ND sets new policy to curb DUI offenses on and off campus

By KENDRA MORRILL
Senior Staff Reporter

In an attempt to curb alcohol-related accidents, the University has instituted a new policy to deal with Notre Dame students caught driving while intoxicated.

The policy sets down sanctions ranging from forfeiture of parking privileges to suspension from the University.

The details of the policy are explained in a letter to students from Father David Tyson, vice president for Student Affairs.

Alcohol-related accidents in the last several years involving students both as victims and drivers prompted the new policy, the letter said.

The policy was recommended by an ad hoc committee of students, faculty members and administrators, the letter states.

The policy will apply to arrests occurring both on and off campus.

On campus arrests will be conducted by Notre Dame Security, who will file the arrest reports with the state authorities and with the Office of Residence Life.

When driving in locations off campus, students cited for a DUI offense "can expect the matter to be handled by the appropriate local civil authority," the policy states.

According to Tyson, there is "no official communication between the police and the University." The Office of Student Affairs could learn of off campus DUI arrests through a medium such as Security Beat, which is a matter of public record, he said.

A student whose blood alcohol level is above the legal limit will be cited or arrested.

The University will revoke parking privileges for a student's first offense. Convicted students will also be required to participate in an alcohol education program.

Students will face a one-semester suspension for a second offense.

To be readmitted to Notre Dame, offenders must receive clearance from the University alcohol counselor.

Students who are readmitted will forfeit all driving and parking privileges on campus. In addition, offenders may be required to participate in a continuing alcohol counseling program.

If death or injury results from an alcohol-related accident, the offender may be subjected to additional sanctions, Tyson said.

Forest fires continue to rage

Associated Press

Scorching temperatures and steady winds fanned a plague of fire across parts of six Western states Thursday, consuming hundreds of thousands of acres of brush and timber and threatening California's towering sequoias.

Jack Wilson, director of the Boise Interagency Fire Control Center, called the situation "extremely critical, primarily in California and southwest Oregon."

"In the national park situation, we're very fearful that they might get into the giant sequoias, which are an irreplaceable resource," he said. California, Oregon and Idaho bore the brunt of the fires. By mid-day Thursday:

- 12,975 firefighters were battling 1,116 fires which had burned more than 204,000 acres in California.

- 3,500 people fought fires totaling 52,000 acres in Oregon.

- 600 firefighters contended with 23,000 acres of range and forest fires in Idaho.

- a 660-acre fire in western

Arizona was expected to be controlled by Friday.

- two fires totaling 530 acres were contained in Washington.

- a 540-acre brushfire was contained in central Montana, but 175-acre forest fire was still

1. Siskiyou Nat'l Forest (Ore. and Calif.) 2. Klamath Nat'l Forest, Calif. 3. Shasta-Trinity Nat'l Forest, Calif. 4. Tahoe Nat'l Forest, Calif. 5. Tuolumne City, Calif. 6. Sequoia Nat'l Forest, Calif. 7. Pocatello, Idaho 8. Elk Creek, Idaho out of control near Townsend.

- an 80-acre fire continued to burn near Polecat Creek in Yellowstone National Park in Wyoming.

The fires were started by thousands of lightning strikes spawned by late-summer thunderstorms.

"It continues to be a critical situation," said LaVon Perez of the U.S. Forest Service in California. "The forecasters say we're not going to get as many lightning strikes today, but they said that yesterday, too, and we had more than 1,400 additional strikes and we are expecting winds of 20 to 35 mph, and they tell us it will not begin to cool until the weekend."

An estimated 8,000 persons were evacuated from nearly a dozen rural communities in California, more than half of them in Tuolumne County near the northern entrance to Yosemite National Park.

"It's rather frightening because a U-2 overflight showed hot fires throughout the area," Dale Wierman of the California Department of Forestry said of the fires in the region.

Pilot hangs out plane to survive wild ride

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Maine - A pilot who clung to the rear stairs of a small plane after a door opened in flight says he was "thrilled to see the sunrise" after landing safely, but declined to say any more Thursday about the freakish accident.

"There was no mechanical fault with the door," and the plane was returned to service, Steven Mason, sales manager of Eastern Express, told a news conference Thursday. He said the company was investigating the possibility that it had not been properly closed.

Henry Dempsey, 46, of Cape Elizabeth, the pilot who lay on the stairway door, suffered only scratches on his hand in the bizarre accident, after which his hands had to be "pried off" the plane's stair railings.

Dempsey declined all interviews but said through the company he was still stunned by the "harrowing experience."

Dempsey was piloting a 15-seat Beechcraft 99 turboprop, with no passengers aboard, from Lewiston, Maine, to Boston early Wednesday evening when he heard a rattle in the back of the plane. The twin-engine commuter plane was being flown to Boston to be used for a flight from there, Mason said.

As he walked back to check on the noise, the aircraft hit some turbulence and he leaned against the stairway door. The door, which is hinged at the bottom, fell open and Dempsey was partially sucked out of the plane. He grabbed the railings and lay upside down on the stairs as the plane traveled at 190 mph at 4,000 feet.

"He was partly in the aircraft and partly out," said Mason.

Bill Cosby may be TV's top funnyman, but back in high school in Philadelphia he kept his wit hidden from all but his friends, says an old classmate. "He was primarily interested in track and field then," said James DePreist, who went to Philadelphia Central High School with Cosby. DePreist, the conductor of the Oregon Symphony Orchestra, said Cosby recently called him to ask if the orchestra would perform the theme song for Cosby's hit NBC show next year. DePreist said the theme music by Stuart Gardiner will be recorded in Portland. - Associated Press

The cue was auctioned by police Wednesday to raise money for Newman's proposed camp for children with life-threatening illnesses. Newman lives in Westport. The auction raised $3,900. The 13 written bids for the cue stick ranged from $5 to $2,500, police said. The name of the winner wasn't released. - Associated Press.

Me go on a diet? Go hungry? Fat chance!

Back off. I am on a diet. I am not kidding. I am grumpy and aggravated because I am hungry; and when I am hungry, do not mess with me.

This all started at the beginning of this week when I finally admitted to myself that I need to start cutting down on my usual voluminous food consumption and start trimming down. Of course, I came to this realization after I woke up Monday morning and could only see my "love handles" in the mirror one at a time because of their overwhelming size.

Despite my desire to slim down the old carcass, realizing the need for and committing to a diet did not come easy. I am one of those people who loves to eat. I like candy and cake and chicken patties and burgers; I especially like cheese popcorn (as most everyone who works with me knows) in the late hours of the night.

On top of this love for food, I like to have a beer or two on the weekends with friends. I'm 21, mind you, but I think the weight that I gain from my trips to Senior Bar will be more harmful than any South Bend citation for "minor in a tavern."

Because I work a great deal and jog whenever possible, I have been able to keep my weight relatively stable, even though I love to eat. Grabbing a late night pizza or burger has never been a real problem. Stuffing down a bag of cheese popcorn while working at night or gulping down a doughnut in my office during the day I could handle.

But recently things have changed. For the worse, I might add.

My middle is getting middler and my tush is getting tushier. I have a spare tire that could fix a tractor and an appetite King Henry VIII would be ashamed of. In the light of my personal growth (to speak euphemistically), I have decided to cut down and lose some of this burlap baggage before my girlfriend steps in and demands a reduction.

I must confess that as an avowed hater of diets, I, of course, tried to take the easy way out one month ago. I signed up for an appointment at Body Reflections, a new salon in town that specializes in "figure correction." If anyone's figure needs correcting, mine does.

So I went to this place and was wrapped in Ace bandages soaked in aloe from head to toe. Yes, I did have a cute wrappist; and yes, the trip to the figure correcting salon was very relaxing. But, NO, my figure was not correct after my trip to the spa. All I got from my aloe wrap was a smooth skin and a humiliating chuckle from someone who saw me come out of the place.

Kevin Becker

Editor-in-Chief

At this point, I have reduced myself to eating soups and salads at meals; a hungry sniff of the air has replaced my diving in for seconds of the "fast fare" selection at lunch. I still drink Diet Coke, but I no longer use it to wash down potato chips or cheese popcorn.

And the temptation does not stop at meals and the dining hall. While working at the newspaper late at night, seeming hoards of pizza and burgers are paraded past my salivating mouth by those graced with the gift of skinniness. A bag of fries for him; a slice of pepperoni for her; and no weight gain for either one. Why do I have to be the one who looks at food and gains weight while others can lose weight just by expending the energy it takes to chew?

I guess it is one of those unanswerable mysteries, one of those things that I just have to live with.

But do me one favor as I sit here and wallow in my misery. Do not come up to me, staring at my belly which is well hidden under my collection of baggy shirts, and say, "My God, Kevin, you don't look that fat. Why are you on a diet?"

Making this hungry person more miserable may just lead to having your face chewed off.

Police to try new special drunk driving solution

Associated Press

ANDERSON, Ind. - Madison County authorities are using modern science to battle the problem of drunken driving, giving repeat offenders an opportunity to avoid jail and the loss of their driver's licenses by having Breathalyzer machines placed in their cars.

"We need local solutions to ease overcrowding in the jails and prisons, and we think this program can be an effective one," said Madison County Deputy Prosecutor Tom Clem, who has investigated the use of a similar program in California.

The first Breathalyzer was installed in an offender's car Thursday and Clem expects three more to be installed in the near future.

Madison County Judge Larry Robbins said he agreed to the unique sentence after discussing it with Clem and the defense attorney for the offender.

The program allows those charged with drunken driving to have an alcohol measuring machine installed in their vehicle. In order to start the car up, the device requires a breath test. If the person's alcohol level is above 0.3, the car won't start.

"In this case the defendant needed a license to earn a living," Robbins said. "It seems to me the intent of legislation involving drunk driving is to keep the offender off the road or modify their behavior. This program seems to meet the needs of the public by keeping a driver off the road if his blood alcohol level is too high.

"It also saves the taxpayer money by keeping (offenders) out of jail and allows them to keep working, contributing to the economic benefit of their families."

The offender isn't required to install the device, but it is available to those willing to pay for the expense of installing and renting the equipment, Robbins said.

"This is a real good system. It has been thoroughly tested in California and the program is in operation there," Clem said. "I have four people being offered it as an alternative, including the one who had it installed today."

N.M. deaths doubled at 65 mph

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Traffic fatalities doubled in New Mexico after it became the first state to increase its speed limit on rural highways to 65 mph, but whether the 10 mph increase is responsible for more deaths is not yet known, highway traffic experts say.

In Illinois, fatalities decreased on rural highways since the higher speed limit went into effect.

"We're not about to say that that is meaningful in any way, any more than we're willing to say that New Mexico has twice as many fatalities as last year because they were the first to go to 65," said Al Lauersdorf, a highway safety specialist with the Chicago-based National Safety Council.

"We don't have anything to back up those statements," he said. "We don't know if 65 is working from a safety standpoint or if fatalities have in fact gone up."

Over strong insurance industry opposition, Congress earlier this year allowed an increase of the nationwide speed limit from 55 mph to 65 mph on rural stretches of interstate highway. At least 25 states have enacted the higher speed limit.

A survey of New Mexico motorists shortly after the increase showed nearly half the drivers exceeded the higher limit, according to the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety.

The New Mexico Public Safety Department reported Monday that 56 people were killed on interstates in rural areas between April and mid-August, compared with 25 deaths during the same period in 1986.

But in Illinois, where the speed limit went up in May, there were 16 traffic deaths on rural interstates between May and July.

NTSB flight investigation cites Delta pilots at fault

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Delta Air Lines pilots who flew their plane off course across the North Atlantic and nearly collided with another jet made no attempt to verify their location and had no oceanic charts showing their assigned route, investigators disclosed Thursday.

The National Transportation Safety Board also said a Canadian investigation into the July 8 incident determined that the Delta jetliner actually came within 30 feet of colliding with a Continental Airlines jumbo jet after flying 60 miles off course.

Previously, it had been estimated that the two planes had come within about 100 feet of each other 31,000 feet over the North Atlantic. The two planes were carrying nearly 600 people.

The NTSB, expressing concern about the failure of the flight crew to verify its flight path across the Atlantic, sent an urgent recommendation to the Federal Aviation Administration to make such verification mandatory.

It said flight crews should be required to use at least two techniques for verifying a plane's computerized route before takeoff and employ at least three other verification techniques during flight.

Current FAA advisories to airlines recommend, but do not require, that flight crews make en route verification of navigational data during cross-oceanic flights where aircraft are not covered by ground-based radar.

In the case of the Delta flight, the safety board said the crew "did not plot their present or predicted positions upon crossing waypoints, or perform other (flight) track verification procedures while en route."

The co-pilot, Paul Boucher of Lynn, Mass., spotted the "door ajar" indicator light on and "assumed the worst. He did not know what the situation was other than the captain did not return and the door was ajar," said Mason.

Mason said Boucher believed Dempsey had fallen completely out of the aircraft into the Atlantic and frantically radioed for Portland International Jetport control tower for help. He then changed course, flying to the jetport, which was about 10 minutes away.

Alcoholic explains trials and triumphs

This conversation took place at the end of my freshman year:

Dede: Gary, if you're going to play "Pass-Out," your're going to have to drink.

Gary: No, that's okay, I don't want to drink.

Dede: Come on, one little drink won't hurt you!

Gary: Yes it will -in more ways than you can imagine.

Dede: Look, the drink isn't even that strong. There's more orange juice in it than Schnapps.

Gary: I don't care how much is in it, I'm not going to drink anything with even a little Schnapps in it.

Dede: Not even a little sip?

Gary: No.

Dede: (with a smile on her face) Then I'll give you a choice; either you drink or you leave.

Gary: (to everyone in the room) Goodbye, I'll see all of you later.

guest column

I had called her bluff, and I stood up as I prepared to leave. When she saw that I was serious about leaving, she apologized and invited me back. I sat down again, and the game continued, but it just wasn't as fun anymore. Everyone was really uncomfortable with what had just taken place.

I was happy and content though, because I had won another battle in my war against alcoholism. Yes that's right, I'm an alcoholic, and a recovering one. I have not had a drink since the end of my senior year in high school -since February 14, 1986.

Conversations like the one above take place quite often these days, in fact too often. But I've learned how to handle them. When faced with the choice of drinking or walking, I walk. This has not always been the case though. A year and a half ago, my answer could have been quite different.

In fact, let's go all the way back to the beginning, to the start of my senior year of high school. Remember that year, the one that is supposed to be one of the best years of your life? I do -it was the worst year of my life.

It started off great. My friends and I were having fun at school and at the big parties on the weekend. I was captain of a soccer team that won a State Championship. I aced my SAT's and got accepted to Notre Dame. Everything was just perfect.

Then one day, my mother dropped a bomb on me. I was told by her that she is an alcoholic. At first I was shocked as you can imagine. Then I said, "Hey, it's okay. You were an alcoholic, and now the problem is over." I was never more wrong in my entire life.

The problem weighed heavily on my mind, and it eventually became too much for me to deal with, and I cracked under the pressure. I went to see a counselor/psychiatrist/shrink (whatever you want to call her) that dealt with the children of alcoholics. Her name was Kathy.

Kathy and I spent many painful hours together talking about my past. My alcoholic parent was never one that used to beat me or abuse me when she was drunk. But the more Kathy and I delved into my past, the more I found that I had suffered emotionally and psychologically as the child of an alcoholic.

Well, one thing led to another, and after a great deal of painful counselling, I came to realize that I was also an alcoholic. Admitting this to myself was the most painful thing that I have ever experienced.

At this point, I completely cracked up. I just couldn't deal with everything, and the pressure got to me. I remember one day not too long after this that I skipped school to go skiing all day. It was an outlet for all of my anger.

All day long I thought about how unfair life was, and I have never been more upset in my whole life. On the way home, I almost made a big mistake. I was crying uncontrollably with anger, fear and rage. I sped my Camaro up until I was doing over 100 MPH. Then I was ready to just let go of the wheel. It seemed like the quickest and easiest solution to the problem -and it would have been.

But it was the wrong solution. I realized this at the last moment, and I got the car under control, and drove home safely. That night I dropped the bomb on my parents -that I was an alcoholic. Now began the real battle.

It wasn't that easy though. I started going to more counselling and less school. I couldn't deal with the pressures of school and my drinking problem at the same time, so I chose to concentrate on my drinking problem.

Even more importantly though, I had to give up my friends and my social life. I stopped going to parties and after school events with them. I never gave them an explanation for my actions, and for that I am sorry, but at the time it was the only thing I could do.

But my family, Kathy, and a very special friend--MBS--stood by me all the way. They gave me the support that I needed, and eventually I was able to accept my identity as an alcoholic.

Over the summer, I continued counselling. As I became more sure of who I was, I started to enter back into the social scene -but with a new set of friends. I went to a few parties, but not that many.

When I was asked why I wasn't drinking, I would make up excuses like: "I'm driving," or "My parents caught me last week," or whatever. Anything I could think of to avoid the truth.

The summer ended, and I was done with my counselling. I had resolved everything I needed to and was able to at the time. Now it was time to start over again with my new life at Notre Dame.

Looking back, I realize that I had already left behind almost everything. All of my old friends were no longer friends. They weren't enemies, but they weren't friends. All that I really had to look forward to was the future.

My obvious problem was this: How would I handle the explanation of my alcoholism to my new roommate and friends? Kathy and I discussed this at length, and we decided that the best approach was to be honest from the beginning.

I got my chance the second night here. All the Dillon freshmen went to a drinkfest-one of those things where anyone who can still stand straight hasn't had enough. I went to it with my roommate and the two guys who lived next door. We arrived, and then the beer arrived.

The moment of truth. I took my three new friends aside and laid it on the line for them -I was an alcoholic and I didn't drink anymore. I only gave them a limited explanation at the time because of the circumstances, but it was enough.

Luckily, the three accepted the fact right there. If they hadn't, things might have been much worse. But they turned out well. A few nights later, we had a long talk and I explained everything to them more fully. They accepted it.

At the time of the party, however, it made me feel great. I had told them who I was and they had accepted it. Later that night, another freshman, Dave, forced me into the conversation of drink or walk. I had enough confidence, however, to look him in the eye, and tell him that I was not going to drink. It was only through the support of my new friends that I was able to say this.

So the year progressed. The rest of the guys in my section soon learned that I did not drink. They didn't learn the details, but they did not bother me about it. It was my choice whether or not I wanted to drink.

Later in the year, I met a couple people who had also experienced alcoholics in their lives. These people replaced Kathy and MBS. My discussions with them became my outlet for pressure.

This is very important to an alcoholic at Notre Dame. In case anyone out there has not noticed, drinking is the number one outlet for academic and social pressure at Notre Dame. I also need an outlet, but it cannot be drinking. My discussions were my outlet.

On the other hand, I met some people like Dede. They harassed me, and tried to pressure me into drinking. They thought I couldn't drink when in reality I could probably drink them under the table. But my not drinking was too much for some people, and they left me.

This is fine by me. I have met quite a few girls this year who have lost interest in me because I don't drink. This is fine with me -it is their decision.

But the next time you have an urge to do that, take a look at things from my point of view. I went through a lot of pain and suffering to get where I am today. I refuse to relive that experience just to prove to someone that I can drink. Let's just say that I can drink (very well in fact), but I choose not to do so.

So the next time you are at a party and someone doesn't want to drink, don't resort to peer pressure. Respect my decision not to drink just as I respect your decision to drink. I'm an alcoholic, and I always will be. But right now I'm beating the battle against alcoholism. With just a little help from all the people out there, all the other alcoholics and myself will be happy that you have made our battle just a little easier to win.

Drawing a portrait with love

My niece Ann Marie, an Irish American princess who graduated from Notre Dame as a business major two years ago, is getting married in New Jersey on Sunday. Because I love and respect her so much as a bright, perceptive young beauty, I feel shy with her, like the beast out of a fairy tale, well intentioned but ugly, most aware of his clumsiness when he's near his own true love.

pairing off with her Domer. She never asked my advice about love. She seemed to enjoy keeping her family confused about which escort she cared for the most; maybe she was confused herself. Maybe one was perfect as a campus sweetheart, and the other was perfect as the sweetheart of the summer in the old neighborhood.

Did she act like a painted make. In a family of eight children, she is the only daughter. What can I tell her parents in the homily, to keep them cheerful on the day their radiant child leaves their home for the husband of her choice? When a father walks down the aisle to entrust his daughter to another man's keeping, quiet dramas take place that the wedding guests are unaware of. One bride told me: "For years, whenever I dated, my father handed me a dime: 'Phone me, honey, if you need help.' During the wedding march, he said: 'Give me back my dime. From now on, your husband gets the phone calls for help.'"

Ann Marie and her mother are best friends; their friendship will deepen in the years ahead; but how long does it take a father to understand that he has not lost a daughter, but that he has gained a son? That Ann Marie's parents, Bob and Ann, have a right to be proud: they have raised eight children; all of them, with their parents' help, are college graduates: two of them are lawyers, one is a Ph. D.; the others have good jobs. With Ann and Bob, their children came first, though that meant self-sacrifice year after year; incurring debt, and being there with whatever help the kids needed, a plane ticket, tuition, or a pat on the back.

I have watched the children growing up. Each, in different ways, is wonderful; the country will be better for having them as Americans; the Church will be stronger, if they stay faithful to Christ. Ann and Bob should be blessed, because in a century busy inventing new forms of death, they dedicated themselves to making an investment in life.

I am close to Ann Marie, one of the three siblings graduating from Notre Dame. I felt so honored when, as a student, she came by to show me her party dress, or to bring me cookies, or to reassure me, after her father had his heart attacks, that her mother was staying strong under the burden of stress. She used to let me see through her eyes what the campus was like for a coed. Her four years were over in the twinkling of an eye; after she left, I dreamed of ways of getting her back, as a law or graduate student, or as the Estee Lauder representative to South Bend, Indiana.

Notre Dame was a part of Ann Marie's life that I helped them with; while she was here, I had a small part in Bob and Ann's parenting. We were so proud of her as an alumna, when she brought her gifts of goodness and beauty to the world capital of glamour, to show New York the special class a Domer from an Irish home has, to grace the day and the marketplace with.

At the wedding, I hope to rise to the occasion with words that show love and appreciation, not only for the bride and groom, but also for the families who helped prepare them to be spouses. As Ann Marie's uncle, close to her father, I should be careful not to say more, or less, than he wants me to say. To tell the truth, it would be easier to turn the ceremony over to Jack's uncle, a Jesuit not apt to become maudlin in a way which would embarrass his relatives. Jack, the groom, and his bride-to-be, Ann Marie, both want me to receive their vows. I would hurt their feelings if I tried to hide in the pews.

I really am shy about putting my thoughts into words. It is an honor to be part of something as fine as this wedding. As an old hand at performing marriage services, I have rarely felt so close to the human love through which God's love is mediated. How can I make it clear to my family, in a way that will please them, that their kind of bonding is holy? That word, "holy," could embarrass them; without it, I am tongue-tied. All love is of God; in loving each other, all of them have been obedient to the will of Christ; for people like us, religion doesn't get much better, or more explicit, or purer. The more I stress this, the more they will consider that I'm being glib and trite.

Perhaps in her undergraduate years here, I should have encouraged Ann Marie to elope with her Domer, so that later, she wouldn't see me taking pratfalls as a clumsy-tongued preacher on her wedding day in Jersey. Of course the best man won. Here's three cheers for Ann Marie and Jack! I wish I had another niece like Ann Marie, whose hand the Domer could win: he was a good man too. He will be, I'm sure, one of the unseen guests at the wedding.

Letters to a Lonely God

Ann Marie is family, of course; I am dazzled by her as an uncle, I am dazzled. She's an Estee Lauder girl, going to work at a fantastic Manhattan address, dressed to the teeth like a model. A New Yorker article last year told Mrs. Lauder's story: Ann Marie is part of the glamour of the cosmetics empire, in which Mrs. Lauder is a ruling monarch. At the annual Christmas party in the Waldorf-Astoria, Estee Lauder girls are treated only to champagne. They are furnished with sets of silver bells, which they jingle as an alternative to clapping.

Three years ago, Ann Marie was a senior at Campus View, after living three years in Pasquerilla East. She kept steady company with an athlete in her class. Were they in love? Ann Marie never told me. A year after graduation, she became engaged to the boyfriend back home, who must have worried about her finally doll with sawdust for a heart? God forbid; but who can explain her—who can tell you why? Fools give you reasons; wise men never try. A friend of mine who worshipped her from afar used to send her red roses. Ann Marie too much of a lady to hurt an admirer's feelings; but she asked me to discourage this young man when he wanted to send her bottles of wine.

How much did she let the fellow on her right hand see of what his rival on her left hand was proposing? Not much, I suspect. She was a Notre Dame woman of whom much was expected; she was as honest as she could be without causing pain. If the Domer was hurt when she finally said goodbye, she wept because she couldn't make it easier for him.

As the priest at the wedding, I will become emotional at the sight of Ann Marie, stunning in a bridal gown it took a year to

Taking the 'Rhode' to success

MATT SITZER

Assistant Accent Editor

Seniors considering their post graduate options seem to be deluged with decisions these days. Should I get a job right away? What kind of job am I interested in? Should I forego life's conventionalities and live in the wilderness as a hermit? Should I go to grad-school?

For those seniors considering the grad-school route, there are a number of opportunities available to win post-graduate scholarships, thus ridding a student of one of the most riveting of all senior questions: How am I going to pay for it? And for those Seniors possessing the right amounts of qualifications and fortitude, some of the most prestigious academic awards in the world may well be in reach.

Associate Dean of Notre Dame's College of Arts and Letters, Nathaniel Hatch speaks very enthusiastically about Notre Dame students' chances of obtaining any number of post-graduate scholarships, although he acknowledges the need to be realistic when a student considers applying for one of the more distinguished awards.

"You have to see it in perspective," said Hatch. "Most graduate education is funded by individual universities. Usually, if someone is interested in grad-school, 98 per cent of the time he or she will simply apply to a university to receive a fellowship or a graduate-assistanceship there."

Still, Hatch points out, there are always a number of outstanding students each year who are qualified to obtain the premier national and international fellowships.

"The competition for (the Rhodes and Marshall) makes getting into an Ivy League school seem simple," said Hatch. "The odds are incredible, even for someone with exceptional talent and accomplishment. That is not to say that someone shouldn't apply. Two years ago we had two students from Notre Dame win Rhodes Scholarships, which is a great accomplishment."

Both of these scholarships are for study in Great Britain. There are 32 Rhodes and 28 Marshalls awarded annually in the United States. Rhodes Scholars study at Oxford, while Marshall Scholars may study at any British university. Contrary to popular belief, exceptional athletic ability is not essential to winning the Rhodes.

The Mellon Fellowships are for the study in any of the Humanities disciplines. About 120 Mellons are awarded each year to college seniors or recent graduates who are planning careers of humanistic teaching and scholarship. Hatch readily advises qualified students to pursue the Mellon Fellowship. "Notre Dame has a very good annual record for our students receiving Mellons," said Hatch. "We've had two or three students win them for the past few years."

Hatch encourages students who feel they are qualified to apply for these or any of the number of other more readily available post-graduate scholarships. But, Hatch also warns that seniors need to decide soon if they plan to apply, as many of the application deadlines are fast approaching and early completion may increase chances.

Krause

when the Irish host the Bulldogs of Drake. Game time is 7:30 p.m.

This is not the first time Notre Dame has played under the lights at home. Several matches have been played on the astroturf field of Cartier, with the last night match being played two years ago against Michigan State. But Grace, who does not like the artificial turf and dim lighting, did not allow night games last season.

Krause field is covered with the natural stuff, and the lighting is far superior to that of Cartier. And Grace is excited.

"When you play under the lights, it adds to the excitement," says Grace. "It could be the same two teams, weather conditions, etc., but when you put it under lights, it gets the adrenaline flowing."

An expected increase in attendance also should help to pump up the players. Afternoon games on Alumni Field were poorly attended. Students either had classes or homework conflicting with the game times, and the Irish soccer fans in the local South Bend community often had their own games to play at the same time. The night games, though, are expected to increase the attendance of both factions.

"We should draw very well this year," says Grace. "We have a couple of Friday night games in front of football. Hopefully the campus and the community will come out and support us."

But Grace realizes that night games are not the only draw needed to bring the crowds out.

"Everything is going to be dictated on how well we do," he says. "No one is going to come out and watch a losing team - period. And we've got to win playing good teams."

A look at the schedule shows that of the top 10 teams in the Great Lakes region preseason poll, the Irish play five of them - all at home. Indiana, ranked fourth in the region, will play a day contest at Krause on Sunday, Sept. 13. The Hoosiers refused to play Notre Dame at home at night.

Michigan State, ranked ninth in the region, will face the Irish on Friday, Sept. 18. That game has been designated as the Krause Field Dedication Game, with a halftime ceremony honoring the former Notre Dame Athletic Director.

Later in the season the Irish host Bowling Green (sixth in the region), Wisconsin (seventh) and Marquette (third).

Missing from the schedule this season are Akron (first in the region), runner-up in last year's NCAA tournament, Wisconsin-Milwaukee (eighth) and in-state rival Evansville (second). In place of the missing regional foes, the team has scheduled away matches with national powers such as UCLA, San Diego State and South Carolina-Spartanburg.

Talk of an NCAA tournament berth for the squad still takes on a future flavor. With the way the selection process is executed, the Irish, who are ranked tenth in the preseason poll, would most likely have to earn a first or second ranking in the Great Lakes region to get the bid. Still, it is not an impossible dream for this season.

"Anything can happen," says Grace. "If we can win those home games we have, and if some other teams knock off some other teams, yeah, it would be a possibility."

Before the expectations for this season's squad get too high, it must be noted that just four seasons ago an NCAA bid was an impossibility for the Irish soccer squad. Notre Dame's schedules were padded with small colleges and the teams lost to the major powers more often than they won. Since Grace has taken over, though, the program has grown rapidly. Just as it has outgrown Alumni Field.

Keith Moreland of the Cubs displays the evidence that led to Houston's Billy Hatcher's 10-day suspension yesterday. A cork was found in Hatcher's bat after a broken-bat single Tuesday. More details appear in the story below.

Astros' Hatcher gets 10-day suspension

Associated Press

HOUSTON - National League President Bart Giamatti, continuing a crackdown against scuffed baseballs and hopped-up bats, handed a 10-day suspension Thursday to the Houston Astros's Billy Hatcher for using a corked bat.

Hatcher was not available for comment, but Astros General Manager Dick Wagner said Hatcher had told him he would not appeal the suspension, which started Thursday.

Astros Manager Hal Lanier was fined an undisclosed sum because Giamatti holds that a manager is responsible for illegal equipment used by his players.

Hatcher was ejected from Tuesday's game against the Chicago Cubs after his bat splintered, revealing it had been injected with cork.

Kevin Gross of the Philadelphia Phillies and Joe Niekro of the American League's Minnesota Twins were suspended for 10 days after sandpaper was discovered in their possession.

Hatcher's case marked the first corking incident since 1974, when the New York Yankees' Graig Nettles was ejected from a game for using an illegal bat.

Hatcher, the team's leading hitter, will miss eight games, including a crucial three-game series beginning Monday against the division-leading San Francisco Giants.

Hatcher's absence will force Lanier to use Terry Puhl, Jose Cruz or Ty Gainey, just promoted from Class AAA.

"It will just depend on the situations," Lanier said.

Hatcher got two hits and drove in a pair of runs in Wednesday night's 10-1 victory over

Chicago that ended a 7-game losing streak.

Hatcher raised his average to .311, with 151 hits and 59 runs batted in. He has been one of the Astros' most consistent hitters this season.

Relief pitcher Dave Smith said he owned the bat that Hatcher used. Smith said a friend had given it to him to use in batting practice.

Smith said he always returned the doctored bat to the clubhouse before games. He said a bat boy may have accidentally placed it in the team's batting rack Tuesday night.

Batting coach change marks beginning of Reds' rift

Associated Press

CINCINNATI - An apparent rift has developed between Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott and leaders of the team's baseball operations, including Manager Pete Rose.

Batting coach Billy DeMars, who has told the Reds he is leaving, is said to be the first victim, but not the last.

First-base coach Tony Perez has replaced DeMars, whom Rose hand-picked in 1985.

"It didn't come from me," said Rose, when asked who had first suggested that Perez take over at least part of the batting coach job.

DeMars, who reportedly is paid about $80,000 a year as one of the major leagues' best-paid hitting coaches, announced last weekend he was leaving when the season ends after General Manager Bill Bergesch asked Perez to help work with some of the team's hitters.

Bergesch said that he had approached DeMars about giving up some of his role to Perez. "At that point, he didn't feel that they both should be working with hitters, so he just said let Tony do it," Bergesch said.

"It can't help. It can't help," Rose said of the timing of the DeMars matter in the season's final month. "I would think that if someone was going to dismiss a coach, they would consult with the guy who hired him. That's the way I would operate."

DeMars had been Rose's batting tutor in Philadelphia and Montreal, and has been given credit for the development of numerous hitters, including Tim Wallach, Larry Bowa and most recently, Eric Davis.

The Columbus Dispatch reported that Cincinnati center fielder Eric Davis had gone to Schott to say that Perez had helped Davis with his hitting more than DeMars.

Rose, like DeMars, believes that Schott may have been behind the decision.

"She seems like she has never liked Billy because of the money he makes," Rose said. "He's the highest-paid coach in baseball, if I'm not mistaken. He should be. He's reached the top of his profession."

Schott, reached by telephone Wednesday at her office, denied any role in the DeMars matter, then abruptly hung up the phone on a reporter.

"I've got nothing to do with it," she said. "Other than that, I'd rather not comment. Goodbye."

Larry Doughty, the Reds' scouting director since 1982, also is threatening to leave the team, reportedly over a rift with Schott over her effort to curb expenses incurred by Doughty's scouting staff. Bergesch is trying to persuade Doughty to stay.

Monday, September 7, 1987 7:00 pm

The setting is Hollywood during the transition to talkies, which enables the film to affirm the movie musical via a parodic "critique" of studio politics, the entertainment industry, and the mass audience. The film-within-a-film format provides a forum for legendary performances by Gene Kelly, Debbie Reynolds, Cyd Charisse, and Donald O'Connor.

NOSFERATU (1922) B/W, silent, 63 min.
Directed by F.W. Murnau, Germany
Monday, September 7, 1987 9:00 pm

Murnau's Nosferatu is the archetypal film version of the Dracula legend. By contrasting impressionistic sunlit images of the natural world with the expressionistic figure of the vampire, Murnau has created a poetic allegory of innocence, death, and sexual repression that has lost none of its power to disturb and terrify.

The story of John Merrick, the turn-of-the-century man who suffered from numerous disorders, which left him hideously deformed. Director Lynch (Blue Velvet) enhances the drama with a graceful dreamlike texture, but it's the magnificent performance by John Hurt in a most difficult role that really expresses the humanity and gentleness of the grotesque-looking young man.

In one of the best musical comedies produced in Europe during the early 1930's Clair pioneered a new music/sound film style, adding several dance sequences. The light-hearted, fast-paced plot centers around a man who wins a huge lottery, only to discover that the winning ticket is in the pocket of a jacket that he has just given away.

At first glance, it may look like an ordinary calculator, but the Casio solar CM-100 is anything but. It's an extraordinary software tool that's as useful in programming an Apple™ as it is a mainframe IBM™.

The key to the CM-100's incredible flexibility is Casio's adjustable bit-size selector which can be set to suit any size computer up to 32 bits. And its block display which can, by scrolling blocks of 8 digits at a time, display up to a 32 bit word.

But there's much more to this pocket-size powerhouse. It can do base conversions from binary/octal/decimal/hexadecimal modes and can store in its memory numbers in any base. It also has Shift, Rotate, Arithmetic Shift and Boolean functions that include AND, OR, XOR and NOT.

Perhaps what is most extraordinary about the CM-100 though, is not how much it can do, but how little it costs to do it. The CM-100 is the only calculator that'll let you do all your software figuring for less than you'd figure to pay for an average ($25.00) textbook.

The more you work with computers—whatever their size—the more you need a CM-100. Whether you're a student or professional, it's the one piece of hardware that will make designing your software easier.

NFL Draft back on

Associated Press

NEW YORK - The NFL's controversial supplemental draft of Cris Carter and Charles Gladman, postponed for a week to give the athletes a chance to regain their college eligibility, is on again for Friday.

No appeal was made in either case.

The draft, which college officials complained would encourage athletes to break the rules in order to turn pro, had been acceded to "reluctantly" by the league under threat of a lawsuit.

Carter, an All-American wide receiver from Ohio State, has admitted taking $5,000 in loans and another $1,800 later from agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom. Gladman, a Pitt running back, was declared ineligible for refusing to cooperate with an inquiry into the agents.

ND soccer faces Drake at Krause Stadium

Irish meet Dogs under the lights

By PETE GEGEN
Assistant Sports Editor

Drake will be the opponent as the 1-0 Irish soccer squad opens its home schedule at Krause Stadium tonight.

This match will also be the season-opener for Drake, which is beginning only its second year of soccer. Last year the Bulldogs posted a 5-10 record.

The Bulldogs return nine of 11 starters from last season's squad. The two that graduated, however, happened to be the leading scorers on the team. Sophomore Geoff Elfstrum, a forward/midfielder, is the top returning scorer with three goals and three assists. Sophomore wingback Peter Platt leads the returning starters with four goals last season. In goal for Drake will be sophomore Mike Jensen, who allowed an average of 1.7 goals a game last year.

The odds would appear to be against a young, inexperienced squad opening its second season ever, away from home at the opposing team's first night game at a new stadium. But given Notre Dame's lackluster performance against Loyola Tuesday, the team isn't about to take anything for granted.

"Loyola did to us what we usually do to other people - put pressure on us and caused turnovers," said Irish head coach Dennis Grace. "We've got to play

Rapid growth spurs move

By PETE GEGEN
Assistant Sports Editor

On the far eastern border of the Notre Dame campus next to that land known as "Off-Campus" lies Alumni Field, the home of the Irish soccer team over the years.

Though a far walk from any point on campus, students have made the trek to catch Notre Dame soccer stars such as Kevin Lovejoy, Rich Herdegen and Sami Kahale play against national powers and local weaklings.

But this large soccer field, which hosted Notre Dame's historic 4-3 upset win over nationally-ranked St. Louis in 1981 and a 1-1 tie with second-ranked Akron but a year ago, will no longer host collegiate soccer matches. The Notre Dame soccer program has been growing ever since Dennis Grace became the head coach three-and-a-half years ago, and it has outgrown its home.

The team has relocated to the newly-constructed 5,000-seat Krause Stadium. With lighting for night matches and stands on both sides of the field, the Irish soccer program is now ready for the big time.

"It's a beautiful facility," says Grace. "We are very fortunate."

Irish offensive line digs deep in trenches

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

With four fifth-year seniors returning this fall, the offensive line would not appear to be much of a concern for Notre Dame.

But while the line is long on experience, it is short on depth, making offensive line coach Tony Yelovich thankful he still has a week to prepare for the season opener at Michigan.

"We're on schedule to a certain degree, but we're not where we want to be," said Yelovich. "We still have a lot of work to do in the fundamentals."

A glance at the first-team players certainly does not make the line look like a weakness for the Irish. Left tackle Tom Rehder, left guard Tom Freeman, center Chuck Lanza and right tackle Byron Spruell all are back for a fifth year at Notre Dame. The four seniors all started together on the line last year.

"We know each other's moves, strengths and weaknesses, and the fact that we played together last year will definitely help us out a lot," said Spruell.

The respect shown for the senior starters was made evident in the selection of Lanza and Spruell as the Irish co-captains for the 1987 season.

"Coach Holtz likes the offensive linemen to be leaders," said Lanza. "It's kind of ironic that we were selected captains because it fits right into his scheme."

According to Yelovich, Lanza and Spruell have adjusted to their roles as linemen and captains with ease.

OT Tom Rehder

"They've shown tremendous leadership, and they've set good work habits on the field," said Yelovich. "They have tremendous goals both academically and athletically. And they both have GPA's well over 3.0."

At the other line position, right guard, sophomores Jeff Pearson and Dean Brown are competing to take the starting slot vacated by Shawn Hefern's graduation. Pearson is currently working with the starters, but either one could end up on the first team.

Behind the first string, however, the Irish have encountered some problems. Right tackle Pete Rokich, who missed the entire 1986 season with back troubles, has been bothered with a sprained ankle.

At center, sophomore Steve Huffman quit the team, and sophomore Jim Dadiotis, still awaiting word on his academic eligibility, has not practiced with the team during the fall.

"We're just too thin in that respect," said Yelovich. "We've made a lot of strides, and we have a lot to improve. We're not where we expect to be."

Volleyball team sets weekend sights on Hoosier Classic

By BRIAN O'GARA
Sports Writer

With first-game jitters hopefully out of its season, the Notre Dame volleyball team heads south to Bloomington this weekend for the annual Hoosier Classic. The four-team tournament will feature the Irish, Indiana, Purdue and Ball State.

In last year's tournament, which was played here at Notre Dame, the Irish defeated Indiana in the first round before losing to eventual tournament champion Purdue. Returning ten players from last year's 33-7 team, the Irish swept three games from Southern Illinois in their opener last weekend and should challenge to win this weekend's clash.

Notre Dame will open the tournament tonight with a 7:30 p.m. match against Indiana in the Intercollegiate Athletics Gym.

"Indiana is a vastly improved team from last year," said Head Coach Art Lambert. "They had some good talent there and are starting to put it together well this fall."

If the Irish win that contest, they will face the winner of the Ball State-Purdue matchup at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday evening. A loss would match Notre Dame up with that game's loser at 5 p.m. on Saturday.

The Irish have never defeated Big Ten power Purdue in regular season play, but did defeat the Boiler-makers in a match during the off-season last spring. That victory should give Notre Dame some confidence should they reach the finals with Purdue.

"That win should give us more confidence," said Lambert. "We still need to rid ourselves of mental errors and work on sustaining concentration. That's what we have been working on this week in practice. Volleyball is a quick game and it's important to stay on top of what is going on."

The Observer/Greg Kohs

Irish center Chuck Lanza and the offensive line may find that its a dirty job paving the way for Irish backs this season. Steve Megargee takes a look at the offensive line in his story above.
