Roemer defeats Hiler in close race

(AP) - Democrat Timothy Roemer, the first challenger to defeat an Indiana congressional incumbent in a general election since 1982, said Wednesday his victory over GOP Rep. John Hiler resulted from an accumulation of political punches, not a knockout blow.

"I don't think there was any one issue," Roemer said.

Hiler largely absolved the Bush administration of any important role in his defeat election day, but admitted the president's reneging on his campaign tax pledge didn't help.

"I think we died the death of a thousand nicks," Hiler said.

Roemer, 34, launched a television advertising blitz late last month suggesting Hiler may have used his position on the House Banking Committee to benefit the Farmer's State Bank of Wyatt, in which Hiler owns part interest.

Hiler, won election in 1980, defeating House Whip John Brademas. He faced strong challenges during off-year elections throughout the 1980s.

Four years ago, Hiler won reelection by 47 votes in a recount over Democrat Thomas Ward. Hiler charged back in a 1988 rematch when George Bush led the Republican ticket and beat Ward by 18,000 votes.

The last incumbent House member to lose in Indiana was Republican Joel Deckard, who lost the 8th District seat to Democratic challenger Frank McCloskey.

Vice President Dan Quayle visited the 3rd District on Monday, urging the party faithful to turn out for Hiler. But the 37-year-old LaPorte native lost his home county by nearly 2,000 votes and polled only 40 percent of the vote in St. Joseph County.

Indiana's nine other congressional incumbents all won reelection. Winners and losers alike complained of mean-spirited campaign tactics.

"My opponent ran a negative and not always honest campaign against me, not a positive campaign on his ideas," said John Johnson, the unsuccessful GOP challenger in the 5th District. "Unfortunately, the deck is stacked for incumbents."

Democratic incumbent Jim Jontz defeated Johnson, a Valparaiso businessman, to win a third term in what had been projected as the state's closest congressional race.

Democrat Phil Sharp of Muncie said his successful campaign for a 10th term showed voters are fed up with spiteful campaigners. "I hope those who run negative campaigns in the future will feel there is peril," Sharp said.

Sharp and Republican challenger Michael Pence, an Indianapolis attorney, had called each other liars during a vitriolic 2nd District campaign. Pence first challenged Sharp in 1988.

Students should beware of bogus financial aid services

By CHRISTINE WALSH
Business Editor

Students should be wary of subscribing to the College Financial Aid Service, a 'private scholarship service', which has mailed applications to a large number of Notre Dame students this week, according to Joseph Russo, director of Financial Aid.

A number of students received information through the mail Wednesday from the College Financial Aid Service, promising that for a $45 'research fee' the service would provide students with a list of private organizations to which the student could apply for scholarships.

The Financial Aid Office at Saint Mary's has gotten no calls from students saying that they have received mailings from the service.

According to Mary Nucciarone, assistant director of Financial Aid at Saint Mary's, another scholarship service called U.S. Agencies was soliciting to students in search of financial assistance during October Break. U.S. Agencies often sends a representative to students' homes to consult with students and their families on available scholarships for a fee of $50 per month.

Students should exhibit extreme caution when deciding whether or not to use such services, said Nucciarone. "All information concerning financial aid is publicly available and free. There should be no scholarship information that private scholarship organizations have that is not available elsewhere," Nucciarone said.

A similar wave of bogus mailings offering financial aid opportunities (going by the names: Academic Council on Financial Assistance and National Scholarship Resources Administration, Inc.) was received by Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students at about the same time last year. There is good reason to believe that the recently received scholarship service is a fraud, said Russo.

The College Scholarship service brochure claims that it will take data from your 'Private Sector Financial Aid Form' (included in the package of information), enter it into their computer data bank and "compare your skills, activities, and interests to all 180,000 known private sector awards."

After a match is found, the student will receive "an exhaustive, custom report," including 15 to 20 likely sources of financial aid tailored to the particular individual. "We will help you get your share of the more than SEVEN BILLION DOLLARS..."

so the brochure states.

The service guarantees that if the student "applies to each source furnished by College Financial Aid Service and does not receive at least $100 by Aug. 31, 1991, your research fee will be returned to you." However, the brochure states that the guarantee is valid only if the student sends in the 'Private Sector Financial Aid Form' postmarked on or before Nov. 30, 1990.

If students do receive a response from these scholarship organizations, it is likely that the lists received will contain

Revolution Day upset by Red Square gunman

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail Gorbachev sought political harmony by joining a Revolution Day march Wednesday but the mood was broken when a man brandishing a hunting rifle fired two shots in Red Square before he was hauled off.

A group of plainclothesmen wrestled with the gunman, who shot in the air and into the ground before he was carried away. No one was reported hurt, and the chairman of the KGB security police indicated the man was deranged.

Besides the traditional military parade in Red Square, hard-line Communists and radical reformers marched in Moscow and other Soviet cities shouting slogans and carrying banners critical of Gorbachev's moderate reforms.

Gorbachev, struggling to forge a mainstream consensus in an increasingly polarized society, said his reforms were "understood and accepted by the people."

"We all now stand a real chance to transform our society into a normal, healthy, just and ultimately prosperous society through the second great

INSIDE COLUMN

Gulf crisis is not just tanks and tents

Last week President Bush said that if provoked, he would attack Iraq without hesitation. He denied that he was preparing the country for war, just that he was doing his job. Claiming that he's trying to it resolve it peacefully, he later added, "I don't like being on the defense. I like being on the offense."

Florentine Hoelker
Assoc. News Editor

He seems intent on proving this—last night I heard that Bush is sending thousands more troops to Iraq from Europe. By Christmas there will be 300,000 troops there.

Bush has compared Saddam Hussein to Hitler in order to prove his point that we're fighting for freedom. At first I believed him. I don't anymore. Nothing is that simple. The whole Iraqi crisis involves so many things—ideology, religion, economics, politics, and I think mainly, oil.

I have no intention of belaboring this point, but we should not forget that the issue is incredibly complicated, and that it affects us in many ways. I'm sure we've all heard of someone who's gone to the Mideast. Some of us may have had someone close go—a brother, sister, cousin, or friend.

My brother Ed is there. I got a letter from him the other day, describing first-hand what it's like in the deserts of Saudi Arabia. The troops do wash by hand, they all live in tents, and it's terribly hot. My brother said that "life in the desert is not all that great, but it's not as difficult as the press makes it seem."

"No booze, nudity, or women on the beach—plenty of sand though."

He joked about the conditions of the "bathrooms" there (I won't go into details, but suffice to say it sounds pretty gross), saying that he's trying to keep a little humor with his day-to-day routine so as not to go crazy in the heat.

He misses his wife and family. Everyone there must. "There is some talk of leaving by February," he said, "but I don't set any hope on it. I'll leave when I get on the plane." Ed always was terribly practical.

"So far, being here is bearable, but I doubt I'll feel the same way in six months."

I wonder why he's really there. It makes me terribly angry and frustrated sometimes, wondering exactly why there are thousands of soldiers there, why thousands more are going, how long they'll be there.

It's easy for us to remove ourselves from the issue when we read about it in the paper and see it on television. But then Bush says he'll send in more troops, and more, and he won't hesitate to send them to their deaths in the fight for what he calls "freedom."

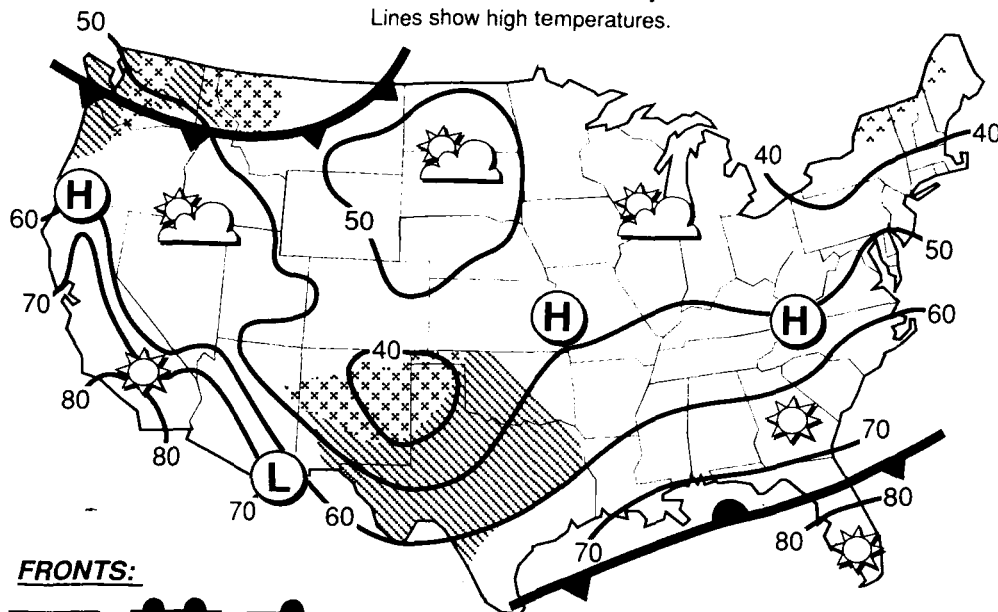

I'm frightened for us as a nation and frightened for the troops. I don't believe we're there for the reason Bush says we're there, but I don't know exactly what I can do about it yet.

I just hope Ed gets home.

William Bennett is resigning as the first director of the Office of National Drug Control Strategy after leading what the White House called "a turnaround" in the battle against the drug scourge. Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said President Bush will formally accept Bennett's resignation in a ceremony at the White House on Thursday. The position was created in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. Published reports have suggested that Bennett's replacement may be former District of Columbia superior court judge Reggie Walton, who is now associate drug control director for state and local affairs in Bennett's office.

A reluctant witness jolted the Central Park jogger trial Wednesday when she said defendant Kharey Wise told her he had fondled the legs of the woman he is accused of raping last year. On cross-examination by Wise's lawyer, Colin Moore, Jackson testified, saying that Wise told her he "held and fondled" the woman's legs. Moore attacked Jackson as a liar. He suggested she was testifying for money. The 30-year-old victim, who testified at the trial last week, was left near death in Central Park. She has returned to work as an investment banker, although hampered by vision and balance problems.

ND United Nations Club receives awards

By BECKY RITZERT
News Writer

Members of Notre Dame's Model United Nations Club recently received two awards for their participation in the American United Nations Conference held in Chicago during fall break.

Mike Faehner won the award for "Best Justice in the Court of Justice" and as a team, Faehner and David Certo were voted "Best Delegation."

According to Faehner, "About thirty schools from the mid-west participated in this model U.N. simulation. Each school represented a country."

Student participants voted in order to determine the award recipients. "Our fellow students judged us," said Faehner. "The whole conference is basically run by students," he said.

According to Faehner, the awards brought significant recognition to the new club.

"This was the fourth year of our (club's) existence. Last year we attended a conference in Washington and one in New York, but this was the first time we won anything to speak of," he said.

Faehner said ten members of the approximately fifty-member club attended the conference. He described the activities as "fun learning" and added, "a lot of people did it in high school and they want to continue here."

Although no extensive preparation was necessary, Faehner mentioned the need to be familiar with current issues.

"We are given a list of issues and we do independent research so we are prepared. For example, I was on the Security Council, so I researched the Persian Gulf situation," explained Faehner.

During Easter Break, the club plans to attend an international conference at which more than 200 schools will be represented.

Democracy in Chile a transition, says analyst

BY MEREDITH MCCULLOUGH
News Writer

Transition from a dictatorship to democracy can be a difficult, lengthy process, but the new government in Chile has the prudence and patience to survive, said Genaro Arriagada of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.

Arriagada, a renown author and political analyst, met with Notre Dame students yesterday afternoon at a lecture titled "The Reworking of Democracy in Chile: Roadblocks and Detours."

As an active participant in the democratic transition in Chile, Arriagada is seen as an expert in party ideology and the role of the military.

"Every transition is very difficult and very different," Arriagada said. Chile's problems differ from those in Brazil, Argentina, or any other Latin American country.

He explained that Chile has had difficulties "since moment one on the fifth of October, 1988" when the Christian Democratic Party defeated military dictator Pinochet in the country's first democratic election.

Arriagada said that when Pinochet lost his executive position he warned that the democratic victory was meaningless. The new party had "the ceremony of power but would not receive any real power."

Before actually leaving office, Pinochet created a new political order which would make the transition to democracy even more burdensome. This new order included a permanent position for Pinochet as Commander-in-Chief of the military.

According to Arriagada, Pinochet left the new democracy with "one of the most awful constitutions and legal frameworks to live with."

Arriagada defined the new political order as having four main features: a weak president of the republic, a parliament with enough power to blockade laws and amendments, an army inside the state, and a strong judicial power out of the control of the democratic force. Pinochet wanted to make sure that he would still have some leverage in the country regardless of democratic influence.

To further complicate the transition, the new president of the republic, Patricio Alwin, was permitted only limited power to nominate certain critical officials. Pinochet filled these same positions before he left office.

Arriagada said the Chilean Supreme Court "has been one of the most awful things during the Pinochet years. They refused to give protection to the rights of the people - which is their duty."

In the last nine months of his rule, Pinochet managed to appoint nine new members to the Supreme Court in an attempt to retain further control over the new government.

In spite of the restrictions imposed by the current Constitution and laws, Arriagada believes that the democracy is not without hope.

Arriagada sees Chile as a nation of survivors who have already overcome a troublesome past. The current government is "working so well together" and is able to provide its citizens with a strong sense of legitimacy.

He said that in the sixteen years under Pinochet the Chilean people have come to realize that transition to a new political structure is always difficult. There will always be clash between the previous legal order of the country and the new system. "We must be prudent at every step."

Arriagada looks forward to a strong democracy in 1993. "We can trust that we will survive democracy."

The lecture was sponsored by the Kellogg Institute.

Blood drive scheduled for donors

Special to the Observer

The South Bend Medical Foundation in coordination with the Center for Social Concerns has organized a campus wide blood drive this semester.

The South Bend Medical Foundation provides blood for all patients in St. Joseph County. Only 48% of the population in St. Joseph County are eligible to donate blood, and only 5.5% actually donate.

Forty to fifty units of blood are needed per day for average hospital usage.

The Notre Dame University students, faculty and employees contributed over 1500 units of blood last year. Several remote blood drives were held in dorms and various social organizations.

In November and December, drives are scheduled to be in the following dorms:

In Nov.:
•Thursday, 8, Badin Hall
•Tuesday, 13, Sorin Hall
•Wed-Thurs, 14-15, Morrissey
•Wed-Thurs, 28-29, St. Edward's

In Dec.:

Democrats make gains in Sun Belt

(AP) Democrats boasted Wednesday of a Sun Belt election breakthrough that could buoy their presidential prospects in 1992. Republicans gained two late upsets to go with a win in California and claimed, "we didn't do too bad" despite mid-term setbacks.

Still, a Democratic celebration was in full swing.

"George Bush is in a slide. There's absolutely no question about it," said Ron Brown, chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

The White House saw it differently, as a midterm election with something for everyone, and said it could not be interpreted as a referendum on Bush's popularity anyway.

For winners everywhere, the day after brought exultation. "An overpowering moment," said John Engler, elected governor of Michigan in a long, late count over Democratic incumbent James Blanchard.

From the disappointed, there were generally gracious comments. Said Democratic Rep. Jim Bates, trailing narrowly in California, "If the voters decide to make a change, that's what democracy is all about."

After weeks of talk that voters were angry about Congress' performance and ready to make changes, about 96 percent of incumbents won re-election.

Senate Democratic Leader George Mitchell and House Speaker Thomas Foley, their majorities strengthened in the 102nd Congress, went to work on an agenda for the next two years.

Foley said it would include "tax fairness," as well as legislative initiatives for health care and education.

"The debate over the budget was the best thing that happened," said Brown of the October political free-for-all in which Bush abandoned his no-new-taxes campaign pledge.

In the ensuing scramble, Democrats jumped on a theme of tax fairness, depicting themselves as defenders of the middle class and Republicans as protectors of the rich.

A day after the polls closed, there were three races unsettled.

Arizona's gubernatorial contest appeared headed for a runoff after neither Democrat Terry Goddard nor Republican Fife Symington amassed 50 percent of the vote in a three-way race.

Two California House races were too close to call, both involving Democratic incumbents. In a third race that was decided during the day, Republicans held onto a GOP seat.

In all, Democrats emerged from the elections with a 56-44 majority in the Senate, a gain of one seat. They were adding nine seats to their House majority for a likely edge of 268-167. Their major congressional disappointment: GOP Sen. Jesse Helms' bigger-than-expected re-election in North Carolina.

Democrats took seven governorships away from Republicans, including Bush's home state of Texas, where Ann Richards vanquished Clayton Williams, and Florida, where Lawton Chiles ousted Gov. Bob Martinez.

Republicans fared poorly in the effort to win back the 4th District, which Quayle represented from 1976-80. Democratic incumbent Jill Long captured 60 percent of the vote in defeating Baptist minister Richard Hawks of Fort Wayne.

"I think it was a result of hard work and coming back to the district," Long said.

In other races:

— Democratic incumbent Lee Hamilton beat Floyd Coates of Scottsburg in the 9th District.

— Republican incumbent John Myers defeated Democratic challenger John — McCloskey defeated GOP nominee Richard Mourdock of Evansville in the 8th District.

— Republican incumbent Dan Burton beat Democrat James Fadely in the 6th District.

— In Indianapolis' 10th District, Democratic incumbent Andrew Jacobs Jr. defeated Republican Janos Horvath.

— Democratic incumbent Peter Visclosky beat former GOP state senator William Costas in the 1st District.

Economy was key issue for voters

WASHINGTON (AP) — An array of economic concerns aggravated by a heavy dose of voter exasperation left some political careers in ruins Wednesday and others on the brink.

"Economic concerns are paramount in the minds of people," said Frank Newport, editor-in-chief of the Gallup Poll. "The deficit, savings and loans, increases in taxes, recession, worries about unemployment — that's what people talk about" when asked open-ended questions about their discontent.

Although abortion did not play a consistent or decisive role in the elections, it was mentioned much more frequently in exit polls this year than in 1988 in response to questions about what mattered most to people.

Andrew Kohut, president of Princeton Survey Research Associates Group, attributed the higher frequency to the Supreme Court's 1989 Webster decision giving states more authority to restrict abortion.

"It wasn't the dominant issue in every race, but it was in the top tier in most of the key races," Kohut said. "It's now an important basis by which people make choices about candidates."

In most parts of the country, exit polls — mirroring national polls — suggested that economic themes were the dominant influence on voter decision-making.

The themes took a variety of turns.

Six incumbent governors were ousted, among them three who were blamed for higher taxes and two who suffered from the effects of slumping economies. The same problem almost spelled doom for Maine Gov. John McKernan.

Mich. Governor, other incumbents lose

CHICAGO (AP) — Voters delivered a knockout punch to incumbents in the nation's mid-section, ousting four governors and one U.S. senator — the only senator in the nation to lose a re-election bid.

Two veteran Democrats and two freshman Republicans were defeated Tuesday in heated gubernatorial contests. And in a stunning upset in the Senate, Minnesota GOP incumbent Rudy Boschwitz lost his bid for a third term.

In the most tumultuous race, Minnesota Gov. Rudy Perpich was narrowly defeated by Republican Arne Carlson, who was a 11th-hour replacement after the GOP candidate withdrew amid charges of sexual improprieties.

In Michigan, two-term Gov. James Blanchard lost by a razor-thin margin to Republican state Senate Majority Leader

John Engler. The governor is the first Michigan chief executive to be booted from office in nearly 30 years.

In two other contests, Republicans blamed for higher taxes lost bids for second terms. In Kansas, State Treasurer Joan Finney defeated Gov. Mike Hayden. And in Nebraska, businessman Ben Nelson eked out a win over Kay Orr, the state's first woman governor.

Some political analysts speculate the gubernatorial losses are tied to the office itself.

"The governors were a lot more vulnerable than legislators," said Burdett Loomis, a University of Kansas political science professor. "Governors have to deal with the fiscal problems on the ground. That certainly may mean raising taxes, cutting budgets, things likely to be unpopular."

"Someone like Blanchard over eight years has done a lot of unpopular things," he said. "Hayden created a number of enemies. Perpich was seen as flaky and ticked off a variety of people. The potential to lose is much greater with the governors. You're much more accountable for your actions."

In two of three gubernatorial races in which taxes dominated, GOP incumbents lost.

revolution," Gorbachev proclaimed from atop Lenin's Mausoleum on the 73rd anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution.

Gray skies and snow flurries cast a somber mood as the Soviet armed forces sent 8,500 troops and 250 armored vehicles thundering across the cobblestones of Red Square.

For the first time, the Soviets showed off a mobile SS-25 intercontinental ballistic missile capable of hurling a nuclear warhead 6,300 miles. The system has been deployed since 1985.

The theme was peace, however, and Gorbachev joined his political foes, Russian President Boris Yeltsin and Moscow Mayor Gavril Popov, in leaving the mausoleum and joining a civilian march that began after the military parade.

It was the first time Soviet leaders actually walked in the march, the state news agency

Tass reported.

The three men, along with Defense Minister Dmitri Yazov, Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov and others laid red flowers at Lenin's tomb.

The mood was broken by the markedly conservative tone of the subsequent civilian marchers consisting of an estimated 100,000 marchers organized by Moscow Communist Party chief Yuri Prokofiev.

Some carried portraits of dictator Josef Stalin, whom Gorbachev scorned in his remarks, and two carried photographs of naked women, suggesting variously that current leaders had ravished or neglected the country. Other banners said:

"President: In our house, there is no butter, no meat and no peace."

"Gorbachev, you are scoring points abroad, but losing at home."

About four minutes after Gorbachev went back on top of the Lenin mausoleum, two shots were heard above the marching music.

Women's health discussed in SMC lecture

By RENEE YOUNG
News Writer

The civil rights movement of the sixties and the women's movement of the seventies have led to the women's health movement of the eighties and nineties, according to Dr. Gail English of the Saint Mary's Health Center.

Women's health was the primary topic of a panel discussion held last night at Carroll Auditorium. The panel consisted of Dr. Gail English, general practitioner, and Dr. Nancy Keller-Madden, local gynecologist and obstetrician.

Also on the panel was WellnesSMC commissioner Molly Bringardner, WellnesSMC member Katie Jones and Saint Mary's Health Center intern, Jessica Trame. These three collected questions from the audience to ask both doctors.

The discussion was sponsored by the Saint Mary's Health Center and WellnesSMC.

Gloria Chelminiak, director of the Saint Mary's Health Center, said that the group's goal was to address the topics of preventive medicine and overall awareness of mind and body.

One of the main points of the evening was that women must now take their health seriously.

According to Dr. English, there is no quick fix or instant cure for health. The only way to prevent illness is to learn to balance proper nutrition, sleep, and exercise during college, creating habits for life, she said.

Dr. Madden teaches that by the age of eighteen a woman should see a gynecologist for a pap-smear in order to determine any irregularities in the cervix area. Also, women should be giving themselves monthly breast examinations after each period, when the breast is least bloated, to detect lumps.

A warning was given to those who smoke and drink. According to Dr. Madden, although drinking may increase sexual desire, it decreases performance. Smoking also promotes infertility in women.

Alcohol also plays a key role in the majority of date rapes, Madden said. Any student who is raped or sexually attacked should report immediately to St. Joseph's Medical Center without bathing and/or changing clothes, according to Madden. There a doctor will examine the victim and steps will be taken to prevent disease and pregnancy. Afterward, a counselor will be appointed to the student. The police will be given a report only with the consent of the victim.

Other subjects such as toxic shock syndrome, birth control, PMS, and douching were discussed. Director Gloria Chelminiak extended an invitation to any students who felt the need to discuss these issues and encouraged students to visit the Health Center. Chelminiak promised complete confidentiality to all inquirers.

companies and scholarship sponsors which no longer exist, said Russo.

"The deadline is a means for forcing students to make a quick decision," Russo said.

"Some students may find the needle in a haystack, but generally they (scholarship services) should not be trusted," said Russo. "I don't know of a single Notre Dame student who sent in money (to scholarship organizations) and got a dime."

The brochures tend to be "pretty slick. There is a 'sophisticated' financial aid form (in the mailed information package) and the service even has a postage-paid business reply envelope and a toll-free number. The letterhead for the organization has a Washington D.C. address, which also makes it look official," said Russo. The presentation of the service looks professional, which may entice students to try it, he said.

Russo called the 800-number in the College Financial Aid Service brochure Wednesday morning and said that when he asked to speak to the director of the service (whose signature is on the letter that was sent to the students), the person who answered the phone did not recognize the name.

According to Russo, when he finally spoke to someone connected with the service, the individual could not answer his basic questions concerning the operation of the service. Russo was able to ascertain that the College Financial Aid Service has been in existence about a year, but little else. Furthermore, the man from the service said that he did not know and could not tell how the service had acquired their mailing list.

When The Observer called the College Financial Aid Service through its 800-number on Wednesday afternoon, it was connected to their 'automated customer service line'. Information was available by using a touch-tone phone on topic choices such as:

- Filling out the 'Private Sector Financial Aid Form'

- Details of the money-back guarantee

- How the service works

- Aid for international students

- Status on already submitted financial aid forms

- How to receive a new copy of the financial aid form

When pressing '3' for general information, the recording repeated the same option menu. After several tries, a recording finally spoke about 'general information' concerning the service. However, the information provided was no more than what was already sent in the package received in the mail.

The recordings did not provide any other names or numbers to contact in the event we had questions which could not be answered by the recordings.

It is difficult to prosecute these scholarship organizations, said Russo. In the past the U.S. Postal Service became involved in the matter, but in the case of "marginally ethical" organizations, the best the Postal Service can do is charge the organization with 'misuse of federal mail' and prevent the organizations from soliciting through the U.S. mail, said Russo.

Mayor of South Bend speaks on area crime

By MITCH FREEHAUF
News Writer

Joseph Kernan, mayor of South Bend, addressed the crime situation of the South Bend area and detailed what steps the local government and police department were taking to reduce it.

Kernan, a 1968 Notre Dame graduate serving his third term as mayor, pointed out last night that the South Bend area was not necessarily experiencing an increase in the crime rate, but rather an escalation of the violence involved in the crimes.

He attributed the growing violence to the drug problem, noting that today's criminals are more willing to use excessive force and are better equipped to do so.

The mayor stressed that public safety is "at the top of the list when it comes to the priorities of the city administration," but that fiscal restraints require careful assessment of the law enforcement agency in order to do as much as possible with the money allotted.

Kernan spoke on many programs that have been started in the hopes of making South Bend safer.

Programs such as Safetyville, DARE (a drug abuse education program), and the Juvenile Aid program are designed to educate South Bend's youth about how they can avoid crime and allows them to see officers as friends.

In areas more prone to crime, the police department has created a system called "direct patrols" in which crime areas are heavily patrolled, Kernan said. In the seven months that the program has been in operation, "direct patrols" has been very effective.

Officers in the uniform division have begun patrolling the downtown area more frequently on foot and on bicycle in an effort to let them be a visible presence to the public and potential criminals, he said.

According to Mayor Kernan, two of South Bend's most effective crime prevention programs are the "Crimestoppers" program and the Neighborhood Watch program.

"Crimestoppers" shows police cases on television and uses rewards to encourage citizens to anonymously phone in leads. The neighborhood watch program has been particularly effective in reducing crime by fifty percent in some areas.

Kernan said, "I believe that South Bend has one of the finest police departments in the state, and I would credit it to the dedicated, able officers who do a tremendous job."

"However, they can't do it alone," he said, "and that's why we turn to schools and neighborhoods in hopes of implementing a much broader base of community involvement in helping South Bend become a safer place to live."

The lecture was sponsored by the Hesburgh Program in Public Service.

Professor discusses humans and nature

By JEFF CABOTAJE
News Writer

In acknowledging their insignificance in nature, humans simultaneously discover much about themselves, said Professor Kimberly Blaeser, visiting American Studies professor.

Yesterday's lecture, titled "Homo sapiens and the Landscape: Tracking Nature, Discovering Ourselves," focused on the relationship between human beings and the landscape. "That we are referred to as Homo sapiens," said Blaeser, "in itself relegates to us a less grand position than we often envisioned for ourselves as but one of many distinct species."

She further explained how humans tend to evaluate other species as lower creatures with only instinct as their guide. Yet, only through losing the self in the realm of nature does one discover the spiritual self.

Blaeser cited works of several nature writers, such as Thoreau, Barry Lopez and Annie Dillard, explaining their expression of this self-discovery through their writings. She described five phases in the process traced by many nature writers in their search for a relationship with nature.

•The first phase was conscious engagement of nature in which man turns away from his own society and willingly escapes to nature for solace and meaning. This escape must be one of attentiveness and deliberate receptiveness, said Blaeser.

•The second phase, barrier frustration, described the barriers alienating humans from nature. According to Blaeser, intellect and science limit humans to be mere observers in the "stadium of life." The frustrated observer is fully aware of these barriers.

•Relinquishing control, the third phase, demanded the rejection of the illusion of absolute control over nature and the acceptance of its ongoing mysteries.

•In spiritual expansion, the fourth phase, natural writers find themselves experiencing a heightened awareness and ecstasy about nature.

•The final phase, integration effort, asked the question "How can these experiences advance others' movement toward enlightenment about nature?"

For many naturalists, said Blaeser, the process of writing becomes the process of integrating nature into others' lives. "Their tales of the journey of landscapes tell the tale of Homo sapiens who, in tracking nature, inadvertently discover much about themselves."

Blaeser stated that mankind tends to alienate the self from nature, and this, she believed, has intensified during the last 50 years.

Gynecologist speaks about menopause

By ANNMARIE ZELL
News Writer

The best way to control the irritating and serious side effects of menopause, in most cases, is a combination of estrogen and progesterone treatment, according to Dr. Karen Bartscht.

Bartscht, a practicing obstetrician and gynecologist and assistant professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the University of Michigan, discussed the many problems associated with menopause and how they are especially relevant today when women must struggle with menopause on the job. "It's an exciting time for us (women). We are living one-third of our lives after menopause," she said in her lecture titled, Memos and Menopause.

The problems of menopause range from small irritants to life-threatening injuries. Many women experience hot flashes, which consist of blushing and sweating, mood swings, insomnia, loss of resilience of the skin, increased risk of cardiovascular diseases and strokes.

An even more serious problem is osteoporosis.

After menopause women lose 3% of their bone matter each year. Commonly problematic bones are the wrist and hip. One-third of women who fracture their hips will die, due to clotting complications. One-fourth of the women with hip fractures will end up in a long-term care facility because it is the type of injury which takes away a woman's ability to perform daily tasks.

Another problem associated with osteoporosis is the collapse of the spinal column characterized as 'the hump back' which not only is unattractive but also causes lower back and neck problems.

Menopausal changes can be very annoying and irritating to women on the job. Hot flashes can break a women's concentration while she is working.

Other symptoms such as insomnia are not healthy and can affect the way a woman feels about herself and the world. Increased risk of heart disease, stroke, and osteoporosis are a serious situation for women in all walks of life.

Bartscht recommends estrogen treatment to deal with the side effects of menopause. However, steady estrogen use over time has been known to cause cancer of the uterine lining because it causes the cells of the uterine lining to divide. Fortunately, progesterone treatment, in addition to estrogen, controls the multiplication of the uterine cells and greatly diminishes the risk of cancer.

Although Bartscht is a proponent of hormonal therapy, she acknowledges, "It's a big commitment and every woman should do what is right for her."

The estrogen and progesterone treatment does have its negative side effects. There is often irregular bleeding during the first six to eight months after the hormones are first administered. However, every woman is different—one treatment of modality might be right for one woman and not for another. Genetic background, general health, past medical history all factor into the menopausal experience of a woman.

Gulf war games

Wholesale Club bought out Wal-Mart acquires chain for $21 per share

BENTONVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Wal-Mart Stores Inc. has entered into a merger agreement to acquire The Wholesale Club Inc. for about $170 million, the companies announced.

Wal-Mart President, David Glass, said Tuesday the Indianapolis-based Wholesale Club's outlets and operations would complement Wal-Mart's Sam's Wholesale Club Division and give the discount chain a significant presence in new markets.

The Wholesale Club operates 27 membership clubs in Indianapolis, Fort Wayne and Mishawaka, Ind., as well as Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota. Sales for the six-month period ended Aug. 4 totaled $333 million.

Wal-Mart operates 141 Sam's Wholesale outlets and 1,503 Wal-Mart discount stores in 34 states.

A statement by the companies said Wal-Mart would acquire The Wholesale Club for the equivalent of $21 a share. With about 8 million shares outstanding, the deal is worth $170 million, said a spokesman for The Wholesale Club.

Buddhist monk worth $400 mil.

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Hsing Yun fled China in 1949 with only his grey robe and cotton shoes. Today, he is a millionaire monk, praised by some as a philanthropist, reviled by others as a mail-order preacher.

He has more than 400,000 disciples in Taiwan, 27 monasteries around the world and assets valued at more than $400 million.

In two decades, Hsing Yun has fashioned a Buddhist empire that stretches from Taiwan to Australia and the United States. He runs a temple in Las Vegas and hopes to build a university in Los Angeles.

Last year, the 63-year-old monk returned to China as a philanthropist, drawing big crowds as he donated handsomely to dozens of temples.

His influence, popularity and money have won him a meeting with China's president, Yang Shangkun, despite the fact that the Communist Party strictly controls religion.

To critics, who feel Buddhists should be austere, Hsing Yun is a mail-order preacher who makes a fortune from contributors seeking a fast route to Nirvana. He operates his temples as a big business, they say, raking in profits with special prayer services for the wealthy.

Supporters say Hsing Yun offers free prayer services and free Buddhist education to the poor, who include about 500 students at his six Buddhist colleges.

They also praise the monk's political acumen and his philosophy.

Unlike the many Buddhist masters who instruct their disciples to give up pleasures for a better afterlife, Hsing Yun teaches how to achieve peace in a busy, industrial society.

Hsing Yun has called on many world and religious leaders who avoid visiting diplomatically isolated Taiwan. To the Taiwan press, he is the island's "super diplomat."

The monk's Hsi Lai Temple near Los Angeles has given refuge to several dissidents who fled China after the June 1989 crackdown on the pro-democracy movement. Earlier this year, Xu Jiatun, China's top diplomat in Hong Kong, stayed at the temple after abruptly leaving the British colony.

Marching band should travel more often

The Notre Dame Marching Band will travel Friday to Tennessee to perform at Saturday's game. It is disappointing that this is the only regular season game the band will travel to, because Notre Dame fans enjoy having the band at the games. Fans have requested that the band travel to other parts of the country.

The band ordinarily travels to only one regular season game a year, and a bowl game, if the team is selected. The reasons for this infrequency, as stated by Luther Snively, the Director of Bands, is budget, schedule and academics.

Snively states that the band budget only allows for one overnight game a year, and nearly all of the budget is being used to travel to the Tennessee game. He continues that Notre Dame's schedule does not allow the band to travel to many away games because many of the games are played in parts of the country which are expensive and difficult to travel to. Lastly, he says that with six home games to attend, students in the band cannot afford to devote any more weekends to playing at football games.

These are good reasons; however, some actions can be taken to allow the band to travel to more of the regular season games.

True, it is expensive to travel to games on the coast, like USC, Navy, or Stanford, but there are games in Notre Dame's vicinity that the band can drive to, such as Michigan or Michigan State. Soon Northwestern will be included in Notre Dame's schedule also. There should be no reason the band cannot drive to Chicago for this game. It would not require band members to give up entire weekends, as they would be able to drive there and back in one day. They would therefore be able to dedicate Sunday to academics, if they chose to.

Another possibility is to institute a traveling band. It could consist of a smaller group of volunteers, which would help to cut traveling expenses. The fans would be able to enjoy music from the marching band, and the team to have the band's support.

Some members of the band advocate traveling to more regular season games. Band member John-Ellson states, "Most of the students would like to go to at least one more away game....there is no reason we shouldn't have gone to Michigan State."

Our marching band is one of the best in the country. Since they are always active in the game and the fans enjoy having them at the games, something should be done to allow them to travel to more regular season games.

Tuition payments entitle students to simple, obviously needed reforms

Dear Editor:

This is in response to Rex J. Rempel's letter (The Observer, Oct. 30) which asserted that students' complaints about the cost of this University lack rational analysis. "Yes, it is a lot of money which demands accountability and service," he wrote. "I paid $15,000 and so I deserve this." That's not a valid argument, and we generally get what we pay for."

Now, obviously, this being a private institution, the only thing that entitles the students to any rights or facilities on campus is the tuition and fees we pay. Hence, this should be the principle basis for the complaints students have about the facilities or services on campus.

"Sensitivity to individual concerns, funding, availability, feasibility, long-term effects, fairness and intent must always be considered along with how much we are paying," wrote Rempel. No doubt. Included with most complaints students make, however, are rational solutions which show that the students have, indeed, rationally analyzed the problems.

A prime example of this was Edward Yevoli's letter (The Observer, Oct 16) about the atrocious student parking situation. One could rationally argue that we students who pay thousands in tuition have more of a right to decent parking than do the ten or eleven visitors who park in the visitor/faculty lot by the stadium.

While this seems like a trivial problem, the approaching winter, with its plummeting temperatures, will only increase resentment and decrease the health of off-campus students having to walk the extra few-hundred yards from the current lots. Yet, the abundantly clear (and virtually costless) solution of restructuring the parking lots has evidently escaped the attention of those in charge of campus parking.

Problems of this sort, which affect so many students and which could be so easily solved, are the least that should be taken care of out of consideration for the students to better ensure that we get our money's worth or, in most cases, our parents' money worth.

Sports obsession drags ND down

Dear Editor:

For once in my brief life, I find myself in agreement with a point that Professor James J. Carberry brought up in his letter to the editor, "Sports Emphasis Explains Ranking," (The Observer, Nov. 5).

While I disagree with the vast majority of Professor Carberry's scatology, I must say that his "point #3" concerning athletics was oddly relevant to Notre Dame.

Why do the sports pages comprise 30 to 50 percent of The Observer? When I asked an Observer editor, he replied, "Because it's what the students want to read about." When he told me this, I was not surprised that all the college rankings looked at "We are ND" and laughed. Why does this student body care about nothing but sports? Why can't we productively fill our own minds like we fill Notre Dame Stadium?

Why do new campus publications like The Student Weekly waste valuable wood pulp by telling us what we don't already know (that is, the bloody college football results from across our nation)? Why do we spend thousands of dollars on scholarship money towards athletes, when other hard-working, financially strapped students are proudly told by the University that they were allowed two choices: a dining hall job or ROTC? Is it because wealthy alumni would rather see Notre Dame excel on the gridiron than in the gradebook?

Don't get me wrong—I'm not here to totally bash Notre Dame, because I really like it here, and I love a good football game as well as the next person. While there are many good, involved people who are here for a solid Catholic education, it seems that there are many more who come here just for all the greed and glory that our obsession with athletics has brought us. It has dragged us down the sewer along with Professor Carberry's anti-intellectual diatribes.

Going to Tennessee?

By ROBYN SIMMONS
Assistant Accent Editor

Looking for a little Southern Comfort? You just might find some at the University of Tennessee, the site of the next Notre Dame football game and the last chance roadtrippers will have to drive out to see the Irish play this season.

The University of Tennessee is located in Knoxville, Tennessee, and the drive down there is going to be a bit longer than a quick trip to Michigan State. Estimated driving time is 11 to 12 hours, depending on the amount of lead in the driver's foot.

Roadtrippers should take US 31 south to I-65 and head south straight through Indiana and Kentucky until you reach Nashville, Tennessee. Pick up I-40 around Nashville and head straight east until you reach Knoxville. Travellers might want to take their chances driving directly to Knoxville via Indiana backroads, but there's no guarantee that this route will be faster than using the expressway.

There are ample parking facilities at UT, but the two large lots that will be available to visitors are not within walking distance to the stadium. These lots are west of the stadium on UT's Ag (short for Agricultural) Campus, right off of Neyland Drive.

Students who want to drive directly to the parking lot from I-40 should pass the exit for University of Tennessee and get off at Exit 129, then exit on Neyland Drive and turn left to reach the parking facilities. The cost for parking is $3, and there will be shuttle buses running from the lots to the stadium two and half hours before and after the game. The cost for taking the shuttle is $2.

Although most students may not be able to afford a room at the Knoxville Hyatt Regency, they can show up there at 7 p.m. on Friday for a pep rally sponsored by the Knoxville Alumni Club.

UT is a fairly large university; it has 18,000 undergraduate and 6,200 graduate students. The 92,000 seat Neyland Stadium is the second largest college stadium in the nation.

Knoxville has a metropolitan area population of more than 500,000, and the downtown area of Knoxville is just north of the UT campus. Although Knoxville has plenty to offer visitors as far as bars and restaurants are concerned, Notre Dame students might want to stay on campus after the game to take advantage of an aspect of college life that can't be found under the Golden Dome: frat parties.

There are 24 fraternities at UT, and most frat houses are southwest of the stadium situated along Fraternity Park Drive right off of Volunteer Boulevard. Other clusters of frat houses can be found west of the stadium on Melrose avenue and between Lake and Terrace avenue. UT students would probably be the best source for locating the "party frats."

For those students who have friends in UT frat houses and dorms, spending the night on campus might be an alternative to those who are willing to forego the more luxurious accommodations in downtown Knoxville. But Knoxville has more than enough hotels and motels at reasonable prices that finding a place to stay shouldn't be a problem.

Since most Notre Dame roadtrippers travel to Michigan or downstate to Purdue, the trip to Tennessee should be new experience for even the most seasoned travelers. In addition to that, it will be a lot cheaper than a trip to USC.

Tennessee? 546 miles crunched in a hatchback with seven of your closest friends. Eight hours (if you don't stop for ANY food) of wishing these people you love would have kept their shoes on. Even the keg will be warm after making such a roadtrip.

Not to worry. Let the keg get warm and your stomach remain empty because Tennessee's many restaurants and hoppin' bars will be waiting to welcome you and fill you up.

Through the Volunteer's campus runs "The Strip." The Strip is actually Cumberland Avenue and is littered with popular nite-life bars and reasonable restaurants. Here is a list of the most frequented by Tennessee students:

O'Charley's - (1915 W. Cumberland Ave.) This restaurant/bar provides live entertainment as well as cuisine ranging from seafood to chicken sandwiches. Happy Hour is from 2 p.m. - 10 p.m. Monday through Sunday. Closing is at 3 p.m. This is one of two O'Charley's located on The Strip, the other being located a few miles to the west where Cumberland Ave. turns into Kingston Pike.

Copper Cellar - (1807 Cumberland Ave.) Two stories high, this unique restaurant bar has two menus. Upstairs is a casual and lively setting, while downstairs is more traditional with specials such as prime rib, seafood, steak and fish. The bar is open Monday - Thursday and Sunday until midnight and until 1 p.m. on Friday and Saturday. Happy Hour is 4-6 p.m. Monday

-Thursday, and 3-5 p.m. on Friday.

Ivy's - For those who like to dance to a different tune, Ivy's will have it. This off-beat bar tends to attract those who are out of the mainstream.

Old College Inn - Similar to O'Charley's, the Old College Inn's specialty is its chicken sandwich. The menu consists mainly of finger foods and sandwiches at Old College prices. The bar does not, however, contain live entertainment.

The Library - Don't let the name fool you...this bar has no books! Live entertainment, however, it does have.

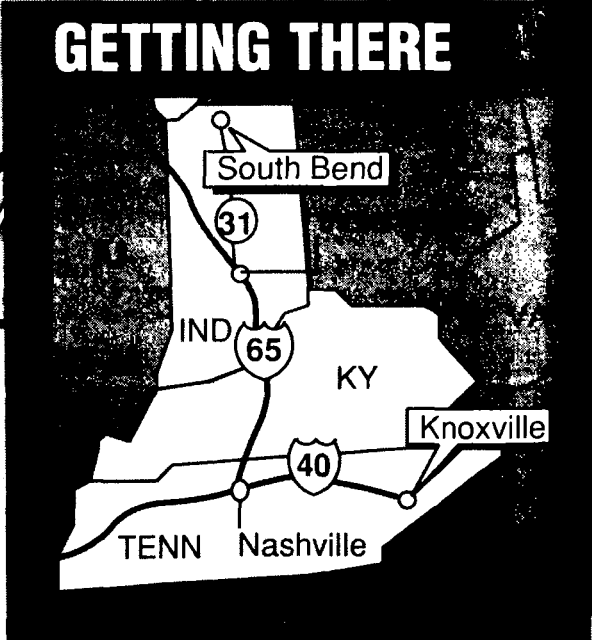

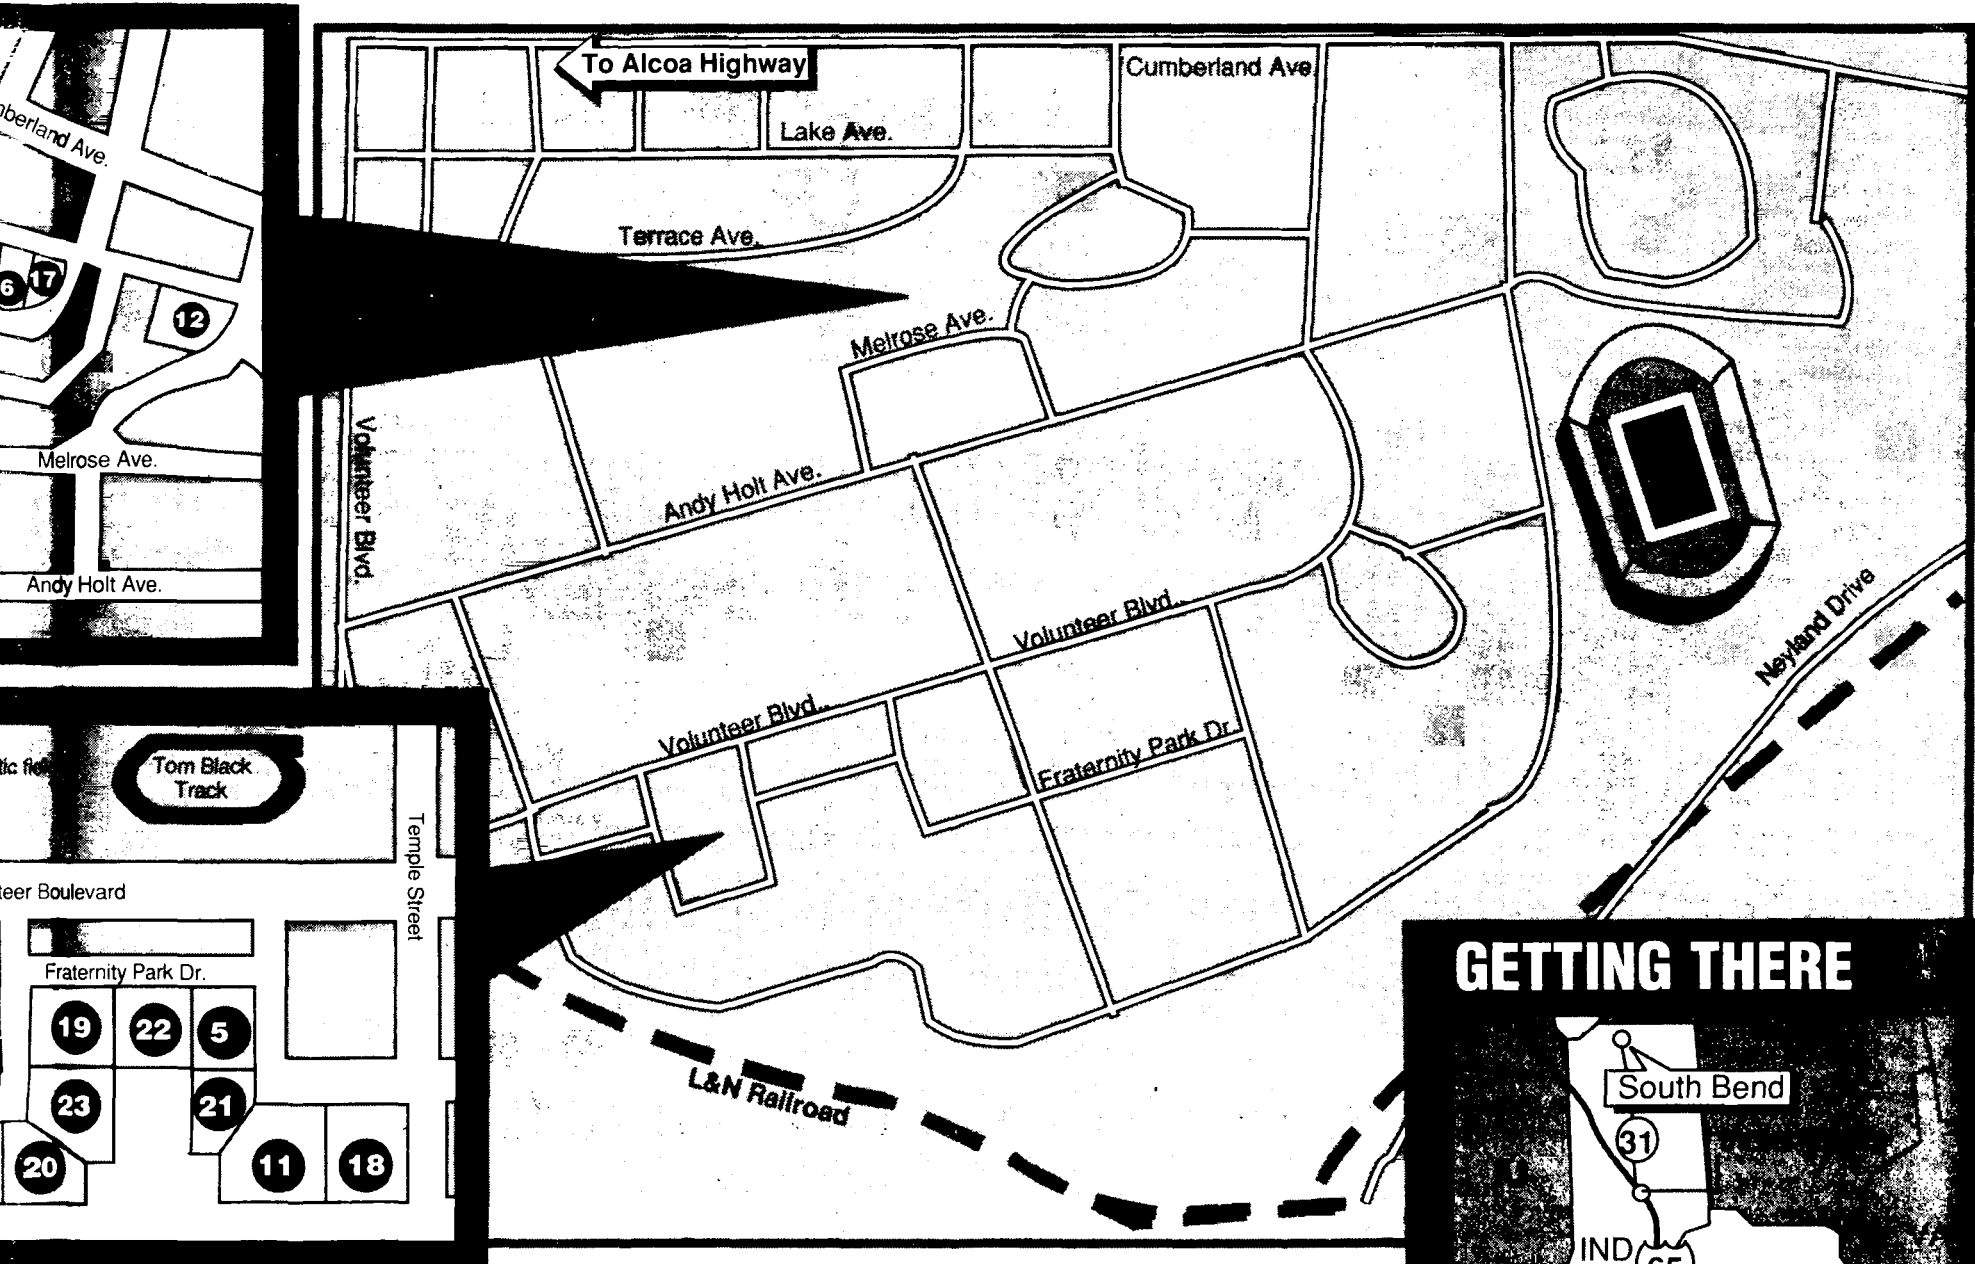

Out-of Bounds - Relatively new, this bar also boasts of a comfortable deli-type restaurant.

Ruby Tuesday - For an award-winning gourmet burger, visit one of this now famous chain of restaurant bars in Tennessee. The menu also extends to include Italian and Mexican cuisine. To see where this chain began, try Ruby Tuesday on 716 20th Street.

Dynasty Express - (1647 Cumberland Ave.) Chinese specialties which can be delivered, too.

To the west and up Cumberland Avenue, the road will turn into Kingston Pike where many more bars and restaurants are awaiting your arrival. If you are staying on campus, it's just a small hop in the car to these places.

However, Rodeway Inn, Holiday Inn, Red Roof Inn and Signiture Inn, among others, surround this lively area. So, if you are planning on staying in a hotel, keep these in mind. Some such restaurant/bars in the area are:

Applebee's Neighborhood Grill & Bar - (6928 Kingston Pike) All 12 dinner items are under seven dollars, including their steak/chicken fajita specialty. For those who don't plan to attend the game, Applebee's has two large TV's. Happy Hour is from 4-7 p.m. all week.

Michael's - (7049 Kingston Pike) Bar entertainment with a sound system. Michael's is open from 3:30 p.m. - 2:30 a.m. daily with a Happy Hour from 3-8 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Calhoun's - (10020 Kingston Pike) For national award-winning Tennessee ribs, visit the rustic farm decor and casual atmosphere of this bar restaurant.

Surprise the students of Tennessee by jamming into their favorite hang-outs. Or, for those of you with low funds, don't worry - there are plenty of McDonalds and Burger Kings to go around.

So dance, eat, be merry and Cheer, Cheer for Old Notre Dame!

Okay, you finally made it to Tennessee, now all you need is a place to stay. No problem. There are plenty of inexpensive hotels and motels. The Catholic Church as the graveyard of Christianity

I'm relieved to admit that I've almost shaken free of the Jesus-myth. I was heartbroken for awhile, like a lad disappointed in love. Eventually, I discovered that nothing had changed for me as a priest: saying Mass has nothing to do with believing in God, if you don't want it to; and out of habit, I will probably always continue to pray.

Prayer changes things, the saints say, meaning, "Prayer changes me." No saint has ever pretended to know whether prayer changes the mind or will of the God he believes in. Giving up prayer would be like giving up smoking; you would need to find something almost as good, like chewing gum, to take its place, if you didn't want to turn into a nervous wreck. Maybe there are drugs that comfort you more than prayer does; however, drugs cost money; but you can pray for nothing.

It took me 50 years to discover that religion doesn't necessarily mean committing yourself to God, or Jesus Christ, or that ethereal presence which the Pope calls the Holy Spirit. The handwriting on the wall has always been there, either I didn't see the words or couldn't understand what they meant.

God's ghost could have appeared to me saying: "Read my lips: 'I don't exist.'" I would have thought it was the devil, tempting me to atheism. But once I found out that the New Testament is a pipe dream, I understood that "Our Father, who art in heaven" didn't have a leg to stand on as "the Man upstairs."

Atheists, in my book, have

Father Robert Griffin

Letters to a Lonely God

always been smart-asses who imagine that they are in the driver's seat, like the one-eyed man who became king of the hill, in the country of the blind. "Religion," they scoff, "is the opium of the people." This is trite, but true as well as merciful. Didn't the Chinese mandarins used to rely on opium to keep a billion coolies from discovering that they weren't getting enough to eat?

The first clue I got that the jig was up with the Christian Gospel was when a friend started, as an investigative reporter, to write a story on the alleged founder of Christianity. My friend quickly found out that the pale Galilean has only one certifiable advantage over the Tooth Fairy: Jesus is not imaginary; the odds are good He probably existed, and made His living from mending fences.

Scholars, no matter how smart they are, only sort out their prejudices and call them erudition. I wasn't ready to swear off Jesus as the lover of souls simply because the Catholic scholars have gotten around to demythologizing Him. He was already demythologized when I was introduced to Him as a boy going to a Protestant Sunday school.

But looking over the shoulder of an investigative reporter, you may start to give Him your full attention. Once doubt enters your life like the proverbial camel shoving its nose under the tent, you can quickly lose your faith in innocence, your own or God's, and in the evangelists whom you trusted to reveal God.

I had a year of grace before finding out that grace is a fable that started with the fable of the Manger. Last August, flying home from England, I made my first act of faith in doubt as a creed. Riding high in the sky, you quickly find that liquor concentrates the mind wonderfully, as Dr. Johnson said about the prospect of being hanged; and my drink for the road was a triple Manhattan. Once I started feeling weightless, floating free of gravity, as though I were no longer dependent on the plane to keep me airborne, I noticed that the flight deck had been silent ever since we left Heathrow, and wondered if the plane were flying on automatic pilot. Computers, I thought, operated by other computers, could give this craft the option and freedom of self-motion, like a bird that has a will of its own, completely independent of human control.

Next, I started conjecturing whether the planet itself, along with the Church as a spinoff, could be on automatic pilot, switched on by the late, great Yahweh, when He was a young God finishing divinity school. However, it takes more that three two-ounce Hubble miniatures or rotgut booze to induce a crying jag when you're looking out the window of a 747, watching the sun setting the cloud-mass at the rim of the horizon on fire: it could have been the twilight of the gods I was seeing; but perhaps it was Valhalla. Instead of being the dress rehearsal for a faith-crisis, that trip to O'Hare ended as as a religious experience.

"Who Do Men say that I Am?" was the name of the article in Notre Dame magazine last August, blowing the lid off the allegedly divine revelation which introduced Jesus, making His debut as the Suffering Servant, preparing to become the Lord of Lords. Instead of protecting their boy like his next of kin, the scholars showed Him up as a schlemiel whom the goyim deified; his mother couldn't even give him a funeral, because His disciples lost the body. The investigative reporter said: "The truth is that the rock whom the builders rejected has a messiah complex, if you'll pardon me for saying so and not hold a grudge, since I'm only the messenger, delivering the bad news."

Crushed by my loss, I started to turn into one of those whiskey priests who spend their lives collapsed on a bar stool, looking poetic and tragic, like an Irish minstrel boy who has lost his harp. As a priest of Christ, whose Holy reputation had been picked clean by the demythologizers, like birds of prey who feast on sweat meats, I wanted to join the banshees that wail at wakes. I wanted to be remembered as a brooding Celt who reminded passersby of a ruined temple.

A man's soul is only made of pulp, like an uncooked turn-up; but it can weigh him down when it has turned to ice. Gradually, my soul defrosted; and I decided to trust it when it told me, "All's well with the Church. The Church has not been dependent on Jesus for fifteen hundred years." The religion becomes easier, one you stop feeling accountable to a Master Who will judge you. Freed of the myths, the teachings are still there, and the commandment to love one another is still valid. The Liturgy continues to add meaning to life. Everything stays in place like the resources of language which turn words into a poem.

"The final proof of God's omnipotence is that He need not exist in order to save us," says Peter DeVries.

The lovely news is that the Grotto still works. The great earth mother who suckled Pan, the nature god, and is grandmother to the Easter Bunny, has been appearing to my cocker spaniel, Darby O'Gill. She's been promising him miracles that will feed the multitudes of birdies and beasts: cabbage patches that will survive the snow; acorns dropping from the bare trees like manna; winter worms by the millions, making a cameo appearance.

I've almost shaken loose from the Jesus-myth: every day I have a good cry that's almost as refreshing as prayer. When you pray, you hope that Someone Up There is listening;

Three new ways to survive college.

With Apple's introduction of three new Macintosh® computers, meeting the challenges of college life just got a whole lot easier. Because now, everybody can afford a Macintosh.

The Macintosh Classic is our most affordable model, yet it comes with everything you need—including a hard disk drive. The Macintosh LC combines color capabilities with affordability. And the Macintosh IIx is perfect for students who need a computer with extra power and expandability.

No matter which Macintosh you choose, you'll have a computer that lightens your work load without giving you another tough subject to learn. Every Macintosh computer is easy to set up and even easier to master. And when you've learned one program, you're well on your way to learning them all. That's because thousands of available programs all work in the same, consistent manner. You can even share information with someone who uses a different type of computer—thanks to Apple's versatile SuperDrive™, which reads from and writes to Macintosh, MS-DOS, OS/2, and Apple® II floppy disks.

See the new Macintosh computers for yourself, and find out how surviving college just got a whole lot easier.

SuperBowl for Arizona? Not.

NEW YORK (AP) — NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue summarily pulled the 1993 Super Bowl out of Phoenix on Wednesday after Arizona voters rejected a proposal to make a holiday of Martin Luther King's birthday.

"I do not believe that playing Super Bowl XXVII in Arizona is in the best interests of the National Football League," Tagliabue said after the Arizona electorate rejected by 15,000 votes of nearly 1 million cast a proposal to make a holiday of the slain civil rights leader's birthday.

While Tagliabue's statement doesn't make the move official, it's expected that most if not all of the 28 NFL teams will go along with his recommendation. A total of 21 votes are necessary to move the game, which will probably go to San Diego, Los Angeles or San Francisco, the other cities that bid for it.

"I can't imagine that people won't go along with the commissioner," said Norman Braman, owner of the Philadelphia Eagles and chairman of the Super Bowl site selection committee. "I think it's tragic for the people who worked so hard to get the game there. But I think it would be an affront to our public and our players if the game is played in Phoenix."

An estimated 60 percent of NFL players are black and the league has been highly sensitive in recent years to calls to add minorities to its coaching and front-office staffs. Art Shell of the Los Angeles Raiders, appointed last season, is the only black head coach in the league and there are no black general managers.

Phoenix was chosen to host the game last March, although both Tagliabue and Braman said at the time that the league could change its position if there was no holiday to honor King.

It was with that in mind that the Arizona legislature ended nearly two decades of divisive debate last year by passing a bill making the third Monday in January Martin Luther King-Civil Rights Day in Arizona, one of three states without such a law.

But King Day opponents, led by impeached former Gov. Evan Mecham, circulated petitions to force a referendum on the issue. A similar petition drive had stalled implementation of another bill passed in 1989 that created a King holiday but did away with the state's Columbus Day holiday to keep state employees from getting an additional day off.

Both issues appeared on Tuesday's ballot and both were rejected. The King Day for Columbus Day swap was turned down by a 3-1 margin and the holiday without the swap lost by fewer than 15,000 votes.

"This is one of the worst blows we've had in a long time," said Gov. Rose Mofford. "This means more to Arizonans than anything I know of. This will be hard to overcome for many years."

Mrs. Mofford said that in addition to losing the Super Bowl, the defeat of the holiday would cost the state millions in lost convention business. She also said it sends the wrong message about Arizona's racial attitudes.

Mecham, however, called it "a moral victory for the ones who didn't want it."

Golf fights cholesterol

WASHINGTON (AP) — If your best driving performance is in the golf cart, you may be playing the game wrong. Two researchers say you could do your circulatory system more good if you make the trip on foot.

Walking a course regularly lowers cholesterol levels, and therefore may decrease the risk of heart disease, the experts concluded.

"We need to reassess the value of this sport," said the report in a medical magazine, The Physician and Sportsmedicine.

Researchers Edward A. Palank and Ernest H. Hargreaves Jr. of the New Hampshire Heart Institute in Manchester looked at 28 average but enthusiastic male golfers. The men ranged in age from 48 to 80 and had not exercised in the previous four months.

In the study, the golfers walked about 14 miles a week by playing an average of three times a week from mid-May to mid-September of 1989, always on an 18-hole course and generally with a pullcart, although some carried a light bag.

The golfers lowered their total cholesterol by an average of 17 milligrams per deciliter of blood, the study said. The low-density lipoprotein fraction of their cholesterol, the so-called "bad" cholesterol associated with higher risk of heart disease, fell by an average of 13.2 mg/dl, it said.

Both are "very significant" decreases, the report said.

However, the level of high-density lipoprotein — the so-called "good cholesterol" associated with a lower risk of heart disease — did not change significantly, the report said.

That's because a golfer's desire to stop and hit the ball keeps getting in the way of his workout, said Palank, a cardiologist. It takes a vigorous, sustained aerobic workout to improve HDL, he said in an interview.

Just the same, the study demonstrates the sport has health value, provided it's played the way it was designed — without a riding golf cart, Palank said.

"If you play golf and you walk, and you take advantage of a sport you like, you can improve your (heart disease) risk ratio," he said. "The thing that's discouraging is that they've taken a very enjoyable sport that was designed to walk, and taken out some of the enjoyment and taken away some of the positive medical benefit."

Palank blamed economics, saying courses could make more money by shuttling more golfers through on carts.

Thirty-three percent of members-only courses, 29 percent of daily fee courses and 11 percent of public courses require carts some or all of the time, according to a recent survey by the National Golf Foundation.

Their stiffest test will come from the new-look Boston Celtics, who will have Red Auerbach swallowing his trademark cigar with their fast-break attack. Brian Shaw returned from Italy to guide the Celtics, and rookie Dee Brown will lay down some rubber on the vaulted parquay floor of the Boston Garden. The big question for Boston is how Larry Bird and Kevin McHale will respond to the new style. If the Boston speed show clicks on all gears, the Celtics could recapture their past glory.

The Western Conference will easily be the tougher of the two, with four legitimate title contenders and a couple of other teams who could surprise people.

The Phoenix Suns will come out of the West to challenge the Pistons for the title. Phoenix has been to the Western Conference finals two years in a row, and in last year's six-game series, the Trail Blazers won four games by a combined 12 points.

The only acquisition the Suns made was picking up forward Ed Nealy, but Nealy could make a big contribution when the play gets rough. His tough play in the paint was one of the chief reasons the Bulls beat the Sixers in the playoffs last season. Factor in one of the two best six-man rotations in the league, and you have a championship contender.

Portland again will be the biggest threat to the Suns. In Danny Ainge, the Trail Blazers got a player who knows how to win. With two championships to his credit (both with Boston), he will influence the attitude of Portland, as well as hit a few key jumpers. Unfortunately for Portland, his attitude and a few points a game will be his only contributions. Ainge will not be the answer to the Trail Blazers problems.

The Lakers will have something to say about the Pacific Division winner as well. In forwards Terry Teagle and Sam Perkins, Los Angeles strengthened an already strong hand. With Magic Johnson up to his usual tricks, all the Lakers need is a solid center. If Vlade Divac can become a force in the paint, the Lakers just might win it all.

Can you say "NBA title"? That's the phrase for the season from Mr. Robinson's Neighborhood. Boasting one of the top starting fives in basketball, not to mention one of the youngest, the San Antonio Spurs are convinced that this could be their year. The Spurs added forward Paul Pressey over the summer, hoping that his veteran leadership will be the missing piece in the puzzle. Despite having David Robinson and tremendous talent on the rest of the team, it won't be. With more experience and some help off the bench, the Spurs could become perennial title contenders.

Utah took a big risk by trading by trading two valuable players (Bobby Hansen and Eric Leckner), plus its first round draft pick for shooting guard Jeff Malone. Despite the Jazz's obvious need for someone to shoot from the perimeter, Utah gave up far too much for what it received, and it won't help them get past the second round of the playoffs, at best.

In an attempt to improve on last season's 47-35 record, the Dallas Mavericks traded for Fat Lever and Rodney McCray and signed free agent Alex English. With the talent already in Dallas, some luck and some chemistry could provide some surprises for Mav fans. The key for Dallas to keep Roy Tarpley on the basketball court and out of the drug-rehabilitation center. If the new additions blend together well, the veteran talent of the Mavs could send some of the top teams in the West on an early vacation.

The Suns and the Spurs will emerge in the Western Conference finals, after taking out the Lakers and the Trail Blazers. The scoring punch of Kevin Johnson and Tom Chambers will be too much for the Spurs to handle, and Phoenix will advance to the NBA Finals.

Their opponent will be no surprise. The Pistons will be back to the party again, aiming for a third consecutive championship. If the Sixers' bench rises to the occasion, and if Rick Mahorn's back holds up, Philadelphia will be Detroit's opponent in the Eastern Conference.

If the Sixers aren't in the finals, look for the Cavaliers to beat out the Bulls for the spot in the finals. Cleveland's weakness at the shooting-guard position is more than offset by its inside game, which will dominate Chicago's big men.

Smart money would go with the Pistons as the odds-on favorites to win the title again, but Phoenix has something Detroit doesn't—hunger. That's not to say the Pistons aren't hungry, but rather the Suns are starving. They've been so close for so long that there will be no denying them this time. The Phoenix Suns will emerge as the World Champions, winning in six games.

NCAA puts Illinois hoops on probation

URBANA, Ill. (AP) — The Illinois basketball team was banned from postseason play in 1991, placed on three years' probation and limited to two new scholarships each of the next two years. And that's after being cleared by the NCAA of the worst charges: offering cash and cars to top recruits.

The NCAA stopped short Wednesday of wiping out Illinois' season altogether, but left no doubt it could have.

"If the most serious violations had been found then I think from reading the report the so-called death penalty ... would have been imposed," said David Berst, the NCAA's assistant executive director for enforcement.

Such a penalty can be imposed after a school is sanctioned twice within a five-year period for major NCAA infractions. This is Illinois' third penalty since 1984 — the other two involved football and basketball.

Still, Illinois thought the penalties weren't fair.

"We disagree with several of the committee's findings, and some of the sanctions are harsher than we expected," Illinois chancellor Morton Weir said.

Illinois will be banned from off-campus basketball recruiting and from paying for visits by recruits to its campus the first year. It will also be limited to awarding just two basketball scholarships in each of the first two seasons of the probation. Television coverage, however, will not be restricted.

The scholarship sanctions were especially strict.

Kentucky, which got among the toughest penalties ever imposed by the NCAA a year ago, was limited to three new scholarships for two years. That's one more each year than Illinois.

Coach Lou Henson said he was disappointed that he could not award all five scholarships he had promised to high school recruits, but said he expected his current players would stay.

"We're not in shambles," said Henson, now in his 16th season. "When we take the floor this year, our players will be more motivated and more inspired that perhaps ever before."

Weir said that the university's own investigation turned up most of the violations, and that the school was determined to abide by NCAA rules.

"We were disappointed with the fact that we found a number of minor violations," athletic director John Mackovic said. "The management of the program needs to be strengthened, and we have taken steps to accomplish that."

Weir said there were no plans for an appeal.

The university's recruitment in 1989 of prep star Deon Thomas touched off the NCAA's 16-month investigation.

It initially charged the university with violations that included offering Chevrolet $80,000 and a Chevrolet Blazer, and offering LaPhonso Ellis of East St. Louis $5,000 to sign and $5,000 a year to play, as well as a car.

"Our concern for the dignity of every human being as God's cherished child directs our care to victims of every injury: prejudice, famine, warfare, ignorance, infidelity, abuse..."

These words from the Constitutions of the Congregation of Holy Cross impel us as Holy Cross men and women to speak out in support of the people at Notre Dame who are gay and lesbian.

Our experience here as pastors, teachers, rectors, and ministers, has shown us that there are people at Notre Dame who suffer as a result of others' attitudes toward homosexuality. Some experience highly prejudicial and cruel behavior as the result of intolerance and ignorance in the university community.

As ministers at Notre Dame, we say publicly: Words and actions that dehumanize people because of their homosexuality are wrong and have no place in this community. As the U.S. Catholic Conference has said: "Jesus has revealed to us that God is compassionate, not vengeful. Made in God's image and likeness, every human person is of inestimable worth. All human life is sacred, and its dignity must be respected and protected. The teaching of Jesus about human sexuality and the moral norms of the Church are not arbitrary impositions on human life but disclosures of its depth."

Each of us is "God's cherished child." Let us work to create a university community at Notre Dame, in which all of us, regardless of sexual orientation, are enabled to realize that human dignity which comes to us all, from our Creator.

the only way I've ever been able to evaluate anybody."

"Sure, we've had a lot of problems on defense," Holtz continued, "and everybody wants to look at the defensive coordinator. But that's not true. This guy's a beautiful individual and an excellent football coach. We've not been very successful, we've not been very productive in a lot of different areas, but there are a lot of reasons for that."

With Notre Dame preparing to invade Tennessee's 91,100-seat Neyland Stadium on Saturday, comparisons inevitably have been drawn to last season's Miami game in the Orange Bowl.

A's go smokeless

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Fans of the Oakland Athletics who feel burned by the team's World Series performance may get really fired up about a new ban on smoking at the Oakland Coliseum.

The A's announced the ban Tuesday, saying it will make the ballpark a better place to watch baseball.

"We have received letters from non-smoking fans in the past, but this was a proactive decision to keep the Coliseum environment one of the better ones in which to watch a ball game," said Andy Dolich, vice president of business operations for the A's.

But the decision rankled some fans who consider smoking during games a right protected under the Bill of Rights.

"I think it's asinine," Janet Weitz of Oakland said. "It's an outdoor facility, people are on their leisure time. In bars and at ball games you get to smoke."

Weitz has been smoking at A's games for the last five years and doubted that second-hand smoke poses a threat to her neighbors.

"I mean, if people really think it's going to harm them let's ban trucks on the freeway during

The 27-10 Irish loss before 75,500 screaming fans ended Notre Dame's 24-game winning streak and dashed its hopes for a second-straight national title.

"The loudest stadium I've ever been in was Miami last year," Holtz said. "I understood we would miss some check offs. What I did not anticipate was that we would not be able to hear the plays in the huddle."

The offense may have an even more difficult time hearing the plays in the huddle this season. Quarterback Rick Mirer, who has a higher-pitched voice than Tony Rice, has struggled at times to project his voice over the home crowds at Notre Dame Stadium.

"Last year, we had a baritone calling the signals," Holtz said. "This year, he's more soprano. We've had difficulty at home, let alone down there."

A's games," she said.

One season ticket holder called cigarette smoke a "part of the ambiance of night games."

But Dolich said starting next year anyone who lights up during an A's game will receive a warning from an usher and a printed card detailing designated smoking areas around the stadium. Militant smokers will be subject to removal.

"We've found that our fans police each other, letting people know about excessive drinking, noise or whatever else might be construed as bothersome to other fans," Dolich said.

Indoor sports arenas such as the Houston Astrodome and the Metrodome in Minneapolis generally forbid smoking, and the San Francisco Giants and some other teams have introduced no-smoking "family sections" in recent years.

Coliseum fans seated at field level will be permitted to smoke on the ramps leading to the second deck behind sections 114 and 120 and the areas inside C and D gates, Dolich said.

Charlie Hustle wants his peace

CINCINNATI (AP) — Pete Rose, serving a five-month federal prison term for cheating on his income taxes, has sold his suburban Cincinnati home and is selling a home in Plant City, Fla.

Rose's house on a five-acre site in the affluent Cincinnati suburb of Indian Hill sold within the past few months for about $1 million. The Cincinnati Post reported Wednesday.

Rose also is reportedly asking nearly $1 million for his Plant City house, near the Reds' spring training facilities.

A family member, whom the Post did not identify, said Rose put the houses on the market to start over in a new community, possibly Boca Raton on Florida's east coast.

"Pete wants some peace when he gets out," the family member was quoted as saying.

Reuven J. Katz, Rose's longtime lawyer in Cincinnati, did not return a telephone call Wednesday seeking comment.

Irish volleyball splits matches with MCC foes Xavier and Dayton

By ROLANDO DE AGUIAR
Sports Writer

Notre Dame women's volleyball ended a seven-game winning streak Monday night, defeating Xavier in five games. The Irish, however, lost their second match in straight games to Dayton.

Xavier (18-14, 3-4 in MCC play) came out strong in game one, putting Notre Dame away by a count of 15-7. The Irish came back to win the second and third games 15-10, 15-12. The Musketeers fought back to post a 16-14 triumph in the fourth game. Notre Dame finally heated up in the final game, winning by a score of 15-6.

The Irish were led by Marilyn Cragin, who produced 24 kills against the Musketeers. Leading the defense, with 15 digs apiece, were junior Katie Kavanaugh and sophomore Alicia Turner. Five Irish players posted double figures in digs. After the defeat of Xavier, the Irish fell flat against Dayton (14-17, 4-3). The Lady Flyers had little trouble dispatching the Notre Dame squad, 15-13, 15-3, 15-6.

Notre Dame has been decimated by injuries recently. Jen Slosar, Julie Harris, and Cynthia May have all been taken from the lineup due to stress fractures. Perhaps the most significant loss of the season was that of sophomore Jessica Fiebelkorn, who led the Irish in attacking and blocking before being sidelined by a stress fracture herself.

The Irish will face Colorado on Friday in the Joyce ACC. The match will mark the Buffaloes' first trip to Notre Dame. Colorado (13-11) is in the midst of a seven-game road trip.

The MCC doubleheader marked the last two conference games for the Irish, who will begin MCC tournament play on November 16. Notre Dame, seeded fifth, will face fourth seed Loyola of Chicago in the first round of the double elimination tournament. In their only previous matchup this season, the Irish were defeated 15-6, 15-4, 11-15, 15-10.

The favorite entering the MCC postseason is undoubtedly Butler, which posted a spotless 7-0 conference record this season. The Bulldogs have a 21-match unbeaten streak in MCC regular season play. Butler will open the tournament, to be held at Xavier University in Cincinnati, against hapless Evansville.

Two-time defending MCC champs, St. Louis enters the tournament seeded second, with a 5-2 conference record. The Billikens will square off with Marquette in the first round.

The winner of the tournament will get the first-ever automatic bid for the MCC champion to the Women's Invitational Volleyball Championship, to be

Alomar AL Rookie of the Year

NEW YORK (AP) — Sandy Alomar Jr., a prospect who turned promise into productivity, became only the third unanimous choice as rookie of the year, winning the American League award Wednesday.

The Cleveland catcher joined Mark McGwire (1987) and Carlton Fisk (1972) as the only major leaguers to sweep the honor since it was first presented 1947. Alomar, 24, hit .290 with nine homers and 66 RBIs and was the first rookie catcher ever to start an All-Star game.

Alomar was a two-time minor league player of the year in the San Diego system, but was unable to break into the big leagues because the Padres already had All-Star catcher Benito Santiago. So last December, the Padres, who have Alomar's father Sandy Sr. as a coach and brother Roberto as a second baseman, traded him and two other players to the Indians for their best player, slugger Joe Carter.

Alomar played up to his potential all season and continued the family tradition of fine major leaguers. He joined Fisk and Thurman Munson as the lone catchers to win the AL rookie award and became the fourth Indian to receive the honor, along with Herb Score, Chris Chambliss and Joe Charboneau.

"You only get one chance to get this. To get it unanimously is much better," Alomar said from Japan, where a team of major league all-stars is touring.

Alomar received all 28 first-place votes for a total of 140 points. Two members of the Baseball Writers Association of America in each AL city voted.

Kevin Maas, who hit 21 home runs for the New York Yankees, got 14 second-place votes and had 47 points and Kansas City pitcher Kevin Appier was third with 31 points.

Alomar played a total of eight games for San Diego in late-season callups the past two years. But he knew he was expected to be a star when the Padres traded him, prospect Carlos Baerga and Chris James for Carter, who had averaged 31 home runs and 108 RBIs in his previous four seasons.

"It made it harder," Alomar admitted. "Everybody had their eye on me."

Alomar, though, was ready for his chance. He batted .306 with 13 homers and 101 RBIs for Triple-A Las Vegas in 1989 and had hit .297 with 16 home runs and 71 RBIs for the same team in 1988.

"I felt more prepared this year," he said. "I didn't want to go back. I wanted to go forward."

Holtz confident in Darnell, Irish defense

Notre Dame flanker Raghib Ismail has been carrying around slightly more weight lately, but the steel plates placed inside his shoes to reduce the painful effects of turf toe don't figure to add much to his 175-pound frame.

Ismail suffered the painful, artificial turf-related injury last Saturday against Navy. The Heisman Trophy candidate missed Monday's and Tuesday's practices, but trainers expect him to start Saturday against Tennessee.

"I had one quarterback get an astroturf toe," Irish head coach Lou Holtz said. "That was Tom Jones, Bert Jones's brother, and he missed seven games."

Ismail tried to downplay the injury during a locker-room conversation with Holtz following Saturday's game.

"He was limping out of the locker room," Holtz said, "and I asked him what happened. He said, 'I'm fine.' I said, 'Let me see.' He said, 'Coach, my mother's here. I'm not injured.' Well, he shows up on Sunday and he can hardly walk."

"We'd like to get his hands on the ball 20 times a game," Holtz continued. "I get thousands of letters from people saying, 'Put him at tailback.' Well, I've got to tell you something. The guy cannot take the pounding. He's a very tough young man, but he's still only 170 pounds. He cannot take the pounding on a continuous basis."

Defensive coordinator Gary Darnell has taken the brunt of the criticism for Notre Dame's inconsistent defensive play this season.

The Irish have allowed 23.7 points and 392 total yards per game through their first eight contests. Holtz relies on a different set of criteria, however, in assessing Darnell's first-year performance.

"Every coach I've ever had was different," Holtz said. "but I just ask three questions. One, 'Can you trust him?' I trust Gary Darnell explicitly. I trust him in any environment and in any situation."

"The second thing you have to ask is, 'Is he committed to being great?' And he is. There's no doubt whatsoever about it. The third thing you say is, 'Does he care? Does he care about players? Does he care about Notre Dame? Completely. That's What, me worry? Not Jones.

Sophomore nose tackle going about business as usual

SCOTT BRUTOCAO
Assistant Sports Editor

The most popular question circulating among Notre Dame followers is: "Is Chris Zorich going to be able to play against Tennessee?"

Good question. They'll see. Second question: "What will the Irish defense do without Zorich?"

Note, folks, how often the name "Zorich" occurs in the media and in conversations about Notre Dame football. Imagine the standards and scrutiny that his replacement will have to face.

Unfortunately, Eric Jones, Zorich's replacement, doesn't see things that way at all. He's just doing his thing, pressuring quarterbacks and tackling fellows with footballs.

Zorich? The best publicized defensive lineman since Bob Golic? Oh yeah, that's who Jones is replacing.

"The way I look at it," says Jones, a 6-6, 233-pound nose-guard, "they make a defense and you've got a job to do. You just go out and do it."

Forget the fact that Jones, a sophomore, got the chance to start his first game Saturday after Zorich's knee injury made the All-America noseguard unable to play. Never mind that every sportscaster and sportswriter will be mentioning Jones when treating the subject of Zorich's injury.

Jones just goes out to play. "The increased media attention feels like nothing at all," says the Portage, Ind., native. "I don't read the paper unless it's lying around. My mom reads all that stuff, so I hear it from her."

Eric Jones

I just do what I have to do. I don't care about publicity or anything about that. It doesn't matter as long as we're winning."

Not to say, mind you, that he's indifferent to whether he starts or not.

"The more playing time you get, the more you learn," says Jones. "Hopefully, from the more you learn, you become a better player."

Thrust into a new position because of Zorich's injury, Jones had spent his time at Notre Dame as a backup to defensive tackle Bob Dahl. He had not practiced a down at nose-guard until the week before the Navy game. To exacerbate the sudden switch, he would be starting.

"Sure, I got the butterflies, but after the first snap I had other things to concentrate on," says Jones. "Everything was going through my mind before that, being nervous and excited. But I didn't really have a chance to be nervous or excited after the ball was snapped because I had a job to do."

Evaluations of that job were generally positive, good enough to ensure that, barring a Zorich comeback, he'll start Saturday when the Irish play Tennessee.

"Eric Jones did some awfully good things, but made some mistakes, obviously," says Irish head coach Lou Holtz. "Even though he is quite light, we will still leave him in there."

Ah, the weight problem. His listed 233 pounds is below the 260-plus pounds of Dahl and Zorich, and it's a far cry from defensive tackle George Williams's 298.

"I'm working on gaining weight," says Jones. "I came in at 217 as a freshman, and now I'm up to 235-240 this year. During the summer I lifted and ate, and tried to stay active. I just ate everything, really."

"It's the strength that's important—I don't want to be big and fat and slow. I want to keep my quickness."

It's Jones's quickness and agility that have gotten him the replacement job for the Irish. It is that same quickness that gave him seven tackles last year, including a 23-yard sack and a forced fumble against Miami. At 6-6, he's an intimidating obstacle for quarterbacks to throw through.

But don't make comparisons with his game and Zorich's, or for that matter, with anyone's. Jones doesn't like to talk in those terms. When talking with him, one will hear adages like "give your best effort" or "get your job done." The fact that he's filling in for Zorich is extraneous.

Thorpe for Todd Lyght?

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Three players from Indiana colleges are among the 15 candidates for the Jim Thorpe Award, given annually to the nation's best defensive back.

They are Todd Lyght of Notre Dame, Mike Dumas of Indiana and Steve Jackson of Purdue. Lyght and Nathan LaDuke of Arizona State were finalists a year ago when Mark Carrier of Southern Cal won the award.

The names of the semifinalists will be submitted to a 21-member panel, which will select the winner. The three players receiving the most votes will be invited to attend the award banquet Jan. 14.

The Jim Thorpe Award, first presented in 1986, is based on performance, athletic ability and character. It is given by the Jim Thorpe Athletic Club of Oklahoma City.

Joining LaDuke and the three Indiana players as semifinalists are Jesse Campbell of North Carolina State, Harry Colon of Missouri, Reggie Cooper of Nebraska, Merton Hanks of Iowa, Henry Jones of Illinois, Darryl Lewis of Arizona, Chris Mitchell of Mississippi, Ken Swilling of Georgia Tech, Eric Turner of UCLA, Tripp Welborne of Michigan and Will White of Florida.

Campbell, Swilling and White are the only underclassmen on the list.

Todd Lyght, shown after successfully defending a pass against Navy, has been named as a candidate for the prestigious Thorpe Award.

Phoenix; Cavs or Bulls in NBA championship

The NBA season kicked off last Friday, and with it, the Detroit Pistons' run for a third consecutive title. Last season the Pistons had to endure a tough run through the playoffs, and this year should be no different.

Both conferences figure to be tougher this year, and it will be a chore for the Pistons just to make the finals, with several teams posing a challenge to their World Championship hopes.

The Pistons' own Central Conference will be hotly contested. The Cavaliers, coming off a disappointing season, will be the surprise of that division. A rash of injuries doomed Cleveland last year, but with everyone healthy and the return of Danny Ferry from the Italian League, the Cavs are in position to knock off the Pistons.

The Bulls made several bold moves in an attempt to move past the Pistons, but it won't be enough. Although Cliff Levingston gives them another inside force, Chicago has the doughnut syndrome—a hole in the middle. Bill Cartwright performed admirably last year, but he's on his last legs, and without a better center, the Bulls will again be mired behind Detroit.
