Debate continues over support staff salaries

By MEGAN McGRATH
News Writer

The issues raised during last Thursday's Gender Studies faculty forum concerning support staff salaries continue to be discussed this week, with panelists Jean Porter and Teresa Ghilarducci having to defend the data used to substantiate their points.

"I think the information distributed at the forum was incomplete," said director of Human Resources Roger Mullins. "Some of the comparisons drawn were not made correctly; it's not comparing apples to apples."

The main bone of contention for administrators was the charge that Notre Dame secretaries make less than others in the South Bend area. University President Rev. Edward Malloy called the figures into question during a homily Sunday in Siegfried Hall.

According to Mullins, the average secretary at Notre Dame makes $20,696. The St. Joseph's county average is $19,932. The 1995 survey, conducted by Project Future, found the University to be around the market mean in most classifications.

However, Ghilarducci would like a more careful look at the

Flood appointed new WVFI station manager

By KRISTI KOLSKI

Campus AM radio station WVFI has named Michael Flood the new station manager for the 1995-96 academic school year.

The station officially returned to "on-air" status Sept. 25 after a three week hiatus.

"WVFI has the potential to be an outstanding entertainment and informational source. I can only hope that my efforts advance its standing in the Notre Dame community," said Flood.

Flood assumes his position after former station manager Ken Maverick resigned earlier this month, citing outside time commitments and "philosophical differences" with how the station was operated.

Flood was nominated to replace Maverick from outside the station rather than from the current staff.

"I'm sure they weren't pleased when someone from the station was not chosen," said Flood. "But I am willing to learn and I share my ideas in a forum. I don't dictate what I want done and so far the board has responded."

According to WVFI's Chief Announcer Justin Cole, Flood's appointment is indicative of the administration's poor perception of the station.

"I have nothing against Mike Flood," said Cole. "But we have an entire plan for filling the station manager position. Yet, the administration has passed the assistant manager over

Rabbi adapts to Catholic life

By KRISTI KOLSKI
Assistant News Editor

A rabbi, a priest and a nun were walking down the street. Stop me if you've heard this one before.

So the rabbi holds a chair in the theology department.

No, really...

Notre Dame has long been regarded as a bastion of Catholicism. Some might be surprised to learn that Rabbi Michael Signer holds the Abrams Chair in Theology and is one of only two rabbis in this country that works in a Catholic institution.

Although Signer, a member of South Bend's Temple Bethel, finds himself in the minority he is not intimidated about being at such a renowned Catholic university.

"At Notre Dame there is certainly no apologetics about making religion a central part of contemporary culture," said Signer. "One does not have to be embarrassed to speak about matters religiously. That was captivating for me. To see whether or not I could live as part of a minority culture while being respected."

A member of the Reform sect of Judaism, Rabbi Signer was appointed to the Abrams Chair in Theology in 1991. Although there have been other professors of the Jewish faith teaching at Notre Dame, Signer is the first rabbi and the first to hold a chaired position.

"Rabbi Signer was offered the appointment to endorse the long-standing Jewish and Christian relations and to foster

Miracle at Medjugorje?

Theologians debate authenticity of visions of Mary

By BRAD PRENDERGAST
Associate News Editor

It has been the destination of choice for thousands of Catholics on pilgrimage. It has captured the hearts of its visitors, who have left with their faith reaffirmed, their souls uplifted.

But is the miracle at Medjugorje all it's made out to be?

On June 24, 1981, six youths from the Croatian mountain town of Medjugorje claimed receiving nearly daily apparitions of the Virgin Mary. The reports, said to still continue today, spurred a mass of pilgrimages by hopeful Catholics world-wide, and until the conflict in Bosnia made travel to that part of Europe dangerous, the visits continued years after the initial sighting.

The lore of Medjugorje comes to Notre Dame this weekend, when Sister Emmanuel of Medjugorje hosts a retreat open to Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students.

According to the six youths, the messages of the Madonna include calls for a more resolute faith in God and in Jesus Christ, a greater devotion to prayer, a strict fast in reparation for sin, and a plea for personal peace in every individual, among other calls.

These messages remain consistent with the teachings of the Catholic Church, but to this day the Vatican has made no official judgment on the visions.

According to Father Ed O'Connor, a member of the theology department and an avowed believer in the visions, the reason is a matter of prudence.

"The Church has to be extremely careful, because if it openly supported the visions at Medjugorje and they turned out to be false, the Church would be in a difficult position," he said.

"But I suspect that the Church will eventually come out in favor of them," O'Connor added. "The Pope has shown a lot of support for them."

"I myself am strongly convinced in their authenticity. The truthfulness of the youths' visions is astounding. They have never erred in reporting the teachings of the Church, and they come from a Muslim family whose parents had no exposure to Catholicism."

O'Connor's support of the apparitions, however, is not shared by a number of his colleagues in the theology department. Kern Trembath, assistant chairman of the department and an Episcopalian, cites two reasons for his skepticism.

"If Mary should appear to anyone, why doesn't she appear to non-Catholics?" Trembath said. "It would seem to me that her messages would be more effective on those who do not yet believe."

"Secondly, the messages affirm fairly traditional, even conservative, teachings," Trembath continued. "Why don't the messages speak on matters of social justice, for example?"

The bishop of the diocese in which Medjugorje is located also is

The Question of a lifetime

I keep running into them. — those people who ask, "So what do you want to do with the rest of your life?" It's like now that we're in college, we're prime targets for this question: "What do you want to do with your life?"

Patti Carson
Saint Mary's Editor

And I was content with declaring my majors, but that's no good. It's not good enough to state your majors anymore, these people want to know all of the details about the rest of your life. The rest of your life. That's a long time. It is such a perplexing question, isn't it?

I mean, it's great if you know what you want to do with the rest of your life. It's great if you can say, "I'm gonna be a doctor or an architect." You've got definite plans. Congratulations.

But what if you don't know? What if you can't say for sure? Well, join the club. And so if you don't know how to respond to this question, maybe you could rattle off snappy sarcastic retorts like:

- "Well I was going to finish college and pursue a career in journalism, but I just signed up for a 15 year psychology study on the long range effects of apathy...So I guess nothin'...Why?"
- "Did my mother pay you to ask me that? Did she? ANSWER ME, DAMNIT!"
- "Say nothing, but pretend there is a big bug on your shoulder and flail at it hysterically."
- "I'm not real sure, but I am playing the lottery just in case. Gotta play to win, you know."
- "I'm waiting for divine intervention. Until then, I'm trying not to think about it."
- "Well, I'm really not sure. What are you planning on doing? Maybe we can work something between the two of us. Got any special talents?"
- "I was thinking of applying for a position with Publisher's Clearing house. You know that lady who drives around in the Prize Patrol van and distributes the checks? I wouldn't mind doing that with the rest of my life."

• "That's a startling question. So much so that I've just soiled myself. You'll have to excuse me."

But I look at it like this: As long as you're doing something positive today, it's okay if you don't have a definite answer to the question. I think the future is all about what you're doing today. Because, actually, you can only have a handle on right now — today.

You can plan all you want about what you'll do someday, but unless you're doing something right now, it's all a dream. And the fact that we're all here—and working hard and studying hard—I think that counts for a lot.

So I think it's okay to not have some definite impressive plan. And I think it's okay to be comfortable with that. It just takes some of us longer than others.

So the next time someone asks about your plans for your life, tell them not to worry because you have got it all under control. And you can walk away knowing that the joke is really on them. And, besides, somebody has gotta drive the prize patrol van.

WORLD AT A GLANCE

Africa's Comoros Islands overrun by mercenaries

PARIS
At 66, Frenchman Bob Denard was thought to have put the bad old days of African coups and mercenary campaigns behind him. On Thursday, he tried to put one more notch in his hired gun.

In a throwback to his post-colonial heyday, Denard led his second coup in the Comoros Islands, an African archipelago and former French colony that he effectively ruled from 1978 until he was forced out in 1989. While it was unclear whether the coup was successful, it echoed the era when Denard and his troops hopped from country to country, installing and propping up governments, allegedly with at least tacit support from Paris.

Denard's forces attacked the presidential palace and captured President Said Mohamed Djohar, according to officials at the Comoros Embassy in Paris. As of late

AP/Tonia Cowan

Thursday, the mercenaries controlled the main army compound.

Denard was thought to have retired two years ago when he received a suspended sentence for a botched attempt to overthrow the Marxist government of Benin in 1977.

He settled in France with his family.

Among the last of post-colonial French mercenaries, known as "les affreux," or horrible ones, he fought for three decades in campaigns in Biafra, Angola, Chad, then-white-ruled Rhodesia and Yemen as well as Benin and the Comoros.

In a 1978 interview, Denard was quoted as saying the Comoros was among the last African nations where a handful of mercenaries could still take power.

But he said that kind of operation was fast becoming a thing of the past.

Perhaps, it seems, nostalgia persuaded him otherwise.

Dole holds fundraising lead

WASHINGTON
Bob Dole increased his fund-raising lead in the Republican presidential sweepstakes during the most recent quarter with earnings of over $5 million. He has earned over $18 million so far. President Clinton expected his quarter earnings to equal or exceed the $9 million he raised during the first three months of his campaign. Texas Sen. Phil Gramm will report quarterly contributions of about $2.4 million, and has about $4.5 million in remaining cash. Former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander, meanwhile, raised about $1 million for the quarter and has just under $1 million remaining. Among the other GOP hopefuls, Pat Buchanan expects to raise about $2 million in the quarter. However, the campaign has only about $350,000 in remaining cash. Indiana's Richard Lugar is expected to report raising about $900,000 in the quarter, and has cash on hand of about $400,000. Sen. Arlen Specter, meanwhile, will probably raise less than $500,000 for the quarter.

Monkeys on the loose in Texas

DILLEY, Texas
Hundreds of escaped Japanese snow monkeys are roaming the mesquite-covered range in these parts. This being Texas, animals rights advocates fear the friendly-faced monkeys may wind up seriously dead. For the last five years, the animals have been free to roam by climbing over or through the broken-down electric fence that used to keep them confined to a 58-acre animal-behavior laboratory. Some landowners are annoyed that the monkeys are raiding their deer feeders, and rummaging through hunting blinds and ranch houses, state officials said. An internal Texas Parks and Wildlife Department memo on controlling the Japanese macaque population of about 600 set off alarms among animal-rights activists. The memo, which became public over the summer, said there is nothing in state or federal law to prevent people from killing the monkeys. "We're not advocating people go out and shoot monkeys, but we do need to tell landowners ... it's legal to do so if they wish," said Matt Wagner, the agency's non-game program leader.

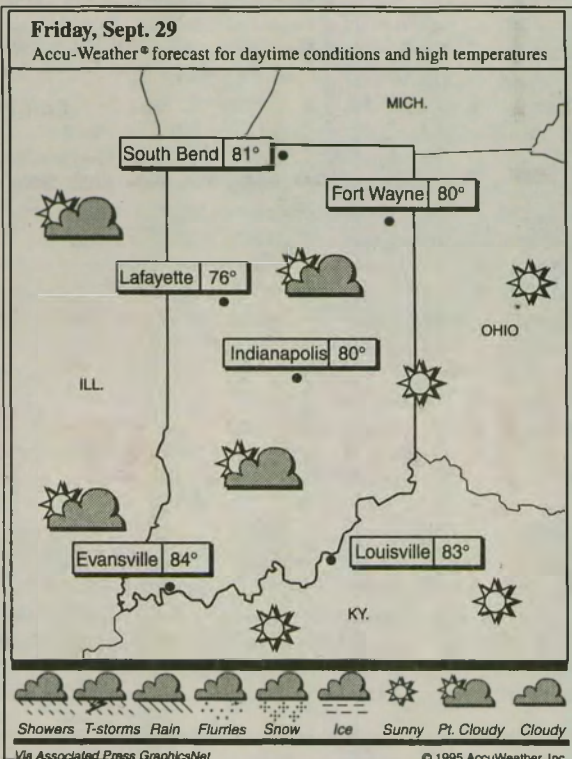

New obesity drug being evaluated

ROCKVILLE, Md.
Scientists debated Thursday whether the government should approve the nation's first new obesity drug since 1973, a compound that makes people believe they are full even though they have eaten less. But the drug, dexfenfluramine, has been shown to cause brain damage at very high doses in animals, prompting concern about how it would affect humans. The manufacturer, Interneuron Pharmaceutical Inc., told a Food and Drug Administration panel that the levels it would suggest are too low to hurt anyone, and maintained that the need for a better drug to treat the 78 million obese Americans is vital. "We are literally in the midst of an obesity epidemic," said Judith Stern, vice president of the American Obesity Association; this drug would be "a valuable tool." The panel of scientists will recommend whether the FDA should approve the drug.

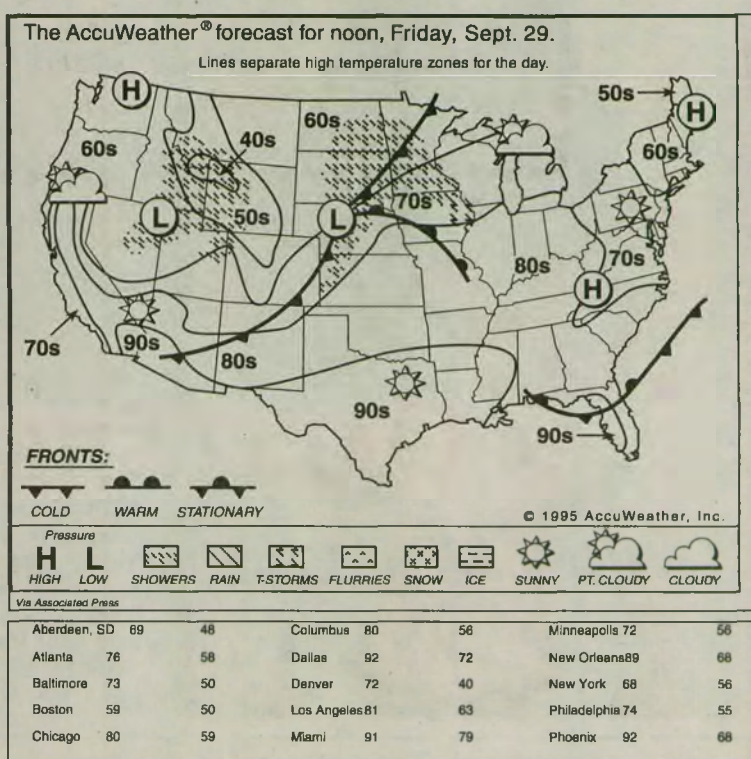

Gambling in southwestern Michigan?

INDIANAPOLIS
An Indian tribe is one step closer to opening a land-based casino just across the Michigan border. The Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians was among three tribes that signed a gambling compact this week with Michigan Gov. John Engler. The compact calls for revenue sharing between the tribes and the state. The Michigan legislature must approve the compact before it can go to federal officials for final approval. The compact would clear the way for casino gaming on tribal lands. Donna Helinski, a Pokagon spokeswoman, said she expected little opposition from the legislature. Pokagon tribal leaders have said the casino will be located somewhere in southwestern Michigan. First, tribal lands must be acquired and placed into trust. The tribe is headquartered in Dowagiac, Mich., just north of South Bend. The Pokagons earlier this month signed a five-year development agreement with Harrah's Entertainment Inc. to run the operation.

SMC Multicultural Week promotes awareness

By PEGGY LENCZEWSKI
Saint Mary's News Editor

Saint Mary's Office of Multicultural Affairs will stage its third annual Multicultural week from September 30-October 6. Maricella Ramirez, Director of the Office of Multicultural Affairs, is coordinating the week's activities.

According to Ramirez, the week "is an excellent opportunity for students to experience other cultures." A lecture and colloquium with Latin American Writer Carlos Fuentes highlights the week. According to Ramirez, the lecture will be a positive experience because Fuentes' "whole philosophy is multicultural."

The objective behind Multicultural Week is "to promote different cultures in order to provide avenues to be exposed to different cultures," said Ramirez. "If we don't give students an opportunity to learn of other cultures, how will our students function in a multicultural society?"

The Office is planning events throughout the year that will highlight different cultures.

The Office is also sponsoring a poster contest in order to increase student participation. The deadline will be Monday, October 2.

A workshop entitled "Roots of Latin American Music" will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 3rd at 3:00 in Haggar Parlor, and the Boston-based band Sol Y Canto will play later on Tuesday evening at 7:00 in the Little Theatre.

On Thursday October 5, there will be A Night of International Music and Food in Haggar Parlor at 7:00 p.m.

Provost search nears finish

Board to complete the initial selection process by October

By GWENDOLYN NORGLÉ
Assistant News Editor

Sources close to University President Father Edward Malloy say that a candidate to replace retiring Provost Timothy O'Meara may be presented to the Board of Trustees at the body's October meeting.

Cullinan

"We hope to complete the initial (selection) process by the end of October," said Matt Cullinan, assistant to the president. "Once we receive the input from all those involved, we plan on taking a candidate to the October meetings of the Board of Trustees."

"This is all tentative," Cullinan noted.

In a letter written to the faculty on Aug. 3, Malloy, who heads the Provost Search Committee, discussed the steps that have been taken by the committee. The group consists of five elected members of the faculty and one student representative.

He reported that initial discussions concerned criteria the committee believed the new provost should meet: "A distinguished scholar-teacher with significant administrative experience who demonstrated the ability to lead Notre Dame's ongoing academic development, and to appreciate and preserve Notre Dame's Catholic character."

The next step in the process, Malloy said, involved the committee's solicitation of nominations for the position. This was done through various means.

The committee placed advertisements in the "Chronicle of Higher Education," "Black Issues in Higher Education" and "Hispanic Outlook," and it sent letters to presidents and chancellors at "peer institutions" and all faculty members. According to section one article II of the Academic Articles written in the University of Notre Dame Faculty Handbook, the committee accepts nominations "both within and without" the University.

"We were pleased with the size and quality of the pool (of candidates)," Malloy said in his letter.

Once this pool was established, each candidate was evaluated, and it was decided whether or not he or she should advance to further "rounds of competition."

The candidate pool as of Aug. 31 of this year consisted of four finalists and two semi-finalists whose qualifications for finalist status are currently being considered. Once deliberations over the semi-finalists have been completed, Malloy said, "We will officially enter the final stage of the search for a new provost."

Upon completion of this procedure, the President consults with the elected faculty members of the Academic Council about all serious candidates.

According to Malloy's letter, the members of the Provost

Search Committee and the elected faculty on the Academic Council, as well as the Chair of the Faculty Senate and student leaders, will have an opportunity to meet with each remaining candidate. After the interviews are complete, everyone involved in the process will be asked to provide "written feedback" to the committee. With this input, the committee will forward a slate of acceptable candidates to the president.

Later, according to the Academic Articles, the President reports the complete results of this consultation to the Board of Trustees, along with a personal recommendation.

According to the Academic Articles, the Provost "has responsibility, under the President, for the administration, coordination, and development of all the academic activities and functions of the University." The Provost is elected by the Board of Trustees "for an indefinite period upon recommendation of the President," and the appointment is subject to formal review every five years.

Members of the committee other than Malloy, who were elected by the Academic Council, include Hafiz Atassi, professor of aerospace and mechanical engineering, Carolyn Callahan, associate professor of accounting, Cornelius Delaney, professor of philosophy, Fernand Dutille, associate dean and professor of law, Andrew Sommese, Professor of mathematics and Stacey Kielbasa, a senior student representative majoring in government and international studies.

Genetics panel to hold forum

Special to the Observer

An international panel of more than 30 scholars will make an interdisciplinary examination of the Human Genome Project in a conference Oct. 5-8 (Thursday-Sunday) at the Center for Continuing Education.

Titled "Controlling Our Destinies: Historical, Philosophical, Social and Ethical Perspectives on the Human Genome Project," the conference will be held under the joint sponsorship of the U.S. Department of Energy and Notre Dame's Reilly Center for Science, Technology and Values.

Initiated in 1991 by a worldwide network of research centers, the Human Genome Project is attempting to define a primary locator map and eventually to specify the complete code sequencing of the entire human genetic structure by 2004.

A genetic map could lead to the identification and potential treatment of a wide variety of diseases. However, that kind of information also could create an equally wide variety of problems.

Panelists at the Notre Dame conference will provide background on the scientific aspects of the project and explore in detail the complex social, ethical, cultural, religious and legal issues associated with it.

twice. It is as if the administration thinks we are too dumb to handle ourselves."

Although WVFI has made its way back onto the airwaves, questions of professionalism, image and student support still surround the AM station's quest for FM status.

After working in commercial radio for five years, Flood hopes that his prior experiences will help bring structure to WVFI's AM, non-commercial environment and bring new life to the station's dream of going FM.

"I want to give WVFI structure," said Flood. "Free-fall is fine, but it could really hurt the station's image."

Flood said his experience at commercial radio stations taught him about the necessity of organization among board members and staff.

"One thing I want to start is board and staff meetings once a week," he said. "We also plan to hold announcers responsible for their shifts. Failure to be prompt will result in schedule changes."

With these modifications, Flood hopes that there will be an improvement in the final product that goes out over the airwaves.

"We want to focus all our attention in improving announcer air performance," said Flood. "I plan to install equipment in the room that would record the DJ's voice. Those tapes would then be reviewed by myself and the Chief Announcer."

Cole is skeptical about some of Flood's ideas for change.

"[Flood] has a lot of good ideas but he has a lot to learn about college radio. It is not like commercial radio," said Cole.

Since WVFI is non-commercial, it does not have to worry about selling air time to advertisers.

"This allows for a great freedom of expression," said Cole. "We are not here to play Hootie and the Blowfish and MTV buzz clips so that we can feed the corporate media. We want to be about discovery."

Although Flood said he plans to stay true to WVFI's mission of promoting music that does not receive much airplay, he indicated that there is opening for more mainstream music.

"An 80's show in the dining hall is my first step at showing people we are here for the entire campus," said Flood.

Beyond music, Flood said that one of the other keys to radio is the delivery of information.

"We hope to join the AP wire, or work with a commercial station in South Bend to provide state and national news," he said. "We also have a long-term goal of including campus news."

In addition, Flood said the new opportunities will improve the station's image around campus.

"We want a responsible voice of student representation. This has been good in the past, but we really want to enhance it this year."

The new station manager also hopes to reverse the image that WVFI is a small clique.

According to Flood, there are over 115 announcers on staff.

"The people that work down here are the same people that you sit next to at the football games or in the dining hall or your 4.0ers. We are not a radical fringe."

Staff

survey. "What we need to see is the median salary, where fifty percent of the employees fall behind," she stated. "To compare averages skewers the numbers toward the high end."

More important than a sheer numbers comparison for Ghilarducci is an equality issue. The starting salary for Notre Dame support staff is $6.70, lower than that of service-maintenance staffs. According to Ghilarducci, Notre Dame is the only institution in the area where that disparity exists.

"If around the community average is good enough for our secretaries, why is it not good enough for the service-maintenance staff, who make more than the local average?" Ghilarducci asks.

However, human resources would like to prevent a debate of worth between support staff and service maintenance.

"We shouldn't diminish the importance of service maintenance," Mullins said. "The work they do is critical, and it is often a work environment that is less than ideal. I want to avoid sending a message that either group is less important than the other."

Mullins agrees that a disparity exists, but defends the pay structure.

"What people fail to realize is that for most service-maintenance positions, there is a set rate of pay," Mullins said.

"The wages may start higher for those in service positions, but there is not as much room for advancement as in the support staff ranks."

However, these advancement structures are also a major concern among staff and faculty.

"The single most frustrating thing is when you have a secretary who is excellent in every way," Theology Department chair Larry Cunningham said. "But she can't better herself and earn a higher salary because of the rigidity of her job description."

University secretaries are placed in one of five categories, according to human resources. The job descriptions determine what level secretary one belongs to, and pay is determined by those levels. However, according to Porter and Ghilarducci, these job descriptions lack flexibility to recognize new skills or responsibilities of the staff.

"I would like to see sub-categories within the classifications," Cunningham said. "That way a person can see tangible rewards for taking courses or learning new skills."

"It is my understanding that a lot of secretaries are not satisfied with the job classifications available, that they are overly rigid," says Arts and Letters Dean Harold Attridge. "However, I believe there is sympathy in Human Resources for this issue."

Mullins says his department is responding to the question of classification with a study to be

Alywin: Continued economic growth saved Chile

Former president outlined path following dictatorship

By JOSHUA NELSON
News Writer

The continuation of economic growth and improvement of the status of the poor in Chile posed an important challenge while the country recovered from a military dictatorship, according to Patricio Alywin, the former President of Chile.

The Keenan Hall Lecture Series featured Alywin Thursday night in a speech on the economic status of Chile. The presentation focused on the reduction of the number of poor people and how the democratic party was able to come to power.

He offered a brief history of the fall of the military dictatorship in Chile that allowed the Christian Democratic Party to take over the government and return it to a state of social normalcy.

"The challenge of the government was to keep and maintain economic growth in an open market economy and attend to the policy of the poor through a plan called Growth With Equity," Alywin said.

The policy stressed two points based on a free market economy and foreign investment.

By focusing on the poor and working classes of his community, Alywin was able to increase investment while reducing the number of poor people from 5.3 million to 4 million people.

The democratic party was able to re-establish itself with a plebiscite to deny the extension of the dictatorship for another eight years.

After elections in 1989, Alywin was chosen to continue the policies that had benefited the country under the military regime and improve on the social problems that oppressed many citizens.

"The north (the United States and European countries) must be loyal to the rules of the game and not become discriminatory in the trading world," he said in regards to outside help in restructuring trade relations.

Before being elected president, Alywin was an attorney in Chile.

He often held meetings to discuss democratic ideas and Chile's future prior to his election.

His election brought an end to sixteen years of military dictatorship under General Pinochet and he served from 1990-1994.

Workshop to focus on Latin American poverty

By SAMANTHA SNYDER
News Writer

The Kellogg Institute for International Studies is sponsoring an academic workshop and forum entitled "Poverty in Latin America: Issues and New Responses" from September 30-October 2.

According to Joetta Schlabach, acting academic coordinator for the Kellogg Institute, the workshop will focus mainly on employment issues and social policies that affect the poor in Latin America as well as the challenges of globalization and restructuring of Latin American society. All sessions of the workshop are free and open to the public.

The first two days of the workshop will be held in the Auditorium of the Hesburgh Center for International Studies and will feature speakers from prominent Latin American labor and economic organizations. Several academics, including the Kellogg Institute's own Guillermo O'Donnell, will present papers at the workshop. O'Donnell will speak on the political aspects of poverty and inequality in Latin America.

A public policy forum will be held on the final day of the workshop from 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. at the Auditorium in the Center for Continuing Education. High-ranking government officials as well as leaders in business and labor will take part in open dialogue in order to share their experiences in dealing with the issues presented at the workshop. The forum will be headed by Victor Tokman of the National Labor Organization.

"We hope that the neutral and supportive environment of Notre Dame will make it possible for people from many sectors of Latin American society...to engage in the kind of free exchange it will take to achieve a better understanding of the issues of poverty, equity and unemployment," commented Rev. Ernest Bartell, C.S.C., Executive Director of the Kellogg Institute.

This year's workshop is part of a five-year program entitled Project Latin America 2000. The program's goal is to address the various issues and challenges facing Latin American society.

concerned about the amount of publicity that the visions receive, according to Trembath.

"The bishop thinks, and I agree, that way too much attention is being paid to the Marian appearances," Trembath said. "I'll take that one step further and say that because of the appearances, attention is unfairly being deflected from problems closer to home that we need to rectify — racism and reduction in funds for homeless shelters, for example."

Lawrence Cunningham, chairman of the department of theology and a Catholic, agrees that the great amount of attention given to the apparitions is unnecessary.

"The vision isn't my spiritual cup of tea," Cunningham said. "You can be a perfectly good Catholic without believing in it. Cunningham cites a lack of evidence as a reason for not accepting the apparitions.

"There is a fundamental core of Catholic beliefs that I believe in. I am not required to believe every single report of apparitions," he said. "I see no compelling reason why I should believe in the visions at Medjugorje."

Nevertheless, visions, whether unsubstantiated or accepted, can be useful, according to Cunningham, provided that the visions do not produce a cult of followers who inadvertently neglect the main tenets of Catholicism as a result of their devotion.

"The visions are a matter of taste — some like them; some don't. A lot of intelligent people who have made the pilgrimage have said it's a very moving experience," Cunningham said. "We need to make allowances for different expressions of faith within the standard Catholic beliefs."

Professor joins top scientists

By BRIAN LAUDEMAN
News Writer

Notre Dame physics professor Bruce Bunker has joined a team of top scientists to begin major research at Argonne National Laboratory in Illinois. The team has been established to study atomic structure by means of powerful X-ray beams.

The team is made up of scientists from Northwestern University, the Illinois Institute of Technology, the University of Florida, the Amoco Corp., and from Argonne itself, as well as from Notre Dame. The experimenters will produce X-rays by rapidly accelerating positrons to almost the speed of light, then forcing them into a magnetic field. The magnetic field forces the positrons to undulate, which causes them to emit powerful X-rays.

By bombarding substances with the X-rays, which are over one million times more powerful than their medical counterparts, the scientists will be better able to investigate atomic structure. Bunker's function includes research that may lead to a better understanding of semi-conductors.

The scientists involved with the project hope to accomplish a number of scientific goals. Many are simply looking for scientific data, whereas others hope for more pragmatic results from the research. The Amoco Corp. hopes to use the knowledge gained to develop better polymers of plastic. Medical and environmental developments are also on the scientists' agenda.

"The strength of this consortium lies in the fact that its diverse membership is interested in the same techniques and systems from different points of view," Bunker said.

Bunker is currently the only Notre Dame scientist actively involved in the development of the laboratory. Several professors from Notre Dame's physical and chemical engineering departments will eventually join Bunker in his research.

Research is on hold until the massive Argonne Laboratory is completed. By the time experiments begin in 1996, the facility will be over two-thirds of a mile in circumference. Funding for the $467 million project has come mainly from the Department of Energy, but also from various private investments and federal grants. Notre Dame has contributed some funds.

His research will take at least the next five years to complete, perhaps "another ten at the current rate," according to Bunker. His class schedule should remain full, however, as he maintains his primary obligation to Notre Dame.

Both the research and collaboration with some of the nation's top scientists are exciting for him. "The participation of these scientists in developing, building, and operating a single facility will result in much closer collaboration than investigators working on their own equipment at their own institutions," Bunker stated.

Columbus billboards remove ND monogram

By ETHAN HAYWARD
Associate News Editor

Although the athletic contest has yet to be decided, Notre Dame has won a legal battle with Ohio state, or at least some of its supporters.

Since early this month, Columbus radio station WLVQ has been displaying eight billboards depicting the station's logo, a giant screw, and the Notre Dame monogram. Within a week, the monogram was replaced with the words "The team from South Bend."

The University had been notified by local Notre Dame alumni and fans within a two days after the signs were built. After learning of the monogram being used without a license (and in such a context), University officials faxed a cease-and-desist order from Notre Dame's general counsel.

"Legally, they were using a registered trademark of the University. Not only is it inappropriate and classless, but you're really in violation of the Law," said Executive Director of the Notre Dame Alumni Association Charles Lennon, Jr.

"You get these two institutions together every 59 years. It's time to make hay. This is a big, big football game," said WLVQ general manager Tom Thon.

Columbus also does not seem to have missed Notre Dame too much.

"The message that we were trying to deliver is, 'Screw Notre Dame,'" Thon said.

The station did receive some local protest from parents and alumni who alleged the sign conveyed an anti-Catholic message. But Thon says they were merely trying to rally support for the hometown team.

"It's important that you make note that it's in reference to a football team and not a religion."

'Globalization' leads to decay

By GILLIAN BRADY
News Writer

Most Notre Dame students do not lie awake at night pondering what will happen if a South Bend steel industry moves its operations to China in order to reduce labor costs. But for many Americans, this relatively new phenomenon of industrial relocation, often called "globalization," is a very serious concern.

Jeremy Brecher, Humanities Scholar-in-Residence at Connecticut Public Radio and Television, delivered the 18th annual Joseph P. Molony Memorial Lecture yesterday evening. Brecher spoke to a gathering of students and faculty about economic globalization and its effects on American labor. In his lecture, Brecher stressed the importance of individual action.

"Globalization is not a question of people in Iceland catching fish and trading with people in Jamaica," he said. "The main competition going on is a competition over the lowest labor and environmental costs, and we all need to ask what ordinary citizens can do."

Many economists believe that globalization is a good thing, but Brecher offered a different view, claiming that the result of globalization is "a race to the bottom."

"Labor conditions for the world are set by the poorest and most desperate," Brecher noted. He gave various examples of companies who have moved out of the United States because of the lower labor costs and lack of environmental restrictions that exist in third world and underdeveloped nations.

Industrial movement and its search for the cheapest means of production has had a tremendous impact on the American way of life, especially among the working classes, according to Brecher.

"The wealthiest 400 families in America have nearly tripled their worth in the last few years, while over one quarter of infants and toddlers today live in poverty," he said.

Brecher believes that this has been the main cause of "decay of community life, rise in crime and the decay of the environment" because America is losing industry to countries like Mexico whose low labor and environmental costs are extremely attractive to businesses.

Brecher is a noted historian and the author of eight books which address such issues as Roe v. Wade, segregation of schools, and most recently, in his book "Global Village or Global Pillage," the destruction of the American working class due to global competitiveness.

Shrine evokes feeling of identity for Cubans

By KELLY FITZPATRICK
News Writer

The sixth largest Catholic pilgrimage site in the United States is a shrine founded by Cuban-Americans and dedicated to Our Lady of Charity, according to Thomas A. Tweed, an expert in the area.

Besides being a holy place for exiled Cubans to worship, the shrine has become a symbol of their homeland, Tweed said.

Following the 1959 takeover of Havana by Fidel Castro's army, the 29,500 Cuban immigrants in Miami made up only 3% of the local population. By 1990, the more than 561,000 Cubans that had migrated constituted about 30% of the Miami population. As political exiles, Tweed stated, Cubans have remained passionate about their native land.

"As Cuban-Americans boast, . . . the diaspora tenaciously holds to the Cuban past and continually plans its future," he writes in his essay entitled, "Diaspora Nationalism and Urban Landscape: Cuban Immigrants at a Catholic Shrine in Miami."

Diaspora Nationalism, as Tweed defines it, refers to the distinct detachment of groups who see themselves as involuntary immigrants. The term diaspora "entails 'geopieté,' or an attachment to the natal landscape," continued Tweed.

Tweed, who has been researching the relationship between the Cuban immigrants and the symbols associated with the shrine, wrote that "The symbols bridge the water that separates exiles from their homeland and transport the diaspora to the Cuba of memory and desire." He contends that "exiles map the landscape and history of the homeland onto the new urban environment through architecture and ritual."

Through the symbols and artifacts at the shrine, the diaspora create their collective identity, he said. Though Tweed reports that only half of Cuban rural heads of families identified themselves as Catholics in a 1957 survey, 88.8% of those surveyed never attended services, and only 4% attended three or more times a year. Yet, the Cubans driven from the land of their birth still find religious satisfaction in just visiting the 22-year old shrine, Tweed said.

R. Scott Appleby, director of the sponsoring Cushwa Center, said it was important that the seminar be held at Notre Dame to show that "the core symbols and teachings of the Catholic Church find so many different expressions in different concrete social standards in this country." The Cushwa Center seeks to foster an awareness of the diversity of Catholics in America; Appleby noted that the increasing influence of Latino Catholics in this country makes Tweed's talk especially necessary.

Jewish studies in a Christian environment," said Father Richard McBrien, a fellow chair in the Theology department.

It was, however, Signer's interest in the interaction between Jews and Christians in the 11th and 12th centuries during his doctoral candidacy at the University of Toronto and his work at Hebrew Union College in Los Angeles that formed the basis to accept the invitation to teach at Notre Dame.

"I saw the appointment as an opportunity where I could carry on the agenda of inter-religious dialogue and exploration," said Signer. "I wanted to see whether one could carry out a further understanding of Judaism and the Jewish experience in a non-Jewish environment."

Many people associated with the University point to Notre Dame's Catholic character as the strong union of faith. But this faith, as Signer points out, is not exclusive.

"If the Catholic character of this University means homogeneity then that would be a great tragedy and this would no longer be a great Catholic university," said Signer.

The Catholic character of this University is so much more than just faculty or students.

"We are talking about residence halls, students in their liturgies, social concerns and social justice pursuits," said Signer.

Most importantly, it is something universal.

"I share a lot of the Kingdom of God, concerns about working for justice, helping other people, helping the poor and the downtrodden," said Signer. "One of the very important themes within Judaism as I understand it is: Remember you were strangers in the land of Egypt. The stranger shall be with you as the home born."

It is these ideas that both Judaism and Christianity share. "We just act on them out of different particularities," said Signer.

Instead of focusing on differences, however, Signer hopes to educate his students by allowing them to encounter Judaism and reduce stereotypes.

"We can increase understanding by talking so that people would be much more careful about making statements like Jews are, or that Jews ought to be," said Signer.

Signer hopes to achieve this agenda by looking at the negative and positive experiences in an historical context.

"Digging back into history and talking about our experience through time together" could also facilitate a greater understanding between the faiths, according to Signer.

Signer exposes what is known as the "dark side of Christianity."

"In many ways it played into the persecution of Jews and did not promote what I would consider a very Christian agenda," said Signer. "The two great commandments are love of God and love of neighbor. But until 1965, the Catholic Church accused the Jews of deicide, the killing of Christ, and therefore being condemned to wander for all time. The church also prayed for our conversion during Friday services on Holy Week."

With the world seemingly getting smaller, universal acceptance must now extend beyond Judaism.

"What do we do as the world grows larger? We must learn to incorporate Muslims, Hinduism, and Buddhists and deal with all of the cultures in the global community," said Signer.

Fuentes lecture promotes SMC Multicultural Week

Special to the Observer

Author, statesman and scholar Carlos Fuentes will speak at Saint Mary's College tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. in the O'Laughlin Auditorium. The title of his presentation, kicking off multicultural week, is "The United States and Latin America: A Shared Continent."

His prolific fiction ranges from spy thrillers, such as "The Hydra Head," to the ghost stories of "Aura" to the caustic indictments of the Mexican revolution in "The Death of Artemio Cruz."

Fuentes' political influence as an international statesman is nearly as great as his literary fame. Born in 1928, Fuentes spent his youth in Washington, D.C., where his father served as a Mexican diplomatic representative.

He has served as Mexico's ambassador to France, and was an active participant in the quest for peace in Central America. He is currently a member of Mexico's National Commission on Human Rights.

The big, plaid ticket-eating monster

As many students pack up and head out to Columbus to support the Irish during this weekend's big face-off against the Buckeyes, many will find themselves cheering on the team from the stadium parking lot or from some of OSU's finest watering holes. Some have even reconciled themselves to remaining in South Bend despite the fact that Saturday's game could be huge and Columbus is only five hours away.

Without the right connections, a significant amount of cash (nearly $400,) or an extremely fortunate number in the student ticket lottery, most students are out of luck. Only 200 of the 2000 tickets allotted to the University for this week's game were designated specifically for students. What happened to the other 1800? You guessed it—alumni.

The appearance of the big plaid ticket eating monster isn't a new phenomenon. Remember the stunning 1993 win over Michigan? Most students watched the game on television from South Bend. Sure, Ann Arbor is a perfect roadtrip distance, but only a couple hundred of the 104,000 plus seats in Michigan Stadium were slated for Notre Dame students.

According to director of ticketing and marketing, Bill Scholl, alumni always get first priority for tickets at away games because students are guaranteed seats at every game in Notre Dame Stadium.

But shouldn't students take priority regardless of the whereabouts of the game? Time and time again, players and coaches have cited the positive influence of the fabled "12th Man," (provided courtesy of the Notre Dame student body.) So why won't they let us travel?

Once again, the university is thinking with its wallet rather than its heart.

Students have been put on the back burner so that alumni (read: potential donors) can have a chance to break out the plaid pants, sing the fight song and see their obligatory game each season.

It is understandable that alums want to see a few games—after all, we'll be in the same boat in a few years—but the fact remains, students are the heart and soul of the university, and we should have an equal opportunity to score seats.

Entering interested students in the alumni lottery for away games would be a constructive solution to the problem. Granted, students would have to make road-tripping plans months earlier than they are accustomed in order to enter any large-scale lottery. But the planned expansion of the stadium in 1997 should help alleviate the alumni ticket crunch. Following the current policy's logic, more road seats should open up for students.

Whether or not that happens remains to be seen.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Work ethic of a common man

Dear Editor:

While talking to a friend recently, the topic of conversation turned to Cal Ripken. My friend asked me how many days of work my father had missed as a Chicago fireman. In thinking about it I recalled that at his retirement party the captain had mentioned that my dad had been on the department for 30 years and had not missed a single day of work. In his early days as a fireman he worked "24 on/24 off shifts." This meant that he worked 84 hours per week. With the introduction of "Kelly Days," he cut back to 60 hours a week — at which point he took another half-time job.

Thinking back still further, I recalled that my maternal grandfather, Patrick Murphy, was a Chicago policeman for about 35 years. My mother once told me that he had missed two days of work during those years. He missed a day when he had broken his foot and could not get his uniform on over the cast. He was able to return to work by filing down the cast to get in through his pant leg. He missed another day when he had pneumonia and collapsed at work. He was put in the hospital. Against his doctor's orders he checked himself out and returned to work the following day.

So I salute Cal, particularly knowing that those who are pursuing his record of 2100 plus straight games, have played in 250 straight games! There are two things about this that strike me. The first is that the athletic world seems to find so many ways to congratulate itself. Only Hollywood matches them in this area. We have all-city, all-county, all-state, there is the player of the week, player of the game and perhaps soon we will have player of the inning. The look on Cal's face for much of this seemed to be saying, "Wasn't I being paid to play these games? What's all the fuss?" I don't know if we should all find more ways to congratulate ourselves (it sure looks like fun) or if we should realize that doing our job on a daily basis is the standard rather than something worthy of national attention.

Secondly, I find the use of language and choice of metaphors to be very interesting in the athletic world. For the last 10 years we have heard about a players "work ethic." Actually the notion of a work ethic is based on Calvinistic teaching and suggests that one believes that in working hard we are fulfilling God's expectations for us. I have known many people with a genuine work ethic — I think my father and grandfather had one. I am not sure that individuals who work half the year for five or six hours a day would be viewed as endorsing a work ethic.

Returning to my father, I note that he worked on the day that he died. That evening he began having chest pains and he knew that his blood pressure was elevated — he was 70 at that time and still working six days a week. At his wake, his boss came to me and said that he was probably the last person to talk to my father. I asked him what he had said. My dad had called about 9 p.m. and said that he had not been feeling well but the pain was gone. "I'll be there in the morning" were his last words.

■ CAPITOL COMMENTS

Republican reformers shake down the system

Remember the last election featuring the "Contract with America" where Republicans portrayed themselves as reformers? Well welcome to the real world of politics. Republicans are doing exactly what they vilified the Democrats for doing. The freshmen members are uncharacteristically sticking together in a show of loyalty for Speaker Newt Gingrich and providing the sometimes slim margins of victory on several matters from special interests aligned to their philosophies. Most importantly, they are raking in special interest contributions in record numbers.

In the days of Democratic control, corporations knew they had to deal with a Congress run by those who were not sympathetic to them. Nonetheless, they contributed to those who controlled the committees while also contributing to the Republican minority in an effort to soften what they considered anti-business legislation. Now these corporations are contributing huge amounts to all Republicans, especially freshmen who can be the most vulnerable in next year's election, in an effort to maintain their friendly Republican control.

John Ensign is one of the 73 new Republican members elected last fall on a promise of changing "business-as-usual" politics in Washington. He has been extremely busy during his first year not shaking up the system but shaking it down. The Nevada Republican has not made a name for himself legislatively — most freshmen do not during their first term. However he has made a mark for himself monetarily by ranking first in his class in collecting big campaign contributors from the big special interests. He hauled in $196,854 in nine months on the job. That is almost $22,000 a month since he took office in January.

Ensign is not alone in the age-old money chase. Common Cause recently released a report covering the first six months of the new Republican "incumbents." It seems that they have been practicing business-more-than-usual by soliciting about four-and-a-half million dollars from corporate political action committees. That makes them more indebted to special interest PACs than the "bad ole Democratic Congress" they were sent to replace.

What disturbs many observers of Congress is the blatant use of corporate lobbyists when Republican members write legislative measures. The new crowd is unabashed about passing bills written by and for corporate interests. They are just as brazen about cashing in with those companies. As Indiana's Mark Souder put it, "It's just stupid if they don't give me money."

Sadly, he is right. The votes of these first-term Republicans have been Gingrich's margin of victory in such key battles this year as: the one to give a retroactive tax break worth $22 billion to America's biggest corporations; the measure to allow oil refineries and chemical manufacturers to release more pollution into our air and water; and legislation to expand such "corporate welfare" as the $100 million-a-year program to pay huge corporations like McDonald's to advertise their products overseas. Several corporations take advantage of this "advertising subsidy" including Hershey, Jim Beam, Campbell Soup, Fruit-of-the-Loom, M&M Candies, Pillsbury, Gallo and other hugely-profitable food conglomerates.

These profitable corporations need an advertising subsidy like Monk Malloy needs a tuxedo. Not only do we taxpayers pay profitable companies to advertise abroad, we let them do really stupid advertising as well. The California Raisin Board got $3 million from this program to advertise in Japan. Their first mistake was to advertise in English (maybe so the company could use the ads in the U.S. as well).

Secondly, they were advertising an unknown product in Japan. The Japanese thought the dancing characters were potatoes. But they really blew it when they created those cute animated characters with the traditional American cartoon hand containing four fingers — which in Japan is a very bad omen.

By the end of the next election cycle we will be able to calculate just how much each of those corporations gave to Republicans to preserve their majority, thus preserving corporate programs. Multiply that by other Republican favors to the banking industry, trucking industry, Wall Street and on and on. Then we can foresee obscene totals that will break several contribution categories.

Money talks in politics, unless of course the majority of working Americans say, "Enough of this corporate welfare. I want lower student loan costs, a reduced deficit, a preservation of Medicare, a higher minimum wage along with better working conditions, and I vote."

What disturbs many observers of Congress is the blatant use of corporate lobbyists when Republican members write legislative measures. The new crowd is unabashed about passing bills written by and for corporate interests. They are just as brazen about cashing in with those companies. As Indiana's Mark Souder put it, "It's just stupid if they don't give me money."

Understanding dying with dignity

The closest thing to a premonition I've ever had is this: I was talking to my friend Judy about her mother at church one Sunday, and she was telling me that her mother was ready to die, and that Mrs. Dutchess couldn't understand why God was taking so long about it. I had a sensation as if someone had shoved me in the back, and I found myself saying to Judy, "I'd like to drive down to Kokomo and meet your mother."

We did drive down, and I met Mrs. Dutchess and heard this story, a story that I've thought since wanted to be told and called me in to do the job.

The story was this: Mrs. Dutchess nearly died in the spring, and when she returned to the world, she told everyone she'd seen God. She'd looked down a long tunnel, with light at the end of it, and saw people she knew were already dead. They looked at her, and they turned their backs on her.

Then she saw her husband, dead twenty years, and he turned his back on her and walked away, but she wasn't frightened. There was a nice field, and people she thought she knew, and then God was there.

Her granddaughter Karen, an ordained Lutheran pastor, asked her later, "What did God look like Grandma?"

"Oh he was big," she said, "and he had lots and lots of hair. But he was so-ooo kind." He took her up in his lap, and shook his finger at her, and said, "You're in too much of a hurry, it's not time for you to come yet."

Afterwards, Mrs. Dutchess said, she'd thought of a lot of questions she could have asked God, but it just hadn't occurred to her at the time.

Several years earlier, Judy had gone upstairs to wake her mother and found her lapsed into a coma. Judy had wrestled with it since, she said, whether or not she should have waited to call an ambulance.

"Mother wanted to die, she was ready to die. But I couldn't do it. I couldn't decide, yes it's now time." Judy called 911, and watched her carried unconscious from the house. Her mother spent the next three years in a nursing home, and over those three years Judy watched her die by inches.

Degenerative arthritis crumbled the bones of her spine to the point that her vertebrae, in X-rays, looked like matchsticks. There were times when her mother was in such terrible pain, Judy said, that if there'd been a plug to pull, she'd have pulled it. But after her near-death experience, Mrs. Dutchess seemed more accepting of her circumstances.

When God told her it wasn't time, she figured maybe there was some plan, some reason she hadn't died yet. "Although," she told us, her voice wry, her gesture encompassing both her broken body and the nursing home, "I can't imagine what it might be."

A few weeks after our visit her condition deteriorated. Judy was with her mother when she went into a grand mal seizure. "It's all over," the nurses told her, "she isn't in any pain." Then they found a pulse. During the night Mrs. Dutchess had five more seizures, but each time her heart kept beating, and she slept.

When Judy came in the next morning, one of the aides met her. "You're not going to believe what you see," she said. "Your mother woke up this morning, and the first thing she wanted to know was who'd won the World Series!"

Judy went in and said "Hi mom."

"Hi," she said. "I hear the Twins won!" Judy held the phone, and Mrs. Dutchess talked for a few seconds to her granddaughter Karen, Judy's daughter.

"I understand you've been real sick," Karen said.

"That's what they say."

"Are you feeling sick now?"

"Oh no, not so much," Mrs. Dutchess said. "I'm OK, but I think your mother's tired."

She died early in the morning of the second day. If, at the moment of her death, she saw her friends and family approach, this time she didn't turn away. Her last words, they said, were Oh, they're coming for me.

Her body was cremated, as she'd requested, and her ashes buried next to her husband. Her granddaughter Karen picked the verses for the memorial service, including the Old Testament reading from the Book of Job, that expert on suffering. For I know that my Redeemer lives, and that at the last he will stand upon the earth; and after my skin has been thus destroyed, then in my flesh I shall see God.

Book Burning in the Modern World

By KRISTEN DOYLE
Accent Writer

It would be difficult to find an American that would not swear to a firm belief in the First Amendment. Those that enjoy the benefits of democracy confidently hail the inalienable right to freedom of speech. Why, then, has censorship restricted the free expression and availability of ideas since the Bill of Rights itself was created?

The answer often lies not in policy or higher moral standards but in a single emotion: fear. Fear of political revolution, fear of the further corruption of American youth, and fear of the breakdown of morality are just a few of the motivations for censorship. These are legitimate concerns, but can censorship really offer protection? Will the withdrawal of books like "The Color Purple" (in which a young girl is raped by her stepfather) from a high school senior English class succeed in preserving teenage innocence?

ignorance offered, "If there is a possibility that something might be controversial, then why not eliminate it?"

If the frightening consequences of book banning are not already apparent, a look back at the history of censorship can offer valuable insight. Many of the thinkers regarded as integral to modern society were silenced. Socrates was executed for the expression of his ideals. An examination of an old edition of the Roman Index of Forbidden Books reveals revolutionary works that were off-limits for Catholics without a papal dispensation. It includes books thought to be against the faith, against morals, or religious books that had not been censored by the church before publication. The 1925 version includes the writings of Rousseau, Locke, Voltaire, Descartes, and Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." These works were controversial because they presented ideas that ran counter to contemporary beliefs. They were probably banned along side many worthless works, but had they been squelched completely the progress of humanity would have been hindered.

Justice Oliver Wendell

Holmes writes in his "Abrams versus United States" censorship decision, "The best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of

Some residents of an Oakland, California community apparently thought so. They fought the school committee for nine months, claiming "The Color Purple" contained "troubling ideas about race relations, Man's relationship to God, African history and human sexuality." A number of communities around the nation have succeeded in banning the book. Regardless of the fact that Alice Walker relates important messages about racism and incest with literary genius, students have the right to hear her ideas, and teachers and libraries have the right, in fact, a duty, to provide students the opportunity the experience them.

September 23 to 30 is Banned Books Week, an opportunity to recognize that as the twenty-first century approaches, over two hundred years after the freedom of speech was supposedly secured, people are still trying to suppress the distribution of books that run counter to their ideals. Promotional materials from anti-censorship groups like the Office for Intellectual Freedom release a list of those books that have been challenged over the years and distributes publications to educators, librarians, and other citizens, discussing ways that they can promote the free exchange of ideas.

The Banned Books list is extensive and includes a range of topics that span all categories. Many of the works are undoubtedly controversial. This group can be divided into those which are ground breaking masterpieces and those which, most would say, are pretty trashy. If the entire group of potentially offensive works was eliminated from bookshelves, left would be a homogeneous, stagnant, albeit universally palatable, body of work. Authors would no longer be permitted to test new limits or offer new insights through literature.

Some books included in the list are generally accepted as classics. For example, in 1992 "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" was challenged in nearby Portage, Michigan. The availability of Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men" and Salinger's "Catcher in the Rye" continues to be threatened. Don't be misled, censorship is not the work of only fanatic right-wingers. An atheist from Minnesota tried to get the Bible banned in an effort to "turn the tables on the religious right."

In a 1985 effort to ban Shel Silverstein's "A Light in the Attic," a book of children's poetry, a Beloit, Wisconsin resident claimed the book "encourages children to break dishes so they won't have to dry them." Imagine losing every copy of "The Diary of Anne Frank" because it is "a real downer." Most disturbing was the explanation a district administrator gave for removing "Bury my Heart at Wounded Knee" by Dee Brown. He thought it was "slanted" and with tragic the market."

A common misconception by those in favor of banning books is that immoral ideas will incite immoral action. In fact, this is rarely the case and the price of freedom is much more costly. "To suppress minority thinking and minority expression would tend to freeze society and prevent progress...Now more than ever we must keep in the forefront of our minds the fact that whenever we take away the liberties of those whom we hate, we are opening the way to loss of liberty for those we love." (Wendell Lewis Willkie, "One World")

Granted, smut can be offensive. Some books are little more than a bound pack of lies. So don't read them. That is the right of every American citizen. Americans also have the right to check them out, maybe even let others know that they think Joe Author does not know what he is talking about and could not write his way out of a paper bag. However, no one has the right to keep others from exploring even if they think these others are wading through sewer mire. Herbert H. Humphrey wisely quipped, "The right to be heard does not automatically include the right to be taken seriously."

The Office of Intellectual Freedom puts out the "Library Bill of Rights" which outlines the true purpose and responsibilities of American libraries. A number of the treaties are particularly important. First, it emphasizes that books purchased with public funds must indiscriminately represent all views, regardless of the racial, political, or religious standpoints of the writers. Second, it affirms the responsibility of parents and not the library to restrict the reading of children. Kids have rights too, and, to quote Clare Booth Luce, "censorship, like charity, should begin at home; but unlike charity, it should end there."

Finally, the Bill reiterates that libraries have a responsibility to combat censorship and it provides a detailed guide for librarians that encounter it. "Intellectual freedom, the essence of equitable library services, promotes no cause, furthers no movements, and favors no viewpoints. It only provides for free access to all expressions of ideas through which any and all sides of a question, cause, or movement may be explored. Toleration is meaningless without tolerance for what some may consider detestable."

Ohio State (Totally Nuts!)

What is a Buckeye anyhow?

buck'eye, n. [buck (male deer), and eye: from the appearance of the seed.]

1. any one of several species of American trees and shrubs of the genus Aesculus, including the horse chestnut; as, the Ohio or fetid buckeye, Aesculus glabra.
2. a native or inhabitant of Ohio. [Colloq.]

Buckeye State; Ohio: so named because of the many buckeye trees growing there.

Make your own Buckeyes...yum!

- 2 sticks of butter
- 2 cups of peanut butter
- 1 1/2 teaspoons vanilla

Look! Another Observer recipe!

Melt the above together and add 5 cups (1 lb.) powdered sugar (sifted)

Blend well, then take the candy and knead well on a flat surface till the dough is blended and hold shape. Form dough into individual balls the size of walnuts and place on wax paper covered cookie sheets and refrigerate till cool.

In the mean time, in a double broiler, melt 1 bag (12 oz.) of chocolate chips with 1/4 of a cake of paraffin wax. Stir till blended. Using a toothpick for the peanut butter balls, dip the balls into the chocolate mixture just enough to cover 3/4 of the peanut mixture so the balls resemble buckeyes (horse chestnuts).

The Battle Resumes...

...60 years of anticipation ends

By JOEY CRAWFORD
Assistant Accent Editor

We have all heard the rumors of people purchasing Ohio State tickets for large sums of cash. Four tickets for twenty thousand dollars! This seems completely absurd. Some people are willing to pay almost any price to see the game that has been anticipated for 60 years. The large amount of hype surrounding the game is incredible. But what makes this game so different? Why does this game mean so much to the Ohio State fans?

"Revenge," explains one eager Buckeye fan. David Fong, the sports editor at the Lantern (Ohio State's student run newspaper), attempts to explain the hype. "In the words of coach John Cooper, 'Most of us were Catholics before we were Buckeyes.' I went to a parochial school when I was growing up. My family and I would pray for Notre Dame on weekends. It was part of my life. Now it is interesting to see two perennially great football teams square off against one another. People either love Notre Dame or hate them. There are no in-betweens. So people are anxious to see what happens Saturday afternoon."

Founded in 1870, The Ohio State University has become one of the largest universities in the world. It is widely recognized as one of America's most distinguished and prestigious universities. The Buckeye football program is highly touted as well. The football team has managed to accumulate four National Championships and 26 Big Ten Championships. The fact that Notre Dame handed Ohio State a pair of devastating losses in the 1930's scars the minds of many Buckeye aficionados. These were losses that would continue to haunt the program for the remainder of the century. Ohio State fans have patiently waited for sixty years for a chance to see their Buckeyes defeat the mighty Fighting Irish of Notre Dame.

On a cool, windy day, there was "an air of anticipation" in Columbus, the capital city of Ohio. The date was November 2, 1935 — All Souls' Day. The Fighting Irish were scheduled to play the feared Crimson Buckeyes of Ohio State. Many expected the Buckeyes to win both the Big 10 and National Championship, ousting their Big 10 rival Minnesota. The 4-0 Buckeyes were favored over Notre Dame despite the Irish's 5-0 record. This game has been imprinted in the hearts of millions of sports fans as an all time classic.

The Irish overcame a 13 point deficit in the final quarter to push them over the top of the Buckeyes. The Buckeyes saw their dreams of a championship come to a startling halt when Irish quarterback Bill Shakespeare threw Wayne Millner a 19 yard touchdown pass with 32 seconds remaining in the game. The hearts of Buckeye fans dropped as the Irish took a 18-13 lead.

Ohio State suffered a similar fate the following year, when Notre Dame defeated the Buckeyes 7-2. That was the last time these two teams have met on the football field.

Larry Petroff, Director of Ohio State Football Operations, believes that this is just another game. "The media has created the hype. The players just want to get out there and play. It is just another game and just another win."

Former Ohio State standout and back-to-back Heisman Trophy winner Archie Griffith, also commented on the hype buildup. "It is an exciting week, especially since we haven't played Notre Dame for a very long time. People have been looking forward to this game for about a half of a century. If I were still playing, I would be excited to play Notre Dame. These two schools have a fine history and are loaded with tradition."

Irish fans view the game as an opportunity to lay some doubts to rest. "We are obviously a better all-time football team," explains sophomore Noel Chakkalakal. "Maybe Ohio State will realize that after we beat them for the third time." Junior Ronan Byrne feels "that Ohio State is going to come out with a great deal of emotion, so it is important to score early." Sophomore John Polhemus maintains, "This is the biggest game for Ohio State in sixty years. For Notre Dame it is just another notch in the win column."

Sixty years later, the fifteenth ranked Fighting Irish of Notre Dame finally square off against the seventh ranked Ohio State Buckeyes Saturday, September 30 at 2:30 EST in Columbus Ohio. So grab your friends and make the hike to Ohio State. Everyone loves to road trip anyhow. It is just one more excuse to drink. Or if you can not make the excursion, watch the game on television. At any rate, just sit back, relax, and watch the game, because it promises to be a classic. These are the things that legends are made from.

Mariners move closer to Western crown

Associated Press

Ken Griffey Jr. broke an eighth-inning tie with a grand slam as the Seattle Mariners beat the Texas Rangers 6-2 Thursday night and moved toward their first AL West title.

Seattle, which began the day with a two-game lead over second-place California, was in position to clinch a tie if the Angels lost to Oakland later Thursday night.

Randy Johnson (17-2) gave up nine hits in 8 1-3 innings, striking out seven and walking two. He allowed a two-run homer to Mickey Tettleton in the second.

Norm Charlton finished for his 13th save.

Texas was eliminated with the loss, dropping four games behind the New York Yankees in the wild-card race with three games to go.

With the score tied 2-2, Griffey connected off Roger Pavlik

(10-10) for his eighth career grand slam. Luis Sojo walked with one out, Dan Wilson singled and Vince Coleman walked before Griffey's drive into the right-field stands, his 17th homer of the season.

Pavlik retired 12 consecutive hitters before Edgar Martinez led off the fifth with a double down the left-field line. Jay Buhner then hit a 420-foot homer over the left-field fence. It was his 39th homer of the season and his club-record 13th during September.

Indians 12, Twins 4

Dennis Martinez almost couldn't go on after he hit Kirby Puckett in the face Thursday. He did, though, and so did the Cleveland Indians' overpowering season.

Known for throwing inside, Martinez hit Chuck Knoblauch,

Minnesota's leadoff hitter, and two batters later shattered Puckett's upper jaw with a wild fastball.

He overcame the bad start to work six strong innings, and the Indians got a homer from Alvaro Espinoza in a 12-4 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

"I felt so bad, I almost took myself out of the game," Martinez said. "I tried to go inside and jam him. He might have thought it was going outside. He never had a chance to move."

"It hurt so much to know I sat down one of my best friends in baseball. ... It's the worst feeling I've ever had in my life."

"I thought the Twins handled it very well," Cleveland manager Mike Hargrove said. "They did what they had to do, and then we played baseball."

Puckett appeared to be ready to stride for an outside pitch when the ball hit him in the left cheek. He went down for several minutes, blood pouring from his nose and mouth. He was helped from the field with a blood-spattered towel covering his mouth.

Finished for the final three games of the season, Puckett is expected to need four to six weeks to recover.

Knoblauch, hit in the left shoulder leading off the Twins' first, was among the first players to reach Puckett after he was hit. In the Twins' somber clubhouse, Knoblauch described a scene he said made him feel faint.

"I ran up there and he kind of tried to roll over and he was bleeding quite a lot," Knoblauch said. "I couldn't believe how much he was bleeding. There was a pile of it in the dirt. I'm still a little bit shaken by it."

Red Sox 11, Brewers 6

Reggie Jefferson, Dwayne Hosey, John Valentin and Tim Lincecum and Mike Macfarlane homered as the Boston Red Sox beat the Milwaukee Brewers 11-6 Thursday night.

Roger Clemens (10-5), making his final start before the playoffs, allowed four runs and five hits in five innings with seven strikeouts and two walks.

Bob Scanlan (4-7) allowed 11 of his 15 batters to reach base. He was tagged for nine runs and eight hits in 1 2-3 innings.

Boston took a 4-0 lead in the first on Mike Greenwell's two-run single and Jefferson's two-run homer off the left-field foul pole, then chased Scanlan in a six-run second.

Luis Alicea was hit in the left ankle by a pitch, prompting a brief standoff between the teams, and Hosey hit the next pitch for a 6-2 lead. Three pitches later, Valentin hit his 27th homer of the season. Jefferson's RBI single chased Scanlan and Naehring hit Joe Slusarski's second pitch for a two-run homer.

Macfarlane homered off Mark Kiefer in the ninth. B.J. Surhoff drove in a pair of runs for the Brewers.

Royals 4, White Sox 0

Mark Gubicza pitched a four-hitter as the Kansas City Royals stopped a 23-inning scoreless streak and beat the Chicago White Sox 4-0 Thursday night.

Gubicza, 1-3 with an 8.39 ERA in his previous five starts, pitched his 15th career shutout, his third of the season. It marked the first time since 1989 that he pitched more than one complete game in a year.

Gubicza (12-14) struck out three and walked one.

Johnny Damon singled in a run in the third and tripled in another in a three-run fifth as Kansas City clinched second place in the AL Central. The Royals, playing their final home game of the season, averaged 17,614 fans per game, their lowest since averaging 14,959 in 1975.

Wilson Alvarez (8-11) pitched his second complete game, allowing eight hits, striking out five and walking one.

Kansas City, 14-27 against lefthanded starters, hadn't scored since the fifth inning Sunday before Damon's RBI single in the third.

Cubs keep playoff hopes alive with win

Associated Press

Randy Myers brawled on the field with a fan and the Chicago Cubs repeatedly battled back in the game to stay alive in the NL wild-card race Thursday with a wild 12-11 victory over the Houston Astros.

The Cubs fell behind in the sixth, seventh, eighth and 10th innings and rallied to tie each time. Pinch-hitter Mike Brumley's first home run since 1989 gave Houston an 11-10 lead in the 11th, but Chicago got RBI singles from Scott Bullett and Mike Parent to win it.

Chicago had to sweep the remaining three games in this series and needed Colorado to lose its four games to San Francisco to force a tie for the playoff spot. The Rockies' series opener was later Thursday.

Houston entered the day trailing Colorado by a game.

Myers, the NL saves leader, entered a 7-7 game with one on and one out in the eighth. After James Mouton's two-out pinch-hit homer put Houston ahead 9-7, a man identified as John Murray of Riverside, Ill., ran onto the field toward Myers.

Myers saw Murray coming, threw down his glove and landed some punches before the two wrestled on the ground near the infield. Several other Chicago players broke up the fight and security personnel removed Murray, who was arrested by police and charged with misdemeanor assault and disorderly conduct.

After order was restored, the Cubs tied the game in their half of the eighth on Howard Johnson's RBI single and Mark Grace's run-scoring double.

Mouton's sacrifice fly put Houston up 10-9 in the 10th, but the Cubs tied it on Sammy Sosa's sac fly.

Shawon Dunston led off the Cubs' 11th with a single off Todd Jones (6-5). After a passed ball on Tony Eusebio, Bullett fouled off six two-strike pitches before delivering an RBI single to right field. Bullett went to second on Jose Hernandez's sacrifice and scored when Parent singled on a 3-2 pitch.

Anthony Young (3-4) was the winning pitcher.

Giants 12, Rockies 4

Barry Bonds and Matt Williams hit three-run homers, powering the San Francisco Giants past Colorado 12-4 Thursday night and preventing the Rockies from tying Los Angeles for the NL West lead.

The idle Dodgers lead the Rockies by one game, with each team having three games left. Despite the defeat, Colorado remained one game ahead of Houston in the wild-card race. The Astros lost 12-11 to Chicago in 11 innings.

Bonds hit his 33rd home run in the first inning, giving him 102 RBIs. He singled home a run during a five-run fifth that made it 9-0.

San Francisco tied a season-high with 18 hits in ending a four-game losing streak. Rich Aurilia, who had been hitless in his previous four major league at-bats, was 4-for-5 with a solo home run.

The Rockies got to Jamie Brewington (6-4) for a run in the fifth on three straight singles and Mike Kingery's sacrifice fly. In the sixth, Joe Girardi's RBI single and pinch-hitter Harvey Pulliam's two-run double made it 9-4.

Bonds homered off Bryan Rekar (4-6) after singles by Marvin Benard and Steve Scarson. Benard singled off third baseman Vinny Castilla's glove for another run in the second.

Benard began the fifth with a ground-rule double, Scarson bunted for a hit and Bonds followed with an RBI single. Williams greeted reliever Roger Bailey with a three-run homer, his 22nd.

Brewington, who pitched six shutout innings in a 2-0 win over Colorado last Saturday, benefitted from two double plays to avoid trouble in the first and third. The Rockies threatened again in the fourth when Andres Galarraga singled and Castilla doubled, but Brewington retired Girardi on a ground out.

Reds 9, Expos 7

Greg Harris became the first player to pitch with both hands in a game in modern major league history, working a scoreless ninth inning Thursday night for the Montreal Expos in a 9-7 loss to Cincinnati.

Using a special six-finger glove, Harris became the first ambidextrous pitcher in the majors since Elton "Ice Box" Chamberlain of the Louisville Colonels of the American Association in 1888.

Bert Campaneris was the last pitcher to use both hands in a professional game, doing it in 1962 for Daytona Beach in the Florida State League. Campaneris went on to become an All-Star shortstop in the majors, and once played all nine positions in a game.

Harris, the NL's oldest pitcher at 39, entered the game in the ninth. Pitching right-handed, he got the right-handed Reggie Sanders to ground out.

Harris then switched his glove and pitched left-handed to lefty Hal Morris. Harris' first pitch as a lefty went to the backstop, and he walked Morris on four pitches.

But Harris did better as a left-hander against lefty Eddie Taubensee, getting him to ground out.

Harris then went back to being a righty and retired the right-hand hitting Bret Boone on another grounder.

Montreal manager Felipe Alou said before the game he intended to let Harris make history, "but it won't be in a situation with the game on the line." Harris entered with the Expos losing 9-3.

Harris entered in a mopup roll after Cincinnati starter Pete Schourek (18-7) worked six innings. Jerome Walton hit a three-run homer in the eighth for a 9-3 lead as the Reds ended a three-game losing streak.

Schourek allowed three runs on seven hits. He struck out six and hit two batters, including Montreal starter Pedro Martinez, which drew a warning from plate umpire Gerry Davis.

Schourek, 5-0 in his last seven starts, has the second-most victories among NL pitchers behind Atlanta's Greg Maddux, who has 19.

have to face some friends and previous teammates.

"I'm excited to play Cincinnati. It'll be interesting to play against girls I've played with before," she explained.

Ohio State is expected to play an emotional game on Sunday.

"This will be a very big game for them. They are playing at home, and will look to draw emotions from the (football) game on Saturday," predicted Petrucelli.

Another physical team, the Buckeyes literally will look to knock the Irish out of their game. The key to avoiding the pressure will be quick passing and effective ball control, trademarks for the Irish attack.

Coach Petrucelli noted that the Irish have not had their projected starting line-up together in a game for very long.

"We haven't fielded our best 11 players yet. As soon as Cindy (Daws) came back, we lost Ashley. We've yet to play our best," Petrucelli explained.

Big East

man middle blocker Melissa Tytko. Youngblood ranks fourth in the Big East with an average of 10.28 assists per game, while Tytko enters the weekend with a .355 hitting percentage.

"We can't afford to take any Big East team too lightly," said Brown. "We will have to execute the fundamentals well against both teams. We are a good offensive team, and when we pass and serve well, we are tough to beat."

Notre Dame will battle Villanova on Sunday in the first meeting ever between the two private schools. The Wildcats enter the weekend with a record of 6-6, but they are coming off a strong 1994 season in which they finished 19-12.

To have any chance of upsetting the Irish, both the Hoyas and the Wildcats will have to slow down Notre Dame's red hot quartet of Lee, Angie Harris, Carey May, and Jenny Birkner. The group exploded against the Buffaloes last weekend after struggling late against the Longhorns.

Outside hitters Harris and Lee rank 1-2 in the Big East in kills per game with respective averages of 4.58 and 4.55. Harris, who has already been named the conference's Player of the Week twice, also ranks second in the league in serving with an average of .63 aces per game.

"The Texas loss was tough, but we're fully recovered," said Harris. "We've been playing really good lately and we've started executing our game. As long as we're playing our best, we know we're going to win."

As it turns out, the Irish's lone loss of the season may just prove to be a blessing in disguise.

and had a few great chances when David Cutler hit the crossbar and Tony Capasso put a direct kick wide right of the net.

Notre Dame's patience paid off about 15 minutes into the half, when reserve forward Peter Gansler made the score 2-0 with his first ever goal in an Irish uniform. Gansler got a great pass from Konstantin Koloskov and fired the ball past Loyola goalie Chris Walter.

The Irish struck again just four minutes later, when midfielder Chris Mathis took a pass from Ben Bocklage and buried the goal in the upper left corner to push the Irish lead to 3-0. The goal was Mathis' fourth of the season, and appeared to crush the Lions' collective heart.

The game's fourth goal came at the 73:10 mark, when Konstantin Koloskov scored his fifth goal of the season, and third in two games off a Tony Capasso assist. The Irish capped off the scoring just under three minutes later, when Capasso netted his second goal of the game when he beat Walter from about 20 yards out.

The Irish were able to neutralize Loyola's attack all game, led by solid goaltending from freshman Greg Velho, who recorded his first career shutout on the night. The Irish offense, in outshooting Loyola 27-13, looked great considering the absence of star forward Bill Lanza.

"This was obviously an important win for us," said Notre Dame head coach Mike Berticelli. "We've had such bad luck with the injuries, and some close losses. Peter Gansler scored a great goal for us in filling in up front, and I thought Greg Velho had a good game for us in the net. This win is good for us heading into Sunday's game against Northwestern."

The Irish hope to continue the winning trend when they meet the Wildcats in Evanston on Sunday for another non-conference match.

Freshman goaltender Greg Vehlo recorded his first career shutout as the Irish defeated Loyola of Chicago 5-0 to end a four-game losing streak Thursday.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Maryland ranking short-lived

By ED SHEARER
Associated Press

C.J. Williams scored on runs of 37 and 14 yards and Georgia Tech's defense had a night filled with big plays as the Yellow Jackets snapped a 13-game losing streak against Division I-A foes with a 31-3 upset of No. 17 Maryland Thursday night.

The Jackets (2-2, 1-1 Atlantic Coast Conference) had six sacks and an interception against Scott Milanovich, making his first appearance for the Terrapins (4-1, 2-1) after an NCAA-imposed four-game suspension for gambling.

Tech also snapped its ACC losing streak at nine games dating back to its last I-A victory, 38-28 over Wake Forest on Nov. 13, 1993. It was the Jackets' first victory over a ranked team since beating No. 23 North Carolina State 16-13 on Oct. 3, 1992.

Besides the sacks for 51 yards, Tech's pass rush also deflected two of Milanovich's passes at the line of scrimmage. The Jackets defense also stopped three fourth-down gambles by the Terps in the second half, at the Tech 34, 40 and 35.

Linebacker Jimmy Clements had three of the sacks for the Jackets and Ralph Hughes, Jermaine Miles and Patrick Bradford one each.

Tech's other scoring came on a 25-yard pass from Donnie Davis to Cedric Zachery, who made a twisting catch in the end zone, a 19-yard run by Charles Wiley with 1:23 to play and a 37-yard field goal by Dave Frakes.

Maryland cut Tech's lead to 10-3 on a 22-yard field goal by Joe O'Donnell with 3:12 left in the second quarter, capping a 77-yard drive in which Milanovich was 7-of-8 for 84 yards.

Helped by a 15-yard pass interference infraction, Tech moved 44 yards on its first possession to take a 3-0 lead on Frakes' field goal, then went 91 yards in 11 plays as Davis passed for 40 yards to set up Williams' 37-yard run.

The Terps were riding their first 4-0 start since winning its first eight in 1978, these coming with sophomore Brian Cummings at quarterback.

Cummings saw no action in Thursday night's game.

Williams, who had 166 yards on 27 carries, set up Wiley's late touchdown with a 30-yard scamper to the Maryland 35.

Tech drew a 15-yard penalty when students threw seat cushions into the end zone for the second time following its second touchdown.

Rams look to remain perfect

By HANK LOWENKRON
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS
The St. Louis Rams can set an NFL record on Sunday with the Indianapolis Colts standing in the way.

St. Louis is the only NFL team that has not turned over the ball, a significant reason for the team's 4-0 start. If the Rams don't have a turnover against Indianapolis (1-2) on Sunday, they'll become the first team in league history to go five consecutive games without a turnover.

"It's going to be real unfortunate for the first person to turn the football over, because they're going to take a whole lot of flak," said St. Louis running back Jerome Bettis. "People are going to take it a little bit out of perspective, say 'What happened?' and make a really big deal out of it. Usually it's part of the game."

The Rams, who won only four games all last year, travel to Indianapolis alone atop the NFC West standings for the first time since 1989. They're plus-14 in the takeaway-giveaway statistics, with nine interceptions and five fumble recoveries. Four of the turnovers have been returned for touchdowns and 44 of the team's 99 points have come after a turnover.

Bettis leads the team with 228 yards rushing and has had more than half the team's 117 carries.

"Who doesn't want the football more? When you ask the wide receivers, they want the ball more," Bettis said. "In terms of our offense, I think I'm getting it an awful lot for the system. I think once we understand the philosophy, in terms of blocking a little better, I think you'll see me have some bigger games. I don't think you need more than 20-25 carries to be effective. If you've got the guys in front of you blocking good, then that's all you need."

The Rams will be facing the only team in the league without an interception and Indianapolis also has a league-low one sack.

"Defensively, we do have to get some turnovers. We do have to get some pressure on the quarterback. I think that's finally going to happen," said Colts cornerback Ray Buchanan, who had a team-high eight interceptions last year.

"I'm not discouraged at all. We have 13 games. People say we haven't had an interception yet. That really doesn't bother me," Buchanan said. "Last year I went seven games without an interception, and then I finally started to come around. I'm not going to go out there looking for an interception, but when they do come, when my opportunity comes to get the ball, I will make the play."

The Colts are coming off a bye week as they head into their toughest stretch of the schedule. Undefeated Miami, defending Super Bowl champion San Francisco and Oakland are the next opponents for an Indianapolis team that has struggled for an identity early in the season.

Harbaugh, expected to make his second straight start for the Colts after replacing a Craig Erickson at quarterback in each of the season's first two weeks, goes into the game with the league's highest quarterback rating at 106.3. He's completed 39 of 62 passes (62.9) for 450 yards and four touchdowns without an interception.

"They've earned all the turnovers they've gotten," Harbaugh said of the Rams. "They haven't gotten anything cheap. They play a defense where they really drop into their zones, they react on the quarterback's eyes, and the throw. They tip passes and they hit the receiver once he touches the ball. They're a very solid team defensively."

Pittsburgh looks for revenge

By ALAN ROBINSON
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH
It's the rematch — Chargers vs. Steelers, the AFC championship game revisited. Will it be a replay? Hardly.

Flash back to last Jan. 15, with the underdog Chargers, only 1-9 in Three Rivers Stadium, leading 17-13 with barely a minute left. The Pittsburgh Steelers, so confident of victory that were already rehearsing their Super Bowl rap video, were down to fourth-and-goal at the 3.

One play to the Super Bowl, or one play left in the season?

Neil O'Donnell, given the play seconds before by a smiling, confident coach Bill Cowher, drops back to pass. But, instead of going to tight end Eric Green, who had made four catches for 80 yards, O'Donnell is looking over the middle — looking all the way for running back Barry Foster.

Foster is momentarily open but, as he sprawls for the ball, linebacker Dennis Gibson dives in front to swipe it away with his hand.

It is the play of the season, and one that ends the Steelers' season five points and three yards short.

"In terms of professional football, it's ancient history," Gibson said. "But I'll tell you, I've gotten a hell of a lot of mileage out of it. I wish I could get royalties for it."

Now, just 8 1/2 months later, none of the Steelers' principles in that defining play of 1994 will be involved in Sunday's rematch. O'Donnell (broken finger) probably won't play for another week. Green has signed with Miami. Foster was traded to Carolina and cut.

The Chargers (3-1), cognizant of the evolution the Steelers have undergone, remain wary of an unfriendly stadium where they are winless (0-9) in the regular season.

"The Steelers still run, still hit, are still very physical, and are very physical at the line of scrimmage," Chargers coach Bobby Ross said. "All of those things are still there."

The Steelers, the NFL leaders in turnover ratio last year but now last, wish they could bury all those interceptions (13), fumbles (4) and a league-high 41 penalties.

Late score wins for Walsh

By TODD FITZPATRICK
Sports Writer

Fans of women's interhall football witnessed two easy victories and a thrilling come-from-behind win last night at Cartier Field.

Walsh saved the best for last by scoring in the final minute of regulation to defeat Badin 12-8.

Badin lit up the scoreboard first with a 5-yard touchdown pass. After the 2-point conversion, Badin led by a score of 8-0.

Walsh countered on the next possession when Liz Rodriguez outraced Badin's cornerback. Quarterback Carolyn Parnell spotted her receiver and threw a touchdown pass to make the score 8-6.

Walsh began the second half with continued success by throwing a 20-yard pass to an outstretched Rodriguez. Badin defense halted the drive, however, with their second interception of the game.

Walsh was faced with one last chance to take the lead late in the fourth quarter. On a key third down play, Nicholas kept the snap and ran up the middle to keep the drive alive. A few plays later, she sneaked past the defensive line for another key first down. Finally, with less than one minute remaining, Nicholas found an open receiver in the end zone for the winning touchdown.

After Badin regained possession on the kickoff, Walsh sealed the victory with an interception that ended the game.

Lyons 19, Cavanaugh 0
Defending champion Lyons rebounded from their tough loss to Pangborn by dominating Cavanaugh on both sides of the ball.

Cavanaugh's defense played well early by sacking the quarterback on fourth down of Lyons' first possession. On offense, running back Carrie Gulick ran for several long gains.

Lyons quickly took control of the game when Cathy Tschanz caught a strike from quarterback Julie Byrd to make the score 6-0.

Defensively, Lyons kept pressure on the quarterback the entire game and made the big plays when necessary.

Lyons second touchdown occurred when Julie Byrd slashed through the defense to make the score 13-0.

The score remained the same until late in the second half when Lyons put the game away with a touchdown reception by receiver Kerry Callahan.

Pangborn 19, Howard 0
Top-ranked Pangborn displayed their incredible speed by scoring three touchdowns to defeat Howard.

Pangborn reached the end zone for the first time on their second possession of the game. Quarterback MT Craft threw a long bomb to her receiver who raced past defenders for the score.

On their first possession of the second half, MT Craft did an excellent job evading defenders and ran 50 yards for another touchdown.

Pangborn capped off their impressive performance when running back Trish Sorensen ran the ball into the end zone from the 5-yard line late in the game.

■ SAINT MARY'S VOLLEYBALL

Chicago falls in three straight

By KATHLEEN N. POLICY
Sports Writer

The University of Chicago was a much easier test Thursday night for the Saint Mary's volleyball team than their last contest at Albion College. The Belles were victorious in three straight games (15-8, 15-10, 15-1). The match was a good contest and the Belles record is now 6-5.

Saint Mary's coach Julie Schroeder-Biek was happy with her team's performance in this contest. She was glad that some players that normally do not receive playing time into this game.

"The game was a team effort. I was proud that players like (sophomore) Meg Winkler and (freshman) Kelli Lovell did such a good job. Kelli rarely gets playing time, but she served two game points in the match," said Schroeder-Biek.

One of the team's major problems in the game against Albion was finishing off games, but in this game Schroeder-Biek felt they showed improvement in this area.

"The last game the team really took control of the game and ran with it. The weren't going to let the game go," said Schroeder-Biek.

The players saw a similar turn-around from the last game. They felt that this change was a result of the tougher practices after Monday's loss. In practice they ran drills centered on pressured focus. The object of these drills was for the players to keep their concentration while they were tired.

"The practices were very difficult, and we worked very hard on coming out tough and trying to reach our goal," said senior Ann Lawrence.

The key player in the match was sophomore Kelly Meyer. She served for 22 of the Belles 45 points and had 30 assists.

"The key was our communication. We talked a lot and just played our positions," said Meyer.

Aggressiveness and communication were stressed in this morning's practice. It was improved in this game, but Schroeder-Biek still was not happy with it.

The Belles' next match is a triangular match at North Central College versus both North Central and Carroll College.

"These are both very competitive teams, and I expect them both to be very good match-ups," said Schroeder-Biek.

■ MEN'S TENNIS

Fallon invitational set

By B. J. HOOD
Sports Writer

The sixteenth-ranked Notre Dame men's tennis team will host the Tom Fallon Invitational this weekend. Fourteen teams will be participating, including Colorado, Kentucky, Michigan, Michigan State, Miami, and Purdue.

Notre Dame is coming off a big 4-3 win over Texas, a top ten team the last four years. The win pleased head coach Bob Bayliss.

"Our problems are fixable things," Bayliss said. "I think we're going to be pretty good. We're going to be fun to watch."

However, the Irish will be without the services of Ryan Simme, Mike Sprouse, and Jason Pun, who are playing the National Clay Courts in Baltimore, Maryland.

Playing the A flight this weekend are John J. O'Brien and Jakub Pietrowski. Pietrowski helped secure the doubles point against Texas and played number three singles. John J. O'Brien started out his match 2-2, but did not lose another game en route to an impressive victory.

"O'Brien broke (the opponent) down the first four games, and didn't lose another game," Bayliss noted. "He showed a lot of heart."

Brian Harris, Ron Mencias, Brian Patterson, and Dan Rothschild will compete B flight.

Play begins at nine a.m. Friday through Sunday. Bayliss thinks fans will like what they see from the Irish.

"We'd like to make a great showing. We'd love to see people come out and watch some great tennis."

Jack Welch, CEO

How would you describe GE's work environment? Open, inspiring, charged, fast-paced, non-bureaucratic, apolitical. We think you'll agree these are particularly appealing adjectives.

We believe in being "boundaryless." We've taken down walls that divide people, eliminated hierarchies and stripped out bureaucratic processes company-wide. And it's worked. We are a 60 billion dollar global enterprise whose extremely diverse range of businesses are number one or number two in their markets. Others look to us for management best practices and our financial results have shareholders cheering.

We want to hear from Bachelor's and Master's degree candidates. If you are bright, creative, passionate about your work and determined to make things happen, we want you to know we find these to be particularly appealing qualities.

We'll be on campus this Fall.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A new professional role will bring fame and fortune. Joining forces with a special group or talented individual points you in the right direction. The year 1996 finds you ready to break with the past. Let loved ones know if your priorities have changed! A real estate deal will be signed next June. Let your home reflect your love for beauty and art.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: "Today" show co-host Bryant Gumbel, cowboy actor Gene Autry, actress Anita Ekberg, actress Greer Garson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Avoid taking your pent-up frustrations out on people who do not deserve it. Creative work is the best therapy for those feeling glum. A late-afternoon call brings good financial news.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A lack of rest could affect your outlook on life. Heed the advice of old friends. Postpone signing contracts or agreements. Heated arguments over partnership funds should be avoided.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An early-morning business appointment starts the day on a productive note. Ignore workplace distractions and concentrate on doing a thorough job. Join a fun gathering tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Adding some touches of bright color to your home or attire will boost your spirits. Something that has been mislaid will turn up shortly. Try not to fret about things that no one can change.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You start today with a real sense of adventure. Unfortunately, someone may throw cold water on your enthusiasm around lunch time. Take care of business before turning your attention to outside activities.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22):

Although you are open to new ideas, a practical streak makes you shoot down pie-in-the-sky proposals. A neighbor makes a special request. Firm up travel plans without further delay. Pack lightly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Meetings with your professional colleagues should go well. You discover mutual interests that go beyond work. A former co-worker returns to town and asks a favor. Try to be obliging. Dine out this evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New friends can quickly become close pals as old ties fade away. A lost item resurfaces under odd circumstances. Dressing for success is not "selling out." Shop carefully for classic styles. Volunteer work proves enlightening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A complex work assignment requires patience and persistence. An expert's guidance helps you get a handle on a technical matter. A new hobby reawakens your creativity. Spend time with people who appreciate the arts.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Heart-to-heart chats lead to some interesting insights. A child helps you discover the kind of person you want to be. A cozy dinner at home could set the stage for blissful romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be willing to compromise in a business matter. A commitment to excellence will produce the results you want. Do not be hasty when deciding on a financial strategy. Give some thought to various alternatives.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look your best when attending an important business function. Make sure your written and verbal communications convey your sentiments exactly. Someone you find unappealing could make a pass; you are not flattered. Keep your distance.

Conference schedule a mere molehill in light of national competition

By MIKE DAY
Sports Writer

Sometimes, in order to take a step forward, one must take a step backwards.

A case in point was last Friday when the No. 17 Texas Longhorn volleyball team came into town and delivered a blow that still lingers with the Irish. The Longhorns handed Notre Dame their first loss of the season.

However, in the week since that forgettable moment, the Irish have played like a team possessed. Colorado, owners of a 7-1 record and the No. 15 ranking, were completely overmatched by Notre Dame last weekend. The Buffaloes could not even manage to win one game in the two matches against the pumped-up Irish.

It only got worse for DePaul on Tuesday night. The Blue Demons, who happened to be at the wrong place at the wrong time, were ousted in a record time of 40 minutes, scoring just five points in the 15-2, 15-1, 15-2 defeat.

"I would definitely say it (the Texas loss) was a good learning experience," said head coach Debbie Brown. "It helped us see what things we need to work on to be successful. It's never good to lose, but an experience like that can help the team in the future."

Added sophomore outside hitter Jaimie Lee, "We learned a lot against Texas. We now know what it takes to beat a team like them. We have to finish games to 15 and not let teams climb back when they are down."

Big East rivals Georgetown and Villanova are slated to be Notre Dame's next victims.

The Irish travel to Washington D.C. on Saturday to take on the Hoyas in the first conference game of the season. Georgetown has been a bit of a dilemma so far this year. The Hoyas have compiled an impressive 13-5 record, but they lost their opener to DePaul.

Leading the way for Georgetown are sophomore setter Katy Youngblood and fresh-

Irish get back on track with 5-0 victory

By DYLAN BARMMER

The bleeding has stopped. The Notre Dame men's soccer team put an end to a four game losing skid, their longest in five seasons, with a convincing 5-0 win over the Lions of Loyola Marymount. The win moved the Irish to 4-4 on the year, and came at a crucial time for the young Irish squad, which has been beset with injuries of late.

"I think this was a huge win for us," said Irish captain Tony Capasso, who had two goals and an assist on the night. "This game was important for us in terms of getting back the momentum which we had lost over the past few weeks."

The Irish hope that this momentum will carry them into their next several games, as they seek to regain the form they showcased during the first 3 games of the season. The Irish had climbed to #6 in the ISAA poll before a rash of injuries and a tough schedule helped drop them to 3-4 coming into last night's game.

Capasso got the Irish started early with the customary early Notre Dame goal, when he scored on a direct kick just 1:43 into the game.

After taking the lead, the Irish continued to pressure the Lions, but were unable to net a second goal in the first half.

The Irish continued to attack in the second half of the game,

Pressure's on Scharff-less defense

By DAVE TREACY
Sports Writer

Emotions will run high this weekend in the highly anticipated match-up between Ohio State and Notre Dame.

Cincinnati will be a pretty good game, too.

The women's soccer program is heading to Ohio this weekend, facing the Bearcats of Cincinnati this afternoon and Ohio State on Sunday. Interestingly enough, the first of the two games is the more competitive match-up.

"Cincinnati was a tournament team last year," recalled Irish head coach Chris Petrucelli. "They've been in and out of the top twenty this season."

A tough team at home, Cincinnati has been known to provide many problems for visitors. They also have some talent in the middle.

"Paulette Angelechia is a very strong player, a good midfielder. They're a solid team, especially in the midfield," Petrucelli added.

Of course, the same could be said about the Irish. They have proven to be a team without a weakness, dominating all opponents and allowing no scores against them. The Irish have not been defeated in their last 34 regular-season contests, and have set a school record for consecutive shut-outs.

With the injury of senior sweeper Ashley Scharff, the defense has lost a key starter for the weekend. For other teams, the loss of a starter might be a problem. Not so for the Irish.

Stepping in to replace Scharff is freshman phenom Shannon Boxx. Boxx played in place of Scharff last weekend against Seton Hall, and rose to the challenge, scoring a goal in the contest with a header assisted by Cindy Daws and Holly Manthei.

"Losing Ashley is really only a minor setback. She's our anchor and we need her on the field, but Shannon has done and will do a great job," predicted Kate Fisher, another defensive mainstay.

"Last week, Ashley took control, and was very confident. Her confidence helped our play," Fisher added.

Incidentally, Fisher is from Cincinnati, and will see IRISH / page 17

With Ashley Scharff's absence, Kate Sobrero will be looked upon to carry more of the load for the Irish defense.

The Notre Dame-Ohio State rivalry returns after a hiatus that dates back to the Depression Era

By MIKE NORBUT

It's a rivalry built on legend, bedtime stories told by grandparents to their wide-eyed grandchildren, who hang on every word as if it was papa's life pouring out of him.

They still talk about it at the old-time barber shops in the one-horse towns of Ohio and Indiana, where you can't sneeze without three mothers there to offer you a hanky.

Now, 60 years later, it forms the rallying point around which all Buckeye fans join to despise the Fighting Irish.

1935's "Game of the Century," an 18-13 Notre Dame comeback victory, has grown into an octopus with 100 tentacles, pulling in people in support of the IRISH ON THE OFFENSIVE. . .

Irish need to overcome hostile atmosphere

By THOMAS SCHLIDT
Assistant Sports Editor

The "Game of the Century" against Florida State in 1993 will have been the last time Notre Dame has played in a game with such anticipation surrounding it.

Most of the Irish, including quarterback Ron Powlus, didn't play in that Irish victory. How will this young Irish offense handle the pressure? Will Powlus' eyes be glued to receiver Derrick Mayes again?

Irish head coach Lou Holtz understands the situation facing his team.

"The crowd is going to be so loud and the environment very hostile. I would probably compare it to the Miami environment in 1989, which I definitely underestimated there."

He won't underestimate the environment this time and the Irish will be ready.

The Irish offense has been dominant recently. Ron Powlus is finally playing with the poise and skill that people thought he possessed. Since the Northwestern game he has connected on 65 percent of his passes for 725 yards and 6 touchdowns.

A main reason for his success is the resurgence of the offensive line. They have held teams to only three sacks over the past three games, while controlling the trenches to ignite the running attack of Randy Kinder and freshman Autry Denson.

Kinder is on pace for a 1200 yard season after gaining 449 yards on a 6.2 yards per carry average. Presently he ranks fifth all-time among Notre Dame running backs with nine games of at least 100 yards.

This weekend the offensive line will face its toughest challenge. Ohio St. enters the game with arguably the best tandem of defensive ends in the country in juniors Matt Finkes and Mike Vrabel. Both were first team All-Big Ten last season. Finkes led the Buckeyes' defensive line with 71 tackles, while Vrabel established a school single-season record with 12 sacks. Both are on pace to break the Buckeye career sack record of 27.5 by the end of their season year.

Behind the defensive line the Buckeyes are talented, but inexperienced. They lost three starting defensive backs and two star linebackers, Lorenzo Styles and Craig Powell. Linebacker Greg Bellisari has filled in nicely at the middle linebacker position for the Buckeyes and leads the team with 26 tackles.

In the defensive backfield the Buckeyes are led by Thorpe Award candidate Shawn Springs. He leads the team with two interceptions, and ran a kickoff back 97 yards for a touchdown.

The Observer/Kevin Klau
Junior Randy Kinder is on pace to break Allen Pinkett's career 100 yard games record of 21.

BUCKEYES ON THE OFFENSIVE. . .

Balanced offense poses problems for Irish

By THOMAS SCHLIDT
Assistant Sports Editor

Last season it was Penn State, this year Ohio State. Once again, the Big Ten can claim the nation's most dangerous offense.

Senior quarterback Bobby Hoying has keyed a fast start for the Buckeye offense. In three games, two against top 25 teams, he has connected on 68 percent of this passes for 757 yards and eight touchdowns.

Much of his success has come from the emergence of Terry Glenn as a game breaking receiver. Glenn has used his amazing speed and sure hands to grab 19 receptions for 449 yards. He is among the top in the collegiate ranks with 23.6 yards per reception.

"We want to get the ball to our receivers eight-to-ten yards down the field and then let them run with it," Ohio State head coach John Cooper explained.

Balancing out the passing attack is Heisman candidate running back Eddie George. After rushing for 1477 yards last season, he is off to another fast start this season with 448 yards in only three games.

Paving the way for George is a Buckeye offensive line led by sophomore phenom Orlando Pace. At 6-6 320 pounds, Pace was the Big Ten's freshman of the year last year after he started every game at tackle.

"I worry about how we stand up in front of them," Irish head coach Lou Holtz said. "Then I worry about tackling George in the secondary, and how are you going to cover Glenn?"

Defensively the Irish are anything but great, yet they get the job done when needed.

The defensive line will be drastically undersized compared to the Buckeye offensive line. Ohio State averages 6-4 297 pounds to the Irish's 6-2 267. Players like 240 pound Corey Bennett will need to use their speed and quickness to get around that offensive line, and the inside linebackers Lyron Cobbins and Kinnon Tatum will need to fill in the holes, to stop the run. Else George will be running all day.

The Irish secondary will need a repeat performance of the Texas game. Glenn will eventually burn them, so Allen Rossum, Shawn Wooden, LaRon Moore and Brian Magee will need to come up with some key interceptions. The Irish will be missing nickel back Jarvis Edison who is out with an injury.

The Observer/Kevin Klau
Corey Bennett will battle last year's Big Ten Freshman-of-the-Year in 6-6 320 pound Orlando Pace.

Key Matchup

In the By Thomas Schlidt

Trenches

Despite the stars at the skill positions for Notre Dame and Ohio State, this game will be won in the trenches.

6-6 320 pound sophomore tackle Orlando Pace leads a towering Buckeye offensive line that will, on average, outweigh the Irish front three by over 30 pounds. Irish defensive end Corey Bennett will give up 80 pounds when he battles Pace. The Irish will need to utilize their speed and quickness if they expect to establish any pass rush or neutralize the Buckeye ground game.

While the Irish offensive line has been strong recently, they may have lost their cohesiveness when tackle Mike Doughty went down with an ankle injury. Freshman Mike Rosenthal is slated to make his first start against the best tandem of defensive ends in the country in juniors Mike Vrabel and Matt Finkes. Both are on their way to breaking the Buckeye career sack record.

You can tell a lot about someone by what they study, especially their likes and dislikes. Eddie George is a case in point.

Ohio State's senior tailback majors in Landscape Architecture, so accordingly he enjoys surveying open areas of green. He's pretty good at it.

As a matter of fact, he covered enough grass last season to give him the highest total since

George

Buckeye Keith Byars. This season, the Philadelphia native has been just as eager to study various types of surfaces.

To open the season, he got a feel for the artificial turf of the Meadowlands by rushing for over one hundred yards for the ninth time in thirteen games against Boston College.

Next, it was back to the familiar turf of Ohio Stadium, where he found the Prescription Athletic Turf much to his liking. He traversed 219 yards in OSU's 30-20 victory over the Huskies of Washington. In addition, he tallied two touchdowns and was named ABC's Player of the Game.

That might be a pretty cool award, but George may have his eyes on a slightly more prestigious honor, like the Heisman Trophy.

"In Eddie George, they maybe have the best back in the country," Irish coach Lou Holtz appraised.

This week's nationally televised game against America's most recognizable team may be a make or break game.

At 6-foot-3, 230 pounds, he has great size for a tailback, but his forte is speed.

A state track champion in high school, George hits the corner quicker than anyone in the country. That may spell trouble for an Irish secondary which lacks great speed.

In addition, his formidable offensive line may pose problems for Notre Dame.

"I worry whether we can stand up front, and then I worry about tackling George in the secondary; he's going to get some (big runs)," said Holtz.

Just how many may very well determine the outcome of the colossal clash in Columbus.

Count on George to get his hundred yards. It's his hobby.

The Breakdown

A position by position look at who holds the advantage

Quarterbacks

Bobby Hoying is putting up some impressive numbers, but so is Ron Powlus. And having beaten his first ranked team, Powlus has confidence.

Running Backs

Eddie George has the potential to run circles around the Irish defense, but he doesn't have a compliment such as Marc Edwards.

Receivers

The Buckeyes have speed and depth, two attributes that Notre Dame lacks. Derrick Mayes' talent makes this one a close call, but he'll need support.

Offensive Line

Beefy and brash, the Buckeye line blows teams off the ball. Notre Dame's line has amassed two 500+ yardage games so far, however.

Defensive Line

The other side of the important matchups. Notre Dame's line is undersized, but made strides against Texas. Ohio State's is big and plays physical.

Linebackers

The strongest unit on the Irish defense, the linebackers will be a key for Notre Dame. There are no Chris Spielman on Ohio State this year.

Secondary

This is not a difficult call. While Shawn Wooden has been strong, everyone has picked on the other side. Ohio State has the talented Shawn Springs.

Special Teams

Special teams have come through for the Irish, but the kicking game still struggles. OSU returned a kickoff for a TD earlier this year--Look out.

Coaching

Lou Holtz making the trip is an emotional lift, and his being able to see from the press box will help. John Cooper never fails to fail at OSU.

Overall

A close call, but the Buckeyes get it because of the home field. But look for an upset. --Mike Norbut

Irish Eyes On ...

Breaking school records is always something to be proud of. It tells you that you may very well be the best to play at your particular position in school history.

However, in certain circumstances, a feat may not be noticed, or even deserved to be noticed. For example, breaking the school record for most PAT's attempted is not awe-inspiring.

There are those marks that are quite impressive, especially when you consider the quality of the program and players who preceded you.

Taking this into account, the fact that Ohio State junior Matt Vrabel set the all-time mark for both sacks (12) and tackles-for-losses (20) in a single season last year is quite notable.

Not only is the fact that he was a sophomore when he accomplished the feat rather eye-opening, the program in which he did it is even more telling.

Consider Ohio State's tradition. Further, just think of a few of the players who Vrabel topped in 1994. Names such as Chris Spielman, Alonzo Spellman and Dan "Big Daddy" Wilkinson come to mind. Not bad company.

This season, Vrabel is off to a bit of slow start. But when you consider that start consists of two sacks and three tackles for losses in three games, you know the guy can play.

Vrabel

Simply, he's a playmaker.

Complicating this for the Irish is Vrabel's line-mate, Matt Finkes.

Finkes, himself is hard to handle, preventing the Irish from focusing on Vrabel.

The 6-foot-4, 255 pound Vrabel garnered honorable mention All-American recognition last season and first team all Big Ten.

Another concern for the Irish should be Vrabel's ability to knock passes down at the line of the scrimmage. Last season, he did such on four occasions. With the tendency of the Irish offensive line to favor a collapsible type pocket, he could wreak havoc.

After just two seasons, he already ranks third on the all-time OSU sack list. It will be the job of Joe Moore's boys to make sure he stays there following tomorrow's contest.

fairy tale.

It's the stories that keep them engrossed in the mystical matchup.

"While I was walking off the field after the game, some guy came up to me and handed me a ten dollar bill," fullback and Class of '37 graduate Steve Miller said. "That was a lot of money back then."

Notre Dame's quarterback, Andy Pilney, remembers not being able to see the end of the game.

"I was being carried off in a stretcher," he said. "I had hurt my left knee just a couple of plays before, and I was trying to see, but I was in the tunnel when he caught the pass."

"The trainer told me we won. Then I passed out from the pain."

The 15-yard pass, from Bill "The Bard" Shakespeare to Wayne Millner gave the Irish an 18-13 lead with just seconds remaining to play. Shakespeare had entered the game just two plays beforehand, and nearly threw an interception on his first attempt. The ball hit Buckeye defender Dick Beltz in the hands, but fell harmlessly incomplete.

"That's the thing," Miller said. "If he had gotten that interception, we wouldn't have won the game. But if I hadn't have fumbled, we wouldn't have needed it anyhow. It probably never would have been the 'Game of the Century' then."

Miller lost a fumble on the goal line with the Irish down 13-6 in the second half. But all that's remembered is the touchdown he scored to get them on the board.

"Andy had just completed a pass, and I just ran it in," he said. "It wasn't the greatest run since sliced bread or anything. But I scored, and that's all that matters."

Pilney was the hero of the game with a touchdown pass, a caused fumble that gave Notre Dame the ball with a minute to play, and a 30-yard run that set up the winning score.

"Catholics Go Home" signs quickly dissipated when the game came to an end. But they didn't bother the players, who weren't paying attention anyhow.

"We never saw any of that," Miller said. "Coach (Elmer) Layden kept us away from all of it. We stayed at a seminary, went over to the field and played. That's it."

Ironically, the Irish returned home the following week with national championship hopes riding high, but they fell to Northwestern, 14-7.

"They were good back then, though," Miller contested.

Irish head coach Lou Holtz watched the game films from the 1935 game. He found them to be quite impressive.

"I'm a history fanatic," he said. "It's really interesting if you study it. The irony of it was one of the Columbus papers at the time went to print and made the headline, 'Ohio State wins 13-12.'"

Holtz has a vested interest in the game. As an Ohio State assistant under Woody Hayes, he has had plenty of experience with the Buckeye tradition. But it's hard to instill this into his players.

"One of the things I truly regret is I don't think I am going to be able to be on the sideline," he said. "That's really where I would like to be. I need the seniors to help stress the importance of this game to the younger players."

It's true that this is a big game, the biggest for Ohio State. T-shirts and bumper stickers have been on the market since last year. They've been talking about it for a decade, when they first discovered Notre Dame was on the schedule.

Perhaps it is the biggest game of the year for Notre Dame, but you really wouldn't be able to tell by listening to the players.

"We get everybody's biggest game," receiver Derrick Mayes said. "A lot of teams base their whole season on their game with us."

"It's going to be a drag-em-out, punch-it-in type of football game," quarterback Ron Powlus said. "But we have a lot more games to win. Ohio State is just our opponent this week."

"It is not just another game around here, regardless of what people might tell you," Buckeyes head coach John Cooper said. "Some Notre Dame players were quoted as saying it's just another game for them. I hope it's not another game for our players. It's not another game for me, I can tell you that right now."

About the only Irish players who place a lot of importance on this game are those from the Buckeye state, which total only four.

"I'm looking forward to this game personally," fullback and 1992 Ohio High School Player of the Year Marc Edwards said. "I have a lot of friends that go to Ohio State. They've been talking to me a lot, ever since we found out about this game."

Part of the deep-seated animosity for the Irish comes from recruiting wars and the prestige of the Big Ten. Teams that are tops in the conference may not necessarily be tops in the Midwest. There's always Notre Dame.

Irish quarterback Andy Pilney could not see the final touchdown because he was being carted off with a 'burn' knee, as he put it.

"If I was Big Ten people, I'd tell Notre Dame, 'Hey, if you want to play us, come in the conference,'" Cooper said. "Why play them? They're on NBC, they recruit from coast to coast, they get their pick of top players, and at our expense."

But besides jealousy, there's the tradition. Over 200 years of football between the two programs. The Four Horsemen vs.

Archie Griffith. Rockne vs. Hayes. Catholics vs. Farmhands. It's all here, just waiting to be fulfilled.

"1935's game was one helluva ball game," Pilney said. "I betcha this one's gonna be quite a donnybrook."

If it's anything like "The Game of the Century," fans won't have to worry about it.

"We're all really pumped for this game," Buckeye linebacker Greg Bellisari said. "This is the type of game we'll remember for the rest of our lives."

Or for at least 60 years.

Get the party started

Alumni clubs in Ohio go crazy in preparation for Notre Dame's Saturday showdown with Ohio State By MEGAN McGRATH

It's a party that's been years in the making. Five years ago, Notre Dame announced that it would play a home-and-home series with Ohio State for the first time in sixty years. As the date got closer, the members of the Ohio Notre Dame Alumni Clubs began planning for Saturday's clash in Columbus.

"We starting meeting about about game activities about two years ago," says Aggie Mannix, president of the Columbus Alumni Club. "But in the past year it's gotten really crazy around here, especially since football season."

For Mannix and other Alumni Club members in Ohio, Saturday's game looms as an opportunity for the state to host the Irish.

"In the past, Notre Dame has played regional teams like Michigan and Penn State on a regular basis," says William Koval, class of 1980, of the Cleveland Alumni Club.

"It's exciting for a place like Ohio, a state that's so into football, to host a big game like this." Mannix agrees, saying, "I think we're so excited because of the chance to have Notre Dame come here." says the '83 grad of Saint Mary's and '86 grad of ND's law school. "It might be the only time this will happen in my, or my children's, lives."

The Columbus Alumni Club has been the epi-center of Notre Dame activities for the weekend. The club's headquarters will be at the Hyatt Regency, and the festivities being this morning.

"Friday morning we're hosting an education forum with Allen Page that we're very excited about," Mannix said.

Page, a former Notre Dame All-American, NFL All-Star and current associate justice of the Minnesota state supreme court, will talk to a group of local students, educators and community leaders.

"It's an effort on our part to engage in community outreach and continuing education," Mannix said.

Columbus
Headquarters at Hyatt Regency will be buzzing all weekend. List of speakers includes Alan Page, Regis Philbin, and Michael Wadsworth. Club will sponsor Pep Rally and Celtic Music Festival Friday at Convention Center.

Cincinnati
Has sponsored bus trip to the game.

Jointly hosted Pep Rally Wednesday with local OSU Club. ND All-American Tim Foley and his brother Dave, a former Buckeye and Buffalo Bill wide receiver, were masters of ceremonies.

"Page is a great person to have because not only was he a great football player, but he's done a lot more with his life."

Page will join Notre Dame's Rev. William Beauchamp, athletic director Michael Wadsworth and master of ceremonies Regis Philbin for a Kick-off Luncheon at noon, also at the Hyatt.

Allen will receive his Collegiate Hall of Fame ring at the luncheon.

The Columbus club's festivities continue with an evening pep rally and Celtic Music Festival at the Columbus Convention Center. The rally will feature performances by the Notre Dame band, cheerleaders and glee club, and will also showcase local Celtic music performers and the Aloia family singers.

Hosting the rally will be former All-American John Krimm and Kevin Griffith, both Columbus Alumni Club members.

Former players such as D'Juan Francisco, Bob Golick and Jim Tinsely will be present.

The rally begins at six p.m. and is six dollars at the door, but only two for Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students with their IDs.

according to Richard Kerry, '80. Wednesday night the club hosted a pep-rally in conjunction with the local OSU alumni club.

Former All-American Tim Foley of Notre Dame and his brother, Dave, an OSU grad and former Buffalo Bill, were speakers.

"We've been talking about this all year," Judge Kerry said.

"We wanted to do something local Wednesday before everyone turned their attention to Columbus this weekend."

Alumni clubs across Ohio were allotted a number of tickets, which many chose to raffle off in fundraisers for the clubs. The clubs saw their membership skyrocket at the prospect of winning tickets.

In Canton, membership nearly doubled, according to Mark Fisher. Fisher, an '83 grad who a two-year starter at center for the Irish, said, "Before we were allocated 20 tickets for the game, we had a membership in the upper 90s, but we jumped to about 200 before the first raffle."

In Columbus, pre-lottery membership was close to 280 people. Mannix now claims a membership of 540 in her club.

Cincinnati Alumni Club contact Mike Geurin estimates his club's membership is up 20 percent, including some OSU grads who bought associate memberships in order to buy tickets.

"It's not surprising the lengths people will go to get tickets," Geurin said. The alumni club contacts said tickets in their areas were selling for anywhere from 250 to 2000 dollars.

"People are just going crazy around here," Mannix said. "People have been talking about this for a long time, and this is a really big deal for the OSU people and for Notre Dame alumni in Ohio."

The Observer/Kevin Klau

It's only fitting that the nation's oldest marching band, the band of the Fighting Irish, will be on hand to celebrate an old football rivalry. Promoting school spirit is one of the main functions of alumni clubs.

JOCK STRIP

A present day formula for success

History has been the preeminent focus for this week-end's matchup.

Scrapbooks dating back to the Depression Era have been dusted off, as alumni of the two schools remember when football results mirrored baseball boxscores.

OSU faithful also point to a day ten years ago when their football lives were irreversibly altered: Notre Dame was back on the schedule.

It is recent history that should be more disturbing to Notre Dame. Three years ago, despite a mediocre season, last second heroics against Penn State rekindled the Irish spirit. No one needs to be reminded of the Florida State drama-turned-triumph.

That was a mere two years ago. But the absence of a big win since makes the time grow exponentially. Saturday is a chance for redemption.

The perfect scenario:

First Quarter - Irish jitters show in the hostile environment. Hoisting marches the Buckeyes on a time consuming drive that ends in an Eddie George touchdown plunge. Irish fans in the parking lot start to ask why they are there.

Tim Seymour
Associate Sports Editor

Second Quarter - After being stopped on another drive, Notre Dame reaches deep into its bag of tricks. On fourth down, punter/quarterback Hunter Smith throws his first pass for the Irish out of a punt formation. The ensuing momentum carries Notre Dame to its first score, a bulldozing effort by Marc Edwards from five yards out.

Third Quarter - Things start to get bizarre. During half-time the two bands engage in an instrument-clearing brawl. Then Irish offensive coordinator Dave Roberts misunderstands Lou Holtz's call for more 'popcorn' in the pressbox and installs a play from the shotgun formation. With OSU coach John Cooper going into convulsions on the sidelines, Powlusz connects with Sollmann for a score.

Fourth Quarter - Cooper, his own nemesis, goes with a newly installed option attack. Bert Berry picks off a pitch and races 62-yards, only to run out of bounds at the one because he can't see so well through his Darth Vader visor. Edwards scores again. Game, set, match Notre Dame.

GAMES OF INTEREST

#20 ALABAMA at GEORGIA
 A battle between fallen warriors, struggling to recover from early season losses. It is an SEC matchup that still has national ramifications, however.

WISCONSIN at #6 PENN STATE
 A Big Ten matchup that teams across the Midwest will be watching. The Nittany Lions had trouble with Texas Tech and Rutgers in the first half, but Wisconsin has had trouble in general.

#4 COLORADO at #10 OKLAHOMA
 The biggest game of the week, which once again features the Buffaloes. It's the toughest game away from home for Colorado, who will have to stop the option in the Sooners' house.

BYU at COLORADO STATE
 A wacky WAC matchup that could have a total score well into the 100's. The Rams play well at home, and they have cool uniforms. But the Cougars will pass until they're as blue as their jerseys.
