Campus groups to appeal monetary allocations

by Mary Fran Callahan

Eleven clubs and organizations will appeal their student government fund allocations at the Board of Commissioners meeting Wednesday night.

In addition to the budget appeals, the board also plans to discuss the complimentary ticket policy. Commissioners contacted yesterday expressed diverse views on the subject and some are reportedly reconsidering their positions.

A two-thirds majority of the 9-member council is needed to override the current procedure of designating $2700 of student fees for the purchase of free concert tickets for members of student government.

At the board meeting last Friday, board members confirmed a plan to request an increase in the Student Activity fee. The commissioners petition will petition the Board of Trustees this Thursday for a annual student fee of $20 rather than the current $17. The reason for the increase has been cited as the tight student budget compounded by the general inflationary situation.

Dissatisfied groups slated to appeal the September budget allocations include: American Institute of Architects, Black Cultural Arts Commission, CILA, Gymnastics Club, International Students' Organization, ND-SMC Right to Life, and the Pep Rally Committee.

Four groups - the Arnold Air Society, College Bowl, Sailing Club, and the Sociology Club - which applied for funds in September and received no allocations will also appeal.

The board has allotted only $1500 from the student budget for appeals. In order to accommodate the dissatisfied groups, the board may have to subtract form funds allocated to the Hall Presidents Council, the clubs and organizations or the Student Union.

Students wishing to express views to their elected representatives on the budget allocations or the complimentary ticket policy should attend Wednesday's 6 p.m. meeting in the Hayes/Healy board room.

SMC government Internal problems spark conflict

by Pam Degnan
Senior Staff Reporter

Internal problems within the Saint Mary's Board of Governance sparked a confrontation last night between Pia Trigiani, Student Body president and the board members. During the regularly scheduled meeting, Trigiani cited "lack of communication between individual board members," as the principle difficulty.

"My purpose in confronting the board about our difficulties is to emphasize the importance of each individual board member to communicate not only with me but with each other, Trigiani stated.

Trigiani, in her talk, called for a re-evaluation of the effectiveness of the board. "If we, the board, can work together as a cohesive unit by communicating with one another, then we should be able to achieve our goals," said Trigiani.

Trigiani maintained that apathy is not the underlying reason for the lack of communication. She explained that by discussing individual problems, the board would be able to function more effectively as a governing body.

"I want you (the members) to become aware of each other's feelings. By not working together, you are only making yours and my job more difficult, Trigiana added.

Mary Ellen Maccio, Co-Ex commissioner on the board views Trigiani's confrontation as a positive sign that she is concerned with the members' lack of communication. "We all work well together. But because it is right before mid-terms, people are unusually tense. It is a positive sign that Pia is sensitive to our problems, Maccio said.

In her closing remarks to the board, Trigiani expressed the importance of the Board's responsibility to the student body. "I don't want to see what happened in previous years to happen again. I realize that the problem of non-communication occurs in every organization. But we must iron out our difficulties in order to effectively represent our student body," she concluded.

Trigiani's speech was met with some mixed reactions. Board members, however, were unavailable for comment.

On the formal agenda, the board discussed the proposed dates for the Hall Speaker Series. They also discussed the formation of a Liturgy Committee which would try to improve the daily liturgies on campus.

Cargo planes ferry food and supplies in attempt to avert Cambodian famine

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) - Cargo planes ferried tons of food and other relief supplies yesterday to Phnom Penh for Cambodia's starving people, but organizers of the emergency international airlift said they feared a famine might not be averted.

On the Thai-Cambodian border, meanwhile, a mortar attack from the Cambodian side killed five Cambodian refugees and injured 12 others in a camp on Thai territory. Thai soldiers said Vietnamese troops or soldiers of the Hanoi-backed Cambodian government were believed responsible.

The two mortar rounds fell in the Thap Prik camp, 125 miles east of Bangkok. Afterward Thailand moved reinforcements into the border area, where 34,000 sick and starving Cambodians have fled in the past five days.

The Cambodian government gave the go-ahead for the relief program Saturday, and it got under way even though formal agreement has been held up over the government's insistence that no food should be given to the followers of deposed Premier Pol Pot.

Vietnamese and Cambodian government forces continue to battle Pol Pot's guerrillas in the Cambodian countryside.

Thirty nations have pledged more than $110 million to the relief effort, coordinated by the Red Cross and the U.N. Children's Emergency Fund. Two planes carried 55 tons of food into Phnom Penh yesterday, but officials of the international agencies estimated 900 tons a day would be needed.

The planes also carried four Red Cross and UNICEF officials.

In a new estimate, UNICEF spokesman Jacques Danois said 165,000 tons of food would be needed over the next six months to avert a famine. A number of relief operations that could help reach that goal are still in planning stages, but more than 10,000 tons of food are scheduled to be sent in by sea by the end of the month.

The funds committed to the airlift include an initial pledge of $7 million and eventually as much as $30 million from the United States.

Australia, the first nation to send in aid, bypassed formal relief programs as early as June and made its own deliveries to the refugees on the Thai-Cambodian border. Britain has pledged at least $2.2 million. The European Common Market has made an initial pledge of $5.6 million.

The changing estimates of how much relief is needed - a figure that has risen from 700 tons a day - reflect the difficulties aid groups are facing with a reluctant government in a country that has been decimated by war, famine and the disruptive policies of Pol Pot, who was toppled in January by the Vietnamese-led forces.

But the major aid groups are sticking with their policy of "even-handed relief" to people under the control of both sides, despite strong objections by the Phnom Penh government.

The government has refused formal agreement with UNICEF and the Red Cross as long as this policy is in force, but the agencies still funnel supplies across the Thai border to areas controlled by the Pol Pot forces and decided to go ahead with the airlift to Phnom Penh.

Jordan tells 500

Most blacks remain 'disadvantaged'

by Phyllis Washington

Vernon Jordan, president of the National Urban League, told a crowd of over 500 people last Friday night that while there has been progress for some blacks in the twenty-five years since the Brown vs. Board of Education decision, the majority of blacks "have remained disadvantaged."

Jordan, speaking at the Athletic and Convocation Center, mentioned four areas where there has been progress for some blacks, but not for the majority of black people; employment, income, education and housing.

Examining the progress blacks have made in employment and the present status of blacks in that area, Jordan said that although "some blacks are in jobs never open to us before, the masses of black people are still in the worst jobs our society offers."

Jordan also pointed out that the black unemployment rate is higher now than it was in 1954, and when blacks marched on Washington for jobs. The black unemployment rate for youths is up to 60 percent in the cities and "our neo-conservative friends and critics," Jordan said, "blame it in on the minimum wage."

Jordan asked, "Why then (if the cause of unemployment for black youths is the minimum wage) has white unemployment gone down while at the very same time, the minimum wage has gone up?"

In terms of income, Jordan said that Urban League figures show that 9 percent of black families are in the upper income bracket, but the other 91 percent are poor or nearly poor.

He added that the "typical" black family income was 61 percent of the "typical" white family income in the late 1960s, but that same percentage has now gone down to 57 percent.

Jordan also talked about the progress made by blacks in education since the Brown decision. He said, "More black children attend racially isolated schools than in 1954." And, he said, even though more black students are attending colleges,

Black leaders arrive for Israeli conference

TEL AVIV Israel (AP) - A delegation of black American civil rights and labor leaders arrived here yesterday, and a spokesman for the group said their condemnation of the Palestine Liberation Organization "is identical with that of the people of Israel." The seven-member group is to meet Prime Minister Menachem Begin and other Israeli leaders during its week-long visit. William Pollard, director of the civil rights department of the AFL-CIO, said the visit was "in no way connected" to the visit last month of the Rev. Jesse Jackson, head of the Chicago-based civil rights group People United to Save Humanity. Before leaving the United States, delegation member Bayard Rustin, President of New York's A. Philip Randolph Institute, said the group sought to make clear "that Israel must have from the U.S. whatever is necessary for her survival."

Israeli Cabinet allocates land for settlements on Jordan River

JERUSALEM (AP)-The Israeli Cabinet, trying to defuse an explosive domestic dispute, decided yesterday to allocate more state land for Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River but firmly rejected settlers' demands to seize private Arab property.

"The principle of the government policy is not to confiscate or requisition or expropriate or seize any inch of privately owned land unless it is absolutely necessary for security reasons," said Cabinet Secretary Aryeh Naor, announcing the compromise.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Cabinet pored over maps and legal opinions on land ownership for six hours to find state-owned land for the expansion of five existing settlements and the construction of a new Jewish city in the predominantly Arab area. The city, Erfat, will be populated in part by Jews from New York.

Naor said the Cabinet found no security justification for the expansion of the settlements, and would relocate the new city, whose original siting has been challenged in the courts by Arab landowners.

"There is enough state land available for those settlements and for other purposes serving the Arab population," he said.

In another development, a group of black American civil rights leaders arrived in Tel Aviv for meetings with Begin and other Israeli officials to endorse U.S. guarantees for the security of the Jewish state.

Delegation member Bayard Rustin, president of New York's A. Philip Randolph Institute, said the visit was calculated to offset support for the Palestine Liberation Organization voiced by some American blacks after Andrew Young resigned as U.N. ambassador in August. Young quit after an unauthorized meeting with a representative of the PLO.

Yesterday's Cabinet decision was a setback for Gush Emunim, a settlers' movement that advocates the annexation of the West Bank by Israel.

Political tension mounted before the meeting as Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan threatened to resign if the government changed its non-expropriation policy. On the other side, the National Religious Party, a key partner in Begin's ruling coalition, threatened to quit if no solution was found to allow the settlements to expand.

Over 200 students gather for Urban Plunge workshop

Over 200 students gathered yesterday afternoon for the 1980 Urban Plunge Orientation Workshop. In the 3 hour period, participants listened to a number of speakers talk about the structure and organization of the Plunge, the urban environment and its institutions, and the Catholic Committee on Urban Ministry (CCUM).

Economics professor Thomas Swartz and government professor John Roos spoke to the group on "Economic Aspects of the Urban Environment" and "A Political Perspective on Neighborhoods". Dr. Helen Volkomen, S.P. (Director of CCUM) talked about "The Role of CCUM in our Nation's Cities" while Rev. Daniel Tarmey discussed "The Relationship of the Powerless to Urban Institutions." The student's perspective on the Urban Plunge was also shown, through an Audio-Visual presentation and some personal reflections by Lou Reifschneider, an UP Task Force member.

Tonight there will be a second workshop for all those who turned in an application for the Urban Plunge but were unable to attend yesterday's meeting. This "make-up" workshop will be in the library lounge from 7 to 9 p.m. Anyone who does not attend one of the two workshops will not be allowed to make the 1980 Plunge.

Newsweek acknowledges theology program as 'best'

by Paul Mullaney

Newsweek magazine has acknowledged Notre Dame as having the "Best undergraduate theology program offered in any American university." The acknowledgement appeared in the magazine's Oct. 8 issue, in which a special report looked at the Roman Catholic Church in the United States.

Fr. David Burrell, chairman of the Notre Dame Theology Department, was quite pleased with the accolades, but played down the importance of such a distinction.

"When I was teaching in Bangladesh in 1975, the people in the city of Dacca claimed that their city park was the biggest city park in the world," commented Burrell. "I told them that we have people in Texas that make the same type of claims. Comparisons of this sort are nice, but they are overplayed."

Newsweek noted that Notre Dame did not offer a baccalaureate degree in theology—even to seminarians—as recently as 15 years ago. The article emphasized that today, however, the country's top theology program is entirely made of laymen and laywomen.

"We have grown into an excellent department," said Burrell. "We've worked to build an excellent faculty centered on collegiate teaching. I prefer to consider it as collegiate theology rather than undergraduate theology."

"We function with the Saint Mary's theology department, and we have a joint major with Saint Mary's. That really enhances our department, and is part of the reason we have such a range of offerings. Our main concern is keeping front and center in our reflections."

Fr. John Dunne, professor of Theology, was quoted in Newsweek as saying that spiritual understanding, as opposed to absolute certainty, is the essential goal of teaching today's theology.

"The quest for certainty is self-defeating, whether it is about God, about someone we love or about the significance of our own selves," Dunne told Newsweek. "What we can hope for, though, is what Jesus had—an assurance that a loving Father is with us and that our confidence is not in vain."

The Newsweek report was prompted by Pope John Paul's visits to Ireland and the United States.

Panofsky makes SALT plea

by Tom Koegel

Dr. Wolfgang K. H. Panofsky called for approval of the SALT II treaties as "the only way available to us to reverse the nuclear weapon build-up" in a speech to a capacity Library Auditorium audience. "Don't let this opportunity pass," he advised.

Panofsky is the head of the Stanford Linear Accelerator Center, and a member of several commissions dealing with the proliferation of nuclear weapons. He is also an expert on the detection of nuclear test explosions.

The SALT II treaty is a result of mutual concern by the Soviets and the Americans about the growing nuclear weapon inventory, Panofsky said. The world nuclear weapon inventory is now approximately 40,000. Panofsky calls this inventory "too large to be possibly used without endangering civilization."

Panofsky sees SALT as an inhibitor to the rapid build-up of nuclear arsenals. "SALT II arrests the momentum of further deployment of many nuclear weapons," he stated.

SALT II consists of three separate sections, Panofsky said. A formal treaty places various numerical limitations of nuclear armament, and guarantees for the verification of compliance with the treaties. The treaty would expire in 1985.

The Protocol which expires in 1981, contains items on which a positive agreement could not be reached, but which will come up for further discussion in any future SALT talks.

The "Statement of Principles" provides an overview of topics which were not considered in depth, but which are important to the future of arms control.

This structure is made more complex by the detail which is necessary to avoid ambiguities. Ambiguities hampered the effectiveness of the Vladivostok agreement signed by President Ford, Panofsky said. These ambiguities led to a major disagreement between the two countries in regards to the U.S. development of the cruise missile.

Panofsky outlined several major reasons why the SALT treaty is to the advantage of the United States.

"SALT II limits the expansion of the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. in the growth of strategic nuclear systems," Panofsky said. He pointed out that although it limits the actual expansion of systems, "SALT does not limit the evolution of U.S. strategic systems which are now under development."

"The pattern of nuclear build-up has followed a familiar pattern for many years," Panofsky said. "The United States has led the way in technological developments and rapid deployment and the Soviet Union has followed with a slower build-up which eventually surpasses the U.S. in number but not in technical quality. At this point in time, the U.S.S.R. is ahead in the number of ICBM's and other weapons, and would actually be forced to destroy some of its older systems."

After outlining some of the basic arguments for the approval of SALT II, Panofsky examined some of what he believes are common misconceptions about SALT.

"SALT is a product of long and arduous negotiations," Panofsky said. "As such it does not totally benefit either side. The issue is not whether or not we get the best possible treaty, but how we get the treaty ratified. We should not fail to ratify SALT."

Panofsky also pointed out that SALT would not eliminate any of the strategic systems now under development. He noted that the Protocol prohibits the deployment of cruise missiles on land and sea, but not in the air. He also said that the Protocol expires in 1981, which is before the missiles would be ready for deployment anyway."

"The MX missile (a missile system designed so that U.S. missiles can be shifted to different positions underground in order to avoid attack) would be aided by the SALT treaty," Panofsky claimed. "Without SALT, the U.S.S.R. could be able to use multiple warhead devices to hit all the possible positions of the missiles underground, and by process of elimination destroy them all."

A common argument used against SALT is that the treaty is essentially unverifiable. Panofsky said that the treaty provides that the surveillance systems of either side may not be assaulted in any case short of actual war.

"Any violation of the treaty that would be significant to the balance of power would be easily detectable by our surveillance systems," he said.

A tactic of the anti-SALT forces that displeases Panofsky is "criticizing the treaty on the basis of unrelated decisions of the various (presidential) Administrations in military matters."

"Holding SALT hostage because of the Cuban affairs is destructive," Panofsky said. "Even if the Soviets withdrew a brigade that has been there for years, it would be taken as a sign that SALT is really a one-way deal to their advantage, which it is not."

A current trend which disturbs Panofsky is the willingness of the public to see the number of nuclear weapons "as a sign of internal strength with little regard to their actual destructive power. We can never view nuclear weapons as simply bargaining chips in negotiations."

"SALT is not a major step towards disarmament, or a great change in the danger of our age. The net total of weapons without SALT would only be greater by 30 to 50 percent. SALT is simply a small step in the right direction which will change the acceleration of the arms race," Panofsky stated.

"SALT is a small step, but it is a good one," Panofsky concluded.

74 per cent effort United Way drive ends

by Lynne Daley

Last minute donations to the United Way Fund Drive on the Notre Dame campus made this year's campaign the most successful ever, according to drive Chairman Chris Digan.

Although the 74 per cent participation achieved was less than the goal of 80 per cent he set prior to the campaign, "overall, we've done better than any other year," Digan admitted.

Digan, who was aided by Assistant Chairman Mike Sexton and Publicity Chairman Michelle Renauldo, attributed much of the success of the drive to volunteers who helped in the distribution of posters and the collection of the donations. These volunteers include Bob Stewart, Joe Orie, Sean Digan, Anne Hesburgh and Kevin Lovejoy.

The biggest surprise of the 1979 campaign was registered at Dillon Hall, where 100 per cent of the residents had contributed to the fund by the end of the first collection day.

"That's amazing," Digan exclaimed. "You've got to give those guys a lot of credit."

Digan also cited both Badin and Grace Halls for their much-improved performances over last year.

Badin, along with Alumni, reached the 100 per cent plateau last night, while Grace amassed over $500, the highest total on campus.

Br. Joseph McTaggart, faculty advisor for the drive for the last three years, expressed pleasure over the handling of this year's campaign. He praised organizers Digan, Sexton and Renauldo for their handling of the preliminary groundwork and commended the Hall President's Council (HPC) for assuming the responsibility of campus-wide collections in the dorms.

"We simply couldn't do it without the HPC," McTaggart said. "There is no other vehicle for one-on-one solicitation. Without structure in the dorms, we'd be back to bake sales and extortion."

The money collected in this year's drive will be turned over to the United Way of St. Joseph County. This larger group is responsible for allotting the funds to various community organizations such as Big Brother, Big Sister and Logan Center. Both Digan and McTaggart stressed, however, that no money collected through the United Way in this area could be used to fund abortions.

"I see this as a major charitable event for the city of South Bend for which the students participate as a unit," McTaggart explained.

Students who felt "forced" to contribute to this charity should realize that "it's like that in real life," Digan said. Faculty members at Notre Dame, as well as local businesses, are assessed by a committee and informed precisely what their "fair share" totals are.

"The purpose is to respond the way the city responds," McTaggart said. "We are all members of the city of South Bend. It's almost like each dorm is a residence in South Bend."

ND and SMC do little to help refugees

Editor's Note--This is the last of three articles dealing with Vietnamese refugees and their immigration to the South Bend area.

Maribeth Moran
Staff Reporter

"Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses, yearning to be free. The wretched refuse of your teeming shore, send these, the homeless, the tempest tossed to me." The inscription on the Statue of Liberty that greeted millions of immigrants in New York Harbor still exists as a viable part of the American heritage.

But neither Notre Dame or Saint Mary's as an institution seem to be fostering this heritage with respect to the Vietnamese refugees.

While many individuals of the Notre Dame /Saint Mary's community have become deeply involved in the plight of the refugees, Sorin Hall and a student run volunteer teaching group remain the only organizations from either institution to become involved with the problem.

According to University President Theodore Hesburgh the University as an institution does not have the funds to directly subsidize the refugee relief effort.

In a question and answer period last Wednesday night at Howard Hall, Hesburgh recently appointed chairman of the Select Committee on Refugees and Immigration, stated "the University is a charitable institution itself. We can't afford to spend the money on the refugee problem there. We encourage our student to do things for them--like take up a collection or something."

Last month Hesburgh blocked a move by Sorin Hall to house a Vietnamese refugee in an unused room in the dorm. Hesburgh reasoned that, "Sorin Hall is for students. If they want to support one in South Bend, that's great."

Saint Mary's president, John Duggan, was not available for comment, according to his office. When referred to Public Information Services, the director, Nancy Kommers stated, "I am not aware that the College has done anything as an institution."

On women in the priesthood

Pat Byrnes

Since the recent visit of the pope to the U.S., the issue of women priests has been batted about the media quite a lot. The pope reserves the priesthood for men, a reservation defended by tradition and theological insight. Several women's organizations claim that the priesthood should be opened to women; this position is based on logic stemming from the concepts of human rights. The major difficulty presented by the issue is how to reach a just compromise without sacrificing Christian beliefs.

My stand on the issue is uncertain. I shall try to wade through the matter in the fairest way possible, being open and faithful, understanding and respectful of mystery.

However, as I am far less a spiritual authority than the pope, and as I have witnessed this man to be one living truly in the Spirit, I shall accept his stand to be one that he holds in honest faith. This is not to say that I take his side against those of a different viewpoint; it is to say that the pope speaks with words of faith--those who oppose him on this issue use words of logic--and I can much more easily probe words of logic than I can those of faith.

Now that I have sufficiently beaten around the bush, let me beat a little closer to the roots with this word to those who follow logic here:

Be careful to approach this matter with faith and not ambition. Se that your goal is to make advances in faith and life in the Spirit rather than to achieve personal status. Remember that men are men and women are women, and that this is a darn good arrangement. As such, men have gifts to offer the faithful community which they have by virtue of the gift of manhood that God has given to them; accompanying this gift is a responsibility to God, which tempers all gifts. Similarly, women have gifts to offer by virtue of their womanhood; these too come with certain responsibility. These gifts may be characteristically different, and, as such, they may be subject to different value assessments in this world. However, the bottom line is simple and complete: We are all equal in the eyes of God. As Christians, we are to give this paramount importance.

In that we are all equal in the eyes of God, would this not indicate that all should be admitted into the priesthood? The debate could be ended here, but we would have a stalemate--logic vs. the faith of the pope. The pope still has his way. The game is in his home court. Logic must re-evaluate its game plan.

Now comes the painful part. What if the faith of the pope is correct? What does this say about rights?

Remember that the gifts of men and women may be different. Perhaps this somehow extends to the roles of men and women with respect to the priesthood. If this is the case, then the natural question to ask is, "Why?" The trivial answer is, "Why not? It's God's world; He can do what He wants with it." Unfortunately, the "trivial" answer is the only answer. Thus the explanation is sort of like a bumper only worse. However, I will try to offer a bit more elaboration.

Perhaps the priesthood is something for which God called men alone. How would this affect women who wish the priesthood to be opened to them as well? It would be tough luck. As such, it would also be a test of women's faith. In any event, it wouldn't be an easy ride for women, but then again, God never promised faithful Christians an easy ride; He just promised them the strength to endure the bumper rides.

How then do we deal with this issue? The pope gives the "no-go" on women priests. He says so with faith that it is right and just. Whether we agree or disagree with the pope, we should embrace as our Christian and Catholic duty to come before God in our prayers and petition that His Will on this matter be made known to us through the pope, His spokesman to the Church. In the meantime, we must wait faithfully, patiently and obediently, continually seeking the truth through our prayers. And then, when we are certain that these prayers have been answered, be the answer "yes" or "no", we ought to be ready to accept that answer and continue to carry on our lives, with faith, in the Spirit of Jesus Christ.

Catholic sexism a 'deep-seated sin' in the Church

Dear Editor:

I was enraged by the Pope's affirmation in Philadelphia of the Church of Rome's decision to continue to refuse full participation of women in all its ministries. Sr. Theresa Kane's reply gladdened the heart but left me wondering if the tactic of petitioning the male hierarchy is not tying women into a no-win situation.

Sr. Theresa Kane's address was a model of restrained, respectful moderation; yet what response did it receive--the Pope's arrogant, chauvinistic, politicking with six hundred Italian nuns. Catholic sexism is such a deep-seated sin in the Roman Church that polite attempts at consciousness raising are simply not going to work. Sexism, like other forms of colonialism, will require tougher strategies.

The current practice of lobbying the hierarchy puts women in a no-win situation. Sexism is so rooted in the male hierarchical mentality, that it has produced in these men an alienation that is not susceptible to rational, humane argument. Sexism is an ancient neurosis which has hardened into an intractable ideology. Feminist theorists have long argued that we are not dealing here with a superficial prejudice, but with a primitive, irrational fear that is probably as old as the species.

We have to recognize that men like the Pope and the tradition which he represents, have always been ambivalent about women. The Church's spiritualization and etherealization of women grows directly out of a male inability to deal with the incarnational reality of the female of the species. Arguing therefore with such irrationality is, by definition, a no-win situation. To plead with the alienated is to doom ourselves to frustration, anger and eventually apathy. Had Jesus focused his energies on the education of the Pharisees, his marvelous ministry would have been hopelessly bogged down.

What is called for is a whole new strategy on the part of women. I suspect that they need to start thinking about the possibility of beginning a parallel church. By a parallel church I do not mean to imply a radical separation, but rather alternative Catholic communities which would be free from the deforming influence of sexism.

Three coins in the fountain

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON--The Treasury Department is very mad at all of us. We haven't taken to the Susan B. Anthony dollar as their experts predicted we would.

Millions of dollars (paper ones) went into research to develop a coin that would replace the one dollar bill. The Treasury engineers worked in their cellars day and night to devise something that would grab the imagination of the American people. They finally came up with a foolproof design--a coin the size of a quarter with 11 sides and a picture of a suffragette on it. What more could the American people ask for?

Apparently a lot more. When the coin flopped the only thing left for the Treasury officials to do was to call a meeting.

"Gentlemen, the secretary is very upset. No matter how many Susan B. Anthony coins we put into circulation, people insist on using paper dollars. What can we do about it?"

"My staff has been doing some research to find out why the coin won't fly. Most men we've talked to say that if they have more than seven in their pants pocket they make a hole, and all the coins dribble out into the street. The young people say the dollars make a bulge in their jeans, and women complain if they take enough dollar coins to buy groceries they develop a bad back."

"That's nonsense. This coin was tested under the greatest stress conditions. We put $50 worth in a deputy secretary's pants pockets, threw him into the Tidal Basin and he didn't even sink. One of our women department heads carried 100 coins in her handbag for one week and except for black and blue marks on her shoulder where the strap hung, there were no signs of bodily damage. As for the young people complaining of bulges in their jeans from carrying the coins, my answer to that is, let them buy bigger jeans."

"I'm just reporting on what our research revealed, sir. If you ask me I think it's more psychological than anything else. The one dollar paper bill has George Washington's picture on it. The people can't tell Susan B. Anthony from the Queen of England. They don't trust the coin because they are afraid it was minted in Canada."

"I don't want to hear any more stories. We're stuck with billions of these coins and we're going to get them into circulation if it kills us. Now let's hear some constructive ideas."

"We could put them in cereal boxes as a promotion."

"What about printing on paper dollar bills under 'In God We Trust' the words: 'This bill could be dangerous to your health?'"

"How about having Karl Malden do a TV commercial? He could be pushing a wheelbarrow and saying to the audience: 'Traveler's checks can be stolen--but nobody could carry off this wheelbarrow of coins. The Susan B. Anthony dollars. Don't leave home without them.'"

"Why don't we just use them to pay the OPEC people for their oil?"

"What good will that do?"

"They'll all get hernias and be so miserable they'll think twice about raising their prices."

Even Upon The Stones

Fr. Bill Toohey

"God did not make death, nor does he rejoice in the destruction of the living. For He fashioned all things that they might have being" (Wisdom 1, 13-14).

Try giving that little speech, standing before the parents, roommates and friends of Wally Daniels, Vito LaLoggia, Catherine Guthery or Bruce Plunkett (to whom we just dedicated a statue at Flanner Tower). How the names add up, of students taken from us in untimely death. How to deal with it?

The world around us is going crazy. The evidence for death and destruction is overwhelming. And often the first one accused is God.

The Old Testament Wisdom literature dealt with this swirling argument between man and God. In the earlier texts, it was more an individual battle, as with God and Job. Later, it dealt with Yahweh's relationship with Israel: Now a whole people struggle with the mystery/dilemma. Israel wrestles with the fact that they, the "chosen people," have been over-run so regularly by dark forces of irreligion and tyranny.

Thus, it's hardly surprising that, until Jesus came, there was not all that much progress in eliminating the tendency of blaming God for the misery people suffered. God kept saying neat things, but the peoples' experiences offered contrary evidence. It seemed that, at best, there was a standoff.

That's why Jesus' coming was so important. Now, no longer just words of Wisdom; now, the word made flesh. A new wisdom appeared; and Jesus' very presence and actions cut the argument short and did much to end the general recriminations.

The people watched and experienced what Jesus actually did. He heals this person, then that one. In many ways, He entered into their death-filled lives. In response to human needs, He simply does the most human thing. And that becomes characteristic of Jesus. Time and again He responds to human needs in a given situation, even if that means running contrary to what others might discern as Law or Principle or Morality. Jesus was not, in that sense, a moralist. He simply offered help when people hurt...spontaneously, with compassion, without calculation.

Somehow it seems that it is absolutely necessary that we have some experience of that loving, caring presence. Otherwise, how can we find it "believable" that God does care? The whole thing gets tricky here, because He immediately calls for risk and gamble. How does he put it? "Fear is useless; what is needed is trust...do not be afraid; only have faith."

That means that, in having faith, we open and surrender to the one who then provides through His own presence within us the source of strength and courage we need in the midst of the horrors of life.

Jesus, for example, has a concern to be with us as we face the future, with all its mysterious and alarmingly prospects -- and that is a kind of death for a lot of us!

He would like to save us from the terrors of the day...or the night. We are often afraid of the unexpected in a single day's burden: of the report from the doctor, or whatever the mail or phone might bring; of the outcome of an exam or comps. Sometimes we are even more hesitant, if not afraid, of the more distant future: of a marriage; a new job or school; a move to a strange city. The answer Jesus gives us is not just in words ("fear is useless; trust; be not afraid; have faith"), even though these can help. Most importantly, He provides us Himself--the same one who took Jairus' daughter by the hand and restored her to life.

It is His risen life we share in our faithful opening - life beyond disease, debility, ashes or grave. The accident or illness or terror that destroys is less powerful than the love within. Jesus would have us know that God desires our living even more than we do. He is a God of life. For Him, and for Him alone, death is but a sleep, and His power awakens.

Our yearning to live is but a feeble breath compared to the yearning of God to draw us to Himself - that is, to life. This is the utterly lovely meaning of a poem by D. H. Lawrence. Speaking to every man or woman who has ever lived, he said:

*Thou shalt fight as a flower fighteth upwards through the stones...
to flower in the sun at last.
For the yearning of the Lord streameth as a sun
even upon the stones.*

The stones in our lives, all that diminishes life and threatens it, are often sins and anxieties, whatever weighs heavily upon us; and, finally, the sense of mortality itself. Then the stone becomes a gravestone fitted in place. With Jesus, it sealed His tomb.

But "the yearning of the Lord streameth as a sun even upon the stones." We are delivered - from sin, anxiety, fear, the tomb. Of us the Book of Wisdom speaks: "God formed them to be imperishable; in the image of His own nature He made them."

We are the living, and our God is alive! Then He says it one more time: "Rise up!" And we discover that now we are the ones He is taking by the hand!

The Real World Is Out To Get You

Bill McGurn

Though this may come as a shock to most students, especially seniors, I have it on good word that there exists a world apart from the protective outstretched arms of Our Lady. For those of us who will not be seeking refuge in some sort of graduate program, we pre-Work majors (as we like to be called) find parental descriptions of this world particularly disconcerting. In the vernacular, it is known as The Real World, a cruel, heartless, and unjust world somewhere "out there."

To hear tell, what we live in here is Fantasy Island. But by the time one becomes a senior one's parents usually start dropping hints about post-graduate life. Little notes like "Your father says banking is such a sage field" start cropping up in Mom's letters in between Grandmother's operation and Annie's first day in school. Your father starts sending you, instead of letters, the latest unemployment figures for non-skilled (he means liberal arts majors) labor.

On breaks you might notice that everyone speaks about you in the past tense. Your siblings start dividing up your possessions, and there are constant fights about who is going to get your room. Or they do little things like forget to set a place at the dinner table for you. It's like reading your own obituary.

The worst fears are confirmed around this time in a two-page synopsis of one's life, the resume. For those of us who previously thought that our lives would make good novels, this bare-bones sheet of isolated facts looks rather meager. The goal in a resume is to make the facts go as far as they can, still remaining facts and not opening one up to charges of fraud.

There is very little room for poetic license in the beginning; not much you can do about your name, date of birth, Nationality, major and grade point average. Those you're pretty much stuck with. Maybe you can fool around with religion, but it's better to leave the big guns until later.

From what I've heard, I think the best piece of advice is to remember Goebbel's philosophy of the big lie, that the bigger the lie, the more willing people are to believe it. I mean when you get down to extracurricular activities, if you are going to lie and say that you belonged to the Chess Club, you might as well be the President of the Chess Club. No one is really going to check.

But don't get greedy. Obviously, a few eyebrows are going to be raised if they see you are the President of almost every organization on campus. Keep yourself humble, and select humble diverse offices for your resume. For example you may want to be treasurer of the Pre-Law Society and Secretary for the Knights of Columbus. And why not even invent one or two: how about Academic Commissioner for the Rugby team. The point is it only has to sound good.

Give yourself an award or two, preferably in recognition of your civic leadership in your hometown. Let yourself be a high school All-American tackle or guard. They're not going to take the trouble to write to Kokomo Catholic to find out. When you get to hobbies, remember that your favorite author is Dostoyevsky and that you play the piano; you're trying to give the impression of a well-rounded individual.

Finally, when they ask you how you paid for college and what you are looking for in a job, there are a few things to avoid. Do not mention that your father is a heart surgeon and you never worked a day in your life. Use your imagination; if you live in Ohio say you toiled long and hard each summer and during breaks in the coal mines. Insert steel mills if you're from Pittsburg. And make sure you say you want to work for a progressive company, because that will make you sound industrious and enterprising. You might mention some lofty goal, like bringing about world peace, because that always sounds good, too.

In The Library

Brian Konzen

Every weeknight, the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's community gathers in the Memorial Library, their arms laden with books. However, not many people really study there. At least seven types of students inhabit the library:

Sleepy: Exhausted from classes all day and studying all night, this student seeks the quiet of the library for the rest he so badly needs. With a cushioned chair, a soft tabletop, and an organic chemistry textbook for a pillow, he is ready for the evening. His only problems are the lights, which the University stubbornly refuses to dim, and the closing bell which rudely awakens him. However, Notre Dame students are hardy, so they usually overcome these annoyances. Sleepy students are also found in the audio center with their feet on a chair and their headsets switched to a channel that plays no music. These students are harmless but may snore.

Dopey: This nervous individual attempts to study while under the combined influence of two or more drugs, such as caffeine, pills and coffee, or amphetamines and amyl nitrate. Trying to study non-stop three successive days in a row, the Dopey student resorts to drugs to stay awake. Unfortunately, they may reread the same paragraph four times (before realizing it is in the wrong book), or they often join the Sleepy students.

Happy: This student is smiling, noisy, friendly, and joyful. And why not? He did not bring any books to study. He came to socialize. Usually found on the second floor lounge, the Happy students gather to talk and mingle after a hard day of classwork. However, much to the irritation of the Sleepy students, they sometimes wander out of their natural habitat and into the study areas of the second floor.

Bashful: Little is known of these timid creatures, because they rarely venture out of the secluded regions of the upper floors. Observers believe they study there.

Grumpy: Related to the Bashful student, the Grumpy tries to study. Because they are territorial creatures (only Grumpy students have study carrels with their names engraved on them) they constantly fight with wandering Happy students. Hence their name, Grumpy, and their nickname, cutthroat. Often seen on nights before exams, the Grumpy student is dangerous and to be avoided. Most Grumpies stare at intruders before attacking; such warnings should be heeded.

Doc: Named after the degree they seek, these graduate students are closely related to Bashfuls. These nocturnal creatures live in holes in the library walls in the tower. Therefore, observation of their habits is difficult. Older Docs, also called Professors, migrate to live in subterranean, somewhat larger caves in the basement.

Sleazy: Like the happy student, the Sleazy one rarely studies and remains on the lower floors. However, this species tends to be female, and appears to be searching for a mate because it mingles almost exclusively with the opposite sex. Easily confused with some Happy students, the Sleazy ones are actually rather rare. Harshly criticized by other females, the Sleazy female in easily (and for males, pleausurably) spotted by her sun dresses in December and the overpowering scent of her perfume. Furthermore, Sleazy males never wear loose-fitting jeans.

Typing these articles is hard work; I'm going to the library now to get some rest.

So if you are a senior who has wasted all his time out here studying English, or if you're just basically useless, there is still hope. Just use a little American ingenuity and imagination and the world is yours. All you need now is an interview. And a prayer.

Budget keeps Congress divided

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two weeks into the new fiscal year, the House and Senate remain far apart on a 1980 budget, a document needed to set government priorities and establish firm spending ceilings.

House and Senate negotiators met last week, but managed to resolve only relatively minor differences.

Still separating the two chambers are the key issues of defense spending, proposed cuts in social programs and the federal deficit, which some members of Congress say must be held below $30 billion.

During the first week of negotiations between House and Senate conferees, senators continued to insist on their demand for a 3 percent increase above inflation for defense spending. The House has approved about a 1 percent increase.

Some senators say the higher defense spending is needed if the U.S. Soviet strategic arms limitation treaty is to stand any chance of Senate ratification. They also note that 3 percent growth was part of a U.S. commitment to strengthen the NATO alliance.

Deeply concerned about the fate of SALT II, President Carter has backed the 3 percent defense hike although administration lobbyists opposed House efforts last month to boost defense spending, a move that prompted angry attacks from pro-Pentagon senators.

During last week's conference committee, Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., a leading supporter of a bigger defense budget, blamed the mixed signals from the White House for the narrow defeat of a House proposal for more military spending.

"There's no doubt in my mind that the House favors 3 percent, the Senate favors 3 percent and the president of the United States favors 3 percent," Hollings declared.

However, Rep. James R.

Jones, D-Okla., a House conferee, defended the House defense spending level as adequate to meet the NATO commitment because it would increase funds for military hardware and readiness by 3.2 percent above inflation.

Jones said the House total would only provide less than 3 percent for areas such as military pay, which he said did not relate directly to NATO's preparedness.

Another bone of contention has been the Senate's call for about $3.2 billion in cuts in social programs through a process known as "reconciliation."

Reconciliation would force certain congressional committees to achieve savings in a wide variety of existing programs agreed to in the target budget of last May but so far not enacted.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, the Senate Budget Committee chairman, has made reconciliation the centerpiece of his budget proposals. But his House counterpart, Robert N. Giamo, D-Conn., insists that House committees have gone far enough in achieving savings.

GO GREYHOUND

"the majority of them are attending two-year community colleges while the majority of white youngsters are in four-year colleges and universities."

Blacks have made progress in housing, Jordan said.

"More black families are living in decent housing and some are living in suburbs that never saw a black face after the maid's quitting time." Jordan also pointed out, however, that the department of Housing and Urban Development says that blacks are more likely than whites to live in deficient housing, and they are likely to pay more than they can afford for decent housing than whites.

All of this shows that "race continues to be a determining factor in our society," Jordan said. "The gap between white people and black people is growing wider instead of closing smaller."

The agenda for "mobilizing the challenges of the 1980's", the theme of Jordan's speech, should be one in which "black people finally and ultimately enjoy full equality," he said.

This agenda, one that will transcend race and one that is for all people, should include, "a national full employment policy, a massive drive for affirmative action in all aspects of American life, a national youth development policy that gives hope and skill to young people denied hope, a national health policy that ensures high quality health care for everybody, and a housing program that ensures a decent living environment for everybody."

Jordan said that certain myths and illusions of our society must be destroyed if the United States is to accomplish the agenda for the 1980s. "The myth of black progress," he said, "is used as an excuse to halt further efforts to extend the real progress to all our people."

... Blacks

The myth of welfare being "synonymous with black" is yet another illusion, he said. "There are more white welfare recipients in this country than there are black welfare recipients," Jordan indicated.

Another myth that Jordan dismissed is that "revitalization or our cities is a black program." But Jordan added that revitalization of our cities is as much a problem for others as it is for blacks.

Still another myth is that the full employment issue is an issue for black people. As an example of this illusion, Jordan said, "If Chrysler goes down the drain, as some of our more conservative friends would like for it to do, there will be more white people out of work than black people out of work."

Jordan concluded by saying that it is his hope that the Urban League will not exist 54 years from now and that it will no longer be needed to fight for equal opportunity because "we will have achieved life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness for all of God's children."

Vernon Jordan was invited to be the guest speaker at the 54th annual dinner meeting for the Urban League of South Bend and St. Joseph County. He has directed the Urban League since January 1, 1972, working to achieve advances for the minority community.

In addition to holding previous positions, directorships, federal appointments and honorary degrees (one from the University of Notre Dame), Jordan is the author of a newspaper column, "To Be Equal", that appears in over 600 newspapers throughout the country.

Maintenance temporarily solves flooding problem

by Sal Granata

Campus Maintenance temporarily solved the problem of flooding in the lavatories of Grace Hall last week. However, Br. Charles Burke, Grace Hall rector, said yesterday that the problem could occur again.

Br. Burke attributed his hall's problems to "Drains in the urinals that are too small. Every 3 or 4 months they are supposed to be reamed out to remove residue. If you don't take care of them, they flood."

Periodic flooding is one of several problems inherent to the two highrise dorms, Flanner and Grace. At a meeting of the Campus Life Council (CLC) last Monday, Br. Burke discussed difficulties caused by vandalism, the complex construction of the towers and oversights in design. The items ranged from exhausted water pumps to broken ceiling tiles.

Last Sunday at about 8 p.m., the 4th floor drains did clog, causing a flood that spilled out of the washrooms and into the corridors. Maintenance men began repairs immediately and had the situation under control by 10 p.m.

Some residue and overflowing occurred on the 2nd and 3rd floors as a result of workers routing sediments out of the drain pipes.

The 11 year-old towers are heavily equipped with intricate heating and ventilation systems not common to other Notre Dame residence halls. Break-downs in these systems are inevitable, Burke told the Observer.

Oversights in building designs, such as neglecting to install drains in the washrooms, also contribute to maintenance woes. Settling foundations have caused leaks in window areas that have not been corrected.

Elevators, suspended ceilings, exit signs and wall clocks have all been the targets of vandalism in the towers. Yet both rectors believe that damage costs as a result of vandalism are not out of proportion to the number of tenants.

Although neither rector would make a direct statement on the cost of vandalism, Br. Burke quoted a campus poll last year as showing no significant differences between the attitudes of students living in the towers and other dorms.

... Pittsburgh

Now Weaver went to his bench, which has been so successful throughout the Series. Pat Kelly was sent up to bat for Flanagan and Blyleven responded by striking him out on a 2-2 pitch.

Quickly, the Bucs went about the work of adding to their lead in the seventh. Garner opened with a bouncer to shortstop that took a huge hop off the artificial surface infield and went for a single.

Blyleven tried to sacrifice, but forced Garner at second. Then shortstop Kiko Garcia made a brilliant stop on Moreno's shot up the middle and turned it into another force play.

Now Moreno began a cat-and-mouse game with relief pitcher Tim Stoddard, who was obviously concerned about the fleet Pirate's speed. Stoddard threw over to first base three times while working to Foli. The fourth throw, however, got away and Moreno reached second on the pitcher's error.

That was the break the Pirates needed. Foli rifled the next pitch up the gap in right-center field, scoring Moreno to make it 3-1, left-hander Tippy Martinez relieved for Baltimore and Parker upset that strategy with a double for another Pirates run.

Pittsburgh added to its cushion in the eighth inning after Stargell and Madlock opened with singles. It was Madlock's fourth hit of the game, making him the third player in this Series to tie that single-game record and the 39th in the 76-year history of the Series to do it.

After Steve Nicosia fouled out, Garner drilled an RBI single to left. It was Garner's second hit of the game and ninth of the Series, and kept his batting average at .500 for five games.

Blyleven bunted the runners up and Moreno got an intentional walk, loading the bases. That brought up Foli and, with the crowd chanting his name, he bounced a single up the middle to drive in two more runs and turn the game into a rout.

play again." Ferguson was happy with his performance, and also happy to step aside and let somebody else do the running.

"The record will take care of itself," Ferguson said. "This was a time we could get the young guys in there and build up their confidence so they'll be ready when they have to go in."

"You practice with these guys, sweat with them, and cry with them. And when they were in there today I was hollering for them. Besides these guys are tough. They can play as well as I can when they are given the chance."

solation match."

The fourth place Broncos wish the Irish had forgotten about it, as the Irish wasted little time in doing away with them, 5-2. Freshman Mark McMahon won two of his three matches, both in straight sets. Notre Dame's number-one singles player's only loss came against Illinois State when he suffered a 4-6, 6-3, 6-2 defeat at the hands of Darrell Smith. The second and third sets were the first ones McMahon had lost against any opponent since August. His singles string was snapped at 13 consecutive sets.

"I was rather pleased with our showing," said Fallon. "It was a much better showing than we displayed in last year's Invitational, and I think it was a good experience for everybody. I'm sure we could have played a little better but I'm still happy about it."

This tournament marked the only fall action for the Irish men who will not compete again until March.

ND's 'Invisible Man' lets arm do talking

COLORADO SPRINGS - Saturday's Notre Dame-Air Force game was supposed to be a day for record breakers, but it didn't turn out that way.

Notre Dame's Vagas Ferguson only needed 105 yards rushing to become the all-time career leader for the Irish. But Irish coach Dan Devine kept the senior halfback out during the second half in an effort to keep the score down.

Quarterback Dave Ziebart of Air Force did break the Falcon career passing yardage mark with 132 yards, but his performance was overshadowed by the fact that he threw two interceptions and missed some open receivers with poor tosses.

Instead it was Notre Dame quarterback Rusty Lisch who was mainly responsible for the 38-13 Irish victory at Falcon Stadium.

And as has been the case all season, Lisch was not around to talk about it after the game.

The Irish signal-caller has decided to maintain a low profile this season, managing to slip quietly out of the locker room before the members of the press can find him. Instead he has let his performance on the field do his talking. And Saturday Notre Dame's "Invisible Man" was speaking loud and clear.

Lisch enjoyed one of the best days of his career, completing 10 of 14 passes for 227 yards and two touchdowns, including a 75-yard bomb to freshman split end Tony Hunter.

"Rusty was really throwing well," Hunter commented. "He has one of the strongest throwing arms around, and he was putting the ball there today."

Hunter caught two other Lisch aerials for a total of 103 yards, and also had another long touchdown bomb, this time for 80 yards, called back because of an offensive pass interference call.

"It was called on me," admitted tight end Nick Vehr, who came in to replace injured started Dean Masztak. "I wasn't near the ball but the official ruled that I had made contact with a defender and pass interference was called."

Vehr also enjoyed the best day of his career, catching three passes for 37 yards and one touchdown, a two-yard diving catch on fourth and goal.

"It was a beautiful pass," Vehr added, as Lisch avoided a strong rush to get the ball off in time. "It was a really good day for Rusty."

It could have been a great day for Ferguson, who gained 84 yards on 15 carries in the first half, including two touchdowns, but Devine elected to save his star for the upcoming contest against USC.

"We held Vagas out of the second half not to prevent the rushing record, but to hold the score down," Devine admitted. "He could have made 400 yards today. I thought the game would get out of hand if he stayed in there."

"The last time he touched the ball he went 232 yards (for a touchdown) and nobody touched him. We didn't even run that

Force sixth game

Pittsburgh defeats Orioles, 7-1

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Bill Madlock ripped four hits and Tim Foli drove in three runs as the Pittsburgh Pirates, battling to stay alive, defeated the Baltimore Orioles 7-1 Sunday in Game Five of the 1979 World Series.

The victory left the Pirates still trailing the best-of-seven Series 3-2 but forced the teams back to Baltimore for a sixth game Tuesday night. Game Seven, if needed, would be played Wednesday night.

The Pirates had hoped to start Bert Blyleven in Game Six, but that plan was changed when Manager Chuck Tanner brought him out of the bullpen Sunday for his first relief appearance since 1972. Blyleven allowed three hits over the final four innings to complete a six-hitter. Jim Rooker had pitched the first five innings and left the game trailing 1-0.

The Pirates came up with two-run innings in the sixth and seventh to turn the game around. The catalysts in both rallies were the slap-hitting Foli and slugger Dave Parker.

Then Pittsburgh sealed the victory with a three-run eighth built around Madlock's fourth single of the game and a bases-loaded, two-out two-run single by Foli.

Mike Flanagan, winner of Game One in this Series, had the Pirates shut out over the first five innings and was leading 1-0 on a run the Orioles scratched off Rooker in the fifth.

Foli opened the Pittsburgh sixth with a walk on a 3-1 pitch. Parker, who had struck out in each of his first two at-bats Sunday, followed with a single to center.

With the Three Rivers Stadium crowd of 50,920 chanting "Let's Go Bucs!" Tanner had cleanup bater Bill Robinson bunt the runners along. It was an interesting strategy move because earlier in the Series Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver had suggested that bunting might not be such a good idea because it means your team is playing for a single run. But the Pirates got two this time.

Willie Stargell lifted one of his patented rainbow fly balls to center field. Al Bumbry settled under it easily but Foli scored after the catch, tying the game 1-1. Parker moved to third on the play and came home a moment later when Madlock muscled his third of four singles in the game--this one to center field.

With the Pirates in front, Baltimore tried to play catch-up baseball - an Orioles specialty all season. But the Bucs weren't yielding.

After Blyleven retired the first two hitters in the seventh, catcher Rick Dempsey hustled a routine hit into a double.

Irish take 3rd in tennis tourney

by Michael Ortman

Well, you win some, you lose some, and some get rained-out.

Notre Dame's tennis team encountered all three during this weekend's Irish Fall Invitational, finishing third in the eight-team competition.

A blind draw was held to determine first-round pairing for the two day tournament, and the Irish were matched against a tough Oral Roberts squad which had finished second a year ago, far ahead of fifth place Notre Dame.

Yet the Irish were not intimidated by the highly-touted Titans and posted a 5½-3½ victory. The number-two doubles was declared a tie after the two teams had split the first two sets. With the match already decided the temperature in the 40s and the second round opponents waiting to begin, the coaches opted to call it a draw.

The fact that the doubles matches of round two were also played on Friday, spelled disaster for the Irish as they lost all three to Illinois State.

"I thought that we had three pretty good doubles combinations out there," said Irish coach Tom Fallon, "but they just seemed to let up after the win over Oral Roberts. If we'd been able to win just one of the doubles, the match would have been a whole different story."

The second round singles were scheduled for 9 a.m. Saturday, but Mother Nature just didn't want to cooperate. The rain and cold temperatures forced all of the day's competition inside. The eight competing teams were spread all over South Bend with four teams playing in the ACC and the other four at the Lafayette South Racket Club. For the afternoon's third round, there was even further juggling of locations.

Notre Dame was faced with having to win five of the six singles in order to advance to the finals. But as soon as Illinois State won the number-one and number-five singles, the unfinished matches were suspended and State posted a 5-2 win.

Many tried to blame the foul weather for the second round's results, but Irish captain Carlton Harris, who had won his singles match and lost his doubles, pointed out, "The wind blows on both sides of the net."

The Cardinals finished second overall, losing to defending champion Miami, 6-3. The Redskins won the annual event for the fourth time in five years by sweeping the doubles competitions.

Notre Dame's third round opponent was Western Michigan, a team which the Irish had beaten during the spring season, 5-4. "We just weren't going to let down again," said Harris. "Just because we couldn't finish first didn't mean we were going to forget about the con-
