Doyle, Paese win student body election

By ERIC M. BERGAMO
Senior Staff Reporter

Tom Doyle and Mike Paese coasted to a convincing win in Thursday's run-off election for student body president over Steve Viz and Chris Boron, while Mark Chapman was elected District 3 student senator over Matt Thiel by the slim margin of 16 votes.

The official results were declared at 10:11 p.m. by Ombudsman co-director John Wilson.

Doyle won 20 out of 24 dorms, garnering 2,015 votes for 59.1 percent of the total votes cast. Viz captured 1,397 votes for 40.9 percent.

A total of 3,412 votes were cast in the election, less than the 3,711 votes counted Tuesday.

Doyle carried his home residence of Grace and also took the off-campus vote in his total. Viz took his home dorm of Flanner, along with Dillon, Howard and Sorin.

"We're very, very happy and we'd like to thank everybody who worked with us and all the student body for helping us and supporting us," Paese said.

"The greatest thing was the number of people we met," he added.

Chapman won 452 votes for 50.9 percent in his senate race while Thiel took 436 votes for 49.1 percent.

The senate vote was recounted three times before being declared official, Wilson said.

Chapman won four dorms in his race, sweeping home dorm of Fisher, and Thiel won two dorms, including home residence Dillon. In Pangborn and Carroll, the vote was even for both candidates.

The run-off election for student body president became necessary after Tuesday's election failed to give a majority over 50 percent to any of the nine tickets.

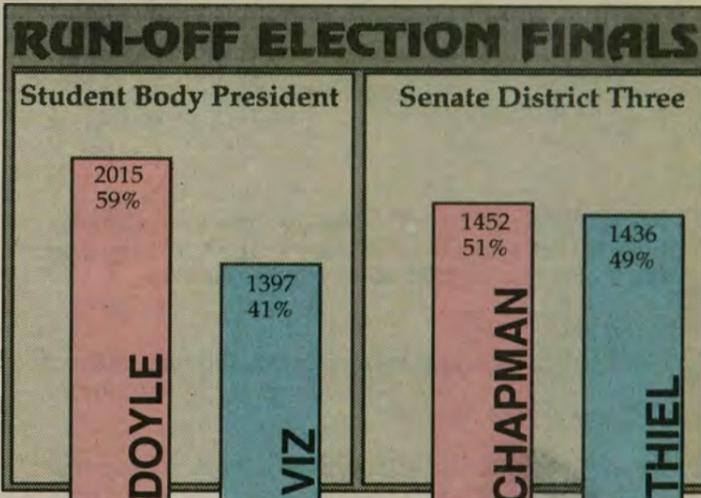

Doyle, with 1,041 votes, and Viz, with 698 votes, were the top two vote-getters in Tuesday's election.

Doyle said the win was "fantastic."

"We're elated," Doyle said, "we can't thank the people who worked with us enough."

Doyle and Paese said Viz was an "exemplary" candidate and thanked him and Boron "for a very fair race."

Paese also complimented

OBUD with running a smooth election.

Doyle and Paese will succeed current Student Body President Pat Cooke and Vice President Laurie Bink on April 1.

The next two months Doyle and Paese plan to organize their student cabinet and

Caller admits to kidnapping

TYRE, Lebanon - Moslem militiamen searched rain-drenched citrus groves and valley caves Thursday for Lt. Col. William Higgins, and their leaders threatened to go after his kidnappers unless the U.S. Marine is freed soon.

"We want Higgins back and we have no red line as far as his case is concerned," said Daoud Daoud of the moderate Shiite militia Amal, the dominant force around this ancient port.

U.N. peacekeeping troops and about 1,500 Amal militiamen virtually sealed off a 300-square-mile area.

An anonymous telephone caller said a previously unknown group carried out the abduction Wednesday just south of Tyre. He claimed Higgins, who commands U.N. truce observers in south Lebanon, is a CIA agent.

The abduction brings the number of foreign hostages in Lebanon to 25, including nine Americans. Most are believed held by pro-Iranian Shiite extremists, whose main Hezbollah militia has been challenging Amal's dominance in south Lebanon.

An Arabic-speaking man said in the telephone call to a Western news agency in Beirut that he represented the Islamic Revolutionary Brigades, and declared:

Democrat Babbitt, Republican Du Pont quit '88 race

Associated Press

Democrat Bruce Babbitt and Republican Pete du Pont fell by the presidential campaign wayside on Thursday, while Vice President George Bush said "I'm telling the truth" about GOP rival Bob Dole in his tough television commercials.

With one exception, the six Democratic survivors converged on Texas for a two-hour debate broadcast live on public television. Republicans Bush, Dole, Jack Kemp and Pat Robertson vied for support in Nevada's caucuses, a competition that drew little notice with delegate-rich primaries just around the corner.

Babbitt made his exit gracefully in a quip-filled Washington news conference. "Look, I'm not going to slash my throat if we don't raise taxes tomorrow," said the former Arizona governor, who had asked voters to stand up for a national sales tax to reduce the deficit.

Babbitt, who finished fifth in Iowa's caucuses last week and sixth in New Hampshire's primary on Tuesday, said the campaign was "the greatest joy of my entire public life." He praised all his former rivals but endorsed none of them, saying he would do what he could to aid the eventual winner of the Democratic nomination.

Du Pont, whose provocative ideas about fundamental change in Social Security and abolition of farm subsidies failed to attract much voter support, announced his withdrawal in a news conference in Wilmington, Del.

"The campaign has lowered its flag but the crusade continues to march," said the former governor and congressman. He said his ideas are right for the country and "they're coming to America sooner or later."

Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, hoping to emerge as the Democratic front-runner after Super Tuesday, said his rivals had taken positions that were out of the mainstream, and added he was the one who could lead the Democrats to victory in 1988.

"Dick Gephardt, for example, has changed one position after another . . . Jesse Jackson hasn't had a single day of ex-

Liberal education goals need consideration

Education has been a hot topic of late both within academia and in the presidential campaigns. Many ideas are being put forth to improve the nation's educational system, including such things as a much needed increase in funding, improvement in the quality of teaching, and a restructuring curriculum.

It is the last of these suggestions that is the most controversial. Many critics condemn public education for its failure to instill morals in the younger generation. The charge is that teaching has become prone to relativism and that this is somehow the ruin of the nation's future. Further complaints indict public schools and universities for being too concerned with careerism and narrow specialization.

What is called for is the return of a truly liberal education with a strong moral backing. Under most plans a broad, inter-disciplinary curriculum would be the basis for such a program. These would provide the student with a wide, coherent view of the human situation free from the wishy-washy relativism of the current specialized training in place today.

The presumption behind such an education often is that the student will come to know the True and the Beautiful within a complete circle of knowledge. And it is precisely this sort of presumption that forms the mystique of liberal education.

In my eight semesters here at Notre Dame I have taken a wide assortment of courses in a variety of disciplines. I have even chosen a major in liberal studies. And although the quality of teaching and the quality of materials here on campus are among the best available anywhere for any price, I am unconvinced that a liberal education either could or should provide the coherent and consistent sort of knowledge that many of these critics esteem.

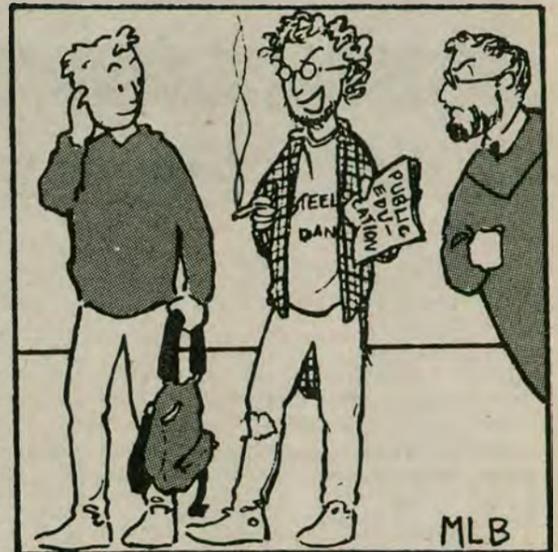

If liberal education does not provide the neat sort of answers and firm moral backings in a place like Notre Dame, then these outdated goals should be dropped and liberal education taken for the advantages it really offers.

The mystique of liberal education presupposes that taking courses in different departments of the University is not only possible but somehow coherent and consistent. Everything learned would make one's picture of the world ever more clear and complete.

Unfortunately, the University, in its academics, is not the happy sort of family that this mystique supposes, at least insofar as I have experienced and understood it. There is a wide disparity between the colleges and often even within single departments both in terms of what counts as learning and how further research should be conducted. This contributes anything but a unified view of what is true, what is moral, or even what is important.

Often there is a hostility between the different branches of learning as they compete for the best students, more faculty, and increased funding. The competition however, is not the sort in which there is understanding and respect between opponents. Quite possibly there will not even be dialogue between conflicting sides.

For instance, while operating under completely different assumptions about the essence of man, a neurobiologist might approach the phenomenon of suicide completely unaware and uninterested in what a theologian or philosopher might have to say about the matter. Presumably a liberal education could consider all sides of such questions.

In doing so there is the possibility that nothing is resolved or that the conclusions will be relative. Both sides of such a question have strong cases to make. Regardless of how other fields of knowledge might oppose them, each branch of learning continues to prosper in its own direction.

This fractured and fragmented structure of university academics is not necessarily a bad thing. In fact, it might be one of the strengths that make a modern university stimulating and productive.

In such a place, liberal education, to the extent that it is possible, provides a wide sampling of different views rather than a consistent package of tidy answers.

Class candidates get campaign rules

By ROBYN SIMMONS
News Staff

A mandatory meeting of all who wish to declare candidacy for class offices and off-campus commissioner will be held Tuesday, Feb. 23. Candidates for all positions are required to obtain signatures on official petition forms to be distributed at the meeting.

According to the official campaign rules, candidates for class offices must have 100 signatures for placement on the ballot, while candidates for off-campus commissioner need 75 signatures. The petitions must be turned into the student government office by Feb. 26.

The rules governing the election process were distributed to the candidates at a brief informational meeting

Thursday. John Wilson and Jim Grace, co-directors of the Ombudsman Election Committee, stressed that candidates campaigning for the March 8 election may do so only between March 1 and March 7.

"One of the problems that we had in the last election was (the candidates) being over-exuberant about telling their friends that they were running," said Grace.

"Once (a candidate) declares an organizational meeting and has people working under him," said Wilson, "He's responsible for the actions of those people."

There will be a $75 campaign limit for all tickets, which consist of a president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer. Any tickets exceeding this limit will be penalized.

Any Notre Dame full-time undergraduate student in good academic standing may run for office. A thorough overview of all of the election rules will take place at Tuesday's meeting.

perience in government. Mike Dukakis hasn't had a single day's experience in foreign policy. We're going to lay it on the line in this campaign, and the next 19 days are going to be very interesting," he said.

Dukakis, who won the New Hampshire primary on Tuesday and is aiming for a victory next week in Minnesota, threw his support behind union paperworkers on strike in Maine.

"I'm not here to make a campaign speech," he said after he signed a proclamation supporting the United Paperworkers International Union. "But I wouldn't object to any support," he told two dozen strikers who were visiting the Massachusetts statehouse in Boston.

Illinois Sen. Paul Simon was the lone Democrat to skip the Texas debate. But he hedged on his earlier decision to quit the race if he couldn't win either the South Dakota primary or Minnesota caucuses next week.

On Wednesday, Simon said he'd quit next week if he couldn't come in first in one of those two states, but he and aides said he was raising enough money to stay the course at least through the 20 Super Tuesday primary and caucus contests on March 8.

Gephardt, who is bidding for a victory in South Dakota to go with the one he earned in Iowa on Feb. 8, picked up the endorsement of former Gov. Harvey Wollman and toured a senior citizens center.

Gary Hart flew home to Denver after poor finishes in Iowa and New Hampshire. He said his campaign is "not for ego and ambition," but for a cause, and vowed it would continue.

Bush had his new down-home campaign style on display in Missouri, where he visited the Tin Lizzie truck stop restaurant. The vice president also stressed his service with a popular President Reagan, saying, "many things have improved since the president and I took office."

Lawmakers under hypnosis not just blowing smoke

Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. - The smoke-filled rooms of political lore may fade around the Capitol, or at least become a little less prevalent, now that a group of lawmakers has undergone hypnosis to kick the cigarette habit.

About 15 or 20 legislators spent $25 each to attend an anti-smoking program Thursday brought to the Legislative Plaza by Rep. Tommy Burnett, D-Jamestown. The program was led by Harry Miles, director of Midwest Counseling Inc. of Columbus, Ind.

Burnett was hypnotized about 16 weeks ago in the program and said he hasn't had a cigarette or chewed tobacco since.

New Reagan 'small' budget $1.1 trillion

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan proposed Thursday his smallest Pentagon increase but sharply higher spending for AIDS research and airline safety in a $1.1 trillion fiscal 1989 budget that was largely pre-ordained in a deal with Congress.

"This budget does not fully reflect my priorities," the president said in his message accompanying the last spending plan he'll see through to completion. "But . . . abandoning the deficit reduction compromise would threaten our economic progress and burden future generations."

The spending plan only hints of the "Reagan revolution" years as it strives to comply with the administration's agreement with congressional leaders last November to reduce the federal deficit.

The agreement set overall spending limits for domestic, military and foreign aid spending. Reagan has already signed the tax increase required under the agreement, adding $14 billion to the Treasury's receipts for next year.

The president's plan envisions overall spending of $1.094 trillion, offset by $965 billion in receipts. That would leave a deficit of about $129.5 billion in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, within the guidelines of the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law and down from $150.4 billion last year and an estimated $146 billion this year.

Because of the agreement with congressional leaders, Reagan was forced for the first time to submit a military budget that would not keep pace with inflation.

Restrained to $294 billion in outlays, up from $285.4 billion this year, the president proposed reducing the nation's active-duty forces and abandoning the goal of a 600-ship Navy.

The administration predicts that if its budget is adopted deficits would continue to retreat from the record levels earlier in Reagan's term. When Reagan took office in 1981, the annual deficit was $78 billion, and he promised to bring the budget into balance within three years. Instead annual deficits nearly tripled by fiscal 1986.

Before hanging up, he said a statement and photograph of Higgins would be released soon. There was no way to authenticate the claim.

Higgins, a 43-year-old native of Danville, Ky., heads the 76-member observer group attached to the U.N. interim force in Lebanon, the peacekeeping force in South Lebanon known as UNIFIL. Officers under his command represent 16 nations.

Daoud is military commander of Amal, the Shiite militia led by Justice Minister Nabih Berri. He said in South Lebanon: "we're capable of confronting the people who've carried out the abduction if need be, but I hope a quick, happy ending will be accomplished."

He and senior aides told reporters they believed Higgins and the captors still were in an area southeast of Tyre, which is 50 miles south of Beirut.

Timur Goksel, spokesman for UNIFIL, agreed. "We do not have any reason to believe that he is out of the South," Goksel said at headquarters in Naqoura, just north of the Israeli border.

Hundreds evacuate as pipeline leaks toxins

Associated Press

FREMONT, Ohio - Hundreds of people around this northwestern Ohio city were evacuated Thursday as a toxic chemical that leaked from a oil company pipeline snaked its way through the Sandusky River toward Lake Erie.

At least three people were treated for injuries after an estimated 100,000 gallons of toluene, an octane enhancer, spilled Wednesday from the Sun Co. pipeline south of there.

Five hundred people, including 300 residents of Old Fort, a town 10 miles to the south, were evacuated late Wednesday and early Thursday because of the fumes, and Sandusky County Sheriff Dave Gangwer said up to 5,000 people could be evacuated along Fremont's riverfront.

"It could get worse," Gangwer said. "It depends on how slow it moves, and it's slowing down rapidly."

Officials estimated a 14-mile section of the river was contaminated; the river was flowing at about 1 mph.

The spill killed scores of fish in Sugar Creek and the Sandusky River and could affect waterfowl migrating into the area, said Mike Taylor, a wildlife officer for the Ohio Department of Natural Resources.

Gov. Richard Celeste declared a state of emergency for Sandusky County, which includes Fremont. The declaration makes state assistance available.

Meanwhile, the Ohio Environmental Protection Agency told officials in Fremont to stop drawing water from the Sandusky River because part of the chemical had flowed into the river near Tiffin, nearly 20 miles upstream.

Gary Rathfelder, assistant superintendent of Fremont's water plant, said about 4 million gallons, one day's normal supply of water, was in reserve tanks and the city would close its water intake valves as the spill arrived.

Toluene is a flammable chemical that can produce irritating or poisonous gases, according to an emergency response guidebook published by the U.S. Department of Transportation.

Sonya Elam, a spokeswoman for the Ohio Disaster Services Agency, said the chemical spilled in a swampy area in Seneca County, south of Fremont, population 22,000.

Supreme Court gets Kennedy, fills bench

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Anthony McLeod Kennedy took his place Thursday as the 104th Supreme Court justice in U.S. history, restoring the court to full strength for the first time in eight months and inheriting a pivotal vote on key issues.

"I do solemnly swear that I will administer justice without respect to persons and do equal right to the poor and to the rich," Kennedy, 51, said in a brief courtroom ceremony witnessed by some 450 invited guests.

He then took his seat at one end of the high court bench reserved for the Supreme Court's newest member.

After a private reception hosted by the court, Kennedy went to the White House to a take a second oath of office in the presence of President Reagan.

"Justice Kennedy has shown a consistence and a courageous dedication to preserving ours as a government of laws, and that's why I nominated him," the president said.

"He won the respect of his colleagues and of the entire legal community," Reagan said.

ND Law dean gets endowment

Special to the Observer

The deanship of the Notre Dame Law School has been endowed with a gift from the estate of Sylvia Matson of Bolivar, N.Y.

The benefactress, who was 99 at the time of her death in August 1985, was the widow of Albert Matson, a Bolivar attorney with business interests in oil and gas. The Joseph A. Matson Chair is named in memory of Mrs. Matson's son, a 1942 Notre Dame alumnus who died two years after graduation in an Air Force training flight accident.

The chair's first occupant will be David Link, who has headed the Law School since 1975. The Law School joins the colleges of Arts and Letters and of Engineering in having its deanship endowed.

"Professor Link has contributed in countless ways not only to the University but also to the local community and the legal profession nationally," said Provost Timothy O'Meara, who made the announcement.

"He has been a man generous with his time and one with a gift for working with others. Under his leadership the Law School has undergone two major expansions on campus and firm foundation has been put under the school's unique program in London," O'Meara said.

"The quality of the law faculty and the resources for research have been significantly strengthened during his tenure, and the Notre Dame community as a whole is the better for his service," O'Meara added.

A specialist in law and technology, Link received a B.S. in commerce degree from Notre Dame in 1958 and a J.D. from the University's Law School in 1961. During five years as a trial supervising attorney in the U.S. Treasury Department, he earned the "Young Federal Lawyer" Award from the Federal Bar Association and the Secretary of the Treasury's Award for meritorious service.

After government service Link joined the Chicago law firm of Winston, Strawn, Smith and Patterson where he practiced as a partner specializing in corporate tax law and international business transactions. Link joined the Notre Dame law faculty in 1970. He is an expert in computers and law and in the economics of law practice and the co-author of three major volumes in taxation. He is currently teaching and doing scholarship in the field of ethics of the legal profession.

Link has served as chairman of the American Bar Association's (ABA) standing Committee on Law and Technology, chairman of the ABA's President's Committee on Quality Legal Services and chairman of the ABA Section on Law Office Economics and Management.

Why the Honor Code can be successful

Objections to the Honor Code have included the following:

It requires "squealing" on friends; it is reminiscent of a police state, in which citizens are required to turn in other citizens; it places an unfair burden on students who are reluctant to judge others; it makes failure to report an offense as serious as cheating; it may change Notre Dame's atmosphere of mutual support.

These objections have two themes: life at Notre Dame under the Honor Code will not emulate adult life in our society, and the Code will harm the special Notre Dame atmosphere. I disagree on both counts.

Jeremy Lane

guest column

The Honor System is closely analogous to professional life in America. In my own profession, law, practitioners are required to be responsible not only for their own behavior but for that of their colleagues. When I was admitted to practice, I took an oath to uphold the Code of Professional Responsibility. That code obligates me to inform the Professional Responsibility Board if I become aware that a colleague has done something which raises serious questions about his or her fitness to practice law. I am subject to discipline if I fail to do so.

I have had to fulfill that obligation three times in twenty years. One of them probably cost me a friendship. It was no fun, but it involved a serious violation which was not inadvertent.

On the other hand, I have been aware of many situations in which minor, probably inadvertent, violations of the Code may have occurred. In those cases I have discussed the situation with the attorney involved to ensure that there would be no repetition. But in the serious cases, it was not for me to be the judge. Had I decided not to report the matters to the Board, I would have usurped its function. To remain silent is to be a judge; whereas, to report an apparent serious violation is to permit those charged with the duty of judging guilt or innocence to do their job. It is also their duty to punish, or forgive, the offender. I may forgive one who offends only me; it is not my place to bestow that forgiveness on behalf of the entire community against whom an offense is committed. Similarly, a student witnessing cheating has not been given the right to absolve the offender on behalf of the entire University community.

The medical profession places a similar duty on its members. Recently three doctors were disciplined, one for chemical abuse, and the other two, his associates, for doing nothing despite knowledge of the abuse. There are good reasons for this mandatory peer-enforcement: the authorities are inadequate, standing alone, to protect the integrity of the system. Also, potential victims are often the least likely to be aware of wrongdoing. If a surgeon operates while drunk, the patient under anaesthesia, who may die as a result, will not know it. Only the doctor and his colleagues will. That's why it is not enough for us as professionals to be honest and competent. We have a duty to our profession, and to the people it serves, to make sure that the profession can be trusted.

Friendship is an important value. But what are its responsibilities, and is it the highest value? I question the assumption that it is an act of friendship to watch your friend cheat and do nothing. Cheating is not a victimless crime. Anyone who has been graded on a curve can figure out the impact of one or two students cheating on a final. A student whose honest 75 percent should have been a 4.0 winds up with a 3.0. That could affect a competition for academic honors, a fellowship, or a slot in medical school. Far-fetched? Maybe a little, but I think it makes the point. Therefore, when you let a friend cheat, what you're doing is letting one of your friends hurt himself, you, and your other friends.

The offender may also be a victim, in a way. A person may cheat out of momentary weakness. If there are no adverse consequences, he or she may be more tempted to do it again. And again. And may keep doing it, to be caught someday when the consequences are much greater, such as loss of a professional license. Or maybe the cheater will never get caught and will go on cheating other people throughout life.

On the other hand, suppose the first time he cheats he gets an anonymous note telling him that he was seen and that if it happens again he will be turned in. The cheater, if his standards are what they should be, will be severely embarrassed and will be far less likely, due to a combination of fear and desire for the respect of his peers, to cheat again. Incidentally, fear of punishment as an inducement to good behavior is not unique to the Honor Code; it is a feature of our faith. And honorable habits, even if formed with the help of imperfect motivation, can still see us through times of trial.

Though we cannot know, in any case, the consequences of not holding someone accountable, they can be tragic. Leadership requires a combination of integrity and guts. Personal honesty without the courage to hold others to their commitment to the same standard has often resulted in catastrophe. A few examples:

During the development stage of the infamous Dalkon Shield IUD, scientists knew it had a tendency to "wick" bacteria, a tendency which later killed or maimed thousands of women. Those scientists did their jobs in that they reported the defect to their superiors. But they were ignored or intimidated, probably out of fear for their jobs, into keeping silent while the information was buried by profit-hungry executives. Suppose one on them had gone public, or even threatened to go public? How many women would be alive, or able to have children?

Engineers at Morton Thiokol concluded that the O-ring seals were likely to fail in a low-temperature launch. They fought a good fight internally to prevent a launch; for a time they prevailed. But NASA pushed, and the higher-ups caved in. The engineers had "done their job." But suppose they had recognized that their loyalty lay not only to their friends, or even to their employer, but also ultimately to the astronauts? Had just one of them gone public, or threatened to, he or she might have been fired, but seven lives would have been saved.

History hints at other examples: the early plans for the Titanic called for more lifeboats than the ship finally carried.

Integrity and guts can make a difference. During the Iran-Contra mess, a high official was prepared to commit perjury before Congress, but backed down when an assistant threatened to blow the whistle.

The fight will never end. Even today, people are losing their jobs in the fight for safety in the space shuttle program. We have to have people like them who are willing to fight for what is right and to demand it from their friends and colleagues. Notre Dame should be a training ground for such people. The Honor Code can help. That it won't always succeed is no reason to scrap it any more than sin is a reason to scrap the Ten Commandments.

That doesn't mean the proposed Honor System is perfect. It shouldn't equate the cheater with the honest but silent witness. I believe, however, that this is a solvable problem. I believe that the concept is sound: Notre Dame should be a place where young women and men are trained not only to have personal integrity but also to expect their friends and colleagues to have it.

A student witnessing a violation could respond in one of several ways: make a formal report; talk to the offender privately; send the offender an anonymous note; in a serious case, offer the offender an opportunity to self-report. Needless to say, the student who is not sure he or she witnessed a violation has no duty to take any action. Because of the supportive atmosphere at Notre Dame, students are very unlikely to intervene unless there is an unambiguous violation. The person who sneezes during a test won't have to worry. The person who has crib notes will.

We've seen all the TV ads which say, "Friends don't let friends drive drunk." It's true, because drunk drivers hurt themselves and others. I believe that friends don't let friends cheat, for the same reason.

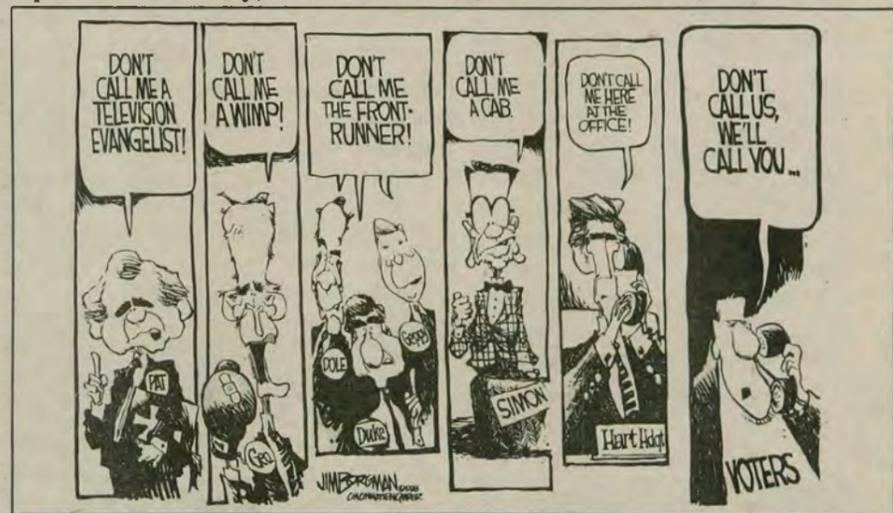

If, after being warned, a "friend" continues to cheat, it is fair to question the genuineness of the friendship; the cheater at that point knows he or she is putting an innocent friend in the terrible position of either countenancing dishonesty or reporting a friend. True friends don't put people in that position.

The analogy to denunciation of political dissenters in Russia is inappropriate: there is a world of difference between turning someone in for disagreeing with an unelected government which has no legitimate claim on citizens' loyalty and being prepared to report an intentional violation of a freely accepted and mutually beneficial code of conduct.

If the Honor Code is to succeed, it must be explained and "sold" to incoming classes from the beginning. The freshmen orientation program should devote significant time to it. Students must understand that it is important training for life, not just a way of taking exams.

Regarding the impact of an Honor Code on the Notre Dame atmosphere: which is more truly supportive, an atmosphere in which you tell your friend, "I care for you, therefore you can do destructive things and I won't intervene," or one in which you tell your friend, "I care about you; therefore, I will do what I can, or what I must, to help you be the best person you can be, even if it means risking your anger. I will treat you fairly, and I expect you to keep your commitment to treat me fairly"? I believe the latter reflects a deeper commitment.

Teaching in NYC: a service project

As a teacher of high school remedial writing, I have seen my share of brilliance. "Death," one student writes, "is the number one killer in the world." Keen observation. This paper gets a 4.0 for content.

Patrick Conlin

guest column

Amusing anecdotes and quotable quotes are fringe benefits of teaching. I'm writing today to tell you how you might gather your own collection.

This year myself and other 1987 Notre Dame grads, Maria Madigan, Molly Rozum, Elaine Trigiani, Mark Sheridan, John Patella, and Paul Bridenstine are teaching in New York City Catholic high schools as part of a new volunteer service program organized through the New York Archdiocese. Three 1987 grads of Holy Cross College and Bucknell also work with us.

Three schools are currently involved in the program. Cardinal Hayes, where the men teach, is a school of about 1200 boys. Nestled in the South Bronx, Hayes draws its students largely from there and Harlem. Cathedral High School for girls draws its population from the aforementioned areas, as well as Brooklyn and Queens. St. Raymond's, also for boys, is located in the North Bronx.

The first day of school was shocking for a number of reasons. First, none of us had any teaching experience. Second, not only were we now "the teachers," but for the first time, we were in the minority. The schools are composed of inner-city students, running roughly 65 percent hispanic and 35 percent black. There is no question these places afford a fascinating view into an area of society that needs scrutiny: the inner city.

The ten of us have received diverse assignments. Our assignments range from remedial writing to history to English to band. We teach an average of four to five classes daily, so any inexperience we had was quickly corrected.

After school, there are countless opportunities to interact with the students. After-school tutoring, while often a necessity, is a fantastic way to get to know the kids. Athletics provide another great vehicle to get involved. From our group there have been soccer, football, track, basketball and cross-country coaches. Virtually any activity you might think of will often find an audience and would necessarily need a moderator.

We live separately. The women live together in Manhattan's upper west side. They have ample opportunity to take in the culture or simply explore the city right in their neighborhood. The men live on an upper floor of Cardinal Hayes. We each have our own "apartment" along with a group of teaching diocesan priests. By proximity, we have a "community" with these priests, there are few restrictions, and our free time is our own. Since we live in the South Bronx, we get a closer look into inner-city neighborhoods. For our frequent trips to Manhattan, however, the subway is only two blocks away. To fund our exploring, a weekly stipend of $100 is coupled with our full room and board.

Not only is this a great way to experience New York, it is the best way to render community service through teaching. We were full time teachers from day one. It is also a great way to give service to a talented group of young people that really needs help. The schools have extremely high percentages of students from single-parent homes, and many of the students receive need-based financial aid. Despite these difficulties and many others, 85 percent of the seniors at Cardinal Hayes will go to college in 1988. College is often on the students' minds, and it is almost mystifying for them to picture the pastoral setting of Notre Dame. I have had numerous freshmen affirm, only because of our brief association, that Notre Dame is their first choice in schools.

If you are interested in a one-year service project that allows you to teach and get involved in the lives of young people, please consider teaching at Cathedral, Cardinal Hayes, or St. Raymond's next year. For further information and applications, see Mary Ann Roemer at the Center for Social Concerns.

Empathy abounds for club sports

Dear Editor:

The University of Notre Dame women's track club would like to commend Pete Gegen for his series of articles about the recent decisions of the athletic department. His coverage was thorough and reflected well the quandaries facing both the athletic department and the teams involved. We would also like to extend our sympathy to members of the women's field hockey team for their loss of varsity status. They have always conducted themselves with the spirit and dignity representative of Notre Dame. As a club sport which has sought varsity status for over ten years, we, the members of the women's track club, can appreciate the difficulties the field hockey team is facing now and will face in the future.

The recent actions of the athletic department were ill-timed at best and reflect insensitivity to the needs of the athletes. Should money be the bottom line in structuring intercollegiate athletics? Should it take precedence over the commitment to current athletes? In light of the fact that the athletic department represents the University of Notre Dame, its treatment of the field hockey team is extremely disappointing.

A new beginning for student businesses

Dear Editor:

A new beginning for student businesses is about to arrive. Effective April 1 of this year the student businesses, Irish Gardens, The Cellar and Adworks, will no longer be operated from with the Student Union Board. A new organization called the Student Business Board has been formed to oversee the operation of these businesses. The operation of the Student Business Board will be governed by the Business Control Council, which is composed of the General Manager, the three store managers, the Student Body Treasurer, the Student Body President or Vice-President and a Student Senator. We are not beginning the search for a General Manager. The General Manager will be the Chief Financial Officer for the student business. Quantitative decisions concerning staffing, inventory, promotion or other matters directly affecting the financial performance of the business will be his/her responsibility. If you are business-oriented and want a real challenge, we would be interested in hearing from you. Applications and information regarding the position and the Student Business Board are available in the Student Government offices in LaFortune. Application deadline is Friday, Feb. 26 at 5 p.m.

SMC Security not a babysitter

Dear Editor:

I am writing this letter in response to what I feel was an overstated complaint of the Saint Mary's Security Department (Feb. 16, 1988). It seems necessary to specify the conditions under which Security is obliged to respond. Saint Mary's Security is not and should not be a 24 hour baby-sitting service. What would the two ladies have done if their car stalled 10, 20 or 30 miles from campus?

It would seem to me that two women in college should be capable of handling the situation a little better. After graduation, they will not have a campus security department to call upon. The histrionic garble about being "assaulted, abducted, or possibly found frozen to death" was a bit much. Being safe is one thing, but this situation was taken to an extreme. Ladies, I'm surprised the man who stopped for you didn't rob you, tie you both up and gouge your eyes out with a blunt stick while guffawing evilly. At least he would have kept you from suffering the impending doom at the hands of the "strangers" who were probably licking their chops while waiting for you in nearby homes.

Reagan's ND ties questionable

Dear Editor:

As one of the participants in the conversation about which Bob Hallahan complained in the Feb. 10 issue of The Observer, I would like to respond to what Mr. Hallahan has said. First, Mr. Hallahan complained that I, and others like me, are "politically unaware." The reported conversation has nothing to do with my political awareness, or lack thereof. I was stating my opinion about a specific act of Ronald Reagan, not about any problem I might find with his foreign or domestic policy. My point is valid. Ronald Reagan—once—played a part in a movie entitled "Knute Rockne: All-American." He played George Gipp, a player who has reached legendary status in this country. Now, Mr. Reagan's friends call him "Gipp" and the Minnesota Twins gave him a Twins shirt with "Gipper" printed on the back. Mr. Reagan is coasting on the name recognition and emotions which follow a name such as George Gipp or Notre Dame. My feelings about this have nothing to do with my feelings about Mr. Reagan as a person or as President of the United States. I can dislike his using the Notre Dame name without disliking, or liking, for that matter, his policies or his personality.

Second, Mr. Hallahan takes issue with the alleged "Notre Dame arrogance." Personally, Mr. Hallahan, I worked very hard to achieve the status of a Notre Dame student. I would object to anyone—be he President, pauper, or Supreme Court justice, who allies his name to a school, name, and tradition, to which he does not belong. Does the fact that Martin Sheen played President Kennedy in a movie entitle him to the benefits of the Oval Office? Neither does Ronald Reagan's playing of George Gipp entitle him to the benefits of the Notre Dame name or tradition.

Attack on Opus Dei unnecessary

Dear Editor:

Ms. Ann Pettifer is entitled to respond to Thomas D'Andrea's column, and she is entitled to her opinion regarding Opus Dei. However, in responding to Mr. D'Andrea's opinions, Ms. Pettifer attacks an organization to which he belongs.

If Ms. Pettifer disagrees with Mr. D'Andrea, she should state her reasons for her disagreement. Failing to present a reasonable argument, Ms. Pettifer implies that we should dismiss Mr. D'Andrea's opinion simply because he belongs to an organization with which she disagrees.

Perhaps Ms. Pettifer would ask you to remember that I was a Boy Scout (a member of a para-military, sexist, survivalist group), when you assess my objection to her letter.

"Practice being a good Samaritan"

On Wednesday's "Accent" page, Kris Murphy's self-insightfulness: "Hey, buddy, you're 20 years old. That's halfway to 40," reminded me that at 60 or so, I'm halfway to 120, a patriarchal age if there ever was one.

Father Robert Griffin

Letters to a Lonely God

Moses, who scolded the Israelites from Exodus to Deuteronomy, was 120 when he died. Every priest is, ex officio, a scold; however, in Biblical parlance, he's called a prophet.

Prophets tend to end their careers shabbily; some are stoned to death; the best of them bit the dust when he was sawed in half, like a log. Did they cut him lengthwise, from head to toe, or did they save themselves work by dividing him through the middle?

In the words of Elliot's Prufrock: "I am not a prophet...I have seen the eternal Footman hold my coat, and snicker. And in short, I was afraid." The eternal Footman is Death.

If Death is snickering at a coward like me, afraid of being sent to a prophet's grave, I say: "Death, be not proud!" I weigh 250 pounds; critics planning to saw me in half will have their work cut out for them.

"Bashing," I've noticed, is the current jargon-word that the smart-talkers use when they're attacking the loudmouths. Those guilty of any of the alleged forms of bashing are implicitly condemned as red-necks who take unfair advantage.

"Bashing" used to apply to the sportin' life of cavemen, beating each other over the head with clubs. Today we have pope-bashers, ethnic-bashers, gender-bashers, jock-bashers, and gay-bashers.

"Basher" is the metaphor for a critic. I should write William Safire, to find out where the clever, colorful use of the word started.

Do I sound unpleasant, like a preacher, a self-appointed prophet, or a kid-basher, when I remind students of the truths that make people free? I mean no harm, since I love Notre Dame and all the members of the family, and I'm not trying to upstage students in their desire to do good.

The Observer is filled these days with warnings that reinforce the warnings heard on television: Life is beautiful, so don't mess it up with drugs, drunkenness, sexual disease, unwanted pregnancies. Protect yourself from eating disorders, and attend a lecture on Rape Control.

Of all the groups intent on saving us from ourselves, the title of one of them sounds a little redundant: Mothers Against Drunken Driving. Was ever a mother indifferent to, or in favor of, drunken driving?

It shows how dangerous the world has become, when mothers have to identify themselves as militants in a crusade to save children from mistakes they should have been warned about when they were weaned.

MADD are my kind of people. As a chaplain anxious to save youngsters from tragedy, I'm happy to see people become specialists in the way they want to keep wolves from the door. Is it churlish, then, to remind activists that in their concern for life, they should do more than climb on bandwagons traveling a widely advertised circuit?

The Right-to-Lifers used to get on Father Theodore Hesburgh's back about defending the unborn against the violence of abortion. Hesburgh would wisely answer: "All life is holy, from the womb to the tomb. Save the unborn; but save also the young children, the teenagers, the young adults, especially those who are parents of growing families."

"Save the working men and women, the retirees, and the elderly. The holocaust destroying the unborn is unspeakable. But don't forget the holocaust devouring the unwanted, the unneeded, the uncared for, the misfits and defenseless. We must have a burning compassion for them as victims."

I'm happy to see the newspaper articles promoting Alcohol Awareness or concern for the AIDS epidemic. I admire the speakers reminding us of the need for inter-racial understanding or our duties to the Third World. All these highly touted causes deserve our heartfelt support. Still, for Notre Dame, I dream of more than this.

I have a dream of this, God's little acre of a campus, improving itself as a truly caring community. For this to happen, we may need a visitation of grace that will leave us thoughtful in ways that will not be written up on the centerfold of The Observer.

Wednesday, bringing blessed ashed to the employees of the North Dining Hall, I heard that one of the women had fallen on the ice, and was now in the hospital with a broken ankle. I felt bad for the women; a worker who devotes herself to waiting on students shouldn't have it so hard.

I am angry at what happened to her. Why was the ice there? For several days, the sidewalks were treacherous. Anyone, young or old, could have slipped. Notre Dame family members are injured every winter, on days when steps and sidewalks are a glare of ice. Am I now bashing the maintenance department? It's not my intention to tell the maintenance department their business.

A caring community isn't in a rush after an accident to find a scapegoat to blame. A caring community says: "We have a problem. What can I do about it?" Notre Dame is not short of able-bodied people, thousands of whom live in the dorms. On days when the walking is tough, could not some of those dorm residents, for the sake of the common good, take a shovel in hand, to clear off the ice? But how often, in the worst of winters, does that happen?

Charity, I hope, isn't blind. Charity doesn't spend all its time conjuring up a devil who isn't there ignoring the devil waiting in living color, just outside the front door.

Charity stops to pick up the broken beer bottle scattered over the grass where students play. Charity drags a drunken classmate out of a bar where he could be murdered for his varsity jacket. Charity puts a sign on a Coke machine that is out of order, as a warning to the next guy to save his money.

Charity is also thoughtful. Charity flushes a toilet after using it. Charity, fastidious enough to line the toilet seat with paper, doesn't leave the tissue there for the next guy to peel off. Charity doesn't rip off things.

Last Friday, Captain Ahab disappeared from my door in Pasquerilla West. Did he wander off on his wooden leg, to attend an SYR party in another dorm? If you should see him, please send him home; don't encourage him to stay in your room. Captain Ahab is the apple of Darby O'Gill's eye. That dog cries to sleep at night when he looks for Captain Ahab, and sees he's not there.

Kris Murphy, at 20, is a warning to the rest of that no one is getting any younger. Kris may have heard that in the evening of life, we will be judged on love. If Notre Dame is a caring community, Kris may learn some of life's lessons early.

The best kind on consciousness-raising is to practice being a good Samaritan. Just because your neighbor isn't naked, hungry, thirsty, or in prison, doesn't mean that what you do for him isn't done for Christ. If my telling you this is kid-bashing, you can treat me to one of those hemlock cocktails that old Socrates enjoyed as a nightcap.

Literary Festival: a premier event

accent writer

One student says to another, "You'll never guess what my Freshman Seminar professor is making our class do...(sigh). We have to go listen to some boring lecture for this thing called the Sophomore Literary Festival. I'm going to feel really stupid being the only freshman there, too." The other student laughs.

This is a typical reaction from an uninformed student on the subject of the Sophomore Literary Festival. The event is really a series of brilliant readings and stories, given by prestigious authors, from around the world. The point most stressed upon, however, is that it is not just for sophomores, but that everyone, including the public, is welcome and urged to come. The Festival is a week long this year, from Sunday, February 21 to Saturday, February 27 - and is free.

The attendance for the event is large and does not just consist of Notre Dame students; about one half of the audience are local citizens and those from surrounding states. "It (the Sophomore Literary Festival) has such magnitude that people all over the nation talk about which authors are going to attend. It's a premier deal," claims Mike Evces, chairman of the executive board for the Festival.

After 21 years, this event is still put together solely by students at Notre Dame. This year's executive committee consists of four students: Mike Evces, Brian Bajuk, Stephanie Thomas, and Mike Anderson. Professor Matthias and Professor O'Rourke have been their connections with the past Festivals and have helped them "compile a list of authors to invite," Evces explains. Although the help of these professors does not go unappreciated, Evces emphasizes that the Festival "is strictly student-run."

During the summer, the entire committee wrote invitations to numerous well-known authors in hopes that some would respond. Some agreed enthusiastically, some rejected, and others just never replied.

A sum of money for each author is provided by the Cultural Arts Commission of the Student Union Board to each author who does attend; the English department and the Collegiate Fellows Office have also made contributions.

Some of the more famous authors from past years include John Irving, Tennessee Williams, Kurt Vonnegut, Norman Mailer, Allen Ginsburg, John Updike, and Arthur Miller. These names alone disclose the importance and prestige of this cultural event.

This year seven authors will be attending the Sophomore Literary Festival. Each will give a reading in the library auditorium, and the next morning each will hold a "conversation" for those who are interested in learning more about the author. Books by each author are available at the bookstore, are on reserve at the library, and will be on sale at the receptions following the readings.

Josef Skvorecky will begin the week on Sunday. Skvorecky is originally from Czechoslovakia, where much of his work was banned by the government censors, and he now lives in Canada. Along with writing novels such as "Miss Silver's Past," "The Cowards," and "The Engineer of Human Souls," Skvorecky has written many screenplays.

Marilyn Krysl, a poet and short story writer, will continue with her reading on Monday night. After graduating from the University of Oregon, Krysl wrote five books of poetry. Her latest is "Mozart, Westmoreland and Me."

Etheridge Knight, who is sponsored by the Black Studies Program, will give a reading on Tuesday. Knight, who has been nominated for a Pulitzer Prize, began his career as a poet while serving time in the Indiana State Prison for a narcotic-related armed robbery. His most recent publication entitled "The Essential Etheridge Knight" brought him an American Book Award in 1987.

Peter Michelson, a prolific prose and fiction writer, as well as a former professor at Notre Dame, will also give his reading on Tuesday. Some of his works include "The Eater" and "The Aesthetics of Pornography."

On Wednesday, John Engels, a native of South Bend, a double graduate of Notre Dame, and a distinguished poet, will give his reading. Engels was a Pulitzer Prize finalist in 1983, a recipient of the Fullbright Award from Yugoslavia in 1985, and he also won Pushcart Prizes in 1980 and 1984. He has written 12 books including "Signals From the Safety Coffin," "Blood Mountain," and "Cardinals in the Ice Age."

Don Hendrie Jr., a novelist and winner of a Pushcart Prize in 1979, will give his reading on Thursday. Graduating from Stanford in 1965, he went on to the University of Iowa Writers Workshop in 1967. His works include "Blount's Anvil," a novel, "Scribble, Scribble, Scribble," a collection of short stories, and his most recent novel, "A Survey of the Atlantic Beaches."

The last author to give her reading will be Paule Marshall, a novelist. She is co-sponsored by the Black Cultural Arts Council. Her first and most highly acclaimed novel, titled "Brown Girl, Brownstones," was adapted into a play in 1960 and then won Best Play of the Year. Since then, she has written several other books and has received many awards.

The morning following each author's reading, there will be a conversation with each author, with the exception of Hendrie, for whom the Collegiate Fellows Office is sponsoring a breakfast Friday morning.

"Each author has expressed much interest in interacting with and meeting Notre Dame students," Evces explains. "It's (the Festival) not going to be a series of dry lectures--It's a festival after all."

Warriors look for revenge

By GREG GUFFEY
Sports Writer

It's amazing how much confidence a big win on the road can give a team.

After upsetting then 17th-ranked Duke two weeks ago in Durham, N.C., the Notre Dame women's basketball squad is playing with a new sense of direction on the road. And it could not have come at a more crucial point in the season.

The Irish (16-6) began a season-ending road swing Wednesday with an 87-69 rout of Cleveland State and travel to Marquette Saturday for a North Star Conference game. Five of the team's remaining six games are away from the JACC, the lone exception being a Feb. 28 encounter with DePaul.

"Winning on the road at Duke gave us the impetus for the rest of the season," assistant coach Bill Fennelly said. "It gave us a lot of confidence that if we can win at Duke, we can win anywhere. It's an ACC school and it's a tough place to win."

The Irish have won four of their last five on the road since a 79-59 loss to Virginia Jan. 4. That's a drastic improvement over the 3-4 mark the team posted the first half of the season away from the JACC.

"We're at the point where we realize our last games are on the road, and we have to win them," Fennelly said. "We've sustained our play on the road better than we did earlier in the season. We're approaching it in the sense that we need to finish 22-6 to make the NCAA."

As if playing on the road is not bad enough, the Irish also have to fight injuries during the stretch run. With Diondra Toney, Annie Schwartz and Carol Elliott out for the season, the team is down to nine players. Starting guard Mary Gavin is nursing a stiff back and forward Lisa Kuhns is battling a knee injury.

Coach Muffet McGraw gave the squad Thursday off to rest for the meeting with the Warriors (8-16) of Sister Maria Pares, O.S.F. Pares has a 17-33 record during her two years at Marquette and a 20-year career mark of 354-82.

The Irish easily downed the Warriors 88-51 Jan. 26 behind the school-record 32 points of Heidi Bunek.

Forward Patty Baker leads Marquette, averaging 13.2 points and 8.5 rebounds per game. Centers Heidi Ach (10.9) and Kerri Christiansen (10.7) round out the double-figure scorers for the Warriors.

"We have to expect them to try something different defensively to shut off our inside game," Fennelly said. "They did better from the perimeter, especially in the second half, than we thought. We have to make sure Patty Baker and (guard) Kathy Schweiger don't get hot early."

The Irish have won nine in a row from the Warriors, but Fennelly hopes to avoid a letdown with the prospect of the NCAA tourney looming over the Irish.

"The main thing we have to do is not let down," Fennelly said. "We played them earlier in the year and beat them pretty bad, so there is a tendency to letdown. Anytime you play on the road and have the Marquette-Notre Dame rivalry, it's a big game."

can see the dilemma. The official has to call something, even if it's after the first bucket.

"We checked to see if the rule applied only when it interrupted the flow of the game at a crucial time," said Conboy. "The officials have to call it even after the first basket. We're going to go ahead and keep making the announcement."

Once again, this appears to be a case where the NCAA is concerning itself with trivia when there are more pressing matters to be concerned with. Throwing streamers or toilet papers after the first bucket of the game is as much a part of college basketball as cheerleaders and bands. Can you imagine the scene in the Palestra in Philadelphia, where this tradition originated? Every game would start with a technical foul, two if two Big Five teams are playing.

Yes, the potential for injury exists. But when was the last time you saw anyone maimed for life when hit with crepe or toilet paper? It takes pretty good aim to hit a player in the eye with a roll of toilet paper.

When there are more serious problems within college athletics, the NCAA's toilet paper legislation leaves me raw.

Here's a rule change that may come about if the NCAA Rules Committee passes it. Under consideration is a proposal that would give a player three foul shots if he was fouled on a three-point attempt that was not good. This makes sense. After all, why not trade two points for three?

Tennis looks for surprises

By GEORGE TRAVERS
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame men's tennis team takes its perfect record into a grueling weekend with matches at home against Northwestern, Iowa and Miami (Ohio).

The 5-0 Irish meet Northwestern today at 3 p.m. Saturday the team has back-to-back matches against Iowa and Miami at 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. All action takes place at the Eck Tennis Pavillion.

Notre Dame will be an underdog in all three matches, but Bayliss' biggest worry will be Northwestern (2-1). Last year the Irish fell to Northwestern 7-2 and last fall they were downed 4-1.

"All three schools are tough, but Northwestern is the best. They beat us badly last fall in a shorter match," Bayliss said. "Our strength lies in our depth, and that's an edge we lost in the fall. Hopefully, we can use it to our advantage in the longer match on Friday."

The Irish also have seen Iowa earlier last year, losing 7-2 at home. Iowa (2-0) looks to face a tired Irish team coming off the match today. Miami (Ohio) has yet to play this year but is predicted to be one of the top Mid-America Conference teams.

After a two-week layoff, Bayliss is glad to have the services of Brian Kalbas back. Kalbas, the No. 1 Irish singles player, is coming off a groin injury.

"I would say Brian is about 90 percent right now," said Bayliss. "But he is a real competitor and I don't expect his game to drop at all."

Up to this point the men's tennis team has faced relatively weak teams. But for the rest of the season the Irish will predominantly have the role of underdogs.

"So far this season has been delightful," Bayliss said. "But this weekend we play three matches in less than two days, and on paper we're underdogs in all of them. But we've definitely made a jump this year. We can compete. It's at home, it's Junior Parents Weekend. With a big crowd behind us we can look for surprises."

Kuehl, Herber bring winning hometown tradition

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

The state of Minnesota is generally regarded as the empire state of hockey. And when it comes to high school hockey in Minnesota, you can't get much better than Edina High.

But when senior Bob Herber and junior Tim Kuehl left their hometown of Edina to attend Notre Dame, they saw something Edina had not prepared them for. Losing.

At Edina, they never saw much losing. At Notre Dame, it was becoming a bad habit.

"It was a little frustrating because we had a losing team here, and I was used to playing on winning teams," said Kuehl.

He certainly had not played on many losing teams in high school. As a wing at Edina High during his senior year, his team was tops in the state all year before being upset in post-season play.

The quality of play at Edina was such that Herber, a junior wing for the Irish, couldn't make his high school team his senior year.

"I didn't play junior varsity the year before, and about 120 guys tried out for the team," Herber said. "The coach said I was about the last guy cut."

"The talent's great there. Edina's got one of the top programs, and they've won the most state championships."

Herber instead played for a junior B team in Edina, and he helped that team win a state championship. Then he went to Notre Dame, where he did make the team, but the Irish were not enjoying too much success.

"The fact that we were losing did give me a chance to get in the lineup," Herber said. "It seemed like people were used to losing here—it was like a losing environment."

Notre Dame went 12-21-1 during Herber's freshman year. With Kuehl aboard the following year, having been recruited by assistant coach and Edina native Tom Carroll, the Irish had another losing record, at 10-19-1.

After that season, Lefty Smith resigned to end his 19-year tenure as Notre Dame's hockey coach. As Notre Dame took its time deciding on a new head coach, golfing buddies Herber and Kuehl spent the summer swapping rumors back in Edina.

"We played in a summer hockey league together and went golfing together, and we'd hear rumors and stuff," Herber said. "We found out late in the summer and didn't know what to expect."

When Notre Dame finally announced the new coach—former Irish player Ric Schafer—the players still did not know what to expect. It's hard for anyone to know much about a guy who's been coaching in Alaska (at Alaska-Fairbanks) for the last several years.

"It was unpredictable. We knew we had talent, but there were so many question marks," said Kuehl. "He (Schafer) instilled a new attitude. He was really excited about rebuilding the program, and that made us excited. He's really the gung-ho type."

Schafer got the Irish off to the start he wanted, as Notre Dame held an 11-2-2 record by semester break. But Kuehl and Herber were not quite satisfied with their personal performances in the beginning of the season.

Kuehl, who had played on the same line as senior captain Mike McNeill last season, had trouble adjusting to his new linemates. He scored Notre Dame's first goal of the season, but then went into a scoring drought.

But the line of Matt Hanzel, Brian Montgomery and Kuehl has been a hit for the Irish, particularly in the second half of the season.

In fact, a recent scoring spurt by Kuehl, who leads the Irish with five game-winning goals, has placed him second to McNeill in total points on the team (18 goals, 21 assists). A knee injury will keep him out of action this weekend.

"He was really on a roll," said Schafer. "He was always effective, but he was even more effective when he went on that spree."

Herber, who was anything but pleased with how he played early in the year, also has emerged as a major force for the Irish. He currently ranks 10th on the team in points with nine goals and 15 assists.

"I was really disappointed with my first half," the junior said. "After Christmas break, I felt I had to play better, and I have."

Schafer knew Herber was going to be a key player for his team.

"I liked him from the start," Schafer said. "He's one of our fastest skaters, and he's trying his hardest all the time. He serves as a catalyst for the rest of the team."

With Kuehl and Herber providing outstanding second halves, the potent Irish offense has averaged almost seven goals a game. And Notre Dame has won 14 straight to run its record to 23-2-2.

The Edina natives are doing more than their part to carry the winning tradition of their hometown over to Notre Dame.

Andrysiak won't return

Special to The Observer

Notre Dame quarterback Terry Andrysiak will not return to the Irish football team for a fifth season in 1988, Athletic Director Dick Rosenthal announced Thursday.

The 6-1, 184-pound Andrysiak had applied for a fifth year because of his limited play as a freshman in 1984.

"Our policy on granting additional years of eligibility has not changed," Rosenthal said. "We do not plan to red-shirt athletes on a wholesale basis, but we will continue to consider extra years based on medical hardship."

"In Terry's case, there is not sufficient medical evidence of physical injury in his freshman season in 1984 to merit the extra season being approved."

Jansen, Americans fall again

Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta - Speed skater Dan Jansen fell in a race for the second time Thursday, passing from tragedy to deep frustration at a Winter Olympics he had dedicated to the sister who died on Valentine's Day.

Jansen, America's world sprint champion, was on his way to what could have been a medal, maybe gold, in the 1,000 meters when he tipped over on the outside edge of his right skate on a back straightaway of the final lap.

He fell and sat on the ice in disbelief, rocking back and forth with his face buried in his hands. Coach Mike Crowe and teammate Nick Thometz helped him off the ice, although he was unhurt physically. The pain was mental, and it was excruciating.

After he left the ice, he embraced his fiancée, Canadian speed skater Natalie Grenier, and cried in her arms.

He fell, too, last Sunday, just hours after his sister died. That time he fell on the first turn of the 500 meters.

It was an Olympics in which America's best just wasn't good enough as wind played tricks with the schedule and Eastern Europeans toyed with the opposition.

Winds that reached 72 mph and blew one skier right off the course forced postponement of the women's downhill and team 90-meter jumping. America's best bet in the downhill, Pam Fletcher, was gone anyway, breaking a leg when she ran into a volunteer worker during warmups.

Bonny Warner had the best finish of any American luger in an Olympics, but she was more than two seconds behind winner Steffi Walter, who led another East German Olympic sweep. Warner was sixth, 1.875 seconds away from the bronze.

Griffee, epeeists hold key to stopping Illinois

By SCOTT BRUTOCAO
Sports Writer

"This is one I'd pay money to see."

As Head Coach Mike DeCicco has plainly illustrated, the men's fencing team is ready to take on arch-rival Illinois, and is literally saving the best for last.

The team will travel to Champaign, Ill., tonight and participate in a quadrangular meet along with Purdue, Michigan State, and, of course, Illinois.

"Illinois is going to be the big meet," DeCicco says. "Illinois has six seniors in their nine-man starting squad, and like us they're undefeated."

Indeed, both Notre Dame and Illinois have fenced the same teams, and both stand without a loss. For the last three years, however, Notre Dame has beaten the Illini.

"It's going to be very close," DeCicco says. "They're the only team that stands between us and an undefeated season."

"We're going to be ready. It's going to be a back-and-forth, seesaw battle the whole way. Illinois is a great team but we can fence well, too."

Illinois' veteran squad is in the epee division, where the team may be the strongest. Miles Phillips, Tim Hensley and Joe Socolof are all talented fencers and will be likely to give the Notre Dame epee squad a very challenging match.

Todd Griffee, the captain of the epee team, will be ready.

"There's no one on the squad who wants to win more than Griffee," DeCicco says. "He can hardly wait for Saturday to come around."

"Illinois is going to be tough," says Griffee, "But we should be ready for them. We should win if everyone bears down. They're definitely not a team to be underestimated."

Griffee is one of the few fencers on the team from the South Bend area. A native of Niles, Mich., Griffee attended St. Joseph's High School and learned how to fence at Notre Dame.

"Todd is one of the few kids we've had from our community," says DeCicco. "He started with us as a novice and now is among the top epee fencers in the country."

At the NCAA tournament last year, he finished 12th in the nation. He was only a touch away from finishing eighth, which would have made him an all-American as a sophomore.

His career record is 48-7 (.873), which is second on the all-time winning-percentage list for epee.

Adding to his accomplishments, he finished second in the Great Lakes Tournament last year, where a senior from Wayne State beat him out for the title.

Now Griffee has the added responsibility of being captain of the epee team. He is in charge of virtually all the training of the epee team, and he coordinates the starting lineups with DeCicco.

"Being captain puts a lot of responsibility on a person," says Griffee. "You have to set the example all the time, and to give it all you've got."

"Todd's being captain is a credit to him and his talents," DeCicco says. "He's a very competitive epeeist."

Griffee is also a member of the Army ROTC Ranger program, which also requires a lot of time. He has to balance being captain of the epee team, an Army Ranger, and, of course, a student.

As for Illinois, Griffee holds a special position. He is captain of the epee squad, in which Illinois is the strongest.

"Todd Griffee right now is capable of winning three bouts for us," says DeCicco. "He holds one of the keys to beating Illinois, as does the entire epee team. As captain, he is especially important."

"If he can go through Illinois undefeated, it will really help him in his attempts at the NAAs. It would be a great kickoff for the National Championship."

Todd Griffee

Griffee, 26-7, has beaten all three Illinois epee fencers at least once over his career, and will be looking forward to doing it again.

Irish head to Dearborn for rematch with Wolves

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

It happened so long ago that it might be hard for some fans to remember when the Notre Dame hockey team last lost a game. But the Irish remember it vividly.

Michigan-Dearborn ended Notre Dame's eight-game winning streak on Dec. 5 at the JACC, as the Wolves sprinted to a 5-0 lead before eventually winning 6-2.

Since that time, Notre Dame has won 14 consecutive games, shattering the previous school record of nine. But this weekend, the Irish are being thrown back to the Wolves. Notre Dame plays at Dearborn at 7:30 tonight and Saturday night.

"Air Force, Dearborn and Windsor are probably the toughest teams on our schedule," said first-year Irish coach Ric Schafer. "Dearborn's a very well-organized team, and they're deadly on the power play."

Times have not been so good for Dearborn lately. The Wolves have lost 11 of their last 20 games since beating Notre Dame.

But while the Irish have feasted on the likes of Dayton and Villanova during their streak, Dearborn has paid the consequences of having a much tougher schedule. Teams that have swept Dearborn include Alaska-Fairbanks and U.S. International, teams that are in about the same position as the Irish in the college independents poll. Fairbanks ranks second, while U.S. International is in a virtual tie with Notre Dame for fourth.

"They've lost a couple, but they've played some strong teams," Schafer said. "They're going to be strong."

Dearborn still leads the American Collegiate Hockey Conference with its 8-1-1 conference record. The Wolves have an overall mark of 20-13-3.

Notre Dame (5-1-2, 23-2-2) ranks second in the conference. If Dearborn wins a single game over the Irish this weekend, the Wolves win the regular-season title. The ACHA Tournament on March 4-5 at Dearborn will determine the conference champion.

The Irish, who have been playing without sophomore wing Bruce Guay for the last two weekends, also lose the services of classmate Tim Kuehl this weekend. Kuehl, who has torn cartilage, ranks second on the team in total points, while Guay is fourth. The two have been key figures in an offense that has averaged 6.9 goals per game.

Notre Dame's defense will have to find a way to stop Dearborn's diversified attack. Joe Burton, Tim Osburn (22 goals, 36 assists), Tim Osburn (27,30), Mike Humitz (13,38) and Ron Duda (29,21) all have 50 points or more for the Wolves (Mike McNeill is the only Notre Dame player with over 50 points). Joe Mocnik is not far off the pace, with 29 goals and 16 assists.

The Wolves also have been impressive at the nets. Regular goalie Mike Klavon allows just 3.63 goals per game, and Dave Church is averaging 4.14.

Notre Dame's Lance Madison, however, has been even better. Having played in 23 of Notre Dame's 27 games, the sophomore is allowing just 3.6 goals per game, and has turned back over 88 percent of the opposing shots on goal.

McNeill has engineered the Irish offense all season long. The senior captain has scored 23 goals and recorded 38 assists, and had NHL scouts watching him two weekends ago in the Notre Dame-Air Force series.

"Last time we played them, we beat them clearly once (5-3), and they beat us clearly once," said Schafer. "It was a clear split. They're ahead of us, and with a split they'll stay where they are."

"We've got an edge in our recent success," Schafer continued. "That gives us a certain degree of confidence as we enter each game."

Gary Voce (54) scored 18 points as Notre Dame stopped the Dayton Flyers 59-47 in a slow-paced game at the Joyce ACC Thursday night.

Irish outlast Dayton 59-47

By RICK RIETBROCK
Assistant Sports Editor

In the Dayton lockerroom after the game, Flyers head coach Don Donoher threw his empty can of 7-Up toward the garbage can 15 feet away. The toss came up short, just as most of his team's first-half shots had and just as his slow-down strategy had.

Notre Dame used Dayton's first-half futility and some strong second-half inside scoring from Gary Voce to take a 59-47 win from the Flyers.

Anthony Corbitt hit a 16-footer, his only field goal of the first half, to pull Dayton to within three at 17-14 with 6:29 left in the half. From then on, Dayton's shooting went frigid, and the Irish defense put the heat on.

Dayton's Negele Knight hit a layup with 3:59 left for the Flyers' only hoop for the rest of the half as the already low-flying offense was totally grounded, while Notre Dame scored 10. Not exactly a run, but enough to add some pad to its lead.

Dayton shot just 38 percent (8-of-21) in the first frame, while the Irish hit an even 50 percent (11-of-22), led by David Rivers' 4-of-7 (12 points). The Flyers added 12 turnovers on their way to the team's lowest point total of the season.

"Playing against that type of offense, to be up by 11 at halftime was really something," said Notre Dame head coach Digger Phelps. "I thought we played some pretty good defense and created a lot of their missed shots and turnovers."

The drought continued when the second half began, as it took Dayton another 2:54 to score, which enabled the Irish to grab a 33-17 lead. Notre Dame continued to widen the lead and a Rivers-to-Mark Stevenson alley-oop ended in a dunk and a 42-25 Irish advantage.

Dayton slowly got back into the game as Corbitt, Knight, and Ray Springer pulled the team to within 10 at 49-39 with just more than five minutes remaining. But that's as close as the Flyers would get the rest of the way.

Corbitt recovered from a 1-of-6 first half to hit 5-of-8 second-half shots and finish with a team-high 13 points.

With Dayton beginning to find the range, the Irish may have been in some trouble had it not been for the inside play of Gary Voce. The senior co-captain scored 12 points in the middle seven minutes of the second half, including two three-point plays to pick up a Notre Dame offense that was looking for a lift.

Voce also grabbed nine rebounds.

"He's developing just like (Donald) Royal did last year at about the same time as an inside scorer," said Phelps. "He's getting into a groove where we can count on him for a basket or to draw a foul inside. He's just getting more confidence each game."

"I've gotten more confident and I'm at the point in my career where (Phelps) wants me with the ball," said Voce, who tied with Rivers for game scoring honors with 18 points.

While the game was no aesthetic masterpiece, Phelps said he was not about to be fussy.

"I'm just happy to win," he said. "I was worried with how we would respond to three games in five days. I thought

Flyers play at a snail's pace, crawl away with 12-point loss

By THERESA KELLY
Sports Writer

In the middle of last night's evening nap, a basketball game broke out at the Joyce ACC.

The game was slow, to say the least. The 32-31 Notre Dame advantage in the second half was a frenzy compared to the 27-16 halftime score. Maybe the late (8 p.m.) start was keeping the players up past their bedtimes.

It was Dayton's game plan to keep the pace slow. They succeeded, but didn't win the game. It was a moral victory, of sorts, but for Notre Dame...

"It was a win," said Irish guard Joe Fredrick.

Dayton tried a few fast breaks in the second half, but was too, you guessed it, slow for David Rivers and the Irish defense.

"They (the Flyers) wanted to play ball control and eat some time off the clock, then look to score," said Irish head coach Digger Phelps. "They didn't want to get into a blow-out type situation."

Why did the Flyers chose to go with a game plan that made the court look bigger, the ball seem heavier and the basket much higher?

The reason was player personnel. The Flyers are not only very inexperienced, but were also hurt by injuries. From 3:59 to go in the first half until 16:11 remaining in the second half the Flyers scored one point.

And although the Irish only scored 10 in that span, it was enough of a lead to put the Flyers out of the contest.

"We felt we had to slow it down if we were going to have any kind of chance," said Dayton head coach Don Donoher. "We were successful in getting into the slow pace, but we just couldn't get the ball to go in."

The Irish schedule consisted of three games (now three victories) in the last five days, including a Tuesday night trip to New Jersey to face Rutgers. Even with the wear and tear, the players were not thrilled with the pace of last night's contest.

"We thought they might try to go at us," said Gary Voce, "figuring we were tired with three games in the last five days."

Apparently, the Flyers thought differently.

"I was pretty disappointed," Fredrick said. "I was hoping for a fast-paced game. I knew a lot of the people on the team, and a faster game would've been more fun."

Although it looked as if the teams were afraid to shoot in case they might wake up the crowd, the Irish were pleased with the victory and even found some positive aspects in the slow pace.

"I think we handled the situation pretty well," Phelps said. "You could play this way in the first round (of the NCAA tournament). You don't know who you're going to play. You might get someone who plays that way. It's good to face them during the season."

NCAA's concern: toilet paper

You may have noticed the new announcement at men's basketball games telling fans not to throw toilet paper, or anything else for that matter, onto the court. The announcement stems from a new ruling by the NCAA on fans throwing streamers, toilet paper or whatever on the court, traditionally after a first basket.

Under the new rule, the referees must assess a two-shot technical foul against the head coach of whichever team's fans threw the streamers and award the ball to the opponents.

Dennis
Corrigan
Sports Editor

"We called Ed Stipes, of the NCAA Basketball Committee, to get a clarification on the ruling," said Notre Dame Assistant Athletic Director Missy Conboy. "He said the officials had no discretion. They had to call the two-shot technical. When we announced it the first time, the officials didn't know they had to call it. We called Stipes to tell him that."

The first thing the officials have to do is determine just whose fans threw what. Obviously if 300 rolls of toilet paper come from the corner of the Joyce Center, the officials are going to whistle Digger Phelps. But suppose just a few come sailing down from midcourt? Then whose fans threw what? Was it an Irish fan or an opponent's? You

Sorin College

--founded 1888--

Brought to you by the Sorin College Centennial Committee

The Sorin Experiment

As part of the campus expansion in 1888, Notre Dame took a radical step in building the first Catholic college dormitory in America with private rooms. So radical was the plan that one account says Father Sorin sent the president, Thomas Walsh, on a bogus trip to Europe in order to start the project.

By the 1880's, the dream that had begun with a crude, wooden chapel in the wilderness was rapidly expanding and needed a transition into a true, Catholic University. The Main Building was becoming overcrowded and officials wanted to attract older students and expand the Law School. Students from grade school through college studied, slept, and ate together in a communal system at the Main Building. The plan for a dormitory with single rooms was revolutionary in Catholic education and highly controversial. Suspicious Victorians questioned this radical departure and wondered what adolescents would do with such freedom, but they were assured by the Scholastic that the rooms would be "large enough to encourage study and at the same time small enough to discourage visiting." "The privileges of Sorin Hall" were also limited only to juniors and seniors of exceptional academic status and character.

One of the many legends behind the conception of the hall has it that Father John Zahm, the innovative vice-president of the university, originally proposed the single-room dorm. However, Rev. Thomas Walsh, the more conservative president, was hesitant about such a radical move. Zahm then appealed to Sorin, the retired president and 1888 Fr. Edward Sorin, C.S.C. for whom the Hall is named on the occasion of his fifty year anniversary as a priest.

The Sorin College name change protests

In 1969 Sorin Hall split from the University of Notre Dame in a dramatic protest gesture against University policy and established itself as a self-sufficient and independent College. The protestors were few in number and their words were louder than their actions. The words they utilized were 'Sorin College' and they were etched on to a small wooden plaque and raised to the roof of the Sorin porch.

The idea of identifying the hall as independent of the University did not manifest itself until the late 1960's. The image however, had always rested on the minds of Sorin's residents who were for the most part, 'worldly and experienced' upperclassmen and graduate students who enjoyed being set apart.

The new entity, based on the tradition amassed from the hall's vast history, was modeled after the Ivy League's conception of the independent college in a University.

The withdrawal of Sorin failed to make the local headlines and was a relatively small event compared to some of the other happenings on the campus at that time. The 'Sorin College' sign was erected and a few lighthearted speeches were given in front of the boisterous and 'newly emancipated' student body of Sorin College.

This centennial year the 'College' status will be recognized formally with the 'Sorin College First Annual Commencement Exercises.' College diplomas will be distributed to the graduating seniors after they complete a commemorative day of classes on Saturday April 9th.

The "Colonel" of the Law School

Notre Dame's Law School founded in 1869 came to prominence in Sorin Hall under its colorful Dean, William Hoynes. With flair, imagination and hard work, the "Colonel", as he preferred to be known, built up the quality and size of the school during its thirty-year occupation of the first floor.

Fr. Andrew Morrissey, Sorin's first rector and later University President, credited Hoynes with the Law School's foundation and Hoynes typically took the praise. Hoynes reputedly read the dictionary to maintain his eloquence in the classroom and to complement his high profile style of dress. Fellow Sorinites, fascinated by their ostentatious Dean-in-Residence, were amused by his public appearance and eloquent language and often played practical jokes at his expense. In 1905, after being drenched by water tossed from the third floor, Hoynes pleaded with such effectiveness that a porch was soon constructed for his protection.

Hoynes came to Notre Dame as an undergraduate in 1867 before becoming the editor of a New Jersey newspaper. He later attended Law School at Michigan, where he received his LLB in 1872. University President Fr. Walsh invited him to Notre Dame in 1883 to become the Dean of the Law School.

"Colonel" Hoynes was a instirmental in the provision of the 'moot' court room on the south side where his students could practice and he himself lectured there for hours daily.

The Law course was extended from two to three years in this early period. Though not a Colonel while in the service, the students chose to give him this title because he took responsibility for the training of the military on campus. These became known as the "Hoynes" Light Guards.

In 1923 the newly appointed dean was Thomas F. Konop and the Law School had moved from Sorin to its new premises in Hoynes Hall, now Riley Hall of Music. Hoynes retired to Sorin. His stately appearance and robust ways were noticeably absent as he retired. When teased about the use of a cane, Hoynes shrugged it off and never again used a cane, though it was

Viewpoint

"Paul Fenlon lived in the room I live in now. He had it decorated like a Victorian drawing room with pictures all over the walls. The plaster was chipping and the wall needed a new coat of paint, but Paul would not hear of it. While Paul was on a family vacation in Pennsylvania pictures were taken of the room from several different angles, the walls were done over, the pictures were put back according to the photos, and Paul Fenlon never noticed." - Monk Malloy

"We live in a place with walls that should speak. In the research for this feature, we have stumbled upon some of the better known moments as recorded by writers down through the years. We owe much to those who have documented the history and to those who helped present it today in a fashion that is accessible to many." - Joseph Mc Kenna, Rector

"Sorin Hall is the paradigm, the model of what a College and University situation should be. It is an intimate hall where a small number of students and faculty can live together." - James Carberry '50

The Victorian style of a Sorin room in the 1890's.

"Living in Sorin symbolized being a Senior. I was just glad to get a high enough grade point average to live in a tower room." - Walt Collins

"My closest friends today are still the friends I made during my years at Notre Dame." - Walter Lee Fleming '40 leader of the Holy Cross congregation, for help. The intrigue thickened when Fr. Sorin sent Walsh to Europe for a science convention so that Zahm, as acting president, could commission and supervise the design of the hall. Sorin blessed the cornerstone on May 27, 1888 as the climax of the school's celebration of his sacerdotal golden jubilee. The day's festivities also included a Solemn High Mass in Sacred Heart Church, a banquet, military displays, and fireworks. Two days later, Walsh returned, shocked to see the inevitable expansion of the campus.

The original building of 60 rooms was completed that year, and students moved in on January 12, 1889 after Father Sorin held dedication ceremonies in the chapel of St. Thomas Aquinas on the first floor. J.E. Cusack, a member of the first football team of 1887, had the honor of the first room pick because of his high academic standing.

Sorin Hall also housed the first Catholic Law School in America. Under the guidance of Dean William Hoynes, it was moved from its cramped quarters in the Main Building to the more spacious classrooms in the south wing of Sorin's first floor. This area included a moot court room designed to give the law students practical experience.

The second floor rooms on the north side became known as "Professors' Alley" since they were the home of a series of bachelor professors. In the early days of the hall, the basement was the center of recreation where students were able to play cards, billiards, and piano. It also contained a reading room and a smoking room where a debating society and a "Browning Club" met. In later years, the basement was partitioned into rooms that housed Rockne and many other great Notre Dame athletes.

Due to the success of the Sorin Experiment and the rapid expansion of the university, the north and south wings were extended in 1897 adding forty more rooms and nearly doubling the residential capacity. The infamous porch was tacked on later in April of 1905, but the original plan for a four-sided structure with four entrances and an enclosed quadrangle was never completed. Nevertheless, the Sorin Hall experiment in single-room residences allowed Notre Dame to make a major step towards becoming a true Catholic university, competitive with the best colleges in the nation.

Paul Fenlon:

Paul Fenlon, professor of English, 64 year resident of Sorin hall and last of the Notre Dame bachelor dons, possessed a "genius for friendship" according to those who knew him.

When Fenlon died on November 7, 1980, the long tradition of bachelor professors living in student halls ended.

According to Edward Fisher, Fenlon's friend and biographer Paul Fenlon first came to Notre Dame as a student in 1915, "when Father John W. Cavanaugh was president, Knute Rockne was a chemistry professor, the electricity in student residences was turned off at 10 p.m., and tuition, room, and board was $400 a year." He lived his first years in Corby Hall, but took up residence in Sorin, at age twenty, during World War I. He became one of the first underclass residents of Sorin, originally a senior dorm, when Father Cavanaugh promised diplomas to any seniors who chose to serve in the war. Many senior Sorinites, unsure of their academic status, jumped at the chance for a guaranteed diploma, thus opening up room for juniors in the dorm.

After graduation, Father Joseph

Father John O'Hara: Cardinal

John O'Hara, Prefect of Religion, Sorin Hall resident, and founder of the "Religious Bulletin" was born in 1888 just 26 days before the birth of the college dormitory that would later become his home as priest and teacher. As a spiritual director and president, O'Hara has written his name indelibly in the University history books through his promotion of traditional Catholic worship on campus and his support for the "Fightin' Irish" football teams of the period.

John O'Hara entered the graduating class of 1912 and in August of his senior year, signed up as a novice in the Holy Cross order. After a 1924 move to 141 Sorin, the new priest became known as a counselor and confessor and officiated at the obligatory morning and evening prayers as well as Saturday and Sunday Mass. According to Fr McAvoy, O'Hara's biographer, this energetic young priest helped develop the religious spirit of Notre Dame, through his promotion of practices such as frequent communion, confession, Novenas and visits to the Grotto.

Rising at 4.30 a.m., he awoke people for the early Mass and dispensed communion and confession while his teaching duties included Spanish, Commerce and Religion. Until 10 p.m. he received numerous students who sought his guidance from an old leather chair in Room 141. Known for his statistical analysis of religious practice on campus by counting the number of hosts consumed at daily communion, O'Hara released figures on a regular basis to show that the religious life of the campus was improving. From only a few communicants in 1916 the average daily communion increased to 1469 in 1937-38.

O'Hara's religious fervor also combined with the "Fightin' Irish" football spirit that developed under fellow

The Porch: Biggest Umbrella On Campus

Built in 1905 as an umbrella for the eccentric professor "Colonel" Hoynes, the Sorin Porch has added a unique dimension to the activities of the hall, providing a gathering place for hall photographs, mail deliveries, talent shows, and impromptu beauty contests in the spring.

During the 1930's, the legendary rector Rev. John "Pop" Farley personally distributed the mail here three times daily, often sniffing the envelopes for perfume and teasing the recipients about their contents. Anti-war demonstrators attached the "Sorin College" sign to the front of the porch in 1969 when Sorin seceded from Notre Dame to protest University policies in the Vietnam War. Until recently, Sorinites lounging on the porch held mock beauty pageants by flashing numbered cards to rate the co-eds passing by. It has also been the site of numerous talent shows, pep rallies, and concerts.

Even more legendary is the story of its construction.

The popular but poorly documented story behind the porch was narrated by Rev. Thomas Lahey in his biography on Colonel Hoynes. According to his account, "in those less refined days," it was a favorite "indoor sport" of residents to occasionally dump buckets of water from the second and third floor windows onto people leaving by the front door for the evening. After hearing the telltale squeak of the door opening on one such night, a third floor prankster dumped his bucket's load in the usual manner. This time, however, the victim happened to be Professor Hoynes, Dean of the Law School and first floor resident. According to Lahey, the "Colonel" was "immaculately clothed for some formal affair in Washington Hall," and the bucket's deluge drenched Hoynes "to the immediate discomfiture of everyone concerned.... His fist raised to high heaven" never before "so angry or so eloquent," Hoynes "called every name in the calendar previously recorded. He traced his ancestry in a half dozen languages."

Hoynes was loved by Notre Dame so concerned that he decided immediately to take the future protection of the building... as a perpetual reminder not to make a mistake." Therefore, on account, it was built as a protection for Colonel Hoynes.

Fenlon lived in Sorin for 64 years as a student, teacher, and then as a retired professor. His room in the last years of his life was on the first floor, in the northeast turret, nearest Sacred Heart Church.

Recently, the first floor St. Thomas Aquinas Chapel has been renovated with money raised in the the Paul Fenlon Memorial fund. pranksters -- an intriguing story but hard to swallow.

However, the extensive research of Philip Hicks ('80), a former Sorin resident, suggests that this account is highly plausible. He verified the incident with references found in the Dome and Scholastic and dated it to March of 1905. The April 1, 1905 Scholastic announced, "Preparations have already begun for the building of a porch for Sorin Hall. Upon erection of the scaffolding many remarks of regret came from the Sorin Hall.

The Statue saga began one morning in 1952 when the pedestal which held the bronze figure in Sorin was found vacant. Months later, intensive official investigation had failed to provide any clues as to the whereabouts of the statue. Then one day there was a glimmer of hope in the form of a postcard from France... "Visited the Louvre today. Paris swings at night... Father Sorin." For weeks postcards and telegrams found their way to the Golden Dome from departure points that dotted the globe. The worldly statue visited such events as the coronation of Elizabeth II, the Kentucky Derby and the Indianapolis 500.

Explanations for the statue's unexpected sabbatical are numerous and have ranged from plausible to just short of coherent. One of the leading accounts portrays a tale of collegiate practical pranking. It seems that in the early winter of 1952, two Dillon undergraduates collaborated to provoke an altercation between the "anti-intellectual creeps" of Sorin and the "nerds of Walsh." The conspirators allegedly took the statue and buried it in a sand trap on the golf course. When finals neared the pranksters were forced to improvise a conclusion to their jest. They publicized the return of the then notorious statue in local bars and theaters and arranged to have the final telegram sent from Washington. On the big day they retrieved the statue (which had since been stored in an off-campus garage) and brought it to campus where a small group of students had appeared. Instead of putting the figure in a cab the jokers carried their burden to the back of Cushing whereupon they yelled, "Hey Sorin," and then proceeded to run away undetected. They had completed the perfect crime.

There were several sightings of a short still figure with fishing pole in hand, stiffly resting against the bow of a rowing boat on St. Mary's Lake.

The Sorin rector by this time had reached his limit and placed the statue in hiding. This measure was eventually nullified by the insistent pleas of the students who wanted to see the statue back in Sorin Hall but the Homecoming weekend of 1962 saw the sculpture descend from the heavens via helicopter and land at the Library construction site. From there, jubilant students escorted the airborne-qualified statue by chariot to Sorin where celebrations continued.

Again the statue disappeared from campus when Sorin seniors took their friend home and in 1972, Rev. James Burtchaeff tracked down the work of art and brought it back to Notre Dame. The figure stayed under the locked surveillance of Burtchaeff for nearly ten years. In 1983 Sorin Hall was renovated and the statue was returned for good. As a precautionary measure the sculpture was filled with concrete and soldered to the floor with iron rods.

needed. At the age of eighty, he appeared in full military uniform at a Memorial day parade and though not fit to make the march, none could refuse him the opportunity. He was annoyed that two boy scouts accompanied him on either side on his short march to the cemetery.

When Hoynes lay ill in Sorin, Fr Burns had to have the doctor visit in pretense that he was a former graduate. This went well until two days later when Hoynes came in with a bill from a doctor and denied that he had ever seen one. Fr Burns explained that someone in the doctor's office must have gotten the name mixed up and the Colonel accepted this solution. Still refusing health care, he finally was forced into hospital and died in a comatose state on March 28, 1933 without making any will.

Knute Rockne of Notre Dame: coach, actor, psychologist

In every sense of the word Knute Rockne was an All-American.

According to his many biographers such as Lovelace, Brondfield and Stuhldreher, Rockne's character dictated his success. Moose Krause who met Rockne in his freshman year could surely attest to this fact: "... It is true that certain men are created or born to leadership, Rockne surely was one such." It is also said that he dominated everything and everyone, whether on the football field, in the classroom, at a coach's convention, a business meeting or a social function. He has been called a zealot, a fierce perfectionist who analyzed every phase of his trade like no other had attempted, a psychologist, a supreme actor, and undoubtedly an extraordinary coach.

Born Knute (pronounced Kanute) Kenneth Rockne in 1888, he was raised in Chicago after immigrating at the age of four from Voss, Norway. He was a mischievous child who no doubt lived up to the anecdotes told of him later. Failing to finish North West High School in Chicago because of excessive absences, Knute worked for 4 years before being convinced to attend Notre Dame in 1910, a college of which he had hardly heard.

After qualifying as an undergraduate, he worked a dozen jobs one of which was a waiter at the university dining halls to pay for school. Because the dormitory was cheaper than an individual room, Rockne moved into Brownson Hall for his first two years. His roommate was none other than Gus Dorais who would later help him perfect the forward pass. In his third year Rockne moved to the more prestigious Corby Hall, a perennial choice of upperclassman at the time, and took up chemistry. He would later graduate magna cum laude. Finally, in his senior year Rockne moved to the basement of Sorin Hall, then known as the "subway." Legend has it that Rock's steel grid over his window was loose. Being an American businessman, he charged Sorin Hall residents for post-curfew entrances and exists.

Rockne's innovative skills carried over to the gridiron. By playing on the scrub teams off and on at Brownson Hall for his first couple of years, he learned how to compensate for his small size by using his head. In the summer of 1913 before his senior year, Knute and Gus Dorais obtained jobs as life-guards at Cedar Point, a resort on Lake Erie. They packed a couple of footballs and began practicing the forward pass with Gus as quarterback and Rockne his receiver (timed at 4.6 in the forty). The forward pass up to this time had been frowned upon due to its difficulty. That fall after perfecting the pass in organized practice, Dorais and Rockne displayed their newly found skills in a 35-15 victory over a greatly favored Army team. Old fashioned football had met its death.

Four years later in 1918, Rockne's skill in understanding, analyzing, and innovating the game, landed him the head coaching job. In thirteen years as head coach, Rockne won 105, lost but 12 and tied 5.

Athletes: At home in the subway

It is no accident that the first name on the 1888 Sorin Hall roomlist was J. E. Cusack halfback on the first Notre Dame football team of 1887. For since that time Sorin has become home to some of the greatest players and coaches in college football history.

Over the years, athletes seemed to migrate to the basement of Sorin, affectionately referred to as the "subway" by its residents. In fact, the "subway" housed two of the most legendary men of college football. The immortal Knute Rockne shared a room in this pipe-lined den of Sorin with his famous cohort, Gus Dorais. Dorais and Rockne went down in the record books together in November of 1913, when they revolutionized the use of the forward pass to trounce the heavily favored Army cadets 35-13.

During the glory years of the 1920's, Rockne won 3 national championships, produced 11 All-Americans, and compiled the highest winning percentage in the history of football. The subways reached its heyday came during these years which Rockne coached. During this time, the subway housed stars like Hunk Anderson, Fritz Slackford, Roger Kiley, Buck Shaw, Frank Reese, Eddie Anderson, Harry Boujan, Frank Caughlin, Johnny Mohardt, Harry Mehre, and Chet Wynne.

One of the few freshman ever to live in the Sorin "subway" was Harry Stuhldreher. Stuhldreher roomed here in 1921 with veteran quarterback Chet Grant, the 138-pounder who was ten years Harry's senior. Stuhldreher must have learned a great deal from his aged mentor because he went on to quarterback the 1924 "Four Horseman" team, probably the most glamorous team in all of football history. Stuhldreher was not the only "Horseman" to live in Sorin. His backfield partner, Don Miller, the 161-pound right halfback, lived in room 301 during the 1924 school year.

As if these great legends were not enough, Paul Hornung, Johnny Lattner and Johnny Lujack, three of Notre Dame's seven Heisman winners, have also lived in the hall. In addition to being a football player of the highest caliber, Lujack also won monograms in basketball, baseball, and track while at Notre Dame. Edward "Moose" Krause, another resident of the hall, is also remembered for his all-around contributions to many Notre Dame sports. A football player while in school, "Moose" went on to become Notre Dame's athletic director.

All the glory is not confined to the past however.

Recent greats that have lived in Sorin include Rocky Blier, Ken MacAfee and Steve Beuerlein.

The Notre Dame Victory March

After successive road trips to Ann Arbor and Bloomington in the Football season of 1908, Michael and John Shea, two Sorin residents, decided that Notre Dame deserved to have its own school song.

Michael, the elder brother was a music instructor and had continued to live in Sorin after his 1905 graduation. John was a graduate student in history and had been Senior Class President and Editor of the Dome and Scholastic. He was also known as a prankster and a writer of limericks.

Michael rehearsed the tune on the piano in Sorin's first floor reading room while John returned to his room and composed the words to his brother's melody. When the Shea brothers met again, the reading room was occupied and Michael, an accomplished organist led his brother up to the loft in nearby Sacred Heart Church. Here the music and lyrics were joined to create The Notre Dame Victory March.

In the Winter of the same year, Michael, while at home in Holyoke, Massachusetts, met with Professor William Hammond, his organ instructor and one of the best organists in the east. After hearing of their creation, the professor invited the brothers down to the Second Congregational Church and the rendition was loudly praised by all who attended the impromptu recital.

The Notre Dame Victory March was first performed in public in the rotunda of the Administration Building during the traditional Easter morning concert in April, 1909. The song steadily grew in popularity and significance as it achieved national and international fame. Paraphrased more than any other College song, it is also the basis for many high school fight songs. During World War II, a U.S. infantryman wrote these moving words to the president of Notre Dame according to a Press Release of 1958:

"Father, the big offensive toward Rome will begin soon. American and British troops are lined up side by side, and tonight the bands are playing. And I thought you'd like to know, Father, that they are playing not 'God Save the King', not 'The Star Spangled Banner', but 'The Notre Dame Victory March.'"
