■ NATIONAL BREAST CANCER AWARENESS MONTH

Seminar teaches prevention, care

By RACHEL RICHMOND
News Writer

One of the nation's deadliest diseases was confronted last night, in a symposium highlighting Notre Dame's National Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

The seminar, and other campus activities this month will "serve as a model for other universities" said Joan Lennon, a breast cancer survivor and last night's hostess.

Father Theodore Hesburgh, University president emeritus, made the opening remarks for the symposium, focusing on medical researchers and the importance of women as the "source of life". Hesburgh, who lost his oldest sister to breast cancer, believes, "we often take for granted the wonderful dedication and long, hard work of medical research people."

Hesburgh also commented on the advancements in breast cancer research saying, "Today we are more energized and more conscious of what needs to be done."

Dr. Wortia McCaskill-Stevens, co-director of Indiana University's Breast Cancer and Research Center, spoke on early detection and prevention of the disease.

Stevens emphasized that breast cancer is a systematic disease with risk increasing from 1 in 19,608 at age 25 to 1 in 50 at age 50. Although there are many possible risk factors, including family history and a woman's age at the birth of her first child, these account for only 25 percent of breast cancer occurrences; the other 75 percent go unexplained.

Early detection was stressed by Stevens, with monthly self-exams suggested for all women. Mammograms should be taken every year for women over 50, but there is no data to support the need for them earlier. The fears of fatalism and rejection are common explanations given by women as to why they are hesitant to pursue available methods of early detection. Above all, Stevens said, "breast cancer is a public health issue."

Dr. George Sledge, professor of medicine in the division of Hematology/Oncology at Indiana University, explained new statistics and ways of treatment. In 1996, over 185,000 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer and over 44,000 will die from the disease. Although still high, these figures mark a decline in breast cancer in the U.S., especially in younger women.

Speakers call for gay rights

By MICHELLE KRUPA
Assistant News Editor

Gay rights advocates from the campus community called upon the University to extend full recognition to the needs of gay and lesbians at Notre Dame during a forum yesterday afternoon.

At the forum, speakers addressed issues regarding economics, civil rights, theology, and students' reactions to coming-out at Notre Dame.

The University's denial of Gays and Lesbians of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's College's (GLND/SMC) application to be a recognized student group, and the University's refusal to give funding to Notre Dame Lesbian and Gay Students (NDLGS), the newly-formed University group, were reiterated by Kathleen Biddick, director of the gender studies program.

"[They] provide the students with neither the budget nor the civil rights to invite speakers to campus, a right enjoyed by other student groups," Biddick said.

Because NDLGS is designated as a University group rather than as a student group, the rights and opportunities, such as sponsoring activities and speakers, extended to student groups do not apply.

Biddick claims that intellectual positions on campus can be bought by outside money. While the University does not allow gay and lesbian groups funding, a multi-million dollar endowment group donates to the furthering of conservative ideas. This inequality can lessen opportunities for minority groups.

The gender studies program does sponsor visiting scholars through a budget of $4,000, of which some are some funds are used to sponsor speakers and activities for organizations such as GLND/SMC.

The Bradley Foundation, which disperses the largest conservative endowments in the country, gives between $25 million and $30 million annually to other organizations and largely "fronts the conservative Washington think tanks," Biddick said.

Through economic inequality, Biddick claims that "the production of knowledge at Notre Dame is not an even playing

Depression screening offered today at SMC

By MAUREEN HURLEY
Associate News Editor

The rigors of academic life, coupled with the transitions individuals face during the college years make students prime candidates for depression, according to officials at the National Institute of Mental Health.

In an effort to combat stigmas and encourage students to confront symptoms of depression, Saint Mary's College will be a site for National Depression Screening Day, which takes place today.

This is the second year the College has participated in the program, under the recommendation of the Association of University and College Counseling Center Directors.

"There aren't many more stressful settings than the college or university environments, so it wouldn't be unusual to see a high incidence of depression in college students," said Nancy Mascotte, assistant director of the Counseling and Career Development Center.

Many students misinterpret and internalize feelings of depression, according to Mascotte. "College students tend to think they can pull themselves up by the bootstraps, and handle it. They tend to think they're not trying hard enough," she said. "This program is helpful in that, along with providing the screening, it also has a large educational component on the symptoms of depression, and how to deal with them."

Coupled with the rigors of academics and college life, Mascotte said, "South Bend is not exactly in the sun belt, so Seasonal Affective Disorder

Illuminating the night for Respect Life Week

It's raining in the stands

Leave those umbrellas at home. Umm, no, wait, better bring them. Hold it, scratch that. Grab your mittens instead.

Heck, never mind. The forecast calls for fair weather, and fans all over the place seem to be drowning in it.

Melanie Waters
Assistant
Accent Editor

Here at Notre Dame, it seems that the most pressing and morally challenging issue to grace the editorial pages of this University is the heartless and indescribable gall of Lou Holtz to sadistically treat Irish football fans to one whole loss.

Oh, the inhumanity of it all! You mean that in addition to losing to an obviously overpowering football team, the sordid truth has been uncovered that Holtz will settle for nothing short of the best from his players? Well then, we should all be utterly ashamed to attend a university that promotes such barbarism.

And Holtz has obviously held a gun to Ron Powlus' head these last four years that forced him to strive for perfection, even though Powlus himself told Sports Illustrated that he has always pushed himself to the limit and is his own biggest source of pressure.

This is by no means the first incidence of fair-weather fandom I've witnessed in four years, but each time it gets a little more annoying to deal with.

Some of you even grew up in ND diapers, yet still feel the need to berate your own school after one loss. Hey, here's an idea: why don't you hold your forked tongues and let the rest of us enjoy the richest football tradition in the country.

Fair weather fans are cropping up in vast numbers, and they're not just limited to football.

I will shamelessly admit that my Chief Wahoo flag is flying at half mast in mourning for my other "home team". The Cleveland Indians lost to the Orioles in a series that reminded me of Notre Dame's loss to Northwestern last year. Chief Wahoo's idiotic grin was quickly replaced by a city full of gaping mouths as we watched Roberto Alomar launch a phlegm...er, I mean fastball into the stands after 12 innings.

Granted, no one in Cleveland was smiling much after this weekend. But the thing that hurts worse than having our spirits crushed by a saliva-spewing insult to humanity is the hordes of so-called Tribe fans who are ready to throw in the towel after two seasons of near-misses.

Sorry, but the bandwagon just isn't big enough to hold everyone. All those who can't name five players prior to 1990, this team just wasn't playing for you. Some Clevelanders have waited 41 years for a team to even be a real contender. However, if you can't take the good with the bad, then don't hog up the space in line when tickets go on sale for the 1997 season.

Tribe fans, Yankee fans, Irish fans, whatever. You can cheer, but don't call yourself a fan unless you really mean it. And sometimes, being a fan means leaving the umbrella at home no matter what the forecast says.

■ WORLD AT A GLANCE

Charities: Donations increase, while contributors decrease

WASHINGTON

Americans gave more to charity last year than they did two years earlier, but an increasing number of people gave nothing, according to a Gallup survey.

Contributions in 1995 were 16 percent higher than in 1993 — 10 percent higher when adjusted for inflation, the survey says.

In constant dollars, the average contributing household gave $1,017 in 1995, compared with $928 in 1993.

That represented 2.2 percent of household income, a slight increase over the figure two years earlier, 2.1 percent.

But only 69 percent of households reported giving anything last year, compared with 73 percent in 1993.

The survey has been conducted every other year since 1987 by the Gallup organization for Independent Sector, a coalition representing 800 voluntary groups, foundations and corporate giving programs.

Gallup questioned 2,617 adults in face-to-face interviews this spring. The survey had a sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

In another finding, participants expressed growing mistrust over how charities use their money. The proportion who disagreed with the statement "most charitable organizations are honest and ethical in their use of funds" has increased from 20 percent in 1990 to 31 percent this year.

In the five surveys taken since 1987, the year Americans were most generous was 1989, in a time of economic upturn.

Seventy-five percent of households reporting giving that year, and they gave $1,201 in inflation-adjusted dollars, which represented 2.5 percent of household income.

The survey found similar patterns for volunteering. It said 49 percent of households reported volunteer activities in 1995, up 1 percent over 1993. The average volunteer contributed 4.2 hours a week, a figure that has not changed since 1991.

Households which reported charitable contributions last year had an average income of $46,637, about 50 percent higher than non-contributing households.

Another finding suggested that the most effective way to get people to give to charity is simply to ask them.

Pope recovering 'above the average'

ROME

Roses, recipes and warm wishes poured in Wednesday for Pope John Paul II, who was feeling just a bit of pain and pleasing doctors with his recovery the day after surgery to remove an inflamed appendix. John Paul even took a few steps, sat in an armchair and sipped tea, his doctors said. Dr. Corrado Manni, chief anesthesiologist at Gemelli Polyclinic, where the pope has been hospitalized since Sunday, said the pontiff's condition was "excellent, above the average" for a 76-year-old man with health problems. The pope has had six operations since he was shot in the stomach by a would-be assassin in 1981. His surgery Tuesday also confirmed that a benign bowel tumor removed in 1992 hadn't returned. Results of a routine biopsy were reported to be negative. The pope's doctors "found him in excellent condition, not only physically, but also in terms of state of mind, tranquil and calm," Manni told The Associated Press.

Court: Whitewater witness in contempt

CONWAY, Ark.

A federal appeals court today upheld a contempt citation against Whitewater figure Susan McDougal, who refused last month to testify before a grand jury investigating President Clinton's Arkansas business dealings. The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis said McDougal had no right to refuse to testify and had no right to take her lawyer into the grand jury room. The court also said if it allowed witnesses to remain silent because they feared the grand jury or prosecutors had a different perception of the truth, it would "frustrate completely the investigative function." McDougal has been held at the Faulkner County Jail in Conway since Sept. 16 after she refused U.S. District Judge Susan Webber Wright's order that she answer questions from a Whitewater grand jury. Last May, McDougal was convicted with her ex-husband James and then-Arkansas Gov. Jim Guy Tucker in a Whitewater-related fraud and conspiracy trial.

FBI to interview Olympic bomb suspect

ATLANTA

The FBI has returned Richard Jewell's guns and other belongings and is no longer keeping tabs on him, indicating he is close to being exonerated in the Olympic Park bombing, his lawyers said. Among items returned Tuesday were his Disney videos, Tupperware and gun collection. Jewell, the only publicly identified suspect in the July 27 bombing, was questioned Sunday by state and federal investigators for six hours. "I think this interview is a step with closure in mind," Jewell's lawyer, Lin Wood, said Tuesday. "Now we hope they will indicate in some public fashion that he is no longer a subject or a target." It was Jewell's first interrogation since July 30, three days after the early morning bomb blast killed one woman and injured 111 people at Centennial Olympic Park in downtown Atlanta. A federal law enforcement official in Washington, who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity, confirmed the guns were returned and noted that would not normally happen with a major suspect. Tuesday, U.S. District Judge Owen Forrester heard arguments from Jewell's lawyers to unseal the FBI affidavits used to obtain search warrants against Jewell.

Internet scams exposed

SAN FRANCISCO

The messages flood electronic mail boxes and clog the Internet: Make money at home! Order chips cheap! Earn cash fast! But online as in life, if it sounds too good to be true, it probably is. On Wednesday, the National Consumer League issued a list of the top five Internet scams, based on complaints from online users. The nonprofit organization, based in Washington, launched Internet Fraud Watch this year to monitor online scams and stop scam artists. Topping the scam list are pyramid schemes, in which early investors are paid with money sent in by later investors. In one $6 million case pursued by the Federal Trade Commission, Fortuna Alliance L.L.C. used a World Wide Web page to lure thousands of people to pay between $250 and $1,750 by promising them $5,000 per month as others enrolled. The FTC won a temporary injunction against the company.

Bergin enters Hall of Continuing Ed

Induction will take place later this month

By BETH WILD
News Writer

Thomas Bergin, dean emeritus of continuing education at the University of Notre Dame, was recently elected to the International Adult and Continuing Education Hall of Fame, located in Washington, D.C.

Bergin

The hall of fame, which honors men and women who have made lasting contributions to continuing education, was established in 1995, and Bergin is in its initial class of inductees.

A ceremony will be held on Oct. 29, in Charlotte, N.C., to formally initiate Bergin.

"It is an honor in that you are judged by your peers. It's not something that is easily accomplished when you are judged by a peer group."

The Continuing Education Hall of Fame is a tremendous organization as it relates to the internal progress of many universities.

It will involve sharing many kinds of resources," Bergin said.

A 1945 graduate of Notre Dame with degrees in Science and Business Administration, Bergin earned his master's degree in economics from the University of Vermont in 1947.

He received his Ph.D. from the Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship at Syracuse University in 1957.

Bergin began his career at the University as an instructor, and by 1952 he had earned the position of the Head of the Department of Business Administration.

He was named the Jesse James Professor of Business Administration in 1961 and was appointed to the Faculty Board in Control of Athletics in 1962.

Bergin was the founding director of the Center for Continuing Education at Notre Dame, and was named the Dean of Continuing Education in Jan. of 1964.

Through Bergin's leadership, the Center for Continuing Education has become a major conference center, helping to play a major role in the development of the University.

"The center has been extremely beneficial. People from around the world have been brought in for conferences at the center. It has also served as a focal point for many departmental activities," Bergin said.

In addition to his appointment to the Continuing Education Hall of Fame, Bergin was chosen to be a recipient of the National Medal of the Arts in 1994 by the National Endowment for the Arts thanks to his contributions to the cultural life of America. He received this award from President Clinton at the White House.

Outside his positions at Notre Dame, Bergin has served as a business advisor and consultant for numerous agencies and as a special consultant for the U.S. Department of Commerce in 1960 and 1961.

President Kennedy appointed him to the Advisory Board on Economic Development in Washington, D. C. in 1961. He is currently serving on the Boards of Directors for both the Skyline Corporation and Valley American Bank, where he is Chairman of the Audit Committee.

Bergin was a member and officer of the Michiana Arts and Science Council, which he helped to establish in 1967. In the 1970s, he partook in hearings before the Sub-Committee on Select Education for a White House Conference on the Arts. He was given a six year appointment by President Carter to the National Council on the Arts in 1979.

He also served on the Governor's Commission on the Arts under the last three governors.

Bergin has published a number of works covering a range of topics including business, economics, art and education.

In addition, he has published articles or contributed editorial comments to Business Week, The New York Times, and The Chicago Tribune.

Bergin was married to Barbara Barrett in 1923. They have four children.

Arnold family donates $2 million to Libraries

Special to The Observer

Notre Dame has received a $2 million commitment from Edward and Suzanne Arnold of Lebanon, Pa., to endow the directorship of the University Libraries.

"We are deeply grateful for the Arnolds' overwhelming generosity," said Notre Dame president, Father Edward Malloy. "The endowment of the Edward and Suzanne Arnold Directorship of the University Libraries will benefit thousands of Notre Dame students, faculty and staff for generations to come."

"The kindness of the Arnolds will make the library an even finer University facility," said

Father Theodore Hesburgh, president emeritus of the University. "I can be a little more grateful than others because I spend most of my days working here in the library, which seems to get better each year."

Edward Arnold, chairman, president and chief operating officer of Arnold Industries in Lebanon, Pa., is a 1961 Notre Dame graduate and a member of the advisory council for the University Libraries. He and his wife, Suzanne, have five children. A previous benefaction from Mr. and Mrs. Arnold made possible the libraries' E.H. and Suzanne Arnold Family Endowment for Germanic Studies.

ground and the issue of who gets funded and who does not get funded and gets silenced does not end at the campus gate."

The Bradley Foundation funded Right Reason, a conservative student journal at Notre Dame, last year, and is, according to Biddick "interested in forming conservative, racist, homophobic, misogynistic."

According to Daniel Moloney, editor-in-chief of Right Reason, the Bradley Foundation does not fund Right Reason this year.

Ava Preacher, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Letters, discussed the lack of reference to sexual orientation in the nondiscrimination clause the appears in University publications, claiming that "the University's refusal to include the clause is a form of discrimination."

In addition, she cited the University's denial of GLND/SMC's application for official recognition, comparing the University's idea that the group members meet to "act on their inclinations" to that of "a group of alcoholics meeting to get drunk."

"Repression of any student is unjust and illegal," she said.

She further claimed that the University's argument of the use of Biblical doctrine to dictate policy is not universal, because dorm-sponsored SYRs advocate "drinking and sex outside the bonds of marriage."

Father John Donato, a Holy Cross priest in the South Bend area and graduate business student at Notre Dame, announced his homosexual at the forum. He described his desire to be "free to worship... without fear... of being rejected because I am gay."

He mentioned that silence is often preferred to truth.

"There is a subtle and insidious way that our fear of sexual-ity has bound us up and makes us unfree," Donato said. "Out of the shame-filled silence, the gut reaction is to lie, hide, or ignore what we are."

Although homosexuality has become a heated political issue, Donato says that "[it] is not my problem. It is someone else's fear talking."

Theologically speaking, he is glad the Catholic Church has finally started to clarify its position on sexual orientation, allowing people to search for the truth of who they are.

"Simply and clearly the Church upholds the dignity of every person. In the face of fear and discrimination, as we surely find at the University of Notre Dame, all I can do is trust... that we would be free from fear," Donato said. "If we cannot uphold the truth, what kind of God do we believe in?"

Donato is the second Holy Cross priest in recent months to declare his homosexuality, superceding Father David Garrick's announcement last spring. Garrick, a professor in the communications and theater department, made public his sexual orientation in a letter to The Observer dated April 4.

Senior Gina Rucavado described the terms and conditions under which a student comes out at Notre Dame as being unlike those anywhere else. She stated that a place like Notre Dame — where any person can feel free to talk frankly and negatively about homosexuals and their lifestyle — is not a safe, accepting place.

She claimed that the University has an ethical standing that does not cater to all students.

"If you have an exclusive ethics, one that excludes even one person, it is a power that works against that one person. How long will it take Notre Dame to act ethically on behalf of all of us?" Rucavado asked.

Sean Gallavan, co-chair of GLND/SMC, described Notre Dame as a "campus where everyone hides, where speaking is bad and silence is good. And Notre Dame has yet to recognize the differences between students as strong points."

He, too, noted the lack of a reference to sexual orientation in the nondiscrimination policy, claiming that it is "hurtful," and stated that this, along with the University's denial of GLND/SMC's student group application, is a blatant form of inequality.

"They are trying to hide behind mystical interpretations of the Bible, and by not recognizing the group, the administration has made something very clear — that we are not equal and that what becomes our defining trait on this campus is our homosexuality," Gallavan said.

Gallavan hopes that during "Coming-Out Week" this week, the gay and lesbian community can show the University that "this is not a disorder — this is who we are."

The forum, "Free Speech In and Out of the Closet" was sponsored by the gender studies department and took place in DeBartolo Hall.

would be more common here, than in sunnier places."

However, with midterms approaching and waves of homesickness affecting students, it is important that students learn to distinguish between "depression and the blues," according to Mascotte.

"If the symptoms are getting in the way of functioning, and if negative feelings are getting in the way living the kind of life you want," individuals should seek counseling, she said.

Focusing on the educational component of the program, the Screening Day is divided into three parts.

A video, with individuals speaking on their experiences with depression, will run throughout the day in the LeMans lobby. At 10:50 a.m. and 3:55 p.m., Dr. Richard Hubbard, the clinical supervisor of the Counseling and Career Development Center, will present a lecture on the symptoms and causes of depression.

Screening sessions will take place at 10:50 a.m., 3:50 p.m. and 3:55 p.m., where students will complete a confidential, anonymous written test. Following the test, which makes use of the Zung Depression Self-Rating Scale, students will go over the results with a staff counselor.

Last year, 15 students volunteered for screening; and 13 of those students were encouraged to follow through with counseling.

The Center encourages that all students, particularly Social Work and Psychology majors, take advantages of the educational programming offered, even if students do not opt to participate in the screening.

"The educational programming is important for the students, because they may have friends or family that suffer from clinical depression," said Mascotte.

That fact is accurate according to statistics from the National Institute of Mental Health. According to their figures, one in 10 adults suffers from depression, with women experiencing depression twice as often as men.

"Depression can hit anyone, regardless if they're male or female, rich or poor, intelligent or otherwise. It's non-discriminating," said Mascotte.

National Depression Screening Day is sponsored by AARP, American Psychiatric Association, Harvard Medical School Department of Psychiatry, McLean Hospital, National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, National Depressive and Manic-Depression Association, the National Institute of Mental Health and the Mental Health Association.

All activities will take place in the Counseling and Career Development Center, located in LeMans Hall.

Betty L. Green, a registered nurse, National Breast Cancer Coalition board member and Breast Cancer Advocate introduced Indiana's Third District Representative, Tim Roemer. Advocates are "fighters for the eradication of breast cancer" and active lobbyists in Congress for increased funding for research.

"It is the grass roots movement...that has helped fund research," Roemer stated. He went on to point out the significant increase in congressional funding for breast cancer to the National Institute of Health, from $87 million in 1990 to approximately $400 million this year. "It is the people fighting in the trenches" that made such advancements possible," Roemer said.

The symposium concluded with a song by the reflecting pool, followed by a candlelight procession to the Grotto.

Notre Dame's efforts in the fight against breast cancer will continue later this week. "Just Peachy - Cooking Up A Cure Cookbook", which raises money for the fight against breast cancer, will be sold at the bookstore, and Regis Philbin will be signing copies there on Saturday at 11 a.m.

Hesburgh's Brownies and John Cougar Mellencamp's "Vacuum Cookies," two examples of recipes in the book, will also be available on Saturday.

First American troops withdraw from Bosnia

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
Associated Press Writer

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — American military forces began the long process of withdrawing from Bosnia on Wednesday, with about 200 soldiers and 100 vehicles leaving for their home base in Germany.

They are among the 15,000 American men and women, mostly from the 1st Armored Division, serving with the NATO-led international force sent to Bosnia last December.

President Clinton's had promised to bring the soldiers home within a year.

Col. Larry Icenogle, spokesman for the multinational forces in the U.S. sector, said the troop movement was the first step in actually decreasing the American forces — the largest national contingent in the peace force.

The homeward troop flow will continue until just before the municipal elections Nov. 22-24, Icenogle said in Tuzla, where U.S. forces are based.

At the same time, 5,000 soldiers from the U.S. 1st Infantry Division will move into Bosnia to cover the armored division's pullout. Troops from both units will be in the country to help provide security for the local elections, Icenogle said.

"The redeployment of Task Force Eagle begins today," said a statement from the Tuzla headquarters, naming two artillery units and a military police company. They will go to a staging base in Taszar, Hungary, for maintenance before returning to bases in Baumholder and Hlanau, Germany.

Other American units had already been sent home from Bosnia as the force shifted its mandate since December, but those units were replaced by others with different capabilities.

The 53,000-member peace force was sent to Bosnia and staging areas in Croatia and Hungary with a one-year mandate that began on Dec. 20, 1995. NATO political leaders have not decided what, if any, military force should remain beyond that, though most commanders on the ground agree some kind of force is necessary.

Republican members of Congress were angered last week with the Pentagon announcement that it was sending a 5,000-member "covering force" to protect the 1st Armored Division as it withdraws.

Quake rocks Middle East

One killed, 21 injured in Mediterranean earthquake

By ALEX EFTY
Associated Press Writer

NICOSIA, Cyprus — A strong Mediterranean earthquake rattled much of the Middle East on Wednesday, killing an Egyptian whose house collapsed on top of her and injuring 21 Cypriots.

Buildings swayed in Cyprus and panicked residents ran outside in Egypt, the two places that sustained the worst damage from the magnitude-6.8 quake.

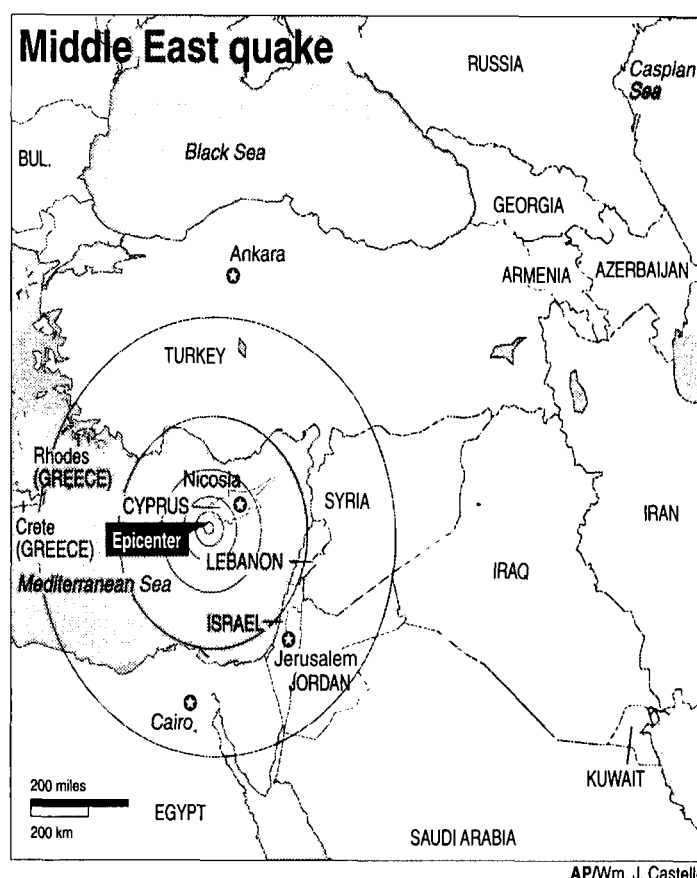

The temblor also was felt across Israel, Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, western Turkey and the Greek islands of Rhodes and Crete.

The U.S. Geological Survey said the 3:10 p.m. earthquake occurred in the Mediterranean Sea about 20 miles southwest of the Cypriot port of Paphos and some 80 miles from Nicosia.

"I was terrified," said Emma Nicolaou, who runs a photo shop in Nicosia. "I tried to run out, but I could hardly walk, the ground was shaking so much."

Hundreds of miles away in Egypt, people similarly panicked.

"I felt a tremendous shake, the door was banging and my chair was moving around. Everyone ran down the stairs and the elevators got stuck," said Magdi Awaida, who works on the 22nd floor of the Radio and Television building in downtown Cairo.

Police reported a 40-year-old villager was killed when her house collapsed in Faheem, north of Cairo.

Twenty-one people were hurt in Paphos in southwestern Cyprus, the port closest to the epicenter.

State-run Cyprus radio said landslides blocked some mountain roads, nearly toppled churches and damaged several buildings.

The region has a history of deadly tremors. On Nov. 22, an earthquake of magnitude-6.2 rocked the Gulf of Aqaba, damaging buildings in Jordan, Egypt and Israel and killing eight people.

A quake that struck Cairo on Oct. 12, 1992, killed more than 450 people and injured 4,000.

Wednesday's quake was felt for more than two minutes, with a mild aftershock following about an hour later.

A quake of magnitude-6 can cause severe damage if it is centered under a populated area.

Magnitude-7 indicates a major earthquake capable of widespread, heavy damage.

■ NORTHERN IRELAND

IRA demonstrates defiance

By SHAWN POGATCHNIK
Associated Press Writer

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — For eight months, Catholics and Protestants watched the Irish Republican Army's renewed bombing campaign play out on distant English battlefields.

Belfasters hoped it would stay that way.

But as anti-terrorist police gradually got the upper hand in London — raiding IRA safe houses, arresting 13 suspects and seizing 10 tons of explosives — a demoralized IRA returned home to demonstrate its defiance.

Detonating two car bombs Monday inside the British army's command center, Thiepval Barracks, was an IRA coup that will keep the secret society united, for now, on a war footing.

However, the outlawed group's political leaders in the Sinn Fein party are losing hard-won friends and any hope of gaining admission to Northern Ireland's political negotiations.

More immediately, Catholic civilians fear "loyalist" paramilitary groups, which draw support from pro-British Protestant turf, will respond by killing Catholics.

"The dogs in the street know this attack was designed to provoke loyalists into action," said Gary McMichael, leader of a party linked to the largest pro-British paramilitary group, the Ulster Defense Association.

Internet plagued by political information

By ELIZABETH WEISE
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO
When Bob Dole suggested young people get involved in the campaign by tapping into his World Wide Web page, his techno-appeal might have seemed aimed at some untouched pool of potential voters.

But rather than being a vast army of nonpolitical twentysomethings ripe for the picking, Internet users turn out to be older, educated and more likely to vote than the population overall. They also may be less easily swayed than campaign workers might like.

Forget the image of the typical Web surfer as a latte-drinking Generation X'er who doesn't read newspapers. The debates on HotWired, a Web-based magazine based in San Francisco, turn that notion on its head.

"They're media junkies!" said Heather Irwin, who is covering the race for Netizen, HotWired's political "channel."

"We go into the (discussion) threads and we're amazed because they're debating at a level above most journalists. We all thought it was going to be a lot of twentysomethings who don't know about politics and don't care. But they come in with facts and figures — they've gone out and done research," Irwin said.

In fact, Web users are distinctly wealthier and more educated than the general population. Income and education correlate with political activity, which means there's a high correlation between using the Internet and a propensity to vote, said Roger Hurwitz, a researcher at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge.

Heather Irwin

He's studying how the public uses the White House on-line document network.

A census study in 1994 found that people with modems were 50 percent more likely to vote than those who did not, Hurwitz said.

Which means that the people on line are probably the same people who already take the time to read position papers and watch C-SPAN and CNN — people who probably already know whom they want for president.

VP hopefuls face off in debate

By JOHN KING
Associated Press Writer

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla.
Vice President Al Gore and Jack Kemp differed politely but pointedly over abortion and affirmative action Wednesday night in an energetic debate that offered sharply contrasting views of President Clinton's first term.

Neither abortion nor affirmative action had come up in Sunday night's debate between Clinton and GOP nominee Bob Dole, but both issues generated spirited exchanges between the campaign understudies.

Although both Dole and Kemp are on record supporting a constitutional amendment outlawing abortion, Kemp said such a dramatic change was not in the cards.

"There is no consensus," Kemp said. "A constitutional amendment would not pass. We must use persuasion, not intimidation." That remark, while perhaps an accurate reflection of the country's political environment, was certain to alienate Christian conservative leaders who have been urging Dole and Kemp to draw sharper contrasts with Clinton on abortion and other social issues.

Affirmative action is another such issue, and Gore moved quickly to put Kemp on the defensive on that point.

The vice president recalled that Kemp had criticized a California ballot initiative rolling back affirmative-action programs but later fell in line with Dole's support for it after joining the GOP ticket. Gore said he wished Kemp had convinced Dole to change his position instead.

"With all due respect, I do not believe Abraham Lincoln would have adopted Bob Dole's position to end all affirmative action," Gore said, promoting Clinton's "mend it, don't end it," approach.

Kemp and Gore faced off in St. Petersburg's bayfront Mahaffey Theater. Reform Party vice presidential nominee Pat Choate was excluded, on grounds he and Ross Perot did not have a realistic chance to win the election.

The debate was carried by three major broadcast networks. But there was competition on Fox, which carried the first game of the National League Championship series.

For activists in both parties, the evening had an inescapable subplot. Gore, 48, is all but certain to seek the Democratic presidential nomination in four years. And if Dole loses to Clinton, the 61-year-old Kemp would be considered the top early prospect for the next Republican nomination.

DEBATE '96

Gore was declared a clear winner by all seven high school and college debate coaches who judged the debate for The Associated Press. In a quick poll conducted by ABC, 50 percent said Gore won the showdown, 27 percent viewed Kemp as the winner and 21 percent called it a draw.

Dole, watching the debate from suburban Chicago, applauded Kemp for outlining sharp differences on tax and other economic policies. "I'm very proud of him," Dole said. As for Gore, Dole said, "He did a good job of promoting more government, tax-and-spend liberal policies, more regulation."

For all the speculation about campaign 2000, Kemp and Gore were determined to keep the focus on Clinton and Dole.

"This economy is overtaxed, over-regulated," Kemp said in making the case for Dole's plan to cut taxes 15 percent across the board. Kemp said the economy was growing a feeble 2.5 percent a year under Clinton.

Gore, in turn, said repeatedly that Dole and Kemp were offering a "risky $550 billion tax scheme" that would "blow a hole in the deficit and cause much deeper cuts in Medicare, Medicaid, education and the environment."

Kemp protested that Clinton and Gore were practicing "demagoguery" in trying to frighten older Americans.

Gore promoted Clinton's plan for targeted tax cuts to help low- and middle-class families pay for college. Kemp countered that government should not engage in "social engineering" by picking winners and losers through tax policy.

Kemp fudged when asked if he agreed with Dole's call for a repeal of the family leave law. "I wouldn't have voted for it; it is in place," Kemp said. The law is popular with working women, a critical constituency.

Reform group analyzes ads

By CONNIE CASS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON
An independent counsel is needed to investigate the millions of dollars the Democratic and Republican parties have spent on TV advertising for President Clinton and Bob Dole, a campaign reform group said today.

Both presidential candidates "engaged in an illegal scheme to circumvent federal campaign finance laws" by using the parties to pay what should have been their own campaign expenses, officials of Common Cause told reporters.

Each candidate agreed to limit his primary campaign spending to $37.1 million as one of the terms for receiving millions of dollars in matching funds from the taxpayers.

Neither Clinton nor Dole counted millions more in party spending against that limit. Each party contends that its ads fall under spending legally allowed for "party-building" activities that don't directly endorse a candidate and can be paid for with corporate donations.

But Common Cause argued that the ads were coordinated with the candidates and therefore amounted to campaign spending that is subject to the limit.

"Common Cause believes that the violations that occurred during the 1996 presidential election are the most massive violations of the campaign finance laws since the Watergate scandal," said Ann McBride, president of the nonpartisan, non-profit group.

She called on the Justice

Department to appoint an independent counsel to investigate the charges, instead of leaving them in the hands of the Federal Election Commission, which is composed of three Democratic and three Republican commissioners.

The FEC already is examining complaints — filed by the candidates' political opponents — that both Clinton and Dole violated the presidential primary spending limits. The FEC could fine the campaigns or recommend criminal charges, if it finds wrongdoing. But that process can take months or even years.

FBI questions families of TWA casualties

By PAT MILTON
Associated Press Writer

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. — After nearly three months of coming up dry in the investigation of TWA Flight 800, the FBI has informed the grieving relatives of the dead that agents will start asking them questions.

"We need the victims to be part of our team," said James Kallstrom, an FBI assistant director. "We want to obtain any information that they think may be of value to us."

Kallstrom, who is leading the criminal probe into the cause of the July 17 explosion that killed all 230 people aboard, said the delay in interviewing relatives came because agents were focused on other areas and because he wanted to spare the family members for as long as possible.

In a two-page letter sent last week to relatives, Kallstrom expressed his condolences and informed them that they would be contacted to set up an appointment in the next few weeks.

"An event such as this leaves all of us with many questions but with few answers," Kallstrom wrote.

"You made our commitment as professional investigators that we will spare no effort to answer one of those questions: What caused this terrible tragedy?"

In addition to trying to find out whether the crash was caused by a bomb, a missile or a mechanical malfunction, agents have been considering other scenarios — such as whether it was an individual crime motivated by revenge, jealousy, insurance fraud or even suicide.

As part of the preparation for asking tough questions, about 50 FBI agents attended a three-hour sensitivity session with family members from two prior plane disasters.

"We hope that they understand we want to do a professional job, but with as much gentleness and compassion as we can," Kallstrom said. "We didn't want to repeat what some victim's families said was offensive treatment in the past by law enforcement."

Victoria Cummock of Coral Gables, Fla., said she got cold, even rude treatment from FBI agents after her husband perished in the Pan Am Flight 103 bombing over Lockerbie, Scotland, eight years ago.

"I felt like I lost my husband and my country," said Cummock, who participated in the FBI sensitivity sessions. "They came unannounced to my door and told me, 'We are not here to answer your questions. We are here for you to answer ours, thank you very much.'"

Environment made top priority

Law to protect Grand Canyon's Colorado River

By JEFF SHAIN
Associated Press Writer

PHOENIX

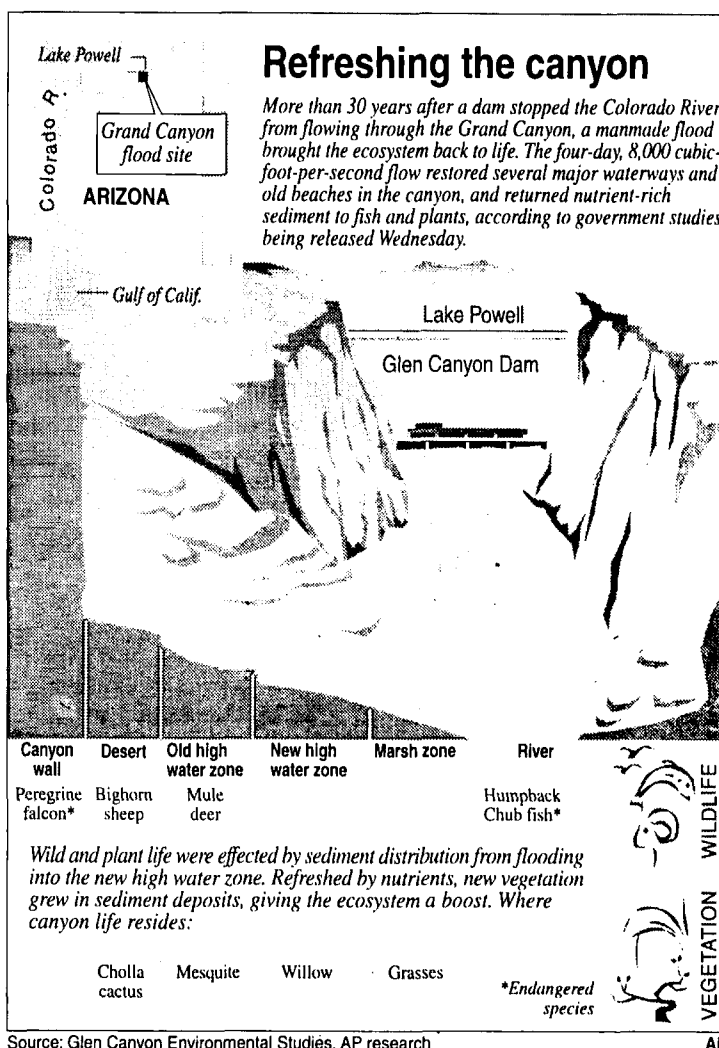

Marking a "sea change" in the way the nation's dams are operated, Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt signed new regulations Wednesday giving environmental concerns precedence over power needs in managing the Colorado River's flow through the Grand Canyon.

The landmark measure, restricting a power cooperative's ability to send wildly fluctuating amounts of water through the Glen Canyon Dam, is expected to serve as a blueprint for dam operations across the United States.

"We have now provided protection to the Colorado River," Babbitt said. "This marks a sea change in the way we view the operation of large dams. We have shown they can be operated for environmental purposes as well as water capture and power generation."

The order follows six years of research into the environmental changes caused by the Glen Canyon Dam since it began operating in 1963, turning what was once a red, muddy river into a clear, green waterway.

The studies, including a man-made flood last March, concluded that the canyon's ecosystem had been choked by three decades of extreme daily fluctuations in water releases from the dam, along with the absence of natural seasonal flooding.

The artificial flood returned nutrient-rich sediment to the river, reviving old beaches and creating several new ones. It also revived habitats for endangered fish to breed in some of the backwaters.

Until the studies began — and interim restrictions were put in place in 1991 — the Glen Canyon Dam was operated according to the power needs of the West's growing population, abruptly raising water levels to provide more electricity when people usually turn on air conditioners and cook dinner.

NEW YORK
Six scientists — five of them Americans — won Nobel Prizes on Wednesday for discovering soccer ball-shaped molecules dubbed "buckyballs" and a strange form of helium that could shed light on the universe's first few instants.

Two Texans and a Briton won the chemistry prize for discovering a family of carbon molecules that spawned a new field of study. Formally known as fullerenes and informally called buckyballs, the odd-shaped molecules were named for architect R. Buckminster Fuller because of their resemblance to his geodesic domes.

The physics prize went to three U.S. scientists for discovering that at extremely low temperatures a form of helium can flow without losing energy to friction. That finding has had unexpected applications to theories about the universe's earliest moments, and opened a window into a weird subatomic realm.

"It's fundamental knowledge about how matter works," said Russell Donnelly, a physicist at the University of Oregon who taught one of the physics laure-ates decades ago. "I think it's long, long overdue."

The chemistry prize was shared by Harold W. Kroto, 57, who teaches at Sussex University in England, and Robert F. Curl, Jr., 63, and Richard E. Smalley, 53, of Rice University in Houston. The three discovered buckyballs at Rice in 1985.

"It's what every kid who had a chemistry set dreams of. There's no doubt about it, it's marvelous," Curl said in Houston.

Buckyballs haven't become a critical part of daily life, but chemists predict that fullerene technology is on the horizon. Labs around the world are working on ways to apply them.

Among other things, they are working on using buckyballs to conduct electricity without resistance or to deliver medicine into the body. Scientists might even be able to turn buckyballs into diamonds or string together a tubular type of fullerene to create super-strong fibers.

"What it does is it gives you a building block that can be employed for a number of possibilities," said Stuart Staley, a chemist at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

Midwest's deformed frogs puzzle biologists

By BETH SILVER
Associated Press Writer

HENDERSON, Minn.
Bruce Nelson was catching frogs for catfish bait last year when he realized something was horribly wrong: Some of the frogs had stumps for legs, and others had as many as four tangled hind legs.

"You see deformed things all the time in nature, but nothing like this," Nelson said.

All across Minnesota and into neighboring Wisconsin, South Dakota and Quebec, scientists and locals are seeing the same kind of grotesquely misshapen limbs, along with frogs with tails, missing or shrunk eyes, and smaller sex organs.

In fact, scientists have had a hard time finding wetlands in Minnesota with no deformed frogs. Most recently, deformed frogs were found in Vermont.

"It scares me," said Judy Helgen, a research scientist with the Minnesota Pollution Control Agency. "I'm at different levels of getting a chill down my spine."

Scientists aren't sure what's causing the deformities. The theories run the gamut from pesticides to parasites to radiation from ozone depletion, or some combination of factors.

What worries many around the state is whether humans are in danger, too.

"There's a reasonable assumption that if there's an external substance influencing amphibian development, it could influence human development," said David Hoppe, who is on a state-financed team of scientists researching the problem.

So far, little has been discovered. The federal Environmental Protection Agency plans to do its own study.

Students from the Minnesota New Country School in Le Sueur, in the heart of the state's farm country, first reported the deformed leopard frogs during a field trip to a wetland last year.

■ WHEN PIGS FLY . . .

Things worth falling for: Memories of a friend

It's fall, and I've started thinking about Heather again. It might be the cold, or just the change of seasons, but I've been stopping in front of the Grotto and staring at the candles lately, watching the wax drip and wondering how it is that someone can die in less than the time it takes for a flame to flicker out.

Bernadette Pampuch

I used to think that there are people who die with a burst of light, and some who just stop twinkling far too early, and that Heather was one of the latter. It wasn't one of those momentous deaths that you read about in the papers; not a dozen schoolchildren gunned down in some random act of violence, not some outrage to rally behind, just a high schooler whose heart stopped beating one day at the lake. Heather was the girl with crazy freckles who sat next to me in art class, and then Heather was the girl that was gone.

There's not much I remember from high school now that isn't a blur, locker combinations and the homeroom bell and all. I stopped thinking about passing notes and signing yearbooks when I came to college, but sometimes little things will set me off. Senior pictures; not the ones I had taken last week, standing in line at exactly 1:15 to be snapped three, four, five times, but the ones from high school when my mother fussed over me for hours and the photographer made me feel special.

That's what Heather's pictures were like, the ones her parents gave to us after the funeral: Heather in her dress clothes, Heather in soft light, Heather in color, black-and-white. I have them in a box at home beneath newspaper clippings of obituaries and mementos from Mass.

There are ribbons in that box, red ones. Those are left over from a campaign we worked on in ninth and tenth grade, junior and senior year almost. Students Against Driving Drunk. I think it was the reason I met Heather in the first place, even though I'm inclined to think it could just as well have been first-period art class. I don't remember; I just recall a lot of discussions about soap operas and TV theme songs sung too early in the morning to have been a part of any normal school routine.

There is a copy of my Teen Creed in that box, too, the one my mother gave me sometime junior year. Heather borrowed it once, copied down the last line and gave it back. It reads, "If you don't stand for something, you'll fall for anything." I never gave that Creed much thought, just got back to the little daily trials of high school and weekly meetings with the Pep Club and the Honor Society and sometimes SADD, and Heather.

We served as committee chairpersons at the same time, planned activities through the year, tied red ribbons on cars. There was the weekend we kept the left-over hamburger coupons from a seat-belt safety campaign and made a run for Wendy's, Heather with a sack of free burgers the size of a car.

I've never forgotten to juggle, something she taught me once (a long time ago) that I perfected in the back of Ed Nowak's art class with two erasers and her shoe. She juggled everything better than I ever could.

Heather was one of those people in my life that I never gave a second thought to being there tomorrow; she died one day in the summer before our senior year of high school, out at the lake with her family in Michigan. A problem with her heart, a hole where there shouldn't have been one, nothing that could have been detected or avoided or forewarned. I saw her a few days before she died, at a meeting for SADD at our friend Kristin's house where we got together to finish off the summer and plan what we could do for the next year.

Every time I juggle, I remember how she taught me first one ball, then two, then another. Never more than you can handle at one time. I remember her every time I drive through Wendy's, and every time I see a red ribbon tied on a car. It reminds me of all her work with SADD.

It's been years now, and we all forget. The newspaper clippings are turning yellow and my mind keeps slipping, but I heard some country singer belting out the lyrics to a song last week when I was driving back to campus down 31. "You've got to stand for something or you'll fall for anything..." I forget the rest, but I think Heather would have liked the song.

Somehow, years later, I've managed to resurrect her here in South Bend, Indiana, so far from home. That's what it's all about, then, not about having some reason for her death to rage against but about having a song lyric run through my mind every time I start to waver over getting involved in a new project or every time I try to give someone a good reason why they should volunteer or get involved in a cause. It's the reason I've been telling all my friends lately to appreciate the people in their lives, because sometimes you find out they're gone before you get to thank them for what they've done.

So Mr. and Mrs. Shore, your daughter did get to go to college, and I was wrong — Heather was not some candle that sputtered out in the dark; she is one of those lights at the Grotto that keep burning on and on.

THE PROMISE RING

30° Everywhere

(out of five)

Courtesy of Jade Tree Records

In 1985 Guy Picciotto, lead soul-bearer of seminal punk band Rites of Spring, sang "And if I started crying would you start crying?" and a new genre of music was born.

"Emo" music has since been overgrown, harvested, engineered, and reaped almost to the extent of the Dust Bowl of rock, punk-pop.

Legions of kids in used postal worker clothes have taken up second-hand instruments, played with their eyes closed, and harmonized screams of loss, love, and liberalism.

Wisconsin's Promise Ring is the Nutra-Sweetened, Prozac variety of emo. Lyrical themes of barefeet, spring, lips, coke, boys and girls, swimming, and summer frost the palm-muted riffs and fret-sliding melodies. In concert, the band bounces, smiles, lisps, and winks to a crowd used to just swaying at the knees.

Promise Ring plays as tight as the rubber bands in a golf ball.

The opening chord repetition of "Everywhere in Denver" drives the distance over a snare-heavy drum beat, with perfectly placed breaks and a mountaining climax.

The pop and spring of their live shows is finally evident on 30° Everywhere, the debut full length, after a handful of compilation appearances and seven inches. The boinging bass lines of "Red Paint", "Anne Will You Sing", and "Between Pacific Coasts" take notes from professors of pop-punk, Jawbreaker and Operation Ivy.

With an ear for melody and a penchant for a hook, Promise Ring get the most out of six strings without relying on beating them to death. Slightly alternating chord pickings and finger slides bend, lift, and break from clean treble to powered distortion and put all five fingers to use, unlike some other bands that could probably play their guitars with paws.

Singer Jason Gnewikow is the largest lump to swallow, with his straining, overworked pitches. However, sincerity and playing talent always deserve stardom and attention. Unfortunately, in today's marketed music world that means very little.

MANOWAR

Louder than Hell

(out of five)

Courtesy of Geffen Records

Heavy metal has run its course (not to say whether this is necessarily good or bad, though)

The new generation of so-called hard-core metal bands, such as Type o Negative, Sepultura, and Corrosion of Conformity, have added and alternative feel to the music, and don't have the same edge (or the same group of teenage boys to market themselves to) as did Motorhead, Black Sabbath, Iron Maiden and Judas Priest.

Yet, according to Manowar on the album Louder than Hell, "The gods made heavy metal and saw that it was good. They said to play it louder than hell; we promised that we would." Now, I don't know which gods they are in touch with but I wish they would share the information with today's, other metal bands.

If you are not a metal fan this album will do nothing for you. Yet, if you have any appreciation for the roots of heavy metal this will be a relief from the alternative/metal sound that is so abundant.

The songs rely almost entirely on the rhythm section for a powerful percussive sound. The bass tends to repeat the same riff through entire songs. Each line is choppy and driving: perfect for sporting a tough-guy frown and banging one's head.

Everything is written in 4/4 time and the drummer is sure to let you know this rather blatantly. It's not a lot of substance, just a lot of power.

The guitar is mixed into the back of all of this with the obligatory solos being just about the only time that the same bar chord isn't used.

In the proper metal fashion the vocals sound like Darth Vader yelling and singing about steel, blood, power, and rebellion.

The song "King" makes an attempt at being the next rock 'n' roll epic yet after its emotional piano backed intro, it falls back into the simple percussive mode of the rest of the songs.

Sure, it's not the best music critically speaking, but then it's not supposed to be. It's supposed to be rebellious, loud and obnoxious for your parents.

In our day this style of metal is a novelty and no longer a way of life. Yet, if you are a fan of any old school metal you should appreciate this.

MARIACHI SOL DE MEXICO

La Nueva Era

(out of five)

In the genre of Mexican Mariachi music, there are certain groups that have emerged to the forefront in becoming the type of advertisement that mariachi music needs. One of the premier groups leading the way is the world renown Mariachi Sol de Mexico.

Mariachi Sol's latest release, La Nueva Era Del Mariachi Sol De Mexico, serves as a great illustration of why this music steadily continues to rise in popularity and appreciation.

Jose Hernandez, musical director and arranger for Mariachi Sol, has composed great original songs for this latest release.

Traditionally, Mariachi groups play the inherited songs with new arrangements. However, with Hernandez' musical leadership, Mariachi Sol has combined the traditional with the new.

These new songs sing the traditional mariachi themes. For example, in "Mi Jalisco" about the state of Jalisco, the birthplace of mariachi music, its themes of patriotism and homage to Mexico are typical characteristics of mariachi music.

Of course, no mariachi CD would be complete without songs explaining the pains and triumphs of love. Mariachi Sol sings these songs passionately, some being original and others classics.

What mariachi music lovers will enjoy from Mariachi Sol's latest is the group's break from the conventional into new streams of mariachi music. Hernandez again displays his mastery of Mariachi arrangements, as the group plays a tribute to Glenn Miller. Glen Miller songs such as "Moonlight Serenade", and "In the Mood" are featured in this tribute.

Mariachi Sol is one of the larger Mariachi groups, and thus they have a beautiful orchestra like sound. The sixth track, "Poeta y Campesino," is a classical masterpiece written originally by Franz Von Suppe. Using Mariachi instrumentation, Mariachi Sol plays it with a unique style, and pure beauty. La Nueva Era Del Mariachi Sol De Mexico is a must have for Mariachi fans, and those who just like energetic and entertaining music.

BLACK 47

Green Suede Shoes

(out of five)

Courtesy of Mercury Records

Very few bands can combine strong activism with the kind of jumpy bar rock that makes audiences take to their feet and dance.

Black 47 pulls it off marvelously with their fourth album, Green Suede Shoes.

Make no mistake, Black 47, though definitely an Irish bar band, is very happy with its new home in New York City. Just about every song on the album contains some reference to the Big Apple.

New York fixtures such as Times Square, Reilly's (a bar that the band enjoys playing in), and even David Letterman figure prominently in the odd world of characters that the band has created for this album.

With the exceptions of "Brooklyn Girls", a love song; "Mo Bhrón", a quiet, traditional elegy; and "Rory", a paean to blues guitarist Rory Gallagher; each of the 14 songs on this album sound like old Irish drinking songs.

Beginning with the first few seconds of the title track (which is played accoustically as the last track) where a rock guitar is suddenly joined by Uilleann pipes, a tin whistle and banjo, the band shows its different influences: rock, reggae, blues, dixieland jazz and the traditional Celtic music of their homeland.

The only problem with the combination of styles is that lead singer Larry Kirwan tends to "speak-sing" and ignore the rhythm of a song. Often a listener will expect a musical break between lyrics, but Larry keeps rolling.

The most notable aspect of this album is the guest musicians and the odd mixture of rock and Celtic instruments. "Rory" features G.E. Smith, from the old Saturday Night Live Band, playing some blazing blues guitar licks. Seamus Egan, world-famous Celtic banjo player adds his talents to "Czechoslovakia" and "Five Points".

If you were not fortunate enough to catch this band when they played Alumni-Senior Club last year (a performance that had a profound impact on the band, as evidenced by the amount of times Notre Dame shows up on the album cover and interior photos) pick up this album and see what you missed.

WORLD WIDE WEB WATCH

New website celebrates freedom through rock 'n' roll

By ROCKY POP
Special to The Observer

The cold war is over. There is no ideological struggle for power on the world scene. In the entire history of mankind there has never been, and probably never will be, a more significant turn of events than this. But, as monumental as this fact is, it has no monument. Though it is a landmark in time it has no exact date. This ambiguity belittles the accomplishment. The lack of celebration leaves the world in an uncertain time, vulnerable to new conflict mongers. The sengers of official acknowledgement that we would get from a defining celebration would give us the confidence and clarity of vision to make the major changes and adjustments that the new reality demands. The new reality is borderless, unified, populous, unanimously in favor of freedom and various forms of democracy and connected by electronic media. The website www.surfmedia.com.rock-music is both the embodiment and the celebration of the new reality. The website offers a free download of the song "One," the definitive anthem of global unity and freedom. The single is one of thirteen songs on the album Population of Paradise which can be ordered directly from the website. This is an expression that has not been blocked, filtered, or distorted by large corporate structures and which can be received by the entire world. The nature of such an expression is significant because the media systems of the old reality pit one race against another, completely disregard the concepts of objectivity and factual representation, and generally promote conflict, chaos, and fear while highlighting vulgarity. All of this is in the interest of short term corporate profits and long term corporate control of the masses. In a reality such as the old one, artistic innovation and creativity are stifled in the name of risk-free investment. But the people are finally free of the tyrants of the media because the celebration has already begun. Who says rock 'n' roll can't change the world.

Percussion group hits it off at Snite

By MICHAEL ANDERSON and JULIE BRUBAKER
Accent Music Critics

Crumpled papers, beating of household objects, and a lot of yelling... Sounds like someone had a bad day. Actually, it was the Percussion Group visiting the Snite Museum. Last Sunday, the Percussion Group from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music rocked the Annenberg Auditorium — literally — there was so much noise that the gallery on the third floor of the Snite must have been shaking. Entering the stage while nearly tripping over their many props, the Percussion Group began with Russell Peck's Lift Off. Written in 1966, this drum piece really sounded like a helicopter lifting off the ground. The performers alternated loud and soft playing techniques to produce a quasi-stereo effect. Their amazing grasp of technique and control made the auditorium feel like it was in the center of a Native American tribal dance. The overall effect was very loud, and the silence was especially striking upon completion of this piece. Perhaps, the Fieldhouse mall might have been a better setting.

The next piece switched gears, from drums to 'thumb pianos.' UmcuLo Wa Bathatho (Music for Three) was written for the Percussion Group by a student of theirs from Zulu. They performed on tiny pianos (smaller than the size of a laptop computer) that were 'plucked' with the thumbs to produce a high pitched sound.

The melody was a traditional South African folk song that was spun into a bigger piece. The performers executed the cheerful piece without ever looking up or showing any expression. The full chords and intense sound made it apparent their thumbs were working very hard. UmcuLo Wa Bathatho began with shifting meter which provided the backdrop for the folk-like melody. Resting on many of the principles of minimalism, the texture was repetitive and became a hypnotizing piece of music.

The quality of the 'thumb piano' sound was ambiguous. We were not certain if it resembled music played on a Disneyland ride or music heard when your Nintendo character is swimming underwater. In sum, this piece required a great deal of concentration and the often underestimated skill of thumb-ear coordination.

The last piece that could be classified as traditional percussion music was the final piece on the program, Four Chilean Songs. This piece, performed simultaneously by all three on a huge Yamaha xylophone, was based on the ancient songs of the Andes Mountains. The four short songs depicted traditional life in Chile, yet had a striking revolutionary flair.

For this set of songs, percussionists Allen Otte and Russell Burge each played the xylophone with four mallets simultaneously — an amazing feat which they accomplished rather effortlessly.

The third piece in this set was particularly interesting. It depicted the rebuilding of the city of Managua after a volcano and combined the xylophone with hammering and sawing sounds. Overall, the piece was a rich musical experience that fully illustrated the story. It was arguably the most lyrical of that afternoon's despite the accompaniment of a saw and hammer.

It was in this way that the percussionists challenged the traditional definition of music.

Just what is music? A better question might be: what isn't music? Modern composers such as John Cage have argued that music is everything and anything. This means that when you walk across the quad, every sound you hear (even the piercing sounds of a dump truck in reverse) is music. Together, all these sounds form a 'symphony.'

The four middle pieces in the concert demonstrated that anything can be music.

I Read the News Today, Oh Boy was a 'piece' which consisted of the three men reading random words from the South Bend Tribune aloud and in rhythm, while acting out the scenario of reading the newspaper, and making 'crumbling' noises.

The point of the piece was to demonstrate that a daily and simple act, such as reading the paper, can have a 'melodic' and 'rhythmic' quality — the terms are used loosely.

The other three pieces, including a medley of John Cage works, were comprised of yelling, beating things (occasionally drums, mostly objects such as pine combs, gongs, pots, sleigh bells, old car parts, and coke cans), and acting out everyday scenarios, such as a game of blackjack.

They were certainly well-executed, definitely amusing (the little boy sitting in front of us couldn't stop laughing), and possibly musical. If the Percussion Group defines hammering, reading the newspaper, and playing cards as music, then where do we draw the line?

Maybe we shouldn't draw the line. Maybe the lesson here is to appreciate every sound for its musical qualities.

This includes classical music, modern music, rap, alternative music, the yelling of children on the playground, the sounds of cars speeding along the highway, the construction noises emitted from the stadium....

So the next time you're annoyed at some noise, remember that this same sound might be a theme in a John Cage composition. If anything can be music, then we should value every sound, even those we don't like.

Shaq brings the 'magic' to Lakers

By JIM LITKE
Associated Press Writer

Most people who leave town with too little accomplished and too much of someone else's money know enough to keep it to themselves. So mark this down as one more way in which Shaquille O'Neal is not like most people.

He took.

He ran.

He couldn't resist rubbing it in.

"I'm just glad to be playing now for people who know the game and know the business," Shaq said in an interview earlier this week with the Los Angeles Times.

NBA training camps just opened and the start of the season is still a month away. So it will be some time before the truth of that statement is known. Not the part about O'Neal being glad to play for the Lakers, of course, but the second part. That bit about the organization being so well-informed. Two months ago, Los Angeles signed Shaq to a seven-year, $121-million deal. If the past turns out to be prologue, what they will get for that sum is a little heartache and a lot of regrets.

At least that's the way things worked out for Orlando Magic. And this might be what the organization regrets most: For all the things the money lavished on Shaq through four seasons didn't buy — loyalty, appreciation, an NBA championship, — it didn't even guarantee his silence.

The Magic drafted O'Neal in 1992, turned over the keys to the house and let him do everything pretty much his way. The team ran the offense he wanted, surrounded him with the players he wanted, let him run off to attend to side businesses when he wanted, renegotiated his contract when he demanded and pretty much saw to it that Shaq was among the most-contented players in the league. Nothing unusual there.

Because it is a five-man game, basketball is one sport where an impact player is just that — both immediately and for a long time. And so teams where the tail appears to be wagging the dog are the rule and not the exception. It happens in towns where management is shrewd — think Michael Jordan in Chicago — and in towns where management is clueless — think everywhere Derrick Coleman has been. And it happened with Shaq in Orlando, with results somewhere in between.

Orlando made it to the playoffs for the first time in 1994, only to be swept out of the first round by Indiana. In 1995, the Magic made the finals, only to be swept by Houston. Earlier this spring, they made the conference finals against the Bulls ... and did their customary four-and-out swoon.

Not long after that, the bidding war with Los Angeles began. It was supposed to have ended when O'Neal passed up Orlando's last offer for $115 million. But then Magic general manager John Gabriel gave a speech somewhere and did some sniping at O'Neal. It struck a nerve the organization had been searching for since drafting Shaq; he responded with a ferocity he never showed in the fourth quarter of playoff games.

"Money isn't everything. I don't play for money," he said, which is what ballplayers always say but almost never mean.

"I can remember days growing up when I didn't have anything. I didn't have sneakers, I didn't have shorts, nothing. But I played. The money is there. It's great, don't get me wrong. But it was the best offer because of the players surrounding me, the staff, the organization."

O'Neal then knocked his old teammates, singling out Nick Anderson, for wanting the ball too often, and his former coach, Brian Hill, for encouraging that kind of play. It's called teamwork, though Shaq could not bring himself to pronounce the word in four seasons there.

"I used to go in the locker room and get on guys, and he would say, 'Don't do that. You're gonna hurt his feelings.' I said, 'Look, man, this is the professionals, bro. You're the coach. They've got to do what you say. If they don't do what you say, there's two places they can go — either the bench or to a new team. Period.'"

There it is, whether you wanted to know what caused the breakup or not. Magic team president Bob Vander Wiede said in a statement Tuesday night that his organization "will not respond to any further comment that Shaq might choose to make about his past with us."

Pancake Pace ready for Badgers

No. 2 Buckeyes look to continue winning streak

Associated Press Writer

MADISON, Wis.

Wisconsin defensive end and outside linebacker Tarek Saleh says he's working on ways to avoid becoming the latest "pancake" registered by Ohio State tackle Orlando Pace.

The No. 2 Buckeyes are keeping track of the times the 330-pound Pace dumps a defender as flat as a ... (you guessed it) pancake.

Going into Saturday's game with the Badgers, Pace has 29 pancakes in four games, including seven in the Buckeyes' 38-7 win over Penn State last Saturday.

So how does a defensive player stay out of Pace's pancake stats?

Saleh said the answer is simple: Don't go near him.

"Just basically stay away," Saleh said.

"For that split second after he gets his hands on you," Saleh explained, "if he gets his legs underneath him, then, he's going to body-slam you. And, then, you're done."

"Orlando has the special talent of playing his best football in big games," said Ohio State coach John Cooper. "We went his way a lot against Penn State and most of the time he buried whoever was across from him."

Pace, a 6-foot-6, 20-year-old junior from Sandusky, Ohio, was given a nickname by Cooper: "the Big Dog."

"He's by far the best offensive lineman that I've seen," Cooper said.

"He's probably the best technique player in football," said Notre Dame defensive end Melvin Dansby of Pace. "He's got great fundamentals and great feet."

"He's like an NFL player," Saleh said. "He's a technician. He knows his stuff. And he disguises so well."

Even a 330-pound opponent like Pace can be subtle, Dansby said.

"He's one of those passive blockers who tries to get position on you, and then he tries to slam you," Dansby said.

Can a defense compensate for Pace's giant presence?

"You really have a hard time doing that," said Wisconsin coach Barry Alvarez. "You have to anticipate what might happen, where the ball is going to be run and maybe overplay some people.

There has been some talk that Cooper may give Pace the chance to play fullback, maybe even carry the ball.

"I think he could be good at any position he played," said OSU nose tackle Luke Fickell. "He's got incredible athletic ability for somebody as big as he is. It's just obvious."

Just as obviously, Saleh knows what he has to do.

"I have to stay away from him," he said. "I just don't know if it's possible."

Campus Ministry...

Considerations...

MAYBE WE ALL HAVE SOMETHING TO LEARN FROM FRESHMEN

Not being a freshman, I was delighted to be a part of the Freshman Retreat which took place on campus this past weekend. The Freshman Retreat is an overnight retreat which gives first-year students at Notre Dame the opportunity to gather with their peers and to catch their breath, if you will. This past weekend's retreat, the sixth of its kind since the program began last year, had 51 participants. I had the privilege, along with nearly twenty Notre Dame students, of being on the retreat team.

For those of us far removed from our first year of college, it proved a reminder of the significant upheavals that such a transition presents, and still more, a rare opportunity to be reminded of the significant adventure upon which these young men and women have only recently embarked. Any temptation that I might have had before this weekend to idealize the first months of college were quickly dispelled but so, too, was any inclination I might have had to patronize this crowd. I was humbled by the honesty, by the vulnerability that they felt able to relate in such a setting, and by how much even first-year college students have to teach us about life and faith.

There were moments on this retreat that made me feel like there were significantly fewer than sixteen years since I was a first-year student at the University of St. Thomas in St. Paul, Minnesota. Some of what a first-year college student experiences is generalizable to any transition, but some is not. What I found myself most curious about is the degree to which the adjustment was helped or hindered by their being at Notre Dame. In some ways it's an inculturation process that affects both the new students and those of us who have been here. Inevitably, we are richly enhanced by the gifts and experience that each of them brings.

It seems only fitting that this group gather, and gather early in their life together at Notre Dame, to come to know each other, to share faith and experience, and to be familiarized with the opportunities that Notre Dame provides in the ways of faith and service. The team of sophomores, juniors, and seniors, many of whom spoke to the entire group and all of whom provided leadership in their respective small groups, modeled a remarkable degree of commitment to this place we call Notre Dame, and the values which we hold dear and so proudly proclaim.

I find myself wanting, on the one hand, to say something to the first-year students out there who will, in the future, have an opportunity to participate on a Freshman Retreat, and on the other, to speak to the rest of this community about how much we have to learn from them, and how important is our welcome of them. You are no doubt relieved to know that the space of this column forbids me from doing either. If there is to be an appeal here it is simply that we remember that all of us are in this together; and that the quality and care with which we receive and welcome the newest members of our community reflects powerfully the character of this community as a whole.

As a community committed to the Gospel of Jesus Christ, it is the responsibility of each of us to care for the other. The Freshman Retreat program provides one such opportunity, but there are many more. The Office of Campus Ministry and the Center for Social Concerns, among others, provide a multitude of opportunities to live out the faith we profess. It seems to me that it's worth our while to check them out. In the end, as I was, you may prove to be the one better served than those you sought to serve.

Nick looks to kick his way into record books

By BARRY WILNER
Associated Press Writer

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y.

Jan Stenerud was gone. In his place stood an untested Nick Lowery, who failed in trials with eight previous teams.

It was 1980, and Lowery remembers it like yesterday. "My first field goal was a 50-yarder for the Chiefs against Seattle," Lowery said Wednesday. "I remember running out on the field and I was almost crying. I was saying to myself, 'This is it. This is the moment you've wanted to happen. This is what you've been waiting for.'"

"There were a lot of people who had a lot of affection for Jan, as I did. And now there was myself instead of Jan."

"I just ran out there and said, 'Let it happen.' The wind was blowing right to left and I put it right through the uprights. When I came off the field, Mike Williams, a backup tight end, hugged me and lifted me right off the ground."

While Lowery isn't likely to make any more 57-yarders — at 40, his range might reach 50 yards on a good day — he is tied with Stenerud for the NFL record of 373 career field goals. On Sunday, as a New York Jet, Lowery might break the record of his idol in a game at Jacksonville.

It's a record 17 years in the making. "It's a blessing that I'm still playing," said Lowery, the most accurate kicker in league history, although he doesn't get many opportunities with the weak Jets. "There are a lot of great placekickers, guys like Matt Bahr and Kevin Butler and Eddie Murray who are not kicking now."

Lowery seemed an unlikely candidate to set records when he came out of Dartmouth in 1978. He flopped in a tryout with the Jets in training camp, then was released by Tampa Bay and Baltimore.

New England signed him and he appeared in two games, missing his only field goal try, making seven extra points.

The next year, he was unemployed, failing to hook on with Cincinnati, Washington, New Orleans and San Diego, along with unsuccessful second tries with the Bucs and Colts.

But in 1980, his strong leg earned him the job in Kansas City, ahead of Stenerud.

"He was the man, the best kicker," Lowery recalled. "Jan was tall and lanky like I am. I was very fortunate just to get the chance to compete for the job."

"When you are cut so many times, you realize it's a transient game. You have to always find ways to get better and never get complacent. You always feel you might be a few bad kicks from being out on the street."

Lowery has not been out on the street since that big debut against the Seahawks. He's made 373 of 465 field goals (80 percent) and 542 of 547 extra points. He has made 11 game-winning kicks in the final two minutes. His consistency has been remarkable and, despite his age, Lowery has shown no signals of slippage.

Buffalo signal caller to return

Kelly eager to return against Dolphins

By BUCKY GLEASON
Associated Press Writer

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y.

Jim Kelly has been waiting three weeks to play anyone, anywhere. It appears the Buffalo Bills' quarterback will get the best of both worlds Sunday.

Kelly, out with a hamstring injury since Sept. 19, is expected to start this week against the arch-rival Miami Dolphins in a critical matchup between the two AFC East rivals at Rich Stadium.

"When you haven't played well, you want to get back in there as soon as possible and try to get those erased from your memory," Kelly said. "I know we're 4-1, but my season starts this week."

If there's a game Kelly does not want to miss, it's the one against the Dolphins. Buffalo and Miami (3-2) have had one of the most heated rivalries for years, and the Bills have won 10 of the last 12 meetings at home.

Buffalo coach Marv Levy, as is his custom, refused to say whether his star quarterback would be ready Sunday. Levy wanted the Dolphins to make preparations for the veteran and second-year backup Todd Collins.

"The only reason I wouldn't start is if I aggravated it again," Kelly said. "Right now, the way they had taped and the way I felt, and the way my arm felt, I should be able to go. But it's a hamstring injury and could pop at any given time."

Kelly's last outing was one of the worst of his 11-year career. He threw four interceptions in a 24-6 loss to the Pittsburgh Steelers, and has since been the lowest-rated quarterback in the AFC.

The 36-year-old quarterback went through practice Wednesday with a heavily taped right leg. He took most of the snaps during the workout, and threw three passes of 60 yards or longer.

"He looked good. He looked sharp," Bills center Kent Hull said. "I know in the seven-on-seven drill, somebody said he completed 15 out of 16. That's a pretty good sign he's back."

Buffalo has played better defense and won with Collins in the last two weeks, while Miami has lost twice since quarterback Dan Marino sustained a broken ankle.

Collins completed 56 percent of his passes for 396 yards and one touchdown in victories over Dallas and Indianapolis. His 309 passing yards against the Colts helped send the game into overtime by moving the team 58 yards with no time-outs before Steve Christie kicked a field goal.

"I'm going to have to keep myself mentally ready and not fall into a mode where I'm going to relax and not get an opportunity to play," Collins said. "I'm not going to have the advantage to have the preparation during the week."

Kelly had problems getting the once-potent Bills offense moving in his first three games before he went down with a pulled hamstring during a non-contact passing drill in practice.

With Collins at quarterback, the Bills used an assortment of different formations that appeared more effective than Buffalo's traditional one-back, three receiver set to which Kelly is accustomed.

Buffalo is the lowest-scoring team in the league with a winning record, and has scored fewer points than it has allowed. The Bills are rated in the bottom third in 12 of the 17 offensive categories.

"I don't care what we do, we have to put the ball in the end zone," Kelly said. "We can't go through a stretch of games where we're scoring 10, 13, 16 points. I'm not used to doing that, and I know this team isn't."

LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP SERIES

Home teams triumph, one step closer to World Series

Patient Braves capitalize on Cards' mistakes

By BEN WALKER
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA

John Smoltz kept the Atlanta Braves close, then Javy Lopez cracked it open.

Lopez broke his bat on a tiebreaking, two-run single in the eighth inning and the Braves, behind yet another strong pitching performance, beat the St. Louis Cardinals 4-2 Wednesday night in Game 1 of the NL championship series.

"It's very important to win this one because now we can come in tomorrow more confident and relaxed," Lopez said.

That Smoltz pitched well in October — he improved to 7-1 lifetime in the postseason — was no surprise. The defending World Series champions expect that from the ace who led the majors in wins and strikeouts this season.

"I would say overall, this is my atmosphere. I'm comfortable in this," Smoltz said.

The real shocker was all the empty seats. There were about 3,000 unoccupied ones in the upper deck in center field, perhaps from fans who are waiting for the Series to start.

Chipper Jones went 4-for-4, including a misplayed bunt single in the eighth, as the Braves won their eighth straight home game in the postseason.

"We made some mistakes," Cardinals manager Tony La Russa said. "When you sit back at night and think about how they scored those two runs in the eighth, it's going to grate at you."

Mark Wohlers pitched the ninth inning and earned the save as he did in each game of the first-round sweep of Los Angeles, during which Atlanta held the Dodgers to .147 hitting.

Game 2 is scheduled for Thursday night, with Greg Maddux facing Todd Stottlemyre of the Cardinals.

Smoltz limited St. Louis to five hits over eight innings. He struck out six and walked two.

The Cardinals had caused more trouble for Smoltz than any team throughout his career. They had gone 9-5 against him, and stopped his 14-game winning streak in June.

St. Louis starter Andy Benes, who beat Smoltz back in June, allowed two runs and seven hits in six innings. He struck out seven and walked none, and remained winless in five career postseason starts. Reliever Mark Petkovsek took the loss.

Mark Lemke, who hit a two-run single earlier, drew a lead-off walk from Petkovsek in the eighth. Jones followed with a bunt that bounced high, and Petkovsek slipped trying to field it.

Petkovsek whipped a throw to second baseman Luis Alicea, covering first base on the play, but Jones knocked the ball out of Alicea's glove and Lemke made it to third.

"It wasn't your routine bunt back to the pitcher," La Russa said.

"I'm surprised I got the signal right," Jones said.

Tony Fossas relieved and retired Fred McGriff on a popup. After Jones stole second, pinch-hitter Terry Pendleton was intentionally walked to load the bases.

T.J. Mathews relieved, and Lopez, who was 3-for-25 in his career with the bases loaded, managed to hit an 0-2 pitch up the middle for a single. When the play was finished, a bat boy went to the left side of the plate to retrieve a splinter of the bat.

"Sooner or later, I figured I was going to get a hit," Lopez said. "I was lucky I got it today."

Williams, 12-year-old paves path for Yanks

By RONALD BLUM
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK

Bernie Williams didn't need help from a 12-year-old fan with his home run.

He hit it so deep into the left-field stands that even a fishing net couldn't have stopped it.

Three innings after young Jeff Maier stuck his glove over the right-field wall and created the controversial game-tying homer, Williams took Randy Myers deep for his fourth homer of the postseason, giving the Yankees a 5-4, 11-inning victory over Baltimore on Wednesday in Game 1 of the AL championship series.

"This is about as close as it comes to one play beating you," Orioles manager Davey Johnson said.

Maier's move — a day too late for the Gold Glove Awards — gave an eighth-inning homer to New York's Derek Jeter that tied the score 4-4. Baltimore's Tony Tarasco had settled under Jeter's fly ball against the 9-foot wall in right.

But Maier stuck out his gloved left hand — not even an autographed Mizuno model — above Tarasco's more expensive Rawlings model and pulled the ball away. Umpire Rich Garcia called it a home run, then admitted after looking at a replay that he blew the call.

"I thought it was out of the ballpark," Garcia said. "He reached out; he did not reach down. In my judgment, he did not interfere with the fielder attempting to catch the ball. It probably was a situation where the ball would have hit the wall."

Garcia said that if he had looked at a replay before the call, he would have ruled the play a double. Tarasco disagreed.

"It was like a magic trick, really. I was about to close my glove," he said. "Merlin must be in the house, abracadabra somewhere."

Garcia said none of the other umpires saw the play well enough to overrule him. Johnson was ejected during the ensuing argument and protested because the Yankees didn't have security in the right-field corner to prevent interference.

During last week's first round of the playoffs, a fan in the left-field corner reached out to catch a home run down the line by Juan Gonzalez of the Rangers.

"I was told there would be security there so this would not happen," Johnson said.

Security was increased — but to prevent fans from throwing anything at Roberto Alomar. Still the focus of attention after he spitting incident with umpire John Hirschbeck on the last weekend of the regular season, Baltimore's All-Star second baseman was booed long and loud each time he went to the plate.

Alomar extended his slump to 7-for-36 by going 1-for-6 with three strikeouts. He made the final out of four innings, but did manage a great defensive play when he threw out Cecil Fielder in the sixth while falling from his right knee on the center field grass.

Maier's defensive play was more critical.

"I was just trying to catch the ball," the young fan said. "I feel bad for the Baltimore fans. But as a Yankee fan, if I helped the team I feel pretty good. I think I had a right to catch it because I thought it was going to go out."

Jeter, not exactly a power hitter, had 10 homers during the regular season.

"That didn't win the game, Bernie won the game," he said.

What would he say to Maier: "Thank you. Reach over all you want," Jeter said. "It's just something that happens. Sometimes you call it right and sometimes you call it wrong."

Yankees fans will get more chances to show off their fielding skills Thursday, when David Cone pitches for New York in Game 2 against David Wells. The series then shifts to Camden Yards starting Friday night.

Before Maier's magic, Brady Anderson and Rafael Palmeiro showed off some of Baltimore's record power, helping the Orioles take a 4-2 lead with solo homers.

Anderson's third homer of the postseason (following 50 during the regular season) tie the score 2-2 in the third. Palmeiro then led off the fourth with his second homer of the postseason.

Attention Irish football fans!

This Friday's pep rally at the Joyce Center is scheduled to start at 7 P.M.

However, the Joyce Center is expected to reach capacity very early.

The early admission plan was a huge success at the OSU rally, with 3,200 students gaining entrance!

So again this Friday, from 5:30 - 5:45 P.M., only students with a valid student I.D. will be admitted through Gate 11.

After that, general admission will begin at Gate 10.

Get there early to cheer on the team!

advantage of the Foresters lack of focus, Miller, Bill, and Kelly played vital roles in breaking out of the score swaying struggle. The Belles confidence built after taking the opening game 15-10.

From the initial whistle blow of the second game, the Belles dominated. Lake Forest submitted after scoring only four points and allowed the Belles to take total control. Miller earned three consecutive serving points pulling the team to an eleven point margin. Outside attacker, Bill sewed up the middle game by securing the two final points needed to win 15-4.

According to opposing coach Beth Pier, "Saint Mary's played well." She went on to compliment her opponents force in the second game stating, "They passed and served well and that made all the difference."

The first point of the third match earned in an acrobatic move by Kelly Meyer seemed to indicate the level at which the rest of the game was to be played.

The Belles did not execute at the level which the two previous games were played. The lack of substitutes seemed to be catching up with the team as they weakened to a 4-7 deficit. "The third game was much tougher," observed Schroeder-Biek. "We were taking it easy. Maybe we were relaxed too much."

However, the situation quickly turned around as Schroeder-Biek subbed Kelly Meyer in to serve. Meyer served five consecutive points and boosted the team to a 9-7 lead.

Lake Forest immediately responded and tied the game 9-9 adding pressure to the Belles. After a few short volleys, the visitors repossessed the lead 9-13.

Courtney Love, freshman setter, retorted the tenacity of the Foresters by serving four points. With the help of Connolly and Miller spikes, she brought the score to another plateau of 13-13.

Fittingly to the way the match had been played, Miller gained control of the ball and won the final marks of the third game. In a team effort, the Belles overcame their foes in the third game 16-14.

The Saint Mary's volleyball crew will head to Chicago next Tuesday on a positive note. After the confidence builder last night, the team hopes to increase their record to 15-10.

"We've been playing tough," Schroeder-Biek stated with surmounting optimism. "I feel we've been in an upswing and hopefully, it will continue."

"Heidi doesn't need to do anything supernatural over the next few weeks," Connolly said "She needs only to run confidently."

"This is her last year," Connolly said "It's not a matter of if she's going to run well anymore it's a matter of how much she's going to improve."

Ducks triumph without star

By MIKE NADEL
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO

Though they wish they didn't have to, the Anaheim Mighty Ducks are adjusting to life without Paul Kariya.

"It's not pretty hockey, but without Paul in the lineup ... that's the way it's got to be," Anaheim coach Ron Wilson said Wednesday night after his team used Mikhail Shtalenkov's first career shutout and Teemu Selanne's shorthanded goal for a 2-0 victory over the Chicago Blackhawks.

Kariya, who had 50 goals last season, is out indefinitely with a strained abdominal muscle. Without him, Anaheim is 1-1-1.

Asked when his star might return, Wilson said: "I really can't tell you. It could be tomorrow or it could be a month from now or two months from now. It's a quirky injury."

The Blackhawks know what it's like to lack firepower.

Playing without traded Jeremy Roenick, injured Eric Daze and free-agent defectors Joe Murphy and Bernie Nicholls, they were expected to struggle offensively. But Chicago scored nine goals in winning its first two games, and entered its home opener seeking its first 3-0 start in 24 years.

Wednesday, the dire expectations became reality, as Chicago lost to Anaheim for only the third time in 14 meetings since the Mighty Ducks entered the league in 1993-94.

"We had opportunities to score," the Blackhawks' Keith Carney said. "Maybe we have to get a little hungrier around the net and pounce on some rebounds. But give them credit. Their goalie played well and they played good trapping defense as a team."

In his fourth NHL season, all with Anaheim, and playing in his 59th game, Shtalenkov was making his 1996-97 debut.

He couldn't remember his last shutout.

"I think I played a few in the 1992 Olympics," he said, "but they were against France and Norway."

The Moscow native, who has spent his entire career as Guy Hebert's backup, was especially outstanding in the third period in stopping nine shots. He twice robbed Tony Amonte, including once on a tricky deflection, and also blocked close-in shots from Murray Craven and Bob Probert.

Alex Hicks clinched the victory with 52.8 seconds left, scoring in an empty net just after Shtalenkov kicked out Gary Suter's screened shot from the point.

Ed Belfour was almost as good as Shtalenkov, making 17 saves for Chicago, but couldn't stop Selanne's breakaway at 6:36 of the second period.

With Anaheim's Ted Drury in the penalty box, Suter failed to stop Jari Kurri's clearing pass. Selanne, the high-powered, high-priced wing acquired by the Ducks last season, beat everyone to the puck in the Blackhawks' end, faked Belfour to the ice, and slid a backhand under the goalie's arm.

"I tried to keep it in and I didn't," Suter said. "Selanne was gone. Breakaway. Backhand. Goal. He's too fast. You're not going to catch him."

Anaheim, looking to avoid another disastrous start to a season, has two games left on its opening five-game road trip. The Mighty Ducks lost eight of their first 10 games last season, and even a tremendous finish didn't help them make the playoffs.

"As a coach, you don't mind opening with two or three games on the road — but five's stretching it," Wilson said. "We've got three points now. If we could get five or six, it would be great without our best player in the lineup."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Property values increase significantly. Consult a broker about a real estate deal. Being aggressive in financial matters will pay off. Sensuous pleasures are a great temptation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Domestic matters require attention. Give your home a facelift. Wash the windows and wax the floors. A love affair will take an intriguing turn this coming weekend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Financial issues are uppermost in your thoughts. If things are not moving fast enough at work, give them a gentle nudge. Strive to balance home life with career demands.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A newcomer is dazzled by your witty repartee. When making weekend plans, keep in mind your budget and your family's desires. A special outing sounds fun but requires reservations.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take flowers or another gift to someone who is ill. A little TLC could work wonders. Tackling too many projects at one time will leave you spinning your wheels.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Travel may figure in your plans. Think about enrolling in a language course. You deserve better! Joining a professional or athletic club will widen your social horizons.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): It may be difficult to stick to a schedule today. Higher-ups find your presence essential. Postpone tasks that can wait until next week. A deteriorating romance proves how elusive a lasting relationship can be.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Seek the company of people you respect and admire. Reading a good book stimulates your imagination. An interesting discussion takes place this afternoon or evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your conversational skills and social savvy bring you the attention you enjoy. Someone influential is impressed by your specialized knowledge.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Exciting events could give you an idea for a book. Jot down your thoughts before they are lost forever. Patching up a quarrel with a close friend will bring peace of mind. Be conciliatory.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Welcome any peace and quiet you get today. Complex business matters require immediate attention. Long distance phone calls may be able to substitute for expensive day trips.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Longtime friends give the best advice now. Avoid making drastic changes at work or home. An out-of-town visitor brings glad tidings. Think about what you hope to accomplish in the weeks ahead.

Senior harrier improves by leaps and bounds

By MARIO ARCE
Sports Writer

When Irish women's cross country fans on campus and around the country think of it's team members, most are quick to think of the phenomenal freshman duo of Joanna Deeter and Nicole Lasselle.

Heidi Reichenbach is not a household name in the running community and it wasn't a big name on the team up until this fall. Reichenbach a senior from Plainfield, Illinois finds herself in a place unfamiliar to her for the last three years, on the varsity squad.

For three years Reichenbach has been on the team running with only aspirations of someday competing on the varsity squad.

"I was so bad for three years," said Reichenbach "My goal was to come in and go to the Big East Championships (top 12), it's unbelievable to find myself running as fast as I am."

As a Freshman Reichenbach ran in as a quality high school runner only to find herself injured for the entirety of her first year due to a stress fracture.

As a sophomore Reichenbach again came in very fit and showing potential to contribute to the team but once again fell victim to injuries.

"Her sophomore year she came in, in very good shape but she got injured and never really recovered" explained head coach Tim Connelly.

Her junior year once again followed in disappointment, as she ran only one race for the junior varsity finishing in 21:52 over a five kilometer course.

As a senior Reichenbach found herself running in her debut varsity race at Ohio state finishing fourth in 18:37 over The five kilometer course.

"I nearly went crazy," Reichenbach exclaimed. "I came into that race thinking eighth or ninth on the team but to be a scoring runner and finish top five in the race, it was pretty incredible."

An improvement of nearly three minutes over one season is very impressive. Reichenbach did not stop there though as she went on to finish third on the team in 17:37 at last Friday's Notre Dame invitational.

"All it took was one good race," remarked Connelly. "To be honest I never expected her to be running as well as she is now, and it wasn't like it was progressive it was just one big jump."

That big jump occurred this summer when Reichenbach decided to get serious and train the way she knew she had to.

"This summer I did all the workouts I could and just stuck to it," said Reichenbach. "I trained by myself this summer, and I kept pushing myself as hard as I could, the only thing that kept me going was that everyone else could be training a little faster and farther."

After three straight wins for the Irish women in competition, Reichenbach looks to be one of the key performers for the pre-national meet at Arizona St. on October 19th.

"The key is keeping her healthy," said Connelly "I don't want to get greedy with her, she's obviously very fit and we have to make sure she maintains injury free for the whole season."

The Observer/Sarah O'Connor

Reichenbach has battled through injuries to be a pleasant surprise.

Belles focus on team goals

Preparation, fundamentals key to success

By ANGELA OLSEN
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

Be aggressive. First five minutes — score a goal on them. Motivate ourselves and our teammates. Win the 50/50 balls.

The goals for the Saint Mary's soccer team are clearly defined. Each player has the list of 11 goals posted outside her dorm room as a constant reminder of what needs to be done on the field in order to defeat the opponent.

When the Belles (3-8-1) take the field tomorrow at 4 p.m. behind the Angela Athletic Facility against Calvin College they will be focused on the job at hand.

This week in practice the Belles have been working on the fundamentals and doing a lot of conditioning in preparation for the tough match they are anticipating against Calvin.

"We've had really hard practices," said freshman Maria Ferry. "Everyone has had real serious attitudes."

Although Saint Mary's head coach Bob Sharp does not have a high number of players he gets the most out of that small number.

"What I do have are working very hard," he commented.

The Observer/Rachael Sederberg

Katy Barger will be looked upon to lead Belles' midfield.

"Jolie [Pokorny] playing at midfield is very good and Eileen [Newell] and Keary [Sullivan] are giving us good strength and support on defense."

As far as scoring, Sharp says the Belles' are trying to get some dangerous offensive threat.

Center halfback Katy Barger says that her midfield is ready to be the play makers and get the offense going.

The opposition that the Belles' will be facing is in a very tough league.

"The talent is good and they are competitive," said Sharp. "We've been working on our aggression and we look to give them a good challenge. If we put together a good offense, we'll win."

Newcomer leads SMC setters to home sweep

By SHANNON RYAN

Some determination, a timely opportunity, and a lot of pressure.

Combine these ingredients with Melissa Miller and the outcome is a fresh athlete playing like a pro.

Miller, a first year student, assisted in the 3-0 victory of Saint Mary's volleyball game over Lake Forest last night. Although nervous and inexperienced with, Miller stepped up to the challenge.

"I felt the pressure, but I had a lot of fun," the 5'9" outside attacker commented. "I'm just glad I got the chance to prove myself."

To the delight of her coach, she successfully guided the team in key kills, digs, spikes, and serves.

"She's done a great job."

boasted coach Julie Schroeder-Biek. "I'm proud of her."

Not only did Miller contribute to the 15-10, 15-4, 16-14 defeat of the Foresters, but Agnes Bill and Meg Kelly also complimented the joint effort. Bill overcame a shaky start and contributed 10 kills. Junior Meg Kelly added another 11 kills to the squad.

Lake Forest seemed to have an advantage heading into the match at Angela Athletic Facility. Even with a surplus of four players coming off the bench than the Belles and a record of 9-4, the Foresters were unable to concentrate. They made several fundamental mistakes which the 14-10 Belles were eager to feed off.

In a see-saw battle to gain an edge, SMC finally took charge of the first game. As they took
