William Bennett advocates values, culture in ND lecture

By PAUL PEARSON
Assistant News Editor

A friend of William Bennett, the national "drug czar," recently referred to him as "the Chris Zorich of drug policy."

At a lecture Wednesday, Bennett did nothing to dispel this image by saying that values and culture "are more real, more important and have more impact on the lives of our children" than other issues facing the nation today.

Bennett was at Notre Dame to discuss the problems facing American children, which he said were "rooted in behaviors." He said that the worst problem facing children today is drugs, which he called "a problem of private behavior and morality."

He criticized the findings of Code Blue, the report of a national commission on America's teenagers. "Code Blue," he said, "identifies a crisis of the spirit, a sickness in the soul and it recommends aspirin, Band-Aids and a hall pass to see the nurse."

Bennett agreed with Code Blue's conclusions that most of the problems facing American teenagers are related to behavior. However, he disagreed with the report's recommendations for guaranteed access to health services and health instruction for teenage students.

Bennett called the report's response to these problems "worse than irrelevant—it is actually part of the problem to begin with."

Drug czar William Bennett discussed the problems facing American children at his lecture on campus Wednesday. Bennett pointed out that most of the problems were "rooted in behaviors."

Instead, Bennett summed up his solution to the problems facing America's youth by saying that America must "talk openly and candidly about the moral good as an essential part of our life together."

"If we ridicule and caricature morality as the hang-up of uptight, obsessive prudes," Bennett said, "there will be a cost. It will be to our children."

Bennett criticized what he called "the fear of renewed Puritanism" which he felt would result from his recommendations. "Cotton Mather," he said, "has been dead for 250 years, and this country is hardly at risk of a renewed interest in his thinking."

In his lecture, Bennett said that the government should always "seek to sustain and fix the family first." He said that a parent's love is critical to the upbringing of a child. "We know young people can grow up by themselves, but they can't be raised by themselves."

Bennett defended this by saying that family should be viewed as "a trust held by parents on behalf of their children. A family's first object of love and attention must be its children."

In addition to the family, Bennett also emphasized the role of America's schools "to help instill sound and full character in our children."

He said that the problem with the current educational system is that "we are still waffling on the need to teach the tougher-minded virtues, like self-discipline and self-control, individual and civic responsibility, perseverance, and hard work. To neglect these is a mistake."

However, Bennett warned that the government cannot provide all the solutions to these problems.

"Great as it might be," he said, "government has never raised a child. And it never will."

Bennett said that society must be the primary agent for moral education.

"The state does not, cannot, and even should not always pick up where families and individuals leave off," he said.

On the other hand, Bennett said, "a decent society will not flourish or decay because of what goes on in Congressional committees, the courts, state houses or even the White House. Because regeneration comes from within."

Students attend conference on the environment at Ill.

By CAROL DOMINGUEZ
News Writer

Forty Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students recently attended the nation's largest student environmental conference held on the campus of the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign.

More than 7,000 college and university students from over 1,000 campuses attended the CATALYST conference held Oct 5-7. The student environmental leaders met to plan an environmental agenda for the 1990s.

Most of the ND students participating in the conference were members of the local chapter of the S.E.A.C. (Students for Environmental Action Coalition). Amy Jenista, president of the club, said that the group returned with definite plans to address environmental issues at Notre Dame.

Speakers included Robert Redford, Ralph Nader and Jesse Jackson. Although their speeches were laced with statistics concerning the environment, Jenista said that they elicited a strong emotional response from the students.

Nader spoke of student efficacy in the area of corporate responsibility. Jenista said that he focused on corporate accountability and stressed that students should play a major role in enforcing corporate "conscience" in the area of environment.

After a march through Champaign, student delegates from foreign countries spoke of environmental issues facing their own countries. Jenista said that she was particularly struck by a Chinese student who had graduated from ND. He said that he had contacted an underground revolutionary from his homeland who asked him to remember to campaign for environmental rights as well as human rights.

Jenista said the remainder of the conference centered around workshops that stressed local and campus activism. The students attended different sessions in order to pool their information. SEAC is now "overflowing with ideas," Jenista said.

The chapter hopes to focus on the issues of energy conservation, food choice and corporate divestment at the University. "We plan to become more active and implement more projects on campus," Jenista said.

"The new generation of students will point the way to heightened environmental activism and help mobilize thousands of people around the environmental issues,"she said.

Senate continues budget debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate leaders Wednesday night scrambled for support for a $250 billion deficit-reduction plan that would double gasoline taxes, cut Medicare benefits and mildly boost income taxes on the wealthy.

The measure includes a broader-based tax increase than the soak-the-rich House version that President Bush has said he will veto.

Democratic and Republican leaders spent much of the day trying to line up enough votes to defeat what they called a killer amendment that would strip the gasoline tax boost from the measure. The amendment by Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, would cost nearly $43 billion in revenues over five years.

"We're either going to come out of this exercise with a $500 billion deficit-reduction package, or with nothing," warned Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine.

As debate began, Democratic Budget Committee Chairman James Sasser, D-Tenn., said, "We tell the American people

ND needs better concerts than New Kids

Mike Owen
News Copy Editor

It's just damn depressing around here lately. Just last week we lost at home to a bunch of Ivy Leaguers whom a high-school team could beat. Then during the week we fell out of U.S. News and World Report's Top 25 National Universities.

You might ask, "Mike, what can possibly shock us now?" Well, if you think you've cried your last golden tear for a while, just wait: THE NEW KIDS ARE COMING!

Yes, that's right. In just a few short weeks our friends from SUB will be bringing us Jordan, Danny, Johnny, Donnie, and Joey.

Go ahead. Let it out. Have a primordial yell or an earth shattering scream. Our campus is being invaded by the Titans of Top-Forty, the Princes of Pre-Pubescence, the Commandants of Cosmetics: the NEW KIDS.

What is this University coming to? Our "army" lost the big battle, we were academically ridiculed and now, instead of locusts we get THE NEW KIDS!

More importantly, the Notre Dame concert scene has been definitely lacking in the last couple of years. Recent examples include Barry Manilow, Def Leppard, Richard Marx, and now, ZZ Top.

Last year seemed to be an oasis in this fog of eternal bad taste. R.E.M played a decent (yet overrated) show, as did Squeeze. So, we were a little behind in the times for the ascent of these bands, but remnants of something decent is better than nothing.

Maybe it's just me, but don't names like Def Leppard or the "new" Van Halen remind you of junior high? Those bands were great back then, but now we are in college. Hopefully we have gained something during our collegiate transition.

The Student Union Board should take some initiative and book an alternative band instead of the typical mainstream bands they have booked in the past. These bands might not appeal to everyone in the South Bend community, but they would have a large following among the students here.

If the acts aren't going to sell out with just Domers, then why don't they book them in a place like Theodore's.

Remember De La Soul? They were an alternative success minus a few problems. Not only were the students satisfied, but many of them got their first glimpse inside that underground mecca called Theo's.

The prospective concertgoer at Notre Dame appears to have three choices: (a) demand we have Dread Zeppelin or another alternative band booked by Spring, (b) put on your chest size button of your favorite New Kid and take a St. Joe's 9th grader to the concert, or (c) ND's favorite method of avoiding an issue—crank up Billy Joel's Greatest Hits Volumes I &II and pound thirty Old Milwaukees. It's your choice.

Radical students armed with steel pipes, firebombs and clubs attacked the U.S. Embassy in downtown Seoul early Thursday, but were quickly arrested by riot police, witnesses said. There was no apparent damage to the embassy compound and there were no injuries reported, police said. Scorch marks from a half-dozen firebombs burned the sidewalk about 10 yards from the heavily guarded entrance to the embassy's visa section. There were about 50 people, mostly Koreans, waiting outside for the offices to open when the students attacked. Witnesses said 11 students were involved in the attack. "They tried to throw the firebombs over the walls and they waved big sticks," one man said.

Benazir Bhutto, ousted prime minister of Pakistan, was accused in two additional cases of corruption filed Wednesday by the succeeding caretaker government, one week before national parliamentary elections. Some legal experts expressed doubt that any of the six cases against her, her husband and major members of her former government will be completed before the Oct. 24 voting. Special one-judge tribunals would hear the cases. A hearing was set for Oct. 20 by Justice Mohammad Amir Malik to determine whether the 37-year-old Bhutto should stand trial.

Professor speaks on the effects of language in international relations

By SCOTT KEEGEL
News Writer

Language plays a major role in domestic and international relations, according to Carol Cohn of Harvard University.

Cohn said language can, "prevent good thinking" or even "stop thinking altogether." An example she provided was the use of the word "deterrent" to justify nuclear arms.

Application of such vocabulary can help to end some uncertainties about nuclear weapons by placing a definitive answer in the middle of all the "what ifs" and moral issues, according to Cohn.

She said labeling someone such as Saddam Hussein as "another Hitler" brings about thoughts of the terrors of World War II and the atrocities of the holocaust.

"This is one way that a government such as (that of) the United States can (ease objections to) mobilization," she said.

Cohn spoke of the role of Third World countries and how they are perceived by security and defense analysts. While working within the defense analysis circles she said she was "floored" by how Third World countries were spoken about as factors in U.S.-Soviet relations rather than as separate entities.

In the meantime, Third World countries are viewed as strictly independent threats by many others, she said.

"After all, they (Third World countries) are unpredictable since they have a complete lack of impulse control and are very apt to have maniacal leaders," she said.

According to Cohn, Vice President Dan Quayle pointed out that now that the Cold War has ended we need the Strategic Defense Initiative system to protect the United States from the Saddam Husseins and the Khomeinis who may "just decide to lob a nuclear warhead into the United States."

Cohn also discussed world security in the post-Cold War era. She told the audience of an article in Atlantic magazine which said that "the mathematical likelihood of conflict in Europe is more likely" without the balance of power present during the Cold War.

The United States, among others will have to take a close look at its policy dealings with some countries (namely Germany, Poland, and Czechoslovakia) in the future, she said.

According to Cohn, Henry Kissinger, in reference to a question about the end of the Cold War, said "it remains to be seen if we [the United States] will have permanent allies or permanent interests."

Prof. speaks on economic impact of disarmament

By KATE MANUEL
News Writer

The economic impact of disarmament may be negative and costly in the short term, but it will definitely include positive benefits for the consumer in the long run, according to Jurgen Brauer, visiting associate professor of business administration and economics at Saint Mary's.

Brauer, a visiting faculty fellow at Notre Dame's Institute for International Peace Studies, helped to organize "Economic Issues of Disarmament," a conference for Economists Against the Arms Race, to be hosted by the Institute Nov. 30 to Dec. 1.

The negative economic impacts of disarmament include the lay-offs that will occur when the military sector is converted to civilian production and the costs of cleaning up areas that were formerly devoted to military production, according to Brauer.

"(For) those workers that presently produce war materials, it might mean they lose their jobs," said Brauer. "What do they do? Will South Bend lose a thousand jobs? And, that would mean less money for the government. Disarmament may be costly in the short run."

However, disarmament will also have positive economic effects, as those workers who formerly produced for the military begin producing consumer goods that civilians want, and as there are greater opportunities for trade with the Soviet Union, he said.

"It is possible that workers can be more productive in producing civilian goods than in armament production," said Brauer. "Economists have been working along these lines for at least two hundred years. Economists have in general agreed that it would be preferable not to produce for war."

"In producing for war society loses something," he said. "It loses the labor of those who produce missiles; labor that could have gone into producing tables and chairs."

The papers and discussions presented at this conference will reach and affect the general public in a variety of ways, according to Brauer.

"We have been in negotiation with publishers to produce a scholarly conference volume. There is also the possibility of video-taping," he said. "Students in my classes down the road might have to read the papers. The discussions may also influence the testimony that conference participants might be called on to give in Congress or at conferences."

The three day conference will be divided into eight sessions focusing on different economic concerns, including the conversion of the military sector to civilian uses, the effects of disarmament on international trade, the impact of disarmament on Third World development and the environmental impact of disarmament.

There will also be one session open to the public, which Brauer encourages everyone to attend.

While this is the first such conference to be sponsored by Economists Against the Arms Race, a group formed in December 1988, Brauer said he likes the notion that such a conference might become an annual or biannual occurrence.

"I would hope that this would be a continual effort," he said, "but I am very happy to be having a conference on the economic issues of disarmament as opposed to the economic issues of armament."

Interview program will help charitable groups

By Frank Gaul
News Writer

In an effort to encourage corporations to use their money for charity rather than on extravagant lodgings for prospective employees, senior Kevin Cavanaugh and the Office of Campus Ministry have started the Graduates Interviewing For Tomorrow (GIFT) program.

The aim of GIFT is to get students seeking employment to stay with family, friends or in less expensive hotels when interviewing for jobs, said Cavanaugh. In the future, GIFT might use an agency to facilitate with student travel plans to their interviews.

Notre Dame's program was modeled after Harvard Law School's Students Against Homelessness program. Recently, students in the Stanford University M.B.A. program initiated a similar effort.

The money raised through the program will be used to support educational opportunity in the South Bend area through the Center for Basic Learning Skills. Cavanaugh said GIFT's long term goal is to set up a scholarship fund at ND for students with financial need.

Cavanaugh is in the process of producing a brochure which will be distributed to seniors later next month. Anyone interested in this program may contact him at 283-4307.

Banquet celebrates parents and teachers

Special to The Observer

Sophomore William Schenher and John Szot, his former teacher at Andrean High School in Merrillville, Ind., will be among the students and teachers gathering at the Embassy Suites Hotel in Indianapolis for the "Realizing the Dream" banquet Saturday.

The banquet celebrates the roles played by teachers and parents in encouraging higher educational aspirations among high school students and culminates a three-year project made possible by a grant from the Lilly Endowment to the Independent Colleges and Universities of Indiana.

First generation students from 30 Indiana private colleges and universities and the secondary school teachers who most encouraged them to pursue a college degree will be honored in the event.

In addition to students and teachers, parents and representatives of the participating colleges and universities will be present at the banquet, where a $500 contribution will be made to the general scholarship fund of each participating college in the names of the students being honored.

that there will be some sacrifice in this package. But we tell them at the same time that it will be fair."

And the White House said the Senate version could form the basis for ending the government's long budget stalemate.

"The White House is ready to receive the bipartisan package similar to the Senate package," said Bush's chief of staff, John Sununu. "Get it to the president's desk and he'll sign it."

The administration also said Bush might not shut down the government Saturday if lawmakers show good faith progress toward a deficit-reduction package. Sununu said Bush might sign legislation keeping the government operating if it included budget-cutting provisions that "show Congress meant business about it."

Until now, the president has tried to keep the pressure on by threatening to shut the government down unless Congress sends him a full budget he can accept. Without emergency legislation, federal authority to spend money expires at 12:01 a.m. Saturday.

Acting one day after the Democrats pushed a bill much tougher on the rich through the House, Senate leaders chose to face Election Day just three weeks off with a proposal bearing all the marks of a political compromise.

There would be limits on deductions for people with incomes exceeding $100,000, but no boost in tax rates for the rich as the House approved. The 9-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax would be doubled, but the earned-income tax credit for the poor would increase, too.

The package would shave about $250 billion from the federal deficit over the next five years by raising $142 billion in new taxes and paring Medicare, farm support and other benefit programs. Savings in other bills — mainly defense cuts — would bring total deficit-reduction to about $500 billion, including $40 billion in the budget year that started Oct. 1.

Bush had threatened to veto the House bill because of its increase in the upper bracket income tax rate. Though administration officials objected to some provisions in the Senate version, Sununu said in an interview on NBC-TV the president liked the compromise.

Despite the plan's powerful supporters, the Senate's Democratic and Republican leaders spent the day defending their plan from lawmakers unhappy for regional or philosophical reasons.

Western senators complained that the higher gasoline tax would be a severe blow to states such as theirs, where people routinely drive long distances. Others insisted that the bill's overall tax package was unnecessary, that spending should have been cut more deeply instead.

"Grab your wallets and run for cover because Congress is getting up a head of steam to raise your taxes," said Symms.

Rose discusses sales pitches and technology

By KERRY SCANLON
News Writer

Sales pitches tend to be gendered and centered upon the improvement of living that modern technology could bring to an individual, according to Mark Rose of the Florida Atlantic University's Athletic Department.

Rose presented "Two Salespersons and Ecologies of Technological Knowledge, 1920-1940," Wednesday as part of the Vincent DeSantis lecture series.

He focused particular attention upon the evolution of household technology and the progression this country has taken from using coal to the more modern fuels of natural gas and electrical heating.

"Crystallizing the latent features in the culture," said Rose, is what advertising promoters focus upon to win the consumers' perceptions of adjusting lifestyles to more modern fuels and technology.

According to Rose, the late Roy Monroe, a sales executive, went unrecognized but was responsible for advertising techniques that were able to "perceive the social phenomenon of the day" and greatly influence the public's perceptions of modern technology.

Rose's lecture title and main focus of discussion stemmed from the sixth chapter of his book, Cities of Light and Heat.

Universities distribute whistles to deter crime and enhance the safety of students

By MEGAN JUNIUS
News Writer

With the recent increase in crime on campuses across the country, several universities have taken steps to ensure the safety of their students.

The University of South Carolina-Columbia, has special festivities throughout October, National Crime Prevention Month.

The university, student government and safety force joined resources at an outdoor fair where the main attraction was the distribution of safety whistles, according to Lieutenant Weaver Grayson, training officer of USC Security.

This is the fourth year that these tri-tone whistles have been distributed. Students attach the whistles to their key chains and use them to attract attention if a problem would ever occur.

"Even if the students don't need the whistles because of a problem, they are a good reminder to walk in pairs and to take other safety precautions," Grayson said.

Because of the increased awareness of campus safety, emergency response call boxes have been installed around the USC campus, he said.

On campus, Notre Dame Security and Student Government have been working together in order to increase crime prevention.

According to Rob Pasin, student body President, an emergency response telephone system will be installed on campus by spring break. Last year, Student Government organized the SafeWalk student escort service, Pasin said.

"We've never discussed handling whistles, but if security feels it would make a difference and if it would not be cost prohibitive, we'd like to do anything we can to help," Pasin said.

"Whistles are not a bad idea as long as they are taken seriously," said Chuck Hurley, assistant director of Notre Dame Security. "However, they don't take the place of common sense."

Students, faculty see parallels in film and life

By ANNA MARIE TABOR
News Writer

Students and faculty drew parallels between the film "Pretty Woman" and college life in a Popular Culture Group discussion Wednesday.

Audience members recognized the material values of the movie at and identified the similar values at Saint Mary's and Notre Dame.

The "Dogbook" is a popular reference for meeting people and students admitted that it invites judgments based on a picture.

"It doesn't matter much what he (your date) says, you're looking at the way he's wrapped," was the sentiment of Peggy Byers, a professor of communication/dance/theater, about SYRs.

Participants reponded to Byers' statement with varied opinions. A general idea was that in the beginning of a relationship there is nothing more to go on than image. One student said appearances are a consideration but "at an SYR, once the package is opened, it's often discarded."

In the movie, Vivian is attractive enough, but students said that if she hadn't been a captivating person, Edward (Richard Gere) and Barnie (Vivian's front desk friend) wouldn't have liked her. Byers said the superficiality was "to appear the part and conform to the class she was invited to join."

Chuck Pressler, professor of sociology, said the movie stressed the popular belief that "sight is the most important sense." The audience believed the movie probably wouldn't have worked if Kit (Vivian's hooker-roommate) had played the leading lady because she didn't "look right."

ND to sponsor meeting of Catholic Physicians

Special to the Observer

Notre Dame will host the 1990 meeting of the National Federation of Catholic Physicians' Guilds.

The meeting, "Curing and Caring in Contemporary Society, Is There a Catholic Perspective?" will take place Oct. 25-28.

Among the meeting's public events, all of which will take place in the auditorium of the Center for Continuing Education, will be a session Friday beginning, where Charles Dougherty, professor of philosophy and director of the Center for Ethics and Health Policy at Creighton University, will present "The Crisis in Health Care Delivery and Its Ethical Dilemmas."

Dr. William Fitzsimmons, a family physician from Oak Park, Ill., will speak on "The Ethical Dilemmas for the Physician in Practice."

John Robinson, director of the Thomas J. White Center on Law and Government at Notre Dame, will speak on "A Christian Agenda for Catholic Physicians."

Rev. Joseph Gremillion, professor emeritus, will speak on "A Historical Perspective on Catholic Social Teachings."

Drew Christiansen, associate professor of theology, will speak on "Catholic Social Teachings and Contemporary Health Care."

Dougherty will speak on "Proposals for Change in Health Care Delivery.

There will be a panel discussion on "Health Care Delivery: Ethics and Reality." Panelists will be Christiansen, Dougherty and David Betson, associate professor of economics.

Kevin McDonnell, associate professor of philosophy at Saint Mary's, will speak on "An Overview and Critique of Embryo Research."

There will also be a panel discussion on "Embryo Research." Panelists will be McDonnell, Eugene Diamond, professor of pediatrics at Loyola University's Stritch School of Medicine and Sidney Callahan, associate professor of psychology at Mercy College.

On Saturday , Edmund Pellegrino, director of the Center for the Advanced Study of Ethics at Georgetown University, will speak on "The Christian Virtues and the Christian Physician." Callahan will speak on "Conscience and Decision Making."

W. David Solomon, associate professor of philosophy at Notre Dame, will speak on "Virtue and the Medical Profession."

Solomon, Callahan and Pellegrino will be panelists in a discussion of "Issues of Virtue in the Profession."

Victoria Thorn, executive director of the National Office of Post Abortion Reconciliation and Counseling, will speak on "Project Rachel and the Post Abortion Ministry."

Josefina Magno, president for the International Hospice Institute and director of hospice services for the Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit, will speak on "The Role of the Physician When There is No Hope for a Cure."

Herb Sorensen, physician at Likuni Hospital in Malawi, East Africa, will speak on "A Call From Likuni: Our Answer and Our Journey."

Antonio Brenner, minister at LaMesa Prison in Tijuana, Mexico, will give a presentation titled "They All Are Our Children."

The meeting will conclude Sunday (Oct. 28) with a morning of recollection and a Mass in Alumni Hall Chapel. Rev. Michael Himes, associate professor of theology, will preside.

The National Federation of Catholic Physicians' Guilds was established in 1932 to uphold the principles of Catholic faith and morality as related to the science and practice of medicine, to uphold Catholic hospitals in the application of Catholic moral principles, to communicate Catholic medical ethics to the medial profession and the wider community and to enable Catholic physicians to deepen their mutual support and understanding.

ceived Russian stackable dolls which it markets as souvenirs. McDonald's has not received revenues but reinvests in the Soviet Union so it will be able to open more chains.

Another impediment to forming a Western economy is the lack of trade laws. Copyright laws do not exist in the Soviet Union. Marzke brought up the example of a computer software designer who made little profit off of his programs since there was no law against pirated copies. There has been no need for copyright laws since the government has had control of all production.

Marzke suggested that there was a need for a change in attitude by the people.

Association president, Chet Kaminski, asked if there was hope with the younger generation. In speaking with younger Soviet citizens, Marzke found them to be more receptive to change. "Children there are learning English and think Western," he said.

The present working class has no incentive to work since they do not feel rewarded for their effort. There is no monetary incentive because their currency is relatively worthless. Most have plenty of money but nothing to spend it on. In addition there is no sense of job insecurity which prompts people to work harder. Unemployment does not exist in the Soviet Union, workers are simply moved to another area if their performance is poor.

The other major difficulty that must be solved is one of unity. "Gorbachev was riding a horse that has now become a bucking bronco which is out of control," said Marzke. Ethnic unrest can only be solved through a sense of leadership and with confidence in both the country's economy and its leadership. Once some of the inner strife has been put to rest economic changes can be made more smoothly.

Marzke remarked that he did not think that his visit had significant impact on Soviet computer security procedures. The EDP auditor for CMS Management Systems applied for the program because of his interest in the changes in the Soviet Union and a "naive notion that I could help." Although Marzke thinks that there are many hurdles left to overcome, rapid changes in the Soviet Union make a Western style economic system a growing possibility.

Business ethics: An oxymoron?

By Father Oliver Williams

In recent weeks we have been overwhelmed by reports in the media of ethical failures in business. Whether it be the shady deals of financial genius Michael Milken or the irresponsibility of Denver's Silverado Banking, Savings and Loan, the American people are increasingly angry that the ethical business executive seems to be a dying breed. What can we do to assure ourselves of a better ethical climate in business today? More specifically, how can I prepare myself so that I am not the Michael Milken of tomorrow?

In my view, a major benefactor for ethics teaching and research at Harvard Business School, John Shad, stated the challenge well. Shad, former ambassador to the Netherlands, former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission and most recently top officer of Drexel, Burnham, Lambert, Inc., put it this way: "The (business) schools must hone their ability to certify that their graduates have the character and integrity to use the knowledge gained for the benefit— rather than the abuse— of society" (The Wall Street Journal, July 27, 1987, p. A19).

John Shad, by emphasizing the need for character analysis, or 'virtue theory', pointed to the single weakness in the present state of the field of business ethics. What Shad, and I dare say, all of us want in the business world is not simply people who know what principled action is, but rather people who exhibit uncommon virtue in maintaining allegiance to their principles. That is, we want people of character.

How does one grow in those human strengths or virtues that are so admired in the character of a Jim Burke of J&J or a Bill Hewlett of Hewlett Packard? The point here is that much of the behavior that is cited as exemplary in the corporate world, for example the Tylenol decision by Johnson & Johnson or the Rely product recall decision by Proctor and Gamble, is not sufficiently explained as just principled action. Rather, what made the top management of these firms corporate heroes in the eyes of many is that they exhibit uncommon virtue in maintaining allegiance to their principles. This was demonstrated, for example, in the courage to act to protect human welfare even in the midst of incomplete information, as well as in the integrity and humility in communicating with consumers about possible difficulties with a product. Some of the virtues highlighted for the professions by one ethicist advocating a theory of virtue include perseverance, courage, integrity, compassion, candor, fidelity, prudence, public-spiritedness, justice and humility.

Where the virtue of fidelity serves as the glue of a business organization, there is a promise by business to its public that every effort will be made to look out for human welfare within the limits of its operation. The Johnson & Johnson Tylenol withdrawal was not so much a matter of telling the truth (principled action) as it was of being true to its promise (virtuous action).

The very virtues which may prevent us from going the way of the white collar criminals so prominent in the press today are the same ones that enable us to live in a community here at Notre Dame. To live a humane life with others we develop certain virtues or skills such as honesty, truthfulness, compassion, loyalty and justice. Often ethical failures are the result of these virtues being eclipsed by the values so dominant in our culture today: efficiency and effectiveness. While efficiency and productivity are clearly important, when they become the only values reinforced in an organization, slowly people are molded to do whatever will get the job done without adverting to broader considerations. Expediency rules the day and business ethics does indeed become an oxymoron.

Theories of principles need to be complemented by virtue theory— rules need a context or vision. However, there is also a less obvious point here: In our own professional life we need more than a set of rules to maintain our ethical bearings, we need a vision and set of habits or virtues. We should all have an idea of the sort of person we would like to become and the sort of families and communities we would like to form. The central questions then become: "What sort of person am I shaping?" and "What sort of organization am I shaping?" Is it the sort of person that I want to be?... the sort of organization I want to be part of? Had Michael Milken or the Silverado crowd asked those questions along the way they might not be where they are today.

Father Williams is an associate provost and a teacher and researcher specializing in the area of business ethics.

Soviets attempt capitalism

By CATHLEEN MCLAUGHLIN
Business Writer

The Soviet Union's efforts toward a Western-style economy was the focus of a speech by Dave Marzke at the Michiana chapter of the National Association of Accountants meeting Wednesday.

Marzke had visited the Soviet Union for three weeks in May as a computer security specialist with the Citizens as Ambassadors program. During his stay in Moscow, Minsk, and Leningrad, Marzke had an opportunity to observe the changing economic system.

The Soviet Union's switch toward capitalism has left some hurdles to overcome.

The central economic planning system has caused the most difficulty, particularly because of the central pricing system followed by the government, said Marzke. Prices of both inputs and outputs are legislated by the government rather than determined by the market. This method makes it difficult for supply and demand to equilibrate.

Government regulated prices

along with imposed annual quotas also make the economy unstable. The quotas are not based on any sort of demand analysis so variations in taste tend to cause shortages. Citizens do not have the option of going to another store or producer because there is no competition.

You can usually find what you are looking for, as long as it is not something that is in short supply, but your choice is very limited, Marzke said. However, if you can't find it in the stores there is a "healthy black market" in operation. Most items tend to be stolen or homemade since selling government items would be too risky.

To assist the transition to capitalism many Western companies have become involved in joint ventures in Russia.

The 'cooperatives', as they are referred to, are self funding companies which receive no support from the government. Cooperatives are still required to adhere to government regulations and high taxes are levied against them. The high taxes function to bring in European money which helps the Soviet economy.

Currently, Pepsi, Ben and Jerry's and McDonald's are a few of the companies involved in joint ventures in the Soviet Union. The Western companies do not take money out of the Soviet Union, since Soviet money is worthless in Western markets.

Instead, companies take their revenues in the form of goods. Pepsi has received shipments of vodka to sell in the United States. Ben and Jerry's has re-

Housing starts continue to decline

Eight-month slump is the longest on U.S. record

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing starts skidded 0.6 percent in September, continuing an eight-month slide that has become the longest decline on record, the government said Wednesday. Analysts foresee no improvement before next year.

"The expectation is, we will slide down gradually into the first quarter," which should be the low for the cycle, said David F. Seiders, chief economist with the National Association of Home Builders.

"The basic trend ... is declining levels of new construction" through the first quarter, agreed Richard Peach, deputy chief economist with the Mortgage Bankers Association.

The Commerce Department said starts of new homes and apartments fell to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.14 million units on top of a 1 percent drop in August.

It was the first time starts had fallen for eight consecutive months since the department began recording them in 1959. And the September level was the lowest since construction fell to 1.05 million units in August 1982 during the last recession.

Seiders said the Home Builders are forecasting starts to total just 1.04 million this year, down from 1.38 million in 1989 and 1.49 million in 1988. Already, starts are off 10.4 percent from the first nine months of 1989.

Building permits, often a barometer of future construction activity, did not suggest improvement either. They were down 4.2 percent to an annual rate of 1.01 million applications on top of a 3.0 percent drop the previous month.

The weakness in the housing industry has resulted in the loss of 311,000 construction jobs since last February, Seiders said. Construction unemployment totaled 11.8 percent in September alone, when another 20,000 jobs were lost, he added.

Single-family construction rose 4.2 percent to an annual rate of 877,000 units last month, the first advance in six months. But Peach noted that single-family starts in the third quarter declined 3.5 percent to 864,000 units from the April-May period.

And multi-family starts plunged 14.3 percent to 258,000 units at an annual rate. They had gained 8.3 percent in August, the first advance since last April.

Part of the problem with apartment construction, Peach said, is the pileup of starts earlier this year as builders attempted to beat a deadline for expensive new regulations designed to make apartments more accessible to the handicapped.

Other problems for both single- and multi-family construction, Peach added, included high interest rates and limited sources of financing following the savings and loan crisis.

Starts dropped 11 percent, to an annual rate of 105,000 units, in the Northeast and 4.4 percent, to 328,000 units, in the West.

However, starts rose 3.3 percent, to 249,000 units, in the Midwest and 3 percent, to 453,000 units, in the South.

'McPaper', 'McDome'— What's next? McDonald's markets pizza

OWENSBORO, Ky. (AP) — Stacy McIntire and her visitors wanted something with cheese and sauce, so they did the obvious thing at a not-so-obvious place.

They went out for pizza — at McDonald's.

"We had company over and we fed four people on two pizzas for something like $12," she said. "We went to the drive-through and didn't even have to get out of the car. We got it in five minutes."

Pizza, in the land of all-beef patties, special sauce, lettuce, cheese, pickles, onions and sesame-seed buns? Is this a fast-food induced nightmare?

Not at all. McDonald's, which for years counted its hamburger sales in the billions, may soon be counting pizza, pasta and other non-traditional offerings in an attempt to boost sluggish U.S. dinner sales.

Owensboro's four Golden Arches and 10 others across the Ohio River in Evansville, Ind., are among 240 restaurants nationwide which are test-marketing tomato pies. The 12-inch pies also are being tested in Las Vegas; Hartford, Conn.; Fresno, Calif.; and suburbs of Chicago.

"Our customers are interested in a little more variety and more choices," said Melissa Oakley, spokeswoman at McDonald's Corp.'s Oak Brook, Ill., headquarters. "But we have to be very careful in what we choose. We're still committed to serving a limited menu."

McDonald's, held up by many as a model American corporation, has long been committed to test marketing. Salads, the McDLT and Chicken McNuggets made the grade; the Hula-burger- two slices of cheese with a slice of grilled pineapple on a toasted bun, did not.

McDonald's sacrificed fresh dough for frozen in its attempt to make pizza a fast food. Some customers say the dough will be the pizza's downfall.

"It tastes like cardboard," said 16-year-old Josh Hamburg of Owensboro.

Grace Hall 24 hour run supports Northeast Neighborhood Center

Dear Editor:

October 20, 1990, could be one of the most exciting days for Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students this year. The day will entail cheering, partying, tailgating and just plain going nuts. Yet this is not all that will occur. Grace Hall's 24 Hour Run 1990 will have kicked off its fund-raising for the Northeast Neighborhood Center.

The Center, located at 803 North Notre Dame Avenue, helps families and residents of the neighborhood who are not in the best of situations. Activities include trash cleanup, dealing with area recreational problems, the establishment of the "Neighborhood Watch" program to reduce crime and technical assistance to elderly and low-income homeowners. Also, volunteers of the Center have distributed basic food and clothing commodities to hundreds of local residents.

To run the Center, about $15,000 is needed annually. The state used to fund the Center, but since 1984 the grant has not been renewed. This is where the community's help and fund-raisers like Grace Hall's 24 Hour Run is needed to maintain the operation of the Center.

Starting at noon on Friday, Oct. 19, Digger Phelps, Tim Roemer and students of Grace will be taking turns running around the campus. However, this unbelievable accomplishment in itself will not raise the money. A tent will be set up in the Fieldhouse Mall where Grace residents will be asking for donations. Note: these students are not going to harm you, so avoiding or ignoring them is unnecessary. A gift of loose change, a bill, or more will be greatly appreciated by the Northeast Neighborhood Center.

To make this exciting weekend complete, remember Grace Hall's 24 Hour Run and its need for donations.

Inhumane research procedures torture animals without benefit for humanity

Dear Editor:

I am writing in response to the article by Shannon Ryan (The Observer, Oct. 10) which explained Dr. Richard Doyle's view that medical research using animals is necessary and acceptable. As a person concerned with animal welfare, I would like to challenge his views and balance the article with some additional information.

First, Dr. Doyle mischaracterizes the position of animal rights groups when he says that they "attempt to confer human rights upon animals and present them as equals." The views of Peter Singer, a leading authority on the animal rights movement, are articulated in the book Animal Liberation. Singer makes it clear that animal rights activists do not claim that animals are equal to humans, but merely that animals share with humans the capacity to feel pain, and that their pain should not be discounted.

I also disagree with Dr. Doyle's portrayal of the existing state of animal research and the laws which govern it. He implies that most research is humane and of great benefit to mankind, when in fact the majority of animal research is severely painful and unrelated to saving human lives. Moreover, the federal Animal Welfare Act and funding requirements provide little protection for research animals. While the act provides for certain constraints on research using cats, dogs and primates (an estimated five percent of animal research), no procedure is actually illegal. Researchers can and do burn, freeze, electrocute, starve, poison, drown, blind and dismember live animals without anesthetic.

Finally, I would like to emphasize that the views of Dr. Doyle are not representative of the medical profession. A growing number of physicians are objecting to the use of animals in biomedical research. The non-profit organization "Physician's Committee for Responsible Medicine" is a group of physicians who oppose research on animals and promote alternatives including cell, organ, tissue and bacteria cultures, clinical and epidemiological surveys and mathematic and computer models. The group has begun to impact the medical community's views on animal research. For example, in the past two years, twelve medical schools have stopped using dogs as part of their educational curriculum.

Because an estimated 40 million animals are used each year in the United States for research purposes, and such research is largely paid for with tax dollars, the issue is deserving of public concern.

Students pay for degree, not minutes

Dear Editor:

I am writing in response to the Viewpoint letter entitled, "Cancellations cost students a bundle," (The Observer, Oct. 11). In the letter, three Lewis women complained that for each cancelled class, the University was cheating them out of their $26.67 of paid tuition. I would like to ask, "Do you actually think you can buy an education?" Learning can be attained practically free; the only costs are the investment of some time and a lot of initiative. Almost anyone can pick up a book at the local library and educate him/herself.

Most students agree that sitting in a classroom for the full fifty minutes does not guarantee any additional learning. The fact remains that the material learned in the classroom is a minute aspect of students' education. So, what does tuition money pay for? The answer is obvious: a Notre Dame degree.

A Notre Dame degree opens the world to students, if they want it to. The four years which students purchase expose them to an infinite number of experiences, ranging from free lectures by world renowned speakers to Chicago trips. So, the next time your class is cancelled, use the time and make the effort to teach yourself something new. Visit the Snite Museum of Art or volunteer your time at the homeless shelter. The question should not be whether the faculty is cheating you of your investment, but, rather, are you cheating yourself?

Security guard Jeanne Miller latch-hooks aspects of ND life for Lyons Hall

By LISA EATON
Accent Writer

A visit to Lyons Hall is no longer complete without a visit to the now famous latch-hook rugs (at least among Lyonites) of Jeanne Miller, the hall's security guard for the past sixteen years.

For many years now Jeanne has been hooking her way into the hearts of all who meet her and she has definitely left her mark upon the halls of Lyons. The latch-hook portraits of Fr. Hesburgh and Lyons Hall are continual reminders of all that Jeanne has done for Notre Dame and for "her girls" at Lyons Hall.

Jeanne started this hobby many years ago to give herself something to do to while away the many quiet hours of the night. Jeanne's youngest daughter, Lori, had a kit that someone had given her for Christmas that she did not have the time to start. One night Jeanne gave it a try, and the rest, as they say, is history. She fell in love with it immediately and has been hooked ever since. She was dubbed "The Happy Hooker" because of her new found hobby.

Through the years, Jeanne has passed from a rank amateur to a latch-hook professional. She now designs her work herself. The enormous rug of Lyons Hall was her first major work and she has now progressed to portraits of such Notre Dame favorites as Father Theodore Hesburgh and Lou Holtz.

Last year Jeanne celebrated her fifteenth anniversary as a security guard at Lyons Hall. During the surprise party the hall threw for her, she was finally able to present Father Hesburgh with the rug that had been sitting in her closet for two years. Now framed and hanging in a prominent position in the dorm, the latch-hook is a reminder to all not only of the great things Father Hesburgh has done for Notre Dame but also of all the great things Jeanne has done for Notre Dame.

Jeanne started working at Notre Dame in 1974 when Lyons was first converted to a women's dorm. She remembers her first night vividly. "The night was so wild and crazy. We had a brand new rector, assistant rector, and five R.A.s and me. We hardly knew what we were doing. This was all so new to us."

Despite some initial frustrations and crazy times, Jeanne cannot imagine doing anything else. "If is wasn't for the girls and the people, I wouldn't have stayed all these years. I would really miss it. I'll walk by rooms, and I'll still remember from years back who lived here."

She still keeps in touch with all of the rectors with whom she has worked throughout the years. "Closeness with the staff has kept me here for all these years," states Jeanne. Her job keeps her young, she says, because she has to keep up on all of the latest college "lingo."

Jeanne can certainly tell many stories about her years at Lyons from the wild and crazy 1970's when there was no alcohol policy of any importance to today. Jeanne has watched many generations of students pass through the university, and she thinks that students are getting more mature and responsible each year.

Jeanne has put her many life experiences, including those that occurred in Lyons, into words. She has written her life story entitled "Sentimental Journeys" which documents her life from the time she was five years old until the present. She has also written "Lyons-zoo-ology #101" which tells all about everything that she has seen, heard, and experienced as a security guard for Lyons Hall.

One of her favorite stories is about the winter of 1977 when it snowed so much that school was cancelled and everything was shut down. Jeanne came to work through a snowstorm because she knew that they were going to need her that night. She ended up being stuck at Lyons, having to spend the night at the firehouse for two nights. She wrote in her book, "The students really started to 'climb the walls.' They ran out of beer and couldn't get out to buy any." When she returned a couple days later she brought apples and and "a lot of munchies [for] the girls." She was mobbed. Everything was gone in fifteen minutes.

Jeanne says that she feels more like a house mother than a security guard. She is always there to take care of illnesses, injuries, and anything else that comes up during the night. She often walks the halls and sees people up typing papers and thinks to herself, "If I could only type her paper for her so she could go to bed."

Being a good listener is an essential part of Jeanne's job. She has had men and women alike come to her in the middle of the night to just talk about whatever. She has been the first person that some have told of their engagements. She says, "I try not to give advise because I'm still learning, too, and I don't want to give the wrong advise, but I'm a good listener."

Jeanne Miller, security guard of Lyons Hall, presented Father Hesburgh with a latch-hook rug of himself at her fifteenth anniversary party thrown by the hall.

When Jeanne is not busy working at Lyons, she is busy doing something else. Latch-hook is just one of her many hobbies. She knits; one winter she knitted over 250 navy and gold scarves for students and faculty. She is an interior decorator in her spare time, specializing in Christmas trees. One Christmas Jeanne and her husband, Dale, had an upside down Christmas tree because "the world was turning upside down."

She also golfs; she was one of the first women to join the Ladies Golf League at Notre Dame. Before Burke Memorial Golf Course would allow women on the course, Jeanne dressed up as a man because she was determined to play on Notre Dame's golf course. She made it to the fourth hole.

Destiny seems to have brought Jeanne to Lyons Hall. She was born the same year Lyons was built. When Jeanne was younger and dating ND men, she broke parietals, ironically, in the same dorm (then a male dorm) where she would end up enforcing parietals as a security guard. Many students and rectors have come and gone through Lyons, but Jeanne is always there, no matter what.

Perhaps Jeanne was summed up best by the Lyonite who said, "She is sooo cool." That's Jeanne, security guard, house mother and woman of many hobbies.

CBS' sitcom 'Uncle Buck' disappoints viewers with unsuccessful humor

The endless pursuit for a new and humorous sitcom continues, and it will still continue after viewing "Uncle Buck," for this program most definitely does not fill this gap.
Continuing the trend of the current television season, "Uncle Buck" exhibits a lack of both humor and originality.

"Uncle Buck" can be viewed on Monday nights at 7:00 p.m. on CBS, and although hard to believe, it finds its basis in the movie of the same name. If the astute moviegoer is able to remember, and it may be easy to forget this particular film, the reviews of "Uncle Buck" the movie were not tremendously stellar. John Candy was said to have a few moments of minor comedy, but the movie as a whole was average at best.

Why would CBS then choose to base an entire series on a relatively unsuccessful movie? NBC seemed to make a better choice with "Parenthood," for that work did meet with a number of successful reviews, but CBS' decision seems a bit ridiculous.

The background of "Uncle Buck" is easily understood, but then complexity is not a trademark of its genre. Uncle Buck Russel (Kevin Meany) has become the guardian of his late brother's three children. In his care are Tia (Dah-Ve Chodan), who is age 16, Miles (Jacob Gelman), who is 8, and Maizy (Sarah Martineck), who is 6.

Buck is the antithesis of the man one would desire to care for the children. He is quite a slob, a bit ignorant, and somewhat crude, but he is a Chicago Cubs fan, so he is definitely not all bad.

Uncle Buck exhibits this well-meaning side in the episode this week. His girlfriend Stacy has returned, and the plot revolves around the conflict that Buck faces between his easy going past and the responsibility of his future.

When Uncle Buck first reunites with Stacy, his romantic intentions are stymied by the fact that he cannot find a babysitter for the two youngest children. Tia is finally bribed into the task. Buck asks Stacy, "How much money do you have?" When she responds $50, Buck says that won't do. When she then responds with a plane ticket (she is a stewardess), Buck says that will do. Our only response can be that this humor won't do.

Buck does go on a date with Stacy, and their relationship is as strong as ever. It is so strong that Buck and Stacy decide to marry. The series here throws the viewer a major twist because instead of the children being a hindrance to the relationship, they are the catalysts for Stacy's feelings. What a move of pure genius. In the end the romance dies because neither party really asked if they loved the other.

If you just finished reading this last paragraph and are somewhat confused, then do not feel terribly upset. I had a very difficult time with the romantic Buck Russel. A fat guy in a tight shirt and shorts is not my concept of a love machine.

I had heard that "Uncle Buck" was a slightly off-color series, and I was hopeful that a couple crude jokes might have been learned before the demise of Buck and Stacy's fling. There was one joke about Miles writing his name in the snow, but it seemed fairly tame. On a previous show Maizy said to Miles "You suck," but college students have heard worse.

In general, I was disappointed by the quality of "Uncle Buck" as I have been disappointed by most television series this fall season. Each is approached with an open mind, and perhaps the positive review is just around the corner. Then again, don't hold your breath.

Kevin Meaney stars as Uncle Buck, the uncouth uncle who takes over the parenting of his late brother's kids in the new comedy series "Uncle Buck," which can be seen on Mondays at 8:00 p.m. on CBS.

Sabres lose again

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Mike Keane scored twice as the Montreal Canadiens took a 4-3 decision over the Buffalo Sabres, who remained winless after the first six games of the NHL season.

Keane scored both his goals on tip-ins of blocked teammates' shots. Keane pushed the puck past Sabres goalie Daren Puppa after Puppa stopped shots by Eric Desjardins in the first period and Shayne Corson in the second.

Brian Skrudland and Denis Savard also scored for the Canadiens, and Savard also recorded two assists as Montreal outshot the Sabres 33-30.

Pierre Turgeon scored twice for Buffalo, whose 0-4-2 record is the worst six-game start in franchise history.

Rangers 5, Jets 3

Darren Turcotte's tie-breaking power-play goal at 2:47 of the third period, his third point of the game, lifted the New York Rangers to a 5-3 win over the Winnipeg Jets Wednesday night.

Brian Mullen and Mike Gartner scored twice for the Rangers, who won their fifth straight game and extended the Jets' losing streak to six.

Turcotte, who has scored at least one point in all seven games this season, converted a goalmouth feed from Ray Sheppard while Phil Sykes and Randy Carlyle were in the penalty box.

Gartner added an insurance goal at 13:50 for New York, which outshot Winnipeg 34-28. The Rangers, who have surrendered 182 shots in their five wins, had outshot only the Minnesota North Stars in their seven games.

Devils 3, Capitals 2

Kirk Muller's disputed goal with 5:54 remaining in regulation gave the New Jersey Devils a 3-2 victory over the Washington Capitals.

The victory kept the Devils unbeaten at home (4-0-1) while the Capitals lost their third in a row and fourth in five games.

Paul Ysebaert set up the winning goal when he led a rush into the Capitals' zone, swung behind the net and fed Peter Stastny for a backhander. Stastny's shot glanced off Muller's left skate and squirted past goaltender Don Beaupre.

The Caps unsuccessfully protested to referee Andy van-Hellemond that Muller kicked the puck into the goal.

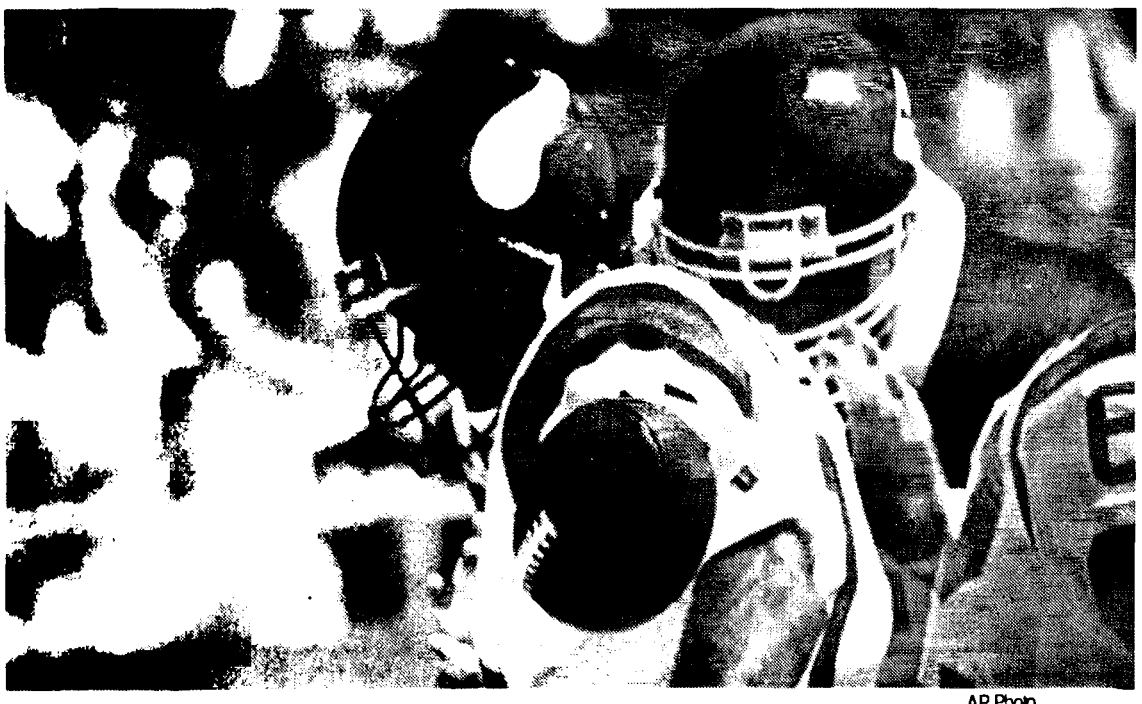
Lynn is gone, but Vikings vow to keep Burns for remainder of year



AP Photo

Things have been up in the air for the Minnesota Vikings since General Manager Mike Lynn announced last week that he will soon leave the organization to become president of the World League of American Football.

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. (AP) — Jerry Burns will coach the Minnesota Vikings for the rest of the 1990 season, general manager Mike Lynn said Wednesday.

Burns hinted Tuesday that he might consider stepping down before the end of his fifth season. But Lynn said, "I asked him specifically about it. He said he's not giving any thoughts at all to leaving the Vikings."

Coming off an NFC Central championship and its third straight postseason appearance, Minnesota (1-5) has been the NFL's most disappointing team this year. Its most recent loss, 32-24 Monday at Philadelphia on national television, came after the Vikings blew a late nine-point lead.

Things became unsettled last week when Lynn announced that he would soon leave the Vikings to become president of the World League of American Football, the NFL's new international entity that is scheduled to begin play next spring. Lynn has been a big Burns supporter. While a subdued Burns told reporters that he might use the Vikings' week off to mull his immediate future, Lynn was in Chicago on NFL business. Lynn said he read about Burns' feelings in Wednesday morning's newspapers.

I talked to Jerry as soon as I got back today," Lynn said Wednesday. "I asked him how he was feeling and he said he was fine to continue coaching.

"It was a tough week for him. With me doing what I did and then having to go to Philadelphia and lose the way we lost that particular game, it would be tough on anyone. But he's fine now."

Burns couldn't be reached for comment.

Marino presents new problems for Patriots

MIAMI (AP) — In a season t hat has been bad news for the New England Patriots, here's some more: They no longer have Dan Marino's number.

The Pats won six in a row against Marino's Miami Dolphins from 1986 to 1988, holding his offense to 10 points or less four times. But Marino has played well in his past three games against New England, and Miami has won them all.

The AFC East rivals meet again Thursday night at Joe Robbie Stadium. Miami is 4-1 and shares the division lead with Buffalo; New England is 1-4 and has lost three consecutive games since several players were accused of sexually harrassing a female reporter.

The Patriots have been outscored 111-40 during their losing streak.

"No one really cares what our problems are," coach Rod Rust said.

"It's a disappointing season right now for us," cornerback Ronnie Lippett said.

In the past, New England could count on getting well against Marino, who holds 18 NFL records. Statistics show that no team has done a better job of containing him.

Marino has thrown more interceptions than touchdown passes against only one AFC team — the Patriots. They've intercepted Marino 27 times.

This time things worked for Oakland.

Rickey Henderson scored the ame's first run in the first. Jose Canseco hit Oakland's first postseason home run in the third. They played solid defense, Bob Welch did not cave in to World Series pressure, and still the A's lost.

'If we don't play good baseball, we shouldn't expect to win," outfielder Dave Henderson said. "It's simple. You usually lose when you don't play well.

"They are doing a lot more things than we're doing. They're tacking on more runs in different innings. They're keeping the scoring through nine innings. That's one thing we're not doing."

And to top everything off, Dennis Eckersley, who has pitched as close to flawless this season as any pitcher, was the man the Reds beat with three straight 10th-inning singles.

"You can't make a mistake or you lose when you do what I do," Eckersley said. "I did, and I lost."

The A's were expected to come to Cincinnati to begin their one-sided march to a series championship, a sweep even. Instead they return to Oakland in quite a spot.

"We'll just have to get our stuff together in Oakland," Lansford said. "If we keep playing hard, the worm will turn for us. We'll just have to get the job done."

Hudgens. "Lake Michigan was about 45 degrees. I tried to right the boat, but (crew Adrienne Briggs) had to be taken by the crash boat."

The A team did not finish the race, and this dropped the team from a sure first-place finish to third out of four teams in the standings.

Over the fall break, the team will compete in the Halloween Regatta at Cincinnati. Additionally, the club will be training on Lake Michigan for the National Sloop Championships, to be held at Annapolis.

The team qualified for the nationals in these large-keeled boats earlier this season with a second-place finish at the Midwestern Collegiate Sailing Association sloop championships at the Detroit Yacht Club.

The Notre Dame Rugby Club faced the Kalamazoo Men's Club on Saturday, and was defeated, 38-19.

The more experienced, bigger Kalamazoo players wore down the Irish in the 80-minute match. Notre Dame trailed by only three at halftime, but was simply outmanned after that point, as the Kalamazoo team was able to put together several scores late in the game.

This weekend, the Irish will face a new challenge as the Notre Dame Old Boys come back to South Bend to take on the youngsters. The Old Boys are a conglomeration of former Irish rugby players, convening on South Bend this weekend for the Irish-Miami Hurricanes football game. Last year, the Old Boys, many of whom still play organized rugby, defeated the Irish.

CAREER PLANNING

Many students think a Notre Dame degree is all they need. Unfortunately, that isn't always the case. True, a degree from Notre Dame might get your foot in the door, but where you go from there will depend on many other factors. Mr. James Hunt, President of BDS, Incorporated will be honoring us with his insights as to what every undergraduate should be aware of when making decisions about their career.

Saint Mary's volleyball team rallies to beat Indianapolis

By EILEEN McGUIRE
Sports Writer

The Saint Mary's volleyball team defeated Division II school Indianapolis in a nail-biting match, 15-13, 12-15, 13-15, 15-8, 15-11 on Tuesday. It was the last home game of the season for Saint Mary's, who begins a five-game road trip to Boston over midsemester break.

The Belles were down two games to one but came back strong to win the final two games. In the third game, Saint Mary' jumped out to a 12-5 lead before falling, 13-15.

"It goes back to the inconsistent style of play we've been trying to work through," said Saint Mary's head coach Sue Medley, "but in the games where we started out on a bad streak, we didn't let them (the Greyhounds) run on it."

The Belles realized that they needed to work hard to win the next two games. In the fourth game, they gained a 5-0 lead on their way to a 15-8 win over the Greyhounds.

In the last game of the match, Saint Mary's seemed to have lost its concentration early in the game, falling behind 2-7. However, the Belles came back, playing as a team to tie the score, 8-8. In the forty minute see-saw battle, Saint Mary's came out victorious 15-11.

"We did a good job coming back and not giving up," said senior co-captain Katy Killilea. "We pulled together as a team. The bench was awesome, and we proved we can do it. It was a great way to end four years of volleyball at Saint Mary's."

During the game, sophomore Karen Lorton came up with 23 kills, 28 digs, four solo blocks and three service aces. Katy Killilea executed 20 kills and 23 digs, and freshman Ann Jagodzinski contributed 10 kills and two solo blocks.

"Most importantly," stated coach Medley, "we never gave up, we never quit. I think we're understanding the difference between trying and succeeding in setting our goals."

"The last home game was very exciting," said senior co-captain Michelle Sibliski. "I'm extremely happy we won. It was a great game because we worked as a team. It's hard to believe four years have gone by. The team made the last game very special."

"Basically, we're taking the opportunity to just play ball," said Medley. "Eastern Connecticut State is one of the best Division II programs in the country. We only need to play up to our ability and consistently and we will do well."

Off-Campus qualifies for Interhall playoffs

By RENE FERRAN
Sports Writer

The interhall playoff picture cleared slightly last night as Off-Campus clinched a berth and Keenan was eliminated.

ALUMNI 6 KEENAN 0

The two defenses shined in this contest played with in a 25 mph south wind. The game's only score was set up when at the Knight 33, Maier was flushed from the pocket and sacked from behind by Chris Jafford. The ball was knocked free, and Brendan Fitzpatrick recovered with 49 seconds left.

Jim Passinault then led the no-huddle offense to perfection, finding Pete Parten for 22 yards and Caretta for nine more. After two incompletions, with no time left, Passinault found Parten in the middle of the end zone for the touchdown

"On that last drive, I was thinking we had to suck it up and play like champions," said Parten. "We showed lots of composure out there."

OFF-CAMPUS 22 DILLON 0

The Off-Campus defense, led by Antoine Lark and John Schoen, rose to the occasion, holding Dillon to two first downs and nine total yards while the Crime rolled up 12 first downs and 202 yards on the ground. Phil Coury gained 90 yards on 15 runs and Brian Doherty 83 yards.

"The key to any halfback's success is his line, and our line really did a number on them tonight," said Coury.

The Crime scored just before halftime when Bob Allard lofted a pass over two Big Red defenders to Chuck Moser in the end zone from the 11. Off-Campus broke it open by driving 65 yards to start the half, capping the drive on Allard's one-yard sneak. The Crime's final touchdown came on its next possession on a Doherty 34-yard run.

"The line really gave me a lot of time to pass," said Allard (6-15, 57 yds, 1 int, 1 td). "I wasn't on tonight . . . but [my receiving corps] made up for it with spectacular catches."

SORIN 20 CARROLL 2

The Otters closed an undefeated season by overcoming an inspired Vermin attack. After a scoreless first quarter, Kevin Kramer found Vic Lombardi on a corner route with 5:20 in the second from 31 yards out. The TD was set up by a key fourth-down catch by Sean Ryan.

Sorin then took the second-half kickoff and scored on a three yard counter run by Ryan keyed by a Kramer-to-Lombardi 62-yard hook-up.

"I think our offense hit fifth gear tonight," said Lombardi. "We're definitely going into the playoffs on a high note."

Sorin's last score came when Kramer hit Tim O'Shaughnessy, who broke two tackles and dove into the end zone. Carroll's points came on a safety when Chris Estes was tackled in the end zone by a host of Vermin.

Miami

Amy from Farley and six of her friends pooled their tickets in order to get home early and to make some needed money. She's received offers for their student tickets ranging from $30-$100 apiece, with the typical caller offering $50.

"I'm hoping that other ticket sellers won't back down on their prices," says Amy, "because if they sell out, they'll ruin it for the rest of us who want to make a lot of money."

For every seller, though, there has to be a buyer. Lloyd, an off-campus senior, noted that the phone has been ringing off the hook in response to his ad to buy a student ticket. Most callers are asking $50, although a few have been in the $75-$100 range.

None of this should be any surprise to Bubba Cunningham, the Notre Dame ticket manager. His office fielded737 calls Tuesday, some for local concerts, but the majority of callers asking for tickets for the ND-Miami game.

One person thought the personal touch might get Bubba to send tickets. He wrote a letter claiming to be the biggest fan in Amsterdam, Ohio. As proof, he offered photos of his license plate ("ROSARY"), the roof of his car sporting a replica of the Golden Dome, and his silo, complete with golden dome. It wasn't enough; he didn't receive tickets.

Shane Hitzeman and Matt Helminiak have run an ad for Miami tickets for several days for friends from Boston College. Tickets selling for as high as $125 last week now are $50.

"The price is dropping because people were holding out hoping demand would go up, and it just didn't happen," said Matt.

Another Grace resident is in the market "to bring buyers and sellers together in a friendly manner." He's finding also that the market has collapsed recently. His ad also asks for GA's, but these are too hard to come by at the moment.

"I expect the market to improve greatly this weekend at the pep rally and before game time," he said. "Hopefully, GA's will be more available with the influx of alumni."

Not everyone, however, believes in the almighty power of the dollar.

"There's no way I'd sell my Miami ticket," said senior Chris Sullivan. "No way I'd jeopardize missing this, or any, game."

"There's no way I'm going to miss the Miami game," said junior Katherine McCarthy. "It's definitely more important than getting home early."

Reds enjoy 2-0 Series lead after come-from-behind victory over A's CINCINNATI (AP) — Lose Game 1? No problem. But lose the first two games of the World Series, and even the Oakland Athletics consider themselves in a bit of a spot.

After the Cincinnati Reds won 5-4 in 10 innings on Wednesday night to take a 2-0 lead in the World Series, the concept of losing dawned on the A's for the first time.

"What are you going to do?" third baseman Carney Lansford said. "You're either going to crawl in a hole and let them win or you stay and fight it out.

"We're the defending world champions. I'm not going to give anybody anything. If I'm going to go down I'm going to go down fighting."

Up and down the Oakland locker room after Game 1, player after player declared the A's alive and well on their way to defending their World Series title. It was an unruffled room.

After Game 2, the A's looked a little more disbelieving, a little more shocked. They knew they had lost a game they could have won.

They had been unable to deliver an early knockout, and they allowed the Reds to hang around long enough to win on points.

"We played better ball tonight than we did last night," Lansford said. "We pushed and pushed and pushed and we just couldn't get that big hit late in the game, and they did."

Twelve of the first 23 A's to bat Wednesday night reached safely, and Oakland scored four times. But the other seven stranded runners represented wasted opportunities.

The story of Game 2 was actually the same story as Game 1, in which Oakland stranded 11, going 0-for-9 with runners in scoring position.

This time the A's stranded two runners in the first, third and fourth innings. In the second, seventh and eighth, they stranded another runner each time.

"As far as the offense is concerned, we got it going early today, but then all of a sudden nothing happened," first baseman Mark McGwire said. "That's not us. That's not the Oakland A's.

"We've got to score in more than a couple of innings in a game and take the pressure off our pitching staff and keep them from having to shut them out the rest of the way. I mean that's tough to do."

Nothing went right in Game 1, so it was easy to shrug off that one.

Pacers ride second-half spurt to beat Mavericks

By KEN TYSIAC
Associate Sports Editor

The Indianapolis Pacers cruised to a 111-91 victory over the Dallas Mavericks after opening the second half with a 27-8 run which ran them out to a 30-point lead in an NBA exibition game Wednesday night at the Joyce ACC.

Forward Chuck Person led the way for the Pacers with 24 points, while Reggie Miller added 17 and Rick Smits chipped in 16 points and 10 rebounds.

The Mavericks, playing without injured stars Rolando Blackman (sore right knee) and Alex English (pulled hamstring), were led by center Roy Tarpley, who scored 14 points andadded13rebounds.

Indianapolis went with its starters for much of the game while Dallas opted to give some of its substitutes a chance to play in the absence of Blackman and English. The Pacers' starters averaged 28 minutes apiece, compared to 21 1/2 minutes for the Mavericks.

"For them (Dallas), this was a game to see what different players could do, since they didn't have those guys," said Smits. "They didn't put the emphasis on winning tonight."

The Pacers, who did put more emphasis on winning, turned the tempo up a notch in the second half. Point guard Vern Fleming took advantage of numerous Dallas defensive lapses to drive the middle and convert easy layups and dish to Miller.

Indianapolis took control of the game in the early going and never let Dallas get back in the game. The Pacers scored the first six points of the game, and increased their lead to 31-23 at halftime. By halftime it was 58-45, and then Indianapolis put the game away with the early second-half explosion.

Still, the Pacers weren't entirely pleased with their performance.

"Our only weakness seemed to be our rebounding. That was a definite weakness," Smits said, "but we still have got a bunch of (exhibition) games left and we will just have to progress step by step."

"The game turned out pretty good, we played excellent individual and team defense," Person said. "We ran the court really well, but we still gave up too many second shots."

For Dallas, Randy White added 12 points and Lafayette Lever, acquired from Denver in the off-season, pitched in 11 to go with four assists. But the biggest cheer from the 2,362 fans at the JACC went up when Indiana graduate Steve Alford, who led the Hoosiers to a National Championship in 1986 and the United States Olympic team to a gold medal in 1984, scored his first basket. Alford finished with six points for the Mavericks.

Still, the game belonged to the Pacers, and Person credits his team's success to an unselfishness which has surfaced this preseason.

"Each guy has to be willing to pass the ball to the other guy," Person said. "Last year each guy was trying to make himself look better, but this year we're concentrating on making the other guy look better."

Students flood market with Miami tickets

By RENE FERRAN

Eighty-five dollars was the magic figure for LuAnn, a freshman in Knott, to sell her Miami ticket. She wanted to get back to Pittsburgh in time to catch her friends before they went back to school. It took seven callers responding to her ad before finding her price.

"I'm going to throw a party Saturday afternoon with my friends to watch the game," LuAnn said in defense. "I treasure my friendships back home...and I miss them."

With the weather cooling off, many club teams at Notre Dame are heating up.

The Sailing Club sent teams to two regattas this weekend and brought home two third-place trophies.

The Irish sent a team to Columbus, Ohio for the Ohio State Fall Regatta. In the A division, the boat was skippered by freshman Michael Kane, with Laura Scully serving as crew. Patti Losinske skippered the B boat, and Susie Tobin was the crew. Overall, the team finished third out of 18 boats.

"I was pleased," said Kane. "I've done offshore sailing for years, but it's taken a while to get used to lake sailing."

At the Lake Forest Regatta on Lake Michigan, the Irish suffered a bad break which cost them first place.

The A boat, skippered by senior sailing aficionado Watts Hudgens, suffered a freak capsize while leading its race.

"We were in first place by a good bit when we capsized," said
