Worst earthquake since 1971 strikes California

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - A severe earthquake and 16 major aftershocks rumbled across the area Thursday, destroying buildings, damaging hundreds of houses, closing freeways and setting off dozens of fires. At least five people were killed and more than 100 injured.

The U.S. geological Survey said the quake registered 6.1 on the Richter scale, making it the strongest to hit the Los Angeles area since the 6.4 Sylmar quake of 1971 that killed 64 people.

The tremor sent thousands into the streets as buildings were temporarily evacuated. Landmark buildings dating to Spanish colonial times were damaged, shattered glass and other debris rained into the street and a tall plume of smoke from a shopping center fire rose south of downtown.

Damage appeared to be worst in Whittier, the closest suburban area to the epicenter. City officials said eight to ten buildings collapsed, none of them homes. Marsha Andersen, a spokeswoman for Presbyterian Intercommunity Hospital, said 60 people were treated for injuries.

The quake hit at 7:42 a.m. local time, lasted 15 to 30 seconds and was centered about seven miles south-southeast of Pasadena at the north end of the Whittier-Elsinore Fault. At least 16 aftershocks measuring 3 or more on the Richter scale followed by late afternoon, and more were expected.

Fire Chief Don Manning said the department had responded to 67 fires caused by natural gas leaks, 36 structural fires, 41 heart attacks and 21 elevators with people stuck in them, and 35 traffic accidents.

New officers elected in SMC run-off

By LINDA BAILY
News Staff

Amy Panish and Molly Bringardner came from behind to win the Saint Mary's Freshmen election with a 53 percent majority in a run-off election yesterday, according to elections commissioner Frannie Thompson.

They defeated the ticket of Natacha Doyle and Jackie Brody by 6 percent in the run-off election.

Slightly more than 50 percent of the freshmen voted in the election Tuesday. The top two tickets were forced into a run-off when neither got a majority.

Before the election, Frannie Thompson and freshmen advisors, Julie Wagner and Kelly Glavin decided the council would consist of fourteen members including the president and vice president.

Of the 14 possible spots in the board, eight were filled by students who were not on the winning presidential ticket.

The 1987 Freshmen council members are Jackie Brody, Christine Demerino, Natacha Doyle, Patty Heeney, Kristen Izydor, Lisa Jilk, Tara Kearney, Courtney Kirk, Maria Marczak, Maureen Novak, Jeni Racine, Kathy Schmidt, and Kelly Townsend.

Meyo Field, in the Loftus All-Sports Center, was the home of Notre Dame's first indoor football practice of the season Wednesday afternoon. The facility still needs some finishing touches, but is ready for the Irish when the weather won't cooperate with Lou Holtz' outdoor practice plans.

Father-Daughter Weekend preparations underway

By KATIE MCSHANE
News Staff

The fifth annual Senior Father-Daughter Weekend will kick off today with more than 500 expected to attend.

"We're pretty excited about the weekend," said Father-

Daughter Chairperson, Anne Farrel.

Activities will include a "cocktail hour," various sports events, a barbeque, "Casino Night" and a Mass.

Of these, Casino Night is particularly popular, scheduled for Saturday. For this event Angela Athletic Facility will be furnished with card tables, roulette wheels and play money. Participants will be able to exchange raffle tickets for play money at the end of the evening.

In addition, Jeff Roberts, assistant director of career and counseling at Saint Mary's will speak on, "Hiring Patterns of Liberal Arts Graduates." Also Dr. Rebecca Stoddart, a psychology professor at Saint Mary's will discuss "Father-Daughter Relationships:

Prospects for The Future." Both are scheduled for Saturday morning.

"This will be a really special weekend for both fathers and daughters since many will be going out on their own next year," chairperson Anne Farrel said.

Government dept. announces new plagiarism policy

By GREG LUCAS
Senior Staff Reporter

All government majors recently received a letter from Sharon O'Brien, undergraduate advisor, informing them of a new departmental policy regarding plagiarism.

The letter stated, "... the department has established a departmental policy for plagiarism-failure of the course."

The new policy came into being at the end of last year in response to an incident involving three students, according to O'Brien. In this case, the students were required to rewrite their papers and were given failing grades for the assignment, but not for the course, said O'Brien.

One additional case was determined to be plagiarism last year, after the policy had been formed, and the student was given a failing grade in the course, said O'Brien.

According to O'Brien, there had been no set policy in the Government Department before last year regarding the penalty for plagiarism. "There is somewhat of an unwritten rule in the University that you fail the course" when found to have committed plagiarism, said O'Brien.

O'Brien added that before the policy, each case had been handled individually and there was some discrepancy in the punishments.

"We felt that out of fairness to everyone, we should have a clear policy that is stated" said

O'Brien, who said she originally proposed that the department adopt a policy.

"There was an increasing feeling (among the professors) that we should have a policy to deal with plagiarism as a department" said O'Brien. The policy was formerly initiated by a vote by all members of the department, O'Brien said.

"Much plagiarism is done from ignorance and not from malicious intent, but ignorance is not a defense" said O'Brien.

The letter also contained a list of guidelines to help students determine what is and is not plagiarism. "Hopefully the letter will eliminate any new cases" said O'Brien.

The penalty will only be implemented if an investigation by the Department's Honesty Committee finds that plagiarism has occurred, the letter said. The committee will be chaired by the undergraduate advisor, two appointed faculty members and a student representative.

Some seniors still have another year to go

Earlier this week I had a long conversation with one of my roommates from last year. Since he moved off-campus I don't see him too much. Anyway, after we caught up on past and future girlfriends, how bad all our classes were, and whether we'd be seeing an undefeated football squad in Miami, the conversation rolled around to next year.

"Headed to law school?" I asked.

"Yeah, it looks that way. I'll still be back for football, though."

"Well, you can crash on my couch next year."

It seems funny saying that, considering we're both seniors.

While he and most of my classmates (95 percent, I think) are getting diplomas next May, I will be in the audience watching, no doubt a little teary-eyed. As a five-year Aerospace/psychology major, I will be back for a second senior year.

There are 30 or so of us, I am told, plus the architecture majors who spent a year in Rome. The archies all know each other, though. There's a group of people to hang out with that they know fairly well and can reminisce about freshman year with. Not so with us five-year majors, though. Five-year students outside of architecture rarely are in the same classes and do not have many opportunities to meet one another.

I don't mean to imply that we are social recluses. Far from it, as we get to meet twice as many people because we take classes in two colleges. But most students know the people in their own class best. After next May, our class is 30 people.

The five-year student leads a difficult life at times. Credit loads are high, with 18 being common and 21 not unlikely. Courses tend to be scheduled on top of each other since Arts and Letters doesn't try to schedule its courses around Engineering, or vice versa. Advisors for us don't seem to exist, since Engineering has us on file as Arts and Letters majors and Arts and Letters can't tell us much about ME328 - Differential Equations. We have fallen through the cracks in the Notre Dame system.

People always seem to think double majors are weird, too. If I hear one more joke about psychoanalyzing astronauts I will probably hit somebody.

Five-year students are thrown off campus by University Housing. Of course a fifth year of dorm life would probably sicken even the most chaste college student, but it is rather disconcerting to be thrown out of the dorm after all the people you'd room off-campus with have all graduated.

Mark McLaughlin

Projects Manager

The worst part, though, is the knowledge that, while my colleagues all take off for law school or med school or jobs in "the real world," I will be coming back for another year of dining halls and snow. It is strange to see my friends walking to job interviews in three-piece suits and hear them talking about LSAT's and the CPA exam and med school applications.

Sure, I sit and laugh and say "I'm glad I can skip all these interviews and hang around for a national championship next fall." But I imagine that sounds a little hollow.

I can't honestly say I regret choosing the five-year option. I could never handle four years of solid engineering, and I don't love psychology enough to do that for the rest of my life. The double major has given me a breadth of courses and a wealth of options once I finally do leave. Five years of school meant I could go to London for foreign study, and I wouldn't have missed that for the world.

It's tough to stay behind, though. I'm sure that next year it won't seem like such a big deal, and I don't lose sleep over it now. But it's already starting to occur to me that I've got a long year to go after this one.

Main quad being excavated

By ROBYN SIMMONS
News Staff

Since Monday workers have been digging on the Main Quad in order to install a new air conditioning system in Sacred Heart Church, as part of the current renovation of the building.

"They're installing a chilled water line to Sacred Heart Church for the air conditioning system," said Gary Shumaker, assistant director of the physical plant.

"(The digging) is supposed to be completed before the Southern Cal game," said Shumaker, "It's supposed to be completed no later than the week of fall break."

The excavation of the ground is several feet deep and extends for several yards between LaFortune Student Center and Sacred Heart Church.

Shumaker said that the excavation was started Monday so that the digging would take place between the inauguration of Father Edward Malloy and the four week string of home football games, starting with the USC game on Oct. 24, when the University has a large amount of visitors.

Reagan urges vigilance

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The White House denied Thursday that President Reagan advocates reconstituting the congressional subversives committees of the McCarthy era, even though Reagan suggested there is growing Communist influence in Congress and in the media.

In an interview with the Washington Times, Reagan said he fears people in this country have dropped their guard against Communist subversion and said this sort of vigilance has become "unfashionable."

"There is a disinformation campaign, we know, worldwide," the president said, "and that disinformation is very sophisticated and is very successful, including with a great many in the media and the press in America."

Chief spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Reagan, a onetime witness before the now-defunct House Committee on Un-American Activities, was "not calling for any new (Communist-hunting) organizations. He's just pointing out the historic development of Communist influence in America and some of the manifestations of it."

"I don't think the press corps need feel like their reputation is blackened by this," Fitzwater added.

But he also said Reagan "believes that the Communists have influence through various disinformation techniques and plans and programs ... and that has influence on the Congress, on the public, on the press, and on everybody."

Questions about Reagan's beliefs were raised at the daily news briefing after the Times on Wednesday published Reagan's interview with its Editor-In-Chief, Arnaud de Borchgrave.

In that interview, Reagan was asked to comment on an article, published earlier, in which some conservatives in Congress voiced concern about they saw as a growing leftist influence on Capitol Hill.

Reagan was asked to comment on statements made by Reps. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, Bob Dornan of California and Bill McCollom of Florida, all Republicans, complaining of "hard-left members of the House who are now acting as pro-Soviet agents of influence."

Reagan replied, "Well, ... that is a problem that we have to face."

"Remember, there was once a Congress in which they had a committee that would investigate even one of their own members if it was believed that that person had Communist involvement or Communist leanings. Well, they've done away with those committees," he said. "That shows the success of what the Soviets were able to do in this country with making it unfashionable to be anti-Communist."

"So you have to be careful in opposing them, to not trigger that reaction on the part of your own people, that you're depending on to support you," the president said. "And it's no fun, but it's true."

Students lacking in responsibility

The other day, I was chatting with Jennifer, my sister, and Joe, both students here at Notre Dame. Somehow, we got on the subject of the Catholic Church's stand on artificial means of birth control, and I was asked for my opinion. I said that I was in favor of the Church's stand. At the time, though, my thoughts were muddled and I seemed to sound like a narrow-minded reactionary. But I realized that it all has to do with taking responsibility for one's actions. Naturally, people have sex for pleasure, but one cannot forget the possible consequence of pregnancy. Birth control seems to me to be somewhat like putting a silencing device on a shotgun; it allows one to act irresponsibly without taking the consequences.

Andrea Burman

guest column

Responsibility is something good which is rapidly becoming extinct. This is a "me" generation, and we want it all - without paying the price. The student body of Notre Dame (in general) is a perfect example of this, especially regarding the alcohol policy. I read the policy word for word and did not understand why I didn't see the ugly face of oppression glaring back at me. I even felt a little guilt (God forbid) for being among the lone supporters of the Alcohol Policy. It has, would you believe, the audacity to tell the students to take responsibility! How dare the blood-thirsty administration impose such tyranny on us poor, weakling students who are here only for the simple pleasures of the joys of learning! And yet, I actually agree with it.

If the University wanted a dry campus, alcohol would be banned. It is not; alcohol is very present on this campus, at times like a festering boil. As it is, in fact, we seem to be exceptions to Indiana State Law. The policy says that irresponsible drinking will be punished, just like any other irresponsible behavior. No one is saying not to drink. If the alcohol policy is hindering your fun on campus, then you have big problems (anti-social behavior and alcoholism instantly come to mind - a policy does not cause behavior like this. The individual does.) If you can't be happy and carefree without alcohol, then I suggest you leave this institution and head straight for Alcoholics Anonymous. I don't shun those who oppose the alcohol policy, yet if you do oppose it, I ask you to look at yourself to see if your opposition stems from a refusal to drink responsibly. I would safely say that one-third of this campus is either alcoholic or heading in that direction.

I had a bad experience with alcohol here at Notre Dame but I learned just how easy it is to lose control and therefore how challenging it is to be responsible for my action. I agree with Jean Paul Sartre, who said that there are no excuses; we consciously choose all our actions, good and bad. It is time that the students here take responsibility and stop blaming the University for all their woes.

Alcohol policy in need of review

A few years ago, the administration implemented an alcohol policy. Although I did not have the privilege to attend the University before the policy was put into effect, I heard all the stories from the seniors I lived with my freshman year. During those years before the policy there must have been a problem with alcohol abuse for some of the students or the University would not have come up with such a policy. But after a few years of the policy being put into effect, it is obvious to me that it has not worked. It has created more problems than it had attempted to solve.

houses and neighboring houses because of loud music and parties. Then the police get into the act by raiding student houses and arresting students who are minors. Now the cited students have to pay the price for looking for social alternatives away from the campus. I don't know about other states, but in California when student parties get out of hand, the police break up the parties, but no one is arrested or cited; everyone is told to leave and that is it.

Next, because the students go off-campus, they have to drive which presents the problem of drinking and driving. Because more students go off-campus to drink, the chances of people drinking and driving is greater. Don't get me wrong, the alcohol policy should not be to blame for people drinking and driving, but I think it increases the chances of it happening.

It also appears to me that the administration is quite hypocritical in its policy. If it is a Saturday afternoon on the day of a home football game, students drink freely among many of the alumni all around the campus and stadium. But next Saturday when the football team is playing away, if students are drinking on Green Field, then they are almost assured a visit to the Office of Student Affairs for violating the alcohol policy. Is there something wrong here?

I don't know all the answers, but I think the University should try to treat the students like young adults and realize that in our society today, students are going to drink. I also feel that a serious review of the alcohol policy is needed because it did not solve the problems it was designed for, and it created some serious new ones.

First of all, the problem of students abusing alcohol has not been solved by the policy. The administration has to realize that students will find a way to drink. Rules, such as no open containers in the hallways or section parties, will not prevent alcohol abuse among the students. The University should try to promote a program which stresses responsible social drinking, rather than banning it.

It is obvious to me that the policy has almost banned social drinking on campus and forced the students to go off-campus for social activities. This is an obvious fact which can be seen every weekend by the number of students at Campus View, Turtle Creek, and many student houses. This off-campus drinking has created many problems which might not have arisen if the alcohol policy had not directed social life off-campus. Some of the problems include strained relations between student

P.O. Box Q

No need to print sexist classifieds

Dear Editor:

I have long since accepted the proposition that Notre Dame has a sexist environment. Female friends voice this complaint to me constantly. Many seem to be wearied and demoralized by the problem. Lately, I, too, have realized that I have become a bit jaded. So why am I writing?

The Classifieds section in the September 29 Observer contained the following exhortation: "Join the real men on campus, the ones who hate women." A person calling himself Bill revealed to us that he is "looking for a love toy to spend his money." Other Neanderthals advised us why "beer is better than women": because "you never have to wine and dine a beer," and because "a beer will sit patiently in the car while you play softball or while you go out with the boys."

Looks painful in larger print now, doesn't it? So why did I find this in the Observer at all? Surely there must be some standards for the advertisements which you will accept. And don't raise the "free speech" argument when you are obviously offending an entire class of people. If you received an ad which compared black people to white people in a similar way, would you print it? I hope not. But you will print an ad which compares women to an alcoholic beverage. (I suspect its author has abused both for so long that he no longer distinguishes between them.)

If I concluded that the struggle against sexism at Notre Dame is a lost cause, would I be wrong? Probably not. But if there are some people out there, especially men, who would like to convince me otherwise, I would like to see your ideas sent to this space.

Gulf incident supports stated policy

I'll admit it. I was one of those hypercritical anti-Reaganists who appeared late this summer when the Administration announced the reflagging of 11 Kuwaiti oil tankers. Caught up in the mob mentality of further bashing an already battered president, I considered the move folly.

Matthew Slaughter

and another thing

In many respects it was. Not by choice did the administration decide to reflag the tankers, but rather by blackmail. If we had refused, Kuwait would have turned north and gotten the more than eager USSR to do the job. Increased Soviet presence in the Persian Gulf is totally unacceptable, ergo... Another textbook example of United States foreign policy reacting, not initiating. Then the supertanker Bridgeton struck a mine, and we sages eagerly chorused to the world a condescending "I told you so." But Reagan persisted -- and the events of the past few days have borne fruit for both the policy and other international issues.

Night had fallen on the Persian Gulf a few days ago when the Iranian vessel Iran Ajr slipped out of port at Bandar Abbas. It sailed not alone -- some 30 miles away three U.S. warships secretly watched its every move on radar. The vessel proceeded directly toward the north-east, directly toward major international shipping lanes. Two OH-6A helicopters lifted off the USS Jarrett to investigate... and oh my.

At midnight local time the pilot spotted the vessel's crew "dropping objects overboard which appeared to be mines." Without warning the helicopters opened up with a hail of rocket and machine gun fire. Hours later, as the ship listed dead in the water, US Navy SEAL commandos scrambled aboard and hit jackpot: nine primitive mines remained aboard, undropped.

The Iranian crew was detained and later turned over to the Red Crescent, the crippled ship was blown out of the water by US ships, never to plant mines in international waters again.

Finally, the United States' goal in sending some 40 ships to the gulf had produced tangible results to silence critics like me. Our stated policy goal has always been to aid in maintaining the free passage of merchant vessels through the gulf. How quickly we forget that as leader of the free world, the U.S. often must assume such roles. Tasks such as this may appear pointless to many -- we aren't really doing anything, they will say, except inviting attack. Such errant opinions overlook a crucial reality of international relations today: with the growing worldwide repulsion to war, the projection, not utilization, of power takes precedence.

The United States cannot cower from such obligations. Isolationist tendencies pull hard, but cannot restrain us. By sending our ships to the gulf, we send a clear message to the world community; namely, that the seven-year bloodbath between Iran and Iraq cannot spill into the gulf and affect international free trade. It's always lonely at the top, and this situation proved no different. Initially, the gulf states refused assistance from our forces, and our European allies, who have such a penchant for castrating the U.S. in public while crawling to it in private, refused military support. Now the gulf states warmly offer help, and no less than five European countries have quietly (surprise) sent contingencies. The Iran Ajr incident has provided concrete evidence for those shortsighted of us that our presence in the gulf is both necessary and valuable.

The incident has yielded good in another way. Consider Iran for a moment. I care not what nationality, creed, sex, or sign you are; if you hold any empathy for the government of the Ayatollah Khomeini, I hold nothing but contempt for you. Since seizing power in 1979, the regime has contributed not thing one to the betterment of the world. Consider some of the shennanigans Iran has recently dabbled in: inciting riots in Mecca which killed some 400 pilgrims, kidnapping Americans and others in Lebanon, bombing the Marine compound and leaving 243 dead... the list seems endless. Time and time again, evidence in the wake of terrorist strikes has pointed in the direction of, but never directly at, Iran.

My, how things have changed with the Iran Ajr's "smoking gun." How did the Iranians respond to being caught in the act? Like any other defense of the weak, their response abounded with lies and rhetoric. They labeled the Iran Ajr a merchant ship and denounced the charges of laying mines as "a pack of lies." And the Iranian President Ali Khameni took the opportunity of speaking to the UN General Assembly to denounce the organization as "a paper factory for issuing worthless and ineffective orders." The U.S. delegation rightly stormed out of the assembly as Khameni's drivel droned on without end.

Governments which exhibit such a flagrant and repeated indifference to the established international order and organizations have no right to exist. The Khomeini government does nothing but pose a continuous threat to peace and stability in the Middle East and beyond. As of late, perhaps the world governments are finally abandoning their ridiculous attempts to establish ties with Iranian moderates (the definitive oxymoron) in the name of national interests, and are realizing cessation of Iran's antics is in the interest of all. Witness the mounting drive in the UN for an arms embargo against Iran. Here a true opportunity exists to isolate Iran, one which should not fritter away.

And the Iran Ajr incident has proven beneficial in yet another way. Stop for a moment and consider the general condition of America as of late. We have definitely seen better days; our position as a world leader has slipped. Every time we ask the West Germans and Japanese to expand their economies and thereby reduce our trade deficit, they scoff at us with indignation. The glory days of our space program have vaporized along with the Challenger, leaving the less spectacular but more reliable Soviet program far ahead in methodically pioneering space. In the Ryder Cup matches last week the Europeans snatched from us the title -- not even the Golden Bear could rally our linksmen. And we have by no means helped ourselves. Ollie North and his boys' cake and Bible bearing escapades made our government the headline act for the world audience.

The Iran Ajr incident provided our government -- and Americans on the whole -- with a much needed lift. Amidst all the innuendos, uncertainties, and frustrations of daily foreign affairs, here appeared an incident which clearly provided a hero and a villain -- and America got to play the hero. As long as we do not digress to xenophobic extremes, feeling proud about America can go a long way.

Thus American foreign policy benefited greatly from the Iran Ajr incident. But before we slap our backs too often, take a quick glance at Tuesday's Business section of the Chicago Tribune. "The United States imported more oil from Iran in July than any other country except Nigeria, according to the Commerce Department... (some) 637,000 barrels of oil a day." We condemn their war effort, then provide the badly needed currency to finance it. Will the United States ever develop a coherent, consistent policy toward anything? Someday. Just remember the words of those lovable lads from Liverpool: "I have to admit it's getting better, a little better all the time."

Community thanked for loving support

To the Notre Dame Community:

On behalf of my sister and all members of my family I express my deep gratitude to all of you for your prayers and support since the death of my parents. I regret that it is not possible to thank each one of you individually, but I hope this letter will convey to you how much all that you have done has meant to us these past three weeks.

When word of the all-night vigils, the prayers, and Masses on the campus reached us, we were deeply moved. The power of prayer was very evident to me personally as I was able to get through some very difficult times because of all of the prayers coming from this campus.

All of the Masses, flowers, cards, notes, and words of sympathy and support have been truly overwhelming. Even when words would not come, it was sufficient just to know that all of you cared, and that you were there with your prayers and concern. Mom and Dad truly loved this place, and their belief in Notre Dame would have been reaffirmed by the way the Notre Dame family came together in a time of personal tragedy.

It is good to be back home with you, and to share with you the many challenges and excitement that await us in the months ahead. As these months pass, know how much your prayers will help, and how much it means to me to be a part of this Notre Dame family. Be assured of my prayers for all of you.

Criticism crucial to genuine growth

Dear Editor:

Last Monday's letters to the editor suggest a need for greater sensitivity toward fellow students. Eileen Doherty raised this point quite eloquently in her protest against the sexist comments which appeared in a Kavanaugh Hall window. Unfortunately, examples of sexism are abundant on this campus:

in attitudes, language, graffiti in the library, and sometimes in Observer columns and cartoons.

Speaking of insensitivity, since when is William Joseph Sammon the arbiter of valid sentiments? He may be right that the "Life in Hell" cartoon was intended to satirize rather than condone prejudice and stereotypes, but he does not help to improve the environment which minority students have encountered here by claiming that people who found the cartoon offensive are "vociferous prigs" for expressing their opinions.

Also troubling was David Spach's response to a letter from a freshman who was disillusioned by his first few weeks at college. I thought the earlier letter was poignant, and accurate in some of its observations. Granted, it was a bit melodramatic to use the dome as a personal symbol that things would improve. Such sentimentality pervades this campus, so perhaps it was helpful for Mr. Spach to warn a new student to keep it in perspective.

Indeed, Mr. Spach began compassionately: "we can all appreciate the mixed feelings of a freshman." Yet switching to condescension, he declared that the complaints of the "petulant 18-year old" were not "of serious concern."

Next Mr. Spach made the unjustifiable claim that The Observer should not be "the forum for his (the freshman's) emotionally charged questioning of what the university has to offer." How kind! A guy feels lonely, indecisive, and not quite part of this "Notre Dame family," and his peer belittles him for being "emotional" and suggests that his opinions are not worth printing.

Campus newspapers are not intended to be extensions of college booster clubs. Moreover, a university is not great merely because its students constantly tell each other that it is. Notre Dame is a great university in many ways, but let's not forget that criticism--especially by newcomers who still have some objectivity--is crucial if a university is to grow and adapt.

What did you think when you read the funnies?

Jesse Jackson at a youth conference must be the most charismatic preacher in the world today. He makes a liturgy out of telling it as it is, involving his listeners in a litany which they recite after him: "I am. Somebody. I am Somebody. Down with dope. Up with hope. My mind. Is a pearl. Is a pearl. I can learn cratty Bre'er Fox. The anger of Blacks in America -- so plain to see in protest writers like James Baldwin and LeRoi Jones -- has always been outweighed by the love and forgiveness in them. Otherwise, they would have burned down our cities generations ago.

Recently, the strip in the Scholastic, putting Negroes in a Holden feels overpowered by the evil in the world. He's so tired of obscenities at this point, it would madden him to read "F--k you" in a rhyming dictionary.

I don't want to poor-mouth the Black students I am anxious to defend. They don't come here from the backwoods of Tennessee; they're a number of generations away from living in Uncle Tom's cabin. Every student here has a separate history. Nobody can be a catcher in the rye, saving the children from a fall into the awareness of good and evil. Young eyes will always find the graffiti that the perverts have left for them. I can imagine a black freshman, street-wise and sensitive, hoping that he or she has come to the greener pasture on the other side of the fence.

Notre Dame, the freshman is told, is a special place, free of the ordinary tensions common to the jungle. Then he or she reads a possible putdown in the college magazine, and feels that the insults are everywhere. Like "F--k you" in the rhyming dictionary, the context doesn't matter. The white brother can tell him that the slur is no putdown and shouldn't be regarded as a personal insult. The white brother shouldn't be so quick to deny the Black his right to feel pain; this is sensitivity; this may even be justice: to try to walk a mile in your brother's moccasins, before telling him his pain is silly.

The Notre Dame blacks will not be spared the pain of the real world. They didn't come here to be fitted with blinders, or a cocoon to hide in that will save them from jolts. Some Notre Dame Blacks are trying to interiorize what their leaders are telling them: "Nobody will save us for us but us. I am Somebody. My mind is a pearl." White students need to learn the lesson too: Black and yellow, red and white/All are precious in God's sight/His eye is on the children of the world.

What do Black students know of the Black experience in America? Jews keep the memory of the Holocaust alive: if the horror of the death camps is forgotten, the Jews say, the death camps could be repeated, and another Hitler is possible. That is why the Jews want to keep the conscience of mankind sensitive to the memory of the 6 million victims.

The tragedy of Blacks in America is not over. Everything ugly happening in the country hits the Black youth hardest: unemployment, drugs, teen-age pregnancy, disease, crime, the squalor of slum life. Black youth are the first to become school dropouts, the first to be drafted in time of war. They don't have to be reminded or horror by holocaust committees. The bad things that hurt them aren't happening in another country a half a century ago. Blacks are hurt by the everyday inequities in America the beautiful.

Recently, a student showed me a lapel button he borrowed from his father. The button identified the wearer as a member of SPONGE, an acronym for the "Society For The Prevention Of Negroes Getting Everything." My mention of SPONGE may be more unsettling than any racial allusion the Scholastic has ever printed. The SPONGE button was considered funny jback in the Civil Rights Days of the Sixties. It's re-appearance now is a sign of how prejudice carries over from one generation to another.

Will the Black children attending schools in the inner-city grow up in a happier lifestyle than their grandparents knew? Will the smell of poverty, the homes without enough love in them because one parent is missing, the dwellers, to survive, have to become welfare cheats. Who dreams dreams the size of Martin Luther King's dream? Who, hearing King's dream, doesn't shrug it off as an impossible dream?

A moral miracle could begin humbly. Hearts that beat with excitement to the ordinary prejudices aren't going to change overnight. Are you aware of your prejudices, as obvious as the effects of original sin? Could you pray to be exorcised of the racism which, whether you are conscious of it or not, darkens your heart and weakens your will, or could you pray at least to be aware if you are a closet racist?

Pray, not to be fair, but to be more than fair, toward peers who have not had your advantages. Even when a classmate complains of bleeding from wounds you don't think he is supposed to have, make an effort to be preternaturally polite; such politeness in itself could be a moral miracle.

In the old love story, a suitor wears a mask not his own, to hide his plainness from his true love's eyes. When he finally takes off the mask, his face is shining with borrowed beauty. Courtesy is the mask that can transform the wearer into the Christian he would like to be. Courtesy may have to be preternatural, if it is going to survive in the rough and tumble of healthy dorm life, but it goes a long way in taming the savage beast.

Will today's five-year olds grow up in a country where they are pre-judged by the color of their skin? Undoubtedly. You will never know, will you, if you could make things better for them, unless you try to help? Notre Dame is not the New Jerusalem, and you are not saints getting measured for your golden harps. But you are Christians who hope for a peaceful world. As Christian Americans, you have to pay more than ordinary lip service to the ideals which are supposed to be corner stones for life in a democracy.

Black students have their work cut out for them, as Jesse Jackson makes plain. Why should I lecture them, in a campaign for brotherhood, as though I were carrying the cross of racism, and they were not? I agree with everything Jesse Jackson tells them, but they need to hear it from him before they hear it from me, not as a prophet, but as the echo of the prophet, teaching. Regardless of your politics, you shouldn't listen to the bigots who would cut Jesse Jackson down. In 1987, bigots are still trying to stone the prophets. How many prophets have we buried since Martin Luther King? Those who aren't buried may be publicly defrocked of their reputation and good name. Why should you let them discredit Jesse Jackson when he tells Blacks and white together: "You are Somebody"? He isn't around to preach mainly to the Blacks; he's your preacher too, and the salvation at stake may be America's anything. In the world. In the world. My mind. Is a pearl. Nobody. Will save us. For us. But us. Nobody. Will save us. For us. But us. I am Somebody. I may be poor. But I am Somebody. I may be poor. But I am Somebody. Respect me. Protect me. Never neglect me. I am Somebody. Down with dope. Up with hope. I can learn anything in the world. Nobody will save us for us but us. Excell! Excell! Excell!"

Reading Jesse Jackson's talks, I picture him as a new Moses, reminding scruffy nomads in the Sinai peninsula that they are the Lord's beloved children, destined to carry His words to the ends of the earth.

We needn't canonize Jackson, to appreciate what he's up to. The Jews, newly freed from slavery in Egypt, had to be assured that they were beautiful in the sight of their Maker. 100 years after their ancestors were freed as slaves, the Blacks in America need to be convinced that they are beautiful as God's children. why? Because being Black in American has been an ugly experience. During World War II, students were writing essays on how Hitler could be punished. A daughter of the ghetto made this suggestion: "They should paint him black, and make him live in America."

My mother, watching the newsreels from Selma in 1965, said something startling: "I would hate God, if He had made me a Negro." As an aging lady in Maine, where the Blacks she might meet on the street were Pullman car porters who would never in a million years show themselves as political, my mother was conscious of the cross under which Black people struggled. She never read the Black writers, or even the white Southern writers, who have documented the suffering. She saw Blacks only at a distance, and never in her life entertained a Black in her home. Still, she knew the prejudice which made growing up Black in America humiliating.

She would have been surprised to learn the number of blacks who love Christ very much. Even when they suffer, they don't hate God, and they don't hate being Black, or feel sorry for themselves at not being white. Perhaps they feel sorry for whites who are twisted inside by fear and bigotry, for whose sake, the Blacks have had to play games, like being invisible in the way Ralph Ellison talks about, or role playing as Br'er Rabbit plays the game, to outfox the class with drug pushers and street gangs, stirred up trouble. Some campus Blacks complained that the comparison demeaned them. White students were quick to explain to the Blacks that they were being over sensitive, since the alleged slur had to be understood in the context of the artist's intention.

I understand the artist's intention. As a former WASP, I can see the artist intended no harm. In a culture entertained by the satire represented by Opus and Uncle Duke, "Life in Hell" doesn't have to be censored as hate literature, nor do the editors of "Scholastic" have to be pilloried for printing it. Someone should explain to the Blacks what they are reading in the funnies, but perhaps white students with a chip on their shoulders are not the best ones to do the explaining.

The harm comes not from the panel to which the Blacks reacted; the harm comes from white students reacting indignantly to the way some of the Blacks reacted. Isn't it arrogant, or at least insensitive, for a member of the white majority to explain to a minority member whether he should feel he's had his nose rubbed in the dirt?

Bigotry is so poisonous that even the suspicion of it is harmful. A rabbi reacted to the accusation against a New York Jew of being a slum landlord. The rabbi said: "Pogroms start with a wild accusation. Everyone tells the Jews: Don't over-react to a cheap shot. Be a good fellow, and turn the other cheek." The Jew, as a good fellow, keeps his peace. The next time he's accused as a slum landlord, a mob throws rocks at his house. Then, the mob is burning the house down. Eventually, the mob is burning the Jews down. That's what Jews have learned from their history. You have to nip matters in the bud at the beginning. A cloud no bigger than a man's hand may be the start of a firestorm."

Holden Caulfield, the catcher in the rye, wants to save kids from falling over a cliff; that is, he wants to save them from losing innocence, so he rubs out dirty graffiti that he sees on a wall. Finally, finding "F--k you" on the walls of a museum where kids will see it, he depairs over his awareness that the "perverts" will always keep ahead of him. "Probably, when you die," he thinks, "some pervert will write F--k you" on your tombstone." A discouraged

Belles win third straight match

By KATHY JENSEN
Sports Writer

The Saint Mary's volleyball team continued its winning streak last Tuesday, defeating Bethel College and improving its record to 8-3.

The Belles won in four games, 15-12, 11-15, 15-10, 15-7, and currently have won their last three contests, two of which were conference games.

The team played well and ran many difficult attacks. They also showed definite team unity, a quality they previously have lacked.

"I am very pleased with their performance," said Head Coach Sue Medley, "Bethel presented a hurdle, but all four games were played with a quick and consistent pace."

Junior Margaret Feldman, the Belles' team captain, led the team with sixteen kills, three attempts, three aces, and served a very strong third game.

"Sophomore Mary McCarthy set a very fine game," commented Medley, "and junior Tammy Suth contributed a big offensive plus."

The fourth game showed strong serving by freshman Melissa Phillips, who recorded eight attempts and two aces.

Despite the win over the Pilots, Medley indicated the Belles might need more work in a couple of areas if they are to continue their winning streak.

"We need consistency in both our intensity and in our communication, though the team did show definite improvement in these areas Tuesday night," said Medley.

Dorsett among picket crossers

Associated Press

NEW YORK-The striking NFL players union called Thursday for a resumption in bargaining as nine more players, including Tony Dorsett, broke ranks and returned to their teams.

Management, however, said it saw no reason for talks at this time.

The defections brought to 48 the number who have crossed picket lines in the 10 days of the strike. Twenty-four have returned since Wednesday. Friday is the deadline for reporting and still getting this week's paycheck.

Talks broke off last Friday with the two sides deadlocked on the union's demand for uncompensated free agency for players with more than four years' experience.

Many of the players returning to work said free agency wasn't worth the walkout, although Dorsett, the biggest name in Thursday's group, was not among them.

The 48 players who have returned are on 14 of the NFL's 28 teams and not all are union members -some are rookies who were on injured reserve rather than the active roster when the regular season started and were never eligible to join the union.

its piority in relationship to the other needs of this University.

Having said all that, it has one unique capacity. That is that it's a facility that is a major revenue generator. To that extent if there is a need, I don't know that there is, it may be self-funding in part or in total. But it is an area I have not looked at at all. Frankly there are just other areas with the season upon us that are claiming priority right now.

Women's cross country team looks to keep momentum

By GREG GUFFEY
Sports Writer

Irish women's cross country coach Dan Ryan says his team is starting to put everything together, and it looks as if his runners could not have picked a better time to do it.

The Irish host the first-ever Notre Dame Invitational for women today at 1 p.m. at Burke Memorial Golf Course, and Ryan is guardedly optimistic about his team's chances in the 10-team event.

"I would say they're right where we want them to be," Ryan said. "We've got four solid runners, and I think they're ready to run well."

The meet will consist of a pot-pourri of teams from all divisions of the NCAA and the NAIA. Saint Mary's will compete on the club level.

"Virginia is the team to beat," Ryan said. "It'll be an interesting race. There are a lot of good individuals, but the race will be determined by the number two through five runners." Ryan says the gap between the first and fifth-place runners will determine the final finish for the Irish. Last week, there was a 1:52 gap between the first Irish finisher, Theresa Rice, and the fifth runner, Wendy Murray. Ryan is looking for an improved performance from Murray.

"She didn't run well last week because of her ankle injury, but she has been running well in practice," Ryan said. "If she does well, we'll be in the top five."

Joining Rice in the top four are Jenny Ledrick, Julia Merkel and Kathleen Lehman, while Teresa Laminski and Renee Kaptur should battle Murray for the fifth spot. Still missing from the lineup is standout Terry Kibelstis, out with a stress fracture.

Cardinals win, 8-2, clinch East

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS- Veterans Danny Cox and Dan Driessen were the unlikely heroes Thursday night, as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Montreal Expos, 8-2, to clinch their second National League East title in the last three years.

The Cards will face the San Francisco Giants next week in the National League championship series.

Cox, 11-9, faced a Montreal lineup that had batted .447 against him before Thursday. After allowing a first-inning run, he retired sixteen batters in a row. He struck out four and walked one. The victory was just St. Louis' seventh in 18 games against the Expos this season.

Jay Tibbs, 4-5, lost in his second start since being recalled from the minors on Sept. 14. Tibbs was a late choice by Montreal Manager Buck Rodgers, who had exhausted his pitching staff while trying to catch the Cardinals.

Tibbs' trouble started when John Morris led off the third with a triple. Tony Pena followed with an RBI groundout on a 3-0 pitch that tied the score 1-1.

Piane

"It is an advantage," noted Piane of running at Burke, "but the disadvantage is that while the other teams will be resting in hotels (on Thursday night), our players will be studying for their classes and exams (today)."

Regardless of how the Irish fare at this meet, the tough competition can only serve to strengthen the team as the season progresses.

"We still haven't run well this season," said Garrett, despite last week's second place finish and a blowout victory over Georgetown. "We are a good team - everyone's just got to put it all together in one race and we can do well."

ND sweeps DePaul

Special to the Observer

One day after having its seven-match winning streak snapped by Northwestern, the Notre Dame volleyball team quickly got back in track with a 15-3, 15-3, 16-14 sweep of DePaul last night.

Juniors Zanette Bennett and Mary Kay Waller led the Irish charge at DePaul. Waller led Notre Dame with 10 kills, while Bennett recorded six kills in seven attempts for an .857 hitting percentage. Bennett did not play the third game, as almost all of the Irish substitutes saw action in the match.

Sporting a 12-3 record, the Irish end their road trip tonight at Butler before returning home to face the University of Iowa Saturday night at 7:30 p.m.

Undefeated Irish face another Great Lakes test

By PETE GEGEN
Assistant Sports Editor

In a season of major exams, the Irish soccer team will be tested once again in Great Lakes Region competition as they host sixth-ranked Wisconsin tonight at 7:30.

Thus far Notre Dame has received only one less-than-perfect mark in the region on its 10-0-1 record, a tie against ninth-ranked Wright State. But the third-ranked Irish have pulled through in the major tests of No. 1 Indiana and No. 4 Bowling Green and have easily handled the minor quizzes against Northwestern and 10th-ranked Detroit. Notre Dame is the only team in the region without a loss.

The Badgers enter the match with an 8-3 record. Wisconsin and Marquette, which the Irish host Nov. 6, represent the two last major exams in the region for Notre Dame.

"The two big games are Marquette and Madison," said Irish wingback Dave Augustyn. "We haven't had a loss. I think we're sitting in the driver's seat even though we're ranked third in the region. The region is just so deep right now - everyone is knocking off everyone else."

The Irish also remember that a four-game skid, which consisted of losses to Bowling Green, Wisconsin, Michigan State and Marquette, was responsible for their poor showing in the region last season. But the team has already paid back Michigan State and Bowling Green for losses last year, and the Badgers could be facing the same type of revenge, especially since the Irish have never beaten Wisconsin in four meetings.

"We're not looking ahead to any game but Wisconsin," said midfielder Kurt Roemer. "When we played Bowling Green we just concentrated on beating them, and now we're just looking at Wisconsin."

Off to its best start ever, Notre Dame is averaging over three goals a game, getting the necessary offensive punch to stay ahead in the regional. While the offense has never been shut out, however, the defense has recorded five shutouts of its own, and keeper Danny Lyons sports a 0.73 goals against average.

"Our defense is playing incredible," says Augustyn.

Part of the experience comes from the team's captains, both of whom play defense. John Guignon fills the stopper role and Steve Lowney directs the defense from the sweeper spot.

Augustyn and Dan Gordon have been staunch defenders from the wingback spots. Of the two, Gordon's performance is less recognizable from the stands.

"He does a lot of the little things," said Augustyn. "He just doesn't get beat, and he's always there."

Three freshmen have helped to solidify the defense. Paul LaVigne and Alex Kratz fill in at wingback, and Mike Drury is the heir-apparent of the senior Lowney's sweeper position.

Tonight the defense will have the task of stopping Andy Rectenwal, the leading scorer for the Badgers. Rectenwal leads the team with 14 points.

Meanwhile the Badger defense will have the task of stopping not one, but three Irish players on offense. Midfielder Joe Sternberg and forward Bruce "Tiger" McCourt are locked in a battle for the team scoring lead, and forward Randy Morris continues to roll up the assists.

Freshmen Mike Drury (22) and Paul LaVigne (23) have helped solidify an Irish defense that has allowed just 0.73 goals per game. Pete Gegen

ND Invite provides toughest challenge

By TIM SULLIVAN
Sports Writer

Each year it gets better and better, bigger and bigger.

This afternoon at 4, the Notre Dame men's cross country team will play host to the 32nd annual Notre Dame Invitational, the oldest cross country invitational in the nation.

And the Notre Dame Invite is getting better with age. That fact, however, makes the going more difficult for the Irish, who will be challenged to finish in the top five.

"I've been here for four years," said Irish senior captain Dan Garrett. "And I've never seen such a strong field."

In order to make a strong showing, Notre Dame will have to overcome a big group of strong teams. Defending champion Eastern Michigan, defending Division-II national champion Edinboro, Michigan and Virginia are all powerful squads in Notre Dame's 'blue' (large school) race.

The Irish had a fine showing at last week's National Catholics, placing second in a large, national field. Garrett and sophomore Mike O'Conner placed in the top 10 in the race, but a large drop before ND's third-place finisher allowed Loyola to edge out the Irish.

Garrett is expected to repeat his strong performance of a week ago, though his second-place finish may not be repeated.

"If Danny runs a good race," said Irish coach Joe Piane, "he should finish in the top 10, but it'll be tough."

Garrett will most likely be following a trio of strong runners. Last year's champion, Ron Johnson of Central Michigan, will be back to defend his title, and Don Johns of Eastern Michigan and Chris Herdt of Virginia are expected to challenge him for the title.

Notre Dame does have one advantage - the Irish will be running on their home course, the Burke Memorial Golf Course. But Piane feels his opponents have an even greater advantage.

Rosenthal brings fan's perspective to AD job

By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Sports Writer

Editor's note - This is the second of a three-part interview with Notre Dame Athletic Director Dick Rosenthal. In part two, Rosenthal shares his views on coming to the job

Q: Do you think you bring more of a fan's or an alumnus' perspective to the job having been in the community so long and having been a player here?

A: I think in some ways I was probably a very active fan, attending games in many of the sports. I was the kind of fan who could enjoy the good play even if it was made by the other team. I was a very quiet spectator - more analytical than emotional. All that's changed, I can tell you that. I went to our first football game, and I was anything but analytical or quiet. I'd have to say it was thrillingly emotional. I suspect that's going to be a new way of life. I went to our soccer game when we beat Indiana, and what voice I had left I then completely lost.

I think we who live in the community are given a special window to the University that maybe we take a little for granted. As I see people from every state in the union coming in now, it suddenly hit that it's a pretty unique privilege that we have.

Q: As you start to learn more about the program, are there any subtleties that you hadn't expected? What's been the hardest thing you've had to learn.

A: No one could move into a job like this at a time like this, before the start of a major season, and have any semblance of hope in succeeding if they didn't have the kind of staff that we have here and everything hadn't been cared for. From that standpoint we're operating on automatic pilot. There's very little that I can do to goof things up. We are, out of necessity, constantly looking at the menu of opportunity for our students here. We've got some significant forces that will change and augment what we've done in the Athletic Department before. Just the physical facilities that are here. The two new Mondo tracks, outdoor and indoor - one the generosity of Special Olympics and the other the generosity of people who made the Loftus building and the Mayo field and the Haggard weight area all possible. The swimming pool and the new tennis center have added a whole new dimension to the opportunities to the University, primarily the students but the faculty and administrators as well. Scheduling those buildings, taking advantage of them, putting them effectively to use in the best and proper way is something that's new to us this year, and we'll get better at it as we go along.

Those physical facilities are going to beget support for the programs that are housed in them. Our swimming pool is a focal point for giving the first two swimming scholarships we've had here. That's going to do tremendous things for our program. I'm hopeful that our great track facilities might stimulate continued interest in that area and we could be very good in that area with these new facilities.

I'm grateful because I think I've arrived here at a time when several things have all combined to offer a very bright outlook for the athletic programs that come out of this department and are conducted by this University. We've got some great new coaches, and we've got some fine facilities. Clearly we've got finite resources, but that seems to be augmented with the advent of some scholarships in particular some of our non-revenue programs. I think it'll be a very exciting time.

Q: There's been a lot of talk about either adding on to the present stadium or even building a new one. Given your financial background, do you have more of an insight on what it's going to take to bring that about?

A: To be very honest, I haven't even begun to look at or even think in terms of that. You're not the first one to have raised the question. It's something I think that, in its proper priority within this University, will get attention. The augmenting of our existing stadium or the building of a new stadium without knowing has got to be a multi-, multi-million dollar kind of operation. It probably needs to seek
