship.

The March 30 issue of The Observer stressed several examples in which the team names were questioned by the administration in past years. I think it would have been possible, with a little foresight of course, to predict that this year's team names would be of similar themes. Instead of merely telling tournament organizers to announce that inappropriate names would be censored, the administration acted after the teams had submitted names and again placed themselves in direct conflict with the students.

There is an old, overused cliché which might be applicable here: "Think Before You Act."

Entire university should get involved in justice

As Father Hesburgh prepares to step down from his position as President of Notre Dame in May, much attention will focus on his active involvement in various justice issues. Certainly these accolades are deserved for his efforts with the Civil Rights commission, with Nuclear Disarmament, and most recently, for the establishment of the institute for International Peace Studies. However, will his leaving signal the end of Notre Dame's role in peace and justice areas? Has the University relied too much in the past on the efforts of one individual to carry out its mission to bring about peace with justice in the world?

Margarita Rose

guest column

Fortunately, a small portion of the Notre Dame community - students, faculty and staff - devote their efforts to this pursuit, although these efforts are often unrecognized. Now the time has come for a larger portion of the community to become actively involved. A university known for its commitment to peace and justice because of its president must demonstrate that this commitment is pervasive throughout its membership. Participation in peace and justice efforts begins with an awareness and knowledge of injustice. Several upcoming events will offer us the opportunity to gain this knowledge.

In light of the March 21 - April 6 national Weeks of Anti-Apartheid Action, the African Studies Program is sponsoring a film series (also supported by the Notre Dame Anti-Apartheid Network) which focuses on the injustice of the system of apartheid in South Africa. The series is named in honor of the late Steve Biko, a leader of the Black Consciousness Movement in South Africa who died in detention, and Professors Joan and Jimmy Stewart, South Africans who taught at Notre Dame several years ago and later died in a car accident which was most likely an act of sabotage by the South African Security Forces.

The remaining films will be shown Monday, March 30, through Wednesday, April 1, all at 8 p.m. in the Center for Social Concerns. On Thursday evening, April 2, a very special event will take place in the form of a public lecture by Father Malusi Mpumlwana. Malusi is a South African priest who, as a member of the Black Consciousness Movement, was arrested and severely tortured. His lecture, entitled "South Africa: The Liberation Struggle," will also begin at 8 p.m. in the Center for Social Concerns.

Sadly, Notre Dame's record for pursuing justice is tarnished by the South African issue. While Father Hesburgh has been involved in behind-the-scenes dealings to bring a handful of South African students to Notre Dame and to sign proclamations condemning apartheid, the University itself has failed to make a committed public stance in support of those who suffer in that country. High-level communications by big-name university presidents is an inadequate response to our call to be peacemakers. We all should be involved, as Catholics or Christians or simply people committed to a just and peaceful world.

Another chance to become involved will be offered by Peace with Justice Week which will take place April 6-11.

The week begins with a video, "God and Money," which explores some of the issues raised by the U.S. Bishops' Letter on the U.S. Economy; it will be followed by a discussion led by Professor Drew Christiansen of the Theology Department. Starting at 7 p.m., the video will take place in the Grace Hall Pit.

Bishop Thomas Gumbleton of Detroit, president of Pax Christi (USA), will discuss his role as peacemaker in the context of the Lenten theme, "God does not see as we see - for we look at appearances, but the Lord looks into the heart." The Bishop's address will take place Wednesday, April 8, at 7 p.m. in Sacred Heart Church.

A theater presentation, "Peasant of El Salvador," will be performed Thursday evening at 9 p.m. in Washington Hall. This award-winning play focuses on the struggles experienced by a Salvadorean peasant family within the context of social and political change gripping their country.

On Saturday, April 11, the "Great Hunger Clean-Up" will engage students in community improvement projects. Sponsors of the clean-up will donate money to be used for various hunger relief efforts.

All of the events of Peace with Justice week are intended to make the Notre Dame community aware of the call made by Pope John XXII in his encyclical "Pacem in Terris." In this letter, Pope John called on the members of the Church to seek a more peaceful world by creating a more just one. We begin to do so by understanding the issues of peace and justice in the world around us, an understanding brought about through dialogue.

One event during Peace with Justice Week will attempt such a dialogue in considering the specific role of the University in instilling a sense of justice in its students. President-elect Father Malloy will lecture on the topic "Education for Justice: Is it Possible?" on Tuesday, April 7, at 7:30 p.m. in Washington Hall. Following the lecture, a panel of graduate and undergraduate students will offer their views on the subject.

It is because of Notre Dame's commitment to its Catholic identity that it has the obligation to heed to papal call to pursue peace with justice. Does the burden of carrying out this obligation fall only upon the shoulders of organizations like the Center for Social Concerns, the Peace Institute and University Ministry? Should not all aspects of the University embrace its commitment? While students have many opportunities to become involved in peace and justice related organizations and activities outside the classroom, how many encounter these matters as part of their curriculum? Where does education's role in bringing about justice in the world begin? Where does it end?

Margarita Rose is a graduate student in Economics and the Chairperson of the Anti-Apartheid Network.

P.O.Box Q

Financial aid is not based upon one's sex

Dear Editor:

The Observer's assistant news editor Chris Julka has committed two serious errors as a professional editor in his March 25 editorial in which he portrays himself as some sort of victim of "reverse discrimination" as a white male.

For one, he makes his accusation based on information that cannot, by law, be verified by anyone reading his article. He claims by that using identical information on family income, his sister qualified for the Federal Pell Grant while he did not, and that his parents were expected to make twice the financial contribution for him as for her.

If this were truly the outcome only one explanation is possible. They did not have identical financial information on both applications. Either he had more personal savings at his disposal or he made an error on the application. This, however, is confidential information. Item number nine on the FAF, identifying male or female, is optional. There is no federal law requiring the Department of Education to factor sex into the needs formula.

I believe that the seriousness of the misinformation being fostered by this editorial requires that the Notre Dame Office of Student Financial Aid publish a statement clarifying the federal policy.

Secondly, he sets up a straw person to knock down in his statement that feminists such as Ellen Goodman are arguing, de facto, that white females "have it as bad as black males." No feminist will deny or underplay the discrimination against black males. A recent study by the Center for the Study of Social Policy estimates that 45 percent of all black males in the country do not have jobs, including not only those officially classified by the Census Bureau but also those who are counted as "discouraged" and no longer looking for work. To attribute this degree of unemployment to attitude or lack of ability on the part of black males is considered racist by most standards.

If black males suffer as victims of widespread discrimination, black females suffer doubly - as blacks and as women. Over 50 percent of all black families with children under 18 are headed by women and 74.2 percent of all black children, under the age of six living in female-headed families, live below the poverty line. No one espousing feminist values reserves the right of equality and a decent standard of living for white women and children alone, as Julka implies they do.

If he believes that women are not discriminated against in this society he must believe that they are getting paid what they are worth. Women earn less than men at every level. Whether they work in professional fields dominated by men (such as accounting, in which female workers comprise less than 40 percent of all workers and earn only 71.2 percent of what men earn), in retail (women make up over 60 percent of the work force and yet earn only 67.4 of what men earn) or in occupations dominated by women (such as clerical jobs, in which women make up 78.4 percent of the work force and yet earn only 67 percent of what men earn), women consistently earn less than men.

Even when we compare the 1981 figures for occupations in which men and women earned the highest median weekly earnings, we see major discrepancies. Men working in the twenty occupations with the highest income earn significantly higher wages than women working in professions that pay them the higher income. Furthermore, the occupations that rank high for female earnings are not the so-called women's professions. The occupations in which women earn the most money are those that are male-dominated - operations and systems research and analysis, computer systems analysis, law, medicine, and dentistry.

The causes of low incomes and poverty among women are fundamentally different among men, black or white. The lives of the vast majority of women reflect a very different reality. There are societal expectations on all women that they fulfill the roles of caring for children, men, grandchildren and for elderly parents. It's these expectations which result in the lumping of women into care-giving jobs in the marketplace, for example.

Even if they were initially valued more highly from a pay perspective, they would and are eventually lower paid as the sheer numbers of women now entering the work force drive wages lower and lower. It is the black women in their role as child rearers who are bearing the burden of the black male unemployment.

All women, black or white, affluent or poor, are distinctly vulnerable to macroeconomic swings because of the roles assigned to them. To ask that society at least recognize this is a long way from laying blame for all the evils of the world on men.

The story behind the return of

Editor's note: The following is not an April Fool's joke. (Maybe it should be.)

MARK MCLAUGHLIN

The cult of Circus Lunch, as any of you who read the classifieds will know, has finally gotten its wish. Circus Lunch made its second appearance in North and South Dining Halls on Monday.

Meet Paul and Joe, two ordinary Notre Dame guys who tried to make a difference. "We'd been talking about this thing since the beginning of last year," said Paul. "I was overseas last year, but Joe told me about it."

"It was a real highlight of the semester for me," said Joe. "I really appreciated the Circus Lunch. I told Paul about it and he came to appreciate it too."

These two intrepid crusaders started their campaign with a note under the Director of Food Services, Bill Hickey's door. You can imagine the excitement of the moment as Bill Hickey picked up the paper and read the plea for help.

"Why not?" said Hickey later about the note. "If the students want it done, I'll do it. They just have to let me know what they want."

But these two weren't done yet. "We needed something to campaign for," said Paul, "and Circus Lunch seemed like a good thing to do."

As their Personals campaign picked up steam, and a February late night poster hanging caper took the campus by storm, support for the Circus Lunch grew and grew. Soon other signs appeared, signs not made by Paul or Joe. Personals started multiplying. "There was kind of a Circus Lunch subway alumni," said Paul. "People caught the fever."

Soon people started asking dining hall workers where the Circus Lunch had gone. According to Paul, no one he knows had actually demanded Circus Lunch. Little did Paul and Joe know that the Circus Lunch was coming to town again. "We had some real good staff reports on Circus Lunch," said Hickey. "Students tried one of everything."

"Take Chinese New Year. Students liked the eggrolls, but they didn't like the chop suey or the chow mein. We learned from that." And so Circus Lunch, after a year's absence, was scheduled for March 30.

Paul and Joe first got word from an inside source on the Thursday night before the big event. They waited for official word, then celebrated with their roommates and friends. A 'Circus Lunch countdown' was started the night before, and phone calls were made to WVFI to publicize the big news.

"It was a total surprise. We weren't really expecting it," said Joe. Since Paul and Joe had never met Hickey, there was no way to know.

On the big day, Paul and Joe dressed up for the occasion. According to Joe, "The happy atmosphere, the clowns running around, the music playing is just great. And it's got a catchy title to it. Circus Lunch. I mean, it just sounds good!"

A dream was fulfilled. "I guess we had an effect," said Joe. "Maybe in the future we'll work towards establishing a permanent Circus Lunch. Maybe, we'd even have a Circus Lunch a week.

"Maybe we could have a really big Circus Lunch, kind of like JPW."

"And 10 years down the road, who knows? Maybe we could have a really big Circus Lunch, kind of like JPW. All the alumni could come back and have Circus Lunch."

How 'bout it, Mr. Hickey? "Well, not this year. We have too many picnics and things coming up, and the big Fisher Regatta thing out by Holy Cross," he replied.

Paul and Joe, at least for now, have no plans for other campaigns. "Circus Lunch was the one that was important," said Joe. "Everyone got a good meal out of it, and that's what counts." But both men have learned from their hard work. "Students can do things if enough people make enough of an effort, not just try one time and then give up."

"On serious and important issues, if students persist, things could be done," he added.

Summer servi

GINA CAMARENA
features writer

Remember all those volunteer projects you turned down because you "didn't have the time," or because you needed to work in order to save money for college? Well, this summer could more than compensate for any unventured projects. The Summer Service Programs offered through the Center for Social Concerns gives students the opportunity to volunteer eight weeks of their summer and earn $1,200 towards next year's tuition.

The projects, sponsored by Notre Dame Alumni Clubs and the Jim Andrews Memorial Fund, are designed for students who want to work on a long-term volunteer service. Students can choose to work from approximately 60 cities throughout the U.S. in such areas as the Catholic social services, children's camps, shelters for the homeless and shelters for abused wives.

"The possibilities are endless and every project is different," said project coordinator Sue Cunningham. She also said that many students have much to offer to the program but don't know that it exists. "The biggest problem," said Cunningham, "is getting students aware of what it is all about."

Cunningham is currently helping to select the 65 or 68 participants from the 123 applications received. Those chosen for the projects will receive their assignments before spring break, and will attend a workshop in the spring to learn more about their duties as volunteers. Each student will spend eight weeks in one particular city, and depending on the location, will either live at home, in a parish, in a convent, or in a home of alumni. The final part of the project is completed in the fall when students return to campus. A fall workshop will bring the volunteers together to reflect on service and to share their experiences. Also, a 1-3 credit theology course will fulfill their requirements.

In 1980, the program began with only five projects and this year there will be approximately 60. The goal is to have each of the 179 alumni clubs participate in the program. Cunningham said the future for the program is "continued growth."

One of last year's participants, Johanna Kelly, continues to visit the shelter where she spent eight weeks teaching, learning, and "making friends." Kelly worked in Michigan City at a shelter workshop for the mentally and physically handicapped. Besides "teaching the adults basic living skills," she would also lead songs by playing her guitar. "It's a great experience," said Kelly, "and you end up receiving more from them than they do from you." In terms of rehabilitative medicine the experience was also a "career direction" for Kelly who is studying pre-med.

For Kelly, the fall workshop gave volunteers the chance to sum-up their projects. "(The seminar discussion) tied service to theology," said Kelly, and "gave us the chance to discuss issues that arose in our projects--reflection is helpful."

Mark Zeese, another volunteer at the shelter workshop, described his work as "the best summer experience I've ever had." Zeese was a supervisor at the shelter and tutored the disabled in special learning groups. Working with the disabled was "a challenge" for Zeese who previously feared this type of tutoring. "I always wanted to help," said Zeese, "but I have never worked with the disabled." In addition to teaching the adults simple tasks such as sorting objects, Zeese was also "someone who could be their friend." The entire experience "is a meaningful thing to do," said Zeese.

Scott Lechner volunteered his summer in another part of the country, Wilmington, DE, not far from his Newark home. Lechner lived in the House of Joseph helping homeless men find employment. "I wanted to do something for others," said Lechner, "and (working at the home) gave me a chance to see the other side of society." Lechner helped the men by giving them his support, talking with them, and sharing each other's viewpoints.

Since the project Lechner is more understanding towards the unemployed and friendships. "Many of them don't have friends," said Lechner. "We don't know how lucky we are." The Summer Service Programs have many beneath-the-surface rewards. A price cannot be placed upon the friendships and memories of one such experience.

Security Beet

The following incidents were not reported to Notre Dame Security this week:

Sunday, March 22

1:30 p.m.- A Farley Hall resident reported receiving an obscene phone call. When asked about the nature of the call, she said, "It was okay, but he needs to practice his heavy breathing. If you catch him, give me his name and number, OK?"

3:42 p.m.- A male subject was apprehended as he attempted to leave the Notre Dame Bookstore without being overcharged for some shampoo and a notebook. When asked about the incident, a Bookstore employee said "I didn't realize that the prices for the goods in question were reasonable. We have corrected the problem and will continue to gouge students for all the money they have."

10:56 p.m.- A member of the faculty was apprehended by security officers as he ran nude through the parking lots near the football stadium. The subject resisted officers contending that he was "only jogging." He was subdued and taken home to his wife who informed officers that her husband had been under a lot of stress lately.

Monday, March 23

11:22 a.m.- A Lyons Hall resident reported an obnoxious roommate. "She's been obnoxious for a long time but this is the first time I've told anybody" she said to security officers. The roommate was apprehended outside Lyons and taken in for questioning.

5:19 p.m.- Security received a report of someone assaulting a washing machine in the Badin laundry. Security arrived to find a group of five male subjects attacking a washer with hammers, wrenches, and a tire iron. The subjects explained that they'd been ripped off for the last time and that they had decided to give University Vending something to think about.

6:48 p.m.- A female student reported the theft of her bookbag from South Dining Hall. Taken were several books and twenty-three dollars. Security officers laughed in her face and told her not to leave her money sitting around where somebody could steal it. One officer was reported as saying "How ridiculous!" The student responded by kicking the officer in the stomach.

Tuesday, March 24

10:18 a.m.- A male subject informed Security of the theft of a large quantity of drugs from his dorm room. Street value has been estimated at 2 million dollars. A reward is being offered for their return.

Wednesday, March 25

12:13 p.m.- A Breen-Phillips resident reported the loss of her innocence and youthful idealism. The Innocent was apprehended attempting to buy a case of Budweiser at City Wide Liquors in Mishawaka. The youthful idealism is still at large and is considered armed and hopelessly naive.

8:32 p.m.- A male subject was apprehended by library monitors as he attempted to smuggle a twinkie and half of a Diet Pepsi up to the fifth floor. The suspect protested "Look, I've been studying a long time and I'm really hungry. I promise I won't spill." Library Security was not impressed and they worked him over with clubs before making him promise never to take food upstairs again.

Thursday, March 26

4:58 p.m.- A Lyons resident reported receiving an obscene phone call. Upon receiving another such call at 5:15 Security went into action, eventually tracing the call to their own offices. "Oh well" explained one officer "boys will be boys."

Friday, March 27

9:56 p.m.- A student was apprehended studying on the tenth floor. When asked why he was studying on a Friday night he gave some lame excuse and was promptly forced a six-pack.

3:39 a.m.- A male subject was apprehended in the Observer offices. He contended that he was "trying to write my column" but upon inspection the "column" turned out to contain top-secret Notre Dame Security Forces information. The subject was gagged and taken to the Administration building where he is being held without bail.

Campus Band Publicity

In light of the difficulties that campus bands have encountered in their attempt to advertise themselves, and in response to Director of Student Activities Joe Cassidy's suggestion, The Accent department will introduce a new column next week as a service to the Notre Dame community. "The Downbeat" will present a listing of campus bands and where they will be playing each week. If you are a member of a campus band and wish to appear for free in The Observer, call Kendra Morrill at 283-3693 or bring the band's name and schedule to The Observer office.

Credit card holders will face new world of plastic money

By STEVE CLAEYS
Business Editor

Unknown to most credit card holders, the deregulation of the banking industry may greatly alter how consumers use their plastic money. Debate is growing concerning credit card interest rates.

Although cardholders may be treated to lower interest rates and special incentives, they may also have to face shorter grace periods, higher prices and less credit.

The banking industry was a calm, orderly business before deregulation. There was little competition for customers because interest rates were regulated by the government.

Deregulation brought these days to an end. Banks must now battle for customers by offering cheaper loans, higher interest rates and special services. Naturally, this competition has included the domain of bank-issued credit cards (for example, Visa and MasterCard).

Americans have accumulated an outstanding revolving credit of more than $128 billion, and banks are scrambling to get a piece of this lucrative business which had a pre-tax profit of $5 billion last year.

Banks are offering a diverse range of incentives to attract credit card users. Fleet National Bank of Providence, Rhode Island, home of Brown and other colleges, offers alumni of these local schools a credit card with the insignia of their alma mater imprinted on it. Additionally, 1 percent of the amount charged to one of these special cards is donated to the respective alumni fund by Fleet National.

Citibank Visa gives customers what Citibank calls CitiDollars each time they use their cards. These CitiDollars can then be used to purchase merchandise out of a special catalogue provided by Citibank.

Discount insurance rates, travel services, easy credit and special "gold cards" are also used to lure potential plastic money customers.

The credit card companies that do not issue their cards through banks (American Express and Diners Club) are likewise attempting to attract new customers. American Express revealed a new card called Optima which charges consumers an interest rate of only 13.5 percent. This is much less than the 18 to 20 percent rates banks usually charge on their cards.

The banks are hardly welcoming the new competition from American Express, and some banks have even considered not selling American Express traveler's checks.

Despite these benefits, there is growing consumer discontent over the interest rates charged on unpaid credit card balances. Although the prime rate decreased from 13 percent to 7 percent during the past seven years, the average credit card rate has climbed from 11 percent to 18 percent. This has caused many consumer organizations to cry "foul," and has precipitated many reactions by the government.

New Jersey governor Thomas Kean has warned that he will call for legislation to forcibly reduce rates unless the banks lower their rates voluntarily. American National Bank of Illinois refused to reduce their rates to approximately 14 percent, and, as a result, Illinois State Treasurer Jerry Cosentino ended the state accounts at American National. This will deprive the bank of $485 million of deposits per year.

THE NATION'S 5 LARGEST BEER BRANDS

by volume, in millions of cases per year

SOURCE: Beverage World

Observer Graphic/Geoffrey Sauer

A limit on interest charged on credit cards has been established in the states of Arkansas, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Texas, Washington and Wisconsin. Additionally, bipartisan support is growing in Congress for legislation to put a ceiling on credit card rates, and two bills have already been proposed.

The credit card industry naturally is not going to take government regulation sitting down. A report in a Federal Reserve Bulletin has supplied the bankers their first round of ammunition. According to the report, consumers in states which regulate credit card interest rates tend to experience higher prices, stricter credit restrictions and shorter grace periods.

None of these repercussions obviously are in the best interest of consumers. This is especially true in the case of young and lower-income consumers who require easy credit. The issue which will be debated on Capitol Hill is whether these drawbacks are outweighed by the accompanying reduction in card interest rates.

The great American institution of plastic money is definitely undergoing a state of change. The result may be lower rates and special services, but they will be available to fewer people.

Successful managers lead employees with plenty of style

Here are a few very successful managers, recently highlighted by "Success" magazine, for whom you might be lucky to work.

The employees of Seagate, a computer parts manufacturer, seem like a very happy bunch. Their company's sales have doubled to $712 million in 1986, with profits of $90 million.

The man behind this success is Tom Mitchell, Seagate's president. His personality is "management by intimidation." An ex-Marine, he has a hand-grenade on his desk next to an office plaque which reads, "God I love war." He shouts out Marine slogans to his employees such as "Take no prisoners."

The slogans are only the beginning. To encourage an employee to sell more, Mitchell once jumped on the employee's desk and kicked the phone onto the floor.

He also demands long hours. Every executive and engineer worked seven days a week for a month and were ordered to eat Thanksgiving dinner in the company cafeteria. It was all because Mitchell sold 30,000 new disk drives before his company produced them.

Obviously, the President's style pays off. Is it worth it to the employees? Well, each received two weeks bonus last quarter and their salaries led the industry.

Brian Murray

Business Manager

Walmart is another successful company with another strong leader: Sam Walton. Walton, the richest man in America, has built Walmart into the seventh largest retailer.

Like Mitchell, Walton is a workaholic. He expects his managers to put in 50 hour weeks. But his approach is a little bit different. Walton believes in his people, works with his people, and takes care of them with profit-sharing plans and bonuses.

Walton's personal style is very unassuming. He drives a 1976 pickup and dresses in much the same way he did before he made more than $4 billion.

When it comes to dealing with employees, whom he calls associates, he is very patient. Walton regularly visits his stores and asks the lowest level employee for advice. His style is called "management by being nice," and it works. Walmart's sales are approaching $7 billion, from only $44 million in 1971.

Jim Benham runs Benham Capital Management Group, an investment firm. Last year, the 15-year-old firm managed more than $3 billion and had a mutual fund ranked in the top ten.

During the day he works behind a dark oak desk surrounded by charts and graphs in a typical banker's office. But at night, the 51-year-old grabs his trumpet and moonlights as a jazz musician. He has played for club crowds of 150 or more.

Resembling Steve Martin in the movie "All of Me," the money manager-jazz musician loves music and applies it to business. He sighs the teamwork needed to play in a band and likens soloing to giving a speech. When you get to solo, he says, "it's your turn to wail."

It is refreshing to hear a stale and conservative boss relate to bebop... shades and all.

Prouds fans welcome Orangemen

Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N.Y. - Skies were dark but spirits were bright when the Syracuse basketball team returned home Tuesday following a one-point loss to Indiana in the championship game of the NCAA basketball tournament.

Manley Field House, Syracuse's basketball home until the Carrier Dome opened in 1980, was awash with orange -orange shirts, caps, posters, balloons and stickers proclaiming "Still No. 1."

Signs proclaimed "You're No. 1 In Our Hearts - Thanks For A Great Season" and "We're Proud of You."

Some 2,500 people showed up to welcome Syracuse, a 74-73 loser to Indiana in Monday night's title game. Keith Smart's jumper with five seconds left was the difference.

Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim received a two-minute ovation when he led the team into the building.

"When you go through a night like last night, when the kids did everything we asked, you think about that basketball has to come down to winning and losing," Boeheim said. "But there were two great teams, and two great efforts, and you come down to it that you don't really have a loser in that type of game.

"This reception means a lot to us. It takes an awful long time to recover from a game like this. This is a great, great first step and it helps get on track for Kansas City (site of the 1988 finals)."

"This is the first time since we lost that I've been able to hold my head up and smile. Thank you," said co-captain Howard Triche, a senior and a Syracuse native.

Basketball fans will have to wait until next year to find out if this is indeed a new Bob Knight. People don't want to be fooled by a "wolf in sheep's clothing." Many feel Knight's performance was good enough to go straight to the Oscars after the game.

There are hordes of Bob Knight fans, while others pray for the day he leaves the coaching ranks. But all personality judgments aside, few people seem to argue with the fact that Knight is simply one of the finest coaches in the game.

Holtz, scored the game-winner from what would have been beyond the three point line at the ACC, and denied that he came in taking his opponents lightly.

"Hey, they're a smart team - a very smart team," Stewart joked. "You can never overlook any team that uses their heads as much as they do."

Holtz, who was out of town for today's game, will compete with Verkler's for the remainder of the time they survive in the tournament. Constrictors team member Pat Lampton alleged that cowardice was the Irish head coach's motive for missing the game.

"Sure, Lou will take on Alabama and Penn State," said a disgruntled Lampton. "But when a real challenge rolls around, he won't take on the Constrictors."

Because of the immense number of teams in this year's tournament, the tradition of the Hall of Fame game as the sole contest on the first day of the tournament was broken in favor of playing some of the games in the preliminary round. In other action yesterday, Gary Freeman of Death-tounge scored all 21 of his team's points in a 21-1 drubbing of Grandpa and the Four Bad Touches.

Also, Uncontrollable Flatulence from Hell nipped the Inside Traders, 21-18, behind Darren Mertz' 14 points and 20 rebounds. Dave Krus and Craig Pichatie, calling themselves Two on Five, played just that against the ever-popular Dripping Tasmanian Pig Snots, but the Snots blew out the duo, 21-7.

Impressive showings were turned in by the Ball-Headed Freakdaddies, led by Irish fullbank Braxton Banks and Will Anderson's 9-of-14 shooting in a 21-9 thrashing of Gumby and Four Other Senior Bar Patrons. Five Guys From Carroll who Beat Dillon also beat Five Guys who Also Had No Idea What Reagan Said on Aug. 8 yesterday, behind Bobby Kloska's 6-of-10 shooting performance. And, in a battle that raged on for an astounding one hour and 23 minutes, Sheep Thrills sheared Largest Agbejemisin and the Smurfs From Hell by a score of 21-11.

Team captain Steve Degroot blamed wind-chill temperatures in the teens for his squad's inability to score quickly, but he is anxious to see snow on the courts for his team's upcoming games.

"We've practiced in the snow because we realize that we can only win if our opponents are at extreme disadvantages," said DeGroot. "We're dreaming of a white Easter."

very little playing time, and now has been shuffled to free safety, where he appears to be one of the top contenders for a position on the first team this spring.

"I really can't say who the favorites are at this point," Forbes said, "but I will say that Corny Southall has been playing very, very well and really seems to have learned the position. I anticipate that his move to free safety is a permanent one."

Other likely candidates at free safety are freshman Dave Jandric and senior Chris Kvochak, who played at cornerback last season and has seen time at both positions this spring. He also remains a top candidate at the corner position.

Returning as a fifth-year senior at cornerback is Marv Spence, who made 33 tackles and picked off a pass last season. Other leading challengers for a spot at corner include Brandy Wells, who continues a switch from strong safety which took place last season. Wells made 41 tackles last year while slowed with a knee injury he suffered in mid-October.

season, are also in the hunt for positions at cornerback.

Another close battle in the secondary is taking place at strong safety, where the top candidates are hard-hitting sophomore George Streeter (44 tackles) and Yale transfer student Pat Eilers. Forbes also pointed out that he is pleased with the play of Doug Diorio.

Indiana gives Hoosier welcome to champs

Associated Press

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. - The pep band had already been through its routine three or four times Tuesday when the celebrating Indiana fans began lobbing rolls of toilet paper over the scoreboards high above packed Assembly Hall floor.

The NCAA champion Hoosiers' plane from New Orleans was late, but no one really cared. The party started without them.

"Hoo-siers, Hoo-siers," the crowd of about 15,000 chanted as they waited to greet the team that beat Syracuse 74-73 the previous night.

Across the hall, draped impressively from the rafters, were the four giant red banners proclaiming Indiana's previous NCAA basketball titles. A fifth - the third for Coach Bob Knight in 16 years at Indiana - will go next to the others.

"I've had a chance to coach a lot of players and a lot of teams," Knight said to the crowd. "There's never been a team I've taken greater pride in for what it has accomplished."

In five of the Hoosiers' six tourney victories, they had to battle from behind. Twice, they won by one point on baskets in the closing seconds, including Monday night's comeback from eight points down that was won on tourney MVP Keith Smart's jumper with five seconds to go.

"Hopefully, this team will show you when you've got problems of your own, when things aren't going well for you, each of you can find a Keith Smart if you look around a little bit to help you," Knight said.

But Knight's philosophy for success wasn't what the screaming fans, many of whom had been waiting more than three hours, had come to hear.

They wanted their heroes. And they gave them a heroes' welcome as they climbed a platform with a sea of red at their feet.

"Weren't there any classes today?" joked reserve forward Todd Meier, one of the team's three seniors. Then he pointed across the vast arena to the four NCAA banners and said, "I'm really proud because we came back here and put another banner down there."

NVA deadlines near

Special to The Observer

Non-Varsity Athletics has announced deadlines for a number of upcoming events on the NVA agenda.

Included are the following:

Today is the deadline for fencing, a novice tournament with both men's and women's divisions, all equipment provided, at least one rotation of PE fencing suggested.

Friday is the deadline for kayaking, with classes, outings and a $19 fee which includes equipment.

April 6 is the last day to register for the annual Irish Spring Runs, with three and six-mile events slated for Sunday, April 12. There is a $4 entry fee.

April 8 is the deadline for a pair of tennis tournaments, one for grad-faculty and another for hall teams.

In addition, NVA class offerings still open include Hydrorobics, Stretchercise, Karate and Scuba Diving.

Registration and/or further information on these activities and others may be obtained by contacting the NVA at 239-6100 or by stopping by the offices in the ACC.

Weather stops Irish baseball again, to meet Valparaiso at home today

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

The South Bend weather gods must not be fans of Notre Dame baseball.

After having one game rained out last week, and a game called for darkness last weekend, the Notre Dame baseball team had yesterday's game with Bethel postponed because of cold weather. The wind chill factor around Jake Kline Field yesterday hovered around 5 degrees, according to Irish head coach Larry Gallo.

Weather permitting, Notre Dame will face Valparaiso at 2:30 p.m. today at Jake Kline Field, and will continue its home stand tomorrow at 2 p.m. against Bethel.

"The main thing we have to do is play consistently, and that's tough to do when you don't play that much," said Gallo. "Right now we're playing on weekends and vacations it seems. I felt we had established some momentum in Texas, and we come back and get the rainout. It's still March, and the weather won't be like this forever."

The Irish won six of ten games in Texas over spring break, then lost two of three games last week. Notre Dame's current record is 7-9.

While Notre Dame is having a tough time completing its schedule of games, Valparaiso already has almost 30 games under its belt. The Crusaders, who stand at 16-11-2, have been led by third baseman Dale Polonus, with a .360 batting average, six home runs, and 28 runs batted in.

Valparaiso has also received solid pitching from today's scheduled starter, Shawn Barker. In his freshman season, Barker has a 2-2 record with a 1.88 earned run average.

"Their coach, Rich Ferchen, has done an excellent job during the years he's been there," said Gallo. "They have a scrappy bunch of players, and they play a pretty competitive schedule."

The Irish plan to start freshman Mike Coffey today. Coffey had a successful fall season, but has seen action in only one game so far this spring.

"He only pitched in Texas, and we've only played three games since then," said Gallo.

Another freshman, right fielder Dan Peltier, has been the main man offensively for the Irish. Peltier leads the team with a .382 batting average, two home runs, and 16 runs batted in. Shortstop Pat Pesavento is not far behind, with a .355 average and 12 runs batted in. Pesavento also has five stolen bases.

On the mound, Tom Howard has a 1.04 earned run average, Kevin Chenail leads the starters with a 3.21 ERA, and reliever John Gleeson is the lone Irish pitcher with two wins.

Bookstore Basketball officially underway

By PETE SKIKO and BRIAN O'GARA
Sports Writers

The sixth annual Hall of Fame game kicked off Bookstore Basketball XVI Tuesday, as Verkler Construction, led by former Irish basketball player Jim Dolan, the back in the second half and proceeded to throw several passes to the other team.

"I want to make it clear that those interceptions came under heavy pressure, and nobody was open," he said. "There were a lot of dropped balls out there, I hope you noticed that." The Constrictors failed to defeated the crowd-pleasing Esophagus Constrictors, 21-6.

The Esophagus Constrictors kept the crowd of 300-plus laughing throughout the one-sided game with several humorous antics. They rushed onto the court wearing taped glasses and sporting their GPA's on the back of their jerseys (3.9, 3.9, 3.97, 4.0 and 4.0) as the Notre Dame Victory March blared in the background. Team warmups kept the crowd chuckling as the Constrictors threw up several bricks and used the free time to study their books.

The Constrictors used several mixing defenses to try to confuse the Verkler Construction team, including their Ghandi defense of passive resistance, during which they fell to the court and watched as Dolan easily dropped in a layup. They also used a box-and-one defense, as four players held a box in the middle of the lane and one defender chased the ball, and a double-Dolan defense with one player on another's shoulders, swatting shots as they reached the hoop.

"We wanted to cut the game short because we had a lot of studying to do, otherwise we would have displayed a lot more talent than we did," said Tony Lanza, who donned a No. 7 jersey with "Beuerlein" on convert a half-court shot which they tried to calculate through wind velocity and the positioning of the court on the Earth. In previous years they have been successful with that shot.

"We have made that 95 percent of the time," said Lanza. "We missed it because of a lunar miscalculation. It's a very scientific procedure."

Tournament Commissioner Steve Wenc was pleased with the strong crowd turnout and results of the Hall of Fame game.

"I thought they put on a fantastic show," said Wenc. "That's what the Hall of Fame game is there for - to get everyone in the right mood for the tournament and to start it all off on the right foot."

Dolan, admittedly kept off-balance by the Constrictors' antics, praised his teammates for keeping their concentration while preserving the win.

"They (the Constrictors) came in with a game plan and they stuck with it," said Dolan. "If not for the tenacious play of Chuck Glen, Chris Stiles, and George (Stewart, tight end coach for the Notre Dame football team), today's outcome might have been quite different."

Spring reshuffling gives secondary promising outlook for next fall staying out there a little longer is what it takes, then we're going to do that.

"I'm pleased with the way the young guys have learned and are progressing. Everyone seems to be working hard and I sense a very positive attitude on the field."

Forbes was handed a fresh petition in every position," Forbes said. "Every spot is wide open as of now, and we're judging by performance as to who will be playing - not by last year's playing time, number of years played or anything else."

"We will go out of the spring with a first unit, but you never know what can happen between now and then. There are sure some real battles going on, and that makes everyone work that much harder."

Another motivating factor in the hard work to this point has been the learning of new positions on the part of players who have been juggled at different slots in the backfield.

Heading the list of musical-position players is sophomore Corny Southall. Southall was recruited as a tailback under former Head Coach Gerry Faust, moved to strong safety last year where he received

The defensive backs were still out on the field for a little extra work on some of their formations after Monday's spring football workout. And they didn't seem to mind.

"We're just looking to get better in all areas," said second-year Irish secondary coach Terry Forbes. "If deck of cards this spring, and just recently has completed shuffling it. The final deal probably will not come until just prior to the annual spring Blue-Gold game, slated for Saturday, April 25. That is when Forbes aims to have a number-one team decided upon.

Indiana's Knight put on a new face for the Final Four

The Indiana Hoosiers sit atop the college basketball world. As a result of Monday night's one-point victory over Syracuse, the Hoosiers hold bragging rights until next year's championship game, however painful that may be for everyone else.

But the title game, and the semifinal game for that matter, featured a different look from the Indiana side from what most basketball fans are accustomed to. The team won in its usual disciplined, though more up-tempo than normal, manner. The team was familiar to those in years past, even though the players constantly change.

While it seemed to be the same old Hoosiers on the court, there was a big difference off the court. Bob Knight, the maniac with the uncontrollable temper, the flinger of furniture, the head of the referees' Most Feared list and the perfectionist-to-a-fault head coach of Indiana University's basketball team was not this man we had come to know and hate at all. He was downright polite.

In the words of David Letterman, "Hard to believe, isn't it?"

This must be some hoax. This calm coach, THE Bob Knight, is the same guy who threw a chair across the floor not so long ago against Purdue. Do quiet, polite coaches do that? He also is the same guy who set United States-Pan American relations back a few years with his antics in "friendly competition." This is the wildman featured in the book,

"A Season On the Brink," by John Feinstein. This is the same coach whose press conference following a win over Northwestern this season sounded like Morse Code, with as many beeps as words. It just can't be HIM.

But alas, the evidence is piling up. After all, Knight's team won the national championship. A look back will uncover two previous national titles under his direction. His teams are tough all right.

Rick Rietbrock

Irish Items

And after all, Knight has not been a total saint this year. He has consistently voiced his opposition to the three-point shot, and not too subtly. This, although he coached one of the nation's biggest benefactors of the rule, Steve Alford.

He has been less-than-hospitable to Feinstein, because he felt the novel focused too much on Knight instead of the team, and kept too much of his language in its original form.

He has constantly jabbed at sports writers, knocking their qualifications on a regular basis. Of course, Knight himself stooped enough to write a column during the tournament.

Knight was even a bit rude earlier in this year's tournament. He had few kind words for the officials and opposing players in Indiana game against Auburn.

His biggest tirade, however, came in the Midwest Regional final against LSU. He received a technical when he stormed on the court, but he was not through yet. He complained to the NCAA Tournament Committee members on press row and slammed the telephone stationed directly in front of Notre Dame Athletic Director Gene Corrigan. Despite his claims, it is doubtful he was complimenting Corrigan on the job Lou Holtz has done with the Irish football team.

But then in New Orleans, Knight was quite different. He was subdued on the bench, saving both players and officials from his wrath. This quiet version of college basketball's answer to John McEnroe drew nearly as much attention through his silence as he did through his feverish arguments. It was scary.

But now questions remain. When he was a beast, everyone called him just that, and quite plainly. Is he trying to change that image? Was the change from plaid jacket to red sweater just the beginning of his changes?

We've got Hamburger for "another 35 years"

By MARK PANKOWSKI
and MIKE NAUGHTONSKI
Staff Headhunters

Vowing 35 more years of rule, University President Father Teddy Hamburger announced today that he will not retire at the end of the year.

Although the announcement shocked the Notre Dame community, Hamburger hinted that he never actually planned to leave.

"You didn't really think Ned (Father Joys) and I were going to drive around the country in an recreational vehicle, like some cheap Pizza Hut commercial, did you?" Hamburger told reporters.

"To make matters worse, we would have looked like Ed Bartles and Frank Jaymes on their trek to New York."

When former President-elect Father 'Spunk' Mallory learned of the announcement, he and his Bookstore basketball team No. 315 stormed the Administration Building.

"We won't let it happen," shouted Mallory and his teammates, repeating the words students chanted during the alcohol-policy protests three years ago.

But like the students' chants, their words fell on deaf ears.

Three hours later, several Notre Dame Security officers arrived and escorted Mallory and his cohorts away (see Security Beat for details).

Meanwhile, The Absurder reacted to Hamburger's announcement by releasing plans for a 152-page "Welcome Back Teddy" issue.

The Absurder also advised its readers to disregard the "Hamburger Years" issue it published one week earlier.

"That issue is worthless," an Absurder staff member commented.

Hamburger's announcement, which lasted four hours and covered issues ranging from civil rights to nuclear disarmament, came during an impromptu press conference held at the Grotto.

Responding to reporters' questions, Hamburger discussed his rationale for refusing to retire.

"I spent 35 years here trying to get this place some respectability," he said. "Why the hell would I turn it over to a guy named 'Spunk?'"

"Besides, I wanted to stay for another 35 years to make up for some big mistakes, like admitting women to Notre Dame, allowing ROTC on campus and permitting the publication of The Absurder."

Druids and clowns are murdered

By MARK MCLAUGHLIN
Observer Groupie

The bodies of four Druids, members of the Notre Dame Druid Society, were found hanging from the four sections of the War Memorial Fountain today.

According to the Archdruid, this was not part of the annual Spring Equinox ceremonies at the fountain. The fountain is reputed to have some resemblance to Stonehenge, a monument in England.

In a related incident, two students dressed in clown costumes may have been the victims of foul play. They were found lying in North Dining Hall last night, apparently the victims of poison.

HPC debates plethora of useless issues once again

By REGIS COCCIA
Apathetic News Editor

Plans for a Notre Dame Saint Mary's keg party (with real brewski) and a Paint-the-Dome Green Contest were just two of the many topics discussed at Tuesday night's Hall Presidents' Council meeting.

HPC Co-Chairdude Joaney K. Hill said the keg party would be held only if it meets sufficient opposition in the administration. "I think we really should go for it," K. Hill said. "If Oldrick says no I think we should consider having it in his office. After all," said K. Hill, "we're in charge here. We're the voice of this campus." Hall presidents voted unanimously in favor of the party.

Student Body Presider-elect Pat Cookie spoke to the council on inaugurating a Paint-the-Dome Green Contest to commemorate the presidency of University President-elect Father Edward "Spunk" Mallory. "We think this would be a very special way for the students to tell Father Mallory how much we appreciate his service to the University," Cookie said.

"(Student Body Vice Presider-elect) Lorry (Binkie) and I both feel the students should let the administration know how they feel," Cookie said. "We want the hall presidents to let the students know that we stand behind them," he said. "That's why Lorry and I are going to stay in the back-ground on this."

Cookie said interested students can sign up for the event in the Student Inactivities Office on the 4th floor of LaFortunate Student Center.

In other business, the council discussed not discussing any more insignificant topics concerning student life at Notre Dame.

Before adjourning the meeting, K. Hill and HPC Co-Chairdude She'll, uh O. Conher asked hall presidents whether they would prefer to use gas or electric barbecues for the annual HPC cookout to be held next Tuesday.

A general consensus indicated that hall presidents felt grilled by the question and voted instead to impeach this Absurder reporter.

Police raid JPW, grab 1500

MIKE NAUGHTON
Staff Muckraker

In what is already being called "The Raid of the Century," South Bend Police, aided by undercover officers, conducted a raid on the annual Junior Parent's Weekend President's Dinner.

More than 1,500 students were cited for underage drinking, according to police records. Thirty administrators and student government officers were arrested on charges of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Approximately 200 officers from the Indiana State Police, excise police and South Bend police surrounded the ACC at 10 p.m., according to footage I saw on Channel 28.

Five plainclothes officers entered the establishment disguised as a mother, a father and a typical Notre Dame junior and his parents, said Sergeant Claude Mawl, public disinformation officer of the South Bend Police. The officers then proceeded to enter the building.

"This was one of our most ambitious undercover operations due to the involvement of the necessitated overcoming of several unprecedented and uniquely unusual logistical difficulties due to gender predeterminants in our department," said Mawl.

Though Mawl's statement was indecipherable, sources did reveal that one of the officers involved was dressed in women's clothes.

"All of our plainclothes officers are men," Mawl said. "It was very difficult to find one of them to portray a middle-aged mother, Mawl said.

When the officers entered the building they observed a "significant factor of citizens of a minor persuasion consuming alcoholic beverages despite their inadequate age factor," according to Mawl.

Wine bottles were seized from the dinner tables by uniformed officers and are being held in evidence, according to Mawl.

Father William Bochump, while being escorted away by mounted police, said, "We were just selling cups."

An alleged junior reported that his alleged mother had allegedly been mauled by an alleged police attack dog.

Mawl denied the allegations. He said the woman assaulted the dog's officer first. "Poor Cujo was just sticking up for me," said the officer.

Mawl declined further comment until office hours Monday morning.

Also arrested on charges of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, resisting arrest, and failure to produce identification was University President Father Theodore Heshburgh.

Mawl added, "I really enjoyed breaking our old record for volume of arrests. We plan on stopping by at a football game next fall."

The Absurder, in a search of last week's Petrifieds section, has uncovered, besides lots of dust, a clue. According to Absurder Head Mudslinger Kevin Bleacher, "both these groups appeared in our newspaper over the past week."

The Druids have placed Petrifieds for the past three years running, and it has been rumored that the clowns were responsible for all those Circus Lunch ads that keep popping up.

Rumors that the Center for Social Concerns had been firebombed could not be checked before we drove down to the printer, but we thought we'd tell you anyway.

Petrifieds

The Absurder Notre Dame office accepts Petrifieds 24 hours a day because we like money. Rates are one dollar per 10 characters per day or $50 an hour, depending on what you're up here for. Deadline for next day's Petrifieds is 3 a.m.. If you don't pay, we will sling more mud at you than we usually do, probably enough to get you expelled. Good luck finding our Saint Mary's office - we don't know where it is either.

Random mashers reform

features slanderer

If you walk across the quad on any Sunday at night, you might hear the following. "My name is Carrie R. and I'm a masher." These words are the beginning of a testament of personal failure and redemption which have become synonymous with a small group of Notre Dame students who belong to a mutual support group called MASHERS (Mutually Aligned Sisters Enervated of Random Sex)

Though most Notre Dame students engage in an occasional public display of affection (PDA), a small percentage of men and women at Notre Dame find the urge to "mash, grovel, suck-face, maul, swap-split, neck, tongue wrestle, and/or make out," a curse which they can neither control nor explain.

"I just don't understand it," said 'Carrie' (not her real name), "I have a couple of drinks and all I want to do is press my face against any boy who comes along. It's kind of embarrassing, but I've kissed people who I don't even know."

'Jennifer' echoes Carrie's words, "I just don't understand it. I have a couple of drinks and all I want to do is press my face against any boy who comes along. It's kind of embarrassing, but I've kissed people who I don't even like."

'Sarah,' who was once like Jennifer and Carrie, has reformed her ways and now restricts herself to an occasional binge. She was surprised to discover that with help, she could control her mashing habits. "I was surprised to discover that I could control my mashing habits," she said, "I really think that MASHERS has helped me get my life back in order. In the past I used to have a couple of drinks and all I wanted to do was press my face against anything that came along. It's kind of embarrassing but I've kissed people who I don't even remember."

Even though MASHERS is open to members of either sex, its membership is composed mainly of women. When asked to explain this disparity, the sole male member 'Steve' commented, "I think most guys don't consider mashing a real problem. As a matter of fact, neither do I. I'm just trying to get picked up."

Let's be practical and 'fix' all our moral dilemmas

Wasting sperm? Well, that won't be a problem anymore if we castrate all males once they reach puberty. Just think what great choirboys we'll all make now.

No sperm means no more artificial insemination. No more doing weird Satanic things like creating human life and giving parents who can't have kids a chance to have their own.

Now there won't be any more jokes about Catholic families having twelve kids, will there?

Yes, it appears that castration would be the perfect solution to all the problems the Roaming Catholics seem to have with the imperfect world in which we live. And once we do it, there's no chance of weaker individuals backsliding and missing out on all the Church has to offer them.

Since the Church makes a big thing of "living by example," why don't we start with His Holiness and work our way down to us less pious folk?

PTL plague hits campus

Tammy Cooker, wife of PTL President Jim Cooker, recently announced she had an affair with President-elect Fr. Spunk Mallory, when an innocent post-healing session luncheon turned into a steamy, torrid love rampage. The question that is now pervading the nation is what is happening to our leaders? Okay, we may lose a Jim Cooker or a Spunk Mallory, but God forbid if we lose any real leaders of our university.

Roderick Brian

PTL update

This problem has not been limited to just Spunk Mallory. Other members of the administration and even student leaders have been caught in scandalous incidents. Does the story of Jack Oldrick and Maureen McFarten ring a bell? And what about the outrageous details of the love triangle between Irish Items writer Ricky Lee Rickrack his two main squeezes Vanna Blanca and Sister Clean Lense?

The seeds of immorality have been implanted everywhere from the administration to the students and even into the law enforcement officials (recall South Bend Prosecutor Michael Farce and his racy romance with his former grade school teacher Ima Selfrighteous). What is needed is for a leader to emerge, one free of the plague that Jim Cooker has recently placed upon us. Only by example can we rise from the ashes and be able to trust our leaders.

The importance of these revelations is overwhelming. Who can turn their heads at the plight of Jim and Tammy Cooker and not call that news? Certainly not out-going Student Body President Ike Slitek who was recently seen with movie star Lovely Lindalace.

We are all searching for answers. Our leaders have betrayed us by giving into the desires of the flesh. By God, what has the PTL club wrought upon our civilization?

Now, the question is who can lead us from this deep dark forest which we have entered. It must be someone with sound judgment, a solid core of respect and be able to distinguish right from wrong, savory from unsavory.

The decision should have been made long ago for we were all wearing blinders. Obviously our choice must be Mr. Butcher Cassidy. His past record shows a clear sense of timing and fortitude in matters of sexuality and suggestiveness.

When the bounds of morality have been crossed, who has been there to rescue us innocent students of Notre Dame? Who better to ward off the advances of such voluptuous women as Tammy Cooker than a man who believes publishing a picture of an embrace requires gestapo tactics from a normally inactive board.

Roderick Brian is a former member of the PTL organization.

Police commended for brutality at JPW raid

Dear Editor:

As a concerned parent of a member of the junior class, I would like to thank the Indiana Excise Police for raiding the JPW dinner.

I could not believe that parents were drinking in front of their children. What kind of example are they setting for their children on an alcohol-free campus? The fact that some parents and children were actually sharing drinks and getting smashed together is revolting to me.

The tactics used by the police force were brutal, but not brutal enough. The parents of these students will continue to misbehave until someone sets them straight. Maybe, sending all of them to resident South Bend babysitter Michael Farce would do them some good.

Skills could benefit prophetic hoop coach

I am sick and tired of hearing Irish coach Digger Phlops talk about his predictions. First, it was the North Carolina game when Digger, after his team's great victory, started rambling about how he had predicted that his seldom used guard Fred Rick would win the game with a last minute shot. Even the King of tall tales, basketball announcer Mac Guire, thought that Phlops was telling another fib.

Now, it seems that Digger has jumped on the Indiana Hoosiers' bandwagon. After Indiana shocked U.N.L.V. Phlops began talking about how the incomparable Indiana coach Bobby Day and he were "brothers." Sure, Digger, you'll jump on any bandwagon that will enable you to get your name in print. Heck, you even told Coach Day that his team would win the championship before the season, didn't you?

I think what we have is a modern day prophet here. But, I'd like Coach Phlops to use his prophetic skills to recruit some players and make some game plans that can finally bring us to the Final Four for a change.

Phlops gives up post, opens clothes outlets

By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Athletic Director's Son

In a blatant attempt to turn a fast buck, Notre Dame basketball coach Digger Phlops resigned his job and opened a jeans store.

According to Phlops, the high cost of dry cleaning was a major factor in his decision.

"If you look at the tapes of my old Fordham team," barked Phlops, "all I did was wear jeans. Trying to stay in the latest fashion was very, very difficult, especially when I kept tearing all my $500 jackets. Trying to keep them clean was also a negative.

"From that standpoint, opening a jeans store has always been a dream of mine. This is my moment. I'm not done yet, baby."

But in a letter stolen by the Absurder from the desk of Notre Dame Assistant Sports Disinformation Director Jim 'Spooked' Davies, Phlops cited other reasons for his less than earth-shattering decision.

"I'm sick of playing by the rules," said Phlops. "I want to take junior-college transfers and redshirt," the letter read. "Everyone else is cheating out there, so from that standpoint, why shouldn't I?"

Phlops' store, Digger's New Jeans, will also carry large numbers of the celebrated Notre Dame fashion accessory, the fish tie. The ties, which are blantly polyester, are the latest superstitious rage in the athletic department. They look

The Absurder / Greg Kohsler
Phlops models the latest in fashion and smell like fish that have been left in the sun too long.

"The fish tie has been very much a positive for us this year," said Phlops. "From that standpoint, I should make a bundle."

Speculation on Phlops' replacement centered on Polish women's basketball coach Merry DiStAnIsLaO.

"I'd really like a shot at the job," cried DiStAnIsLaO. "We always get together to 'X and O.' It would be fun."

Farce returns, coaches field hockey

By PETE GEGEN
Scandal Monger

The Absurder has learned that former Irish football coach Gerry Farce will use the escape clause in his contract with the University of Akron to return to Notre Dame.

According to sources within the Notre Dame Athletic Department, Farce will assume immediately the duties as head coach of the field hockey team.

Farce would not comment on the situation, but he did mention that coaching field hockey "can't be much harder than making the transition from high school to college coaching."

Farce exercised an option in his contract which allows him to leave Akron at any time to take on a coaching job at Notre Dame.

Farce leaves behind a football program several hundred thousand dollars over budget as a result of his efforts to make Akron a national football power.

The move leaves Head Coach Jill Linenfelt without a job. While sharply criticizing Farce's knowledge of the sport, she did admit that this situation has resulted in more coverage of the team in The Absurder than the paper managed to give the team the entire fall season.

Looking ahead, the field hockey schedule for next season opens with a night home-opener against Michigan, followed by games vs. Purdue, at Michigan State, vs. Miami (Fla.), vs. Arizona and at Oregon.

McLine reveals drug scandal

By GARY McLINE
Ex-Basketball Star

As I was standing behind Digger Phlops after my college basketball team's stunning upset of North Carolina, thinking to myself, "You know, this guy has a bigger tear in the back of his jacket than the average man."

Actually, I was tripped out on drugs. I had been snorting some cocaine in the locker-room before the game began, and I was high as a kite by tip-off time.

I heard that The Absurder was looking for an interesting story and I thought the world needed to know the truth about what drugs can do to people. For example, while doing drugs during football season, I had some strange hallucinations:

- Steve Sirloin went an entire game without overthrowing a receiver.

- Tight end William Joll caught a touchdown pass in the waning seconds of a tight game.

- The coach's son made a clutch block on a kickoff return, springing all-America candidate Tim Frown for an easy touchdown.

- Placekicker John Corny booted a 40-yard field goal to win two games early in the season. He won another close one in the last game of the season, but I wasn't wired for that one!

So you see, drugs aren't the answer. Writing stories for big-time publications is the answer.

Now where do I pick up my $40,000?
