Violence erupts at KKK rally

By MIKE SMITH
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS

Scattered fights broke out and several people were hurt Saturday when Ku Klux Klan supporters and opponents clashed at a KKK rally at the Indiana Statehouse.

"We all should have just ignored this whole thing," said Adrian Garrett, a black Indianapolis resident who said he came to watch because of advance publicity given the Klan rally.

Those injured included three photographers for The Indianapolis Star who were struck by members of the crowd. Fire department medics said seven people in all were treated for injuries, but many people were roughed up in isolated scuffles.

"White supremacy is my religion," a white man shouted, taunting anti-Klan demonstrators. The man, who identified himself as Roy Harrell of Hancock County, took off his shirt to reveal a swastika tattoo and was beaten shortly afterward by several black men.

Several shouting matches turned into fist-fights, but some of the assaults appeared to be random acts by Klan opponents against others in the crowd.

The Klan rally was originally set for a secluded Statehouse courtyard but a federal court challenge, filed by the Civil Liberties Union on the group's behalf helped move it to the outside stairway.

Despite police, protestors persist in Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS

Despite protestors, police sirens and sporadic outbursts of violence, the Ku Klux Klan (KKK) sent out their messages to a diverse crowd of 1,000 people at the Statehouse in downtown Indianapolis Saturday. Side by side, anti-Klan demonstrators and Klan supporters/sympathizers began to congregate a little before noon to observe the rally.

Thirty-five Klan participants from a variety of states gathered together to hold their "white power" rally. Klan members, donning KKK symbols on their clothing or by means of tattoos, took position on the stairs of the statehouse at 1:30 p.m., nearly thirty minutes before Thomas Robb, grand wizard of the Arkansas-based Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, began to speak.

"I am not here to promote hatred against anyone. I am not here to promote hatred against blacks, against Asians, against Jews. What am I here to do is reach the heart of just one white man, just one white woman," said Robb.

Yet he had no restraints in condemning the homosexual group. "With the help of AIDS. . . I say to you good-bye, for you will not be here tomorrow," Robb said.

Robb avoided the typical white supremacist views that have characterized previous rallies performed by him and other Klan leaders. Instead he labeled the Klan as a "white civil rights organization" which was fighting for "white power and freedom."

Robb spoke out against affirmative action, immigrants, welfare and homosexuals. An angry uproar came from observers as he began to focus on the hindrance blacks continue to create in society. Seemingly intimidated, Robb changed his subject of topic rather suddenly.

The Statehouse is two blocks from Monument Circle in the center of town, where the Black Panther Militia held a counter-demonstration during the rally.

"I expected to see some type of organized rally (by the KKK)," said Garrett. "Even if it was for a crazy cause. This is nothing but a bunch of hooligans yelling at each other."

The Klan and counterdemonstrators duelled with loudspeakers for about half an hour, drowning each other out before the white supremacists ended the rally and went into the Statehouse.

Saint Mary's RHA kicks off alcohol awareness week

By PATTI CARSON
News Writer

Promoting general alcohol awareness while recognizing tragedies brought about by the use of alcohol is the goal of Saint Mary's Alcohol Awareness Week, which began yesterday, according to Tricia Wallace, president of the Residence Halls Association (RHA), who is sponsoring the event.

The start of the week was marked last night by the distribution of pink bracelets to students who pledged not to drink during Alcohol Awareness Week and also by the distribution of black footprints to be signed with the names of people harmed by alcohol, said Wallace.

"I think the pink bracelet is a good conversational piece," said Emily Bochy, Saint Mary's freshman pledge. "When people ask me why I'm wearing a pink bracelet, I can tell them how I feel about alcohol abuse and spread my message. I can tell my stories about how it's hurt some close friends of mine."

Alcohol Awareness Week activities include:

•Monday: "Day of the Dead." Seventy-two people will "pretend to die" in order to generate awareness of those who die due to alcohol each day.

•Tuesday: "Don't follow in their footsteps." Signed black footprints will be constructed into a trail around campus in memory of those people affected by alcohol.

•Wednesday: "Mocktails." Non-alcoholic drinks will be served in the dining hall as a midterm study break. Free recipe books will also be handed out.

•Thursday: Alcohol Awareness Week souvenirs will be distributed in the Dining Hall.

The RHA is only sponsoring an activity per day due to students preoccupation with midterm studying this week, according to Wallace. In the future, they hope to tie movies and lectures into Alcohol Awareness Week along with daily sponsored events, Wallace said.

Air Force ROTC sponsors day for homeless children

By EMILY HAGE
Assistant News Editor

Children from area homeless shelters were brought to Notre Dame to participate in a day of games as a part of Air Force ROTC's field day for homeless children held at Stepan Center on Saturday.

Some 65-75 children darted from activities which included pumpkin painting, face painting, basketball, paper plate painting, a moon bounce, and a magic show, according to Brad Mahlum, co-student coordinator along with Joe Roos.

Shelters participating included the Center for the Homeless, as well as St. Stephen's, St. Hedwig's, and the Northeast Neighborhood outreach centers, said Roos.

Notre Dame's Benjamin Foulois division of the Arnold Air Society, a nation-wide service organization that sponsors the project, decided to repeat the field day after its success last year when the theme was also children.

Eleven-year-old Charise, who was helping out with face painting, said that she came to the field day last year also, and added that she came back because "it was fun. I wanted to play basketball, too."

Donations to make this event possible came from local businesses including Papa John's Pizza, Osco Drug, Sam's Club, Matthys, and McDonald's.

INSIDE COLUMN

Alt-rock's seminal subliminals

Upon reading Josh Ozersky's column (The Observer, Oct. 13) regarding '70s rock as being the Public Enemy only alternative or something along those lines, I promptly signed up to write this Inside Column.

Rob Adams
Music Critic

On Wednesday night, I wrote a tasteful column as a response to the cynical one, planning to edit the piece Jesus Jones as many times as possible in order to make it unmistakably thought-provoking and possibly prompt Mr. Ozersky to a change in opinion about the "new music."

I did not feel completely confident about using a whole Inside Column to write a rebuttal to one particular column which appeared five days previous, however... I mean, some of my colleagues have important things to write about. Why should I waste an entire column on an answer to an opinion about music? After thinking about it a bit more Jesus and Mary Chain, then reading the Ozersky column again followed by my planned response, I began to think differently.

Regardless of what type of music anyone enjoys most, everyone should have become unhappy after Pretty Hate Machine reading the Ozersky column; in fact, I do not understand how Mr. Ozersky seemed to gleefully rip apart the musical credibility all the "sub-genres" that exist today without becoming depressed. "No good can come of 'new music'?" Do you realize then, Mr. Ozersky, that you are going to be stuck listening to the same sounds for the rest of your life?

Upon realizing the impact that this would have on the entire campus, I planned to read floods of letters written to The Observer concerning the closed-mindedness that it suggested. Sadly enough, De La Soul is Dead I was mistaken. In conversations over the past five days, I have engineered many discussions on the topic and, in most cases, the person with whom I was speaking would just humor me and say things like, "yeah, you must be pretty angry."

There was one bright spot, however. Steve Sostak's letter (The Observer, Oct. 15), was a comprehensive and tactful answer to the Ozersky column. The reason that I liked it so much revolved around the fact that it was very similar to the one I had written on Wednesday night. Unfortunately, it was the only letter like it to come in. Undaunted, I decided to write my inside Check Your Head column on the same subject, but to toss away my original idea and deal with the situation on campus as a whole.

Hence, I am attempting to reach anyone who agreed with Ozersky's opinion on the new music or anyone who read it and was Manchester not fuming afterwards. Do you realize what he has said? The purpose of attending a university is to open one's mind to everything and anything, not to bury heads in the dirt when something new comes around.

Music is alive and thriving today and will continue to grow and improve for as long as I can see in the future. And I hope that when I am a graduate student in the Pop Will Eat Itself Cure For Sanity next decade, I am enjoying my favorite songs from the past as well as the new, new music.

The views expressed in the Inside Column are those of the author and not necessarily those of The Observer.

NATION AT A GLANCE

Child support changes

WASHINGTON

On Jan. 1, 1994, a quiet revolution will be won in the way Americans pay child support. On that day, federal law will require virtually all new child-support awards to be withheld from the paychecks of absent parents. It is a momentous change, at least on the face of it. From that day on, Americans can regard Child-support in the same light as taxes and health insurance — hidden payments that don't come out of anyone's wallet because they never make it that far. But like a lot of momentous changes, especially those dreamed up in Washington, this one is neither as simple nor as straightforward as it might seem. To begin with, there won't be any change in some states because they've required withholding of child-support payments for years. Other states will probably miss the federal deadline, which has been lurking in the statute books since the Family Support Act was enacted in 1988. "It's a very fluid situation right now," said Craig Hathaway, a senior policy specialist at the Federal Office of Child Support Enforcement. Translation: States are still scrambling to try to comply with the federal rules, and some don't have a prayer of making it on time. "I don't think [it's] going to work," said Irwin Garfinkel, a professor of social work at Columbia University who has written extensively about child support. "I think we're going to have a little problem here," he added. None of this means withholding won't happen. It's already used to pay child support to welfare recipients, and the new rules — which expand it to nearly everyone else — will eventually make it universal. Under the new law, exceptions are basically only made when couples agree on alternative arrangements. Almost everyone agrees that withholding works, ensuring that many women and children (a few men are on the receiving end, but very few) will receive child-support payments without a monthly tug-of-war. Of course, some men may be dismayed to learn that their paychecks are suddenly lighter because of child-support payments — and that their personal lives are suddenly the business of their bosses.

Indiana autumn foliage in full bloom

INDIANAPOLIS

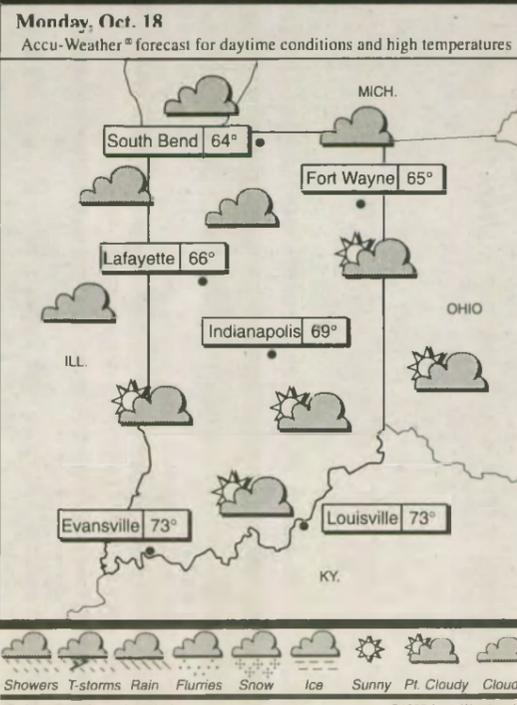

God must love scenic autumn vistas in Indiana — He made so many of them. Every knob and knoll, gully and twist of the road presents scenes rich in foliage when fall arrives. Roadside stands swell with pumpkins, gourds, bittersweet, Indian corn, festoons of dried florals — a virtual Crayola box of colors. It's a sign that another fruitful growing season has come to an end. It's also a sign that nature lovers will soon be heading for Brown County in numbers approaching 15,000 a day, creating traffic jams. But the annual pilgrimage to nature's colorful fall display needn't be a bumper to bumper experience. All over Indiana there are vistas of color equal to Brown County. "We like to start exploring and go to places you've never been before and find places that surprise you," said Phyllis Thomas. She and her husband wrote "Off the Beaten Path," a menu of lesser known spots of glamour and wonder.

School launches student-run radio station

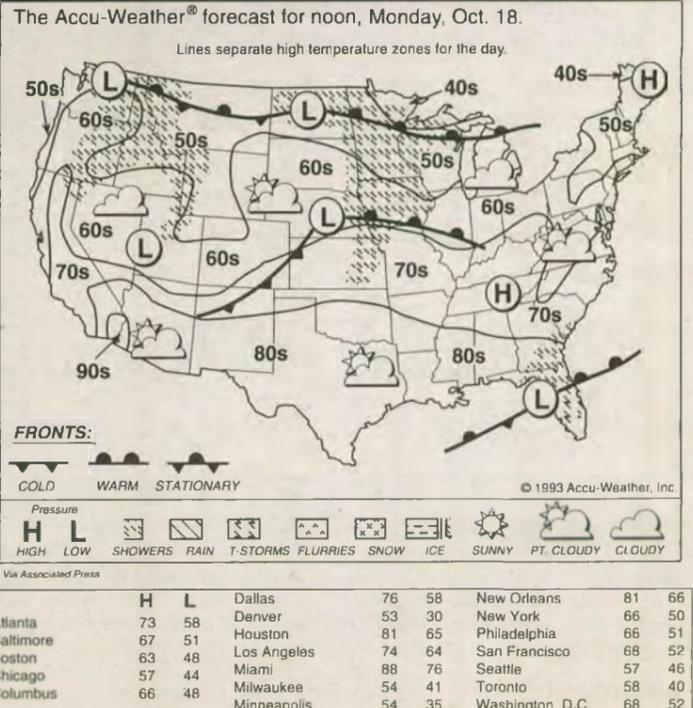

FORT WAYNE

Disc jockey Todd Fink's audience will be expanding soon from a couple of people at parties to anybody tuning in to the county's first student-run radio station. Fink and some of his Homestead High School classmates will launch 91.1 WCYT-FM on Nov. 1, said broadcasting teacher Bob Warner. The 125-watt station needs a minimum of seven to nine students to run it daily. At first, WCYT will broadcast from 6:55 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. Warner hopes to extend the hours after the holiday break, when students likely will be more comfortable on the air. About 60,000 homes will be able to pick up the broadcast, Warner said. The format will include mostly adult contemporary music, but also some oldies, country, and Top 40, Warner said. The adult contemporary format was chosen because most of the listeners probably will be adults, except for morning and afternoon drive-times.

Ginsburg off to intensive start on the bench

By LAURIE ASSBO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON
Judging by her energetic questioning from the bench, Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg is quickly hitting full stride in her new job. Intensive questioning last week by Ginsburg in a sexual-harassment case caused one lawyer to abandon his contention that the woman who had filed suit must prove the conduct harmed her performance at work.

"She basically pushed him to concede the case," said Georgetown University law professor Susan Deller Ross.

During her first two weeks of high court arguments, Ginsburg has asked lawyers frequent and probing questions on other issues such as drug forfeitures and civil rights law.

She also has brought the perspective of a former women's rights advocate to the conservative court, said some observers who noted that Ginsburg at one point described the "old days" of sexist law professors.

"She has hit the ground running," said Stuart Gerson, former acting attorney general in the Bush administration. "She has shown a great deal of energy and preparedness. Being on the court is awe-inspiring, but she is not awe-struck."

New justices often hold back when just arriving on the bench. Justice David Souter waited three weeks to ask his first question in 1990. Now a frequent and incisive questioner, Souter admits finding the job overwhelming at first.

Ginsburg's performance is being likened to the equally fast start in 1986 by Justice Antonin Scalia, her former federal appeals court colleague.

"It's not just that she's asking lots of questions. It's that she's asking outstanding questions that get to the heart of the matter," said Georgetown University law professor Susan Low Bloch.

In the sex-harassment case, the lawyer representing the woman, who filed the lawsuit against a Tennessee company, didn't escape close questioning either. Ginsburg suggested he was making the case more complicated than it should be.

If a woman is told "you think like a woman" and a male co-worker is not subjected to similar comments, "doesn't that make their job more difficult?" Ginsburg asked.

"Do you need anything further than that? The terms and conditions [of a job] aren't equal if one is called names and the other isn't," she said.

Ginsburg suggested an equally straightforward view during arguments on a civil rights case, pointing out that whatever penalties are required, the law has been clear since 1964: "Thou shalt not discriminate."

In another argument, she said a drug-forfeiture law's basic message also is clear: "That's part of the penalty; you forfeit the home where the drugs were kept."

Gorillas in need of protection

By LISA SCHROEDER
News Writer

Furthering the protection of endangered mountain species must be made a priority, according to Martha Robbins, who has researched gorillas for the last two and a half years at the Karisoke Research Center in eastern Africa.

"I don't think we can ever be complacent about endangered species," Robbins said in a lecture given at Saint Mary's on Friday.

Robbins' studies aim to answer the questions of what sort of tolerance, competition, and activity occurs within an all-male group as well as what sort of dynamics they have with females, she said.

Robbins is continuing the research established in 1967 by scientist Dian Fossey at Karisoke.

As part of her research, she follows a particular gorilla each day, noting its behavior, she said.

This observation includes monitoring the development of social behaviors with peers and adults, as well as vocal and non-vocal communication between gorillas, she said.

Feeding ecology, another major area studied, determines the size area a group needs and the maximum capacity of gorillas that the park can sustain, she said.

"But understanding the social behavior and the feeding ecology is irrelevant if these animals are going to go extinct soon," she said.

Robbins cited the increased use of poaching devices as a contributing factor in the growing number of gorillas that are killed each year.

The gorilla population showed an increase since 1981, but, in October 1990, war broke out. With an invasion in Rwanda, the park became a war-zone. Due to the severe economic problems that the war caused, poaching increased, she said.

"The number of snares set nearly doubled," Robbins said. "Now more than ever, we need anti-poaching patrols."

But Karisoke has had other problems to face besides the poaching.

"This past February, things hit an all-time low," she said. Karisoke had to be evacuated when rebels invaded and ravaged the camp, she said.

Fortunately, a peace accord was signed in August, and Karisoke has since re-opened.

"We're slowly replacing stolen things," Robbins said. "But the war has had serious consequences for the gorillas and the people."

Rally

"I could tell he was afraid of what might happen," said Indianapolis resident Darren Jackson. "He struck a chord in a lot of people when he started talking about blacks in particular."

On the contrary, Robb may have felt right at home considering over 150 white supremacist groups were drawn to the rally.

"I drove here today from Kentucky to support my race," said Michael Levins, a skinhead. "The white man is the most discriminated person in today's world and our concerns about our struggles need to be heard."

Levins also stressed the need for the white race to reproduce with one another as much as possible. "Our blood line is slowly fading. There's all kind of half-breeds running around this country. The white man must regroup and become the superior force once again."

Seven injured people, including three Indianapolis Star photographers, were sent to a nearby hospital and another seven were arrested for disorderly conduct. At one point, a group of anti-Klan demonstrators burned a confederate flag yelling, "Whoot, there it is."

"People started getting real tense towards the close of the rally," said State Police Sgt. David Morrison. "It went as well as can be expected. It's a shame people in America can't get along."

The evening before the rally 20 Klansmen and 200 onlookers gathered for a cross burning on a farm near Knox in Starke County, Indiana.

"This just isn't right," said John Phillips, a resident of Carmel, Indiana

Phillips, who is white, marched with Dr. Martin Luther King in Montgomery. "It's disheartening to know that after all these years, these fools are still around. This shouldn't even be allowed to happen."

Governor Evan Bayh seemed to have these same sentiments as he tried to stop the rally from occurring. Court officials dismissed Bayh's formal suppression calling the rally a "freedom of speech."

"It's a sad day," said Alan Katchen, regional director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, which monitors acts of bigotry. "This is not what the Indiana Government Center was built for."

Alcoholic fights a constant battle

By NICOLE McGRATH
News Writer

"Brenda" is a Saint Mary's graduate and recovering alcoholic.

She calls it trying to maintain two different lives.

"My drinking became a barrier between my faith and God," Brenda said. "My life split between the faithful life and the party life because drinking was real attractive."

She used alcohol to fit in because everyone was drinking — but she wasn't in control of herself.

Her split life didn't begin until she entered high school. "I didn't appreciate the people closest in my life," she said. "I wanted to put distance between us because my drinking was becoming such a priority."

That 'priority' got her kicked off her drill team and thrown out of a couple of dances.

During Brenda's senior year she began attending Alcohol Anonymous meetings.

"I thought it was a really honest group of people but I still didn't believe I was an alcoholic," Brenda said.

For the next three years, Brenda stayed sober. But she said she had this doubt about — "if she could just drink again."

Brenda relapsed her junior year at Saint Mary's.

"I drove to Michigan on a Saturday night and got wasted by myself," she said.

While Brenda has found support at her AA meetings, that support came a little slower from her family. "After my relapse, my mom knew she liked me sober but she really didn't realize how much of a problem it was for me," Brenda said.

Since the relapse, Brenda said she hasn't thought about drinking as much. "It makes you have a lot more gratitude for the little things," said Brenda. Brenda's name has been changed to protect her identity.

U.N. re-evaluates peacekeeping mission in Somalia

By PAUL ALEXANDER
Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia
The worst seemed to be over for Somalia in May, with starvation virtually ended and Mogadishu's streets safer than they had been for nearly four years.

Today, the United Nations and the United States find themselves looking for a way out of the tangled mess that was supposed to be a blueprint for future UN peacekeeping operations.

June 5, a month and a day after the UN took control of Operation Restore Hope from the United States, was the turning point. Twenty-four Pakistani troops were killed in coordinated ambushes.

Since then, the UN has found itself drawn into an urban guerrilla war and a public relations quagmire that have stymied the agency's efforts at nation-building.

"This blueprint is very complex," UN special envoy Adm. Johnathan Howe admitted last week. "It may have to be redrawn in several ways."

In May, Pakistani troops took over control of south Mogadishu after the departure of most U.S. forces, patrolling the bustling streets in open pickup trucks.

Today, few military vehicles stray far from UN strongpoints. They are waiting for the last of American tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles to arrive, along with the U.S. reinforcements that have been trickling in.

Rocks once were among the biggest threats for foreign troops. Now they face remote-controlled land mines, rocket-propelled grenades, and heavy-caliber machine guns. There are rumors of even heavier weaponry.

Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid had seen his influence steadily erode following the arrival of foreign troops, but he appears to have won the tactical fight for now. One of the country's top warlords, he was blamed for the Pakistani massacre and ensuing attacks on UN troops.

He is disliked by some of Somalia's other clans, but has built a reputation among his people as a wronged freedom fighter. The $25,000 UN bounty on his head seems a thing of the past, and he is trying to force his way back onto the political scene.

Canadian Prime Minister trailing as elections approach

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
Associated Press

RED DEER, Alberta
Prime Minister Kim Campbell was in the middle of a campaign harangue against Liberal leader Jean Chretien when a heckler interjected: "Then how come he's leading?"

With a week to go before the Oct. 25 election, many folks are asking how come indeed. How can a lackluster Liberal dinosaur with a few new ideas command a 15-point lead over a sitting prime minister.

The answer has less to do with Kim Campbell's Progressive Conservative program or Chretien's unrevolutionary thought than with upstart regional protest movements and the legacy of former prime minister Brian Mulroney, the most unpopular Canadian leader since polling began.

Ms. Campbell wrapped up last week an uninspiring tour of western Canada, heartland of the six-year-old Conservative Reform Party, and headed for Quebec to take on the separatist Bloc Quebecois.

Both movements are draining votes from Canada's mainstream parties, the Progressive Conservatives, the Liberals and even the socialist New Democratic Party. But the Progressive Conservatives are being hurt the worst.

It now looks increasingly likely that no party will win a majority in Canada's 295-seat House of Commons, meaning Canada would be governed by a shaky minority government.

An Angus Reid poll showed the Liberals leading by 37 percent among 1,961 Canadians surveyed. Next were the Conservatives at 22 percent and the Reform Party with 18 percent. The Bloc Quebecois is at 12 percent nationally, but has 46 percent in Quebec, the only province in which it is running candidates.

The poll has a margin of error of plus or minus 2.5 percent.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Cardinal's visit opportune for student reflection

Thanks from Senior dad for weekend

"America needs much prayer — lest it lose its soul." This statement by Pope John Paul II to the American bishops in Denver is applicable in a special way to the pro-life movement. Opponents of abortion, euthanasia and other violations of the right to life can become so absorbed in the minutiae of court decisions, legislation and statistics that their activity is practically indistinguishable from that of an ordinary political pressure group.

On the contrary, the foundation of pro-life activity is what John Paul described to the World Youth Day participants as "the truth of Christ's promise of new life." He exhorted them "to make the Gospel of Life penetrate the fabric of society, transforming people's hearts and the structures of society in order to create a civilization of true justice and love. . . This is no time to be ashamed of the Gospel.

It is time to preach it from the rooftops. . . Christ needs laborers ready to work in his vineyard. May you, the Catholic young people of the world, not fail him. In your hands carry the Cross of Christ. On your lips, the words of Life. In your hearts, the saving grace of the Lord."

Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students will soon have a unique opportunity to put these matters in perspective. ND/SMC Right to Life has invited John Cardinal O'Connor, Archbishop of New York, to give an afternoon of recollection to interested students from noon to five on Monday, March 21, 1994, which is in the week before Holy Week. O'Connor has generously accepted.

Because O'Connor prefers a parish setting for such programs, it will be held at Corpus Christi Church, in South Bend, off Portage near Cleveland Road. O'Connor and his party will drive from the airport to Corpus Christi and thence directly back to the airport, without visiting the campus. O'Connor is making this trip solely to spend an afternoon of prayer and reflection with students. No faculty, administrators or other non-students will be allowed to attend. ND/SMC Right to Life will arrange transportation for students as necessary.

O'Connor will be accompanied by two members of the Sisters of Life, Sylvia Jimenez and Sheila Duncan, who are Notre Dame graduates. O'Connor himself founded the Sisters of Life in 1991.

Through prayer and apostolic works, the Sisters are dedicated to protecting human life and promoting awareness of the sacredness of all human life, "beginning with the infant in the womb and extending to all those vulnerable to the threat of euthanasia." The Sisters emphasize the provision of direct, practical help to mothers in crisis pregnancies and to families affected by abortion and euthanasia. The Sisters affirm that the "basis" of their vocation is prayer and community life, including especially the Mass, worship before the Blessed Sacrament, the Divine Office and the Rosary.

The afternoon of reflection on March 21 will include two conferences given by O'Connor and a presentation by the Sisters of Life. O'Connor and priests from the area will hear confessions throughout the afternoon. O'Connor and the Sisters of Life will be readily available for questions and discussion. Snacks, soft drinks and coffee will be available, free, throughout the afternoon. The event will conclude with the Sacrifice of the Mass offered by O'Connor.

This afternoon of recollection presents an unprecedented opportunity for Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students. No one but students will be allowed to attend. No faculty. No administrators. Nobody. O'Connor and the Sisters of Life will make this trip from New York solely to be with the students. This reflects the O'Connor's oft-stated conviction that young people are the hope of the Church and that pro-life activity will succeed only to the extent that it draws its power from prayer, reflection and the sacraments.

"The culture of death spawned by the world," O'Connor has said, "especially threatens women, the babies, and the sick and the frail elderly. . . To be countercultural today is its own form of martyrdom. But to be countercultural except for the love of Christ is a sheer folly."

Professor Rice is on the Law School faculty. His column appears every other Monday.

(This letter is from a Saint Mary's dad responding to October 1 article "T-Shirt sends message that students are 'Daddy's little girl.'")

Dear Editor:

I want to express my appreciation to the class of '94 for a very enjoyable and inspirational weekend for Senior-Dad's weekend. All the dads concurred that our daughters have changed a great deal in three and a half years. We all shared childhood stories at dinner with our daughters and they shared their goals and aspirations for the future.

The strong common thread that ran through the events this whole weekend was the mutual love, respect and admiration we all shared. The hardest part of the weekend was the last kiss from our daughters till Thanksgiving.

On the plane ride home I pulled a certain t-shirt out and read the back. Tears came to my eyes with pride that together my wife and I have contributed to the development of a healthy, caring, intelligent, sensitive person who has great self-esteem and knows what she stands for as a Christian woman in today's world.

My daughter told me that she plans to go to dental school and then specialize in orthodontics. I think the first day of practice, seven years from now, we will both wear our Saint Mary's "Daddy's little girl" t-shirt.

Thanks, Saint Mary's for making daddy's little girl into a Saint Mary's woman.

Only the mountains that tower over Cougar Stadium provided a more awe-some spectacle than the Notre Dame football team in the first half of Saturday's 45-20 win over Brigham Young.

Darkness cloaked the mountains in the second half and the Irish also seemed to disappear into the night.

"It was very important that we were successful in the first half because of the way we played in the second half," Irish offensive tackle Aaron Taylor said. "We were really focused in the first half and I don't know if we lost our focus or what, but we were unable to move the ball in the second half."

A 31-7 halftime bulge kept the Cougars at a safe distance and kept the final score respectably one-sided. The win lifts Notre Dame to 7-0 and the No. 2 spot in the polls after Alabama tied Tennessee.

"We played very well in the first 30 minutes of the football game to take an early lead and we took control of the football game," Irish coach Lou Holtz said.

Notre Dame dominated the first half on both sides of the ball, collecting 282 yards of total offense while holding the Cougars to just 90.

Add one more component to Notre Dame's defensive attack.

A solid pass rush.

Lacking for most of the season, the Irish defensive line swarmed around Brigham Young's quarterbacks Saturday, collecting three sacks, hurrying five other passes and basically making the Cougars run for their lives.

"One of our goals at the beginning of the season was to have a good pass rush," Irish defensive lineman Brian Hamilton said. "We were a good pass rushing team in the Spring, but it fell off for some reason in the fall. It finally came together tonight and it felt good."

It was Hamilton's first quarter sack that ultimately forced BYU starting quarterback John Walsh to leave the game with an injury.

Walsh's substitute Tom Young—the brother of San Francisco 49'ers quarterback Steve Young—seemed to be in trouble on almost every play, releasing several passes just before taking a hit from an Irish defender.

That pressure was essential in taking away BYU's explosive passing attack.

Maybe more importantly, it also shut down the running attack, taking away virtually all of the Cougars' offensive options.

"I thought in the first half we played very well on defense," Irish coach Lou Holtz said. "We stopped the run which was absolutely critical. One thing you don't want to do is let BYU run the football."

The Cougars managed just 27 yards on the ground in the first half. The passing game was equally inept in the first half as Walsh and Young combined for only 54 passing yards.

And the main reason for Notre Dame's success was the fierce pressure on the quarterback on almost every pass play.

That pressure may be the final element needed to make Notre Dame a great defensive team.

Only halfway through the season, Notre Dame has become the first Irish team to collect two shutouts in one season since the 1977 national championship team.

And for 30 minutes of Saturday's thrashing of BYU, it looked like they might get another one.

"We were pretty much in control of the game," Irish defensive coordinator Rick Minter said. "But it got a little ugly at the end."

Ugly indeed.

The Cougars' offense was penalized nine times for 62 yards in the second half, but still managed to put together two lengthy scoring drives to make the game respectable.

But the Irish are not discouraged.

"We're a good defensive team right now and we could be a great one," Hamilton said. "We're really close to being a great one. We just have to concentrate on doing the little things well."

They did those little things well in the first half.

Sustaining those little things is the problem.

"We controlled them to a point, but they got a good drive going at the end of the first half and it kind of carried over into the second half," Irish cornerback Bobby Taylor said. "We played well at times, but they were able to get some big yards."

The Observer/John Bingham

Linebacker Justin Goheen hits Cougar running back Jamal Willis during second half action.

Young completed 12 of 23 passes for 77 yards and Clements hit on 5 of 6 for 50 yards in the game's final minutes.

Those are not big numbers by BYU's standards, but after stifling the Cougars in the first half, they are very big numbers to the Irish.

"We always find a way to mess it up at the end," Minter said. "We're a good defensive team and I feel we're good fundamentally, but we're not where we need to be yet. But we're close."

Hamilton set the tone on the game's first series with a sack of Cougar quarterback John Walsh.

Walsh eventually had to leave the game with a knee injury he sustained on that play.

"He's a great quarterback, so it was good to have him out of there," Hamilton said. "But No. 14 came in and did a great job."

No. 14 was Tom Young, the brother of San Francisco 49'ers quarterback Steve Young.

The record crowd of 66,247 erupted when Young came onto the field for his first series late in the first quarter.

But there would be no comeback.

Taylor and the rest of the Irish offensive line simply controlled the line of scrimmage in the first half, abusing BYU's weak rushing defense.

Notre Dame scored on five of its first six possessions to open a 31-0 lead. It's longest drive in that stretch took 4:16.

Ray Zellers began the barrage with the longest run of his career, a 29-yard stroll along the sideline for Notre Dame's first score.

After Kevin Pendegast's career-high 44-yard field goal on the next Irish possession, Lee Becton scored from seven yards out to give the Irish a 17-0 lead at the end of the first quarter.

Becton finished the first half with 87 of his 122 rushing yards, his second consecutive 100-yard game.

Young led BYU's first sustained drive of the game at the beginning of the second quarter.

But the 16-play drive ended with a failed 51-yard field goal attempt and Notre Dame continued to roll.

After the run had been so successful on the previous three drives, McDougal went to the air, missing Lake Dawson deep and Zellers on a screen pass.

But on third down, McDougal found Mike Miller over the middle for a 66-yard scoring strike to put the Irish up 24-0.

Freshmen Randy Kinder and Marc Edwards helped set up the final Irish score of the half, with big runs that pushed the Irish deep into Cougar territory.

Edwards capped the drive with a five-yard scoring run to put the Irish up 31-0.

But then the momentum seemed to shift.

After Steve Christensen returned the kickoff 63 yards to the Notre Dame 37-yard line, Young took control, leading the Cougars to the end-zone in the final seconds of the first half.

That brought the BYU crowd back into the game in the second half, making things difficult for the Irish offense.

"This is the loudest and most loyal crowd I have witnessed in my entire coaching profession," Holtz said. "There were times when we tried to check off, but we just couldn't hear."

Penalties plagued both teams in the sloppy second half, which saw the Irish outscore the Cougars just 14-13.

"We were shooting ourselves in the foot. We'd have a 30 yard gain, but it would be called back because somebody was holding," Taylor said, downplaying BYU's halftime adjustments. "They did some new things, but it was stuff we had seen before and should have been able to pick up."

Edwards kept Notre Dame comfortably in front with a one-yard scoring run midway through the third quarter, but BYU wouldn't die.

Young capped a 76-yard drive with a three-yard run.

After Paul Failla hit Miller with a 35-yard touchdown pass, BYU's third stringer Steve Clements drove the Cougars 53 yards in six plays to cap the scoring.

Despite the sloppy second half, Notre Dame emerges unscathed and set for next week's clash with USC.

Trojan coach John Robinson is 6-1 in his career against the Irish and he would like nothing more than to knock the Irish from their pedestal.

"[Robinson] is 6-1 against Notre Dame?" Irish linebacker Pete Bercich asked. "Well, I guess as long as he doesn't play we'll be alright."

JOCK STRIP

Top Ten Tumble sets the stage for classic matchup

PROVO, Utah

Alabama had only the best interests of college football in mind when it took part in Saturday's Top Ten Tumble.

The defending champions, deciding it was time to give someone else a shot at college football's top prize, graciously tied Tennessee to open the No. 2 spot to a more deserving team.

Or at least a more unblemished team. No, not Ohio State.

Notre Dame is now 7-0 and ranked No. 2, its best start since 1989 and its highest ranking since 1990.

Barring any unforeseen catastrophes, the stage is set for Notre Dame's biggest game in five years and one of the biggest in its history.

JASON KELLY
Associate Sports Editor

November 13 against No. 1 Florida State.

It's the game you circled in red on your schedule in August.

It's the game that's worth so much that rumors are circulating about NBC selling the rights to another network.

And now that it's only four weeks away, it's the game on everyone's mind.

Everyone, that is, except the participants.

"With someone like Coach Holtz running the show, we'll never get caught looking ahead," Irish linebacker Pete Bercich said.

"We're always in touch with our long term goals, but we know that we have to perform in the short term to make the Florida State game as important as possible."

A loss to USC or Navy would make the Florida State game about as important as caffeine is to a Mormon.

Notre Dame proved in the second half of Saturday's game that it is capable of losing not only to Florida State, but probably to Florida A&M also.

In the first half the Irish looked almost unstoppable, running at will against a hapless BYU team.

It was an almost identical scenario for Notre Dame a week ago against a team much worse than BYU. Notre Dame played one sloppy half and one brilliant half.

Such is the fate of a team so full of first-year players.

To be as inconsistent as Notre Dame and still be undefeated more than halfway through the season is a credit to the character of the team.

A lesser team would have lost to Michigan or maybe even to Purdue.

That is why the next two weeks are so crucial.

Notre Dame will be comfortably favored to win its next two games, as it has been in most of its games this season.

But a performance similar to some of those games—particularly against USC—could lead to a much different result.

Southern Cal is a long way from its glory days of the past, but this game means more to Trojan coach John Robinson than almost any other.

He is 6-1 against Notre Dame and he promised in a speech earlier this year that his team wouldn't lose in South Bend.

"[Robinson] is 6-1 against us?" Bercich asked.

"Well, as long as he doesn't play I guess we'll be alright."

But Bercich knows the magnitude of this game.

"It's more than a game, it's the greatest rivalry in football," he said. "The tradition makes it one of the biggest games every year regardless of the records. This year we just have more at stake, that's all."

A national championship. That's all.

Injury may sideline Peterson for rest of season

By JASON KELLY
Associate Sports Editor

PROVO, Utah

Anthony Peterson's season may be over.

The senior linebacker didn't make the trip to Provo this weekend after reinjuring his knee in practice last week.

He will have surgery Monday and expects to miss six to eight weeks.

Peterson has missed most of the 1993 season after a knee injury forced him out of the season-opener against Northwestern.

He returned for a few plays last week against Pittsburgh, so it is unlikely he will be able to retain a season of eligibility.

BERCICH IS BACK: There was some good news for the Irish linebackers Saturday.

Pete Bercich returned from a shoulder injury to collect six tackles, including a jarring hit to Jamal Willis.

He says his shoulder is fine. Willis may not be.

WE'RE NO. 2: Thanks to Alabama's tie with Tennessee, the Irish moved up to No. 2 in the polls, setting the stage for one of the biggest games in school history on November 13 against Florida State.

The Irish have to defeat USC and Navy before the Florida State game becomes the next "Game of the Century," but many are already conceding those games to the Irish and looking ahead to the big one.

Except the members of the Notre Dame football team.

"[Florida State] is an outstanding team," Bercich says. "That's what this season will come down to, I hope. But with someone like Coach Holtz running the show, we won't get caught looking ahead. We know that if we don't beat USC and Navy the Florida State game won't mean anything."

"We're always in touch with our long term goals, but we have to perform in the short term to reach those goals."

CROWD CONTROL: Notre Dame found out first hand why BYU is one of the nation's best teams at home.

In its first trip to Cougar Stadium, Notre Dame faced a record crowd of 66,247 that cheered their team long after the outcome was decided.

"I thought the crowd was as loud and involved as any place I have been," Irish coach Lou Fullback Ray Zellars collected the longest run of his career on a career day for three Irish players.

Holtz said. "This is the loudest and most loyal crowd I witnessed in my entire coaching profession."

CAREER DAY: Notre Dame had three offensive players achieve career highs in Saturday's 45-20 win over Brigham Young.

First it was Ray Zellars, rambling 29 yards for a touchdown and the longest gain of his career.

Then Kevin Pendergast booted a career-high 44 yard field goal.

It was Kevin McDougal's turn next, completing the longest pass of his career, a 66-yard touchdown strike to Mike Miller.

Foodshare founder reflects on hunger issues

By JENNIFER GUERIN
Accent Writer

Like many students qualifying for financial aid during their first year at Notre Dame, Lisa Mackett Kelly was asked to report to the dining hall for work-study in the fall of 1987.

As a direct result of her experiences there, she formed Foodshare, now one of the university's most well known hunger-relief organizations.

Since her graduation from the College of Arts and Letters in 1991, Mackett Kelly has pursued an increased knowledge of hunger issues, continuing to call on the ideals of individual service instilled in her at Notre Dame.

Frustrated with the waste being produced nightly at the dining hall, where she had been performing her work-study, Mackett Kelly was moved to action.

With hopes of salvaging and distributing some of the leftovers, she approached the staff at the Center for Social Concerns in search of help.

"One night I stopped in and that one night changed many lives because what I found in that building was not someone to take care of the problem for me, but rather others who would enable me to solve the problem," she wrote in a recent tribute to former University president Father Theodore Hesburgh, C.S.C.

"On the first night we asked for students to volunteer for Foodshare, we needed 35. Over 200 signed up," she wrote.

Other workers and students had decried the same waste, but taken no action to distribute the leftovers because of health laws and restrictions, as well as the extra time and effort the plans would entail.

"Foodshare came so easy," said Kelly, who was joined by law student Kathy Barron in her efforts to start the program, "because it just made sense."

Now a graduate student of public policy at Harvard University, pursuing a concentration in families and children, Mackett Kelly's awareness and knowledge of hunger issues has grown.

She has begun to realize the complexity of the world's economic and social structures that not only cause hunger to emerge, but also prevent its alleviation.

"If we gave all our extra food in the United States to India, that would kill all the Indian farmers," she said, demonstrating the increased knowledge that has altered some of the ideals of her years at Notre Dame.

"Things aren't quite so easy as they were when I was an undergraduate," she conceded.

"It's not an issue of hunger, but an issue of empowerment," she continued.

Although made manifest to college students through the hungry people of the local community, she explained, the roots of hunger begin elsewhere, in the very structure of society itself.

Economic and social systems already in place work to prevent people, accidentally or intentionally, from getting food.

These systems are very resistant to change, said Mackett Kelly, and often work against the people by preventing seemingly simple solutions.

When asked to reflect on the situation of hunger in the United States today in comparison to five years ago, Kelly replied with qualified negativity. "I think it's worse," she conceded.

"My biggest fear is that hunger is a fad, [an] issue that will be 'in' for a while and then 'out.'"

Despite her fears and frustration, Mackett Kelly is careful not to discourage student involvement in alleviating hunger on the individual and local levels.

"I feel like you've got to start small to think about the big picture," she said.

Her biggest concern is that people who begin volunteering for causes as far-reaching and widespread as global hunger soon feel overwhelmed by the size and scope of the problem, and curtail their involvement.

They feel the problem is too big, Mackett Kelly noted sympathetically, and that their modest efforts mean little in the face of problems with such epidemic proportions.

To combat this despair, she asks that volunteers continue to look at people as individuals, instead of numbers and statistics in relation to an insuperable problem.

"If you look at the people you're helping as human beings," she insisted, motivation will not wane.

In her tribute to Father Hesburgh, she wrote that "the best way to change the world may actually be in service to others, one meal at a time."

Incorporating her experience with Foodshare and the C.S.C. into her life after graduation, Mackett Kelly spent two years teaching in Maryland, where she brought her students to local food pantries.

Together with her husband Tom Kelly, whom she met through Foodshare at Notre Dame, she strove to incorporate the lessons she had learned into her own and her pupils' lives.

"My husband and I are now both teaching high school," she wrote in her tribute to Father Hesburgh, "trying to instill in our students the value of service to others that had been passed on to us."

Foodshare continues to thrive as an organization since Kelly's departure from campus in 1991.

Its goal remains unchanged: to provide an active approach to fighting hunger in the South Bend area.

Members of the group transport leftover food from both dining halls to local homeless shelters on a daily basis, estimating that their efforts provide over 18,000 meals per semester.

Although she keeps in contact with staff members at the C.S.C., the Foodshare founder has made a conscious effort not to follow up on the administration and management of Foodshare itself.

In accordance with her belief in the importance of each individual effort to reach out to the hungry, she wants to assure that the organization belongs to the students who run it each year.

But when asked about Foodshare members and the staff at the C.S.C., she replied, "They're still my inspiration."

Notre Dame students work to alleviate hunger

By KATIE LEHNER
Accent Writer

For many students, hunger may seem like an issue far removed from the ND/SMC community.

Some students however, have come together to take an active role in the fight against hunger through various campus clubs and activities.

Notre Dame's World Hunger Coalition, one of the oldest and most successful organizations of its kind on campus, works to increase awareness of hunger issues through various activities ranging from the Wednesday Lunch Fast to the organization of holiday food baskets.

WHC has aided hungry people all over the world, including areas in America, South America, Africa, and India.

Senior Craig Anzilotti, one of the leaders of WHC, says the coalition's main goal is to "increase awareness of the complexity of the hunger problem in the world today and to aid grass-roots organizations, both local and international, in providing individuals with the necessary tools to feed themselves."

To help the local hunger problem, WHC puts together and distributes food baskets for both Thanksgiving and Easter.

Last year, they were able to put together approximately 330 baskets for families in the South Bend community, and hope to do the same or better this year.

In addition to the Wednesday Lunch Fast and the food baskets, WHC holds a 24-hour fast each semester to raise money and awareness of the hunger issue.

Currently, WHC consists of approximately 10 students active in the administration and planning of events, in addition to the approximately 500 students involved in the lunch fast.

These ten core students meet once a week in a small discussion group, usually during the lunch hour on Wednesday, to address the hunger issue, and often have speakers or panel discussions as part of their meetings.

Foodshare, an offshoot of WHC, was started in the fall of 1987. It arose out of students' frustration over the wasted, leftover food of Notre Dame's dining halls.

People began to wonder where the unserved, leftover food from the dining halls went, according to Foodshare member Joe Gavigan, and when they found out it was simply being thrown out, they organized Foodshare to collect the food and deliver it to area shelters.

The group also sends food to both Hope Rescue Mission and the Center for the Homeless every night.

Foodshare consists of 70 members, each of whom contributes at least one hour every week to help collect and deliver the food.

Last year, the club brought over 30,000 meals to the homeless.

Despite the efforts of WHC and Foodshare, student awareness of the hunger issue remains lacking, according to Anzilotti.

Only 5-10% of the student body are active in the issue, including the students involved in the Wednesday Lunch Fast.

There are some classes which involve students in community service, including helping in area soup kitchens, according to Shaheen Goldrick, member of the Student Advisory Board of the CSC.

These classes are offered through a variety of departments, ranging from Theology to Architecture. They involve experiential learning, wherein the students perform service in the community, then come together to discuss their experiences.

Goldrick says the problem with student involvement is that "we're increasing awareness of the already aware."

The students that remain active are those who already understand the problem, and she fears that the groups are not educating others about the problem of hunger.

Because Notre Dame students are so far removed from the issues, said Goldrick, they remain indifferent to learning about the hunger issue.

Gavigan believes most students get involved because they feel obligated to and it "makes them feel good about themselves."

Overall, though, he says students here are not as involved as observers may think.

Despite the achievements of the clubs, Royer is concerned about Notre Dame students' lack of understanding about hunger issues.

"With activities such as working in soup kitchens, raising funds, and so forth, our students are wonderful, but it's in the next step, in understanding the question and issues of resource distribution, that Notre Dame students don't really understand or care to understand."

To get involved with the different clubs, contact Kathy Royer of the CSC at 631-7862, Craig Anzilotti of WHC at 232-5287, and Eric Escagne of Foodshare at 634-2054.

chances and we didn't. That's why they won."

Freshman Tar Heel forward Sarah Dacey gave North Carolina a 1-0 edge with 33:25 expired in the first half when she launched a 20 yard blast from the top of the goal box into the upper left corner of the net. It was a perfectly placed shot which Renola had no chance of stopping.

The score stayed at 1-0 through the first half.

With just over 30 minutes left in the game, junior forward Rita Tower stepped up for North Carolina and scored her first of two goals that came within a six minute span.

She one-timed a short pass from teammate Amy Burns and perfectly placed it in the left corner of the net to give UNC a 1-0 advantage. Her second goal came from a header of a Danielle Egan crossing pass which she knocked off the crossbar and in.

The two quick goals deflated Notre Dame's hopes and seemed to improperly represent the actual playing of the game.

"We look forward to playing them again," said Petrucelli. "On any given day we could beat them."

"Before, we thought we could beat them," said Renola. "Now, we know we can beat them."

"At times we lost our intensity and questioned whether we could do it," said Daws. "But its definitely evident that we can."

"Notre Dame is an up-and-coming team and I thought they gave us a heck of a game," said North Carolina head coach Anson Dorrance. "I credit Notre Dame for their intensity and their commitment."

"They played extremely well," said UNC captain Mia Hamm, who last year was named NCAA Player of the Year and currently leads the Tar Heels in scoring. "They play in a great rhythm together. I think their record speaks for itself."

After a day of rest, the squad was on fire yesterday and played perhaps its best half of soccer this season in the first half against Duke. Inspired by an emotional Saturday night team meeting, the Irish came out determined to demolish the Blue Devils. Duke had beaten Notre Dame in each of the last three seasons.

The game opened with the Irish yet again missing some quality scoring opportunities

Their relentless pursuit paid off 36:19 into the first half when junior Jodi Hartwig took a bouncing crossing pass from freshman Stacia Masters and kicked it while off balance into the far corner of the net.

Masters doubled the Irish lead only 1:21 later when she stole the ball from a Tar Heel defender in what had seemed to be a dead Irish scoring drive. With limited playing field in which to work, Masters kept her defender behind her and managed to sneak around the right of the Duke keeper and tuck it inside the near post.

The opening minutes of the second half proved to be a different story for the Irish. Duke head coach Bill Hempen made several strategic changes at the half which caught Notre Dame off guard. In particular, he switched one of his inside midfielders with his sweeper to mark up tighter on Daws.

"Cindy was having her way with our mid-field," said Hempen. "As far as freshman go, she's the best I've seen this season."

The adjustment worked for Duke for most of the half, as Daws was neutralized due to both the fact that the Blue Devil sweeper had her marked and the fact that she was suffering from fatigue.

"I just got dehydrated and a little tired," she explained. The hot and humid weather was a significant factor in the Irish lapses in the second half.

Junior Meegan McMullin scored first for Duke and she was followed by sophomore Kelly Walbert.

The score was locked at 2-2 until Michelle McCarthy put home the game-winning goal with just under eight minutes left in the game.

McCarthy, who is considered one of the best ball dribblers in the nation, slyly beat her defender to get a 1-on-1 with the goalie, who she beat to the right side. McCarthy had perhaps her best performance of the season in yesterday's match, as she set up several other scoring opportunities which were not converted.

"McCarthy had a great game," said Petrucelli, "she's tough to handle when she's got the ball at her feet."

"I wasn't nervous," McCarthy said of her feelings when Duke tied the game. "I honestly thought we would score."

Even with the second half lapse, the Irish managed to outshoot the Blue Devils 15-9.

"We played well in the first half, and we went to sleep for a little while in the second half," said Petrucelli. "Fortunately we were able to wake ourselves up and get a goal."

"They're tough," said McMullin. "They were tough last year and I think they are tougher this year."

Indeed, the Irish are tough. Although they didn't get the results they wanted against the Tar Heels, they proved that they can challenge anything team in the nation.

'The Shirt' soccer style

By BRYAN CONNOLLY
Assistant Sports Editor

It was their version of The Shirt.

When the Notre Dame women's soccer players took the field last Friday versus No. 1 North Carolina, they did so with a newly inspired sense of unity and confidence and the belief that the green uniform jerseys in which they were playing would give them some kind of intangible advantage in the most important game in their team's history.

The squad was continuing the Notre Dame tradition of changing to a green uniform for a game where the Irish were certainly considered an underdog.

And without a doubt, the Irish were considered underdogs in their match-up with the Tar Heels, who have won 70 consecutive games and 11 of the past 12 national championships.

Notre Dame head coach Chris Petrucelli conceived the idea of wearing green shirts last summer while looking ahead to the squad's crucial contests. He decided to acquire the shirts and then keep their existence as a secret in order to use them as a motivator for the game.

"It was to keep us from being intimidated, to give us an extra edge going in," he explained. "I think it worked."

Petrucelli exposed his plan to the jerseys to the squad at a team meeting just over an hour before game time.

"They were surprised and excited," he said, "and maybe even a little bit honored."

"It was the final edge we needed to have confidence in ourselves," said tri-captain Andi Kurek.

"There was a certain sense of enthusiasm we had while driving to the game, warming up, and going on to the field," said tri-captain Stephanie Porter.

The squad kept its sweat jackets on in the 85 degree humid Houston air while warming up in order to conceal their surprise from the crowd and their opponent.

"We were sweating to death," said Porter.

When the Irish unveiled their green jerseys just prior to kick-off, a feeling of confidence swarmed the team and the many Notre Dame fans in attendance.

"There was a real lift when they took their jackets off," said Petrucelli, "and there was a real buzz in the stands when we took the field."

"Our team knows the significance behind the shirt," said

Belles lose in Saturday's gulleywasher

By MARY GOOD
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

Saturday's stormy weather in Rensselaer, Ind. set the scene for the Saint Mary's soccer team's 1-0 loss to Saint Joseph's College.

Rensselaer recieved two and one-half inches of rain this weekend which created a mud slide on St. Joseph's soccer field.

"The footing was treacherous," the Belles' coach Tom VanMeter said.

"It was not a high scoring game and neither team had a lot of shots on goal," he added. The Belles had six shots on goal while St. Joseph's had ten.

Saint Marys' goal keeper, Anne Kuehne, stopped a break-away.

In the first ten minutes of the first half of the game senior forward, Megan Dalsaso, headed a ball that was tipped in by sophomore Tiffany Raczynski. The goal, however, was called back due to a foul before the score.

down.

"The girls struggled all day. They just couldn't seem to get in sync," VanMeter said.

A number of the players are still recovering from injuries suffered earlier this season which added to the difficulty.

Despite the stress the Belles were under last week not only from soccer, but also dealing with exams and papers, the team gave Saturday's game their best shot, Van Meter added.

SMC falls to Indianapolis

By MARY GOOD
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

The Saint Mary's volleyball team suffered a disappointing mid-season loss on Saturday to the University of Indianapolis.

The Belles lost 13-15, 0-15, and 5-15.

"We came out so strong in the first game," said coach Julie Schroeder-Biek.

In game one, Saint Mary's was up 6-0. They continued to dominate the game and were ahead 12-6 when the University of Indianapolis rallied for the win.

"Being beaten in that game after we had been leading the entire time devastated us," said coach Julie Schroeder-Biek.

The main problem for the Belles was communication. "There was just no talk on the court," Schroeder-Biek said.

The girls also had a hard time focusing and concentrating. They had a tough week with a lot of late nights due to volleyball, the Belles' coach commented.

The team is also suffering from a lot of illnesses and injuries due to mid-season and mid-semester stress, Schroeder-Biek added.

After their game the Belles had a team meeting.

"All of the girls were frustrated with the way we played," Schroeder-Biek said.

With only eight games left, Schroeder-Biek said this is merely a small mid-season lase and she is confident that the team id going to be ready to take on the University of Chicago on Tuesday.

Tar Heels take advantage of Irish

The Observer/David Hungeling

Freshmen Cindy Daws and the No. 5 Irish fell to No.1 North Carolina in the Women's Collegiate Classic.

By BRYAN CONNOLLY
Assistant Sports Editor

Sometimes, no matter how hard you try, you just can't get the break you need to succeed.

That was the case this weekend for the Notre Dame women's soccer team, which fell to the No. 1 North Carolina Tar Heels 3-0 in its opening match of the Women's Collegiate Classic in Houston before thwarting the eighth ranked Blue Devils of Duke yesterday, 3-2.

The fifth ranked Irish competed with the best of the best in this first annual tournament and yet again proved themselves to be a viable member of the nation's elite in collegiate soccer.

In a surprise maneuver, the 14-2 Irish squad donned green uniform jerseys for its match-up with North Carolina, a move which proved to give the Irish a lift against the heavily favored Tar Heels.

"That was awesome," said freshman Irish midfielder Cindy Daws. "It was an extra incentive and it pumped us up."

However, green jerseys were not enough to get Notre Dame past powerhouse UNC.

It was the first ever meeting between the young and inexperienced Notre Dame program of the perennially dominant North Carolina program, which has won 70 consecutive games and 11 of the past 12 national titles.

Typically, a 3-0 score can be interpreted as a rather lopsided game. However, Friday's contest between the Irish and the Tar Heels was by no means a typical game.

"I didn't think the score reflected the game," said Daws, expressing a sentiment felt throughout the team. "I thought we did really well."

"We played better than the score indicated," echoed Irish tri-captain Stephanie Porter. "That's the frustrating thing."

Indeed, the Irish entered the contest with few but themselves having confidence in their chances of success. It became evident midway through the first half that Notre Dame had a solid opportunity to become the first team to knock off the Tar Heels since October of 1990.

Sophomore forward Rosella Guerrero nearly gave the Irish a 1-0 lead when she rose high above the crowd in the penalty box to receive a Tiffany Thompson cornerkick and proceeded to head a bullet into the North Carolina crossbar.

Although the Tar Heels outshot the Irish 22-6, they had difficulty in netting a goal because the Irish would not allow any quality scoring opportunities. Only ten of the UNC shots were on net.

"They took a lot of shots, but they weren't better because of that," said freshman goalkeeper Jen Renola. "That's just how they play."

The Irish differ from North Carolina in that they play a much more controlled style of

Powlus lost for season

Observer Staff Report

Freshman quarterback Ron Powlus refractured his collarbone yesterday at practice, sidelining him for the remainder of the season.

"After throwing a pass he felt pain in his arm and knew right away that it was injured," said Notre Dame Sports Information director John Heisler.

He was taken to Memorial Hospital last night and x-rays revealed that the break occurred in the same location as the previous injury suffered during fall drills.

Powlus right arm was put in a sling and more x-rays will be taken tomorrow. Surgery is not necessary, but the rehabilitation will take a minimum of two months.

Powlus had been cleared to practice only last week and was still not allowed to participate in contact drills.

offense and they work the ball forward until a quality scoring opportunity arises.

The difference in the game was due to the fact that the Tar Heels converted their scoring opportunities and the Irish did not.

"In a high-level game like this, there are going to be very few chances to score," said Notre Dame head coach Chris Petrucelli. "They finished their

The Irish must like Ohio.

Following two shutout victories over Xavier and Ohio State last weekend, the Notre Dame men's soccer team returned to Ohio to down Bowling Green 2-1 yesterday afternoon.

The Irish were able to pull out the victory despite the fact that they were missing starters Tim Oates, who could not play because of yellow cards, Tont Richardson, who had a hamstring pull, and Chris Mathis, who injured his foot earlier in the week.

"This was a good win, especially since we only had seven starters," said Notre Dame head coach Mike Berticelli, who achieved his third straight ten-win season with the victory. "It's never easy to beat someone on their home field."

The Irish jumped out to a 1-0 lead just 13:37 into the contest when sophomore Bill Lanza hooked a shot around Falcon goalie Dan Traver. Defender Chris Dean was credited the assist on the play.

Jean Joseph and the Irish trounced Bowling Green 2-1 yesterday.

Notre Dame increased their lead at the 57:14 mark when freshman midfielder Konstantin Koloskov booted in a loose ball from in front of the net. The goal, which later proved to be the game winner, gave the Irish a 2-0 advantage.

"Konstantin has been due for a goal. He's been getting better and better," continued Berticelli.

Bowling Green spoiled Bert Bader's bid at four consecutive shutouts late in the game, when midfielder Tom Kinney's header attempt was rebounded to Tony Dore, who scored to narrow the Irish lead to 2-1. Kinney and Brian Ferguson assisted on the play.

The Falcon goal with only 3:13 left to play ended a streak of over 370 minutes of shutout soccer pitched by the Notre Dame defense, who were led in the game by Dean, Kevin Adkisson, Dane Whitley, and Brian Engesser.

Bowling Green outshot the Irish 19-15 and tallied nine corner kicks compared to only six for Notre Dame, but the Falcons could not capitalize on the scoreboard.

"I was pleased with the way we played, but disappointed that we gave up a goal," continued Berticelli. "We didn't finish as well, but, to give credit to their goalie, he made some nice saves."

Falcon goalie Dan Traver had four saves in a losing cause, as Bowling Green dropped to 8-5 on the season.

With the victory, the Irish improved to 10-4, and are currently riding a four-game win streak, their longest this season. Notre Dame will be in action again on Thursday, as they will take on Western Illinois on Alumni Field.
