U.S. embassy 'fully compromised'

Associated Press

MOSCOW - A congressman who made an unannounced nighttime inspection of the U.S. embassy said Monday that Soviet KGB agents have "fully compromised" it and undoing the damage will cost tens of millions of dollars.

Rep. Dan Mica said he and Rep. Olympia Snowe made the surprise inspection beginning at about midnight at the embassy, which is the focus of a sex-and-spy scandal allegedly involving former U.S. marine guards.

After their tour and talks with embassy officials, Mica told reporters: "We are still as concerned as we were when we left Washington: in fact, more concerned."

"We agreed that this embassy should be considered at this time fully compromised," the Florida Democrat said. "It will cost tens of millions of dollars to address our concerns."

Snowe, a Republican from Maine, told reporters gathered in a freezing rain at the embassy's front entrance: "There is a lack of security here in many respects."

Mica said embassy staff members were acting quickly to restore security at the nine-story building on Moscow's Garden Ring Road and a "secure area" had been created "within the last 48 hours."

He added, however, that Secretary of State George Shultz still may have to bring a special trailer for communicating with Washington when he visits Moscow on April 13-16 for talks with Soviet officials.

The Florida congressman heads the House Foreign Affairs Committee's operations subcommittee, which supervises construction and running of U.S. diplomatic missions abroad. Snowe is the subcommittee's ranking Republican.

Their visit to Moscow was prompted by the arrests of three Marines who were guards at the embassy, two of whom have been charged with espionage.

According to Marine Corps charges, those accused of spying became sexually involved with Soviet women and allowed agents of the KGB secret service into the embassy's communications center and other sensitive areas.

The third Marine is under investigation for allegedly violating the Corps regulation requiring that contacts with Soviet women be reported.

Defense Department sources have said they assume the security breach allowed the Soviets to decode message traffic over a period that includes the October summit in Iceland between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Mica said he and his Republican colleague arrived at the embassy about midnight, "before they (the embassy staff) were expecting us," and were there until about 2 a.m.

After the inspection, he said, they spent most of the day talking to people from virtually every department of the mission. The congressman said they would make "specific recommendations" for improving security, but he would not give details.

restriction. I think to impose a restriction would be an insult to the student's intelligence," said Brian Holst, student senator.

Viz attributed the crowding at the north dining hall during finals to the influx of students from the library. Laurie Bink, student body vice-president, recommended posting notices at the library during finals to warn students of the crowded conditions at north dining hall.

"In the past, there has been no effort to make students aware the problem," said Pat Cooke, student body president. The resolution passed in amended form by unanimous consent. The amended resolution calls for a publicity campaign to notify students of crowded conditions at the north dining hall during finals.

In other news, Brian Holst and Diane Fitzgibbon were approved as members of the Budget Committee representing the on-campus senators and class presidents respectively.

Cooke discussed senate procedures and responsibilities for the new term. "As representatives it is important to keep your constituencies in mind. This is not a private interest group."

Suit against Burtchaell appealed to high court

By GREG LUCAS
Senior Staff Reporter

Author Katrina Maxtone-Graham has asked the United States Supreme Court to hear her copyright infringement suit against Notre Dame Theology Professor Father James Burtchaell and his publishers.

Maxtone-Graham said Burtchaell went against her wish and used over 7,000 words from her book, "Pregnant by Mistake: The Story of Seventeen Women" in his 1982 book, "Rachel Weeping: The Case Against Abortion."

Maxtone-Graham initiated a lawsuit against Burtchaell in February, 1985. A district court rendered that Burtchaell had made "fair use" of Maxtone-Graham's material. An appellate court reaffirmed that decision.

Burtchaell's attorney, David Shlee, said he and Burtchaell were pleased with the decisions rendered by the District and Appellate courts.

Shlee defined "fair use" as "a doctrine that, under appropriate circumstances, allows somebody to quote from another work without permission of the author."

Burtchaell, University provost from 1970 until 1977, declined comment.

Maxtone-Graham said her words constitute almost 20 percent of Burtchaell's book.

"I think that (the Appellate Court) made a mistake," said

Maxtone-Graham, adding that "the decision is inconsistent with the Supreme Court's decisions in Harper & Row and Sony."

In both the 1984 Sony Corp. vs. Universal City Studios, Inc. case and the 1985 Harper & Row, Publishers, Inc. vs. National Enterprises case, the Supreme Court upheld the copyright holder, Maxtone-Graham said.

The author said she and her publishers on two occasions explicitly denied Burtchaell permission to use her material.

"(Maxtone-Graham) did express the view that she didn't want her book to be quoted," said Shlee.

Maxtone-Graham also charges that Burtchaell's book contains numerous errors and distortions in the quotations of her material. "(Burtchaell's) use of my material is an example of sheer sloppiness and outrageous distortion," she said.

"I read (Burtchaell's) book and was stunned at the inaccuracies and disrespect of the people I had interviewed," said Maxtone-Graham.

"Burtchaell will quote a woman as though she is having an abortion, when, in fact, she is describing an adoption experience," she added.

"My own feeling," said Shlee, "was that there wasn't anything material to what

SMC student leaders decide to allow speaker

Eileen Hetterich opened the first meeting of her term as Saint Mary's student body president by calling a joint meeting of the Board of Governance and Programming Board.

As the first act of this meeting, the joint council voted Monday night with only one member dissenting to allow a speaker sponsored by a group calling itself Gays and Lesbians at Notre Dame and Saint Mary's to use a room at the College.

"We are not lending our support to the group, we are simply allowing them to have a meeting on our campus," Saint Mary's Student Body President Eileen Hetterich emphasized. In other business, Hetterich announced that former student body presidents at Saint Mary's and Notre Dame Jeanne Heller and Mike Switek will speak tonight at 7 p.m. in Haggar College Center. They will discuss "what they would say if they could give one more lecture in their lives."

Hetterich also announced a "Party on the Quad" to be held on May 2, the Saturday before final exams.

The event will feature two bands, "The Law" and "Freudian Slip," as well as possibly free food and drinks 1-5 p.m. in the LeMans courtyard. It will be open to Saint Mary's and Notre Dame.

Stressing "support of the board" as crucial to a successful year, Hetterich announced the election of Hall Councilwomen to be held next week Monday.

Citing the fact that last year's elections drew "only 10% of the student body," Hetterich said elections this year will be held in the dining hall on LeMans side from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. instead of at Haggar College Center as in past years. Said Hetterich, this is because "we know that more than 10 percent of the student body eats."

Hetterich said she encourages all students to participate so as to have a great start next fall.

Dining hall resolution passes senate

By GREG LUCAS
Senior Staff Reporter

In the first meeting of the new student body administration under Pat Cooke, Student Senator Steve Viz proposed a resolution to restrict students, in each quad, to their respective dining halls during finals, in order to reduce congestion at the north dining hall.

The Resolution's call for mandatory restriction to respective dining halls met with opposition from many members of the Senate. "I think we're setting a bad precedent to be making such a restriction. I think to impose a restriction would be an insult to the student's intelligence," said Brian Holst, student senator.

Grandparents show enthusiasm by making mountain out of moles

This is a tale of adventure, of determination, of devious plots, of violence and gore.

Our story opens in the seemingly serene setting of Grandma and Grandpa Buehrle's front yard. Birds are chirping as they dance through the branches of gargantuan trees. Squirrels - not too unlike our very own ND variety - race and chase across the lush green lawn. Carefully tended flower beds line the half-acre of green.

On the porch of the simple white one-story house sit our heroes, devoted to keeping law and order in their small kingdom at 345 Calverton Rd. They sit in rocking lawn chairs and drink in the beauty before them. Do not mistake their inert state for idleness, however; their acute sense for slight disturbance never ceases to work, and on these warm summer nights, their alertness is on overdrive.

They are waiting. What are they awaiting? The most cantankerous, villainous creature that ever set foot in their happy little domain: The Demon Mole. After years of combatting his tunnels and trenches of destruction with poison, traps, and mini flash floods, they have finally decided to meet the enemy face to spade. Armed with what appear to be innocent garden shovels, they wield what they have concluded to be the most effective weapon in the shed. . . . one from which no weasley mole can escape.

Grandma sits with the binoculars in hand, surveying the turf for turbulence. Grandpa rocks peacefully, but he is an overwound clock ready to spring into action at the slightest hint of trouble.

Suddenly, Grandma jumps from her post with a shout. "Thar' she blows!" she cries as she sets her blue sneakers in motion. Grandpa flies toward the indicated yardquake as if he had wings on his feet.

As they scurry to the spot, they know in their hearts that the moment has come. Sure enough, there is their Little Lawn Terrorist devilishly demolishing the terrain. The birds stop chirping; the squirrels stop racing and chasing. They too have waited to see this moment and witness the final battle.

Grandpa takes a deep breath and raises the spade high over his head, never taking his eyes off the trembling dirt. Grandma clutches her binoculars and squeezes her eyes shut in anticipation of the blow.

Poised for action, Grandpa says a final prayer; all time screeches to a halt. Then, the death-shovel slices through the air, setting the earth back into motion. With a crash, metal meets earth, Mole meets death.

Silence.

Grandma opens her eyes and peeks at Grandpa, who grins back with a radiant glow of success. The birds break into joyous song; the squirrels do flip-flops on the now safe green. Grandma and Grandpa do a little jig.

Laura Stanton

Like all noble heroes, Grandma and Grandpa give their Enemy From Down Under a decent burial. They have once again set the world at 345 Calverton Rd. free from the path of destruction, and all who live there rejoice and are glad. We leave our heroes proudly but attentively rocking in their porch chairs, ready to answer the call of chaos if the world should go astray again.

For all you Save-the-Mole people out there, the point of my story is not that Grandma and Grandpa were right in trying to annihilate the entire mole population at 345 Calverton Rd. Rather, it is that they were right in how they went after the moles - with zeal. And that's the way they went after everything in life.

Grandpa died in July of 1984, and Grandma died nine months later. They were two of my favorite people in the whole world, and I'll always miss their drive and enthusiasm for life.

I talked to my mom last night; she had gone to visit Grandma and Grandpa's graves earlier that day. Mom said she had to laugh. The ground over their graves was riddled with those lovely long mounds from mole tunnels. So, they didn't really win the Battle of the Mole Hills, but by their enthusiasm and determination, they won the Battle of Life.

Pope completes trip in Argentina

Associated Press

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina - Pope John Paul II on Monday said he came to Argentina to complete the pastoral mission he began nearly five years ago with a visit during the war with Britain over the Falkland Islands.

President Raul Alfonsin greeted John Paul upon the pontiff's arrival from Chile for the last leg of a two-week, three-nation tour of southern South America.

Argentina was under military rule during John Paul's previous trip. On June 14, 1982, two days after the pope ended that visit, Argentine forces on the archipelago surrendered to British troops to end the bloody 10-week war.

The defeat was the military regime's death knell, and Alfonsin was elected and inaugurated in late 1983.

Argentina and Chile almost went to war in late 1978 over three small islands in the Beagle Channel at the southern tip of the continent. Vatican mediation resulted in the ceding of three islands to Chile and the division of the sea rights in the channel.

The pope arrived in Uruguay last Tuesday for a one-day visit, then spent an oft-tumultuous six days in Chile.

The pope's visit to Buenos Aires and nine cities from Patagonia in the south to the semi-tropical north is regarded with mixed feelings, according to a poll published Monday in the daily newspaper La Razon.

According to a poll of 400 men and women aged 18 to 74, 51 percent of those in metropolitan Buenos Aires are opposed or indifferent to the pope's visit. Only 47 percent of those polled by the Hugo I. Kolsky agency favored the visit. Two percent had no opinion.

A band of youths including some self-proclaimed anarchists protesting the visit clashed with police in Buenos Aires. Twelve people were injured, including six police officers.

About 90 percent of the 31 million Argentines are Roman Catholic, but only about 10 percent regularly attend church.

The House of Deputies recently approved divorce legislation after a bitter debate, but the Senate postponed its vote until after the pontiff leaves.

The pope is expected to address that issue as well as human rights.

A investigatory commission established by Alfonsin said about 9,000 suspected leftists were abducted and summarily executed, most of them after being tortured, by security forces under the 1976-83 dictatorship.

On Tuesday, the pope will travel to the southern coastal city of Bahia Blanca, then to Viedma, which is expected to become the new federal capital within the next few years.

Consultant gives advice on insurance

ROB HENNIG

Copy Editor

Preparing graduating students for financial independence was the topic of the first lecture in the "Transition from Backpack to Briefcase" series held Monday night.

Monday night's lecture is the first of a three part series sponsored by the University Counseling Center and the Senior Class.

"There's a lot of questions seniors have about what they're going to be facing when they leave Notre Dame," said Christine Conway, staff psychologist with University Counseling.

"We thought it would be good to provide the opportunity to get some information about financial matters and relocation and ways to cope," Conway continued.

The lecture, held at the Center for Social Concerns Auditorium, dealt with personal budgeting, insurance and banking.

John Lloyd, of Lloyd Insurance Agency, discussed the various types of insurance and the insurance needs of young adults.

"Insurance really, to me, is a matter of ... needs and wants," Lloyd said, adding, "Everybody's needs and wants are different."

For auto insurance, Lloyd recommended that graduating students get higher limits both in bodily injury and in property damage.

"Think in terms of getting higher limits because you're not going to save that much (money) in the lower limits," Lloyd advised.

Lloyd also recommended students consider buying auto insurance from major companies first, because employers frequently transfer younger employees.

For home insurance, Lloyd advised students to record all of their possessions. He said it is a good idea to have a record of all household goods because "in the event of a loss, proof and burden of the loss is upon you."

SMC profs receive $5,000 grants

By DEIRDRE FINN
News Staff

Professors Anne Brown and Herold Weiss of Saint Mary's each received a grant of $5000 from the Lilly Endowment.

A total of 28 faculty members at 15 different institutions in Indiana applied for the grants. Of these 28 only 15 applications from 11 institutions received funds.

Weiss, professor of religious studies, said that seven faculty members at Saint Mary's applied for the grant. The college then selected and supported three of these applications. The endowment narrowed the competition to two successful applicants. A panel of out-of-state independent college administrators selected the winners.

Brown, assistant professor of mathematics, said she would use the grant to develop a new mathematics course which would appeal to the liberal arts student.

Weiss said he "hasn't any idea yet" what he will do with the grant.

Reagan will consider treaty over acid rain

Associated Press

OTTAWA - President Reagan said Monday there are "no quick and easy answers" for curbing acid rain, but he agreed to consider a Canadian proposal for a treaty requiring lower pollution levels by an agreed date.

Reagan made his surprise offer in a speech to Parliament after Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney told the same audience, "In this matter, time is not our ally but our enemy. The longer we delay, the greater the cost."

The agreement to consider holding negotiations on the issue allowed the two leaders to wind up a 24-hour visit by Reagan on an upbeat note.

Earlier, both sides predicted there would be no agreements, and U.S. officials said privately that a treaty was not the correct way to combat pollution, particularly since various technologies are being explored to fight it.

Calling acid rain a two-nation problem requiring a two-nation solution, Mulroney said: "I urgently invite the United States administration and the American Congress to join with this Parliament and the government of Canada in concluding a firm, bilateral accord which will provide a North American solution to acid rain."

Reagan, departing from his prepared text in his speech minutes later, said he had "agreed to consider" Mulrone's proposal, "building on the tradition of agreements to control pollution of our shared interior waters," referring to the Great Lakes.

He said they also "agreed to inject new impetus" to talks on Canada's disputed claim of sovereignty in the icy Northwest Passage.

In their meetings earlier, Mulroney used a globe in his office to press his case that Canada owns the passageway through the Arctic Ocean.

The United States recognizes a 12-mile Canadian coastal jurisdiction but insists the waterway is an international strait through which other countries are entitled to passage.

On another sensitive issue between the two countries, the president promised to work for the success of free-trade.

Goal of education debate continues over decades

On March 10, Gregory Maggetti wrote a column commenting on the state of American higher education generally, and at Notre Dame specifically. The letter was interesting and provocative, and should challenge the Notre Dame community - administration, faculty and students - to undertake a serious assessment of their own views of the quality of education in our university.

John J. Gilligan

guest column

The writer raised the issue of whether the education offered to Notre Dame students amounted to little more than glorified vocational -technical education, and cited recent surveys of student attitudes which seemed to establish the fact that the students are getting exactly what they want, a ticket to a financially rewarding career in the form of a college diploma. It may seem strange, but almost the same dialogue about the purposes and effects of higher education was underway at Notre Dame almost a half century ago, when I was an undergraduate. In that era the great high priests of liberal education were Robert Maynard Hutchins and Mortimer Adler of the University of Chicago, and Stringfellow Barr at St.

John's College at Annapolis. And the arguments, pro and con, were very much the same as today.

The real point is the same as in those earlier times: education is not a commodity, to be designed, packaged and merchandised to appeal to the broadest possible consumer group. The customer in this instance (if we mean the student) is most assuredly not always right. If coming into the university they knew what was important and unimportant, had a well developed set of values, and had developed their own talents and insights to a fully adult level, they would not need an education. They could pay the fees and pick up the diploma during freshman orientation, and get on with the important business of life.

If the transmission of information is the goal, students at far less expense than four years in college will cost, can equip themselves with a computer and learn how to tap the appropriate data banks which continue to proliferate in every field of knowledge.

It is precisely that transmission of information and attitudes which has done so much to form the students who come here, a transmission which involves far more than formal schooling; it is the popular culture in which the student is immersed from the moment of birth. And if anything has changed in the past fifty years, it is the enormously increased power and efficiency of the technology and techniques of communicating the culture of materialism, militarism and consumerism. That's why an increasing number of incoming freshmen in universities all over the country, including Notre Dame, arrive on the doorstep convinced that "being very well-off financially" is the primary goal of higher education, and indeed of life.

It is precisely that notion, and that attitude, which Notre Dame and every other self-respecting university should be dedicated to discrediting, because it is the absolute antithesis of the idea that the goal of higher education is to lead the student to the fullest possible development of the qualities and talents that make one fully human. Granted, that begs the question: what are those talents and qualities, and how are they developed? Right. That's where the process must begin, by asking those questions and exploring all possible answers.

And since teachers cannot give what they don't have, the process must everlastingly involve them in asking and reasking and exploring the answers themselves, every year and every month, all over again. As soon as the teachers begin to regard the answers to those questions as so much information to be organized, codified, packaged attractively, and transmitted to the students with maximum efficiency, and minimum fuss, the process dies. In other words, if the teacher is not constantly growing and developing, not just in terms of specific knowledge, but in terms of the qualities and talents which make one fully human, the teacher is back in the commodity business.

For the educational process to be all that it can be, it must necessarily involve always both students and teachers in a never-ending cycle of development and renewal -intellectual, cultural, and spiritual. Notre Dame claims, at least implicitly, to possess distinct advantages over secular institutions in appreciating the full dimensions of intellectual, cultural and spiritual life, and a profound respect for the potential capacity for development of each individual human being. If that is true, we should be able to demonstrate on a day to day basis, in the life of every student and every teacher, the regenerative power of Christian higher education.

At the very least, we should be prepared to discuss the subject, at length.

John J. Gilligan is the Director of the Institute for International Peace Studies.

P.O.Box Q

Student's death marks victory over adversity

Dear Editor:

I would like to call the attention to the tragic death of a recent Notre Dame alumnus, Antonio Mazure, from whom we have much to learn.

Antonio arrived at Notre Dame in the fall of 1981 to pursue his graduate studies in physics. Not long after starting, in his second semester, he learned he had contracted acute leukemia. He bravely had to fight for his health, life and future with the aid of chemotherapy treatment. His recovery was hard and painful, but he managed to regain his health and strength, become actively involved in his scientific research, and on the side, play soccer in the city league.

In December of the following year he developed lymphoma, or cancer of the lymph nodes, which had to be treated with high radiation doses. His struggle to survive was even harder than before; besides having to fight the disease he had to fight the terrible side effects of the treatment. Again, he managed to fight his way out of it and continue with his Ph.D. research.

The following year his leukemia came back again, as strong and defeating as ever before. Yet he was not ready to give up, chemotherapy was by then his way of living, and he was again able to recover. He obtained his Ph.D. in August of 1985, with an impressive record; he had finished his degree in only four years with a 3.9 GPA and generated an excellent piece of thesis research.

A year later he had another leukemia relapse, while working as a post-doctoral research associate at Notre Dame. Early this year he went through a bone marrow transplant, in a last attempt to overcome this disease that was quickly closing in on him. Unfortunately, on Saturday, March 28, he lost his hard-fought battle with cancer: he died after a long month of struggle.

Few people have this kind of courage and stamina to fight against adversity and death. Those of us who knew him had a display of courage, friendship and excellence we will never forget. His example, of somebody who never gave up, and who always fought for his ideals and future, should be recognized, admired and imitated.

Antonio, we will miss you.

ABC's 'SuperTuesdays' make a comeback

JOE BUCOLO
senior staff reporter

Remember the old days when ABC's Tuesday night lineup was the best? Everyone loved "Happy Days," "Laverne and Shirley," and "Three's Company." These shows helped to make Tuesday one of TV's best nights. Well those days are gone, right? Wrong. ABC's super Tuesdays are back. Now that ABC has removed its weak "Jack and Mike" from the Tuesday night lineup, the shows are all strong and intriguing. With this new lineup of very popular shows, ABC has recaptured its title of TV's best lineup.

At 7:00 on Tuesday night ABC airs "Who's The Boss?" This show stars Tony Danza, Judith Light, and Katherine Helmond. Angela, played by Light, owns her own advertising agency. She is divorced and has a son. Since she can't be at home with her child, she hired her (played by Danza) to be her live-in housekeeper. Also divorced, Tony has a daughter. The kids get along extremely well. The third major character is Mona, Angela's mother. Mona works at Angela's agency and winds up attracting most of the customers. The character of Mona is so popular that ABC is considering a spinoff called, what else, "Mona." An upcoming May episode of "Who's The Boss?" will serve as the pilot for the spinoff. If that episode is successful, ABC will begin taping "Mona." As the show's title indicates, there is some confusion over who really is the boss. Angela is the boss at the office, yet Mona seems to run everything. In fact, many customers refuse to deal with anyone but Mona. Also, Angela owns the house, yet Tony seems to manage it better than she ever did. Tony even advises the kids—as well as Angela. This is a truly funny and ingenious show with a cast to match.

Things only get better when "Who's The Boss?" ends. At 7:30, "Growing Pains" begins. This is another of television's finest. "Growing Pains" features a family of five. The mother is a journalist and the father is a psychiatrist. What's the catch? Since the mother is out of the house, the father, Jason, moved his practice into the house to watch the kids. Jason and Maggie have three interesting children. Mike, played by Kirk Cameron, is the oldest. He is a witty guy who prides himself on his charm and "ways with women." Carol, played by Tracey Gold, is the genius of the family while Ben, played by Jeremy Miller, is the youngest. In many of his scenes, Ben is so funny that he quickly becomes one of the audience's favorites. While many shows ignore the premise on which they are based, "Growing Pains" always seems to remind the audience that Jason is a psychiatrist and housekeeper while Maggie is a journalist.

The cast of this show sparkles. Alan Thicke is perfect in the role of Jason. Joanna Kerns plays a mother who remembers what adolescence is all about. Kirk Cameron's performance as Mike is flawless. Tracey Gold is funny in that she perfectly portrays a humble, yet strong sister. Finally, Jeremy Miller is hilarious as young Ben, the brother who follows Mike's advice and winds up succeeding more than Mike. This show is sure to be around for many years.

ABC's 8:00 show speaks for itself: "Moonlighting." This show is a trend setter in every sense of the word. Through many different forms, this show entertains its audience like no other. "Moonlighting" is known for its brilliant show formats. One episode placed the main characters, Maddie and Dave, as the main characters of Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew." Another episode featured an interview of the characters by Rona Barrett.

The relationship between Maddie and Dave alone keeps the viewers coming back for more. Recently, Mark Harmon joined the cast as Maddie's boyfriend, Sam. These four episodes showed the true feelings that Maddie and Dave feel for each other. On the last of these four episodes, Sam, who had asked Maddie to marry him, left when he realized he didn't stand a chance against Dave.

Another trend that this show recently set is the rerun. "Moonlighting" has had more reruns this season than any other show. The viewers don't seem to care, though. This is evident in that fact that "Moonlighting," like the two previously mentioned shows, is always in the top ten.

Bruce Willis is excellent as David Addison. His newly found fame has permitted him to "expand" his horizons into music and cable television. The beautiful Cybill Shepherd is superb as Maddie Hayes. The aura of stubbornness with which she portrays Maddie has proven very effective.

The final show in the lineup is brand new, "Max Headroom." This show centers around Max, the familiar face seen on all those Coke commercials. The show is intriguing and fun to watch; however, the success of the show has yet to be determined. One thing's for sure. It is a definite improvement from "Jack and Mike" the "Moonlighting" copycat and ratings disaster. Given time, "Max" is sure to succeed. If the popularity of Max's Coke commercials is any indication, this show should be around for a while.

ABC's Tuesday night lineup is the best on television. It provides a lot of comedy along with some suspense and intrigue. The shows all feature superb casts and excellent writers. With the possibility of a "Who's The Boss?" spinoff and the popularity of "Growing Pains" and "Moonlighting," ABC has a definite winning night.

'Life through the eyes of a peasant'

features writer

The exciting, award-winning play "A Peasant of El Salvador" will have a single performance Thursday, April 9 at 8p.m. in Washington Hall.

First created and performed by Gould & Stearns, a two-man theatre company from Vermont, "A Peasant of El Salvador" is the human, tender story of an aging hill farmer, his wife and five children who are trying to maintain the life they have always known.

Rooted in land, faith, and family, their struggle stands out against a backdrop of sweeping social and political change.

In this National Touring Company production, two actors create 16 different characters. David Perrigo portrays among others, a son, a neighbor, a land reformer, a plantation foreman and the late Archbishop Romero. George Sanchez plays the old farmer, the central character of the play. Both men tell the tale with a light touch of humor and sensitivity, gathering the audience into a memorable theater experience.

This powerful drama is the longest running play of its kind in the United States. The production won the 1985 Denver Global Justice and Peace award and has received standing ovations in 39 states and London since its first performance in 1981.

Mike Keen, coordinator of Special Programs and Events for the Center of Social Concerns hopes to fill Washington Hall. Keen said, "It's very difficult to present good drama and art that deals with contemporary social issues because you're likely to either fall into some sort of rhetoric or put on an incredible dramatic presentation and miss the social issue. These actors walk the tight rope and succeed in presenting life through the eyes of a peasant as well as good drama."

"A Peasant of El Salvador" is being sponsored by the Center for Social Concerns. Other sponsors include the Helen Kellogg Institute for International Studies, the International Students Office, Students Organized for Latin America, Community for International Lay Apostolate, and the Overseas Development Network.

Admission is $4 for the general public, and $1 for students. Advanced tickets are available through the Center for Social Concerns at 239-5293. All Proceeds will go to International Relief in El Salvador.

ND professor against tariff limiting Japan's chip exports

By RENEE GAU
Business Writer

Last Friday the Reagan administration took steps to impose unprecedented sanctions of up to 100 percent on Japanese electronic imports.

These sanctions will take effect within ten days unless the Japanese allow U.S. computer chip manufacturers access to a larger portion of the Japanese market.

U.S. officials maintain that this action is necessary to retaliate against Japan's breach of an agreement which was reached last July.

At that time, Japan promised to open more of its markets to U.S. microchip producers while increasing prices on their own chips. Through this settlement, Washington hoped to stop what they called dumping by the Japanese - selling chips below cost on the American market.

Notre Dame Professor of Economics James Rakowski has taken issue with these sanctions. "It is a regrettable policy," Rakowski said.

He said the action taken by the Reagan administration is not a serious threat to the Japanese, but rather, "a signal that cooperation between the U.S. and Japan has become frayed."

Rakowski maintains that imposing sanctions on Japanese electronic imports may unnecessarily strain business relations.

The Nakasone government has been working hard to enforce the agreement, but "it's difficult to control those independent, strong-willed Japanese producers," Rakowski added.

So far the Japanese government has imposed a 30 percent reduction in domestic chip manufacturing, allowing American-made semiconductors to penetrate the Japanese market with greater ease.

By placing sanctions on Japan, the U.S. is inviting Japanese business to form a type of cartel to restrain trade, Rakowski said.

Rakowski also disagrees with Washington's accusation that Japan is dumping microchips. "In anticipation of the fact that tariffs will be imposed, people who want to buy microchips are buying them now, and that's tending to drive up prices," he said.

Rakowski further stated that "it's difficult to say that dumping is going on."

Pressure for the sanctions is coming from U.S. industrial leaders who are concerned that the Japanese are attempting to monopolize the microchip market after having already acquiring 90 percent of common memory chip sales.

Rakowski agrees that the U.S. government "has a role to protect people from the harshness of economic adjustment."

The government, however, "should be less concerned with trying to change the structure of trade (in the microchip industry) and more concerned with targeting individuals," Rakowski said.

Furthermore, Rakowski said, "I don't think that a case has been made that (the Japanese) have that sort of a scheme to monopolize."

There are many "robust" competitors in Japan, competing freely and driving prices down, he said.

Electronics industry leaders also fear that Japan will soon surpass the U.S. in technological innovations. Some have said that there is a very real threat to U.S. military security if the U.S. should have to depend on Japan for microchips and semiconductors.

Top 5 Exporters to the United States in 4th Quarter of 1986

Rakowski argued that this fear is ill-founded. "If we're still worried about Japan as an enemy then that would be a legitimate concern, but don't we think of Japan as an ally?" he said. "We don't have to think of everything as one big Super Bowl where there's a winner and a loser."

"It doesn't hurt us if they are more productive and inventive . . . We should worry about our own productivity," said Rakowski.

Furthermore, Rakowski said he believes that as Japan's technology increases, the U.S. has a greater incentive to expand.

Presently, the Reagan administration is attempting to avoid imposing a unilateral sanction on all Japanese products. U.S. officials would prefer to limit sanctions only to those products in which Japan is the predominant supplier.

"Our problem is that some people are being impacted adversely," said Rakowski. "We should cut away the underbrush and . . . focus on this problem the most direct way."

"I have a 'Don't get excited' attitude about this situation," Rakowski said optimistically. He said he believes that officials from both the United States and Japan are more conciliatory than they appear and are probably very willing to negotiate and resolve this tension-filled problem. "In my opinion, it's not the beginning of a trade war," Rakowski said.

Fake diplomas generate false hope

If you're in the market for a college degree, you might want to look into one of the nation's several "diploma mills." The catch: These illegitimate schools have no academic requirements, and all their degrees are fraudulent.

The Wall Street Journal recently published the story of a teacher from Worcester, Mass. Frederick Cronin bought a doctorate in business management for $590 from a place called Northwestern College of Allied Science. "I thought it would be a neat way to get a quick raise," Cronin was quoted as saying.

Alex VonderHaar

Business Bits

Cronin thought his life experiences had qualified him for the doctorate, but "I just didn't want to write a thesis." Unfortunately, he didn't receive a raise because the school where he teaches does not recognize Northwestern.

A 1985 congressional investigation revealed that as many as 500,000 Americans hold false degrees, but some diploma-mill customers are not aware of the worthlessness of their degrees.

Some fake institutions, for example, have taken impressive names like the University of England at Oxford and Southwestern University. These schools will grant credentials in fields ranging from medicine to law enforcement, and some give discounts to customers buying more than one degree at a time.

Some employers have qualms about accepting resumes mentioning diplomas from just any Podunk U. One contracting firm president in North Carolina hired a controller who presented two business degrees from diploma mills.

"I don't know if the company will ever recover," Everett Schafer was quoted as saying. The company had to pay outside auditors $150,000 to mend the mangled financial records.

Both students and employers should be aware of the potential danger of diploma mills. If left unchecked, printing presses may tarnish the proud image of college degrees.

Volleyball club prepares for MIVA tourney

In preparation for the Midwest Intercollegiate Volleyball Association Tournament at Chicago this weekend, the Men's Volleyball Club will face Ball State, the eighth-ranked varsity team in the nation, tonight at 7:30 in the ACC Pit.

Ball State is one of three teams on Notre Dame's schedule that is ranked in the Top 20, the other two being Ohio State and IUPUI-Fort Wayne.

In an earlier match at Ball State, the Cardinals swept Notre Dame in three games. The Irish are 0-3 against varsity competition, but have a 20-5 record overall.

The Ball State match should prepare Notre Dame for this weekend's MIVA Tournament. Held at Wheaton College in Chicago, the tournament will feature sixteen club teams from the Midwest. Notre Dame is hoping to reclaim the championship that Wisconsin took last year.

"Wisconsin is our big team—they won it last year, and they're really tough," said Club Secretary Steve Kranz. "It should work out that we should be seeded opposite each other, and if everything goes well, we'll meet them in the finals. That could go either way, and there's no room for mistakes."

Notre Dame and Wisconsin have not faced each other so far this year.

In their only match last week, the Irish swept past Hope College in three straight games. Despite the easy victory, the team was not satisfied with its play.

"We didn't play well, but we played well enough that we pretty much smoked them," said Kranz. "It was nice that we got a lot of people off the bench to play. We were trying to use it as a tuneup for the Ball State match, but it didn't work out that way because we didn't play well at all."

A week ago, the Rowing Club was looking forward to competing in its first regatta at Augusta, Ga.,

Steve Megargee

Club Corner

against Oxford and Ivy League schools over the weekend. But as it stands now, the club members are still waiting to compete in Augusta.

On its way to Augusta, the team got stuck in a snowstorm in Tennessee and was never able to make it to the race.

With the ordeal behind them, the Irish will host the Notre Dame regatta this Saturday on the St. Joseph's River in Mishawaka. Competitions will start at 8 a.m. It will be Notre Dame's last regatta before the Midwest Regionals in Madison, Wis.

The field for the regatta will include the University of Chicago, Michigan, Northwestern and Michigan State.

"There are probably about seven or eight schools coming plus us," said Club President John Ralph. "Michigan is an awfully good team, and is usually our main competition, and Northwestern has been getting better every year. If we beat Michigan, it will set us up well for the Midwest Regionals. It will give us an indication of how much we have to work on. Michigan is our main competition, but all the Big Ten schools have pretty good programs."

After defeating St. Bonaventure in the season opener, the Rugby Club lost its first match of the spring last Saturday in Chicago. The South Side Irish beat Notre Dame's A side, 29-18.

Notre Dame's B side lost, 12-0, and the C side won, 15-7.

"I thought we played a solid game," said Club President Quentin Williams. "Our receivers ran pretty good routes, and we couldn't hook up with them because there were 45 mile-per-hour winds out there. They had a serious size advantage on us too."

Notre Dame will have its first home match of the spring this weekend. The Irish meet Northwestern Saturday at 1 p.m. at Stepan Field.

Ball State gets revenge over Irish men's tennis team, 7-2

By THERESA KELLY
Sports Writer

The Ball State men's tennis team got its revenge on the Notre Dame team Saturday, defeating the Irish 7-2 in Muncie, Ind. The Cardinals got back at the Irish for their surprise 5-4 victory last season.

"Ball State has a real fine team this year," said Irish head coach Tom Fallon. "They just outplayed us in most of the matches.

"We did play well in two spots. We got great results from Dan Walsh and Paul Daggs."

Walsh beat Ball State's Mike Raymond in straight sets, 6-3, 6-2, and Daggs had a tougher time with his Cardinal foe, but also won in two sets, 6-4, 7-6.

Irish number-one player Tim Carr lost a tough match to the top Cardinal player. Carr won the first set, but his opponent, Todd Hershey, pulled out the next two, including a 7-6 tie-breaker in the third.

Notre Dame's number-two man, sophomore Brian Kalbas, also went to three sets in his match, and like his teammate, he won the first set 2-6, but lost the next two, 6-3 and 6-4.

Mike Wallace returned to action in the third spot for the Irish after being sidelined by a shoulder injury, but his return was marred by a loss to Ball State's Martin Reist in straight sets, 6-0, 6-1. Irish teammate Dave Reiter also lost in two to Cardinal Mike Raymond, 6-3, 6-2.

Carr and Reiter lost their number-one doubles match, 6-3, 6-2 and 6-3, to Ball State, as did the teams of Walsh and Daggs (6-4, 6-2) and Wallace and Sean O'Brien (6-3 and 6-3).

The loss put the Irish season mark at 13-9.

"We played about as well as could be expected," said Fallon. "We were beaten by a good team. Let's hope they got us into shape for Bowling Green."

The Irish travel to Bowling Green today for a match. But they will be without Tony Cahill, who is injured. "We are looking at having a real good match," said Fallon. "Bowling Green may be a little stronger this year, and we are a little weak right now with Tony Cahill still out, but it should be a good match."

Irish lose to OSU, SIUE; down Wheaton

By SHEILA HOROX
Sports Writer

The anticipated confrontation against Ohio State was not the only match to end up in the loss column for the Notre Dame women's tennis team. The Irish also fell to SIU-Edwardsville, the defending NCAA Division II champions.

The two losses were split by a 6-0 win against Wheaton College, raising the Irish season record to 5-7.

The Irish opened play Friday with a frustrating 5-4 loss to the Buckeyes. Alice Lohrer and Resa Kelly chalked up singles victories for Notre Dame, while Ohio State won matches against Michelle Dasso, Stephanie Tolsted and Natalie Illig. Senior Tammy Schmidt's 6-1, 2-6, 6-3 win over Kristin Peterson tied the score at 4-4 before the Irish lost the final match.

In doubles action, the Irish took only one match. Dasso and Lohrer defeated Yvonne Lohrer and Jodi Saunders, 6-3, 7-5.

"That was the best match we've ever played together," said Lohrer. "I was excited playing against my sister, and everything seemed to click for Michelle and I."

After defeating Wheaton College on Saturday afternoon, the Irish then had to face SIU-Edwardsville.

Not only did the Irish come up on the short end of the three matches that went three sets, but they weren't able to take any match from the defending champs.

"I thought we played better against SIU than we did against Ohio State," said Gelfman. "They have a strong team and they were able to close out on the three-all points."

Midgets, blood, tickets highlight Bookstore

By BRIAN O'GARA
Sports Writer

Warmer weather and light winds greeted Bookstore Basketball XVI teams Monday as 40 teams advanced to the second round of the tournament.

Screaming midgets, blood and speeding tickets were the words of the day yesterday, as several exciting performances were turned in.

Jus' Tofu, a team which has reached the Final 16 for two consecutive years, fought off a scrappy Screaming Midgets From Hell team in one of the tournament's biggest mismatches to date, 21-6. The Midgets, who were led by a 5-8 center and two 5-4 guards, played a relentless defense on Tofu, and took advantage of the almost non-existent wind to sink several long shots. Had the three-point rule been initiated into Bookstore this year, this could have been a dandy one, folks.

Bookstore Basketball XVI

Tofu's height advantage and smooth play together proved far too much for the Midgets, who had several fans screaming for an upset. Or would it have been an upset?

"It's a surprising loss," said Kevin O'Meara of the Midgets. "We controlled the boards but they just couldn't miss the outside shots."

In a hard-fought battle on Bookstore 9, Oliver North and 4 Other Innocent Guys slid by Big Fat Chicks On A Frictionless Surface, 22-20. North's Ken Cavanaugh put an end to this brouhaha by hitting two long jumpers for points 21 and 22. Several players came away with blood-spotted jerseys, as the goings got rough near the end of the game.

"We'll need a blood transfusion but we'll be out here for the next game," said North team member and second-year MBA student Mark Brostowski.

Two teams which have logged the most miles in this tournament are Ex-NBA Quasi Scholars and Jocks, and Ex-MBA Proposition 48 Intellectuals. Both squads are made up of professional businessmen who are enrolled in the Executive MBA program and commute to Notre Dame once a week for their classes. They made the journey here yesterday from their homes and professions in Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and Hammond, Indiana to play in Bookstore Basketball.

Ex-NBA came away with a win, 21-6, over Vig, Bick and Theiny, but Ex-MBA dropped their contest to Gee, I Don't Know, 21-11.

Bart Timm of the Ex-MBA team drove over six hours from Cleveland, and picked up a speeding ticket along the way. His bad luck continued in the game as he shot 0-of-7 from the field.

Ken Nelson led the Ex-NBA team with a 5-of-9 performance in their victory. Nelson is also the Executive MBA Class President and is the only student in the program holding a 4.0 GPA. Academics and athletics at its best.

In other action yesterday, Mr. Coffey and the Non-Dairy Creamers grilled Lee's BBQ (not to be confused with last year's champions with a similar name), 21-4. Mr. Coffey was led by Erik Jaworski, an all-Bookstore selection last year, who hit 8-of-11 shots. Bon Jovi (Livin' On A Prayer) rocked the Nigerian Head Baging X-Men, 21-11, as Tom Geyer poured in all 21 of his team's points.

"That weight-lifting program that Tom has been on has added a new dimension to his game," said scorekeeper John Murphy.

Today marks the final day of the first round of the tournament as another 80 teams are scheduled for action. The field will then be narrowed to 256 going into Thursday's second-round action.

Snow, not Wooster, stops lacrosse

By CHRIS DALLAVO
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame lacrosse team was shut out this weekend, not by Wooster, its scheduled opponent, but by Old Man Winter. The game was canceled after fourteen inches of snow buried Wooster, Ohio, over the weekend.

"The thing that worries me," said Notre Dame head coach Rich O'Leary, "is that we will have had two weeks off between games. It's real easy to lose intensity over such a long period of time."

Needless to say, the Irish weren't too happy about driving seven hours on a bus to watch it snow. After all, they can get that here in South Bend.

The game probably will not be rescheduled, due to the distance factor.

"It's always better to have a chance at another win," noted O'Leary, "but now we have time to work on other things."

There is also time to nurse a couple of injuries. Captain Dave O'Neill has a sore shoulder, but is expected to be ready to play this weekend. The prognosis is not so good for midfielder John Burtis, who reinjured the thigh which has kept him out of action this year. He will miss at least another week, including the Kenyon game this Saturday.

Speaking of the Lords of Kenyon College, they visit the University of Notre Dame this weekend as the Irish open their home season. The Irish have never lost to Kenyon, but now is not the time for complacency, as the Lords will bring a tough, young team into South Bend.

"They've always given us a scare," said O'Leary, "and we definitely cannot take them lightly, or we'll be 2-3 after Saturday."

The leading scorer for Notre Dame this year is senior attackman John McLachlan, who has nine goals and eleven assists for 20 points in the first four games. John Olmstead is second with thirteen points, followed by Tom Lanahan and Jim Shields with eight points apiece.

Sugar Ray completes comeback

LAS VEGAS, Nev. -Sugar Ray Leonard returned to the ring in spectacular fashion after a three-year layoff and upset Marvelous Marvin Hagler Monday night to become middleweight champion.

Leonard won the 12-round bout on a split decision to become boxing's 10th triple champion.

Leonard circled and impressed judges with flurries in the late rounds in one of the great comeback stories in boxing history, although some thought the aggressive Hagler had an edge.

Judge Lou Filippo scored it 115-113 for Hagler while judge Dave Moretti saw it 115-113 and JoJo Guerra had it 118-110, both for Leonard.

The Associated Press favored Hagler, 117-112.

"I see myself taking him out," Leonard said of a dream he had in the days before the fight. Leonard couldn't take him out, but he did what the oddsmakers gave him little chance to do.

Hagler, losing for the first time in 38 fights, dating to 1976, was a 2 12-1 favorite.

"He, to me, is still the champion," the jubilant Leonard said in the ring after the fight as a sellout throng of 15,366 in an outdoor arena at Caesars Palace cheered him on.

"I didn't want the belt. I just wanted to beat him."

The only belt Leonard will get is the World Boxing Council belt. The International Boxing Federation didn't sanction the fight and will declare the title vacant. The World Boxing Association has stripped Hagler of the title.

Leonard, fighting for only the second time since his last undisputed welterweight title fight in Feb. 1982, came out circling and made Hagler miss badly in the first four rounds. Then in the fifth, Hagler landed some head shots and hurt Leonard with a left to the head.

Throughout the fight, the stalking Hagler seemed to land the harder shots. But Leonard, looking very tired from the sixth through 10th rounds, never quit fighting, landing several combinations although they seemed to lack sting.
