140,000 students prolong vacations as teachers strike across country

Associated Press

CHICAGO - Classes began yesterday for Chicago's 431,000 public school students following a two-day teachers' strike, but walkouts in seven states prolonged summer vacations for 140,000 other students, including 43,000 in Seattle.

In Chicago, the nation's third largest district, teachers and parents were relieved and students resigned at the news of a contract settlement. The walkout, which cost students one day of classes, was the third in three years.

A tentative agreement between the Chicago Teachers Union and school board officials came Wednesday after a 30-hour bargaining session mediated by James Reilly, chief of staff for Gov. James Thompson.

The union's House of Delegates suspended the strike pending a Sept. 19 ratification vote on the two-year contract by its 28,000 members and by 12,000 non-teaching members of 17 other unions.

The settlement calls for a six percent pay raise in the first year and three percent in the second year. It would increase the average salary of a Chicago teacher to $30,878 from $29,130 this academic year, and to $31,804 next year.

In Seattle, teacher representatives and district officials met informally yesterday in what the union said could be a prelude to a new round of official talks to end the three-day walkout.

"The purpose as we understand it was to be an off-the-record kind of thing, informal and exploratory," said John Cahill, spokesman for the Washington Education Association, a statewide teachers group that is aiding the Seattle Teachers Association.

About 3,700 teachers, substitutes, aides and secretaries went on strike Tuesday, a day before the district's 43,000 students were supposed to have returned to school.

School Board Chairman T.J. Vassar said at a board meeting Wednesday night he was confident new talks could be productive.

Main issues in the dispute were the state-imposed salary limit, class size, lack of extra pay for extra work days, a personal stipend for materials and supplies, and transfer policies for surplus teachers with seniority.

Last month's IFCU conference attended by Hesburgh and Healy

By LYNNE R. STRAND

Staff Reporter

"Father Ted was the life of the party," said Bill Healy, student body president, describing his recent trip with President Theodore Hesburgh to the Santo Domingo conference of the International Federation of Catholic Universities.

Last month Hesburgh and Healy - accompanied by Provost Timothy O'Meara, Dean of the College of Arts and Letters Michael Loux, their wives, and student Maureen McDonnell - attended the international discussion.

The Paris-based IFCU holds its conferences every three years. French, Spanish, and English all are spoken because delegations attend from North and South America, Europe, Africa, Indonesia, and the Middle East.

This year, according to Healy, delegates focused on a draft of a document on "Catholic Institutions of Higher Learning." Healy said the document "basically asserts more power from Rome over Catholic universities."

McDonnell, by winning a national contest on "the expectations of youth at Catholic universities," was invited to the conference by the Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities.

When asked what accounted for his participation in the conference, Healy said, "I was there as a listener, to give input to other students."

Boston College and Creighton University also sent student representatives to the conference.

Both Healy and McDonnell were impressed with the quality of the college administrators who ran the conference.

"I couldn't get over it," said McDonnell. "Everyone was so brilliant." Healy added, "You think of intelligent people as stuffy, but they weren't that way at all."

"But the best part," Healy said, "was that we really enjoyed ourselves." He said the opportunity "to really know people through meals and meetings" was more beneficial than the conference itself.

"The people are the best part," Hesburgh said to Healy. "There are real men behind the titles."

The president of the Dominican Republic spoke at the IFCU's opening ceremony guarded by four men holding machine guns. According to Healy, he and McDonnell were sitting only 10 feet away from the podium. "It really added to the whole air of the ceremony... That night, I could not sleep," he said.

To help get "an ear for the language," Healy took a Spanish crash course over the summer. Conference delegates used headphones "for simultaneous translations."

Healy said his funniest conversation was with a Frenchman. Both conversing in "poor Spanish, we had a riot. Everyone was so willing to try."

Commissioned by Pope Paul XI, Hesburgh wrote the IFCU constitution. A former IFCU president for 15 years, he chaired a day's session introducing the speakers.

6,000 expected to play game of musical chairs to break world record

By FRANK J. MASTRO

Staff Reporter

Having a chair pulled out from under you may help Notre Dame and Saint Mary's enter "The Guinness Book of World Records" in their attempt to break the world record for the largest game of musical chairs.

The attempt will be made this afternoon at 5:15 on Green Field.

The current record for the most participants in a game of musical chairs is 5,060 - set by the State University of New York at Albany this past spring. Tonight, at least 6,000 chairs will be assembled in the shape of the letters ND and SMC.

"The goal is 6,000. I think right now, from the preliminary estimates and the fact that we're inviting the public, we should do it," said Vince Willis, a Notre Dame sophomore and one of the game's organizers.

The game will begin with 100 fewer chairs than people. One hundred chairs will be taken away each time the music stops until 900 chairs remain.

With only 900 chairs left, the procedure of chair elimination will change slightly. After each stop of the music, 10 percent of the remaining chairs will be pulled until 100 remain. The final chairs then will be removed one at a time until a winner is declared.

"My guess is that it will be over between 9 and 10p.m.," Willis said.

The event will be verified through both local judging and media coverage. Father David Tyson, Provost Timothy O'Meara and Registrar Daniel Winicur tentatively have agreed to judge.

All the major networks and wire services have been invited as well as all the media within a 100-mile radius.

"Everyone who's anyone has been invited," said Willis. "An event like this should attract heavy coverage. When Ohio State broke the record in 1983, '20/20' did a segment about it," he said.

Due to the size of the event, registration of all participants is essential, and has been conducted in the dorms and the dining halls.

The last chance to register will be at Green Field between 3 and 5p.m. today. At this time, those who already have registered will receive their official game numbers.

"The idea to break a world record was presented to me this summer," said Jim Domagalski, president of the junior class. "We just sat down and came up with the musical chairs idea."

"It originally started as a Class of '87 project, but it became a campus-wide project when we realized the number of people involved," Domagalski said.

As a result, all three upperclass

Passing years inspire maturity and off-campus living

Two weeks ago, I moved into my nine-month Hoosier home for the final time. It was different from my first three moving-in experiences in one dramatic way: I didn't move into a dorm.

Off-campus life has its ups and downs. Three cannot live as cheaply as one. Dishes will not clean themselves no matter how long left near a soapy sink. The old man who used to clean our bathroom doesn't make house calls.

The first time I passed my former dorm, that pile of brick named after Mr. Flanner, I said a Hail Mary, thanking the Lord for delivering me from the place once called a "penal colony" - by an assistant rector. The next time, two Hail Marys. Now, I say a rosary. Soon, I fear, I'll have to learn the Apostle's Creed again.

Granted, many Domers love their dorms from day one, spend hours rapping with the rector and think living with several hundred members of the same sex is socially stimulating. They, I think, are mature for their ages. We had other names for them.

The people with whom I lived for three years, the "we" in this story, were not of that sort. We were immature and spent most of our time proving it.

"Immature" is one of those stupid words people use to describe something they can't explain. In this instance, it means not being grown-up enough to realize that some things are wrong, others are right, and one ought not do things which are the former.

Immature people are mutts on a walk, sniffing everything that smells, treading on forbidden turf, going gleefully to the bathroom wherever nature calls.

Though all good Catholic boys who loved their mothers, we nevertheless felt this urge to break free - along with any thing or rule that got in the way.

A good time was our common goal, but we were never evil enough to deliberately hurt someone. Call our movie, "Hedonists Go To College."

Sometime during sophomore year, things began to change. I began hearing little voices in the back of my head saying, "Thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not blow up toilets, thou shalt not propel burning solid objects down the hall at twice the speed of sound." It became maddening.

Suddenly, I couldn't remember the process for "penny-in." My toothpaste bombs lacked creativity. Friday nights in the library seemed less offensive.

I'm even - double gasp - getting married next summer. My bride-to-be won't tolerate volcanoes at the dinner table.

Bob Musselman

Assistant News Editor

Most of my colleagues have taken similar plunges. The real world and a career seem right around the corner. Mom and Dad call less often.

Many 18 year-olds don't have much common sense. Some do, or are fortunate enough to live with others who are grown-up and provide a steady influence. Others, like a hurricane, dwell and prey on each other's weaknesses until one big bad situation forms.

Dorms don't let that situation run its course, probably the best solution to the problem. Like a hurricane, it will eventually die out. There may be some damage. Some will have to pay the price.

Hall staffs, priests and brothers at the head, would rather not deal with students who don't play by the rules. Who can blame them? Should the majority suffer for the few? I'm not sure.

Notre Dame, however, is a place to learn. Mutts can be taught not to do their business on the neighbor's lawn. It just depends how you care about the dog.

I guess my prayers, as I see Flanner each day, should be directed at the guys who still live there. For those experimenting with grain alcohol or calcium carbide (makes a great bomb), here's hoping that you don't get caught and you don't hurt someone.

For the mature leaders all around campus, I pray for patience, which you need much more than that copy of Dulac on your desk. Sure, 10 students are on the waiting list for each one you throw out. But I don't think that's necessary. Time (and appropriate punishment) will produce students who have become decent citizens.

In reality, my reason for moving off-campus does not center around a desire for unspeakable pleasure and independence. Now that common sense rather than a rector says, "don't do that, you jerk," stupid things aren't fun anymore. I just want peace, quiet and a few beers now and then.

Maturity corrupts.

Teachers

In Rhode Island, walkouts by Pawtucket and Newport teachers idled 12,100 students for a second day. Superior Court hearings on return-to-work orders sought by the cities' school committees are scheduled Monday in both Newport and Pawtucket.

"The teachers' position right now is that we are willing to negotiate ... at any time, any place," said Michael Segerson, a third-grade teacher and picket coordinator.

But Laurent Rousseau, negotiating attorney for the School Committee, said he does not expect a quick settlement. "It seems the two sides are firming up their positions in areas that would prevent a resolution," he said.

Affair of accused spy admitted during trial of former FBI agent

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - A woman testified yesterday she was former FBI agent Richard Miller's lover at the same time he was romantically involved with a Soviet spy, and that he admitted to her he sold classified documents.

Marta York of Portland, Ore., testified during Miller's espionage trial that she came to Los Angeles to visit him during the last two weeks of September 1984.

She said at the time she visited him, she was unaware he was having an intimate relationship with Svetlana Ogorodnikov, who has been convicted of spying for the Soviet Union, but he later told her.

York said she believed Miller was divorced and she was seeking a long-term relationship with him.

Miller, the first FBI agent ever accused of spying, was a tense and nervous man who poured out his personal problems to her, York said of her two-week visit during which she went to movies and the county fair with him.

York, a native of El Salvador and a resident alien, said she warned him repeatedly that "we were being followed and watched."

"The last day I told him somebody was taking pictures," she recalled. "He always laughed at me and said I liked to play detective."

Before she returned to Portland, she said Miller admitted to her he was not divorced and told her he was obsessed with making money. She returned home on Sept. 29, she said.

Hours before Miller's arrest on Oct. 2, she said she received a collect telephone call from him.

"He told me he was calling me to warn me what had been happening before I heard it on the news," she said. "He told me he'd been interrogated by the FBI... he said he'd been accused of selling confidential material."

She said Miller also confided he failed a lie detector test.

"I asked him if he did or he didn't (sell classified documents). He hummed, then he paused, and then he said, 'Yes I did, only one.'"

"He said, 'I thought I had a good deal,'" she testified.

She added that in the same conversation, he confided to her he had been involved with a Russian woman at the same time he had been romancing her.

She said Miller urged her not to talk to the FBI.

York said she had known Miller as a friend since 1970 and her husband had become particularly friendly with him. When her husband died in June 1984, she said she notified Miller and they renewed their acquaintance.

Miller, who is married and the father of eight children, faces a possible life sentence if convicted of passing secrets to the Soviets through Ogorodnikov.

Health officials release guidelines to keep AIDS out of blood supply

Associated Press

ATLANTA - In revised guidelines aimed at eliminating AIDS virus from the blood supply, federal health officials recommended yesterday that any man who has had sex with another man even once in the last eight years refrain from donating blood.

The National Center for Disease

Control for years has considered homosexual or bisexual men with multiple sexual partners to be at increased risk for acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

But the latest recommendation from the Food and Drug Administration, published by the Atlanta-based CDC, applies even to men "who may have had only a single contact, and who do not consider themselves homosexual or bisexual."

The FDA stopped short of saying that any man who has had gay sex is at increased risk for AIDS, "but we would certainly consider them able to be carriers," said Susan Cruzan, a spokeswoman for the FDA.

Federal deficit and trade balance cited as priorities by congressman

Associated Press

WASHINGTON House Republican Leader Robert Michel, in a fresh sign of trouble for President Reagan's "fall offensive," said yesterday there is more sentiment among the voters for reducing federal deficits and the nation's record trade imbalance than for overhauling the tax system.

"There's much more concern about those issues than (about) tax reform. There's no way around it," Michel said in his first comments to reporters since returning to Washington from the month-long Congressional recess.

In addition, Michel concurred in predictions by Democrats that the House is likely to override a possible veto on legislation imposing sanctions against white-ruled South Africa. That legislation has not yet cleared Congress, but a final vote is expected within several days.

Michel said he believes Reagan remains very popular personally in the country. But the veteran GOP leader's assessment of the rising sentiment for trade legislation roughly paralleled an observation on Wednesday by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, and also was in keeping with the feeling reportedly expressed at a private, morning meeting of House Democratic whips.

At that session, according to Rep. Terry Bruce, lawmakers told O'Neill and other Democratic leaders they heard more complaints about trade issues from constituents than any other issue during their month away from the capital.

Reagan has expressed opposition to trade legislation that some Democrats favor, such as a stiff tariff on imported goods from some countries. But Michel said he was hoping the administration could "get on the offensive" on the issue with a series of administrative steps, perhaps by the end of the week.

Trade and economic matters aside, House Republicans, picking up the traces of legislative responsibilities, spent the morning discussing terrorism and other foreign policy matters with Secretary of State George Shultz.

Several Republicans said later Shultz gave no hint of whether Reagan intends to veto legislation imposing sanctions against the white-ruled government of South Africa, and the secretary declined comment after the session.

E.F. Hutton promises to reorganize structure after legal problems

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Former Attorney General Griffin Bell blamed lax management for allowing E.F. Hutton & Co. to slip into legal trouble over its banking practices. The firm said yesterday it would implement Bell's recommendations for an extensive reorganization.

Three top officials are leaving corporate headquarters and a company statement said the board of directors will be restructured to ensure that a majority of the members are from outside the firm.

In a report and 90-minute news conference on his three-month investigation, Bell drew a picture of a corporate giant with so little control from the top that it had no way to detect wrongdoing by several of its middle managers.

It also was a picture of a firm so eager to maximize the interest earnings on its huge daily cash flow that abuses were practically invited.

"The absence of controls is particularly noticeable given Hutton's intense desire during 1980-82 to maximize interest income ... and the knowledge of senior Hutton management that substantial interest income could be generated through bank overdrafting," the report said.

Bell said, however, that his investigators were unable to link wrongdoing to top New York officers "from a standpoint of criminality."

"It was a management failure, not an ethical failure," Bell said.

But he said there was wrongdoing by a group of middle managers who were given immunity from prosecution by the Justice Department in an unsuccessful effort to trace improper check overdrafting practices to corporate headquarters.

The report recommends that six regional managers be assessed penalties ranging from $25,000 to $50,000 with the money being paid to a charity, and the firm said this will be done. The six are among those given immunity.

Hutton chairman Robert Fomon hired Bell to conduct an internal investigation after the firm pled guilty on May 2 to 2,000 counts of wire and mail fraud in connection with bank overdrafting that the Justice Department said cheated hundreds of banks out of millions of dollars in interest on Hutton accounts.

The report said just over a quarter of the 397 banks that may have suffered interest losses have signaled their intention to file claims for restitution, and Bell said he believes the $8 million fund Hutton has reserved for restitution will be more than enough.

Bell, attorney general under President Carter, said he could not fault the Justice Department for granting immunity to some employees in an attempt to trace wrongdoing to the top.

'Spectacular' pictures promised of recently located Titanic wreck

Associated Press

WOODS HOLE, Mass. - Researchers who found the wreck of the Titanic headed for home yesterday, with the chief scientist promising he was bringing back "spectacular" film from the expedition.

The Navy-owned research ship Knorr, operated by Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, was scheduled to dock Monday.

Officials said Robert Ballard, chief scientist on the mission, will try to arrange a return trip, possibly next summer, to explore the sunken luxury liner in a manned submersible known as the Alvin.

Woods Hole officials said there is concern the future may bring scavengers to the wreck site, about 560 miles off Newfoundland.

"Ballard is very concerned with the exploitation of the Titanic. Wreck-ruining destroys archaeological finds," said William Marquet, senior engineer at the Woods Hole Deep Submergence Laboratory, which is headed by Ballard. "If he were to return, it would be to continue documentation and not as exploitation."

Robert Spindel, head of the Woods Hole department of ocean engineering, said numerous questions must be answered before another visit to the wreck is scheduled.

"Mainly, it's a matter of safety. But also it's a question of what you could learn about it," he said, adding that a possible reason for inspecting the ship in a manned vessel would be the chance to learn more about corrosion and preservation.

"We don't know that much about the preservation of things at the depths of the sea floor. People all over the world are thinking about using it for disposal, particularly of nuclear waste," he said.

Asked how Woods Hole could safeguard the Titanic, he said, "We've tried not to release the exact position of the ship and the exact depth of the find. But we heard aircraft were in the vicinity. I don't think there is anything we can do about that."

He said Woods Hole would act to protect the Titanic only if someone were to try to salvage it. "We'd have to appeal to a higher authority to ask them that the Titanic remain where it is, as it is."

John Eaton, historian of the Titanic Historical Society, said the site should be "protected by some international group and be kept free of all marauders."

Filming since the wreck was found Sunday was done by a video camera aboard the Argo, an unmanned submersible developed by Ballard.

Ballard said the explorers had not seen the stern of the ship. They believe they located it last night with sonar, "but it was in a very difficult area and we just weren't able to maneuver into it."

Bruce Springsteen fans give blood for chance to attend Indy concert

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - Fans of Bruce Springsteen donated blood, kept telephone lines humming and doled out large wads of cash yesterday in a last-minute scramble for a chance to see the rock star's sold-out concert at the Hoosier Dome.

The New Jersey rocker, who played to two packed houses in Indianapolis' Market Square Arena in January, is scheduled to take the stage before 52,000 people at the downtown football stadium tonight.

All $17.50 tickets for the concert were sold in less than six hours on Aug. 22, but yesterday, many fans were taking advantage of every opportunity to get Springsteen tickets.

The Central Indiana Regional Blood Bank and radio station WENS used four pairs of Springsteen tickets to lure donors to a special blood drive.

Martha Sakai, WENS promotion director, said approximately 150 people donated blood in the first seven hours of the promotion, which ended last night. The previous best for a station-sponsored blood drive was 25 donors in four hours, she said.

"We had a lot of first-time donors," said Sakai. "Basically we are trying to get people in the habit of giving blood, not just for Bruce Springsteen."

She said the names of donors, who had to be at least 17 years old, went into a drawing for the tickets last night.

The station set aside one pair of tickets for the promotion, and three other pairs were donated by listeners after the promotion was announced, Sakai said.

She said the promotion was timely because the regional blood bank had run out of some types of blood Wednesday night.

At other radio stations in Indianapolis, phone lines were busy as listeners tried to claim tickets.

John Wetherbee, program director at WNAP-FM, said his station was giving away 30 pairs of tickets to listeners who called in last weekend to register for drawings. The contest had about 500 entries, five times the usual number for a similar drawing, Wetherbee said.

The station gave away 20 pairs of tickets Wednesday to listeners with the best banners welcoming Springsteen to Indianapolis, Wetherbee said.

The rock station also was encouraging its listeners to donate money or canned goods to food banks, charities that Springsteen often helps when he visits a city.

One WNAP spot said "Bruce Gives, You Should, Too," a reference to Springsteen's $25,000 donation to Gleaners Food Bank of Indianapolis in January, Wetherbee said.

Across town, FM station WFBQ continued to give away 25 pairs of tickets set aside for listener promotions. The album-rock station also announced it would play only Springsteen music during the early-evening hours before the concert today and would feature the singer-songwriter's music throughout the weekend, said promotion director Pam Cohen.

"He represents such an American image that I think everybody is charged up about the concert, more so than for others," Cohen said of Springsteen, whose "Born in the USA" album has been among the nation's bestsellers for more than a year.

Ticket giveaways for the concert weren't confined to Indianapolis.

Wanted: more tickets

Next Saturday 101,701 screaming fans will fill Michigan Stadium to see the Irish take on the Wolverines. Only slightly more than 200 of these people will be Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students.

The University of Michigan allotted Notre Dame 6,000 tickets to the contest. In turn, the Notre Dame administration sold approximately 75 percent of those tickets to alumni. Administrators, football staff and players received 22 percent. Three percent are offered to students.

For the majority of students left in South Bend, get comfortable. Not one of the 5,000 tickets the University was allotted for the Sept. 28 Purdue game has been designated for students. Again, almost three-quarters of the tickets are for alumni.

Students are given first priority for tickets for every home game. For this reason, administrative logic rules that it is only fair that alumni get first crack at games played in their region. But fairness is not the only issue at hand. Ticket Manager Mike Bobinski has said that to insure alumni support, both financial and other kinds, they must be offered tickets.

As part of the Notre Dame family, alumni deserve the opportunity to support their alma mater through football games; however, this right should not overshadow that of tuition-paying students. A more equitable division of tickets must be reached.

At a time when the Notre Dame mystique is being challenged on the football field and questioned in the stands, students should not be so unfairly denied the chance to show their enthusiasm for the Irish.

When the ticket office reviews its policy on away games and possibly proposes changes, as Bobinski has said it will, let's hope the administration considers more than 200 of its students.

Responses to Safranek

Dear Editor:

Safranek's column, which appeared September 2, argued two major points. First, Americans who protest against this country's involvement in the policy of apartheid are frauds and second, we are only protesting to ease our social consciences of the burden of America's history of slavery.

Safranek grudgingly admits that American protesters are promoting some value, his term is democracy. He goes on to say, however, that American protesters are two-faced because they are ignoring the oppression inflicted upon the people of Afghanistan, Vietnam and Eastern Europe. Safranek does not have his facts correct. I hear outrage over the other injustices enumerated by Safranek from the very people who protest the policy of apartheid.

Perhaps Safranek objects to the methods used by those in this country who oppose apartheid, but America's involvement in South Africa is largely economic, and the best tools for fighting apartheid in a country where our presence is so pervasive are economic tools such as divestiture and boycotts.

Safranek further suggests that the moral force is taken from the argument against apartheid because our government will suffer to sit down with oppressive governments. Confrontation is the solution that Safranek seeks. Yet we confront unjust governments every day. Just what kind of confrontation would Safranek like to see? Nuclear? American and Americans are not silent to other injustices, but they do recognize that we cannot just nuke them away. Changing governments always takes time. We must use those tools available to us that are both moral and effective. In South Africa it is economic tools, in other countries it is diplomacy.

Finally, Safranek says that Americans who are protesting apartheid are merely relieving their conscience of the guilt of past slavery. Such a suggestion is perhaps the most disgusting thing I have heard in the war of words over apartheid. We who are against apartheid (unhappily, I do not count Safranek among us) are truly dedicated to the idea that all women and men have certain rights. When we see our government, our industries and businesses promoting a government that denies these rights, we do what we can to protest, to influence and to change. Those against apartheid are motivated by a deep conviction that all men and women, wherever they are, are entitled to the enjoyment and exercise of these rights. In what does Safranek believe? By what is he motivated?

Dear Editor:

The September 2 editorial on apartheid protestors by Steve Safranek was an effort to put the burden of proof for change on the poor and least articulate, as well as their advocates. That may not have been its intention, but the article provides yet another argument against striking out and protesting what is wrong in this world.

The article seems conflicted even in its conception of wrong. Speaking mystically of "valuable principles," it belittles apartheid protestors and in fact says that they lack convictions for justice. I applaud anyone who refuses to ignore indecency when it occurs before their eyes. It seems we help no cause by doing nothing. Unfortunately, the article seems to praise those who choose inaction and indifference over a life of conviction. It claims that protestors of South Africa's policies must justify the oppression of the Soviet Union. While this might be another way of calling liberals commies, I really doubt it. The effect, however, is no less paralyzing. We cannot hesitate to do what we can, just because our lives are too brief to end all injustice. There is time to speak out against the Soviet Union, but I think we have to start with our own country's problems. That might show more of the "consistency" emphasized in the article.

The most pernicious argument in the article is that apartheid protestors, devoid of conviction, just speak up because it feels good. This seems to mean that the protestors feel free to point out the wrongs of others because they consider themselves blameless. Doing so does not require much courage or thought. This article is not, as we may expect, an appeal for more attention to this nation's domestic problems, for example, malnourished, hollow-eyed children in South Bend or migrant workers in Southern Michigan. Instead, the article suggests that we turn our attention to the easily listed evils of the Soviet Union.

This suggestion does not reek of principle or courage. I think if we are responsible for anything in the world, it is our own part of it first - the part we can most directly affect. It is true that South Africa is far away. But the South Africa protests are just the beginning, not the end, as the article says. Emerson wrote that each generation has to choose between "truth or repose. Take which you please," he said, "you can never have both." The protestors have made their choice, and it is not one of comfortable repose.

"People really win on MTV!" Just ask Kevin Herbert of Stanford Hall, the winner of MTV's "Millions for MS" Rock-Alike contest. Though the last memory most of us have of Herbert is his winning impersonation of Bruce Springsteen in the contest, his victory last spring was only the beginning of a whirlwind summer affair with the rock scene.

In addition to appearing on national television, Herbert was awarded a summer internship with MTV in New York.

Herbert worked primarily in the marketing department, concentrating on promotional projects for various concerts. For example, he helped to ship tickets, buttons, T-shirts, and other paraphernalia for the Kenny Loggins concert tour to those radio stations promoting the concert for MTV. While the experience he gained was invaluable, Herbert says that "... it was the people that I worked with that made the job so great. They were really knowledgeable and taught me a great deal about the business of marketing and promotional work."

Aside from working, Herbert also performed at two of New York's most prestigious clubs, Studio 54 and the Hard Rock Cafe. While "Born in the U.S.A." remained his trademark, Herbert did manage to perfect a performance of Springsteen's "Dancing in the Dark" as well. The talented sophomore was also interviewed by "Entertainment Tonight," The New York Daily News, and the New York Post, in addition to appearing on MTV's birthday celebration, where he met such stars as Glenn Frey and Simon LeBon.

Sadly enough, Herbert was unable to meet his mentor, but MS officials are still trying to arrange a meeting between Springsteen and his youthful counterpart.

Herbert is still performing though, and will be heading the Rock-Alike contest for this year. When asked if this experience would lead to any further career in singing or television, he only laughed and said, "It's a great opportunity, and I'm going to keep on performing Bruce, but it's time to give someone else a chance to be the best."

Back at Notre Dame, he still listens to Springsteen, and proudly displays his pictures of Nina Blackwood and Martha Quinn (with himself) on his bulletin board. One freshman, having looked at the photographs, failed to recognize either "VJ", but when asked who was in the picture with them, replied, "I'm no fool, I know when I see Bruce Springsteen!"

The Rock-Alike contest and Tommy Shaw concert that followed were filmed and scheduled to be aired during the Memorial Day weekend. Because of editing difficulties with Jerry Kramer Productions, however, it was delayed until late July, when MS officials decided to move the concert's premiere to the first weekend of September in order to coincide with the beginning of the MS fund-raising convention.

The Rock-Alike contest and Tommy Shaw concert will be shown at the Senior Club on Saturday, September 7, at a party open to all classes. At 10 p.m. the concert will be aired; afterwards, Herbert will give a live performance to show once again that here at Notre Dame, Bruce is "The Boss!"

Would we dare to walk this earth as saints?

Rev. Robert Griffin

Letters to a lonely God

Father Hesburgh is one of the few people I know who could use the line: "The only real tragedy is not being a saint," without sounding preachy. When I hear him say, in that old-fashioned phrase of his, "I think the guy's a saint," saintliness seems suddenly re-defined as a kind of goodness that has a lot of class. He makes you aware of giants walking on the earth, in touch with the secrets of God. Because they were humble enough to walk on their knees, you thought they were puny like everyone else. Hearing him, it seems okay to want to be a saint; it seems enviable to give the center of your soul to Christ, because belonging to Him is a status symbol qualifying you as a winner. Father Hesburgh's list is not just the official catalogue of the canonized. He may be talking about anyone, great or humble: a migrant worker or a German chancellor. He lets you see that you don't have to go around looking like Mother Teresa to be on an effective wavelength with the will of God. Father Hesburgh is in touch with a lot of people. Some of them sell newspapers in the Beirut airport. Others are freedom fighters in an army of liberation. Others plant grass under his office window. When, in praise, Hesburgh, says about a secretary, "The woman is a saint," sanctity sounds very classy, like something it would be a mistake to miss out on.

Saints, as I hear the word applied by Hesburgh, are good, hard working, self-sacrificing people, deeply into love and truth: faithful doctors, honest lawyers, parents who break their necks for their families. The saints in the technical sense - those with shrines in the churches, to whom novenas are made - often sound like freaks who missed out on the fun of being alive. That's probably because when their stories were told, the details got exaggerated. I want to think well of them; but it doesn't matter, because I'm not their judge. However, they are not the saints I have foremost in my mind when I say it is a shame that we are all not becoming saints. It's a pity that we are not taking a long look at life, separating the truths from the lies; and doing it as lovers wishing to serve the world without being deceived by its illusions. The world is too real and close to our fingertips for us to pretend it is a passing show, not worth spitting on. Mystics may say: "Remember, man, that you are dust; and into dust you will return." I'll say it too, with great conviction, when I've been to heaven, to see the face of God. In the meantime, as Thoreau said, "One world at a time," even at my advanced age. The world's in tough shape, but it's the only world we've got right now. I want to enjoy it, without becoming its victim. The Lord said I could inherit the whole globe, and still lose my soul. What good would that be, He wanted to know.

I'm not putting some heavy trip on you. Even at twenty, you know what integrity and honesty are; and your conscience is only a little shabby, though you may have taken shortcuts over goodness. Think of the best, most caring and sensitive person you know. Ask yourself: "If this person is a winner, am I, by comparison, a loser who should be ashamed of himself?"

"It's a pity that we are not taking a long look at life, separating the truths from the lies; and doing it as lovers wishing to serve the world without being deceived by its illusions."

Only a tedious preacher would have the nerve to tell a campus full of bright, ambitious students that it would be a mistake not to become a saint. Who then should I tell? A convent full of nuns? They already know it. The Catholics going to Mass on Sunday morning? I've got news for you: many of them know it too. Some of them are among the saints with a small "s," breathing the graces that defeat the darkness, the heartbeat of a tired Church. Before you laugh at them, look at the faces, and see your grandparents. The country is tired too. Young people could give it the strength of eagle's wings to lift it over the swamps of indifference.

Comparing generations is a waste of time. When I was young, they were fighting World War II. My father grew up during World War I. Your father, perhaps, had his war in Korea, and your uncle or brother in Vietnam. Are we better off now than we were ten, 20, or 40 years ago, because we are living in peacetime? Sufficient for the age is the evil thereof. Now, however, I read in the papers that the sickies are corrupting the children. Our cities are like the great trees you see along the roadside, diseased by the great, gray nests of web that the moths have built in the branches so that they can eat the leaves. Only fire and the amputation of limbs will make the trees healthy again. Evil has been building its nests among us for a long time. You don't have to be a fundamentalist to wonder if the devil is bringing us to the end of the ages when God will torch the planet, if we don't do it first ourselves.

Every once in a while, an award-winning youngster will stand up at a banquet or a commencement, and say: "I believe in God. I honor my father and mother by accepting the Gospel that they taught me." Then, it seems, a shudder of gratitude goes through the moral structure of the world. Wickedness is taken down a notch because wholesome-ness has asserted itself. A speech is not a crusade, but you have a feeling that decency is alive and well, despite the odds, as long as young people stand up in support of it.

The young heroes of a campus are not necessarily the best attendants of Mass or the students who keep busy with projects. I would most admire the kid with ideals, who has the guts to say to anyone making a bad mistake to please the crowd: "I don't think you know what you are doing." The rules of the kingdom of God are interior rules. You know who lives by them when you see a show of class. A show of class is not religion; it's better than religion, because religion is only a teacher pointing the way. A show of class comes from character, defined as noblesse oblige, which lights up the world more wonderfully than a miracle.

I don't know where character comes from; it's probably partly genetic, partly grace, partly common sense ripening into wisdom. Even if there were no God, it would serve you like the voice of God urging the duties of love. The Church helps build character, as it supports the lessons learned in a good home. Character is only the street name for something lovely that gives us our identity as children of God, like candles shining in the darkness. Father Hesburgh, mentioning the saints he has met, is saying, I think, that you can identify them easily as the children of God, and that maybe we miss the point of life if our paternity is ambiguous.

Showing tonight is "Despair" at the Annenburg Auditorium. This story concerns a mild little man who is driven to murder by his own delusions. The movie draws a disturbing picture of pre-Nazi Germany, in which Hermann, a Russian exile, watches his chocolate factory go to ruin in the worldwide depression. The tickets are $3 for the 7:30 p.m. and 9:45 p.m. showings.

beer, as well as Coach Digger Phelps, will play.

Numerous prizes, including cars, trips, and golf clubs, will be given away to the amateurs who are contributing $1,000 a piece to play with a celebrity.

The events will begin with an informal celebrity dinner Sunday night at the Century Center. The dinner, open to the public at $12.50 per plate, will include door prizes, a band, and a chance to rub elbows with some big names in sports.

A golf clinic given by professional golfers Mike Souhak and Carol Mann will precede the shotgun start at noon on Monday, and a $100-per-plate dinner in the Monogram Room of the ACC will conclude the festivities Monday night.

Plans for a bigger and better event are already in the works for next year's tournament, which may be held earlier in the summer.

Saint Mary's tennis team set for '85 season with familiar face at helm

By CHRISTINE FORTIN
Sports Writer

The Saint Mary's tennis team opens its fall season this weekend with a young squad, a new coach, and an enthusiastic outlook. The Belles' new coach, Debbie Laverie, however, is not a new face around campus - she is a 1985 Saint Mary's graduate.

Laverie played singles and doubles in the number-one position for the Belles all four years and was elected MVP each year. She was named captain and SMC Athlete of the Year her junior and senior years. In addition, Laverie finished off her collegiate tennis career ranked ninth in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics.

The Belles' 10-member team consists of two juniors, one sophomore, and seven freshmen. There are no seniors on the team and only one returning varsity player - Kim Drahoto. The team members in their respective singles positions are No. 1 Anne Dimbero, No. 2 Shaun Boyd, No. 3 Kim Drahoto, No. 4 Valerie Falbo, No. 5 Bridget Hertog, and No. 6 Sheila Campbell or Charlene Sjazka. Katie O'Brien, Anne Piacentine, and Jenny Rode are the remaining team members who are not holding positions to play this weekend.

"Although the team needs collegiate playing experience," says Laverie, "The girls' enthusiasm is a very positive aspect. Everyone is working hard and practicing together as a team."

The Belles face a tough schedule this fall to prepare themselves for the district tournament which will determine who will qualify for Nationals in the spring. Saint Mary's opens with Evansville and Marquette this weekend. Both opposing schools are NCAA Division One teams whereas Saint Mary's is an NAIA team.

Laverie is happy to be starting off the season with strong competition, though.

And that he did. "They are both tough teams," says Laverie, "but we've always beaten them in the past. If we keep our confidence, we'll do well."

The Evansville match will begin at 3 p.m. Saturday and the Belles will meet Marquette at 1 p.m. Sunday.

Replay of call enrages Yankee Stadium umps

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Crew chief Larry Barnett threatened to remove umpires from the field last night after a replay of a controversial call was shown on the scoreboard at Yankee Stadium, prompting several fans to throw objects at first base umpire Ken Kaiser.

In the top of the sixth inning of New York's 7-3 victory over Oakland, Mike Davis of the A's was called safe by Kaiser at first base on a close call. Two outs later, Dwayne Murphy hit a three-run homer that tied the score.

As the Yankees were leaving the field after the top of the sixth, the replay was shown twice - once at regular speed, once in slow-motion - on the large scoreboard in right-center field.

The replay appeared to show that Davis was out, and fans behind first base threw objects at Kaiser.

"I went into the Yankee dugout after the replays," Barnett said. "I told Billy (Yankees Manager Martin) that if they showed it one more time, I would take my umpires off the field. I do not want my umpires to get hurt."

"I don't expect to deprive the fans the pleasure of watching replays, but there is a directive in the American League that states replays should be shown with discretion. I plan on talking to Dr. Brown (American League President Bobby Brown) tomorrow morning. I told Billy to knock it off and he said it's in the hands of George (Yankees owner Steinbrenner)."

Steinbrenner, in the pressbox at Yankee Stadium, said: "call Bobby Brown tomorrow and see what he thought of that call."

"Hey, I admire good umpiring, but let them stand up and admit it when they make a mistake. I admire umpires who admit they blew a call like that umpire did in the Boston series (in a 10-inning, 5-4 New York victory over Boston on Aug. 16. Home plate umpire Drew Coble admitted he missed a call on a fourth ball to Willie Randolph for a walk that forced in the winning run)."

"I don't know about any league directive. I do not expect to get fined, but I expect a strong letter. What goes on around here is my responsibility, not the people who run the scoreboard."

Hudson confident about quarterback situation

By ERIC SCHEUERMANN
Sports Writer

With only a little more than a week left before the Notre Dame football team's opener at Michigan, many people have their eyes on the team's quarterback situation.

After Steve Beuerlein completed over 60 percent of his passes last year for 1,920 yards, the quarterback position seemed to be the spot that was least in doubt heading into the 1985 season.

Beuerlein's shoulder operation during the off-season, however, raised some question marks as to whether he would be 100 percent come fall. But after the 6-3, 201-pound junior's performance in the preseason, no one is doubting anymore.

"Steve is ready to go as our starter," says Irish quarterback coach Ron Hudson. "He's been very much up to par. He's been doing everything we expect."

"As far as the injury is concerned, we really won't know how he is until the Michigan game. He's been hit, but nothing like he'll be hit up there.

But he's working hard. I think he's ready."

In yesterday's scrimmage at the Stadium, Beuerlein looked to be very ready in every way. While completing eight of 12 passes for 111 yards and one touchdown, he threw the ball very well, appearing stronger than last year. In addition, he took a few hard hits while scrambling, showing no signs of pain.

With another year of experience behind him calling the signals, things look very good indeed for the Irish leader heading into the opener.

Another development during fall practice was the decision on a backup to Beuerlein. After spring practice, sophomores Terry Andrysiak and Tom Byrne were neck-and-neck in the battle for the number-two spot.

But despite suffering an injury to a finger on his left (non-throwing) hand, the 6-1, 181-pound Andrysiak has emerged as the backup this fall.

"Andrysiak is our number-two man," says Hudson. "His finger is in a cast, but he's going to get a smaller one so that he can handle the snap better."

Backing up Beuerlein on the White squad yesterday, Andrysiak filled in admirably, completing all four of his passes for 25 yards and one touchdown.

"He's doing very well, and he's learning very fast," continues Hudson. "We're pleased both with the way he's throwing the ball and with how he runs. The back-up spot looks more solid now."

Meanwhile, 6-4, 197-pound freshman Steve Belles is giving Byrne a battle for the number-three spot on the roster. One of the most highly regarded freshman quarterbacks in the country, the Phoenix, Ariz., native has closed the gap between himself and the 6-5, 212-pound Byrne this fall.

"It's a close contest between Byrne and Belles for the third spot," says Hudson. "Belles' size and weight are his major strengths. He's not really that far advanced mentally for a freshman, but physically he's so strong that he can do things that maybe another guy his age couldn't do."

"Byrne's doing real well and improving also. It's a tough fight for that spot."

Battling behind these four are sophomore Pat Pesavento of Lockport, Ill., and freshman Pete Graham of Rumson, N.J.

After a spring in which he made great strides, Pesavento looked good in limited action in yesterday's scrimmage.

The important questions have been answered, however. Often called the key to this year's Irish hopes, Beuerlein is looking better than ever. And now that Andrysiak has settled in at the number-two spot, he should be ready to play if for any reason Beuerlein can not. With all that settled, they can now look ahead to the Wolverines.

EXTRA POINTS - The kicking game was by the far the highlight of yesterday's final scrimmage of the season, as junior John Carney booted field goals of 57 and 62 yards and freshman Jim Sacco connected from 48 yards. . . . Meanwhile, sophomore Vince Phelan continues to assert himself in the punting derby that already includes Dan Sorensen and Hal Von Wyl. . . . Aside from the kicking game, however, Coach Gerry Faust was unenthusiastic about his team's effort: "We did some things well," noted Faust, "but it wasn't a real good scrimmage. We didn't come off the ball well. Our execution wasn't good, but the kicking game was excellent - what we need now is to put everything together. Today we were trying to concentrate on game situations." . . . Leading rushers in the scrimmage were reserve tailbacks Alonzo Jefferson (four carries for 79 yards - including a 49-yard TD run) and Ray Carter (nine carries for 59 yards and a touchdown). . . .

blocker and an important cog in the team's attack. Then there are juniors Mollie Merchant and Karen Sapp, a duo of proven veterans. Lambert calls Merchant, a talented server, the most improved player on the team. Sapp is a sure-fire bet to log playing time because she is such a threat at the net. Also in the wings is sophomore Kathy Baker, a steady competitor last year as a freshman.

"Everyone has come back this year as a better athlete and as an improved player," Lambert says. "Everyone is more knowledgeable and more skilled. And that makes us a better team."

The first test of the team's mettle comes tonight as the Irish make their 1985 debut against Kentucky. The Lady Kats walloped the Irish back in 1983 in three straight lopsided games.

Mutschler has all the tools for stopper position

By FRANK LIPO
Sports Writer

A stopper is important on any team, whether it's a late-inning baseball relief pitcher or a hard-hitting linebacker. Jock Mutschler, a tri-captain on the Notre Dame soccer team, plays the defensive position of stopper, and should play a key role in Irish soccer fortunes this year.

"I'm sort of defense-oriented," says Mutschler. "And what the stopper has to do is mark the center-forward, who is usually the best scorer for the other team."

Irish coach Dennis Grace feels his star fills all the necessary qualifications to be a successful defensive stopper.

"There are certain qualities you look for when you look for a stopper back . . ." says Grace, "tenacity, strength, a never-say-die attitude, a very, very high work rate, and a great deal of concentration. Jock plugs right into that description very well."

"When Jock was born, I'm sure he had stopper across his forehead," continues Grace. "He could play other positions, there's no doubt in my mind, but I don't think he could play other positions nearly as well as he plays the stopper position."

Although Mutschler is recovering from a minor shin bruise suffered in the George Mason game, he should be in the lineup as the Irish soccer team faces Wisconsin-Milwaukee tomorrow at 2 p.m. on Alumni Field.

Wisconsin-Milwaukee has a 2-0 record so far on the young season, with victories against Quincy and Tulsa in the Quincy Tournament. Grace feels this contest will be another tough battle since the Panthers had a good recruiting year to complement an already experienced squad. To further concern Grace are the facts that the Irish have never before defeated the Panthers and that this opponent seems determined to regain its status as a perennial top-20 contender.

"They are a balanced offensive and defensive team," says Grace. "I don't think they'll be as technically good as either Virginia or George Mason (who handed the Irish losses on the recent East coast trip), but they'll be very well-coached and I'm sure they'll come out playing hard."

Wisconsin-Milwaukee is the first opponent for the Irish from the Midwest region. These regional games are important because the teams that do well in the region will receive bids to the NCAA tournament.

Mutschler, in particular, is looking ahead to these key midwest rivalries.

"They're going to be real battles," says the senior standout. "All these Midwest teams are pretty evenly-matched."

It is Grace's hope, though, that Mutschler's work on both ends of the field will be the difference. For although the talented player's reliable defensive play has made him vital to the Irish squad, the senior captain has been also working much on his offensive game this year.

Jock Mutschler

"He doesn't see as much of the (offensive) game as we would like right now, but he's improving on it," admits Grace. "Before the season is out he'll be adding a great deal to our offense, without letting his defensive responsibilities fall off at all. He gives opponents fits when he plays against them one-on-one, and he's played well against some of the best players in the country."

"He does such a good job at what he does that we have to have him play," continues Grace. "The gravy would be if he can give us the offensive thrust and the offensive contributions."

Mutschler echoes Grace's evaluation of his contribution to the team.

"Probably my weakness would be moving up and getting into the offense," he agrees. "(Coach Grace) has worked with me a lot to get me more involved with the offense and make me more aware of the offensive scheme of things."

Chosen captain by his teammates during the summer, Mutschler tries to use his steady style of play as a tool in his role as captain.

"I try to be a good role model on the field as well as off," he admits. "I'm not the rah-rah, aggressive, overzealous type. I try to go up to freshmen and give them a pat on the back instead of screaming to get them motivated."

In Grace's opinion, Mutschler fulfills his duties in this respect with the same success that he performs his on-the-field responsibilities.

"He just wants to go out there and do his job and make sure everybody else does theirs," says Grace. "He's doing a very good job as captain right now."

Still another goal of Mutschler's, though, is to improve the "team concept."

"I want the team to work as a cohesive unit," he says. "One of the goals as captain is to get the freshmen involved and to make sure they know they're contributing, and to make sure they fit in and adjust well. That's a big thing I've really concentrated on."

"We've got five or six freshmen who see playing time," he adds. "We just need time to jell."

Mutschler hopes that this can occur rapidly, though, since the challenges of the Notre Dame soccer schedule are many and great.

"It's really exciting because it's not hard to get up for a game anymore," says the veteran Mutschler. "In the past we've had patsy teams. This year we're just loaded with powerhouses, and it's really good to challenge yourself each game. It's not hard to get up mentally to play against the best teams."

"We can't expect to win them all with the schedule we have, though," he continues. "(Our goal) is just to improve with each game."

Grace, meanwhile, is excited about the future of his star player and leader, and along with it, the chances for his team.

"I'm hoping that we can show the people that we deserve to have an opportunity to play against the better teams in the country," says Grace. "We're pretty much on schedule where we want to be. A lot will be told Saturday. We'll find out what we learned against Virginia and George Mason."

Volleyball team opens 1985 season tonight at ACC against Kentucky

By CHUCK EHRLMAN
Sports Writer

Tonight at 7:30 the Fighting Irish return to the ACC for a night of women's volleyball. And they open their season in grand fashion. On the other side of the net will be Kentucky.

Kentucky is no lightweight opponent. Last year it finished with a 22-8 record.

"Kentucky is an unknown quantity to us," says coach Art Lambert. "They had an excellent team last year, so it's going to be tough."

One thing is quite clear this season, the Irish are out to make a name for themselves in big-time college volleyball. The transition into a volleyball power continues, and optimism runs high for a team that finished second in the North Star Conference last year. Lambert hopes to find better consistency this time around after going through a rollercoaster season full of peaks and pitfalls in '84, enroute to a 14-13 mark.

Without question, the Irish are bona fide contenders for the conference championship. But the team also wants recognition on the national scene and the girls hope to move up another rung on the ladder into the glitter and hoopla of prime time college volleyball. The climb will not be an easy one, though.

First and foremost there is the schedule, and it is a tough one.

"This year the schedule is much more difficult," Lambert says. "Four of the teams we're going to face are in the AP Top 20."

The competition has been beefed up to include the traditional volleyball giants of the college circuit. From here on, it's nothing but first-class opposition for the Irish.

The big-name teams include the likes of Purdue, Western Michigan, Illinois St., Northwestern, Missouri, Oregon, and Arizona St. Add to this a trip over fall break to the "capital of volleyball excitement," California, where the Irish will play three matches. Also appearing are Ohio State, Georgia, Oklahoma, Houston, and UCLA.

"Our goals for the season are high, as always," Lambert assures. "But they are tempered with realism. We're talking about a very young team here. We'll be starting one senior, three sophomores, and two freshmen."

Two members of last year's team are gone. Lost to graduation are last season's captains, the inspirational Josie Maternowski and Mary Jo Hensler. But Lambert had plenty of talent left.

Heading the list of returnees is senior Mary McLaughlin, the spiritual backbone of the team. And success will revolve around her play.

"Without a doubt, she's our leader," says Lambert. "She's the most versatile person on the team and defense and passing are her strongest suits."

This year she will move from the setter position to outside hitter, where it is hoped that she'll have another banner season, a season like the one that garnered her all-NSC honors last fall. But McLaughlin isn't the whole show. There are a fine bunch of performers in the supporting cast.

Filling the hole at the setter spot is Jill Suglich, a sophomore who just might develop into a gem of a player at that position. Two other sophomores are slated to start, both as outside hitters. They are Kathleen Morin and Gretchen Kraus.

A fresh batch of recruits has brought to the Irish some new talent. Height was on the shopping list and the order has been filled. There's height courtesy of six-foot freshmen Maureen Shea and Mary Kay Waller, both of whom are expected to start at the middle blocker positions.

The Irish roster boasts good depth, too. There is senior Tracy Bennington, an excellent middle

Celebrities invade town for golf tournament

By ED JORDANICH
Sports Writer

Paul Hornung, Hank Stram, Rolie Massimino and Joe Garagiola will be in South Bend this weekend without their microphones, basketballs and stat sheets.

Monday, at the South Bend Country Club, golf clubs will replace regular tools of the trade when these stars and other sports celebrities play in the first annual St. Joseph Bank Celebrity Invitational Golf Tournament.

The charity event will benefit the 1987 Special Olympic International Games. The Games will be held at Notre Dame, and special Olympians from over 60 countries will participate in them.

The tournament is the brainchild of Richard Rosenthal, chairman of the board at the St. Joseph Bank and Trust Company and chairman of the tournament as well.

"We thought this might be a way to assist a good cause financially and have some fun at the same time," says Rosenthal. "We want it to be an annual affair with the proceeds going towards the Games through 1987 and then benefitting other charities in the following years."

After deciding on a charity golf tournament, Rosenthal approached

Notre Dame, specifically Athletic Director Gene Corrigan, about getting some of the big names in sports to come to South Bend. Corrigan, through contacts with the three major networks, was able to get some of today's premier broadcasters. In addition to Garagiola, Keith Jackson and Pat Haden will play in the tournament.

NBC has also promised a mystery guest, and speculation is that Jane Pauley, Bryant Gumbel or perhaps David Letterman may be in South Bend on Monday.

The combined efforts of Rosenthal and Corrigan are also bringing baseball greats Dick Groat and Carl Erskine, former NBA stars Bob Pettit and Gail Goodrich, and Olympic hockey gold medal winner Mike Eruzione to the tournament.

"We've put together a pretty good field from a variety of sports," says Corrigan. "And the fact that these people are coming at their own expense for a worthy cause is just wonderful. Many volunteers have also contributed to what will be a great, and hopefully annual, event."

Notre Dame is also part of the Golf Invitational in several other ways. Irish football legends Angelo Bertelli and Creighton Miller, former basketball stars Austin Carr and Bill Laim-

Irish fans owe Faust a fair shot this season

In a week, Gerry Faust officially will embark on his fifth season as Notre Dame football coach. His past four seasons have been filled with highs and lows, joys and sorrows, and, most of all, growing pains.

No one ever said the transition from high school coach to college coach would be an easy one. But Faust swears this is the year everything will come together for both him and the Irish. We will find out whether or not he is right all too soon, as Notre Dame faces a schedule that College and Pro Football Newsweekly has rated the toughest in the nation this year.

Probably every Irish fan is aware of the fact that this is the final year of Faust's original contract and that the determination of whether or not his contract is renewed will be made at the conclusion of the season. Not surprisingly, Faust refuses to discuss anything having to do with his contract, instead bubbling with the optimism for which he has come to be known.

It would be unfair to both him and the team to enter this season with anything but the same optimism. Notre Dame fans owe Faust a fair shot this year, not one filled with defeatism. If the Irish win enough, Faust will be back next year as coach. If they don't, things will take care of themselves.

Why worry about what might happen next year when this season is right upon us?

The pressure to produce has always gone hand-in-hand with the job of football coach at Notre Dame, and Faust knew this when he first took the job. He also knows that it is there even more so this season.

Don't count on the man not being able to withstand that pressure, though. Over the last four seasons, he has endured some of the most trying times known to a football coach. He has remained up when almost everyone else was down on him and the team.

Losing was something he had not known all too often at Cincinnati's Moeller High School, and Faust has come to accept the fact that it is very difficult to go undefeated at the college level (unless you play in the WAC like BYU).

Some rabid Notre Dame fans have trouble accepting this fact. Yet, most Irish fans would not ask for an undefeated season. Instead, what they want is a good season, one where the Irish always put forth their best effort on the playing field. If that happens, fans feel that a major bowl bid will be possible, given the level of talent Notre Dame has been known to recruit.

Jeff Blumb

As the Irish prepare to open the season with Michigan, there is a certain amount of speculation as to what kind of season Notre Dame must have in order for Faust to get his contract renewed. Should the Irish begin the year poorly, the rumor mill will start to roll, but should they open with a couple big wins, expect such talk to be lost in the shuffle as just about everyone rushes to jump on the bandwagon.

Speaking of bandwagons, where are all the Cub fans these days? There were so many of them last season at this time when the Cubs were on their way to winning the NL East. This season, with the Cubs playing sub-.500 baseball and toiling in fifth place, you just don't see too many so-called fans of the North Siders.

Wrigley Field isn't quite packing them in the way it used to, either. Fans who expected to see the Cubs in a stretch run to the pennant are bewildered by the fact that their favorites are some 18 games out of first. Gone with the Cubs' pennant hopes are all those obnoxious people who tooted the horn of Chicago baseball only 12 months ago.

Many of the people who suddenly became "fans" last season now have nothing to boast about. The true Cub fans, though, are those who are still going to the games today, despite the fact that Chicago doesn't have a prayer in the 1985 season as far as winning the NL East goes. In all likelihood, those fans are the same ones who were Cub fans even before last season.

Expect to see a good-sized crowd tonight at 7:30 in the ACC when the Notre Dame volleyball team opens its season against Kentucky. Although the match is certain to be a good one, the uncertainty lies in where it will be played.

Because an area near center court of the ACC's main arena has been found to be warped, the Irish may be forced to play in the ACC Pit. The volleyball team played there for most of its first four years at the varsity level, then moved to the main arena full-time last season. The Pit is not nearly as well suited to volleyball as the main arena is, nor does it hold anywhere near the same number of people.

Because it is the opener and Kentucky is a national volleyball power, tonight's match is likely to draw a big crowd, which could wreak havoc should it be played in the Pit. There is not all that much room for spectator seating in the Pit.

Determination as to whether or not the volleyball team will be able to play in the main arena was not going to be made until sometime late last night. Since it was discovered last week that the floor was warped, four large fans have been blowing on the affected area in an effort to dry it out.

If the boards had dried out and gone down enough by last night, the plan was to sand them down flat and play tonight's match there. If not, it's back to the pit for the volleyball team.

The warping is thought to have been caused by either a leaking sauna display at the mobile home show held in the ACC this summer or by water simply dripping in recently while repairs to the roof were taking place. No matter, experts have looked at the area, but it hasn't been determined yet as to whether or not some boards may have to be replaced.
