Students march in effort to 'take back the night'

By COLLEEN GANNON
News Writer

Members of the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's community attempted to raise community awareness about the fear of walking at night by participating in Thursday night's campus-wide "Take Back the Night March."

The participants in the second annual candlelight march followed a path starting in front of O'Shaughnessy Hall leading to the Notre Dame end of St. Mary's Road. In addition to discussion between the participants, five seniors addressed the group along the way.

Seniors Lisa Keckler and Alicia Sierra spoke to the group in front of O'Shaughnessy Hall. The purpose of the walk was "to raise community awareness about the fear women and men have walking on the campus at night," said Keckler.

"I hope that this walk can help take away the stigma attached to taking precautions," said Sierra.

Such incidents as students making jeers at Safewalk promote this very dangerous stigma, she added. "Many students feel discomfort in utilizing the new Safewalk service."

Encouraging people to use Safewalk and security services is another purpose of the walk. "We hope to make these services more approachable," Keckler said.

In front of the Administration Building, senior Rita Robinett spoke about not blaming the victim.

"This problem does not stem from the victims of attacks," said Robinett. "It stems from the society that allows the attacks to happen and from the people who are the attackers."

Seniors Erin O'Neill and Mary Sue Twohy also spoke during the march. At the march's final stop by St. Mary's Road, Twohy offered a moment of remembrance for the attacks that have happened on the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's campuses.

Women United for Justice and Peace, the Women's Concerns Commission of Student Government, the Center for Social Concerns, Campus Alliance for Rape Elimination and the ND/SMC Democratic Socialists of America sponsored the march.

Vandal damages CCE, Univ. Club

By MEGAN JUNIUS
News Writer

Three windows at the Center for Continuing Education and one window at the University Club were broken by a vandal with part of a traffic barricade late Tuesday night, according to Phil Johnson, assistant director of Security.

Building service employees of the CCE heard noises and called Security, Johnson said. When Security arrived, the suspect was seen running to the central part of campus.

According to Johnson, the suspect is described as a white male of medium build. He stands approximately six feet tall and has blondish-brown hair. Blood was found at the scene of the crime. Security is unaware of any specific injury the suspect may have suffered, Johnson said.

It is unknown whether or not the suspect is a student.

Other Security Beat information includes the reporting of two separate instances at O'Hara-Grace Townhouses.

Visiting prof. speaks on effects of viewing today's soaps

By ANNA MARIE TABOR
News Writer

A visiting professor at Saint Mary's described the feeling of distaste she had after watching soap operas for six hours every day for several weeks.

"It was in the pit of my stomach, like having eaten only cotton candy all day," said Ruth Monroe, professor and chair of the Department of Theatre at Drury College.

Monroe pointed out the similarities between soap operas and newscasts as she read from her sabbatical: "TV Doesn't Have to Be Cotton Candy: Balancing Immediacy and Reflection."

While many students may argue otherwise, Monroe recognized the dangers of viewers "developing real relationships with fictional characters." The chief audiences of soap operas are lower middle class people who live alone and students. Monroe argued that TV creators play on our need to know and give "insufficient representation of the complexities of living."

While soaps are more likely to make the lower middle class lives "less drab," they are more likely to provide an escape for students. Some critics of soap operas suggest that "people are not satisfied with what they're watching and have to fit their tastes to what's available," Monroe said.

Today's popular soap operas contain several common characteristics that Monroe has found through her studies. She identified interrelated plot multiplicity, melodramatic subjects and flat characters that grow and change over many years. This seems to be the stereotypical formula that draws audiences back to know the outcome, said Monroe.

The formula method is what correlates soap operas to news programs. A series of political and familiar crises appear on the news every day that prove we "not only live, but watch ourselves live," Monroe stated. Both mediums, she said, provide a continuous nature that maintains audience appeal.

"Thinking and Watching: Popular Culture and Intellectuals," the three-day lecture and discussion series continues throughout the weekend.

Unlucky leprechaun to miss game

By MONICA YANT
Associate News Editor

Bryan Liptak will not be doing any pushups this weekend, but it will not be because the Irish fail to score a touchdown.

Liptak, better known as the Irish Leprechaun, broke his left arm practicing gymnastics Monday. He will miss this week's game against Navy, but said he anticipates performing at the Tennessee game Nov. 10.

He said the injury should not affect his role as a part of the cheerleading squad.

"I won't be able to do everything I planned," he said. "This will slow up my goals for the rest of the year."

Tricks such as the "helicopter" and complicated flips will have to be put off for a while, Liptak said.

As for pushups, one of the Leprechaun's traditional duties, Liptak is optimistic. He will work something out, he said, possibly doing one-armed pushups although "that could be really tough."

The injury occurred when Liptak was throwing a back tuck and came out of the move too early. He used his arm to break the fall, and ended up breaking both bones in the arm.

"I've been doing them (back tucks) all year," he said, "so it's really a freakish sort of thing that it happened."

Liptak was admitted to Memorial Hospital of South Bend and underwent surgery Tuesday morning. His arm is bandaged and being kept elevated, which he said is "really uncomfortable."

He will be released from the hospital this afternoon, but will recover in the Student Health Center through the weekend. The arm will be put in a cast Monday, according to Liptak.

The injury may be used to Liptak's advantage, he said. "I don't think it's going to be much of a problem."

ND 'humor' carries twisted tradition

The top 10 typical ND "jokes":

1. "Hey man, look at all those chicks at the Sundae bar and it's not even Sunday!"
2. "I can't wait to go to IU and get some real women. They're easy, not like ND chicks. My friend was there last weekend and he....."

Jeanne Blasi
Asst. Production Mgr.

3. "No, not her, her left nostril is too fat. No, her thighs are too skinny. Now Paulina and those other babes on the wall over there, those are Hot Babes!"
4. "Hey, guess what the most unused item in the vending machines in female dorms is? SLIM -FAST!"

5. "Have you seen the new "No Fat Chicks" T-shirts? I bought one for every day of the week!"
6. "That girl's HOT! She must go to SMC."

7. "Holy Cow, look at the guns on that babel!"
8. "Hey, did you hear that last year, Walsh's food sales grossed more than De-Bartolo!"

9. "Did you hear the new analogy on the SAT? ND chicks:Fat :: Hot Fudge:Sundae."
10. "I don't understand why girls take everything guys say so seriously."

The other day, a friend of mine asked why everyone always says that relations between ND men and women are poor.

Well, I am sure the above jokes don't have anything to do with it. As I thought about these "knee-slappers," I realized that many people do not realize the effects of these seemingly "harmless" jokes.

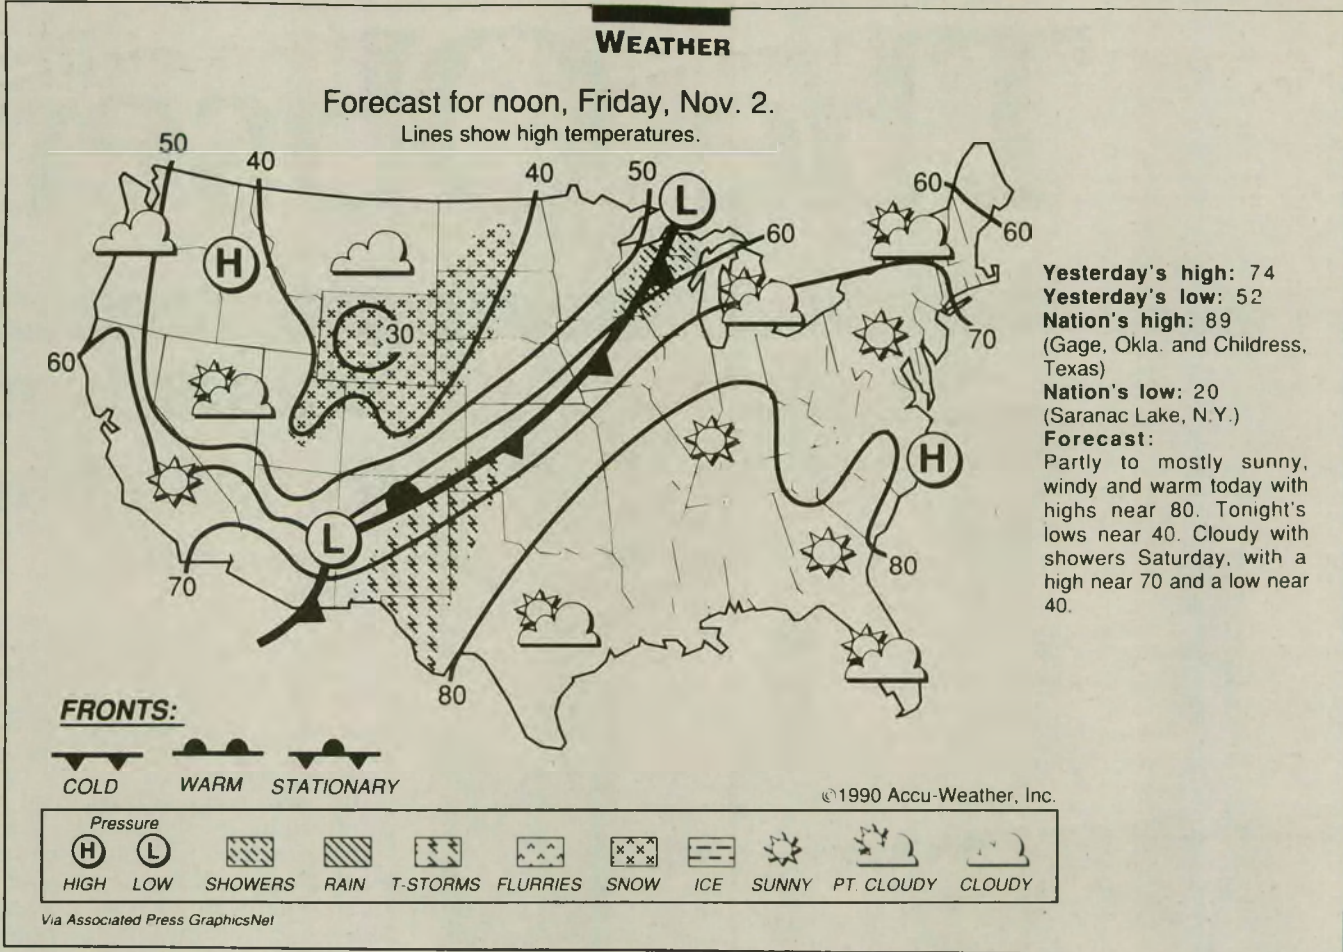

For example, imagine being an ND woman at a party and hearing various guys telling the jokes, laughing, and agreeing with them. Even if this woman is perfect, attractive and thin, I am willing to bet that the comments stick in her head. She may become self-conscious and wonder, "Is this the image I am presenting to the men? Do they see me this way also?"

It seems to be a tradition at ND to slam on the women. I remember my brother warning me not to be offended by the female stereotypes prevalent at ND and not to take them to heart. He said, "Don't worry, they have names for all of the dorms—Walsh Whales, Bay of Pigs, Past Gorillas— they don't mean anything."

Boy he wasn't kidding when he warned me. I can imagine what a naive freshman Walsh girl would think upon coming to Notre Dame. In her first year, she would be subjected to all of these "side-splitting" jokes, called a Walsh Whale, and watch merciless slamming of ND women in the Sorin talent show and the Keenan Revue.

Unfortunately, she probably would not realize that it doesn't stop after freshman year. The same jokes continue every year. They never die. I shudder to think that they may be becoming a part of the Notre Dame tradition.

Let's just hope that eating disorders are not also becoming a part of the Notre Dame tradition.

Lawyers picked a jury Thursday and began testimony in a case of potty parity. Denise Wells, a 33-year-old legal secretary, is being tried for using the men's restroom at a concert. Her trip to the toilet made national news and led to talk-show appearances with Johnny Carson, Geraldo Rivera and Joan Rivers. But on Thursday she was barred by her lawyer and sister, Valorie Wells Davenport, from talking to reporters. At one point before the proceedings began, she went to the women's restroom and emerged smiling while nearly a dozen photographers clicked away.

When Ken Kesey regrouped the old Merry Pranksters to drive across the country and maybe donate his psychedelic bus to the Smithsonian Institution, he had another trick up his sleeve. The bus currently on the road is not the one that drove into the lore of the psychedelic 1960s. It is a newer model incorporating parts of the old and the Smithsonian does not want it, institution spokeswoman Madeleine Jacobs said Thursday. Kesey and the Merry Pranksters became heroes when Tom Wolfe chronicled their 1964 trip aboard the bus, named Further, in his "Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test." Kesey was a bright new literary light then from his novels "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" and "Sometimes a Great Notion."

Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, commander of U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf, said Thursday American troops could destroy Iraq but such action might not be "in the interest of the long-term balance of power" in the region. Schwarzkopf, who assumed command of more than 210,000 American troops in Saudi Arabia in August, said war could erupt any time, but he does not expect it to. "President Bush has stated again and again, our argument is not with the Iraqi people, and that (military action) would cause thousands and thousands of innocent casualties." In an interview published Friday by The New York Times, Schwarzkopf said he recommended to the Pentagon that combat units in Saudi Arabia be rotated out of the country every six to eight months.

Two Canadian women who saved a neighbor from a knife-wielding attacker were among 18 people recognized Thursday by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission. Grace Nolan and Irene Beaton were among 7,495 Americans and Canadians honored by the commission since its founding by Pittsburgh industrialist Andrew Carnegie in 1904. The commission every year honors people who risked their lives to save or to try to save others' lives. Nolan, 50, of Whitby, Ontario, and Beaton, 67, of Lindsay, Ontario, confronted a man who broke into the home of a neighbor, Dorothy Blackhall, 72, and slashed her face. Blackhall survived, and the attacker was placed in a mental institution, Nolan said.

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari declared Thursday that his reform program has propelled Mexico out of its economic crisis, and he defended his decision to negotiate a free-trade accord with the United States. But his comments, made in a state-of-the-union address, were repeatedly interrupted by shouts of opposition lawmakers. "We have left fear and weariness behind," he told this nation of 81 million people in the nationally broadcast speech. He assured Mexicans their jealously guarded national sovereignty would survive a free trade pact, the economic opening of Mexico's borders, and the privatization of state businesses like banks and telecommunications.

Computer system helps writing skills

By KATE MANUEL
News Writer

Students can improve their writing skills by working in a text-based environment with a community of readers rather than by receiving critical instruction from only a teacher, according to a creator of an innovative computer instructional program.

"We didn't start as an organization trying to build software and move into the computer market," said Paul Taylor, a professor at the University of Texas-Austin, and creator of the Daedalus Instructional System (DIS).

"We started out as a group of English graduate students and faculty working to build a better classroom by using the different strengths of various English specialties," said Taylor. "We focus on students working together to learn the subject matter, rather than just passively absorbing from the teacher."

DIS is a computer network which allows students and the instructor to engage in a discussion via computer, as opposed to normal oral classroom discussion. DIS was developed as a response to problems which have arisen in teaching English to students.

According to Taylor's lecture, "Computer Networks and Collaborative Learning: The Challenge of Teaching in a Chaotic Environment," there are three fundamental problems:

- Students do not come with the background to converse effectively. They are more familiar with slang than with the language of academic discourse.

- Students see writing as a performance rather than an act of communication. They are tied to a sense of letter grades without having a sense of writing for the reader.

- Teachers have a tendency to emphasize passive rather than active learning. They spend time that could be spent in producing texts on lecturing about good writing.

Taylor does not entirely agree with the social epistemic theory of language, the notion that reality is entirely constructed through discourse, but he does feel it offers an exciting potential for change.

"It seems the height of arrogance to say that things have no reality aside from what humans think, but we do shape reality through language," he said. "If we chose to change the world, we can do it by talking to each other."

Taylor also draws on a heteroglossia theory of language, a theory which claims that novels are the height of literature because they have different characters speaking.

"One work embodies all these dissenting voices and the author does not bring them together in a unified statement of the truth," Taylor said. "As a teacher, I am not one voice. I privilege the voices of the students."

According to Taylor, students often do not have a topic or do not know what to say because they view writing as an isolated act and believe ideas come as "revelations from out of the blue," rather than from discussion.

Teaching in an electronic classroom is based on a text-sharing pedagogy in which the teacher becomes a fellow writer in the network, according to Taylor.

"Often the students don't get a model of a writer. Teachers tend to be pretty good writers. It can be overwhelming to see a book that the teacher has written; they think I can't write a book," he said. "If the teacher is willing to show the students there are drafts for the book, this gives the student encouragement."

Computerized discussions have several advantages not present in oral discussions, according to Taylor. Typically, few students participate in classroom discussions. Computer discussions require participation by all, and they often produce as many different written viewpoints as there are students.

The DIS software implements six different programs that, according to Taylor, integrate with each other to facilitate the writing process. These programs include a word processor, a prompter for receiving ideas, a revising method, a direct mailing service and an electronic discussion program.

Computer open house aids users

By MIKE DE FRANCO
News Writer

The Office of University Computing (OUC) will hold an open house for students and faculty to better inform them about computer clusters and how they can aid the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's community.

The OUC is giving this presentation so that "people will be more aware of the various computer clusters around campus," according to Marilyn Van Bergen, project coordinator.

Hours for the open house are 2 to 4 p.m. in the lobby of the Computing Center and Math Building.

"I hope this will give students the opportunity to see what's available and also give them the opportunity to ask questions," she said. "Some students hesitate to go to the clusters because they're not sure what to do. This is a low-key way to get information."

Van Bergen said that she hopes that this informational session will make students and faculty more aware of the four new computer clusters that recently opened. These clusters can be found in the Fitzpatrick Hall of Engineering, Hayes-Healy Center, Nieuwland Science Hall and CCMB.

As guests enter the open house, they will be greeted by an informational kiosk, an interactive computer that will allow people to find out what's available in the clusters. By moving a mouse to point on the computer screen, guests will be able to find the information they are looking for.

The open house will feature a ceremony officially opening the new clusters at 2:30 p.m. Don Spicer, assistant provost for University Computing, will be a featured guest speaker at this ceremony.

A presentation describing all of the clusters' features will follow the ceremony. The open house will conclude with tours at some of the clusters.

2 students killed in van crash in Ill.

MONROE, Ind. (AP) — Two students were killed and six others were hospitalized with injuries Thursday when a van carrying a choir group from an Illinois college overturned on Interstate 65, police said.

Witnesses said the van, which was carrying 11 students from Olivet Nazarene University in Kankakee, Ill., was southbound on I-65 near the Tippecanoe County-Clinton County line when the vehicle dropped off the shoulder of the road around 11 a.m.

Listed as dead were passengers Alex Anderson, 21, of North Olmsted, Ohio., and Cindy Langdon, 21, of Division, Mich., authorities said.

The driver, 22-year-old student Neal Woodruff of Bourbonnais, Ill., apparently overcorrected and the van entered the median, flipping over several times before coming to rest in the northbound lane of the highway, witnesses said.

Rebels bomb Japanese police, killing one officer

TOKYO (AP) — Two bombs set by anti-imperial extremists rocked a Tokyo police dormitory late Thursday, killing an officer and injuring six people, police said Friday.

The Metropolitan Police Department also found explosives at a second dormitory and a public restroom in western Tokyo early Friday. In central Japan, a gas bomb was lobbed at a police station before dawn Friday, but no injuries were reported.

Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu told reporters the blasts were "extremely regrettable and unforgivable."

Misoji Sakamoto, the government's chief spokesman, said the attackers were guilty of a "despicable" act that called for "all available legal measures to uproot terrorism."

Police say they suspect the involvement of radicals, but no group immediately claimed responsibility.

The attack comes as Japan is mobilizing its largest security operation to stave off violence by anti-imperial extremists who have vowed to disrupt the enthronement ceremonies of Emperor Akihito.

The Nov. 12 civil coronation is to be attended by representatives from more than 150 countries, including U.S. Vice President Dan Quayle and Prince Charles of Britain.

A police official said the three incidents were being viewed as a single campaign by the extremists.

Police identified the dead officer as Hiroshi Aoki, 48. He died almost immediately after the two blasts, just before 11 p.m., ripped through the dormitory in Shinjuku, a bustling district that is one of Tokyo's most popular nightspots.

Two officers were injured, one with a serious burn on the back of his left leg and the other with a broken left arm and two broken legs, according to a Metropolitan Police Department official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

He said the dorm's cook, his son and two other police officers also were injured.

The police official said the type of explosives and other details of the blast were under investigation. The bombs had been placed near a garbage collection area inside the dormitory complex, officials said.

ND libraries and archives get grant

By MICHAEL SCHOLL
News Writer

The University of Notre Dame Archives and University Libraries have been awarded a $48,706 federal grant to create machine-readable bibliographic records of about 500 University collections.

The grant was awarded as part of the government's Strengthening College and Research Libraries Program. This program was created by the Higher Education Act of 1965 in order to improve public access to scholarly papers.

Notre Dame will be using its grant money to catalog materials "which are of special interest nationally and internationally," according to Kathy Blackstead, ND's library advancement officer.

Upon completion of the project, scheduled for the end of 1991, the bibliographic records of ND's special collections will be reviewable through UNLOC, the University Libraries On-Line Catalog. UNLOC is accessible locally through ND library computer terminals and nationally via computer modems connected with the BITNET information service.

The information in UNLOC is listed in MARC-AMC format, a data system created by the Library of Congress which allows for high-speed searches of bibliographic information with a minimal input of information.

Currently, records for the collections to be cataloged are only available in hard copy. This makes research inconvenient for non-area residents and cumbersome for those who do not know precisely what information to look for, according to Blackstead.

The federal grant received by the University will fund 54 percent of the project's total cost of $90,078. Private funds from various sources will finance the remainder.

The cataloging will be directed by Robert Miller, director of University libraries, and Wendy Schlereth, University archivist. It will be supervised by Charlotte Ames, associate librarian, and William Cawley, associate archivist.

Among the materials scheduled to be cataloged are the 1576-1897 Archives of the Diocese of Louisiana and the Floridas; the personal papers of Civil War general William Tecumseh Sherman, Postmaster General Frank Walker, philosopher Orestes Brownson, early Notre Dame scientists Albert Zahm and Julius Nieuwland, and former Notre Dame president Theodore Hesburgh; and manuscript collections of poet Raymond Ellsworth Larrison, journalist John Frederick, artist Eric Gill and missionary/priest Nicholas Louis Sifferath.

Tenn. lawmaker convicted of Bingo setup

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A state legislator was sentenced Thursday to five years in prison and ordered to pay $48,000 in restitution for setting up an illegal bingo hall in 1986.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Higgins sentenced Rep. Tommy Burnett, once one of the most powerful Democrats in the Legislature, on charges of illegal gambling, conspiracy and six counts of mail fraud.

He said he would wait to sentence Burnett, 48, on an additional mail fraud conviction until he served the five-year prison term.

"It's a sad, sad day," Burnett told reporters. "I think you always feel bad when something like this happens in your life."

Burnett's lawyer Bob Lynch, in arguments before Higgins, characterized Burnett as an enigma — a popular, successful legislator and lawyer who could not manage his personal finances and fell deeply into debt.

"Perhaps I am," Burnett said when asked later by a reporter about the description. "Perhaps sometimes I can do good things and sometimes I can do stupid things."

Arkansas A.G. convicted of expense mishandling

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — State Attorney General Steven Clark was convicted Thursday of abusing his expense privileges. He was fined $10,000 but drew no prison time.

"Obviously, I'm very disappointed," Clark said after the verdict was announced. "As I've said all along, it was never my intention to defraud or deceive."

Judge Perry Whitmore fined Clark $10,000 but did not sentence him to jail, which Clark's lawyer said would be a death sentence for Arkansas' top legal official.

"Even though you are attorney general — in this respect I feel ridiculous — but I must tell you, you can appeal," Whitmore said.

The corruption trial went to the jury earlier in the day after a prosecutor compared the attorney general's ambitions to a runaway train fueled by state money.

"The General was feeding that train. And as he was feeding that train, to keep his gubernatorial campaign alive, he'd throw coal in. That coal is your money," prosecutor Chris Piazza told jurors in closing arguments.

Clark, 43, was convicted of a less severe charge. He was charged with theft by deception of more than $2,500, which carried a maximum prison sentence of two years and a $15,000 fine. Clark was convicted of theft by deception of less than $2,500, which carried a maximum penalty of three to 10 years in prison and a $15,000 fine.

Piazza said after the verdict was announced: "I don't ever regret a jury verdict."

Earlier, Piazza said Clark was consumed by his dream to become governor but could not afford to entertain political supporters and generate campaign contributions without the help of state money through his expense account and state credit card.

Defense attorney Bill Bristow said Clark already had lost.

"Another jury has already issued a verdict to Steve Clark. That is the jury of public opinion," Bristow said.

"Steve Clark has been the subject of ridicule. 'Let's go to lunch' is a statewide joke," Bristow said. "Steve Clark's political dream — the dream to be governor — is gone. If Steve Clark ran for dog catcher right now, he'd lose to a write-in candidate."

Clark, attorney general since 1979, earns $26,500 a year plus a $15,000 salary supplement.

Published reports of discrepancies in his expense reports prompted Clark to drop out of the Democratic gubernatorial primary Feb. 7.

Piazza said Clark "lived off the state."

He said Clark stayed at the Peabody Hotel in Memphis, Tenn., with a girlfriend. "He stayed there on your money. You paid for him and her to have room service," Piazza said.

Bristow said Clark might be liable for civil penalties if he used poor judgment, but insisted that Clark did not break any laws.

"What you're going to see is unauthorized use of funds, not stealing," Bristow said.

He said there was little or no restriction on Clark's use of the state Visa card.

Clark testified he never intended to deceive anyone with his expense filings.

Under cross-examination Wednesday, Clark said he was doing more than the law required by keeping expense records. No other top state official does so, he said.

"If I wanted to deceive anyone, I wouldn't have done anything and I certainly wouldn't have used the names of prominent people so people could come in and say, 'Steve Clark says he ate with you, is that right?'" Clark said.

Among the prosecution's 141 witnesses, state Supreme Court Justice Jack Holt, several state legislators, lobbyists and reporters testified that they did not eat with Clark, although their names were on his expense claims.

Clark claimed he accidentally listed as guests people he talked with at the restaurants, met earlier in the day or who were topics of discussion at meals. He said he waited weeks to update expense records from memory or notes.

Clark denied the state's theory that he name-dropped on his expense claims to hide dates, getaways and political engagements from taxpayers who footed the bills.

Group offers non-manipulative, Christian setting

Dear Editor:

I think the Office of Campus Ministry owes Gays and Lesbians of Notre Dame/Saint Mary's College an apology for the letter that appeared in The Observer on Tuesday, Oct. 16. The tone used by that letter's anonymous author verifies that Campus Ministry has a complete lack of understanding about our groups intentions. I am usually not a vocal person when it comes to these issues, but I cannot remain silent in the face of Campus Ministry's injustice to Gays and Lesbians of ND/SMC. I cannot remain silent when Campus Ministry, an office that purports to further Christian values, makes gross accusations about a group that has done more Christian service for gays and lesbians than Campus Ministry has ever attempted to do. Let me explain.

Campus Ministry asserts that last Thursday's Open Letter states, "If you are gay or lesbian, 'come out' to your friends." The Open Letter said no such thing. Rather it said, "If you are gay, pick someone you can trust, sit down with them, and let them share in this aspect of you." This is the exact same advice that Campus Ministry goes on to present in its letter. But the fact that Campus Ministry misquoted last Thursday's Open Letter isn't the infuriating thing. The infuriating part of the letter is the underlying insinuation that Gays and Lesbians of ND/SMC wants people to "come out" so we can pursue some hidden agenda with them. I guess what Campus Ministry is implying here is that we are going to coerce people to choose a "homosexual lifestyle" or lead them into unhealthy relationships. I resent that. If anything, Gays and Lesbians of ND/SMC challenges its members with Christian values.

You see, what Campus Ministry fails to realize is that our agenda is very much like theirs. We are not seeking to recruit people or to tell them that they are gay. We realize, obviously more so than Campus Ministry, that sexual orientation involves a discovery, not a choice. We respect where everyone is at on their journey of self-discovery, however, someone should happen to discover that he/she is gay, the advantage of "coming out" is clear: it helps other people, who are terrified about their own self-discovery, see that there are other very normal people who have the same orientation.

If members of Campus Ministry paid a visit to our group, this is what they would find: They would find a group that is deeply committed to Christian values and shows genuine support for living those values. They would find a group that, for some, involves supporting one another in a chaste, celibate life (this is what the religious members of our group have found most valuable). They would also find a group that talks openly about how to ensure that relationships remain healthy and non-manipulative.

In light of all of this, it seems that Campus Ministry should ask itself one question: Why didn't it organize a group like this before the inception of our present group? After all, our goals seem to be identical.

Perhaps, though, it's because Campus Ministry is still buying into the myth that the only reason gays and lesbians get together is to coerce people into unhealthy relationships. To assume that this happens in our group is simply perpetuating the stereotypes. Isn't it about time we dispel the myths?

Campus Ministry's letter encourages students to favor confusion and doubt

Dear Editor:

I realize that it is difficult to give a sympathetic reading to a text with which one disagrees, but Campus Ministry's response to the Oct. 11 open letter regarding National Coming Out Day betrays a misunderstanding so thoroughgoing that I cannot help thinking it was willful.

First, the open letter was not signed exclusively by graduate students and faculty members, and it was not directed exclusively at undergraduates. No one was "recommending premature disclosure" of anything, and certainly no one suggested that one ought to come out to people who would react with hostility or condemnation. It was merely suggested that one come out to a friend, and surely any real friend would respond out of love and respect.

More serious still is the attitude toward undergraduates that Campus Ministry's letter reveals. To make blanket statements to the effect that "undergraduates are still ambiguous about matters sexual" is not merely condescending; it is false. Consider the issue of sexual orientation. Many gay and lesbian students, like nearly all heterosexual students, arrive at this University already knowing their sexual orientation. And, despite considerable pressures, very few of the rest leave here without having come to terms with that issue.

To suggest, as Campus Ministry does, that questioning should not come to an end in the undergraduate years is to encourage students to reject self-awareness and honesty in favor of confusion and self-deception. Moreover, this attitude displays a striking sort of intellectual dishonesty. If I am sincere in my questioning, I must want the questioning to end, precisely because I desire an answer.

The truth, we are told, will make us free. Campus Ministry would prefer to see us enslaved by doubt. Or perhaps they simply fear that in too many cases the liberating truth will not be to their liking.

Gays and Lesbians at ND/SMC does not promote "premature disclosure"

Dear Editor:

Far more gay and lesbian persons have been led into the "premature disclosure" of false heterosexual orientations and entered into unhappy marriages than have straight persons been led to declare false homosexual orientation. If the anonymous author of the Campus Ministry propaganda in The Observer Oct. 16 wants to cast suspicion on the practices of Gays and Lesbians at Notre Dame and Saint Mary's (GLNDSMC), he or she (my money is on that it's a single-for-life "he") should come to a few meetings.

Though not a member of the group, I have attended some of its meetings and have not found anyone recommending that undecided persons "comes out" about a sexual orientation. The group does provide a safe place—perhaps the only safe place—for people to be themselves, whatever their sexual obligations. The Office of Campus Ministry should follow the group's example.

If Campus Ministry would be consistent in its desire to eradicate seductions into sexual orientations too soon, GLNDSMC should be last on its list of targets.

ND Catholicity crumbles with reaction to homosexuality

By David W. Lutz

What is most significant about the many editorials, articles and letters published in the various campus periodicals over the past several weeks concerning "coming out" and tolerance and "homophobia" is not what has been said, but what has not been said. The one position with regard to homosexual practice (as distinguished from homosexual orientation) that I have not seen expressed is that indulging in homosexual acts is a very serious offense against the Creator of the universe. The only exception of which I am aware is the letter of Father Richard Warner, director of Campus Ministry (The Observer, Oct. 9). His statement that the practice of homosexuality is inconsistent with Roman Catholic teaching, however, was only secondary to his expression of several pastoral concerns (as is appropriate for someone whose primary role is that of pastor, not teacher). The overwhelming imbalance of the public debate on the side of those rebelling against Christian morality is cause for great concern.

In a widely-publicized Oct. 16 lecture sponsored by 15 campus organizations, including the Notre Dame departments of theology and philosophy, philosopher Richard D. Mohr of the University of Illinois-Urbana argued that the practice of homosexuality is not immoral. At one point in his argument, he summarily dismissed all divine command arguments against the permissibility of homosexual acts by saying that Jesus Christ never talked about homosexuality, that the sin for which Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed may have been inhospitality, and that it would be ridiculous to believe that we should obey all points of the Mosaic Law. He neglected, however, to address several clear condemnations of homosexual acts in the New Testament epistles. In 1 Corinthians 6:9-10, Saint Paul tells us that homosexuals will not inherit the Kingdom of God. Romans 1:26-27 and 1 Timothy 1: 8-11 also address this issue. To maintain that none of these passages condemns the practice of homosexuality would be to bring one's own non-Christian agenda to the text.

I am a member of the United Methodist Church, and I disagree with Roman Catholic theology at several relatively minor, yet significant, points. But one of the things that I like very much about Roman Catholicism is that its leaders, most of the time, are not reluctant to state their Church's position of important moral issues. I know that some Roman Catholics at Notre Dame would like to see their Church become more democratic. But if ecclesiastical democracy is what you're looking for, why not join the United Methodist Church? Every presidential-election year, we have our own political convention to determine democratically what will be right and wrong for the next four years.

At the 1988 General Conference of the United Methodist Church in St. Louis, legislation affirming that "we do not condone the practice of homosexuality and consider this practice incompatible with Christian teaching" was adopted by a vote of 765 to 181. But what is most significant about this vote, of course, is not that a moral position inconsistent with Christian Scripture and nearly two millennia of Christian tradition was defeated overwhelmingly, but that the question was even brought up for a vote in the first place. Whatever problems the Roman Catholic Church may have today, one very attractive feature of Roman Catholicism for this Protestant is that the Church's positions on certain key moral issues are not negotiable.

Much of what has been written on this campus recently concerning homosexuality is right on target. Yes, we should respect the dignity of all persons, including those whose moral beliefs differ from our own. Of course, we who have sinned (and that includes all of us) should love other sinners, just as God loves us. Certainly, "queer-bashing" is immoral. What concerns me, though, is the inaugural Mass of this University's 1954-55 academic year, Fr. Hesburgh contrasted the task of the coming year with the tasks facing non-Christian universities: "Here is an apostolate that no other secular university today can undertake—for they are largely cut off from the tradition of adequate knowledge which comes only through faith in the mind and faith in God, the highest wisdom of Christian philosophy and Catholic theology." Today, however, the task is to prevent Notre Dame from becoming just one more secular university.

I know that some will speak of "academic freedom." But the distinction between negative and positive freedom (which makes an early appearance in Romans 6:16-23) is as important here as elsewhere. True academic freedom is not free-scholars who believed that Christian revelation has a central role to play within every academic department of a genuinely Christian university. Is this true today at Notre Dame?

We should not assume that the revelation message that Christians believe is so obvious that it doesn't need to be discussed and taught frequently and well. Our faith is constantly under attack from many directions. Although Professor Mohr's arguments were shoddy, he is a skilled rhetorician, and his remarks were well-received by many members of his audience. If the voices of immorality on this campus do not outnumber the voices of morality, they are certainly louder.

The secularization of the Methodist universities did not world-wide recognition as an excellent research institution, and lose its own soul?

For well more than a century the Holy Cross fathers succeeded in preserving the Christian character of this university. Today, however, lay scholars and administrators are becoming increasingly important in shaping its future. If Notre Dame is to retain its character as a Roman Catholic university, it will not be merely because it has a clergyman as president, a crucifix in every classroom, and a chapel in every residence hall. It will be because the leaders of the university—and especially the lay leaders—stand firm against the forces of secular humanism and articulate precisely and frequently what it is that distinguishes Notre Dame from secular universities. The lay leaders of Notre Dame—faculty, administrators, and trustees—have a responsibility of stewardship to pass on to future generations the faith-heritage of this university. This responsibility involves far more than research grants, public relations and financial planning. To leave it to the Congregation of the Holy Cross to fight the battle against secularism would be to fail to meet this responsibility. And to fail to meet this responsibility would be one of the most serious sins I can imagine against future generations of Christian scholars and students.

The time to act is now. Once the momentum reaches a certain point, there is no return, even if many Christian scholars then see and regret what they have allowed to happen. If Notre Dame passes the great divide that separates Christian and secular universities, it will never be recovered. The Methodist universities are not only lost; they are irretrievably lost. I hope that Notre Dame can learn some lessons from the mistakes of the Methodists. What it needs, without further delay, is intellectual honesty concerning what is happening here and a serious public debate about what the leaders of this University are going to do to prevent Notre Dame from becoming merely one more secular school. If action is not taken soon, the question will be, not whether, but when, Notre Dame will be a Christian university in precisely the sense that Northwestern University is now Christian.

If Notre Dame is indeed a Roman Catholic university, there should be no reluctance on the part of its leaders (and not only its leaders within the Office of Campus Ministry) to state that moral truth is not a matter of individual taste, that the teaching of the Roman Catholic Church will not be compromised on this campus, that people who choose for themselves a life of sin are also choosing long-term consequences of extreme severity, and that anyone not interested in teaching at a Christian university should teach elsewhere—perhaps at one of the formerly-Methodist universities. Merely to recite platitudes about "values," thereby implying that Notre Dame students are being educated at a Christian university, without taking steps to ensure that they are, is to commit fraud.

that the director of Campus Ministry has had to be the voice crying in the wilderness, the sole public spokesman for the position of the Roman Catholic Church (and presumably of the University) regarding the practice of homosexuality. And I am concerned not so much about the specific issue of homosexuality as about the question of what it means for a university to be a Roman Catholic university.

Although I am a Methodist, I cannot study Christian philosophy in this country at a Methodist university. There no longer are any. All that remains is a collection of secular universities that were founded by Methodists as Christian universities. It should come as no surprise that Wesleyan University and Southern Methodist University were founded as Methodist universities. But how about Boston University, Duke, Northwestern, Syracuse, Vanderbilt and the University of Southern California? Some of these schools still have organizational ties to the United Methodist Church; but they are Christian in name only.

My concern is that the process of secularization that removed the Methodist universities and, before them, the Ivy League universities, from the ranks of Christian academic institutions is now occurring here at Notre Dame. The fact that 11 academic departments would sponsor a lecture like Professor Mohr's is only one of many indications that the University is already heading down the trail that the Protestant universities have blazed. The reaction to Father Warner's letter is another. At dom from ecclesiastical authority, but freedom to speak the truth. If "academic freedom" at a Roman Catholic university means the freedom to teach anything whatsoever, even if it contradicts the teaching of the Roman Catholic Church, what distinguishes a Roman Catholic university from any other kind of university? There is nothing wrong with examining arguments against Christian moral teaching, or even with inviting scholars from non-Christian universities to present those arguments. But there is something seriously wrong with inviting lecturers to campus with the intention of persuading students that Christian moral teaching is false.

That is what happened to the Protestant universities could not possibly happen here. But what relevant difference is there? The reason some of the Roman Catholic universities in this country are not yet thoroughly secular and most of the Protestant universities already are is that many of the Protestant universities have been around longer. Another reason is that Protestantism has closer historical ties to individualistic liberalism. But as liberal-democratic ecclesiology (such as is practiced in the United Methodist Church), accompanied by moral relativism, continues to grow in popularity among American Roman Catholics, the barriers that have stood between Roman Catholic universities and secular humanism will continue to crumble. And a third, perhaps most significant, reason is that Roman Catholic universities historically have had management systems staffed by religious order, diocesan and lay happen overnight as the result of a single policy decision. It happened as the result of many small decisions over many years. To remain silent while others attack the theological commitment of the Holy Cross tradition, to hire new faculty members without concern for their theological and moral beliefs, to focus on one's individual research project without concern for the Christian character of the University as a whole, is to decide that Notre Dame will become a secular university.

Much is at stake here. Because of its Roman Catholic character and academic quality, Notre Dame is one of the very best Christian universities in North America at which to study and teach, not only for Roman Catholics, but also for others who wish to study within a university community of Christian scholars. I hope that future generations of students will not be deprived of the opportunity that I now have to study at an ecumenically-sensitive, Roman Catholic university. Why would anyone believe that what the world needs is one more secular university, when there are so many already and so few Christian universities? Would any amount of secular excellence be worth forfeiting the Christian character of this university? And yet, if our objective is to become an excellent Roman Catholic university, and if we adopt as our criteria of excellence those by which the Ivy League schools are judged to be excellent, how can we become an excellent university without ceasing to be a Roman Catholic (or even generically-Christian) university? For what does it profit a university, if it gain

'Avalon' tells story of immigr

By ROBYN SIMMONS
Assistant Accent Editor

It's a tale that has been told before: an Eastern European immigrant comes to America in search of the American Dream. The story of "Avalon" may sound familiar, but writer/director Barry Levinson injects new life into an old story, and the result is a memorable film.

The movie opens with Sam Krichinsky's (Armin Mueller-Stahl) recollections of his arrival in Baltimore on July 4, 1914. As Sam walks underneath a row of arches draped in patriotic red, white and blue and gazes at the fireworks exploding above him, he is convinced that Baltimore is "the most beautiful place I had seen in my entire life."

Avalon is the name of the Baltimore row-house neighborhood where Sam and his brothers Hymie (Leo Fuchs), Nathan (Israel Rubinek) and Gabriel (Lou Jacobi) live and open up their own business as wallpaper hangers.

Through the years, the Krichinsky family remains close, and their periodical "family circle" meetings are a tribute to this intimacy. But the Krichinsky clan begins to change as America changes, especially during the years immediately following World War II.

Sam's son Jules (Aidan Quinn) and nephew Izzy (Kevin Pollak) change their surnames to Kaye and Kirk (to Sam's dismay) and open a store that sells nothing but television sets. Although business is a bit slow in 1949, it isn't long before the television boom arrives and the Krichinsky family changes as rapidly as the society of post-war America.

Levinson places a lot of emphasis on television as a force which separated family members from each other as they became increasingly mesmerized by the glowing screen and abandoned mealtime conversation.

Another explanation for the fragmentation of the American family that Levinson offers is the move to the suburbs. After the initial success of his business, Jules and his family and parents move out of Avalon, and the tightly knit Krichinsky family slowly begins to unravel.

Although Levinson's explanations for the disintegration of the American family are a little too cut and dry to be valid, Levinson does a very good job of capturing an important period in American history, and the actors make the relationships between the individual characters very believable.

The bulk of the movie takes place during the late 1940s and early 1950s, but there are numerous flashbacks which have a hazy, dreamlike quality that is reminiscent of silent films. In one scene, Sam recalls the time when his father was brought to America on a cold winter day, until his wife Eva (Joan Plowright) corrects him and tells him that his father arrived in May. The wintry flashback stops, and starts again with a springtime setting.

One of the movie's great strengths are the individual actors and actresses and the rela-

relationships between their characters. Plowright is outstanding in the role of Eva Krichinsky and her strained relationship with her daughter-in-law Ann (Elizabeth Perkins) is one of the humorous highlights of the film. Sam's closeness to his grandchild Mike (Elijah Wood) is also moving and memorable.

"Avalon" is largely anecdotal; it is a series of little episodes in the lives of the members of one three-generation family. The movie does get a little long, but the actors' performances carry the film through the slow parts, and the richness of Levinson's recreation of an America gone by would make a visit back in time to "Avalon" well worth the trip.

Jellyfish fails to recapture sound

By BRIAN GRUNERT
Accent Writer

In recent musical history, it seems that whenever a new band hits the scene, all they have to offer is cleverly disguised, recycled versions of songs made popular by other artists. Few and far between are new artists whose material is truly innovative and interesting.

Jellyfish, a band who recently released their debut album, Bellybutton, is a bit unique in that they have intentionally tried to capture the sound of other bands, while at the same time injecting some originality.

The band attempts to drag the sights and sounds of the 1960s and 1970s into the 1990s, perhaps in hope that any of the listener's fond memories of that era be associated with their material. Unfortunately, Jellyfish's success is measured only by a group of not-so-convincing Bee Gees/Beatles rip-offs, a psychedelic album cover, and a pretty neat, slightly outdated wardrobe.

"The King Is Half Undressed," the first single released off of Bellybutton, was a bright introduction to album, but an unrealistic portrayal of the remainder Jellyfish's debut. The song is formed around a very "Beatlesque" melody and is highlighted by backing vocals reminiscent of the days of "Saturday Night Fever."

However, it is the energetic tempo and musicianship by the bands drummer Andy Sturmer that makes the tune appealing. Two "fairy tale" like breaks in the song also confirm the psychedelic roots of the band's sound. From here Bellybutton goes from hopeful to hopeless.

"The Man I Used To Be," the album's opening cut, is a bluesy romp that never seems to get moving. While the melody itself holds promise, the song is never developed, and monotony overrides both music and lyric. The listless mood is carried through Bellybutton's second tune, "That is why," which fails in its attempt to capture the sound of the 1960s and 1970s slow rock classics.

After taking a turn for the better with the third track, "The King Is Half Undressed," Bellybutton restates the failure of the first two songs in "I Wanna Stay Home." Jason Falkner's bass playing is wasted on a tune that is unable to capture the listener's attention.

The remainder of the record follows the same path, and Jellyfish ends up unsuccessful in their attempt to accomplish what they apparently set out to do: to provide a comprehensive and contemporary yet interesting perspective on the music of the 1960s and 1970s. While there are some bright spots by the musicians, Andy Sturmer, Roger Manning, Jason Falkner, and Chris Manning, Bellybutton is a mundane debut for Jellyfish.

One other strength the album enjoyed was the production skills of Albhy Galuten and Jack Joseph Paig. The two were responsible for producing veritable 1970s classics such as the Bee Gees' "Saturday Night Fever." Their recording tricks, however, couldn't give Bellybutton the push it needed.

If you are attracted to the audio and visual gimmicks that Jellyfish employs, and are hoping that Bellybutton will dig up some musical memories from your psychedelic past, perhaps you should shop for a proven classic from that era. As the band suggests in their liner notes, "And we all clapped our hands." ...Well not me.

GAME NOTES

•The series is the longest continuous intersectional rivalry in college football. Notre Dame and Navy have met every year since 1927.

•The Irish have won 26 straight games in the series, dating back to 1963 when Roger Staubach led Navy to a 35-14 victory in Notre Dame Stadium. The Irish have more victories over Navy than over any other team in Notre Dame history.

•Notre Dame extended its winning streak to 21 games by recording its first shutout since 1983 in a 41-0 rout of Navy last season in Notre Dame Stadium. That was Lou Holtz's 150th career victory.

•The Irish are a perfect 6-0 in games played at Giants Stadium in the Meadowlands. Their last win was by a 36-13 mark over Virginia in last year's Kickoff Classic.

Senior Donn Grimm, shown here ready to make the stop against Stanford, is the top returning tackler on the Irish defense. Grimm played an outstanding game last week against Pitt, compiling eight total tackles, one blocked pass and one interception.

Grimm anchors trio of talented linebackers

When Notre Dame won college football's mythical national championship in 1988, it boasted the tenth-ranked rushing defense in the country, one that allowed just 112.4 yards per game on the ground.

Linebackers Wes Pritchett, Ned Bolcar and Michael Stonebreaker rotated at the two inside spots to bolster what many still consider the finest Irish defense of the '80s.

Just two years later, Notre Dame again finds itself in the thick of the national championship race with a 6-1 record and No. 2 ranking heading into Saturday's game against Navy.

The defense has taken on a new look this season under defensive coordinator Gary Darnell, whose attack-oriented philosophy emphasizes speed and performance. But stopping the run remains a top priority, and Notre Dame's talented trio of linebackers Stonebreaker, Demetrius DuBose and Donn Grimm key an Irish defense that has improved tremendously since surrendering 253 yards rushing to Michigan in the '90 season opener.

Grimm, Notre Dame's top returning tackler in '90, has started six of the first seven games for the Irish and anchors a defensive front seven that features all seniors-with national-championship experience- when he is in the lineup.

"We've all been playing together for three or four years," Grimm says, "so we've been down that road before. We're definitely in the hunt for the national championship, especially with as many seniors as we have right now. We know what it takes to win it, but we've got

Overmatched Middies face banged-up Irish

Substitutes' performances key to victory, says Holtz

By KEN TYSIAC
Associate Sports Editor

An injury-plagued, battle-weary Notre Dame team will take the field at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J. at 12:05 p.m. Saturday against the Navy Midshipmen.

Injuries to such stalwarts as nose guard Chris Zorich, outside linebacker Andre Jones and tight guard Mirko Jurkovich have to weigh heavily on coach Lou Holtz's mind. Despite the injuries, though, there is no doubt which team is the favorite going into the game.

Saturday's matchup will be the 64th between the Irish and the Midshipmen in what is the longest continuous intersectional rivalry in college football. The rivalry has been pretty one-sided of late, though. Navy has not beaten the Irish since quarterback Roger Staubach led the Middies to a 35-14 triumph at Notre Dame Stadium in 1963. Since then, Notre Dame has won 26 straight.

Even Holtz, who is famed for talking up his opponent and trying to lower expectations for his own team, admits that the Irish are the stronger team going into the game.

"I don't think there's any doubt that (the Midshipmen) have less talent than the University of Notre Dame," Holtz says. But he quickly adds that "they have good athletes, they played us very well two years ago down there, they are good defensively. They are a good, disciplined football team. You always worry about a quarterback getting a hot hand and mixing the run and the pass and us not playing well on offense."

Holtz says that Notre Dame's three goals going into the game are to win, to have the substitutes play well and to avoid injuries. He is especially concerned that the artificial turf at Giants Stadium will take its toll on his players. In fact, the Irish coach has avoided practicing on the artificial turf in Loftus Sports Center as much as possible because he is afraid that some of his athletes might be injured.

Injuries are the name of the game on the Irish defense this week. Zorich will likely be replaced by sophomore Eric Jones, although sophomore Junior Bryant should also see some action there. Seniors George Williams and Bob Dahl will start at the defensive tackle positions for Notre Dame.

Junior Devon McDonald, who is most effective as a pass rusher, is expected to replace Andre Jones at outside linebacker. Senior Scott Kowalkowski will start at the other outside linebacker position, while classmates Mike Stonebreaker (who leads the Irish in tackles with 58) and Donn Grimm will start at inside linebacker. Sophomore Demetrius DuBose will also spend a lot of time at linebacker.

The Irish secondary will once again feature All-American Todd Lyght and freshman Greg Lane at the cornerbacks, the dependable Greg Davis at strong safety and freshman Tom Carter at free safety.

Stonebreaker says that the linebackers in particular will have to make an adjustment with Zorich out.

"Chris does things which normal nose guards can't do," Stonebreaker says. "He gets across the ball so quickly that as a linebacker you have to kind of play slower than you normally would. It's something that, without a dominating player up front, you as a linebacker have to try to take the game into your own hands a little bit more."

The Midshipmen will try to take the game into their hands with a balanced offense and a lot of trick plays. In recent years, Navy has run the wishbone almost exclusively on offense, but under Chaump the Middies will follow a more conventional gameplan, albeit with a few twists.

"If you want to read a book on trick plays, Navy wrote it this year," Holtz says. "They are going to run three, four, five, six reverses in a game. Against Virginia (in a 56-14 loss) they ran four different reverses. You might say 'well, that's not unusual,' but they ran those reverses on four straight plays."

Senior Alton Grizzard will likely start at quarterback for the Middies, but classmate Gary McIntosh could see some time also. Grizzard has completed 76 of 161 passes for 857 yards with six touchdowns and 11 interceptions. He is also Navy's second leading rusher, with 203 yards on 63 carries.

Senior co-captain Alton Grizzard could test the injury-plagued Irish defense. As quarterback, he has led Navy in rushing for the past three seasons and needs just 575 yards to become Navy's all-time total offense leader.

McIntosh, meanwhile, has completed 30 of 70 passes for 399 yards with one touchdown and five interceptions. Senior Jason Pace, who leads the Midshipmen in rushing with 368 yards in 78 attempts, will start at tailback, while sophomore Kwame Moultrie (33 rushes for 136 yards) will start at fullback.

Senior flanker Jerry Dawson will be the man to watch when Navy takes to the air. Dawson has caught 31 passes for 450 yards and four touchdowns. Junior wide receiver B.J. Mason (23 catches for 273 yards) and senior tight end Dave Berghult (16 catches for 210 yards) will also be prime targets.

Dawson should also handle most of the punt returns and kickoff returns for the Middies. He is averaging 12.5 yards per punt return, including a 68 yard return for a touchdown, and 19.3 yards per kickoff return.

The big man on the Navy defense will be senior nose guard Andy Kirkland, an All-American candidate. Kirkland is second on the Middies with 62 tackles. Senior linebacker Bill Bowling leads Navy with 70 tackles.

Cornerback Chris Cordero (two interceptions) and strong safety Scott Carson (one interception and 46 tackles) will anchor the Navy secondary.

"I don't think there's any doubt about it. Their defense is the strong point of the Naval Academy's football team. With the exception of the University of Virginia, nobody has scored very many points on them, and the University of Virginia had a lot of no gain plays and two-yard gains; Virginia did not have very many long drives against the Naval Academy," Holtz says.

Holtz's Irish may fare better. Sophomore quarterback Rick Mirer might have an itchy trigger finger after last Saturday's disappointing five for 16, 85-yard passing performance in a 31-22 win over Pittsburgh. Despite that performance, Mirer has still completed 78 of 134 passes for 1176 yards on the season.

Junior Rodney Culver, who leads Notre Dame with 529 yards rushing on 108 attempts, will start at fullback. Seniors Ricky Watters and Tony Brooks should split time at tailback, although junior flanker Raghil Ismail could get more carries at tailback if Brooks continues to be bothered by sore ribs.

Ismail, of course, kicks the Irish into overdrive when he gets the ball. In the past three games he has averaged 235 total yards. The Heisman Trophy candidate has rushed 42 times for 414 yards (a 9.3-yard average), caught 20 passes for 380 yards, returned eight kickoffs for 240 yards, including a 94-yard touchdown trot against Miami, and brought back five punts for 64 yards.

Other Irish receivers of note will be split end Tony Smith (12 catches for 177 yards) and tight end Derek Brown (nine catches for 148 yards).

Senior center Mike Heldt will anchor the Irish offensive line. He will be joined in the starting lineup by junior Gene McGuire at quick tackle, senior Tim Ryan at quick guard, junior Mirko Jurkovic or senior Joe Allen at tight guard and junior Justin Hall at tight tackle.

Senior Jim Sexton may take over the punting duties for the Irish if Craig Hentrich's dislocated thumb prevents him from fielding snaps. Hentrich, who has connected on 12 of 14 field goals this season, should be able to handle the place kicking chores.

Junior Jefferson Triplett, who averages 38.8 yards per punt, will start for Navy, while senior Frank Schenk, who has made five field goals in 10 attempts this year, will do the place kicking for the Middies.

FACES TO WATCH

George Chaump

The first year coach of Navy has an overall career record of 60-36-2. His nine-year mark includes four seasons at Marshall, four at Indiana, Pa., and one at Navy. He spent 11 years as quarterback coach at Ohio State, where he and Lou Holtz served on the 1968 Buckeye staff.

Jason Pace

The senior tailback has carried 78 times for 368 yards and two touchdowns. He played in 10 games as a junior, carrying the ball 10 times for 58 yards and two touchdowns. Both of his touchdowns came against Boston College when he stepped in for injured regular Rodney Purifoy.

Jerry Dawson

The senior flanker has caught 31 passes for 450 yards and four touchdowns. He started all season at flanker in 1989 and caught 17 passes for 263 yards and two touchdowns. He has caught at least one pass in all four seasons at Navy.

Gary McIntosh

The senior back-up quarterback has completed 30 of 70 passes for 399 yards with one touchdown and five interceptions. He saw a lot of action in 1988, when he passed for 504 yards and rushed 78 times for 239 yards and five touchdowns.

Andy Kirkland

The senior middle guard is one of the leading players on the Navy defense with 62 total tackles. He has one quarterback sack and one fumble recovery. He led Navy's interior linemen in 1989 with 69 tackles, 41 of those unassisted.

Knee injury can't stop a 'determined' McGuire

By DAVE DIETEMAN
Sports Writer

Knee injuries have been a sore spot for the Fighting Irish this season.

Just ask Gene McGuire, a junior offensive lineman from Panama City, Florida. On the second drive of Notre Dame's matchup with Purdue, McGuire went down with torn knee cartilage.

Doctors examined his knee in earnest. The diagnosis was that the Irish would have to survive without his services for at least a month. In fact, McGuire's injury eventually required arthroscopic surgery.

"When I first got hurt, I knew that I would be back soon. I told the doctors to do whatever they had to do, but I would back for the Miami game," said McGuire. "I finally had to have surgery because it was a little worse than I had expected. Still, I told everyone that I would be back for Miami."

"As soon as I woke up in the recovery room, I started doing leg lifts and leg extensions to heal it. I'm still not at one hundred percent - it will probably be a month before I am back at one hundred percent. I am not fully back yet, but my knee is good enough to play on."

McGuire, who has seen playing time at right tackle this year, had been viewed as a superb backup to center Mike Heldt. Gene also handled the snapping duties at center in the 1990 spring practices while Heldt was out with a dislocated elbow. In fact, McGuire's tenacity and work habits practically mandated that he be given a starting spot on the offensive line.

"Gene McGuire is a very tough and very determined player," remarked Notre Dame offensive line coach Joe Moore. "He loves football, which is the number one thing for any football player. As an offensive lineman, you have to love contact, and Gene loves all the parts of the game. He has the chance to be a truly outstanding football player and he is getting better every week."

Moore has coached more than his share of All-American linemen, both at the collegiate and high school levels. Andy Heck, another product of Moore's coaching, was awarded All-America honors in 1988 and now performs in the National Football League. In short, he knows a lineman with great potential when he sees one.

It is indeed a mark of high regard, then, that Moore was not surprised at the speedy recovery of Gene McGuire.

"I am not surprised by how quickly Gene recovered," related Moore. "The most important part of recovery is a player's mental attitude, and Gene has the right attitude."

Unlike those faint of heart who may alter their playing styles after an injury, McGuire has chosen to stay the course.

"I'm taking pretty much the same approach as always," said McGuire. "I only think about the injury after the game is over. I wear a sleeve on it while I play, and I just don't think about it until after the game."

McGuire's attitude also extends to his outlook on the future.

"I'm not worried about reinjuring my knee," said the stern lineman who grew up with an affinity for the Pittsburgh Steelers and Mean Joe Greene. "My knee bothered me at Pitt and I had a lot of pain. These three weeks - Pitt, Navy and Tennessee - are going to be hard on it, but it will be all right."

Moore, however, does harbor some concerns about the pounding McGuire's knee will take on the artificial turf surfaces of the Meadowlands and Tennessee.

"All the coaches are worried about the turf," said Moore.

"Mirko Jurkovic was injured on the turf at Pitt. I don't like the stuff. If you practice on it and live on it, then turf is not quite as bad. But when you go from grass to turf, you are asking for injuries. Turf is not good."

The casual observer may also be surprised that McGuire, a high school standout from the state of Florida, chose to attend Notre Dame instead of citrus-state big boys Florida State, Florida and Miami. For Gene McGuire, however, the decision was not a matter for brain-wrenching deliberation.

"I always wanted to play at Notre Dame and I was attracted by the quality of the academics," admitted McGuire. "Vinnie Cerrato [Irish recruiting coordinator] and Coach Yelovich [Irish tight ends coach] were also big factors in my decision."

It certainly seems that McGuire has made the right call. Moreover, given McGuire's stick-to-it attitude and physical talent, he has the potential for a great future both on and off of the football field lying before him.

Grimm

to go out and win one game at a time."

Navy, who stands at 3-4 this year after losing 16-7 to Division I-AA James Madison last Saturday, should not pose a very serious threat to Irish national championship hopes on Saturday. However, Notre Dame found out last week how easy it can be to overlook an opponent when 3-4 Pittsburgh refused to fold in the 31-22 Irish win.

The Pittsburgh game holds special meaning for Grimm, who grew up in Scottsdale, Penn., located just 40 minutes from Pitt Stadium.

"I play my best in the Pitt games," Grimm says. "My high school friends, coaches and teachers show up for that game. They're half the reason I'm here. When I play well, I feel I'm giving something back to them."

Grimm gave the hometown folks more than their money's worth last Saturday, compiling eight total tackles, including six unassisted, and singlehandedly stopping two Panther drives deep in Notre Dame territory.

He batted down Pitt quarterback Alex Van Pelt's pass intended for wide receiver Olanda Truitt on fourth-and-two from the Irish 44 to keep Pitt off the scoreboard in the first quarter. Late in the third quarter, Grimm intercepted a third-down pass intended for Darnell Dickerson at the Irish 19 and returned it 12 yards to the 31 to preserve Notre Dame's 17-7 lead.

Donn's brother Russ attended Pitt from 1977-80, playing under present Notre Dame offensive line coach Joe Moore. Russ is now in his tenth season with the Washington Redskins, a veteran of two Super Bowl titles in the '80s.

"Russ is Russ and Donn is Donn," the younger Grimm says. "We're not out to compare ourselves. If I get the chance to play any kind of professional football, then great, I'll take advantage of the opportunity. If not, then maybe I'll go into some type of coaching or sports marketing."

Grimm's chances for a professional football career hinge on his performance the remainder of the season.

Following last week's game, he is fifth on the team in tackles with 30, including 18 unassisted. He also has broken up two passes and intercepted one.

Playing next to Stonebreaker, an All-American and Butkus Award finalist in '88, makes Grimm a better player. However, it also makes him a largely unnoticed player.

Grimm is not a particularly flashy performer, but his great field instincts and consistent play are indispensable to the Irish defense.

"When he's out there," Darnell says, "things run smoothly. He's a glue kind of guy. He holds things together."

The Irish defense needed all the patchworking it could get after permitting Michigan 253 yards on 40 carries (a 6.3-yard average) in its season opener. However, with the exception of Air Force (244 yards), Notre Dame has not given up more than 118 yards in a game since. During that stretch, the Irish surrendered only two net rushing yards in a four-quarter period against Michigan State and Purdue.

"It took us a while to learn what Coach Darnell was looking for," Grimm says. "Everyone adjusts differently to a new defense. In this case, its a more upfield, pressure-type defense."

Much of the defensive pressure in recent weeks has been provided by nose tackle Chris Zorich, who partially dislocated his right kneecap last week against Pittsburgh. Zorich was named one of four Lombardi Award finalists on Wednesday.

"We've got to make sure nobody comes up the middle," Grimm says. "Zorro is the best nose guard in the country, but Eric Jones is really quick and he's got great feet. He plays the same as Zorro because he's so quick."

Quickness is something Grimm rediscovered this past summer when he agreed to lose some weight in order to increase his speed and ward off DuBose's challenge for the starting inside linebacker spot.

Head Coach Lou Holtz named three of his four starting linebackers following April's annual Blue-Gold game. Seniors Scott Kowalkowski and Andre Jones held on to their outside linebacker spots, and Stonebreaker reclaimed his inside position after a one-year suspension.

Grimm and sophomore DuBose would battle into the fall for the remaining inside linebacker spot, Holtz said at the time.

Despite Grimm's impressive numbers in '89 (11 starts, 49 solo tackles, 44 assists, 93 total tackles and two interceptions), DuBose had the inside track coming out of spring practice. He worked with Stonebreaker on the No. 1 unit the last two weeks of spring practice, and his speed (4.68 in the 40) seemed tailor-made for Darnell's new defensive scheme.

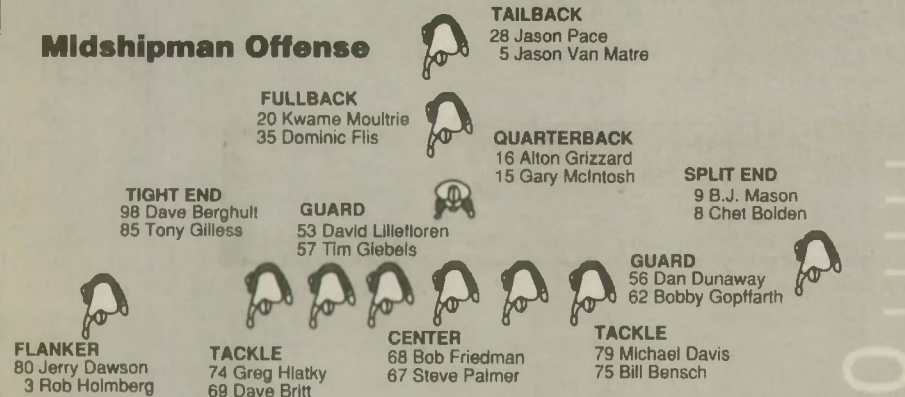

Grimm agreed to sacrifice some of his weight over the summer, dropping from 240 pounds to 225, in an attempt to improve his quickness. The extra work paid off and Grimm closed the gap as quickly as he shed those 15 pounds.

"Donn's experience equals Demetrius's quickness," Darnell says.

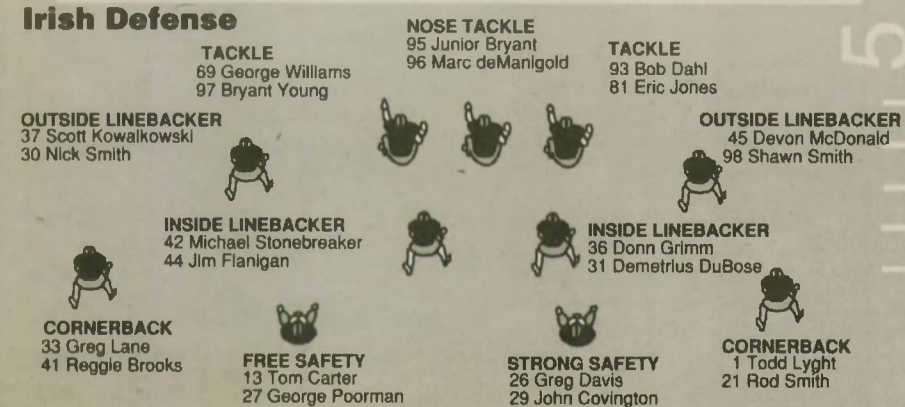

"With three linebackers in there, it keeps everyone healthy and fresh," Grimm says. "I'm sure in the long run it will be better for all of us."

Vaas mixes coaching skill with down-to-earth values

By RENE FERRAN
Sports Writer

Notre Dame running backs coach Peter Vaas just wants to be thought of as a basic, down-to-earth, average guy. However, one can be neither basic nor average and be an Irish football coach.

Consider for a moment his coaching record at Allegheny (Pa.) College. Vaas took a team which had seven straight losing seasons and in four years as head coach, went 29-11-1 (21-4 in conference play). The Gators won back-to-back conference titles in 1987 and 1988, and Vaas was named coach of the year after each title.

Consider also what other people think about Coach Vaas. "I thought Peter Vaas had done a real fine job at Allegheny," said Head Coach Lou Holtz. "He's very personable; I think he'll be an excellent recruiter. His moral values are outstanding. I just thought he blended in well."

"I think he stands for what the University of Notre Dame embellishes, and I thought he'd be an asset to the University. Those are the reasons why I selected him, and I'm happy to say I made a very, very fine decision."

"As a coach, he's fair as he can possibly be," said freshman fullback Jerome Bettis. "He sees it from both sides. He'll look at it from our perspective, and then give us his thoughts."

"I think he cares. He actually does care for the [players]. He'll sit you aside and not even talk to you about football. He'll talk to you about your personal life or how school's been going, just get in touch with you so you're not so far apart."

"He's helped me understand a lot of the new running plays," said junior flanker Raghib Ismail. "He's a tremendous person . . . he's a good guy. A lot of the players like him. He's been a real help to the program."

So the question becomes, how does a man who professes to be basic and ordinary earn such high praise? The answer lies in the simple values Vaas teaches and by which he lives.

One such value is wanting to be involved one-on-one with a project, rather than being a delegator, shaping and not just directing. Moving to Notre Dame gave Vaas this opportunity.

"As a head coach, it's certainly very enjoyable to call your own shots, to run your own program, and to make hands-on decisions," said Vaas. "One of the things that you miss, however, is becoming closely involved with the players. As an assistant, you get more involved on an individual basis with your players, and I missed that an awful lot as a head coach."

Another important quality Vaas stresses is improvement, both for the running backs he coaches and for himself. His philosophy is that if one strives to improve, then everything else, including winning, will fall into place.

"I want to see us improve from game to game," he said. "If we get better from game to game in becoming more complete players, not necessarily be more productive as far as yardage is concerned, but do a lot of the little things that go unseen by the traditional fan, then I think we've done a good job. But it's a day-to-day, game-to-game thing, that when it's all over, you can say, 'Boy, in December, we're a heck of a lot better than we were in August.'"

"I think we all can always improve on making demands on ourselves. It's one of those things, no matter how hard you work, how fast you've run, you always feel as though there's a little more you can give, and you have to constantly demand that from yourself. I'd like to see myself constantly improve the standards by which I measure myself, and that way I would constantly improve, and more importantly, the people around me can improve."

An example of the tangible results of this stress on improvement can be seen with Jerome Bettis. A patient touch combined with expectations of constant betterment have smoothed Bettis' transition from high school to college ball and led to his moving up the depth chart to where he now seriously challenges Rodney Culver for playing time.

"He's really been helping me by being a little patient with me," said Bettis. "If he were to just jump all over me, then it lead to a negative response by me, but he's been getting on me when he needs to get on me. Basically, he's been helping me get through the hard times."

Vaas encountered an opportunity to improve himself when Lou Holtz offered him the running back coach position last year. The chance to work at Notre Dame, under the high standards which must be met here, as well as with Coach Holtz and his staff, made it an easy choice to leave Allegheny.

"[Changing jobs] was a question of where you have opportunities to improve yourself professionally and personally," said Vaas. "No matter where you are in this country, but especially when you're involved in the academic and athletic world, when you say Notre Dame, you get immediate attention."

"Two words: Notre Dame and Coach Lou Holtz. When you hear those things, and you're in the football profession of coaching, it immediately gives you credibility. It was an opportunity for me to learn and to grow professionally, and that's why it was an opportunity I just couldn't pass up."

Since arriving at Notre Dame, Vaas quickly was accepted by the players and coaching staff. While the fans may not know of him that readily, he notes and admires the enthusiasm and pride of the students and the Notre Dame community.

"I know last spring when I was first here," said Vaas, "I was amazed at the activity that took place on campus . . . and when you get involved with the football season, the enthusiasm of the institution is just phenomenal. It's just something to behold, the enthusiasm, and along with that word goes pride. The pride of the people associated with Notre Dame and the enthusiasm they have for the institution is just incredible."

To the students, he says, "Carry the enthusiasm and maintain the pride. It's contagious. It just helps everybody seek for perfection."

While Vaas may not share the limelight with Lou Holtz and the players, that seems to be the way he likes it. He exudes a quiet confidence in his ability, and doesn't need the media to tell him that he's a good coach.

That's the way it should be for this basic, simple, yet special man.

PEERLESS PROGNOSTICATORS

Each week, The Observer sports staff, Bill Bilinski of The South Bend Tribune and some well-known figure in the Notre Dame community predict the outcomes of the week's major college football games. Records are compiled as to how each person does against the spread. In other words, it isn't enough to pick the winner of a given game.

Raw intensity of the Clash is evident on 1977 Revisited

By FRAN MOYER
Accent Writer

For those of you who are sick and tired of those arty, pseudo-intellectual bands who dress in black and try to act really hip, here is an album for you — the Clash's 1977 Revisited.

1977 Revisited is a collection of rare songs and B-sides that reflect the early years of one of the most exciting bands of all time. Besides their self-titled debut album and their U.S. debut, Give 'em Enough Rope, no other Clash album illustrates so perfectly the raw intensity that so characterized these angry men.

The crudeness and, for lack of a better word, the anarchy of a live Clash performance is brought out through the live recording of "London's Burning." One can picture the chipped-toothed Joe Strummer, clad in a Red Brigade T-shirt, screaming in his trademark style, while Mick Jones, cigarette in mouth, plays his guitar with the fervor of a man possessed. If you like the studio version of this song, you will definitely love it live.

The final four songs on the first side of the album were all originally on the British version of their debut album, but were omitted on the U.S. version. Included in these four songs is "Cheat," which Clash fans will recognize as one of the prize cuts off the mini-LP, Black Market Clash.

The other three songs, "Deny" (a harsh view on the life of a junkie), "48 Hours" (in praise of the must needed weekend), and "Protex Blue" (Jones' unenthusiastic endorsement of condom use) are equally memorable, and are some of the best songs the Clash has produced.

One of the best songs on the album is that jazzy "1-2 Crush on You." This selection is the type of song Jack Kerouac's sordid hipster, Dean Moriarty, would have been able to "dig," not only because it is inherently beatific, but also because of the crazy sax solo that makes one just want yell "blow daddy blow!"

The Clash's social consciousness, which is so evident on their other albums, is beautifully illustrated in "Stop the World," the eerie B-side to the anti-conscription song The Call Up." This cut, a protest against the arms race, is full of background coughs, high pitched chimes, a monotonous drum beat, and Strummer's droning vocals; all of which combine to produce a mental image of a surreal post-apocalyptic world.

The best selection on the entire album is "1977," which is the B-side to the searing "White Riot." As Strummer snarls, "It's 1977, I hope I go to heaven/ I'm too long on the dole / I can't work at all," and Jones grinds his guitar, one cannot help but be caught up in the fury that is the Clash. One has to wonder why this wonderful leftist anthem was not included on any of their previous albums.

1977 Revisited is full of loud, crude music and unmelodious, harsh vocals; in fact, most times it is difficult to decipher just what Strummer or Jones is yelling. If you love that kind of frenzied unorganized music, then buy this album, but if you don't, then continue to waste your money on cappuccino, cigarettes, and melodramatic, uninteresting, "think they have something to say, but really don't" bands.

Reverent skepticism and the mysteries of God

"People must think of us as God's servants," wrote St. Paul, "stewards entrusted with the mysteries of God. What is expected of stewards is that each one should be found worthy of his task."

When I meet young Catholics who tell me that religion is boring, I have a feeling that the mystery of things has never overtaken them. Notre Dame is very good at proclaiming the social Gospel: field trips to Appalachia and urban plunges are dead-set on the mark; and such kinds of activism are like giant steps in the right direction, if we believe in Christ; as the Bible warns us, "Faith without works is dead."

The Bible also invites us to stockpile the quiet times: "Stand in awe, and sin not: commune with your own heart, and in your chamber, be still." Sometimes I worry that the social gospel is a hiding place for professionally religious men and women who feel uncomfortable when they try to pray. To tell the truth, I'm not very good at prayer myself; yet I keep reminding myself that if I were to spend all my time feeding the hungry whom I meet in the soup-line, I could become spiritually anorectic.

But what is meant by "the mysteries of God?" Aye, there's the rub: Who can explain them? Who can tell you why? Fools give you reasons. Wise men never try. The phrase reminds me of Virgil's line: "Sunt lacrimae rerum et mentem mortalia tangunt. (There are tears shed for things even here, and mortality touches the heart.)"

Father Robert Griffin

Letters to a Lonely God

Yet the "tears shed for things (lacrimae rerum)" are only a preparation for the truth hidden, like unexpected grace, in a line of poetry: "I saw Eternity the other night./Like a great ring of pure and endless light./All calm, as it was bright..."

Or, if that's too intangible, consider this: "They are all gone into the world of light!/And I alone sit ling'ring here:/their very memory is fair and bright./And my sad thoughts doth clear....Dear, beauteous death! the jewel of the just./Shining nowhere but in the dark./What mysteries do lie beyond thy dust./Could man outlook that mark!/He that hath found some fledged bird's nest may know/At first sight if the bird has flown;/But what fair well or grove he sings in now/That is to him unknown...."

Comparing the two approaches to the Maid of Orleans, Chesterton favored Voltaire's, "because when a man of Voltaire's school has to explode a saint or hero, he says that such a person is a common human fool or fraud. But when a man like Anatole France has to explode a saint, he explains a saint as "somebody belonging to his particular fussy little literary set."

Voltaire read human nature into Joan of Arc; but at least it was not Voltaire's nature. But M. France read M. France's nature into Joan of Arc — all the cold kindness and sentimentality of the homeless writer.

Renan's "Vie de Jesus," says Chesterton, has just the same general intention: that if you do not attack Christianity, you can at least patronize it. This is the method of the reverent sceptic. When you find a life entirely incredible and incomprehensible from the outside, you pretend that you understand the inside.

As Renan, the rationalist, could not make any sense of Christ's most public acts, he proceeded to make an ingenious system out of His private thoughts. As Anatole France cannot believe in what Joan of Arc did, he professes to be her dearest friend and to know exactly what she meant.

Christian scholars can sound like reverent skeptics when they exegete the New Testament. Choosing to pick apart the Gospel of Luke, some of them say there's nothing there that reveals Christ as the only-begotten Son, God from God, of one substance with the Father.

The Lucan Christ only raised the son of the widow of Nain and the daughter of Jairus from the dead, healed leprosy and palsy, and fed the 5,000, to say nothing of His other miracles. This was clever of Him, if He was only an itinerant village rabbi; but is the New Testament really ambivalent about Christ as the Son of God? Instead of claiming divine titles, didn't He wait for those titles to catch up with Him?

Catholics used to believe that the difference between the Catholic Eucharist and the Holy Communion of the Lord's Supper at the Congregational or Baptist Church was the mystery called the Real Presence. Now, for many Catholics, the Eucharist is notable for the "Real Absence," as in the Protestant version of the sacrament. As a matter of fact, many young Protestant divines in New England have given up on Holy Communion altogether, because they claim, it has overtones of cannibalism.

I'm not a theologian, nor do I wish to attack any Christian's faith; yet as an investigative reporter on the lookout for the mysteries of God, I can't help thinking that some important mysteries of the Catholic tradition have gone in the direction of the Protestant Reformation. Whether that is good or bad, yet can judge for yourself.

Where have all the flowers gone? They've gone where the good folk have gone, and were a long time passing. Even human sexuality could lose part of its appeal, if you considered only the views of Dr. Ruth. It must be diminished in charm anyway, if it can never be spontaneous, and must be mediated through contraceptives. Still, as in receiving Communion, the partners must keep their salvation—spiritual or physical—in mind, and don't say that as a mockery.

"The Holy Ghost over the bent/World broods with warm breast an with ah! bright wings"—to me, this means the Church must have soul. If the Bishops are really in a sweat about evangelization, they should try to put attention of the mass of men who lead lives of quiet desperation; and they might start losing the attention of even more of the priests.

This doesn't mean I'm threatening to leap over the wall; only that I try to keep wonderment—which is a prelude to mystery—on hand like wine that is privately stocked. If you ask God, I'm sure He'll give you the grace to do the same.

Touch a life.
Give to the United Way.

Yzerman scores 300th career goal in Detroit win

DETROIT (AP) — Johan Garpenlov scored two goals and Steve Yzerman added the 300th of his eight-year NHL career Thursday night as the Detroit Red Wings skated to a 5-4 victory over the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Detroit (7-4-3) bounced back from its first home defeat of the season, a 5-2 setback to St. Louis on Tuesday, to run its home record to 7-1. The Maple Leafs (2-11-1) fell for the second time in three starts since Tom Watt replaced Doug Carpenter as coach. Carpenter was fired Oct. 26.

After Garpenlov and the Maple Leafs' Vincent Damphousse traded first-period goals, the Red Wings broke the game open with three goals in a 2:11 span early in the second period, including Yzerman's ninth of the season.

With his goal, Yzerman became the fifth player in Detroit history to score 300 goals, joining Gordie Howe (786), Alex Delvecchio (456), Ted Lindsay (335) and Norm Ullman (324).

Flyers 6, North Stars 3
Philadelphia rookies Mike Ricci and Dale Kushner both scored their first NHL goals and Keith Acton added three assists as the Philadelphia Flyers snapped a four-game losing streak with a 6-3 victory over the Minnesota North Stars.

The North Stars remained winless on the road this season with an 0-7-1 record.

Flyers goaltender Ken Wregget increased his overall record to 7-3 this season in turning back 25 shots. The victory was his first since Oct. 20.

Ricci, the team's first-round draft choice in June, played in his first game since breaking a right index finger in the season opener at Boston Oct. 6.

Bruins 3, Blues 2
Cam Neely scored an unassisted goal at 3:14 of overtime and the Boston Bruins ended St. Louis' seven-game unbeaten streak with a 3-2 victory over the Blues.

Agent funneled money to Georgia player

ATLANTA (AP) — The bank account of a current Georgia football player was used to funnel money from an agent to former Bulldog running back Keith Henderson during the 1988 season, The Atlanta Constitution reported in Friday's editions.

The newspaper said that bank records showed that Jerry Schwartz, a New York accountant who said he was then associated with sports agent Harold "Doc" Daniels, transferred $2,000 into the account of Bryant Gantt at the Citizen and Southern National Bank in Athens on Dec. 20, 1988.

"Henderson didn't have a bank account," Schwartz said. "He asked me to wire the money to (Gantt's) account."

Gantt currently is a senior outside linebacker at Georgia. Henderson is now a running back with the San Francisco 49ers.

The paper said Gantt and a bank official confirmed that the player's account number is the same as the one appearing on the transfer documents.

Gantt denied knowledge of the transaction.

"I don't remember receiving any money," Gantt said Thursday. "If it was done, it was done without my knowledge. That's definitely my checking account number."

Gantt said he never looks at his bank statements because he knows what he puts in and what he takes out of his account.

"I don't have anything to say," Henderson told the paper.

Vince Dooley, Georgia's athletic director, said he would "check on Gantt's involvement immediately."

"I want to see what his knowledge of this is or if he knew that was money he shouldn't be getting," Dooley said. "If he knew, that will affect his eligibility."

Henderson had a year of eligibility remaining when he chose to bypass his final year to play in the NFL.

was a goal for the Irish, and they seemed to do just that.

"I felt like we competed as a team," said junior Katie Kavanaugh. "Everyone has been playing different positions because of injuries, but we came together tonight and played with confidence."

Although the Illini have had a tendency to let some close matches slip away, the Irish could not come up with enough offensive power to grab one from Illinois.

"Notre Dame played a great defensive game," said Illini freshman Kristen Henriksen. "We've been shaky a few times this season and tend to let down, but we played well tonight."

St. Louis kicks Irish out of MCC tourney

Special to the Observer

The Notre Dame men's soccer team was eliminated from the Midwestern Collegiate Conference tournament last night with a 1-0 loss to second-seed Saint Louis. The Irish finish the season at 4-11-3.

The lone goal of the night came with 13 minutes to play as Mark Santel scored on a penalty kick for the 12th-ranked Billikens (15-3-2).

The Irish hung tough with Saint Louis throughout the match, creating several scoring chances, but were unable to find the back of the net. In the end, Notre Dame came away with nothing to show for its efforts except for its fourth straight loss.

Chicago Bears running back Neal Anderson (35) fends off Mike Piel (95) of the Los Angeles Rams in the Bears' 39-8 victory earlier this season.

Confident Bears look to maintain substantial lead over 2nd-place Bucs TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Their coach received a vote of confidence this week. Now, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers hope to give themselves one with a victory over the Chicago Bears.

The NFC Central Division rivals meet Sunday with the Bears (6-1) having an opportunity to take a commanding lead over the second-place Bucs (4-4), who are trying to work their way out of a tailspin that's taken the luster off a promising start.

After winning three of its first four games, Tampa Bay has lost three of the last four to teams it was expected to beat. Two losses to Dallas and a 41-10 setback at San Diego last week raised questions that owner Hugh Culverhouse answered about coach Ray Perkins' future with the club.

Culverhouse said Perkins, in the fourth year of a five-year contract, will return in 1991 even if the team doesn't win another game or fails to make the playoffs for the eighth consecutive season.

"I'm perfectly pleased with Ray Perkins," the owner said. "I have no reason not to believe that he will have a winning team."

Beating the Bears would take some of the heat off Perkins as well as the team, which is growing weary of what some players perceive as a negative attitude among fans and the media.

"This could be the week for us to get something under our belt to give us some leverage where everybody doesn't have all this worry about what's happening to our team," said linebacker Ervin Randle.

"There's still a lot of football to be played," he added. "Right now, we're coping with the situation as well as we can ... We have to have confidence because that's the only way we're going to work this thing out."

Defensive breakdowns and poor pass protection have contributed to the team's problems. The Bucs also have turned the ball over 12 times in the last two weeks opposed to eight times in the first six games.

Vinny Testaverde, the league's second highest rated passer, sat out the San Diego game to give a turf toe injury a chance to heal. He will return against the Bears, but hopes to get better support than Chris Chandler, who was sacked four times and hurried into four interceptions by the Chargers.

The Bucs gained a season-low 157 yards against San Diego, including 38 yards rushing on 18 attempts. Now, here come the Bears with the NFL's fourth-ranked defense and the league's most productive running game.

"They're really impressive. They're playing football the way you did 20 years ago," said Perkins. "They even remind you of it with those black shoes they wear."

Chicago is averaging 173.1 yards per game on the ground, and the success the Bears have had running the ball has helped the development of Jim Harbaugh, who's completed 62.9 percent of his passes for 1,043 yards and six touchdowns while throwing only four interceptions.

Perkins said the biggest difference in the Bears who've won six of their first seven games and the Bears who lost 10 of their last 12 after a 4-0 start in 1989 is that they're playing together as a team again.

"They're playing basically the same people ... They're just playing more with a mission than they were last year," said Perkins, whose team beat Chicago twice last season, ending Tampa Bay's 12-game losing streak against the Bears.

"The thing that impresses me is that they're getting better as the season goes on," the Bucs coach said. "They've made some changes in their defense that's made it more sound, they're running the ball well and playing real inspired football."

Hockey

program, we would just as soon be playing good teams like we are as playing Division III teams," Schafer says. "We ran up against some teams that are a little better than we are. For instance, Minnesota is a great team. Even though we lost, we actually played well against them, but they are so fast that it seemed like they were playing at 100 percent and we were playing at 50 percent." Freshman goaltender Greg Louder has given the Irish 100 percent this season. He has 121 saves in his first three games and a sparkling save percentage of .903. Schafer is already comparing him to Lance Madson, who graduated last year holding several Notre Dame records.

"The constant play of Greg Louder has been a definite plus for us," Schafer says. "He has picked up right where Lance Madson left off last year. I just hope that someday our defense can give him more protection." Defense has been a sore spot for the Irish this season. The Irish have had trouble putting the puck in the net, and that concerns Schafer as well.

"Our first line has been doing most of the scoring for us this year, but this is a team which has scored five goals in three games," Schafer says. "Still, things will get better. 'We can do better' is our motto right now. We are just looking to get back on the right track." The Irish hope find that track against Kent State.

"It's been hard so far, but we have played reasonably well in spots," Schafer says. "We plan to be competitive this weekend."

The Irish will have to be competitive without defenseman Kevin Patrick. The junior from Schenectady, N.Y. is lost for the season with a knee injury.

Men's, women's Interhall football playoffs to kick off

Alumni tries to defend title

By RENE FERRAN
Sports Writer

The men's Interhall football playoffs begin this weekend with defending champion Alumni (4-0) facing Leahy league rival Stanford (1-1-2), while Off-Campus (3-1) meets Fisher (3-1).

ALUMNI V. STANFORD

In their previous meeting, Alumni easily handled Stanford 16-0. However, both coaches felt that game was an aberration.

"Since it was the first game," Alumni coach Paul Szyperksi said, "a lot of our team is the same team from last year. We've all played together . . . we might have capitalized on the fact that we were working together, knew each other real well."

"In that game, we just weren't prepared," Stanford coach Sean Gilboy said. "We had a lot of penalties called against us. We also missed a lot of tackles."

Gilboy noted that while the defense gave up only 16 points against the Dogs, it has not been scored upon since. He feels this is due to implementing more defensive schemes into their game plan.

Alumni possesses a potent offensive attack, averaging 15.5 points per game. Quarterback Jim Passinault has a wide array of options to choose from: running backs Dave Ludwig and Mark Ross have consistently had big games, and wide receiver Pete Parten and tight end John Carretta are big targets for Passinault to hit. At the same time, the Dog defense has given up only one touchdown all year.

The Stud offense has struggled this year, only scoring one touchdown. Stanford will be hurt by the absence of starting tailback Mike McKelvy due to an ankle injury. Tony Augustino, also a standout defensive end, will team with Sean White in the Stud backfield. Quarterback Brian Jockisch has two capable wide receivers in Chris Ebert and Kevin Coffman. White and Fred Coffman lead an excellent linebacking corps in the Stud 4-4.

The game will be decided by Stanford's ability to move on the Dog defense. In their first meeting, the Studs were unable to sustain a long drive, and Alumni capitalized on excellent field position. If Stanford can control the ball, create some opportunities, and keep Alumni's offense off the field as much as possible, it can pull off the upset.

OFF-CAMPUS V. FISHER

At first glance, this game has the makings of a romp: big-dorm pounding on small-dorm. However, if the Crime overlook Fisher and focus on a rematch against Grace in the semifinals, the Green Wave are very capable of beating them.

"We have to take them seriously," said Crime coach Tom Helms. "We can't afford to lose at this point. Fisher's a tough team, and we're not overlooking them at all. They made the playoffs. They had a good year. We're looking forward to playing them."

Off-Campus' offense comes into this game having racked up 22 points against Dillon in its season finale. The running back battery, led by Phil Coury, is potent, and quarterback Bob Allard has a couple of fine receivers in split end Chuck Moser and tight end James Dillard. The Crime use a 5-2 defense headed by inside linebackers Antwon Lark and John Schoen, and lineman Tom Sutliff.

Fisher averaged 14.3 points per game in the regular season. The Green Wave option attack is led by quarterback Rick Ebert and tailback Mick Green. Wide receiver Renzy Smith has three touchdowns this year, as well as several other key receptions.

The defense has been inconsistent this year, shutting out two opponents and giving up 29 to the other two. The play of inside linebackers Gene Richards and Joe Mattio will be key to Fisher's success. According to Green Wave coach

The Alumni Dogs try to defend their Interhall football crown this weekend when they take on Leahy league rival Stanford in the first round of the playoffs. The Observer / Trey Raymond Ebert, another key will be Fisher's conditioning.

"Our entire front line on both offense and defense, in addition to some skill players, go both ways," said Ebert. "Hopefully, we won't collapse by the time the second half rolls around. That's the main thing. We also need to get some key turnovers, and score off those turnovers." In order for Fisher to move on in the playoffs, it must hope that its defense is on one of its peaks and can stop the Crime. Fisher has the offensive weapons to move on Off-Campus, but if the Green Wave are pushed on both sides of the ball, the Crime will have a field day due to their depth advantage. Look for Fisher to try some trick plays in order to get an early lead and hope the Crime panic.

NOTES: If inclement weather occurs, teams should call NVA to see if games have been moved inside the Loftus Center.

They are what every female football player at Notre Dame strives to achieve. They are the culmination of weeks of sweat and tension. They are the dream that completely fills their minds in the fall. They are this year's women's interhall football playoffs.

Eight teams have passed the fiery tests of skill and discipline to have earned a berth in the 1990 playoffs. Beginning Sunday at one o'clock at Stepan Field, and winding up on November 18 in the Stadium, the eight squads with the top winning percentages over the course of the regular season will battle for the coveted championship jackets.

Top-seeded and unbeaten Breen-Philips (5-0) faces eighth-seeded P. E. (2-3) at 4:00 P.M. Sunday. Second-ranked P.W. (4-1) plays Lyons (2-3), third-seed Howard, whose only loss was to B.P., takes on Off-Campus (3-2), and no. four Farley (4-1) and no. five Lewis (3-2) square off.

Everybody is gunning for the unscathed giants from Breen-Philips, and yet co-captain Kristen Ballard claims that the team is relaxed, optimistic, and unified.

"The two week layoff since before Fall Break has caused this week's workouts to be a little shaky," said Ballard. "We are experimenting with a couple new plays, but overall the team is continuing to do the same kind of positive things we did all year."

B.P. is led by running back Kristy Alkidas, quarterback Kim Smith, and Alyssia McNeil in the secondary. They hope to lead B.P. to a different playoff result than last year. In 1989, B.P. also went undefeated, yet lost in the opening round of the playoffs.

P.W. has other ideas. Following the reversal of the outcome of their controversial overtime loss to Lewis, the girls of P.W., under the tutelage of Danica Petroschius and Heidi Hansan, are determined to go all the way.

"Practices have been exceptional," Hansan noted. "We are working hard and everything seems to be going smoothly. We are intense."

THE HARD PART FOR US AVANT-GARDE POST-MODERN ARTISTS IS DECIDING WHETHER OR NOT TO EMBRACE COMMERCIALISM.

DO WE ALLOW OUR WORK TO BE HYPED AND EXPLOITED BY A MARKET THAT'S SIMPLY HUNGRY FOR THE NEXT NEW THING? DO WE PARTICIPATE IN A SYSTEM THAT TURNS HIGH ART INTO LOW ART SO ITS BETTER SUITED FOR MASS CONSUMPTION?

OF COURSE, WHEN AN ARTIST GOES COMMERCIAL, HE MAKES A MOCKERY OF HIS STATUS AS AN OUTSIDER AND FREE THINKER. HE BUYS INTO THE CRASS AND SHALLOW VALUES ART SHOULD TRANSCEND. HE TRADES THE INTEGRITY OF HIS ART FOR RICHES AND FAME.

Katie Kavanaugh prepares to serve to Illinois on Thursday. The Irish lost to the Illini in straight sets.

Notre Dame volleyball team falls to Illinois in three sets

BY DAVE MCMAHON
Sports Writer

Against an overpowering Illinois team that outblocked the Irish 14-5, the Notre Dame women's volleyball team suffered their sixth straight loss, 10-15, 9-15, 12-15 Thursday night. Notre Dame's (7-19) next opponent is Western Michigan University Saturday night at Kalamazoo.

The Illini (16-7) improved their record to 4-0 against Notre Dame, although the Irish have taken them to five games in two out of the last three matches.

Illinois put the injury-plagued Irish at bay early, winning the first game 15-10 with a .304 team attack percentage compared to the Irish's .125.

The Irish fell behind in the second game, 9-4, before a service ace by senior Tracey Shelton brought a second wind into the Irish. Notre Dame got to within four points at 13-9, but the 13th-ranked Illini pulled out the second game, 15-9.

Playing with visible incentive, the Irish refused to go down without a fight, as freshman Molly Anne Stark forced two service aces en route to a 5-2 lead in the third game. After an Illinois timeout, however, the Illini retaliated, tying the score at 7-7.

The Irish matched Illinois point for point before freshman setter Janelle Karlan smashed a service ace past an unaware Illini defense, giving Notre Dame an 11-10 lead. The Irish could not come up with a final surge, however, and Illinois took the final game 15-12.

Despite the loss, Notre Dame seemed to play with an intensity that should be helpful if they can bring it into upcoming games against Western Michigan and a Midwestern Collegiate Conference matchup against Xavier.

"This has been a tough year for us," commented Stark, who finished the evening with a team high ten digs on defense. "We played well on defense and got to every ball. They had a little extra edge that we didn't have, but I think we started playing better as a team tonight than we have been."

Sophomore Alicia Turner led all players with 14 kills and managed almost half of the Irish total of 32. Sophomore Marilyn Cragin followed with 6 kills, while Stark and Shelton tallied six each.

ND hockey team looks for first win against Kent St.

By KEN TYSIAC

The Notre Dame hockey team will travel to Kent State this weekend in search of its first victory of the season.

The Irish (0-3), who split two games with the Flashes last season, will play on Friday and Saturday night at Kent. Kent State (1-2), lost its first two games of the season against Miami of Ohio before beating Mercyhurst 6-1.

Notre Dame, meanwhile, has lost three tough games against difficult competition. The Irish lost 7-2 to No. 3 Minnesota in Minneapolis on Oct. 23, and then were swept by Alaska Fairbanks in a two-game series last weekend. Notre Dame coach Ric Schafer has not become disheartened by his team's setbacks, though.

DiLucia triumphs in first round of Volvo Invitational

By RENE FERRAN
Sports Writer

Dave DiLucia won his opening-round match in the Volvo All-America Tournament in Athens, Georgia yesterday. DiLucia defeated Chris Cocotos of Stanford 6-1, 0-6, 6-3. Cocotos is the top-ranked 18-and-under player in the U.S.

DiLucia opened the match aggressively, using a serve-and-volley attack to dominate Cocotos. He never allowed Cocotos to establish his game, and easily won the first set.

In the second set, DiLucia let up mentally. He missed many first serves and made a lot of unforced errors in his groundstrokes. Cocotos took advantage of DiLucia's lapse by taking the second set at love.

In the third and deciding set, DiLucia got an early break and made it hold up. He went up 3-0 and had a chance to virtually

Saint Mary's diver excels both in and out of the pool

By CHRIS BACON
and EMILY WILLETT
Sports Writers

Time-management is perhaps the most-preached concept in freshman year. For Saint Mary's first-ever All-American diver Carrie Cummins, it is a way of life.

Cummins, a junior from Dayton, Ohio, manages not only to participate in student government and alumni relations, but also practices two hours a day, five days a week for the Saint Mary's Swimming and Diving team. It is this type of budgeting of time that has allowed Cummins to excel both on and off the boards.

Last season, Cummins set school records in both the one meter and 3 meter springboard events (224.7, 241.25, respectively) and was awarded the 1989-90 Coach's Award. Not only that, but Cummins's record in the 3m qualified her for the NAIA nationals, where she placed sixth and received All-American status.

"I was very excited," Cummins said. "I worked hard. I would have been happy with anything, because I know I did the best that I could do."

"It's well deserved," Belles head coach Dennis Cooper said. "It took some time to get her there, and we knew that she belonged there."

But Cummins's accomplishments don't end in the water. Off the boards, Cummins's academic performance earned her a place on the 1990 College Swimming Coaches Association of America all-academic team. In order to qualify for this award, Cummins had to earn a 3.5 G.P.A. as well as compete in individual events.

"I wasn't aware that I could even get an award like this," Cummins said. "It really was a surprise."

As far as Cummins is concerned, her awards are great, but there are more important things to focus on, like tonight's season opener at the Notre Dame Relay's, and the rest of the season.

Carrie Cummins

"Notre Dame Relays are a lot of fun," Cummins said. "It's all teamwork, and you get to see a lot of teams that you otherwise wouldn't see. It's also a chance to see how much you need to improve."

Last season, the Belles placed fourth in the relays. Coach Cooper is using tonight's meet to test the level of performance from both the returning divers and the freshmen.

"The relays serve as a kind of 'fun' meet to see how the team will handle competition," Cooper said. "It's one thing to see the team in practice, but the meet will show who the racers are."

While the team returns a core of nine lettermen, a strong support of freshmen join the team.

Returning strengths include sophomore swimmer Jenny Danahy, who set the school record in the 200-meter breaststroke at the 1990 NAIA national meet, junior Michelle Colburn, another qualifier for nationals both her freshman and sophomore years in the 100 and 200 backstroke, and Toni Olivieri, a qualifier for nationals her freshman and junior years, and selected as an NAIA Scholar Athlete in the 1989-90 season.

The team recorded its first winning season under Cooper last year, finishing 7-4. Cooper feels confident in his team's ability to have yet another winning season.

"The team has a lot of potential," Cooper said. "The returning lettermen set a positive attitude for the freshmen. The freshmen bring a greater depth in every position than we've ever had before."

Cummins's ability in and out of the water certainly sets an example for her teammates, as does her attitude.

"I'm just excited about diving," Cummins said. "Getting on boards, going to meets and diving with other people—that's what practice is all about."
