Republicans against Gorbachev address

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The likelihood that Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev will become the first communist leader to address a joint meeting of Congress diminished Thursday as House Republican Leader Robert Michel joined a GOP revolt against the proposal.

Faced with the opposition on Capitol Hill, a senior White House official said "I would be very surprised if he (Gorbachev) ever ends up addressing a joint meeting."

Michel said in a statement that plans to ask Gorbachev to address a joint meeting of Congress of Dec. 9 during the Washington summit "would be a terrible mistake and I have relayed my views to the State Department."

Seventy-nine members of the House, mostly Republicans, signed a letter to President Reagan urging that another forum besides a joint meeting of Congress be found for a meeting between Gorbachev and Congress, said Representative Robert Walker.

The status of the invitation remained unclear.

Network prepares to boycott Coke

By CHRIS JULKA
Assistant News Editor

The campus Anti-Apartheid Network is holding strategy meetings, printing posters, and planning to meet with the director of University Food Services as the network prepares to spearhead an indefinite boycott of Coca Cola.

"We are urging students to drink only water, milk, juice and 7-Up," instead of Coke products, said John-Paul Checkett, treasurer of the campus Anti-Apartheid Network.

"I'm very confident that the students will be willing to sacrifice some small part of their meals in order to further the cause of human justice," Checkett said.

Coca Cola has disinvested in name only, according to Checkett, still retaining 69 percent of the soft drink market in South Africa through a company called Amalgamated Beverages. "Amalgamated Beverages invested its workers' pension funds in the South African military, so ba-

Texas prof: scientists should focus less on military

By BRADLEY GALKO

America has lost its competitiveness in world markets because it has lost its efficiency of production, due to military draining of scientists and engineers out of civilian manufacturing firms and into military manufacturing firms, according to Dr. J. Lloyd Dumas of the University of Texas.

"Since the 1950's, we have taken a very large fraction of the engineers and scientists in the U.S. and devoted their efforts, their talents to looking for a different kind of (military) technology," Dumas said Thursday in a lecture titled, "The Economics of Military Spending."

Dumas estimated that about 30 percent of all engineers and scientists in this country are dedicated to military-related research. He said this situation has remained relatively unchanged for the past four decades.

"It is what these people (military scientists and engineers) have not been doing that is what has been causing the economic problems... (namely) the kinds of things that ordinary commercial industry does," Dumas said.

The lack of participation of scientists and engineers in the improvement of production techniques for non-military items has resulted in "the rate of technological progress (going down) dramatically in the U.S. and with it the cost of cost-offsetting capabilities of American industry," Dumas said. Dumas said he felt American industry could be

Airlines worry officials with pilot hiring policy

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The major airlines have been easing their hiring requirements because of the need for thousands of new pilots, and some aviation safety officials worry about the decline in cockpit experience.

Pilot inexperience has been raised as a possible factor in last Sunday's crash in Denver of a Continental Airlines DC-9 after it was disclosed that both the captain and co-pilot had only recently begun flying that type of jetliner.

Spokesmen for the airline disputed suggestions that the two pilots' flying background was unusual, calling it "the norm in the industry." They emphasized that both pilots, who were among the 28 people killed in the ac-

Soviet seeks weapon ban

Associated Press

TOOELE Army Depot, Utah - A Soviet negotiator on Thursday called for a May deadline to reach an international treaty on chemical weapons as a delegation from his country arrived for a tour of the Army's chemical weapons disposal plant.

Yuri Nazarkin said he believed an agreement on reducing and eventually banning chemical arsenals could be obtained by late May, when the third session of the Conference on Disarmament is scheduled in Geneva.

Nazarkin, the chief Soviet negotiator at the conference, said he recognized that there were differences between his country and the United States on verification and other procedures.

However, Max Friedersdorf, the chief U.S. negotiator, ruled out the possibility that the U.S. would accept an arbitrary deadline. The U.S., he said, did not want the pressure of public opinion or congressional deliberations to come into play before the details of an agreement are worked out.

"The Soviets are always wanting to set artificial deadlines. We don't deal with them on trust; we deal with them on making a treaty so tightly bound and ironclad that they can't cheat," Friedersdorf said.

Earlier Thursday, Nazarkin

Video games bring players to a new level

Level one, screen one:

I find myself deposited on a dirt roadway, overlooking a rather scenic mountain range and a rather forbidding cliff behind me. No sooner had I picked myself up when green lizard men with clubs started to attack me. "Oh well," I sighed, "time to carry on my quest." One lizard man, two lizard man, three, four . . .

Level one, screen two:

After numerous scrapes with cerberi, sword-wielding women and strange blue creatures throwing knives, I enter the Castle of the First Level. Strange ghostlike creatures with half-suits of armor assault me as I climb through the dark corridors.

Ye Gods! A flaming pit! I leap across the gulf to snatch a swinging vine, only to be eaten alive by vampire bats.

Level one, screen three:

At the end of the castle and after being killed twice more, I face the King of Level One. He is a huge red giant with a long pitchfork. He leaps once, I leap once and land an aerial shot to the head. Ouch! Cursed pitchfork. Two more shots and he goes down. "You are a brave fighter to have cleared such a difficult stage," the gods of Video proclaim. A man's got to have a reason to live, you know?

Level two, screen two:

The green men have turned the color of autumn leaves, and they now have pet snakes and minotaur neighbors. I found an enchanted ram's head that cured my ills. I have leapt acid streams and fought flying piranha fish and gargoyles with swords of stone. So far I have conquered. Oh no! A harpy! Arrrrrrrrggghhh! The real world:

Damn harpies. Pump another quarter in the coin slot. Good thing these games have a continue option.

Level three, screen three:

The third castle, after much trial and fighting of bats, hath yielded before me. I enter the great hall to find . . .

Nothing? No, wait, a sorcerer has appeared out of thin air! As I jump to battle, he disappears, only to teleport behind me and lash out with evil blue flaming fireballs. "Treacherous swine," I mutter under my last breath.

My next reincarnation manages to kill the foul beast, and a fanfare from on high alerts me that my valor has won me an extra life. I walk forward, my step light, my head held high.

Level five, screen three:

"How much longer must this go on?" I think as I enter the great hall, actually a cave since Level Five apparently has no castle to speak of.

A green five-headed monster moves towards me, breathing fireballs and looking nasty. I lift my stolen battle-axe to do battle, only to find a strange languor affecting me. My every movement feels as if I were struggling through molasses as the monster moves closer, and closer, and I can feel the heat singeing my limbs . . .

The real world:

Well, here's the deal. Rastan (the name of the game) won't let you continue with more quarters after Level Five, so you don't want to finish Level Five with only one man left. Better to kill him off and buy three new men with another quarter.

Level six, screen three:

The end of my quest! Me against a dragon, sixteen feet tall and covered with scales, hiding in a cave that looks like a gymnasium. I charge and stab and jump and parry, remembering the words of my mentor, "feint and slash and run away and live to fight another day." An errant jump earns me a charred leg, but adrenalin accelerates my reflexes as I launch a superhuman attack on the fiend.

The real world:

As I make my last stab, charging full tilt towards the dragon's mouth, the dragon evaporates into a cloud of dust. The three or four people that are usually watching by this time drift away, leaving me to pick up my sword and wander home. . .

$73M cocaine bust largest ever in U.S.

Associated Press

PORT EVERGLADES, Fla. — Shipments of lumber for making picnic furniture concealed the largest amount of cocaine ever seized in the United States, drug agents said Thursday as continued discoveries pushed the haul past the four-ton mark.

Packages of the drug were found over the past two days in two successive shipments of a vessel that traveled between Honduras and Port Everglades. The drugs were hidden inside hollowed 4-foot-long boards resembling railroad ties.

"This is the largest cocaine seizure in history," said Harry Carnes, spokesman for the U.S. Customs Service, as drug agents tore open the boards with crowbars.

Another Customs official, Michael Sheehan, said the worth of the total haul was estimated at $73 million wholesale. A street-sales value would be much higher, but those estimates are meaningless because they depend on such factors as the strength of the market and whether the cocaine is cut with lesser-grade drugs or materials, he said.

Since early June, Customs inspectors in South Florida have seized 66 cargo containers carrying a total of 12 tons of cocaine, said Carnes.

The cocaine seized in the past two days apparently originated in 80 percent of the cocaine used in the United States.

"This has all the earmarks of a well-organized operation," said U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman Paul Teresi.

Core sophs told of Third World inequality by grads

By DAN MURPHY
News staff

Two Notre Dame graduates described the social inequality and oppression they witnessed in the Third World during two presentations in Washington Hall Thursday night.

The presentation was part of the Arts and Letters core course curriculum, and core course professors required their classes to attend.

Lou Nanni, a 1984 graduate and former Holy Cross Associate, talked about his experience in Chile, and Mary Hawley, a 1979 graduate, spoke about the semester she spent in Peru.

After the hour-long program, Nanni and Hawley answered student questions and repeated the presentation at 9 p.m.

Core course professor Alven Neiman called the presentation a "vicarious Urban Plunge."

He said he hoped it would open students' eyes to the problem of Third World inequality and raise some thoughts, questions and reactions.

"We're not indoctrinating anyone," said Neiman. "We're just saying this is the way it is. We don't want to get anyone to accept any certain view. (The presentation) is education, not indoctrination."

Nanni said he wanted to find out what poverty meant in all its dimensions, so he spent two and a half years in Chile in a program sponsored by the Center for Social Concerns. He lived in a shantytown with a 60 percent unemployment rate and taught English to sixth and eighth grade students. With the song, "The Dance Alone" by Sting playing in the background, Nanni narrated a short slide show of scenes from the shantytown.

"Here I was a kid from Notre Dame. I felt like oh yeah, I know a lot of people, I have ambitions," said Nanni, "but (life in Chile) broke me down. The first thing I said when I got up in the morning was why?"

Hawley spent a semester of her sophomore year in Peru in the Latin America Program of Experimental Learning. She wondered if going to Peru and witnessing the impoverished conditions there would weaken her faith. "I gradually realized that I was taking an awful lot more than I was giving," she said. "We have a couple of choices. Are we going to see it (the problem of inequality) or are we going to gloss over it, keep walking, keep talking?"

Soviets to sell satellite photos

Associated Press

MOSCOW - Wheeling slowly in orbit, a Soviet satellite snaps a sharp picture of the Seattle scene 150 miles below: a ship cleaving Puget Sound, the Kingdome stadium, factories, jets lined up at an airfield, even cars.

Soviet prowess in military reconnaissance from space is no surprise, but this photo is available for $70 from a venture begun this year to sell Soviet satellite photos and mapping skills abroad.

"We are open to do business, and to make money," says Vyacheslav Piskulin, general director of Soyuzkarta, a company based in Moscow.

Soyuzkarta enters a market that has been dominated by the Landsat program of the United States and France's Spot satellite program.

In the opinion of Soviet and Western specialists, however, pictures from a camera with a 1,000mm lens, and other Soviet cameras, surpass anything now available to private users.

Their quality led an official of the U.S. Geological Survey to express interest about possible use of the Soviet pictures by U.S. government agencies.

Piskulin said recently, "what we can now offer customers abroad is better images than any realized by electronic means." He was interviewed at Soyuzkarta headquarters in Moscow's southeast industrial district.

Finer resolution in the Soviet pictures means objects 20 feet across are visible. Western scientific attaches in Moscow say Landsat can see nothing smaller than 100 feet and Spot cannot resolve objects under 33 feet.

Among the many uses of images recorded by satellite are mapping, crop forecasting, land use, transportation planning, detection of water pollution and charting continental shelves.

Photos from space have clear military applications. Both superpowers use spy satellites to keep track of each other's missile sites and movements of ships and troops.

Soviet officials say the Soyuzkarta photos are intended purely for civilian use and that the photography program has nothing to do with the military.

First snowfall tells of winter's arrival

By MARIA DOTI
Staff Reporter

Heavy sweaters, parkas and gloves may not be needed this winter. November is coming to an end and snowflakes have only just begun to fall. Local weathermen have mixed feelings about the coming winter and feel it may be difficult to make any predictions.

"Our precipitation for this winter will be about normal, with below normal temperatures," said Don Savage, a weather service specialist at the National Weather Service office in South Bend.

Dick Addis, weather reporter for WNDU-TV, said he heard rumors of a harsh, cold winter. Addis says he tends to agree that a blizzard is long overdue for northern Indiana, and this just may be the time.

The Weather Service shows the jet stream dipping down in a southeasterly direction, blowing cold air right over the South Bend area.

If the lake effect remains stable, total snowfall for this winter will be close to 72.5 inches.

According to Paul Silvestri at WSBT-TV, "It's hard to make a long-range prediction and still maintain accuracy." He said he has received reports from the National Weather Service that claimed up to 60 percent accuracy.

Only time will tell as to whether winter will bring five-foot drifts or simply freezing temperatures. Although the weathermen are still uncertain, Christmas this year may be a white one.

Indiana judge 'sentences' six teenagers to city jail for poor school grades

Associated Press

HAMMOND, Ind. -A judge said Thursday he had no recourse but to send six teenagers to jail for receiving poor school grades in violation of the probation he had imposed for their underaged drinking.

City Judge Peter Katic on Wednesday revealed he had ordered the five boys and one girl behind bars over the past two weeks after they received grades of D and F on their report cards.

The students each had been ordered to improved their grades to no less than a C as a term of probation he imposed earlier this year when they were convicted of possessing alcohol at underage beer-drinking parties at parks along Lake Michigan in this Chicago suburb.

"I don't like to send them to jail, but the stick that I have is the jail sentence," Katic said Thursday between calls of reaction from the public, mostly in support of his decision.

However, Jean Thurman, director of Project Justice and Equality, a program advocating jail and prison reform based in neighboring Gary, criticized the judge for sending juveniles to jail for "drinking beer and making bad grades. Those aren't criminal offenses."

Four of the boys are serving 60-day sentences at the Lake County Jail in special cells separate from the adult-felon population in a juveniles-only section, the Gary Post-Tribune reported in Thursday's editions. The four are eligible for release within 30 days for good behavior.

Katic said he warned the teenagers weeks ago this could happen.

"I told them, 'You got yourself in this bind. You are going to shape up your grades, cut out the dope and alcohol, cut the nonsense out and if you don't do that you are going to jail.'"

"These are people who have said no to their parents, teachers, principals, ministers, police and now, after I, the judge who has the ability to send them to jail, told them what the conditions are, they come back and say no to me, too," Katic said.

Mexico threatened by peso dive

Associated Press

MEXICO CITY -The peso plunged for the second straight day Thursday, amid official statements that the government halted its free-market support of the currency to prevent a substantial drain on Mexico's international reserves.

The government also said the tumbling peso should not worsen Mexico's heated inflation, which already was expected to reach a record 140 percent this year.

The peso on Thursday fell to a rate of up to 2,600 to the U.S. dollar at private exchange houses and major banks, down about 15 percent from Wednesday and 45 percent below the close of trading on Tuesday.

Private exchange houses and banks set a dollar purchase rate of as high as 3,000 pesos, but few were selling dollars. Major banks set the selling price at 2,550 pesos, but generally were not offering dollars.

The peso began plunging in the free market on Wednesday, apparently due to investor worries about uncertainty in the financial markets.

Treasury Secretary Gustavo Petricoli told Congress the government stopped selling dollars in the free market Wednesday morning, in the face of demand by private companies who decided to make foreign debt payments early and by investors fleeing the Mexican stock market, which plunged a total of more than 27 percent on Monday and Tuesday.

Petricoli said the action was taken to help prevent depletion of Mexico's foreign hard currency reserves. Mexico's reserves are at a record $15 billion, due to increased exports and loans from foreign banks, but the government does not plan to boost them further this year, he said.

Youngest teen to get heart transplant dies at 18

Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. -A teenager who was the nation's youngest heart transplant recipient when he received a heart six years ago, fainted at high school and died, his father said.

"He always recovered from everything -we were starting to think modern medicine could handle it all," said Richard Wann, Eric Boyd's father.

Eric died at University Hospital on Wednesday, six days before the sixth anniversary of the transplant, performed because he suffered from a chronic heart muscle disorder.

"Eric drove, he dated -he could do everything 18-year-old boys do," Wann said. "That's why this is such a terrible shock to us all."

Eric had been experiencing tissue rejection flare-ups on and off since the summer, but it was a heart attack that he finally succumbed to, his father said.

sically the black workers' pensions are being invested in the organization that's killing them off," he said.

The Anti-Apartheid Network is currently gearing up to launch a publicity blitz for the boycott, which is scheduled to start officially on Jan. 18, Checkett said. Local news stations and radio talk shows have expressed an interest in doing segments on the boycott, he said. The Anti-Apartheid Network also appeared in the "Stepping Stones" program on Heritage Cablevision, Checkett said.

"In order for this to work, we need wide, wide campus support," Checkett said.

Also, the group will be at the Hesburgh Library, LaFortune Student Center and at the steps of the Administration Building to encourage students to resolve in writing that they will not consume Coca Cola products, said Checkett.

Scientists

revitalized only if a considerable number of the scientists and engineers now serving the military were transferred to the commercial industries.

He stressed, however, that this conversion of engineers and scientists from the military to civilian jobs could go smoothly "only if advanced preparation on a highly decentralized basis... is carried out."

Simply removing these resources from the military by means of a budget cut would not solve the problem, Dumas said. "You have to reconnect them," he said, "to productive civilian research and development. That requires conversion, not simply budget cuts."

He concluded by saying that a system must be set up to convince military engineers and scientists that their options are not, "make weapons or be out of work. (Rather) make weapons or something else."

The group is planning to hold a meeting to recruit students to organize the boycott. "Ideally, we would have a committee for each dorm. If we could do that, it would be a dream come true," Checkett said.

Each dorm committee would attempt to persuade dorm leaders to exclude Coca Cola soft drinks from SYRs, formals and foodsales. Checkett said banishing Coke from the campus would be no small accomplishment. "There's a lot of Coke machines on campus," he noted.

Checkett said he would also meet soon with William Hickey, director of University Food Services, to discuss the removal of Coke from campus cafeterias. "This is in no way a confrontation. (Food Services has) supported numerous boycotts in the past," said Checkett. He said he was uncertain about the prospects of Food Services banning Coke, however. "I do not know what kind of a contract they have under Coke," he explained.

Checkett said that "everything is going to be done totally by the book." The group wants to avoid giving the impression that it is a "small group of students trying to restrict other students' buying power," he said. "This is a way for the students to show their voice."

Checkett said he was confident about the response which the campaign would elicit from the students. "I was very impressed with the participation in the fast. There was very little advance publicity and yet about 100 students participated."

By contrast, he did not foresee much success in converting the University administration to the group's cause, citing the Board of Trustees' recent decision to refuse to take a tougher stance against South Africa. "I think the administration's policy is a total failure," he said.

Checkett denied, however, that the group was singling out Coca Cola because its president, Donald Keough, also chairs Notre Dame's Board of Trustees. "The boycott is part of a nationwide effort," he said, adding that the boycott has been in the making for almost a year.

A spokesman for House Speaker Jim Wright said Tuesday the White House had requested that Gorbachev be invited to address a joint meeting of Congress at 10 a.m. on Dec. 9, and that Congress had set the wheels in motion for the event.

However, a senior administration official who spoke on condition of anonymity said, "all along the White House felt the most appropriate thing would be a breakfast or luncheon meeting" with some members of Congress.

cident, met Federal Aviation Administration requirements.

But aviation experts said the overall experience level of pilots at rapidly expanding airlines, even some of the industry's largest carriers, has fallen off in recent years.

"This is one of the areas of concern that we have today.

Michel said the purpose of the planned Dec. 7-10 summit "is to finalize details of a very important arms agreement. There is no logical reason to obscure the purpose of the visit or give it an inappropriate symbolic value" by having a joint meeting.

Michel's stance threw the invitation into grave doubt, because he is one of four top congressional leaders whose approval would be needed to formally open the doors of Congress to Gorbachev, said a Republican aide.

Seventy-five conservative House members signed a letter urging Reagan to arrange another venue for Gorbachev to meet with Congress.

There's been such rapid expansion that (pilots) have come up (the senior system) rapidly and the total level of experience can drop," said Homer Mouden, a former commercial pilot and vice president of the Flight Safety Foundation.

FAA Administrator Allan Mc Artor said Thursday that the "overall experience... (and) overall flight hours of pilots is of some concern" to him and that the agency even before the Denver accident.

said the tour of the depot's Chemical Agent Munitions Disposal System prototype plant was a major step toward an eventual ban on chemical arsenals.

The six-member Soviet delegation arrived Thursday morning at this remote desert installation 50 miles southwest of Salt Lake City for a briefing on the Army's Chemical Agent Munitions Disposal System, or CAMDS, prototype plant. The delegation will tour the installation on Friday.

The Soviet Union refused to attend a United Nations workshop at the facility in 1983, but recently did an diplomatic about-face and accepted an in-itation from the State Department's Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

The Soviets were shown either a live shell or prototype of each chemical weapon in the U.S. arsenal, including artillery projectiles, mortar rounds, bombs, land mines and aerial spray tanks. The U.S. weapons are filled with liquid nerve or mustard agent, both of which are vaporized and dispersed by small explosive charges upon impact.

Mustard blisters the skin, mucous membranes and lung tissue. Nerve agent acts on the central nervous system, impairing basic bodily functions.

Nazarkin characterized the visit to Tooele as an indication that negotiations between his country, the United States and 14 other countries to ban chemical weapons are nearing agreement.

Impending death forces painful choices

Smiley-face stickers held the wires that monitored the comatose man's irregular heart beat. Vitamin-carrying IV tubes pierced his wrists, and catheters carried urine from a bladder that no longer functioned properly. A tube, a sort of high-tech umbilical cord, snaked its way from a nearby respirator into the man's nostril and down the back of his throat to his lungs. His body lay motionless except for the rhythmic rising and falling of his chest. He was my father.

Kathy Scarbeck

guest column

Dad, like many of the dangerously ill, depended on artificial devices to stay alive. Several small heart attacks had weakened his heart, and pneumonia filled his lungs with fluid. His condition had triggered three progressively more serious Code Blue alerts. Yet during the four weeks he was hospitalized, Dad fought against his life support systems.

He grudgingly agreed to the respirator only after my family and I had pleaded with him. Days later, Dad pulled the respirator tube from his throat. Technicians re-inserted the tube only to find it later dangling from his bed. When Dad could no longer tolerate the respirator forcing oxygen into his lungs, he asked my mother to "get rid of that monstrosity." The next day she asked Dad's doctor if he would remove the machine. "I can't do that," the doctor replied, "It would be murder."

Although it hurt watching Dad die slowly, it was even more painful watching him fight the very machine that kept him alive. But removing the apparatus would expedite his death, and we, legally, perhaps morally, could be lumped into the same category as cold-blooded murderers. Our crime would be all the more horrible because we'd be killing someone we loved. Even though the doctors had told us he was about to die and although Dad pleaded with us to unhook the machinery, this act ran counter to all I'd ever known -- that human life should be respected and that the preservation of all life is its own justification.

How could I kill the man who used to pull me around our block in a red wagon, who took me for Sunday morning driving lessons? Dad had worked hard to support his family; he often came home late at night, exhausted from a long day at work. Whenever his birthday or Christmas came around, I'd asked what I could get him. "Peace and quiet," he replied, only half joking.

I was unable, finally, to give even that. Through weeks of intense pain, Dad couldn't speak because the respirator tube partially obstructed his throat. For a while he communicated by writing messages, but he soon stopped. Dad wouldn't look at us when we spoke to him; his gaze wandered about the room. He didn't seem to know what to do with all that pain. He didn't want to prolong this kind of life.

But my family and I are Catholic. We respect life. We contribute to anti-abortion campaigns and oppose the death penalty. Who are we to play God and say when someone should die?

I had asked myself this question not long before Dad's illness. As a high school junior studying euthanasia in my Christian Morality class, I had learned euthanasia literally meant "good death" and was commonly referred to as "mercy killing." My teacher told how some people could rationalize injecting fatal doses of drugs into the terminally ill. These people said anyone on the verge of death should have the right to choose when to die. With just one shot, a person could be put out of his misery like an injured horse. My teacher concluded that euthanasia was immoral. While the motive may be admirable, she explained, the act itself is, quite simply, murder. It cannot be justified.

I was an obedient 16-year-old who had always done what I was told. If the sun were shining and my mother told me to take an umbrella to school, I'd do what she said. I never missed a curfew, and I didn't give my teachers any problems. I respected authority. I trusted people whom I thought were wise enough to know what was "right."

But when Dad asked to have the respirator removed, I couldn't bring myself to even consider the implications of his request. Dad was asking for his own death and, according to the Church, we'd all be guilty of murder. He'd have to continue using that machine; it was the right thing to do -- the Church said so. Or so I thought.

My teacher had also explained about how the Catholic Church makes a distinction between "extraordinary" and

"Although it hurt watching Dad die slowly, it was even more painful watching him fight the very machine that kept him alive."

"ordinary" treatment given to the terminally ill. "Extraordinary" methods, she said, do not imply reasonable hope of benefit, but "ordinary" methods do. Critically ill patients often reach a point in the dying process where life-prolonging devices such as respirators can do no more than postpone the inevitable. All of this seemed abstract, a matter of semantics. But my teacher did make a painfully relevant final point: Catholics are not morally bound to use extraordinary means to preserve life.

Now I felt the terrible burden of having to make a life and death decision. Our family could choose to remove Dad from the respirator, assuming the doctors would allow it. Such an act did not force death; it was not euthanasia. If we did unhook the machine, though, we would have to accept the possibility that Dad almost certainly would die.

We also had to consider "what Dad would have wanted." He had argued against using the respirator since the doctors had first recommended it. The tube dangling from his bed reminded us of that. Just before Dad eventually lapsed into a coma, he wrote my mother a note that said he didn't want my brother, sister, and me to enter his hospital room. I knew he was suffering and he didn't want us to see him in that condition. It hurt to be shut out but, in a sense, we were bringing it upon ourselves by allowing the respirator to remain. After all, it was Dad's life, and in the four weeks preceding his coma, he was coherent enough to make the decision that he didn't want to live in pain.

"Dad was asking for his own death and according to the Church we'd all be guilty of murder."

Dad wanted to die, but I couldn't let him. When I first heard that he had asked to have the machine turned off, I immediately looked for excuses to forbid it. He was on medication and had just experienced several minor heart attacks. Of course Dad didn't realize what he was doing. He was helpless, and it was his family's responsibility to think for him.

But maybe this shouldn't even have been our decision. Doctors deal with such cases every day; maybe they are more qualified to decide when life-prolonging measures should be used. My family and I were just too exhausted and too emotional to remain objective. Maybe we needed a doctor to tell us that Dad should stay on the respirator.

Then again, my family and I had known Dad for years; we knew him better than any medical specialist ever could. To the doctors he was a name on a chart, a patient in an ICU ward. Perhaps Dad's doctor had advised the respirator, because he didn't want another patient's death on his record.

But I knew what they didn't. Dad couldn't tolerate the suffering; he needed "peace and quiet."

Although the doctors told us my father had no hope of surviving, I kept believing they were wrong. One night during his first week in the hospital, the doctors told us to call a priest because Dad wouldn't live through the night. But he did survive that evening and for weeks after. The doctors had been wrong once; surely they could be wrong again.

Besides, God wouldn't let Dad die if we prayed hard enough. My mother said countless novenas and rosaries; my sister and I prayed for him in school. Maybe God was just testing our faith, waiting until the last minute before He would save Dad.

Finally, I simply could not allow myself to take an active part in my father's death. It would have meant having to live forever with the nightmare of "what if" -- what if a miracle would have happened, what if the doctors could have saved him? I denied my father's request for "peace and quiet," because I couldn't deal with the horror of possibly admitting defeat prematurely. Dad had to suffer, then, until something happened.

And it did happen. Almost four weeks after Dad entered the hospital, he slipped into a coma. A lab report showed irreversible brain damage. Three days later he died.

"Dad couldn't tolerate the suffering; he needed 'peace and quiet.'"

My father's request for "peace and quiet" was finally granted when his blood pressure dropped to a critical point. All of those high-tech devices just couldn't save him. We entered Dad's hospital room not long after he died. The respirator was pushed back from Dad's bed and IV tubes no longer cut into his flesh. "I guess we knew it was coming," my mother said, looking at his lifeless body. Now it was over, and Dad could finally be at rest.

Early bowl bids do little but disappoint

Last Saturday we witnessed the most convincing win at Notre Dame Stadium in the 1980s. However, while you were celebrating at the game, I was on the edge of my seat in front of the CBS broadcast here in Nome, Alaska where we are enjoying our first blizzard. I am spending my first postgraduate year working at KNOM Radio, a Jesuit Volunteer Corps placement. Fortunately, virtually every Notre Dame game has been broadcast in Nome, and with the help of a South Bend Tribune subscription, I have enjoyed ND's fantastic season almost as much as any Notre Dame student.

Timothy J. Clulo

guest column

The Alabama game was the highlight of my otherwise work filled weekend. Only one thing spoiled it, and of course it had nothing to do with what was happening on the field. As usual at halftime, CBS turned its attention away from the Notre Dame Band to scores from other games and a look at the "bowl picture". It was rather disheartening to hear the Cotton Bowl President, standing on the field at Notre Dame, state that Notre Dame's new Executive Vice-President and Athletic Director had given the Cotton Bowl a verbal commitment while the Orange Bowl Chairman was saying, live from Miami, that Notre Dame deserved to play for the National Championship if the Irish beat Alabama, Penn State, and Miami. "Disheartened" would be a poor description of my reaction. In reality, the words that shot from my mouth as I bounced off the ceiling are unprintable.

Several questions raced through my mind. How could the Notre Dame administration sell our team short? The team Notre Dame would play in the Cotton Bowl will undoubtedly be the worst team to play in a New Year's Day Bowl. It may not even be ranked in the Top 20 on January first.

Secondly, hasn't the Notre Dame athletic administration learned from its previous mistakes with early bowl game wheeling and dealing. In 1983, Notre Dame was embarrassed when it was forced because of a premature dealing to take a 6-5 team which finished with three losses to a bowl game. That team did not deserve the rewards of a bowl, and neither does this

Notre Dame team if it lost its last three. No one could tell the athletic administration better than Coach Holtz that Notre Dame could have lost to Alabama on Saturday. With a key injury here and a bad break there, Notre Dame could easily lose to Penn State and Miami too. Let's leave it to men of questionable integrity like Jimmy Johnson at Miami to talk and negotiate bowls weeks before the season ends. Many may be saying that bowl commitments at mid-season are a reality today. If that is the case, Notre Dame should step aside, revert to its former policy of not attending bowls regardless of the multimillion dollar paydays, and work for a playoff system. I am a firm supporter of the bowl rather than playoff format. However, if bowls cannot wait until the season ends to solidify deals and commitments, playoffs may be necessary for the good of college football.

Thirdly, how can the Notre Dame team be expected to be at their best week in and week out when the athletic administration is not doing its best for them? What kind of a message does a Cotton Bowl commitment send to the team? "Well boys, you play your hearts out and beat the best teams college has to offer each week. However, on January first, we have you scheduled to play a team that's lost two or three games against weak competition and may not be in the Top 20. But the Notre Dame Athletic Department does have a three million dollar check in its account." If I were on the team, that's the way I would see it.

Finally, when I cooled off a bit, I wondered if maybe the Cotton Bowl President had exaggerated about his discussions with Notre Dame officials and if the Orange Bowl Chairman had reconsidered giving Miami an unconditional berth in the Orange Bowl. I can only hope that this is what happened on Saturday and that the Notre Dame athletic administration considers all its options, considers the great team for which it is acting, and considers its mistakes of the past. Coach Holtz said it best in a post game interview with CBS. He uncharacteristically looked into the future more than one week. If we win, he said, we want to play the best and that would be in the Orange Bowl.

Pressure abounds in live television

If you believe in the Nielsen ratings system, then you'll accept as fact that about five and a half million people viewed last week's Notre Dame/Alabama game. I personally don't have much faith in Mr. Nielsen and his 1500 "Nielsen families", but for the purpose of my story I will accept his numbers. The reason that number is important to me is because it is the largest number of people who have ever seen the results of my incompetence. Don't misunderstand me, I have inconvenienced large numbers of people before, but never more than I could personally apologize to.

Daniel C. Decarlo

guest column

Last weekend I had the pleasure of being "tricked" into working (and I use that term loosely) with CBS for their telecast of the big football game. Thursday afternoon I visited a seminar presented by CBS intended to educate students interested in sports television. I sat in the first row and listened to a very interesting presentation about what goes into putting together a nationally televised college football game. As it turned out I was too interested; one of the producers sensed my enthusiasm and asked if I would like to help do the show. I jumped at the chance, how fun I thought. Yea fun, if you like that feeling you get when you sleep through a final, then you would have loved the day I had with CBS.

My job began on Friday when I showed up at the truck and did some typing and running around for odds and ends. Pretty easy actually. The day ended with instructions to be back at 8 a.m. the next day to help them get ready for kickoff. "You'll probably just be on your own when the game starts." So they told me. I never should have gotten out of bed.

When I arrived on Saturday morning I sensed that something was different, that coolness had disappeared from the employees and was replaced by a nervous tension. Normal, I was told by those who had been through this before. I spent the morning running errands, and doing other insignificant tasks. Mostly I watched how they prepared for what I was slowly realizing was a huge job. About an hour before game time I was summoned on the field to help an assistant, Rob, with "pregame". OK sure, sounds like fun. My day soon unravelled.

Pregame consisted of coordinating the entrance of the band and the two teams onto the field. Because of a goof with the band my job went from holding the cable of the assistant's head set to wearing the set and cueing the assistant to cue the band. I was not prepared for the responsibility. All of a sudden I was listening to five people yelling at me on a head set. "When we give you the cue Dan you'll give Rob the cue to start the band. Now this is very important, if the band doesn't start on time it will f---up the timing of the whole intro." Just what I needed to hear. You see they told me they would say "wave Dan" when they wanted me to cue Rob. They never did. I was waiting to hear only those exact words, no derivation would do. "Five, four, three, two, one and cue the band, (silence) cue the band, hey Dan cue the band," "Sir do you mean 'wave Dan'." At that point expletives rebounded through my head as a muddled assortment of voices yelled "wave Dan." I did wave, but Rob took that point to look up at the band director and not me. I jumped around trying to get his attention but it was no use, the cue had been missed. The producers were screaming at me to drop the head set and go tell Rob, but of course I got tangled up in the wires and never made it out there. After what seemed like an eternity, but was probably about ten seconds, had elapsed Rob finally saw me waving and tripping in the North tunnel and started the band. But the damage had been done. I missed the cue and Brent Musburger was forced to ad lib my mistake. In addition, I had to stand there and listen to all the comments from those fans who had witnessed my little show. Those comments, however, were nothing compared to the assaults that were being hurled at me over the head set.

The rest of the day was filled with incidents similar to the one just documented. Whether it was losing Brent Musburger's change or being called "an incompetent midwestern boob," my day with CBS was one I will not forget nor repeat. Working in live television highlights all my weaknesses. Everything happens so quickly and decisions must be made without thinking. It is all instinct. The pressure on the field and in the director's truck is absolutely unbelievable. One mistake can set off the switchboard of every affiliate in the country.

I learned an awful lot last weekend about television, so much in fact that I know now I want to have nothing to do with it.

No more watching for ND's Bolcar

By RICK RIETBROCK

Assistant Sports Editor

Ned Bolcar winces at the subject's very mention.

Notre Dame's junior linebacker doesn't want to talk about being named to nearly every high school all-America team or his daily diary in the USA Today while he was recruited.

"High school is high school," he says.

Part of the reason his glorious past has worn thin is that the present is shaping up just fine itself. After a delayed start, he is finally in the position he expected to be.

Bolcar has stepped into a starting inside linebacker slot and has led seventh-ranked Notre Dame's 'No-Name' defense in tackling since the opening game at Michigan.

Bolcar registered nine tackles that day after tackling some pre-game jitters.

"I was really nervous before the game and (Defensive Coordinator and Inside Linebacker) Coach Fazio came up to me about a half-dozen times and said 'Do you know what you're doing?' and I said 'Do you know what you're doing?' He said 'Yeah' so I said, 'Well, I have confidence in you,' and he said, 'I have confidence in you, too.' That was it, but that really helped."

Since then, Bolcar has had put up big tackling numbers all season, including 17 against Pitt and 13 against USC, which he calls his best performance.

But while his junior season got off to a great start, his college career was not quite so smooth at takeoff.

Bolcar did not get any playing time as a freshman, which he says he was prepared for. But he also saw very little practice time, which he was not so ready to take.

"The only thing I'm not happy about is that I really didn't get a good learning experience my freshman year," says Bolcar, an economics major. "I didn't get to play special teams, I even asked to be put on the prep teams to get the experience of playing against the older guys."

"As the season wears on, you work less and less with the third-and-fourth-team players because the starters need to prepare for the game every week. I didn't get any work, so I wasn't learning. By the time it came to my turn we ended the drill."

"My freshman year, what I did after the first month was stand around," he says. "I gained 20 pounds from just standing there."

That put Bolcar one year behind

After watching from the sidelines for the beginning of his career, junior inside linebacker Ned Bolcar (47) has become the leading tackler for the Irish this season with 87.

Years of Frustration

Gerry Faust

Gerry Faust. The name, when mentioned today, elicits comments like, "he couldn't coach" and "ol' Pinkett, Pinkett, pass, punt," to "he was such a nice man" and "he got a bum rap".

No matter who you want to believe, it seems that Faust was just the wrong man at the wrong time for Notre Dame football. Irish fans had just watched their last two coaches, Ara Parseghian and Dan Devine, post a combined record of 148-33-5 over 17 years, collect two national championships, earn nearly unanimous respect of players and fans and

100 Years of Irish Football

step down gracefully after sending their final teams to bowl games.

When Dan Devine resigned at the end of the 1980 season, he was replaced by one of the most successful high school coaches in the country, Gerry Faust. Faust built himself into a legend at Moeller High School in Cincinnati. He coached his teams to four mythical national prep titles, five Ohio state titles, seven unbeaten seasons and a 174-17-2 record over 18 seasons.

These were great achievements, even for a high school coach. Although some Irish fans were skeptical of the choice to bring someone unaccustomed to the college game in to tackle what might be the most difficult coaching position in the country, no one questioned Faust's winning attitude.

At the end of his five-year tenure with the Irish, not many doubted Faust's winning attitude, but even less could tolerate his teams' inability to get the big first downs, to make the key defensive stands or to win the big games.

It was a stormy five years for Faust and Irish football. In his first season, Faust saw his team, as the number-four team in the country, pick LSU apart at home, 27-9. The win vaulted Notre Dame to the top spot in the rankings, but it didn't stay for long.

The Irish lost four of their next five, including home losses to Florida State and USC, to drop them well out of the polls. Faust rallied the Irish to blowouts of Navy, Georgia Tech and Air Force before losing their final two on the road to Penn State and Miami. The loss to the Hurricanes assured Notre Dame of its first losing season in 18 years.

The fans forgave and forgot, and at the start of year two of the Faust regime, the Irish had again been ranked in the top 20, at number 20. And an where he expected to be, but the progress began the next season.

"My sophomore year was really my freshman year," he says. "I was on all the special teams (Lou Holtz named him captain of the punt team), I set my foundation on the team and proved I could play, like the freshmen are doing now."

With Mike Kovalski's graduation, Bolcar and Mike Stonebreaker (who was declared ineligible this fall) were the favorites to earn playing time with Wes Pritchett. Bolcar set out to earn his playing time in the spring drills.

"I became better fundamentally in spring ball," he says. "That's where I made my biggest improvement. 'I was in the right position all the time with the proper technique."

"I wasn't quite sure how I stood in the coaches' eyes, but I had the opportunity to play. That gave me confidence because I was the man who had to do the job. I just wanted to go out and do it."

Which is exactly what he has done. In his first season as a starter, Bolcar has 87 tackles, three tackles-for-loss, two fumble recoveries, two interceptions and one sack. Bolcar's development has been instrumental in solidifying the Irish defense into a formidable force.

"We've had a good year so far," he says. "We had a little letdown at Pitt, but yet the team showed something by bouncing back in that game. We bounced back and played well and now with the good game against Alabama, we're ready to have another one this week at Penn State."

"I've come a long way and the team has come a long way, but we can get better, we've got to improve every time out there."

Bolcar has indeed come a long way. After coming in as a celebrity and his freshman-year setback in trying to prove he belonged, the enthusiastic linebacker finds himself in the position he hoped for when he came to the Irish.

"I get excited for every game," says Bolcar. "This is perfect. I hoped to be in this position - Notre Dame winning and me being a part of that."

"I'm right on schedule."

Bolcar (47) and his teammates on the "No-Name" defense celebrate during the Boston College game. "I've come a long way, and the team has come long way, but we can get better. We've got to improve every time out there," Bolcar says.

Faust

opening season win over rival Michigan cut the fans reservations, as well as the Notre Dame ranking, in half.

Three more wins and the Irish were 4-0, number nine in the country and licking their chops as unranked Arizona made its first trip to South Bend since 1941. But the Irish dropped the game on an Arizona field goal with no time remaining and could manage only a tie at Oregon the following week.

Those back-to-back disappointments kept the Irish out of the polls, but just when the Notre Dame faithful started to lament about what might have been, the Irish stunned number-one Pitt at Pitt, 31-16, behind then-freshman Allen Pinkett's two touchdowns. The win brought the fans and the ranking (number 13) back, but not the momentum. Notre Dame dropped its last three to finish the year at 6-4-1. More lamenting about what might have been.

The Associated Press, if no one else, would not give up on Faust. It granted his squad the number-five ranking in the country on opening day of the 1983 season, and it looked like the Irish might live up to it in the first game, pounding Purdue 52-6 at West Lafayette.

But consecutive losses to unranked Michigan State and Miami again crushed the Irish title hopes. With three weeks left in the season, Notre Dame rebounded to number 18, but three more close losses to end the year sent the Irish limping into a berth in the Liberty Bowl, a berth many (including some Irish players) didn't feel 6-5 Notre Dame deserved. The Irish defeated Boston College, 19-18, behind two more touchdown runs from Pinkett.

Once again, despite finishing the previous year unranked, Notre Dame was ranked number eight to begin the 1984 campaign. And once again, the Irish failed to live up to the expectations of fans and pollsters alike. An opening-day loss to unranked Purdue at the Hoosier Dome toppled Notre Dame from the polls, but won three straight to re-enter at number 17.

But then the roof caved in. Consecutive home losses to Miami, Air Force and South Carolina buried the Irish, and only miracle wins at ranked opponents LSU and USC could salvage a winning record and a trip to the Aloha Bowl. The warm Hawaiian climate didn't suit the Irish against SMU, however, as the Mustangs galloped to a 27-20 win. On fourth down on the SMU 16-yard line and 23 seconds remaining in the game, quarterback Steve Beuerlein's pass to a wide-open Milt Jackson drifted just off his fingertips in the endzone, summing up the frustration of the season.

In his final season, 1985, Faust's squad went 5-6, and three straight losses to Penn State, LSU, and Miami to close out the year broke the patience of the fans. Three days before the Hurricanes swept the Irish away, 58-7, Lou Holtz was named the next coach of the Fighting Irish.

As much a quick fix to college football teams as Billy Martin is to the Yankees, Holtz came to South Bend after resurrecting a hapless Minnesota team to bowl stature in two years. And Irish fans didn't want five years of rebuilding, they wanted a winner. Holtz made no promises early, but a string of close losses in 1986 threatened to continue what seemed to be endless frustration for the Irish.

On opening day, 1986, Holtz almost pulled off an incredible upset of third-ranked Michigan. If not for an oft-reviewed call in the endzone of a late Joel Williams (non)catch, and a short, left 45-yard field goal attempt from John Carney with 18 seconds left, it might have happened. And it might have been all the Irish needed to carry them through yet another murderous schedule.

Instead, tight, hard-fought losses were the rule as Michigan State, Pitt, Penn State and LSU joined the Wolverines as teams who nipped the Irish in games that literally could have gone either way. Some consolation came in the season finale at USC, when the Irish rallied from a 37-20 deficit with a little more than 12 minutes remaining to win on Carney's 19-yard field goal with no time left on the clock.

The close decisions, though obviously heartbreaking, left little doubt that the Irish, under Holtz, would always be competitive. Thus far in 1987, Notre Dame's play might be characterized more strongly than that. The team's 8-1 record and spirited play against top teams are reminiscent of past squads of Notre Dame's illustrious college football history. Hopefully, Lou Holtz will be able to see his name in the company of some of the immortal coaches which have made the one hundred years of Notre Dame football unlike any other.

The Game

By MARTY STRASEN

Assistant Sports Editor

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. -Times and teams have changed since the last time Notre Dame visited Penn State's Beaver Stadium.

A 5-3 Irish squad which had won four games in a row under Gerry Faust entered the 1985 game with thoughts of the 44-7 upset of the Nittany Lions from the previous year still in mind. But Penn State had not forgotten that game either, and bombarded the helpless Irish by a 36-6 score in front of more than 84,000 fans to get some revenge.

This year, it's Coach Lou Holtz' seventh-ranked Irish with something to prove.

The Nittany Lions held off a Notre Dame threat with a dramatic goal-line stand in the waning moments of last year's game to earn a 24-19 win in the last Irish home game of the season. A potential game-winning pass by quarterback Steve Beuerlein slipped through the hands of tight end Joel Williams in the end zone.

Holtz and the 8-1 Irish cannot afford to let Saturday's game (noon, CBS national television) slip away like last year's if they want to hang onto the dream of a possible national championship.

"Penn State has beaten us five of the last six years," Holtz said at his press conference Tuesday. "We've come an awful long way, and this is an important football game. The players understand how good Penn State is. All the other things are meaningless if we don't win this game."

Defending national champion Penn State, 7-3, is coming off a 10-0 loss to state-rival Pittsburgh, which marked the first time the Lions had been blanked in 39 games.

The Lions' other losses were to Alabama, 24-13 in the second game of the season, and at Syracuse, where they were routed, 48-21.

The Irish, meanwhile, are coming off a big win over Alabama last Saturday. Holtz' squad earned a 37-6 triumph over the Crimson Tide behind a big-play offense and swarming defense.

But Beaver Stadium has never been a fun place to play for the Irish. Notre Dame has never won in the three contests between the teams there.

"That's a very difficult place to go up and play in," Holtz said. "A lot of people go there with great expectations and come away awfully disappointed."

Notre Dame's offense

vs.

Penn State's defense

Penn State's defense did not allow Pittsburgh and Division-1A rushing leader Craig Heyward into the end zone in last Saturday's 10-0 loss. The only points it gave up were on a 44-yard field goal, as the Panthers sealed the win with a 69-yard interception return in the fourth quarter.

Coach Joe Paterno's Lions have had similar problems as the Irish this season, with injuries forcing 10 different starting lineups in as many games.

Senior inside linebackers Trey Bauer and Pete Giftopoulos are two of the team's top tacklers on a defense that starts seven to eight seniors.

Sophomore defensive back Brian Chizmar leads the team in tackles with 63, but his counterparts in the secondary have been having some problems with injuries lately.

The Lion defense has allowed an average of 112.1 rushing and 224.1 passing yards per game.

Those numbers would seem to indicate that the Irish could have some success going to the air against Penn State. But anyone who has watched Notre Dame play since Tony Rice took over as starting quarterback in the fifth game of the season knows that Holtz likes to keep the ball on the ground.

The Irish are averaging 274.7 yards rushing, and if they hang on will reach their best mark in that category since 1974. Meanwhile, their 137.7-yard passing average is the lowest since 1980.

"Tony is passing the ball better and better each week," said Holtz, who might have to put Rice's arm to the test if the Irish ground game is having trouble.

The multiple-back, multiple-set Notre Dame running attack has been potent in the five-game Irish win streak. Tailback Mark Green has rushed for more than 100 yards in each of the previous weeks, and broke one for a 74-yard touchdown against Alabama. Freshman Ricky Watters got in on the act with a 75-yard touchdown of his own minutes later.

Of course the primary threat to Penn State will be Heisman Trophy candidate Tim Brown at flanker. Brown does everything for the Irish offense, and will be looking to strengthen his hold on the Heisman with strong games in the final two weeks of the regular season.

Penn State's offense

vs.

Notre Dame's defense

Last week it was the Tide's Bobby Humphrey the Irish had to stop. This week it's Blair Thomas.

The Penn State tailback already has gained an even 1,200 yards on the year, the third-best one-year total in Nittany Lion history behind former greats Lydell Mitchell and John Cappelletti.

"There's no way we can shut off a Blair Thomas, because he's just so good and so quick," Holtz said. "And it's just not the nature of our defense to put 11 people up on the line. We'll just have to continue to do the things we've done in the past."

"We've had good success against the great backs this year."

The Lions have had good success when Thomas breaks the 100-yard barrier this season. They sport a 7-0 record in those games.

Senior signal-caller Matt Knitzer will be trying to rebound from a dismal 7-of-29 completion ratio for 126 yards last week. He was sacked twice, hurried often by an aggressive Pitt defense and threw two interceptions, one of which was returned 69 yards for the touchdown that put the game out of reach.

Seven seniors start in their last home game for the Penn State offense.

Notre Dame's defense was impressive in last Saturday's drubbing of Alabama, allowing only a pair of field goals and coming up with big play after big play to thwart Crimson Tide drives in the second half.

Junior inside linebacker Ned Bolcar is having a great year with 87 tackles to lead the team, while senior outside linebacker Cedric Figaro and junior inside linebacker Wes Pritchett have 49 apiece.

The Irish defense has had trouble with injuries all year, but will be aided Saturday by the return of junior free safety Corny Southall. Southall suffered ligament damage in Notre Dame's loss to Pittsburgh, and ran a few plays in the Alabama game a week ago in his first action since the injury.

The story all year has been stop Thomas, and you can stop the Lions.

PEERLESS PROGNOSTICATORS

Each week, the Observer sports staff, a random student picked by the sports editor and some well-known figure in the Notre Dame community predict the outcome of the week's major college football games. Records are compiled as to how each person does against the spread. In other words, it isn't enough to pick the winner of a given game. The person must pick the winner and give the underdog points. Home team is in CAPS.

Beaux Arts Bash

accent writer

The Architecture Club invites all Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students to come to the Beaux Arts Ball being held this Saturday, November 21st, from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. at the Architecture Building. This masquerade dance is the first of the two balls that are sponsored by the architecture department each year. Live entertainment will be provided by the band The Bottom Line.

The architecture balls are the only club sponsored masquerade dances on campus. As in past years, costumes worn to the dance are expected to be extremely elaborate. Many students spend weeks considering their costume, though they may wait until Saturday morning to construct it.

This semester's dance is sponsored by the second and fourth year architecture students. In the spring, another ball will be sponsored by the second and fifth year A.E. students. The third year A.E. majors hold their own ball in Rome during their year abroad.

Although students can bring dates to this dance, many people go stag. Some go with friends. Others try to meet new people there. But everyone goes to check out all the outrageous costumes.

The dance is not restricted to Arkies alone. All classes (even freshmen) are invited, as well as students from every major.

Tickets cost $4 and can still be purchased at the dining halls or from any Architecture student. Even though there are 400 tickets available, they generally sell out, so students are advised to purchase them early.

As John Kirk, a fourth year A.E. major from Grace Hall says: "Everyone should come. It's a blast!"

Slouching to Bethlehem

The best lack all conviction / While the worst are full of passionate intensity." Shakespeare wrote: "The devil can cite Scripture for his own purpose," and the same can be said of Yeats' "Second Coming." Somebody has described Greta Garbo this way: that if you sin with her in your imagination, you have to congratulate yourself on your impeccable good taste." Something comparable could be said of Willie Yeats's poetry: if, in a fit of pretentiousness, you quote it, you have to be pleased with your excellent taste in choosing something so highbrow.

Germany, when the Final Solution was being discussed, didn't the architects of the death camps wonder at the evil logic which was leading them to do the devil's work for him? Didn't any of them throw up their hands in horror at the mad project that they were undertaking in such an efficient way?

Do not Christians in 1987 hear of evils that are so mindlessly mischievous that they wonder why society protects them: the sex shops on 42nd street, for example, where the air is thin with decadence; some of them were opened, walk, night or day; they hide behind locked doors, yet the crazies still get in to brutalize them. Do Yeats's lines come short of the mark: "Things fall apart; the center cannot hold; / Mere anarchy is loosed upon the world, / The blood-dimmed tide is loosed, and everywhere / The ceremony of innocence is drowned."

You can disregard Yeats: he has, by now, been quoted and misquoted, to the point of triteness. You can write me off as one who has forgotten how to get any fun out of life, although in truth, I'm not as intense as all that, no prophet living off locusts and wild-honey. You can mock the paternalism that wants to warn students against the hostility of a dog-eat-dog world. Facing its cold and darkness, they have nothing to fear but fear itself. No one out there is going to eat them alive, certainly not the devil as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, as St. Paul so mythologically imagined. After four years of Sunday Masses, N.D. grads know they have a duty to help the weak and defend the innocent against the indifference of the rich and strong who have sworn an allegiance to the anti-Christ.

In a season of task forces, would a summit meeting of all those carrying on ministries --official and unofficial--be out of order? Ideological wars are going on; each side is trying to enlist loyal students, and the newspaper propaganda is only a little short of libelous. It has been said of the Irish that they are a fair people who never speak well of one another. How could Dr. Johnson know so much about the Fightin' Irish of Notre Dame?

Maybe the meeting could take the form of a dance on the penthouse of the Memorial Library. Maybe it could be sponsored by the Architects as an extension of the Beaux-Arts Ball? The theme could be: "It ain't necessarily so," as in the song, "The things that you're liable / to read in the Bible" (a euphemism for the Observer) . . . "It ain't necessarily so." Costumes would be worn, with masks off at midnight. Everyone could come as members of the devil's party without knowing it, as Milton was said to be when he wrote Paradise Lost. Those who read in their bible the devil's a villain might find it ain't necessarily so.

"...Somewhere in sands of the desert / A shape with lion body and the head of a man, / A gaze blank and pitiless as the sun, / Is moving...what rough beast, its hour come round at last, / Slouches toward Bethlehem to be born?"

Shelley starts a poem: "I met a traveller from an antique land . . . / Who said: Two vast and trunkless legs of stone / Stand in the desert. Near them on the sand, / Half sunk, a shattered visage lies."

When pride hardens the face and turns the heart to stone as

In a poem about pride by Shelley, am I not like that shape with lion body and head of man, the image of the beast, full of passionate intensity?

Is this not pretentious, like the intemperate apocalyptic imagery with which the University was attacked for its policy of selective divestment in South Africa. The Scholastic article read: You are neither hot nor cold; therefore I will vomit thee out of my mouth." Does Notre Dame deserve that severe censure?

Listen! Anti-Christ is out there, not very far away; but we don't need Yeats or the Bible to give us the word; Joan Rivers will do. "Shall we talk?" she asks. At a summit meeting, shall we not talk, in plain sight of each other, so one party can see that the other party doesn't have cloven hooves? In this Christian community, shall not men and women of good will talk to each other-not necessarily to agree or to forget their differences, but talk, to hear at least what the other is saying, with no time out for snarling? Shall we talk, before more people get their feelings hurt, and innocent people leave the campus with hatred in their hearts for other people of all stripes who are really deeply Christian in their outlooks? Unless we talk, how shall we avoid doing the devil's work for him more efficiently than he could do it in any gross incarnation as Yeats's rough beast?

Father Robert Griffin

Letters to a Lonely God

A lot of name-calling goes on among us, much of it passionately intense. Who is it aimed at, if not the good guys lacking all conviction? For every public debate, in a newspaper or newsletter, are there not a hundred discussions going on in the University? How many campus gurus do we have, working to get the attention of whoever will listen? Do not teachers use their classroom time to attack abuses, inside or outside Notre Dame? Do not rectors, in the privacy of their dorms, carry on campaigns to make up for the shortcomings of a Notre Dame education? The rectors and teachers are engaged in a work of ministry (or parenting) which obligates them to speak their minds and consciences. Who would want them to do otherwise?

Yeats's poem continues: "Surely some revelation is at hand; / Surely the Second Coming is at hand." Imagery so apocalyptic could apply to any age. Is it hysterical to wonder if this decade of history is threatened by evil that looks like reason that has gone rabidly wild? In Hitler's according to the Times, with financial aid from the city, anxious to give a hand up to small businesses. There used to be sweat shops in China, where children were fed opium, to prevent their feeling hunger-pangs. If such places are all out of business now, how about the school yards in the ghettos where pushers make a living from selling drugs to ten-year-olds? All of us have catalogued scenarios of human beings undergoing destruction, which serve us as examples of what hell must be like. What motivates the predators, indifferent to the ruination of souls? Are they indifferent to the graces that could keep them human? Have they lived so long in a climate of evil that they have become, without noticing it, moral degenerates? Are there Frankensteins whose manipulation of science has driven them mad? Are there hedonists who have forgotten that pleasure must be subject to moral restraints?

This is a rotten century, and it's getting worse; consider the mass murders, the child-abuse cases, the wastelands in any city where old people fear to

Must-see movies

EUROPEAN VACATION

Fri/Sat Engineering Auditorium 7, 9 and 11p.m.

Chevy Chase and Beverly D'Angelo reprise their roles in this sequel to "National Lampoon's Family Vacation." In this wild, farcical comedy, the family heads overseas, only to encounter rude and arrogant foreigners, weird food, unpleasant accommodations, and disagreeable weather.

THERESE

Fri Annenberg Auditorium 7:30 and 9:45 p.m.

A probable contender for this year's best-picture Oscar, this fine film tells the story of Therese Martin, a Carmelite nun who died at the age of 25, having seldom left her convent. Canonized less than thirty years after her death, Therese led a life of intense spirituality and faith. The story of her love affair with Christ is seen through brief and limpid episodes baring the masochism, eroticism, and purity at the heart of Therese's life.

PARTY GIRL

Mon Annenberg Auditorium 7 p.m.

Directed by Nicolas ("Rebel Without a Cause") Ray, "Party Girl" is a gangster epic which takes place in the mob-dominated world of Chicago during the 1920s. Ray's vivid style decorates this very watchable story of a woman (Cyd Charisse) who becomes the prize package fought over by a lawyer and a vicious gangster.

DARK VICTORY

Mon Annenberg Auditorium 9 p.m.

Betty Davis stars as a Long Island socialite dying from a brain tumor and going blind in the process. George Brent is the surgeon who falls in love with her while she is under his care. This classic tear-jerker won Academy Award nominations for Davis and the film in the year "Gone With the Wind" swept the ceremony.

DESPERATELY SEEKING SUSAN

Tues Annenberg Auditorium 7 and 9 p.m.

Rosanna Arquette plays a bored suburban housewife who exchanges identities with a free-wheeling New Wave drifter (Madonna) through a series of bizarre coincidences. This hysterically funny movie has all the elements of a '30s screwball comedy while retaining a hip lower Manhattan flavor. The verve and panache of the cast channeled by the deft direction of Susan Seidelman enables the plot to negotiate some wildly complicated corners.

RUNNING MAN

University Park East Cinemas

Set in the future, "The Running Man" follows the adventures of an ex-cop (Arnold Schwarzenegger) who is falsely accused of murder and sent to prison. In jail he is given the opportunity to become a contestant on a high-stakes TV game show open only to convicts. Players are chased by merciless killers while attempting to win their freedom.

Local

Singing with the South Bend Symphony Orchestra this Saturday at 8:15 p.m. is soprano Susan Dunn. The internationally recognized Dunn has performed Alda at La Scala in Milan, worked with the New York Philharmonic and appeared in Carnegie Hall. Operatic works from Beethoven, Verdi, and Puccini will be presented, as well as Dvorak's New World Symphony.

Folk rock greats Peter, Paul, and Mary will be in concert tonight at the Holiday Star Theatre in Merrillville. Showtime is 8 p.m. and tickets are $16.95.

The Festival of Trees, an annual event benefitting a children's hospital fund, will feature displays of Professionally decorated Christmas trees as well as crafts and holiday decorations this weekend at the Century Center.

On campus

At 7:30 p.m. tonight the Notre Dame hockey team will take on St. Thomas in the JACC.

Saint Mary's professor and playwright, Julie Jensen, directs the world premiere of her latest work, "Thursday's Child," tonight, tomorrow and Sunday. Performances are in O'Laughlin Auditorium at 8:10 p. (Sunday matinee at 3:00 p.m.)

The College Comedy Tour '87 will play Stepan Center tonight at 8 p.m. Comedians Larry "Bud" Melman, Rita Rudner, and Emo Phillips will perform. Student tickets are $7 and can be purchased at The Cellar (basement of LaFortune).

The Notre Dame-Penn State game will be televised nationally by CBS (channel 22) beginning at 12:10 p.m. tomorrow

Last Tuesday Bill Hanna and Joe Barbera threw a 25th birthday party for their cartoon characters, The Jetsons. The day was pronounced "Jetsons Day" by the city of Los Angeles. Corbin Bemson of TVs "L.A. Law" presided over the ceremonies. . . . The PBS children's series "Sesame Street" opens its 19th season this week with some new characters. Alice Snuffleupagus, the 2-year-old baby sister of Big Bird's pal will become a regular, as will muppet Meryl Sheep, an eastern European acting teacher. Humans characters Maria and Luis will be married at the season's end. . . . John Cleese and Kevin Kline are in London shooting "A Fish Called Wanda" together. In the comedy, Cleese plays an eccentric English attorney defending gangster Otto West (Kline). . . . In Elat, Israel Sylvester Stallone was nearly killed on the set of "Rambo III." While filming a stunt in which a helicopter buzzes Stallone's character, smoke and flames around the actor caused the 'copter's pilot to misjudge his distance from the ground and come within a few inches of the actor's head. Stallone ducked in time and escaped unharmed. . . . The release of "Shy People," the movie which got Barbara Hershey the best-actress award from the Cannes Film Festival, has been delayed. Instead of the planned national release in December, there will be a limited run in Los Angeles to qualify Hershey for the 1987 Academy Awards, and the national release will take place sometime in 1988. . . . Linda Ellerbee has sold the rights to her "Our World" television program to PBS. The critically acclaimed historical news show lasted only briefly on CBS due to its tough timeslot: it was on Thursday nights against the popular NBC sitcom lineup. The show will be re-titled and begin airing in January. . . . CBS is making a movie about the love affair between Edward the sixth of England and American divorcee Wallis Simpson which resulted in the abdication of the king. Jane Seymour and Anthony Andrews play the lovers in the production, now shooting in London.

Graff advances into Slims semifinals

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Top-seeded Steffi Graf advanced to the semifinals of the Virginia Slims Tennis Championships Thursday when No. 7 Helena Sukova retired in the second set because of a neck injury.

Sukova cried in pain as she left the court trailing 6-2, 2-0.

"She said she couldn't turn her head anymore," Graf said following the 40-minute match. "She was having problems serving and with her forehand."

A tournament official said Sukova had muscle spasms in her neck that caused pain in her left shoulder.

Graf has now won 73 of 75 matches this year.

Her opponent in the semifinals will be Sylvia Hanika of West Germany, who beat Raffaella Reggi of Italy 6-2, 4-6, 6-0.

Hanika, who upset Chris Evert in the first round, won the battle of unseeded players by taking advantage of Reggi's weak serve.

Reggi double-faulted 11 times and won only one of 22 points on her second serve. In the first set, she lost 16 of 18 points while serving.

After splitting the first two sets, Hanika blitzed Reggi in a final set that included several long games.

"She played very well in the second set, and I lost a little bit of my concentration," said Hanika, who hasn't won a tournament this year. "In the third set, I fought my way back into the match."

Reggi had three break points in the first game of the final set, but Hanika came back to win the game with a backhand volley.

UCLA, West prep for season

Associated Press

Walt Hazzard, who was there at the beginning of John Wooden's UCLA basketball dynasty, know he hasn't started another long reign by the Bruins. But he's not discounting that prospect.

"We like what we've achieved," said Hazzard who has a record of 61-33 in four years with UCLA. "But we know that this is not enough for the coaches who come into this room (the Bruins' coach's office)."

"The coaches that come into this room, we want all of it. We don't know how long it's going to take to get us there, but we want to press on until we get there."

Hazzard, a co-captain of the Wooden-led 1964 Bruins that began a run of ten consecutive NCA titles, has made progress as the UCLA coach.

UCLA will try to become the first repeat winner of the Pac-10 since Oregon State in 1980-81-82. But the Bruins will have to do it without Reggie Miller, Jack Haley and Montel Hatcher, all of whom have departed.

Seven-foot sophomore Greg Foster and ball-hawking junior Jerome 'Pooh' Richardson will be called on to lead Hazzard's UCLA squad.

While many of the Pac-10's teams have lost several key players, Arizona figures to be the team to beat by virtue of its experience - the Wildcats have six regulars returning.

Leading the way for the Wildcats will be senior guard Steve Kerr, who suffered a severe knee injury in 1986 and missed all of last season.

Also back are 6-8 junior forward Sean Elliott, the Wildcats' leading scorer at 19.3 points per game, and outstanding sophomore forward Anthony Cook.

In a recent ballot of the conference coaches, Arizona was picked as the preseason favorite for the title, followed by UCLA, Southern Cal, Stanford, California, Oregon State, Arizona State, Oregon, Washington and Washington State.

The Pacific Coast Athletic Association is, for a change, expected to be more than a one-team race this season.

But Nevada-Las Vegas' Runnin' Rebels, although they lost three starters off their team that was ranked No. 1 for most of last season, still are slight favorites to take their seventh consecutive PCAA title.

Five of Coach Jerry Tarkanian's top seven players used up their eligibility last year, when the Rebels lost to Indiana in the NCAA national semifinals to finish 37-2.

Tarkanian is down to nine scholarship players, including returning starting forwards

Gerald Paddio (13.1 points, 4.3 rebounds) and Jarvis Basnight (9.2, 4.8).

San Jose State, led by Pan American Games standout Ricky Berry, and Cal State-Fullerton are expected to be UNLV's chief challengers for the PCAA crown.

In the Rocky Mountains, senior forward Fennis Dembo and the Wyoming Cowboys of the Western Athletic Conference hope last season's success is a sign of bigger things to come. The Cowboys went 24-10 and posted NCAA tournament upsets of Virginia and UCLA before a loss to UNLV in the West Regional semifinals.

New Mexico posted its best record ever only to be left out of the NCAA tourney. The Lobos lost to Oregon State in the National Invitational Tournament and finished 25-10.

Others expected to challenge for the title will be Texas-El Paso (25-7) and Brigham Young (21-11), which finished first and second in the regular-season standings and earned NCAA tournament berths.

Walk-ons Steve Nicgorski and Chris Nanni provided the finishing touches to the runaway win.

Nicgorski entered with 4:58 and Nanni came in four seconds later. After missing the front end of a one-and-one, Nanni canned a 19-footer. He also hit the final points on a driving layup.

Nicgorski brought what remained of the crowd to its feet with his now-patented one-arm-extended free throw style. He made four-for-five from the line.

ND hosts Tommies

By PETE SKIKO
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame hockey team faces off against St. Thomas this weekend for a pair of non-conference games at the Joyce ACC.

The Irish have gotten off to an auspicious start this new season, sitting atop the American Collegiate Hockey Association's standings board with a 3-1-2 record, 2-0-2 in the conference. Head Coach Ric Schafer is not surprised with the team's success thus far.

"We're not exactly blowing people away," said Schafer, in his debut season as head coach of the Irish. "But with the way we're playing and the way we seem to improve from week to week, we'll be able to at least stay with the teams we play."

"Everyone's got a real good attitude, and we go out thinking we're going to win. The defense and passing are improving and we've been able to come from behind pretty well."

St. Thomas will probably pose more than a mild threat to the recently winning ways of the Irish, however. Schafer's all-time record against the Tommies from his seven years as head coach of Alaska-Fairbanks is a paltry 1-5, although the Irish are 7-5-1 overall against the St. Paul, Minn., school.

"I know that they're one of the top Division III schools around," said Schafer of St. Thomas. "And I know that they've given me fits every time one of my teams has come up against them. But other than that, all I know is that they've played one scrimmage this year against Minnesota's junior varsity. But we'll go in well prepared. If we play like we have, I think we can do very well."

The Irish have drawn over 1,000 fans for each of their three home games this season. To encourage even better attendance, the hockey team is sponsoring a dancefree-skate in the JACC immediately following Saturday night's game. Admission is free with a ticket stub from the game. A donation of two dollars will be asked of those who will only attend the party. All are welcome.

and the last three years with Off-Campus.

"This team was as good as any I've played on," he said. "The O.C. teams don't take the games too seriously so it's a lot of fun."

The victory was dedicated to Hooper senior Ed Starinchak, who injured his knee in Monday's 3-0 victory over top-seeded Holy Cross. Starinchak, an offensive standout all season, was in surgery last night while his teammates battled Zahm.

But even in defeat, the Zahm squad can still hold its head high. They finished the season at 8-3 and managed to reach the final and give the Hoobers all they could handle in the championship, even though they were the sixth-seeded team in postseason action.

"We had a real good season. I think the team exceeded all its expectations," said Zahm freshman Kevin Keeley, one of the team's leading scorers. "Off-Campus just had a few more chances than we did."

So what's next for the Hoobers? Can they make it four in a row next year?

"It should be another pretty good year," predicted Thompson. "We'll have a few players back and a few more will move off campus too. But for now we just want to enjoy this season and our celebration bash."

Knight has Hoosiers back near the top

Associated Press

BLOOMINGTON -Give Bob Knight five guys and a ball and he'll win, the thinking goes. Give him three guys back from a national championship team and he'll be downright dangerous.

For the third time Knight will be defending the NCAA basketball crown. For the first time his championship team hasn't been decimated by graduation or injury.

The Hoosiers, Notre Dame's opponent in the regular season opener for the Irish on December 1 in Bloomington, have one major detractor -Coach Knight.

"No," says Knight when asked if his team will give him a second consecutive NCAA title and his fourth overall.

"We don't even know for sure who is going to play where and how we're going to use them."

But that's an old song from Knight. Right down to last year's winning basket, he denied that the team was capable of capturing the national championship.

When Indiana defeated Syracuse 74-73 at New Orleans, Knight joined UCLA's John Wooden and Kentucky's Adolph Rupp as the only coaches who have won the NCAA title more than twice.

Knight has a solid nucleus, including three starters from last year's 30-4 team.

Top among the returnees is guard Keith Smart, voted the outstanding player in the Final Four after scoring 17 of his 21 points in the second half of the championship game -including the winning basket with four seconds to play.

The 6-foot-1 senior, a junior college transfer last season, could be asked to beef up last season's average of 11.2 points a game.

"We're still waiting to see exactly what we're going to do with Smart," says Knight. "I don't know if we're going to be able to play him as a primary scorer or not. I have some reservations about that after three weeks of practice."

"I'm not sure if Smart can make the adjustment to pick up the slack from the loss of (Steve) Alford. It's one of the big questions we face as we go into the season."

Center Dean Garrett and forward Rick Calloway are the other returning starters. The 6-10 Garrett, another junior college transfer, averaged 11.4 points, 8.5 rebounds and 2.7 blocks per game. Calloway, a 6-6 junior, contributed 12.6 points and 4.3 rebounds.

Alford, the two-time All-American and the school's career scoring leader, and forward Daryl Thomas are the two missing starters. Alford averaged 22 points and shot 53 percent from 3-point range. Thomas averaged 15.7 points and 5.7 rebounds, shooting 53.8 from the field.

"This is a time of the year that I always enjoy, taking the players and molding them into the type of unit that can win the Big Ten championship," said Knight. "That remains our first goal. Everything after that is gravy."

It'll be a tough goal this season. The Big Ten has four teams in the top 11 in the preseason poll.

Knight, 366-119 in 16 years at Indiana and 468-169 overall, anticipates that his team won't have any trouble concentrating on its goals.

"We've got kids that know we just didn't lay waste to everybody in the NCAA tournament and we lost a couple of players that were awfully important to that team's season," Knight said.

Knight failed to win the conference championship after his two previous national titles. His 1975-76 championship squad had its top six players move into the NBA after finishing 32-0. The Hoosiers were 16-11 and sixth in the conference the following season.

The 1981-82 team that won the national title with a 26-9 mark lost Ray Tolbert to graduation, Isiah Thomas to the NBA via hardship and Landon Turner to an auto accident that left him paralyzed. That team finished 19-10 and placed second in the conference.

"You always have a problem in getting kids to concentrate from day-to-day as effectively as you want and I don't think it's necessarily a result of anything that happened the year before," Knight said. "We would have the same problem if we were coming off a season where we were trying to rebound and be a better team."

The intense, demanding Knight puts the responsibility for the upcoming season squarely on his shoulders.

Mark Stevenson lays in two of his 17 points in last night's win over Zadar. Notre Dame's next opponent, Indiana, is preparing to defend its NCAA title. See story at left.

For the past two days, the Knights of Columbus has presented its essence and its commitments. We talked about our beginnings, our dedication to the Church, and to Her poor and forgotten. We talked of the four guiding principles of Charity, Unity, Fraternity, and Patriotism. If you are a male, age 18 or older, and dedicated to the Church and Her needs, then you ought to join the Knights of Columbus.

The question is not "Who are the Knights?"
but

"Why aren't I one already?"

If you would like to join or just want more information, there will be a special presentation at 7:00 pm tonight at the Council home (by the Bookstore). Bring your friends, roommates, dormmates--it will not last more than 20 minutes. Interviews will follow. The actual First Degree initiation is Sunday, November 22 at 2:30pm. Please stop by and ask about our work or call 239-7018 and we will talk to you. We need every willing man out there!

Layton making big impact

By GREG GUFFEY
Sports Writer

Irish wrestling coach Fran McCann knew freshman Todd Layton would be an integral part of this year's squad, but he didn't expect the contributions to come so early in the season.

Layton debuted in grand style last weekend, winning the Michigan State Invitational at 150 pounds. Layton downed Mark Pflug in the finals in helping the Irish to the team title, their first in a 10-year history.

"We didn't know what to expect from him," McCann said. "He really showed a lot of composure and maturity. He showed he's going to be a winner."

Layton, while not completely pleased with his performance, was satisfied with the end results.

"I just went out and wrestled to my ability," Layton said. "I feel pretty confident about my skills, and it was a good way to start off. But I think I can wrestle better than last weekend. There's no doubt in my mind that I will have to improve."

Layton credits his quick rise to contention to a number of helpful people. He says the upperclassmen and the entire coaching staff help the freshman become familiar with wrestling on the college level. "You wouldn't believe how much I've learned in the last three months just being around the coaching staff," said Layton. "I have a lot of respect for them. You couldn't ask for a better group of upperclassmen if you're a freshman. Those guys are always in there helping you."

Layton's early success should not be a surprise as he was the epitome of a successful wrestler throughout his high school career. He amassed a 124-2-1 record in his four years of varsity wrestling in high school, including four state championships. He also competed in the junior nationals each summer, finishing fourth last season at 154 pounds.

Those outstanding high school stats prompted collegiate offers from across the Midwest. Those schools that courted Layton included Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Missouri, and Nebraska. While he was interested in Layton during his high school career, McCann became sold after watching him in the junior nationals.

"We take a lot of stock in kids that do well in the junior nationals," McCann said. "In wrestling, we have the advantage of seeing them at the high school, regional and national level. There a lot of state champions in the country. We take a lot of stock in the kids that are willing to sacrifice their summer."

While Layton is still adjusting to the rigors of college wrestling, he has taken time to set some goals for the season. "I'd like to place in all of the tournaments and make it to the NCAA's," he said. "A long term goal is to become an all-american."

With the first-place team finish at Michigan State coming off a 1-11 record last season, McCann says the attitude of the team is unbelievable, and he can see only good days ahead for the team and the program.

"This is the first time we've had an upperclass since we took over the program three years ago," he said. "You can really see the leadership."

The St. Louis Open will be a big test for the Irish with such powerhouses as Oklahoma, Wisconsin and Oklahoma State competing. Defending Irish champions Chris Geneser and Jerry Durso will return to defend their first-place titles.

Trivia buffs win trip

Special to the Observer

"How many World Series were four game sweeps in the 1960's?"

Could you answer this question? If so, you may have had a chance to spend an exotic week in sunny Orlando while your friends are celebrating an Irish victory in Dallas.

Three contestants of the Notre Dame Campus Wide Sports Trivia Challenge managed to answer questions like this last night in the West Point Room in Lafortune Student Center. Paul Ursino of Alumni Hall, Mark Lavery of Grace Hall, and Derek Mohr of Stanford earned the right to represent Notre Dame in the Super Bowl of Sports Trivia. Ted Woodward of Fisher Hall finished fourth and will serve as the alternate.

The three winners will compete as a team against 31 other colleges from January 2-9 in Orlando Florida. The Hall Presidents Council, The Office of Student Activities, and OCC Productions sponsored this event.

Members of the trivia team will participate in contests that will be taped for airing on cable television. Each of the six finalists finished either first or second in preliminary rounds held Wednesday. All six were asked 30 questions covering various sports topics ranging from baseball to yachting.

"I am pretty psyched to go spend a week in the sun and get out of this cold weather," exclaimed an exuberant Ursino who was crowned Campus Sports King. "That question about how many feathers are on a shuttlecock (badminton birdie) almost stumped me."

Incidentally, there are fourteen to sixteen feathers on a shuttlecock.

Irish dive into busy weekend

By PAT KEARNS
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame men's and women's swim teams are looking ahead to back-to-back meets this weekend. The Irish face Ferris State Bulldogs tonight at the JACC at 7 p.m. and they travel to Wisconsin-Milwaukee Saturday to face the Panthers at 1 p.m.

Both the men's and women's teams are 0-1, following losses to Alabama last weekend. Irish head coach Tim Welsh, who handles both the men's and women's teams, is hoping for a successful performance from his squads today and tomorrow.

"We are clearly looking for a couple of wins," said Welsh.

The Irish men are going into the Ferris State meet with a 5-2 career record versus the Bulldogs, but Welsh does not expect them to roll over and play dead tonight.

"Their men's team improved dramatically from my first to second year coaching here," Welsh said. "Their team is on the move, and we expect a good meet from them."

However, Welsh does not expect too much of a challenge from the Ferris State women's team, which is in its first year.

"Their women's team is in its first year," he said. "It will be difficult for them to be balanced. They will have some areas that are not as strong as others."

Going into Wisconsin-Milwaukee Saturday, the Irish swimmers have a more difficult task at hand.

Wisconsin-Milwaukee has a history of fine swimming teams, and the Irish men have yet to beat Wisconsin-Milwaukee in five attempts. Both Panther swim teams finished in the top ten in the nation last year. To top it off, the Irish swim teams will be fighting fatigue after its Friday night meet and leaving early Saturday morning for Milwaukee. The Panther teams will be well-rested, coming off a Tuesday meet.

But despite these disadvantages, Coach Welsh expects a good performance by the Irish swimmers.

"We're going to Wisconsin-Milwaukee to swim fast, not to say we're tired because we swam last night," said Welsh. "We think we line up well with Wisconsin-Milwaukee at first place. Our plan is to win the close matchups at first and to take as many of the other places as we can."

The Irish swim teams are getting a tough workout this weekend in an attempt to prepare for the upcoming National Catholic Championships coming up in the first week in December.

The tournament, which will be held at Notre Dame, will be a difficult challenge for both the men's and women's teams. They will be swimming against tough opponents for three mornings and evenings in a row.

Coach Welsh thinks the Irish are ready for their upcoming tests, citing an improvement in depth over last year's Irish teams.

"We think we are faster, more balanced, and we cover a meet program better than last year. A team can score three places in 11 events, and we feel that this year we're in better to score in all 33."

The Observer / Suzanne Poch

The men's and women's swim teams will have a busy weekend, hosting Ferris State tonight at Rolfs Aquatic Center before heading to Wisconsin-Milwaukee tomorrow. Pat Kearns previews the meets at left.

Rivers paces Irish past Zadar, 120-81

By RICK RIETBROCK
Assistant Sports Editor

It was merely an exhibition, but the Notre Dame basketball team showed fans exactly what to expect this season.

David Rivers. A lot of David Rivers.

The senior guard, recently named an AP first-team All-America selection, put on a show and finished with 31 points in leading the Irish to an easy 120-81 win over an over-matched Zadar club of Yugoslavia.

On Notre Dame's summer trip to Yugoslavia, Zadar defeated a Rivers-less Irish squad.

Rivers had four assists and 14 points, including two three-point baskets, in the first 10:07 of the first half to give the Irish a 34-10 lead.

"I thought the way we started, with David in the first five minutes, that's the way he's going to have to do it for us all year," said Irish head coach Digger Phelps. "He makes other people play better."

The list of those 'other' people is a long one.

In the first half, fellow starters Mark Stevenson, Gary Voce, Scott Paddock and Jamere Jackson (who spent much of the game at point guard, allowing Rivers to play off-guard) helped Rivers give the Irish a 59-35 halftime bulge.

Stevenson and Voce hit layups off Rivers' passes, and then Rivers hit his first of five three-pointers and a coast-to-coast layup off a pass-fake to give Notre Dame a quick nine-zero lead.

After a Zadar hoop, Rivers and Stevenson buried jumpers to make it 13-2, Irish.

It was that kind of night.

"I thought Mark Stevenson was in a pretty good groove," Phelps said. "I thought Voce and Paddock pounded the boards well and Jamere Jackson did a pretty good job running the team."

Zadar had trouble getting good shots most of the game. Notre Dame's pressure man-to-man defense caused several turnovers and the Irish also dominated the boards, 56-28.

Notre Dame also shot 60 percent from the field, compared to Zadar's 45 percent.

Stevenson, who had 13 of his 17 points in the first half, said Notre Dame's showing was encouraging.

"It feels good to play someone other than your teammates," he said. "We played pretty well for the first game. There are little things we have to get better at, but we'll work on it."

Freshmen Tim Singleton and Kevin Ellery, and sophomore Keith Robinson prevented Zadar from making a game of it.

Singleton scored all six of his points in the second half, four on two breakaway dunks. Ellery scored 11 of his 17 points (six-for-six from the field) and pulled down seven of his eight rebounds and Robinson hit seven of his 11 points and yanked nine of his 12 rebounds in the second frame.

"It was kind of scary," Ellery said of his debut, leaving one to wonder what will come when he is confident. "I tried to be calm. I hit my first shot and started to feel comfortable after that."

Singleton said he was happy to observe the opening minutes before his first appearance.

"I was really comfortable," said the freshman. "I think it especially helped that I didn't start. It prevented some of the jitters."

Zadar was playing the seventh game of their nine-game United States tour. The club had beaten Valparaiso and lost to Loyola, St. Louis, Cleveland State, Kent State and Toledo before playing the Irish. The club will play Ball

OC takes IH soccer title, again

By ROB PIERCE
Sports Writer

Deja vu...?

No.

Just another 1-0 victory for the Off-Campus Hoobers over Zahm.

Deja vu...?

Wrong again.

Just a third consecutive campus championship for the Hooper interhall soccer team.

Last night on the frozen tundra of Moose Krause Memorial Stadium, the men's interhall soccer league season came to a close. And to no one's surprise, the Hoobers once again came away with the trophy.

"It sounds cocky, but we're not surprised with the season," said captain Dave Thompson. "We knew our team from the beginning: some used to play for Notre Dame; some played for us last year; and some played together at Flanner."

A goal by junior forward Dave Rulli of Off-Campus with only three minutes remaining in the contest was all the offense the Hoobers needed. Rulli took a pass at the top of the penalty box from fellow linemate Andy Shea and beat Zahm goalkeeper John Gisleon, who was playing injured, with the gamewinner.

The rest of the game was controlled by the Hooper defense - the mainstay for Off-Campus all season. Led by sweeper Ron Yaro, who scored the lone goal in the Hoobers 1-0 win over Zahm in the semifinals last week, and goalkeeper Pat Marschall, who finished the year with an outstanding 0.100 goals/game average, the Hoobers recorded their ninth shutout in ten games.

Credit is also due to the Off-Campus midfielders - Tom Bowsher, Jim McKeon, and Tom Keating. They dominated the middle throughout the game and kept the pressure on the Zahm goal.

Last night Bowsher concluded what may be an unprecedented feat in interhall competition. He finished his career with four championships - the first with Flanner

NCAA needs a football playoff system

If there was ever a week that illustrated all that is wrong with college football, this was the one.

First the bowls.

The controversy over whether the Irish should go to the Orange or Cotton Bowl adds yet more fuel to the fire of another great college football controversy - a playoff. It is time the NCAA instituted a playoff system similar to its great basketball tournament. Before the bowls get excited, relax, it can be done within the existing system.

The first thing needed is a method of selection. Forget the committee which selects the teams for the basketball tourney. That only raises more controversy. Irish head coach Lou Holtz suggested Tuesday that a computer should be used to rank teams. He suggested that it take a team's record, opponent's record and opponent's opponent's records into consideration. This seems fair enough. In fact, The USA Today prints the Sagarin computer rankings which show that the hated Hurricanes are the number-one team in the country. The Irish are sixth.

OK, so the computer ranks the teams. How many get to go? Let's say 16. It's an easy number to set up a bracket and lets in enough teams that no one should have a real beef about not making it in. Realistically, the numbers 17 to 20 teams in a poll don't have a shot at the title anyway. The next question is where they play. Former Notre Dame Athletic Director Gene Corrigan suggested using the current bowl structure. Fine. A 16-team tournament requires 15 games. Here's where matters get a little tricky.

Currently, there are 18 bowl games scheduled. Obviously, three have to be cut. OK, let's take an informal poll. When was the last time anybody out there saw any combination of the following bowls:

Dennis
Corrigan

Sports Editor

California, All-American or Freedom? It's safe to say they wouldn't be missed.

The 15 remaining bowls would still make money from television and would take on greater importance. The eight first-round games could be held at the Liberty, Aloha, Sun, Independence, Holiday, Gator, Bluebonnet and Hall of Fame Bowls. The quarterfinals could be held at the Cotton, Fiesta, Citrus and Peach Bowls. The Sugar and Orange Bowls would host the semis, and the Granddaddy of them all, the Rose Bowl, would hold the championship. Television and fans would love it.

The one drawback, except the fact that the egotists in charge of each bowl don't want to, is that it requires four extra weeks of the season, and takes athletes out of school around the time when most schools have finals. Well, push the opening of the season back a week and cut a game off the schedule.

This is only a suggestion, but the NCAA (Not Competent And Alert) has to do something (who am I kidding?). At the very least, push back the date for bowl bids. Let's see Notre Dame beat Miami. Then extend the bids, not before when there are still games to be played.

Ohio State's firing of Earle Bruce really pointed out what's wrong with college football. All the man did was compile the best record in the Big Ten over his tenure, including eight-straight bowl appearances. He has an off year and whammo, the Board of Trustees fires him - not the athletic director (who resigned in protest), but the Board of Trustees. When alumni and fans are doing the hiring and firing, look out, no job is safe.
