Financial aid, campus diversity and Notre Dame's academic reputation can all be improved with the aid of increased fundraising, Father Edward Malloy explained during his annual address to the Faculty Senate last night.

Malloy outlines goals for senate

By DEREK BETCHER

Notre Dame will continue to increase financial aid offerings, student body diversity, campus construction and its academic rankings pursuant to expanding its funding, University president Father Edward Malloy said during his annual address to the Faculty Senate last night.

Greater financial resources — especially in the form of permanent endowment-based funds — will help alleviate nearly every issue touched upon at last night's meeting, according to Malloy.

"Financial aid continues to be one of the great challenges which faces this University," Malloy told the senate.

Student aid has increased the past six years, he said, but continuing and even accelerating that trend will rely on expanding the University's already growing endowment.

"As a private institution [our endowment] is probably the most critical area we need to control," Malloy said. "We're building the endowment as one way to control our destiny."

The demand for flat tuition rates of increase constrains annual funding, Malloy explained to assembled faculty. The University, he noted, has set a five percent mark as its average rate of tuition increase.

"The national inflation rate is clearly different than the academic one," Malloy noted.

Rising utility and maintenance costs, "significantly higher" health care costs and this spring's staff reclassification all contribute to Notre Dame's growing operating budget, Malloy reported. The need to offset these rising costs reinforces the role of the Generations fundraising campaign, another University endeavor upon which Malloy briefed the senate.

"We're a little ahead of schedule," he said; Notre Dame is 70 percent of the way to meeting its goal of raising $767 million by Dec. 31, 2000.

To illustrate the growing importance of gift and endowment funding, Malloy cited figures from the University's standing plans to add 150 faculty by the year 2000. Salaries for nearly all of the 35 faculty who have been added thus far are drawn from the University's annual operating budget — a trend which Malloy says needs to stop because every year over 50 percent of the University's budget is locked into salary and benefits costs.

"Our flexibility, presently, is driven largely by our success in fundraising campaigns," Malloy noted.

Funding success in any field will help raise the University's ranking in publications such as U.S. News and World Report. Despite the arbitrary nature of such listings, moving Notre Dame closer to the top of ranking experts' lists is

Committees report, but no new proposals

By TIM LOGAN
News Writer

Discussion at yesterday's Student Senate meeting focused on reports by the various senate committees updating their progress during the past week.

The Residence Life Committee reported that they were still working on the repairs of the Lyons Hall basketball courts. Another issue which Residence Life has been discussing is the introduction of a shuttle service from South Quad dorms to the D2, D6, and off-campus parking lots. These issues have been discussed for several weeks.

The Gender Relations Committee reported on its meeting from earlier in the week. One topic it discussed, which has also been covered by the Residence Life Committee, was the provision of laundry service for men who live in dorms which do not have facilities of their own. One proposal brought up by the committee was that one night each week be set aside in women's laundry rooms for students from the affected men's dorms to wash their clothes. However, this would only present a temporary solution.

Another issue brought up by the Gender Relations committee was security at the University. Specifically mentioned were the lack of lighting and security call-phones in University parking lots and around the lakes and the twenty-four hour Detox at women's residence halls. Student Body president Matt Griffin also reported on the Student Government's upcoming report to the Board of Trustees. The report will propose the creation of a transportation pool for the University. Currently, the Center for Social Concerns provides transportation for student groups. The report will be presented to the Board of Trustees, who are on campus for this weekend's USC game.

Attendance at the senate meeting was too low to reach a quorum. Twenty of the 28 senators attended the meeting, which was rendered informational due to the poor attendance. Without 21 voting members present, no formal decisions can be made.

The poor attendance was attributed to last-minute change in meeting time. The meeting was moved because its time conflicted with the student government's review of its upcoming report to the Board of Trustees.

'We hope to have votes on a few proposals at the next meeting.'

Sociologist Jack Levin spoke about the nature of sociopathic killers in last night's lecture.

Levin reveals killer traits

By PATRICK McGOVERN
News Writer

How do you tell the difference between a sociopathic killer and an innocent man?

"The answer is simple," according to Jack Levin. "The sociopathic killer will give you a better story. He'll look more innocent than the innocent guy."

Last night Levin gave a lecture titled "Overkill: Serial Murder Exposed." He spoke on the misconception the public has about serial murderers and the glorification of murder in popular culture.

"Many people actually escape into murder," said Levin. "Muggings and carjackings are all too real. Therefore, they are not very entertaining. After all, they could happen to anyone. But murder can be so extraordinary, so hideous and so grotesque that it might as well be fiction."

Levin then noted how this fascination can be problematic.

"This distinction between a character in a movie or a book versus a real life killer is sometimes lost on people who are fascinated by mass murder," he said.

Levin illustrated how serial murderers attain celebrity status and become glamorized by displaying trading cards for murderers such as David Berkowitz and paintings by John Wayne Gacy.

"They would not be worth 50 cents if he hadn't murdered 33 people," he said.

"I deplore the celebrity status bestowed on serial killers. It adds tremendous insult to injury to the victims' families and gives the killers exactly what they want."

"Take a random sample asking someone to name five serial murderers. Then ask them to name five vice presidents. There would be a lot of trouble with the vice presidents," said Levin.

Levin also spoke on the popular misconception about serial murderers versus the real life characteristics. Serial killers, he explained, are not the crazed, glassy eyed lunatics that the public expects.

I: "Ah, sir, I see by your clothes that you must be a business major."

Dave Freddoso
Assistant News Editor

BUS: "What do you mean? I'm only wearing shorts and a T-shirt."

I: "Never mind."

BUS: "No, really, how could you tell? What's your major, anyway?"

I: "Classical Greek."

BUS: "Classical Greek?! Ha! I've never heard of that major."

I: "(Sigh) My friend (the other Greek major) and I put up with a lot of flack from friends about our major, although I don't know why."

BUS: "But how on earth did you decide to major in Greek?"

I: "Several reasons, I guess. Most importantly, I like it."

BUS: "You're studying something because you LIKE it?"

I: "Yes. Also, I was lucky enough not to get a certain unethical Freshman Year advisor who steers young students away from Greek and Latin. But I don't have any hard evidence to verify that, so I just won't mention it at all. But mainly because I like it."

BUS: "But Classical Greek? That has no job market. That's totally impractical!"

I: "Nonsense. Greek is much more practical than your major."

BUS: "What?! What could you do with a degree in Greek? Flip burgers?"

I: "First, tell me what you can do with your major."

BUS: "Why, all sorts of things. I can go into the whole 'REAL WORLD' of business!"

I: "Do you think THIS world is fake or something?"

BUS: "Well, no, but ... you know what I mean."

I: "Well, as for me, with a major in Greek, I could flip burgers, if I wanted. Or I could go to law school, or go into journalism, or politics, or education, or I could go to graduate school, I guess. I'd be very qualified to do any of those interesting things if I work hard now."

BUS: "Well, uh, but I'm the only one who can go into business. I'll have a much better paying and more secure job than you will. That's why I started in business in the first place."

I: "Oh, I forgot. After I finish in Classical Greek, I could also get an MBA, or start a small business when I get out of school, or go into something like sales, or management, or database work, or I could even get hired by one of those consulting firms. As it turns out, many of the ones who are coming to campus this year have bought books full of senior Arts and Letters resumes."

BUS: "What? Are you trying to say that your major is more practical than mine just because you will be qualified to go into all those different fields, while I can go into just one or two of them?"

I: "Yes ..."

BUS: "And I suppose that next, you are going to tell me that Greek is more fun than spreadsheets?"

I: "Yes ..."

BUS: "And then you will say that I should change my major to something more interesting than business, like Greek, or maybe philosophy or even history, because I could get a fine job anyway with any of those majors?"

I: "Yes ..."

BUS: "Oh, I see ..."

I: "Well?"

BUS: "Hmm ...uh ... well ... maybe ... oh, no, what am I thinking! I can't do that! Don't you see? I need business to fall back on! No Arts and Letters majors ever get good jobs. They all just starve to death on the streets after they graduate!"

I: "(Sigh.) Never mind. Nice meeting you."

Quake kills seven, causes building damage in central Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile
A powerful earthquake rocked much of Chile on Tuesday night, crushing some homes, sparking several landslides and killing seven people, authorities reported.

The 10:02 p.m. tremor measured 6.8 and was centered near Illapel, more than 300 miles north of Santiago, according to the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo. But it was felt along a 750-mile north-south stretch of Chile, including this capital city of 5 million people, and even across the Andes mountains in Argentina.

Interior Minister Carlos Figueroa said seven people were killed, including an entire family of five, in the cities of Ovalle, Coquimbo and Pueblo Nuevo, which are near Illapel. They were crushed by collapsed walls.

The most heavily damaged area was around the epicenter, where a number of old adobe houses caved in, especially in the cities of Vicuna and Illapel.

Some roads were blocked by slides and an emergency bridge built to replace one that had been swept away in last July's storms collapsed, interrupting traffic on the Pan American highway.

Telephone and electric power were temporarily interrupted in some of the affected areas.

Renan Fuentalba, regional governor of the epicenter region, told the state television that "after the scare, the situation is under control."

In some parts of Argentina, people rushed from their homes, fearing the structures would buckle, but no serious damage was reported.

Kaczynski may claim schizophrenia

SACRAMENTO

Court documents show that attorneys for Theodore Kaczynski may claim the Unabomber suspect suffers from paranoid schizophrenia, which makes some people think that others are "out to get them." U.S. District Judge Garland Burrell Jr. gave the defense until last Friday to hand over to the government information about any mental disease or defect Kaczynski, 55, might claim to have. Prosecution spokeswoman Leesa Brown confirmed Tuesday that the defense had provided details on Kaczynski's possible mental claims, but declined to elaborate. However, prosecution court filings make several references to paranoid schizophrenia, which is associated with delusional feelings of being persecuted or plotted against. According to the definition of the disease in a manual of psychiatric disorders, "the combination of persecutory and grandiose delusions with anger may predispose the individual to violence." Nearly 3 million Americans, or 1 percent of the population, develop schizophrenia during the course of their lives, according to the National Institutes of Mental Health. Some reports — if true — seem to tally with hallmarks of the disease, including a report that Kaczynski kept a list of enemies.

AIDS researchers resign from board

NEW YORK

Two prominent AIDS researchers resigned from the New England Journal of Medicine's editorial board to protest an opinion piece that attacked federally funded AIDS studies in developing countries. Dr. David Ho and Dr. Catherine Wilfert, the journal's chief advisers on AIDS, quit the board because they say the journal did not consult them before publishing an editorial that compared the AIDS studies to the notorious Tuskegee experiment, in which poor black men with syphilis were left untreated. "The reason you have an editorial board to help with policy is to get some input when you have major issues like this one, and that clearly did not take place," Ho told the newspaper. The studies criticized by the Journal are designed to find an inexpensive drug regimen to prevent women with the AIDS virus from passing it to their infants. The studies involve 12,000 infected pregnant women in several African nations, as well as Thailand and the Dominican Republic. Some of the women receive AZT, a drug that has had some success preventing transmission of the virus to infants in the United States, while others receive a placebo.

Driving instructor orders car chase

DURHAM

David Cline, a driver's education instructor for Durham Public Schools, was suspended for allegedly ordering a student to pursue a car that had cut them off and then belting the car's driver. Cline also was charged with simple assault after the Sept. 19 incident in nearby Chapel Hill. The Herald Sun of Durham quoted unidentified officials as saying that Cline, 36, was teaching two female students how to drive when another car cut them off. Angered, Cline instructed the student driver to chase down the car. Macklin then took off and the instructor had the student give chase again. Police spokeswoman Jane Cousins said a police officer pulled the driver's education vehicle over for allegedly speeding. She didn't know how fast they were going. She said while the officer was talking to Cline, the other driver, Jon Macklin, pulled up and told the officer Cline had assaulted him. She said Macklin swore out an assault warrant against Cline, who was arrested and released on $400 bond. The girl was not ticketed. Shirley Arrington of the Durham Public Schools personnel department said a decision was expected later today on whether Cline should return to his job or be recommended for dismissal. Several of the Cline's supporters said Tuesday that the outburst was out of character. Cline could not immediately be reached for comment; there was no answer at a phone listed to a David Cline this morning.

Link to missing art discovered

BOSTON

Paint chips purportedly from a Rembrandt masterpiece stolen in one of history's biggest art heists were turned over to the FBI Wednesday by a newspaper that said they had been authenticated by an expert. If genuine, the chips support the claims of a jailed art thief and his accomplice who say they have access to the $300 million in art works stolen from the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum in Boston seven years ago. Convicted art thief Myles Connor Jr. and William Youngworth III say they know where the paintings are being kept and will arrange for their return in exchange for immunity from prosecution, Connor's early release from prison and the $5 million reward offered by the Gardner Museum. The Boston Herald said the chips were made available to its reporter as evidence the offer to return the stolen art works was legitimate. The newspaper refused to say who gave it the chips. An expert hired by the newspaper, Walter C. McCrone of Chicago, said the chips were almost certainly from a Rembrandt. Two Rembrandts, "Storm on the Sea of Galilee" and "A Lady and Gentleman in Black," were among the stolen paintings.

Kaneb Center offers workshops

By MARY ZAKAS
News Writer

While Notre Dame students are enjoying their fall break next week, 36 professors and teaching assistants will be attending workshops in order to gain useful classroom skills.

The workshops will be sponsored by Notre Dame's John A. Kaneb Center for Teaching and Learning. Barbara Walvoord, who is heading the workshops, commented that next week's programs will "give the faculty and T.A.s a chance to talk with one another about what they do in the classroom," and illustrate "Notre Dame's emphasis on the quality of teaching and student learning."

The first workshop, called "Making Large Classes Interactive Without Labs or Recitation Sections," will take place on Tuesday, Oct. 21. It will consider the value of various researched methods for teaching large classes. A student panel will also provide its opinion on this issue.

A second workshop concerning Teacher Course Evaluation

(TCE) forms will be held on Thursday, Oct. 23. These forms are filled out by students every semester, evaluating faculty teaching performance and style, course material, and students' overall opinions of their classes. Among the topics to be discussed in the TCE workshops is the validity of these evaluations in terms of faculty promotion, faculty use of TCEs, and ways to improve the form itself. Self-evaluation and improvement using TCEs is also a topic that will be covered by the second workshop.

Saint Mary's targets eating disorders

By MICHELLE PRIMEAU
News Writer

Half way through the semester, the realities of college life are finally sinking in: mid-terms, all-nighters, and general stress. Some may not have the mechanisms to cope with these new experiences, and this may trigger eating disorders such as anorexia nervosa and bulimia.

Up to 39 percent of college students exhibit bulimic behaviors, and recent concerns in residence halls at Saint Mary's have brought this issue to light.

"Eating disorders have become a regular women's health topic like breast examinations. Since we have such a condensed population, it is something that will come up more often than usual," said Judy Kenney, director of SMC Health Services. "It's hard for women to see it in themselves. They think temporarily about weight loss and don't worry about what it does to the whole self."

The most common occurrence of eating disorders on college campuses occurs preceding breaks and holidays when students feel pressure to present ideal body images. It is important to identify dysfunctional eating from eating disorders. Both situations need to be addressed, but eating disorders may need more immediate attention.

Anorexia often begins with dieting and results in self-starvation with a possible loss of over 25 percent of body fat. Those sufferers who are unable to control their hunger often begin the habit of self-induced vomiting. This may lead into the cycle of bingeing and purging that is symptomatic of bulimia.

Not all bulimics have histories of anorexia. It is commonly developed in the effort to lose a few pounds after binge eating through self-induced vomiting, laxative abuse, diuretic abuse, excessive exercise, fasts, or combinations of these. Bulimia can be purging or non-purging, with the non-purging simply having food binges. Behavior is classified as bulimic when such activities occur twice a week for three months.

"I really think that the media's imposition of body image is the strongest cause of eating disorders," Kris Pendley, counselor at SMC's Counseling and Career Development Center stated.

Students who suspect that friends or roommates may be suffering from an eating disorder should gather as much specific information on the person's eating habits, find out about resources in the community, and approach the person in a non-judgmental fashion. At SMC, both health services and counseling and career development can refer students to programs in South Bend.

THANK YOU ! ! !

To the 217 Notre Dame and St. Mary's students who gave their summer to service-learning in communities across the United States, Hong Kong, Canada and the Dominican Republic. Your dedication to compassion and social justice was evident in the relationships you formed with members of your daycamps, schools, AIDS programs, shelters, children's homes, outreach centers, clinics, women's care programs and hospitals.

Even before Petey Schiltz was born in August 1995, Lisa and Pat knew that he had Down's syndrome and that their family would need expert support and guidance. They found both through Logan Center, a St. Joseph County United Way agency.

"It's especially important in the first three years to provide early intervention to help kids like Petey keep up as much as possible," Lisa says. "The state of Indiana has very good early-intervention services, but the services are of little value if local agencies aren't available to implement them. At Logan, we have found an unbelievable collection of caring and competent professionals who have provided Petey with the help he needs, and provided us as parents with the support we need to help him."

At Logan, Petey works once weekly with a speech therapist and, with both sign language and some words, he now communicates at an age-appropriate level. He also works twice each month with occupational and physical therapists to develop self-help and mobility skills.

In addition, Petey's 4-year-old sister Anna is involved in another Logan program, Supersibs, in which student volunteers from Notre Dame provide some extra special attention to the siblings of children with disabilities.

Thanks to the various therapeutic programs, Petey is now a fully included member of the 2-year-olds class at the Early Childhood Development Center, the on-campus child-care facility for the children of Notre Dame faculty, students, staff and alumni.

"He's just one of the gang at ECDC," Lisa says. "I see that as the first step in a life in which he's a productive member of our society."

■ BOARD OF GOVERNANCE

Discussion focuses on class rings

By ERIKA WITTORF
News Writer

Yesterday morning, the Saint Mary's Board of Governance meeting centered around the issue of class rings. There are currently two companies which serve Saint Mary's: Balfour and Jostens. There have been some problems with having two companies.

Competition between the two is the biggest problem. On "Ring Days," the two companies present their products at tables that are placed in close proximity to one another. This situation makes people uncomfortable because they feel pressure from both companies to make a split-second decision.

Sandy Vanderwerven, the bookstore manager, addressed the issue at the BOG meeting. She said that she had received many complaints over the years from students about the system. In addition to Vanderwerven's comments, others on the board said that they felt uncomfortable with the situation as well and would like to resolve it.

Several solutions were suggested. One of the suggestions was to choose only one company to represent Saint Mary's. Another suggestion was to change the set-up of the "Ring Day" so that the students would feel less pressured when it came time to choose a ring. A decision on the issue was not reached because board members felt that they should think about the issue for a week and get student feedback.

another goal Malloy shared with the Faculty Senate.

"They are much more significant than we originally thought," he said, noting that rankings play an important role in luring top-quality students to campuses.

To find ways to improve Notre Dame's standing, Faculty Senate subcommittees are currently investigating the criteria U.S. News uses to rank schools. Complementing that initiative, Malloy devoted a significant portion of his address last night to discussing Notre Dame's comparative strengths and weaknesses.

Underscoring Malloy's emphasis on the importance of increasing funding, financial resources were listed as one of the two categories which have consistently dragged down Notre Dame's overall ranking. Academic reputation, as evaluated by heads of peer institutions, represented the University's other key shortcoming.

Academic reputation is driven by the quality of graduate and professional studies, according to Malloy — areas which suffer in the face of Notre Dame's emphasis on undergraduate education.

Despite his efforts as a self-proclaimed cheerleader to educate other universities' officials about Notre Dame's excellence, Malloy noted that other highly-ranked institutions simply have more resources for graduate students and larger number of highly-decorated faculty — key components for ranking academic reputation.

"Let's face it, we have had no Nobel Prize winners," Malloy admitted. "We've had a very limited number elected to the American Academy of Arts and Sciences."

Undergraduates, however, have helped the University gain in standing by earning more Marshall, Rhodes, and Fulbright scholarships over the past few years, Malloy noted. He cited necessary improvements in academic advising as another way Notre Dame can continue to advance its academic reputation without de-emphasizing undergraduate education.

Diversifying the faculty and student body is another area administrators have targeted for improvement. While affirmative action will continue to figure in University policy, greater funds for endowed chairs and student scholarships could be put to ample use in this arena, Malloy explained. The president linked the University's slow progress in luring African American students to campus to its limited ability to offer disadvantaged students scholarships.

The faculty, he noted, has proven equally difficult to diversify.

"We've made glacial progress in the faculty ranks," Malloy admitted. "Maybe the goodwill is not lacking, but the results are."

Malloy reiterated that he is "firmly committed" to using affirmative action to offer opportunities to racial minorities, women, Catholics and other historically under-represented groups.

Campus-wide construction, on the other hand, offers a visible sign of recent successes. Malloy updated the senate on some of the most significant construction projects.

Funding for a long-awaited performing arts center to crown DeBartolo Quad is now "assured," the senate learned. Five benefactors have formally agreed to fund the project, according to Malloy.

"Of all the projects I thought would have a transforming effect on the University, this was the one," the president said.

Ground-breaking for the center remains on the horizon; currently, ten architectural firms are competing to develop the plans for the project.

Construction on a new bookstore/visitors center south of the Morris Inn proceeds without delay and another "mega-project" is still in planning — a new science teaching facility.

Increasing pay and benefits for adjunct professors, reducing the numbers of adjuncts teaching at Notre Dame, and expanding health care coverage to include University graduate students were among the other issues Malloy touched upon during his hour-and-a-half at the podium.

Prior to Malloy's address, Faculty Senate committee spokespersons updated the senate on their groups' goals for the year. Assistant Dean of the College of Arts and Letters Ava Preacher reported that the Student Affairs Committee will target three issues; the absence of a student bill of rights, a review of the University's alcohol policy and the gap between academic life and residence life.

that serial killers ... like Ted Bundy and John Wayne Gacy ... are extraordinarily ordinary. That is why they are so very dangerous. They do not look like the killers they are," said Levin.

"It's very difficult to distinguish between a monster and a good guy. The problem is serial killers just don't look like the strangers our mothers warned us about. They have families, they tend to have jobs, they attend religious services and they attend college," said Levin. "And then they kill part time."

Levin used this summer's search for killer Andrew Cunanan to illustrate this idea.

"People saw him everywhere, he was everywhere at the same time," said Levin. "He didn't have to conceal his identity. He didn't have to wear a disguise because he looked like 20 million other people and at the same time he looked like nobody in particular."

Levin warned that people should not assume that everyone around them could be a serial killer. Jeffrey Dahmer's neighbors, he noted, could smell the stench of dead bodies coming from the killer's apartment but believed that it was just a broken refrigerator. Levin says that it was natural to believe such a claim.

"I would hate to think that we would come to a point in this country when we suspect that an odor in the hallway is decomposing bodies," he said.

Levin closed by attempting to put his remarks in perspective.

"It may be frightening to think that serial killers look and act so normal," he said. "I want to ease your fears a little bit and say that serial murder is a very rare phenomenon."

Levin is a professor of sociology and criminology at Northeastern University in Boston. He has co-authored 18 books and has appeared on television shows such as "Good Morning America," "The Today Show" and "The Oprah Winfrey Show."

Five die in bombing, shooting by rebels

By NIRESH ELIATAMBY
Associated Press Writer

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — Four people were killed in a series of bomb blasts in downtown Colombo early Wednesday, and security forces shot a suspected Tamil rebel to death in a gunfight near the presidential office.

About 80 people, including 62 tourists, were wounded in the explosions, which could be heard as far as 15 miles away, hospital sources said. The nationalities of the tourists were not immediately known.

The sound of automatic gunfire echoed for 20 minutes through the business district as rebels battled with police and soldiers.

Two explosions ripped through the parking lot of the Galadari luxury hotel just before the 7 a.m. gunbattle began. At least one of the bombs was concealed in a car.

A third explosion was heard some two hours later, followed by more gunfire near Lake House, headquarters of the government-run newspaper publishing house.

The ball room of the Galadari Hotel was destroyed and parts of the newly built twin towers of the World Trade Center were damaged, witnesses said.

Army helicopters hovered over the district looking for suspected assailants. Gunfire could be heard from Lake House, and hundreds of soldiers surrounded the building where rebels were believed to be holed up.

"I saw one of the rebels running toward me and I opened fire and shot him dead," said Rohan Wijenaike, an army corporal who was at a military checkpoint near the hotel.

Bomb squads were trying to detonate a gray jacket on the corpse that was apparently packed with explosives.

There was no immediate comment from the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, which has been fighting the government for Tamil independence since 1983.

It was the first major terrorist attack this year in the Sri Lankan capital, where security has been stepped up as the war in the north with the Tamil rebels intensified.

President Chandrika Kumaratunga was at her home about a mile away. She rarely uses the presidential office, an old Dutch building that once served as the parliament building, opposite the seafront.

The explosions and gun battle were barely 200 yards from the site of the 1996 bombing of the Central Bank that killed 88 people and injured 1,400. A suicide-bomber rammed an explosive-laden truck into the Central Bank building.

Police cordoned off a square mile that included a major railway station and some of the city's largest hotels and business houses. Main roads leading out of the city were blocked.

The bombings came less than one week after the U.S. State Department added the Tamil Tigers to its list of recognized terrorist organizations, outlawing its activities and fund-raising in the United States.

The Tigers, calling the U.S. action unfair, said it would only escalate the war for Tamil independence.

A unit of the U.S. Green Berets, in Sri Lanka to train Sri Lankan soldiers in non-lethal operations like rescue missions, normally stay at the Galadari. It was now known whether they were at the hotel Wednesday.

The incident came during a holiday, the Buddhist Full Moon Day.

Academic council plans events

By KARA KEZIOS
News Writer

The Saint Mary's Student Academic Council met Tuesday to prepare for three upcoming events which it is responsible for planning. The events include:

- Choosing A Major Night will take place on Tuesday, Oct. 28, at 7 p.m. in Haggar Parlor. The program will begin with a brief hands-on presentation regarding the decision-making process of choosing a major. Following the presentation, Lori McKeough, vice president of the student body, will share some personal insights on the subject. Students are invited to speak one-on-one with student representatives from each academic department for the remainder and majority of the time.

- A forum on sexuality is scheduled for Monday, Nov. 3, at 7 p.m. in Haggar Parlor, in an effort to promote dialog, awareness and communication regarding issues of sexuality. All opinions that are expressed in a respectful manner are welcomed and encouraged at this event.

- A Book Drive will be held the entire month of November to help educate students studying in Africa, where Saint Mary's alumni have opened a school. Students should gather old books from home during fall break to contribute to the school.

Salmonella may slow cancer growth

By BRIGITTE GREENBERG
Associated Press Writer

NEW HAVEN, Conn.

Scientists believe they have discovered a novel use for deadly salmonella bacteria — as a possible treatment for cancer.

Yale University School of Medicine scientists reported in today's issue of the journal Cancer Research that genetically engineered strains of salmonella were found to target and slow the growth of tumors in laboratory mice.

The method was applied successfully with human melanoma, breast, colon, prostate, lung, and renal tumors that were injected in live mice.

Salmonella carrying anti-tumor genes were shown to somewhat prolong the life of the mice but did not necessarily eradicate the tumors, the scientists said.

"After the salmonella are introduced into the mouse blood stream, they seek out tumors, multiply there in great numbers, and — by mechanisms not fully understood — dramatically slow the rate of tumor growth and prolong life," said John M. Pawelek, a Yale cancer biologist.

In no case did the researchers cure cancer, although some tumors were destroyed.

Salmonella bacteria, in their unaltered form, can cause food poisoning and septic shock. The mutated salmonella do not kill the animal because the bacteria can only survive inside the tumor, where they are fed with necessary sugars and amino acids, Pawelek said.

"We have genetically engineered the salmonella so that they do not set off the immune system alarm. These things are now like stealth bombers," he said.

"We've made Salmonella both safe and effective for laboratory animals, and now the challenge is to do the same for humans."

Donella Wilson, scientific program director in the research department of the American Cancer Society in Atlanta, said the findings are promising because until now, scientists have been unable to find a way to target tumors alone.

"They have a few more questions to answer experimentally ... but the idea is very good."

Savio Woo, director of the Institute for Gene Therapy and Molecular Medicine at Mount Sinai Medical Center in New York, said the new strategy is attractive and deserves further study, but he had some reservations.

Board suggests booze ban

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press Writer

NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
The Massachusetts Board of Higher Education voted to urge near-total bans of alcohol on state campuses, saying that current policies aren't working.

Board members said they were troubled by the deaths last month of a student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology who collapsed after a fraternity party and another at the University of Massachusetts who fell through a greenhouse roof at the Amherst campus during Homecoming Weekend.

The board adopted the measure by a 9-0 vote during a meeting Tuesday on the campus of the Massachusetts College of Liberal Arts.

"On campus, we have kind of a winking, blinking, nodding acceptance of the practice that you drink when you're under age," board member Aaron Spencer said.

The board, which sets policy for the 29 campuses of the state university, state colleges and community colleges, asked the trustees of each campus to adopt the ban on drinking at any age. But the policy also says the trustees may allow exceptions in designated places or for certain events.

The measure says violators should be subject to dismissal, but also says the campuses should provide strong alcohol education programs for students.

Board member Howard Jacobson said he was sorry it would be impractical to pass a total ban.

"I'd like to see no alcohol at all," he said. "I think that's impossible for us to do."

However, it was unclear how much impact even the more limited policy would have.

Thomas Aceto, president of the College of Liberal Arts, said he didn't believe his campus of 1,600 students needs any major change in its alcohol policies. The school prohibits drinking in the freshman dormitory and does not have any on-campus bars.

"The reality is that we're forcing students off campus," he said.

Amherst campus was already reviewing its alcohol policies after the death there. Last week, the school banned alcohol at sports tailgating parties.

■ LET ME CLEAR MY THROAT ...

U.S. Taking Right Stance in Refusal to Sign Treaty

The Nobel Committee this week awarded its 1997 peace prize to an anti-land mine activist from Vermont named Jody Williams. The award was yet another notable event which has put the issue of land mines and their place in modern warfare in the international spotlight of late. In recent months a number of nations from around the world negotiated a treaty which, when ratified by a majority in poorer areas of the globe where the forces fighting the battles did not have astronomical military budgets. But as bad as they are in wartime, land mines are worse when the fighting is over and neither side can remember where they left theirs. Then when the civilians, who are generally poor, of these third world countries try to live off the land, they are the ones who end up getting killed or maimed by leftover mines. About 26,000 people a year suffer such a fate.

In addition to this, our decision to refrain from participation in the international treaty banning the use of land mines puts us in a rather poor light in the international community. Only a handful of notable states throughout the world are withholding from the treaty. In addition to the United States, Iran, Iraq, China, Cuba and North Korea are among them.

This is indeed some unusual company for us to keep. By our abstention it perhaps looks to the rest of the world that we are joining up with the very band of global villains we are usually busy taking issue with. Even Russia, one of the two biggest producers and exporters of land mines agreed to sign the treaty.

Yet despite the awkward appearance of our position on the treaty, it is precisely because of the countries that are not signing it that we must also refrain. The simple reality is that in a great many places around the world, the United States is depended upon in various capacities to insure security, be it more or less individually, as the leader of a coalition, or as a powerful regional influence which will deploy its military force if need be. Our government bears responsibility for seeing to it that our military maintains peace and stability in many corners of the globe. To this end, they must see to it that our military is prepared to counter its opposition in the places where we may be called to fight. As such, we must retain our right to deploy antipersonnel devices in hostile regions. The most commonly cited case in this scenario is North Korea, where there are 37,000 U.S. troops stationed at the moment. We currently have the southern border of the Korean demilitarized zone heavily mined, as does the North Korean army. For the U.S. forces in the region to be suddenly denied the use of land mines would put us at a decided disadvantage and compromise our ability to counter the North Korean army. But the situation in Korea is not the only argument in favor of the United States refraining from the land mine treaty. It is not outside the realm of possibility that we might find ourselves in conflict with either Iran or Iraq at some point in the future. The other countries refusing to join the treaty are no doubt the ones we consider to be troublemakers in the international scene. It is precisely for that reason that the United States, given its role in the international community, would be acting irresponsibly in its actions if it were to agree to eliminate its use of antipersonnel mines. Unpleasant as this is, it is a basic consequence of our nation's position in the world.

It should also be noted that the Department of Defense assures that the current mines being used by the U.S. military are incapable of hurting civilians and are only active for a matter of days or even hours, unlike the older more common versions. Moreover, it points out that the Pentagon spends approximately $153 million per year deactivating land mines around the world in former war zones. Indeed, it is this kind of action that is most needed. While the signing of the ban treaty is a positive step, the nations participating ought to make further efforts, along with our own, to locate mines left in what are now civilian populated areas and destroy them.

President Clinton thus finds himself in a very difficult position because, as noted earlier, land mines are not the kind of things one wants to be known or remembered for endorsing. Yet at the same time he must, as commander-in-chief of our military, preserve our right to employ them when necessary if we are to effectively play our role in the global community.

It just so happens that recent events have added momentum to the anti-land mine movement and turned his current position into a public relations nightmare. As for Jody Williams' criticisms of the Clinton administration's policy, they are rather narrow in their scope. Indeed, Williams appears to be looking at the issue with tunnel vision, as many activists are wont to do, and ignoring the circumstances that go beyond her work.

This takes nothing away from her organization's efforts; the treaty to be signed in Ottawa in December is a great accomplishment, and one that will hopefully have practical significance. But it is not an appropriate treaty for the United States to sign at this time. President Clinton has made the only decision he rightly could in this situation, given his myriad obligations. Jody Williams deserves a great deal of credit for her humanitarian work. But war is a nasty inhumane reality, and if the possibility exists that we might find ourselves fighting it, we must see to it that we are prepared.

majority of countries, will ban the use of land mines. In addition to this, opposing land mines was a pet project of Princess Diana, and her passing last month only served to bring more attention to the issue. As it stands right now, about 90 countries will end up signing the treaty in Ottawa in December, and the United States is on a noticeably short list of countries who will not be participating in the ceremony. The recipient of this year's Nobel Peace Prize is lashing out at our decision, calling to question the president's ability to lead, and one of the most universally popular, admired, and mourned figures in recent history has now had her memory intricately linked to a crusade that our nation will not align itself with. Admittedly, at the moment, our national policy on land mines looks very bad. Unfortunately, it is the policy we must stand by.

This is of course a very difficult thing to do because land mines are inherently bad things. Quite simply, they are designed to kill or maim by blowing a person's legs off. Land mines are a cheap and effective way to kill your enemies by surprise, and consequently they are deployed all over the world, particu-

■ AROUND THE WORLD IN A HUNDRED DAYS

The Double Life of an American Girl in India

COCHIN, India
Sometimes I have to pinch myself to make sure I'm not dreaming. I'm in India, living, learning, studying and shopping (it's so cheap!). These past two weeks have been wonderful. Finally settled into one "dorm," day by day Cochin is becoming more and more like home. This way of life has completely enveloped me, and I'm now captured with all that it brings. Which is the duality of a life abroad. The U.S. seems so distant and detached, but never before have I felt so American. I call home more, but miss it less. I'm longing for my roommates and also forgetting things like the birthday of my roommate for the past two years (Happy 21st Stephanie, I love you!). This cocoon I'm in is both claustrophobic and confusing. I'm living in a world of extremes where elation and sorrow seem to fit naturally hand in hand.

This past Saturday was a perfect example of what causes such a range of emotions. It was one of the first times the group has experienced authentic Indian life and hospitality. First of all, I was sick, I mean SICK! Thus far I had not had as much as a sniffle, but last Friday I was hit hard. If you have ever had a cold or flu, I had it all — every symptom and then some. I even missed school. Anyway, on Saturday I was feeling much better, but definitely not at 100 percent and we had a long day ahead of us. We began at a big hill with a church on top of it. I was in no way ready to make such a climb; so I stayed at the bottom of the hill alone with my pen and paper waiting for the group. I had a nice shaded area in front with chairs and a small wood table. Having no other options, I plopped down, started up some Dave in my walkman and began to write. After a few minutes there were five old Indian men gathered around me, just watching. They smiled. I smiled. I stopped my letter and walkman, deciding to attempt conversation. Well, their English was as good as my Malayalam. We reverted to pointing and saying "cat." We waited for their response in their native language. We played that game for a while, then they all returned to their respective stands — a car of potential customers just arrived. So frustrating yet so enjoyable at the same time.

Everyone came back from the hike hot, sweaty, smelly, muddy and very hungry. We collected everyone at the bottom of the hill and headed to lunch. We were invited to a professor's house from Sacred Heart for our meal. I was unsure of what to expect but excited to see a real Indian home. Disgusting and hungry (actually everyone but me), tramped into this stranger's home. Family members were all around and food was ready to be served. It was all so open, I did not even notice any doors, just the subtle breeze flowing through the house. I immediately went to the backyard. It was not hard to find; I could see it from the front room.

Banana and palm trees, cows, a river further back — this was unlike any backyard I've ever seen. We could hardly fit a swing set in mine at home. The women of the family sat out back and watched us and had as great a time as we did. Proudly, they looked on at our wonder and excitement. The group filled up on fish curry and many other dishes, continually being asked to "eat more." This hospitality to 27 complete strangers, letting them in your home and treating them like family was just amazing. Everyone spent the next hour digesting, talking to the family and relaxing, getting ready for the rest of the day.

Next we were invited to a fellow student's house to have snacks. I was just expecting tea and some fruit. A late snack. Oh no, we had another meal of assorted Indian goodies. We sat down at a large table set up for us, surrounded by children and other family. It all happened so fast — coconuts fresh off the tree with a straw to drink the mild, fermented coconut milk, tea, the hugest bananas you have ever seen, sugar cane, nuts and more and more and more. After being sufficiently stuffed, for a second time we again went into their "backyard." A small path through the trees leads to a field of rice patties. As I walked through the rice patties onto a small dirt road, I felt as close to heaven as I ever had in my life; God was smiling ... tranquil, lush and comforting. The sun was setting over the palm trees with the distance and that glow that you only get from that time of day, rejuvenated and touched each of us. We spoke casually about the day's events, but it was unnecessary to talk about the moment around us. We all knew.

After a few hours that felt like seconds, we moved onto our final destination: Church festival. All I can think of to describe this event to you in a way you can easily understand is Las Vegas. This church was decked, lights everywhere. I'm talking flashing, blinking, red, purple, white, so many lights! But saying Las Vegas cheapens the experience; the real light from the Indians gathered there made it an actual spiritual experience. Everywhere there wasn't a light there were plastic toys of all sorts, any kitchen supply, posters of Gandhi, Mother Teresa, Jesus, Ganish, and some with them all together; half carnival, half chaos. As I made my way toward the church, my feelings of pure silliness, having been surrounded by such craziness, dissipated and transferred into the excitement of all these people coming together in the name of God.

A procession led by men with trumpets and horns, made its way around the church; large colorful umbrellas and statues held up by a seemingly never-ending stream followed closely behind. I walked into the church unprepared for what I saw. No pews, just people sitting, standing, talking praying all while the drone of the procession continued on. I was giddy. When have I ever been giddy? Christmas when I was young, but Julie does not get giddy. I sat in the church for a while, not long enough, but knew as I got up I would never experience this again.

On the two-hour ride back I sat back, looked out my window and just thought. What an amazing day. Yet as I said earlier, sadness and joy are quite compatible. I thought about the lunch and then my mom's cooking; the rice patties and then sitting on the quad and knowing everyone who walks by; and the future; and Sunday Mass singing with folk choir — these all come together as I processed the events of the day. After all of that though, living two extremes is not that bad. I could get used to it.

Move Aside Ted Turner, God is One Step Ahead of You

Ted Turner recently committed one billion dollars to UN efforts over the next decade. That's almost one billion dollars more than I even expect to make in the next decade, let alone give to charity.

Still, I have to say, big deal. Charity is cheap — compared to justice. Turner's net worth increased by one billion dollars in the first nine months of 1997 alone. He was already worth just over two billion dollars at the end of last year. Realizing he can give away everything he's made so far this year — and still be obscenely wealthy, he declares, "I'm putting the rich on notice."

David Weiss

"They're going to be hearing from me about giving money away."

Well, as someone within the lower tiers of the economy — and as a Christian — I'm unimpressed.

Jesus put the rich on notice long before Ted Turner did. Among other things he said, "Sell all that you have and distribute to the poor; and come, follow me" (Luke 18:22). And, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also" (Matthew 6:21). And finally, "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich person to enter the Kingdom of God" (Luke 18:25).

While Jesus' views on wealth sit rather uncomfortably beside our own, he didn't have a problem with material goods. He knew how to throw a party; he entertained thousands (albeit on rather simple fare: loaves and fishes) and still had leftovers (Mark 6:30-44 and 8:1-10). He turned water into wine — and not cheap booze; we're talking a vintage wine that impressed the connoisseurs (John 2:1-10). And he didn't mind at all when a woman of some means (despite her reputation) bathed his feet with costly perfume in a scene so suggestive that it unnerved even the Calvin Kleins of the first century Jewish community (Luke 7:36-50).

Yet Jesus saw a clear priority between goods and people. Goods are here to serve the needs and celebrate the joys of people. People are not here to accumulate goods; nor simply to labor so that others might accumulate goods; and certainly not to become pawns in a system where wealth assumes a life of its own bending human lives at all levels to an inhuman and inexorable yearning to increase itself.

When Jesus said, "The Sabbath is made for humans and not humans for the Sabbath," (Mark 2:27-28) he extended the critique made by the prophets centuries earlier. They railed against Israel because the wealthy spent the Sabbath impatiently waiting for the stock exchange to reopen the next morning (Amos 8:5) and because the injustice rampant in Israel's social life betrayed the piety pretended at the altar (Isaiah 1:13).

Jesus saw that in his day the powerful sought even to sacralize injustice, employing the Sabbath to keep oppression in place. And once even the Sabbath becomes twisted to serve human designs, then the cause of the poor is truly precarious, because now the rich "put the rich on notice." Now "charity" flows freely. Now Ted Turner can claim the spotlight.

And now the God of justice can be quietly kept back in the shadows because charity has the frightening capacity to dull our senses to God's call for justice.

St. Symeon speaks for many of the early church fathers in declaring, "Charity which flows from your surpluses is merely the return of stolen goods." Instead of celebrating Turner's huge gift, maybe we should ask why he gets to run his fencing operation in the public limelight with accolades all around? Is it to distract us from asking why one man can have so much to spare

(and get praised for it!) in a country where poverty (especially among children!) is on the rise?

So, why is it so difficult for the rich to enter the Kingdom? Surely not because God doesn't love the rich, though perhaps it begins in that the rich may find it difficult to love God. If indeed our hearts make their homes in our treasures, the rich are ever in danger of having hearts tethered to treasures that not only can't be taken with them — but may instead keep them from going anywhere worth going at all. But even this stops short.

Jesus' ominous lament lies in the character of the Kingdom itself. When Jesus' phrase "the Kingdom of God" is cast into English we inevitably lose some of the dynamic character of the Aramaic expression. Jesus isn't talking about the place or the time where God is King, he is describing the dynamic and omnipresent activity of God as King. The Kingdom that the rich find so difficult to enter, to participate in, is this: the activity of God making justice.

God doesn't give Pharaoh a billion dollars to ease Israel's plight; God says "Let my people go!" (Exodus 5:1). God doesn't thank the rich for their charity, but instead counters, "It is you who have devoured the vineyard, the spoil of the poor is in your houses. What do you mean by crushing my people, by grinding the face of the poor?" (Isaiah 3:14-15). Indeed, when God in Jesus took the decisive action of the Kingdom, he "emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, ... and humbled himself and became obedient unto death" (Philippians 2:7-8). No wonder the rich would rather serve up notice on their own terms.

I don't think charity itself is bad. And I'm not suggesting that the UN spurn Turner's gift. Even the Israelites accepted the silver and gold of the Egyptians as they left the land (Exodus 12:35-36). But let's not make it out for what it isn't: some heroic gesture of generosity. Charity is cheap — compared to justice.

Until Mr. Turner and the others in his league dismantle the economic empires that suck the wealth of the many upward into the fortunes of the few, I remain unimpressed. God put the rich on notice long before Ted Turner did. The challenge wasn't to lead the way in charity. The terms are the same for all of us: "To do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God" (Micah 6:8).

can't find a betterman than in brad

With the weekend approaching, a friend asked me what my plans were. "I'm going to see Brad in Chicago," I answered.

"Brad who? And why in Chicago?" he immediately asked.

"No, listen Brad's a band. They're playing in Chicago on Sunday."

"Brad has a band?"

"Nevermind ... just forget it," I said, shaking my head.

Despite the hassle in trying to explain my weekend plans, the Oct. 5 Brad concert at the Cabaret Metro was definitely worth the frustration (in addition to the hours of sleep I lost Sunday morning trying to get to Chicago).

Although characterized as a Pearl Jam side group, Brad shares very little in common on a musical level with that band. Its music deeply reflects the Seattle heritage of its members, all of whom have been in legendary Seattle bands. Lead singer and keyboardist Shawn Smith and Regan Smith are currently in Satchel, one of the most talented bands from Seattle right now, and Smith also played in Malfunkshun alongside with the mythical Andy Wood. Stone Gossard, in addition to his rhythm guitar work with Pearl Jam, has played in other numerous bands such as Green River, Mother Love Bone and Temple of the Dog.

The band devoted much of the night's setlist to the second album, Interiors. They opened with "Lift," perhaps one of the best songs in their repertoire. With Stone Gossard's trademark guitar riffs leading the band, Brad started the show off with a huge bang. Even though the attendance was not at capacity, the crowd — consisting of teenagers sporting Pearl Jam shirts and drunken adults — responded incredibly to the band's enthusiasm. However, the band's vivacity began to wane. Compared to when I saw them last July, the band just wasn't as interactive with the crowd this time. Only once or twice did Gossard ever look at the crowd, and although he is backup on vocals, he never went up to the microphone. Smith tried to cover up for his bandmates' declining interest in the show. Whenever he had a chance to leave the keys, like on the headbanging "Sweet Al George" or the moving "Upon My Shoulders," he would approach the edge of the stage and shake hands with the audience.

The problem with Brad is that their material is either soft or heavy, nothing in between. For example, the band's decision to follow the mellow yet aesthetic "The Day Brings" to the distorted and heavy "I Don't Know" was poorly made; the transition was too extreme, and many in the crowd couldn't adapt to the incredible acoustical difference.

The show did not end on a high note. With bassist Mike Berg moving to the keys and Stone taking up bass (it was weird to see him without a Les Gibson in his hands), Brad played a cover of Elton John's "Benny and The Jets." Immediately after, Stone approached center stage, waved to the crowd, and walked off. The rest of band and the crowd were greatly surprised by Gossard's abrupt departure because the band still had a good 15 minutes left to play. With the key member missing, the show came to a rather sudden end.

Despite the band's somewhat apathetic performance, being able to see so many Seattle legends in a small club environment was enough of a thrill for me. I just wish I were that close to Stone Gossard at a Pearl Jam concert.

Adam and Eve

(out of five stars)

After three major label releases, the British quartet Catherine Wheel has finally achieved a mature balance between their notoriously brash wall of sound and dynamic and lyrical variety with Adam and Eve. The name Catherine Wheel, a medieval instrument of torture, seemed quite appropriate for the band's earlier material (founded in 1990), as it revolved around the voluminous and relentless guitar textures of axemen Bob Dickinson and Brian Futter. Their previous lack of dynamic contrast has been abandoned, and with their latest release, the thick guitar textures play an integral but selective role. Catherine Wheel's newfound eclecticism and variety shape this album, and the result is dramatic and poignant, as the album's fluidity astonishes and coaxes the listener. The keyboard work of Tim Friese-Green adds a new dimension to their sound, while making the Pink Floyd influence just a touch more obvious. His additions, however, often provide for a perfect counterpoint to the band's sound, and they consistently support the band's attentiveness toward achieving a new eclecticism on this album.

Dickinson's sound has changed as the band has matured; his vocals are now at the forefront of their sound. His melodies soar above the textures (much like those of his cousin, Bruce Dickinson, of the famed Iron Maiden), as his airy baritone quality fits perfectly with either an electric or acoustic soundscape. He has achieved a number of attractive vocal nuances along with the ability to instantaneously switch from gritty somberness, à la Peter Dinklage, to wailing bursts of energy, à la Adam Duritz, with convincing ease. His keen sense for inventing melody has taken a huge step forward since the days of Chrome, and undoubtedly, this only marks the beginning of his development beyond a purely melancholic and sardonic lyricist. His melodies have become brighter, catchier, and consequently, much more ironic and intriguing.

The band's strengths are all apparent on the disc's final track, "For Dreaming," as Dickinson's melodies display his aforementioned vocal durability, while the alternating acoustic and electric textures move the listener to introspection, only to suddenly reconsider and blow the listener away with a wash of thick distortion and desperately pleading vocals. Dickinson's brilliant irony does not go unnoticed, as he frighteningly whispers, "Bring on the good times once more/Cause we love the good times/On the other side of your green door/It's only there for dreaming." The song closes not with the programmed fade that seems to proclaim the end, but an acoustic segue into another piece unmentioned anywhere, a perfect surprise and contrast for an album that is full of pleasant surprises and contrasts.

the refreshments

The Bottle & Fresh Horses

(out of five stars)

Courtesy of Mercury Records

Hey barkeep, another Mekong please! The Refreshments have returned strong with another round of drinks and Southwestern music on their sophomore effort, The Bottle & Fresh Horses. The Arizona-based band's sound was once described as "Camper Van Beethoven and the Lemonheads beat[ing] up They Might Be Giants behind a 7-11," and I have been looking forward to buying this album since last spring when I first heard it would be out this fall.

After a great deal of success on their 1996 debut album, Fizzy Fuzzy Big and Buzzy, which produced the mainstream hits as "Banditos" and "Down Together," The Refreshments return stylistically more mature while remaining true to their ironic lyrics and Southwestern twang.

The album's first single, "Good Year," charts new territory with a searing guitar driven sound provided by Brian Blush and a solid driving bassline of bassist Buddy Edwards and drummer P.H. Naffah. The band recently completed their video for this song to appear on MTV. The songs of singer and rhythm guitarist Roger Clyne are written from various experiences — from travels to places such as Thailand to life in Arizona. He explores his favorite Mexican territory on "Wanted" (which I believe to be the best song on the album) and "Una Soda," which provides a great moody and sensitive ending to the CD. "Fonder and Blonder" is a cute take on a standard tale of love incorporating lyrics from their first album in the chorus: "Cars break down and people break down and other things break down too." This is a CD you want to pick up.

The Refreshments were formed in 1993 in Tempe right around the corner from where the Gin Blossoms got their start. They spent 1996 touring the country with Poe and The Goo Goo Dolls, and I was fortunate enough to have weaseled my way backstage to meet them at a show at the 9:30 Club in Washington D.C. They expressed an interest in playing at Notre Dame but I am sure that the $10,000 they were going for this spring is just a wee bit higher now that their second album is out. They are currently on tour and are appearing at the Metro in Chicago on October 26th.

Urban Hymns

(out of five stars)

Courtesy of Virgin Records

After a few moderately good releases, The Verve has finally hit the high point promised by their earlier work with its newest album, Urban Hymns. Yet another English band trying to achieve success in the United States, the vanguard of its campaign is the admirable "Bittersweet Symphony," currently receiving much playing time on MTV; elegant and magisterial, with stridently confident vocals, this is surely one of the tracks of the year. The level of achievement is maintained by "Sonnet," a slower, more subtle piece which manages to sound both questioning and fragile simultaneously. As a counterpoint to this, "The Rolling People" exudes a brashness which appears throughout the remainder of the album.

With "The Drugs Don't Work" comes a tune to equal the opener — a haunting ballad sung to perfection and highly characteristic of The Verve's ability to combine quasi-orchestral arrangements with the conventions of contemporary Britpop. "Catching the Butterfly" is a rasping affair which precludes the somewhat odd (but still enjoyable) "Neon Wilderness," whereas "Space and Time" and "Weeping Willow" expose the band's desire to show off its songwriting skills while still continuing to please the listener. "Lucky Man" marks the beginning of a very strong finishing sprint, a drawling singer performing to the best of his considerable abilities and hinting at perhaps even better things to come. "This Time" shows some insecurity yet manages to remain optimistic. "Velvet Morning" sounds just like its title, and the final track, "Come On" closes the album in typical fashion with jangling guitars and a notable finish. Perhaps what distinguishes Urban Hymns from most of its competitors is its reflection of the sheer ability of the band combined with their intensity of performance; not many people can do this these days, and those who do find it hard to maintain. Nevertheless, an album as excellent as this one will be remembered for a long time.

'No pity for the majority' is what "KEIN MEHRHEIT FÜR DIE MITLEID" (or the acronym KMFDM) loosely translates to. With an auspicious name like that, one would hardly expect Kenny G covers. In fact, ever since its inception in 1984, KMFDM has been a bastion of counter-culture angst.

Described as less of a band and more of a musical experiment, this Seattle-based German band has continued to revolt against musical tradition and entitled its ninth album an apparent meaningless row of symbols: a flash, a skull and cross bones a la Jolly Roger, a lit cherry bomb, a spiral, and a pounding fist. Your guess as to what this means is as good as mine, and probably the band's as well.

This latest offering, which I will refer to as The Album Formerly Known as KMFDM's Ninth CD or more simply The Album, is a techno/electronica/industrial fan's heaven. Stereophonic tricks, synthesized frenzies and sampled tracks run rampant through The Album's 10 tracks, all of which flow smoothly into the next. Fans of Trent Reznor's style of mixing will certainly enjoy this album's continuity. Devotees of Ministry's destructive flavor will be ecstatic over tracks such as "Stray Bullet" and "Anarchy," which is not too far removed from Downward Spiral's "Mr. Self Destruct."

The Album begins with a tweaky introduction to "Megalomaniac" that had the glasses rattling on the coffee table and my neighbors banging on the walls. The remainder of the song was just as furiously modeled on the nearby play of angry giants. Combining incessant organic drum lines with electronic sampling, KMFDM may have managed to produce its first radio friendly single since 1995's "Juke-Joint Jezebel." The Album continues with "Leid und Elend," a highly danceable club groove sung in German. But if you had any hopes of deciphering the lyrics for some project for your German class, go to the liner notes included in the nifty CD case because your ears will bleed, and your sinuses will be cleared from the nonstop bass of the entire album.

Later songs on The Album lack the flair that the first three seem to have until repeated listening. Then the album takes on a distinctive NIN feel as you discover "new" tracks that had been previously ignored before. However, even KMFDM cannot overcome the greatest downfall of industrial music — the unbearable feeling of having been locked in a cement mixer with thousands of bricks after prolonged listening.

KMFDM never ceases to redefine itself, and this latest album is no exception. If you like Downward Spiral for more than just its naughty lyrics and "alternaten" appeal, The Album is a definite must listen.

■ COLLEGE BASKETBALL

URI under fire for recruiting violation

The Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — NCAA investigators are scheduled to visit the University of Rhode Island to review the college admissions scores of basketball recruit Lamar Odom.

If investigators verify the above-average score after the visit next week, Odom, now a part-time Rhode Island student, could play for the Rams and coach Jim Harrick next semester.

"I'm very optimistic," Odom's lawyer, Steve Stein, told the Providence Journal-Bulletin. "I'm looking forward to seeing him play. I think any team he joins will become a Top 25 team."

Odom, a 6-foot-9 forward from New York, attended three high schools this year and his grades were not strong. He agreed to study part time at Rhode Island for the first semester to improve his grades and enroll full time in the winter.

Earlier this year, he said he would attend UNLV. In July, he announced he would pursue a pro career instead after allegations in Sports Illustrated that coaches, recruiters and others helped players cheat on college entrance exams. Odom, who scored an above average 22 out of 36 on the American College Test, said he was upset by the allegations and decided not to play at UNLV.

A UNLV assistant coach has denied wrongdoing. Stein, based in Las Vegas, insists Odom did not cheat.

As a 17-year-old, Odom had signed a letter of intent with UNLV. The letter was viewed as his biggest obstacle to playing with Rhode Island, but it apparently is invalid because it was not co-signed by a guardian, according to a Journal report Wednesday.

Del Robinson, an NCAA compliance director, would not confirm whether the lack of a second signature was the issue. "It was invalid," he told the Journal-Bulletin.

Pitino returns to Kentucky

Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Ky.

Rick Pitino enjoyed his return to Rupp Arena, even though his new team lost at his old home.

Pitino, who left Kentucky in May to coach the Boston Celtics, was back on the bench Wednesday night at the school he led to the 1996 national championship.

The Celtics lost an exhibition game to the New Jersey Nets 123-115, but Pitino received a standing ovation before the game from the crowd of 15,010.

"It was very good to be back in Kentucky," Pitino said. "It was great for our players and coaching staff to be back here because it was our home for eight years. We wish we could have won, but it was great seeing old friends."

Also returning to Lexington were three former Kentucky stars who now play for the Celtics — Antoine Walker, Ron Mercer and Chris Mills.

Walker led the Celtics with 29 points, while Mercer scored 14 on 7-for-11 shooting. Mills finished with eight points.

"It was real nice to get back to a place you know," said Walker, who played with Mercer on the 1996 title team. "I left on real good terms, and the fans have such a respect for us, being from UK. It was nice to see the appreciation and support."

Although the Celtics' preseason record fell to 0-3, Pitino said the team was making progress.

"I've seen so much improvement tonight from our first two games," he said. "They rotated properly on defense, and when they missed shots, they got back. I was very pleased tonight."

Sam Cassell led the Nets with 32 points and 15 assists.

Cassell hit three jumpers during a 19-7 run that gave New Jersey a 59-53 lead with 3:20 remaining in the first half. The Nets led the rest of the game.

Boston closed to 71-69 on Walker's layup in the third period. But New Jersey went on a 13-2 spurt, including five points by Kevin Edwards, to take a 84-71 lead.

After Cassell's two free throws put the Nets up 116-104, Travis Knight, Walker and Dana Barros hit consecutive 3-pointers to pull Boston to 116-110 with 1:38 remaining.

Grizzlies 103,
Trail Blazers 83

VANCOUVER

Shareef Abdur-Rahim scored 11 of his 27 points in the third quarter in the Vancouver Grizzlies' 103-83 exhibition victory over the Portland Trail Blazers on Tuesday night.

Ahead 54-50 at the half, the Grizzlies broke the game open with a 13-2 run, and eventually built a 23-point edge five minutes into the fourth quarter en route to their first victory in three preseason games.

Abdur-Rahim, who opened the exhibition season with a 32-point performance in a loss to the Los Angeles Clippers, has 81 points in three games.

Otis Thorpe, acquired in a deal with Detroit last August, added 14 points on 6-for-7 shooting and had 12 rebounds for the Grizzlies.

Stacey Augmon led the Trail Blazers (2-1) with 18 points.

Avalanche remains alone in unbeaten column

Associated Press

EDMONTON, Alberta
Patrick Roy made 48 saves and Peter Forsberg had a goal and five assists as the Colorado

Avalanche beat the Edmonton Oilers 6-2 Wednesday night to remain the NHL's only unbeaten team.

The Avalanche improved to 5-0-2 with their second decision over Edmonton in seven days.

Edmonton outshot Colorado 50-19, including 24-7 in the third period.

Colorado took the lead 4:26
into the game on Adam

Deadmarsh's fourth goal of the season moments after Roy made a glove save off Jason Arnott. Deadmarsh streaked into the Edmonton zone and slid Forsberg's pass off the post and past goaltender Curtis Joseph.

Just over two minutes later,
Forsberg deflected Adam
Foote's shot from the point past Joseph for his third goal of the season.

The Oilers threatened when rookie Steve Kelly dodged past Foote, who stumbled, but the shot sailed wide. On the ensuing rush, Sandis Ozolinsh burned
Joseph with a low slap shot from just inside the blue line at 11:48 for a 3-0 lead.

Edmonton made it 3-1 at 13:13 of the second period when Boris Mironov's shot
glanced off defenseman Uwe Krupp past Roy.

But any momentum the Oilers may have gained was quickly lost when Ozolinsh took a loose puck during a Colorado power play and sent his second goal of the season past Joseph at 14:45.

Ryan Smyth got the Oilers within 3-2 at 3:16 of the third period on a power play, ending Colorado's penalty-killing streak at 36.

But Forsberg collected his fourth and fifth assists of the night on power-play goals by Joe Sakic at 5:08 and Jari Kurri at 16:58.

Penguins 1, Rangers 0

NEW YORK

Tom Barrasso, limited to five games last season because of a shoulder injury, was at his best in his sixth start this fall.

The Pittsburgh goalie made 36 saves — 22 in the second period — for his 24th shutout as the Penguins beat the New York
Rangers 1-0 on Tuesday night.

"There are nights when you find the puck in traffic," said
Barrasso, who improved to 3-2-1 and dropped his goal-against average to 1.98. "Sometimes you look the other way and you don't see it. I was fortunate."

In the second period,
Barrasso stopped seven shots
by Rangers defenseman Brian Leetch, including three each by Pat LaFontaine and Kevin Stevens.

"We had opportunities and chances and Barrasso made some big saves," New York star Wayne Gretzky said. "We had 22 shots in one period and kept peppering him. He was making key saves."

Ron Francis scored the only goal of the game at 17:56 of the second period. Francis redirected Kevin Hatcher's shot from the right point past goalie Mike Richter for the forward's third goal of the season.

"I was trying to get to the front of the net," Francis said.
"Hatcher took the shot and I was able to tip it down between Richter's legs."

The Rangers pressed the play in the third period, but the Penguins went into a defensive shell and Barrasso was up to the task, making key saves on Gretzky, Alex Kovalev and Adam Graves.

"New York had plenty of good chances and our goalie really won the game for us," Penguins coach Kevin Constantine said.

Baseball to get face lift with realignment

The Associated Press

BALTIMORE
In a move that likely will result in Kansas City or Milwaukee switching to the National League next season, baseball owners finally approved a realignment plan Wednesday.

Detroit will go from the AL East to the AL Central, and the expansion Tampa Bay Devil Rays will replace the Tigers in the AL East. The AL team to switch leagues will be designated after the World Series, and owners and officials said the Royals had first choice. If Kansas City declines, Milwaukee has agreed to move, they said.

"We did support radical realignment, but this does not appear to be radical realignment," Royals general manager Herk Robinson said. "I would say this is more of an adjustment that a realignment. But I cannot speak for (team chairman) David Glass or the board."

Owners approved the plan 27-0 during a telephone conference call shortly before Game 6 of the AL championship series. The San Francisco Giants, who threatened to sue to block a larger realignment plan, abstained, and the two 1998 expansion teams were not allowed to vote.

"We have taken care of the two most immediate concerns, moving Tampa Bay into a more agreeable geographic division and creating a 16-14 league alignment," said acting commissioner Bud Selig, who also owns the Brewers.

Tampa Bay had spent months trying to avoid an assignment to the AL West, the only open division spot last January. Arizona was put in the NL West during the January vote, and the Tigers said they were willing to switch to the AL Central, but Kansas City refused to move from the AL Central to the AL West, forcing the realignment debate to drag on for nine months.

With the switches, the NL will have 16 teams next season and the AL 14. That enables owners to bunch interleague games into specific periods of the season, as was done this year, the initial season of interleague play.

Under the 15-15 format owners originally approved in January, an interleague game would have been needed nearly every day to keep teams from having days off on weekends.

Small Faith Sharing Groups

At the beginning of the semester, many students signed-up to express their interest in belonging to a Small Faith Sharing Group and/or to participate in a student led Bible-Study Group. We are now ready to gather together all interested students to talk about a Campus Ministry vision for Small Faith-Sharing/Bible Study Groups and to hear from you about what your hopes and needs are. Please join us for a pizza dinner and listening session on November 9 from 5:00-7:00P.M. in Walsh Hall's basement social space.

We need a head-count for dinner so please R.S.V.P. at 631-5242 and ask for Kate, John, or Sylvia.

University Village Volunteers

Campus Ministry is looking for two students who are interested in doing some volunteer work at University Village, the Married Student Housing Complex on campus. Students are needed to volunteer in a "Mother's Time-Out" program that meets in the community center on Wednesdays from 9:00A.M.-11:30 A.M. This ministry would entail working with two mother's to plan activities and games for children ages 1-4 and to assist in general child supervision. "Mother's Time-Out" will not meet during breaks or vacation periods. Please call John or Sylvia Dillon at 631-5242 if interested.

Tribe wins ALCS, set to play bigger fish in Series

The Associated Press

BALTIMORE
These are not the same Cleveland Indians that Albert Belle led to the World Series.

They win close games. They win in extra innings. They play smart defense and steer clear of controversy.

Even while their sluggers kept swinging and missing, the Indians got a clutch homer from Tony Fernandez, a slap hitter who wasn't even supposed to play in Game 6 of the ALCS on Wednesday.

The Indians clinched their second AL pennant in three years and fifth in history with another amazing victory, 1-0 over the Baltimore Orioles in 11 innings.

Jose Mesa, who got the last out of Cleveland's 1995 pennant-clinching victory at the Seattle Kingdome, struck out Roberto Alomar for the final out of this one.

All four of the Indians' wins in the series came by one run — the only time that has happened in a league championship series — and two came in extra innings as they were outscored by the Orioles 19-18. Cleveland lost three games by one run in the 1995 World Series, won by Atlanta.

They will meet the Florida Marlins in the World Series on Saturday with a lineup filled with different players and personalities.

Fernandez, who has barely said a word all season, provided all the bashing Cleveland needed with his homer in the 11th off Armando Benitez.

"I had confidence all the way," said Fernandez, a late insertion into the lineup when Bip Roberts was scratched because of a bruised thumb. "Nobody gave us a chance, but everybody had faith."

Following Belle out of town was Lofton, traded to the Atlanta Braves in a stunning spring training swap that sent Marquis Grissom and David Justice to Cleveland.

Grissom, who replaced Lofton in center field, was named MVP of the ALCS. He won Game 2 with a three-run homer off Benitez, then scored the winning run in Game 4 on a bizarre steal of home as Vizquel missed a squeeze bunt.

Justice, who beat the Indians with a homer in Game 6 of the 1995 World Series, was a steady force in the lineup and clubhouse since the day he first tried on an Indians cap.

The Indians overcame another stunning performance by Orioles starter Mike Mussina to clinch in similar fashion as 1995. The Orioles stranded 14 runners in Game 6, partly because of stellar defense by the Indians — once known as the Bashers and Bullies of Baseball.

"It's not like in the past when we tried to win with home runs," Vizquel said. "We've got little plays. We beat them with defense. That's even more special."

■ COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Gator quarterback out too late

The Associated Press

GAINESVILLE, Fla.

Florida quarterback Doug Johnson was suspended Wednesday for what his father said was a curfew violation, keeping him out of the Gators' crucial showdown Saturday at No. 6 Auburn.

Johnson, a 19-year-old sophomore, was coming off his worst game for No. 7 Florida. He threw four interceptions, including one that was returned for the go-ahead touchdown in a 28-21 loss at LSU that knocked the Gators from No. 1.

His father, Doug Johnson, told The Associated Press the violation took place before the Gators left for Baton Rouge, La., but that Spurrier didn't find out about it until Tuesday.

"Evidently, someone came forth and said they had seen him out after curfew," the father said.

Replacing Johnson will be Jesse Palmer, a true freshman from Canada who has seen only mop-up duty this year. The only other quarterback with experience is fifth-year senior Noah Brindise, a former walk-on.

"I made a mistake and I plan on paying the consequences," Johnson said in a statement released by the university.

"Hopefully, I can come back as a smarter player. This is going to make me look at things differently. It will probably help me in the long run."

The one-game suspension comes at a perilous time for the Gators, who are trying to become the first team since Alabama in the early 1980s to win five straight Southeastern Conference championships.

The loss at LSU left Florida with a 5-1 overall record and tied with Tennessee in the SEC

East at 3-1. Since Florida has already beaten the Volunteers, all it has to do is win their remaining SEC games to reach the conference title game.

But it starts Saturday in one of the most difficult places to win, Jordan-Hare Stadium, against an undefeated Auburn team that is off to its best start since 1993.

Auburn is the only SEC team to have beaten Florida in consecutive years — 1993 and 1994 — since Spurrier returned as head coach in 1990.

Palmer sought out Spurrier when he decided to come to the United States, and even asked to wear No. 7, the same jersey Danny Wuerffel wore when he won the Heisman Trophy last year and led the Gators to their first national championship.

In four games, Palmer is 9-of-15 for 145 yards and three touchdowns.

RESPECT FOR LIFE

Richard V. Warner, C.S.C.

10/16/97

Since the very first days of the Clinton presidency, I have been disappointed by what I can only describe as an "in your face" approach to issues derived from the Catholic Church's defense of life concerns -- abortion, death penalty, euthanasia, policy considerations and consequences derived from our Just War tradition, and the defense and promotion of poor people as they all too frequently barely eke out a living under all difficult circumstances.

Before the Clinton era, I was painfully aware of the empty promises of the previous Republican presidencies. In my opinion, they lip-synched the words of our position, but did little to change the underlying causes surrounding these issues or to promote any real change.

The Church insists that we defend life at every stage from conception to the moment of natural death.

A majority of Americans do not agree; some Catholics do not, either.

The late Cardinal Joseph Bernardin of Chicago stated this position best when he described the inter-relatedness of these life issues as a "seamless garment." To weaken any portion of the whole cloth garment, he told us, causes the garment's complete destruction. Just as you cannot pull a string on your favorite woven sweater without eventually winding up with only a pile of yarn, so you cannot pick and choose among the life issues. The way Cardinal Bernardin approached his own death is a martyr-like confirmation that he really believed what he taught. And I am certain that he only arrived at this position after many hours of thought and prayer, and, in the least analysis, the leap of faith that can sometimes seem to be just beyond our easy reach as believers.

Ten years after the Cardinal's insight, Pope John Paul II's "Gospel of Life" urges us to abandon the culture of death our society accepts and promotes, and to choose life.

As Catholics, we are asked to oppose abortions, executions, misguided welfare reform, the right to choose the moment of our life, and counter-population targeting of nuclear weapons for the same reason.

"Thou shalt not kill," is the injunction of the Author of life.

President Clinton recently vetoed, for the second time in less than a year, a Bill prohibiting partial birth abortion, a procedure which comes as close as possible to infanticide. He did so because the proposed legislation did not permit exceptions for reasons of health -- wording his opponents found too vague.

There is no longer a debate in our culture of death regarding whether or not abortion on demand should be the law of our land.

There is no longer a debate in our culture of death regarding whether or not executions should take place. We are only concerned about how to make the procedure appear painless, to avoid challenges on the basis of "cruel and unusual" punishment, and how to accelerate the process by limiting the number of appeals.

There is just barely a debate in our culture of death about whether or not individuals have the right to seek assistance to hasten the moment of death.

The number of politicians who are truly and consistently pro-life continues to decrease.

I hope a new generation of bright and talented young men and women will enter fully into the political system and its processes. I think we are in need of this kind of new blood.

In thinking about these vital matters, it is important for all of us to keep our eyes firmly fixed on the person of Jesus Christ, the Living Word of God, always present in Scripture and ready to cut us to the bone if we but dare allow God's Word to transform us.

So what do we do about the President's veto?

Write to the President, expressing your strong opposition to the veto he signed.

Write to your Congressional representatives. Insist that they override the President's veto.

Probe deeply into the positions on life issues of both political parties and of all movements before you even think of supporting with your vote candidates for Local, State and National office. If the seamless garment approach to life issues is not clearly visible in the voting record of any candidate, he or she is most likely a proponent of the culture of death.

May we avoid becoming unwitting accomplices in the culture of death.

Cavs keep Kemp with $107 million contract

The Associated Press

Shawn Kemp moved a step closer Wednesday to getting his renegotiated megacontract, a seven-year deal with the Cleveland Cavaliers that will be worth about $107 million.

It will make Kemp the fifth NBA player in the $100 million club and will end the salary saga of the ex-Seattle All-Star whose anger with his old contract played a big part in driving him away from the SuperSonics.

According to a source close to the Cavs, the sides have agreed on the amount of money Kemp will be paid — approximately $8.3 million in the first season with 20 percent raises in each of the next six years. Several details remain to be worked out.

Cavs spokesman Bob Price said the team would have no comment until an agreement is finalized.

Cleveland had about $9.5 million of salary cap room when it acquired Kemp from the Seattle SuperSonics in a three-way trade that sent Terrell Brandon, Tyrone Hill and a first-round draft pick to Milwaukee and Vin Baker to Seattle.

When the agreement is finalized, that money will be added on to Kemp's current $3.3 million cap slot. With the 20 percent bumps, it adds up to about $107 million.

That number would put Kemp among Kevin Garnett ($126 million), Shaquille O'Neal ($120 million), Alonzo Mourning ($112 million) and Juwan Howard ($100.8 million) as players with nine-figure contracts.

Under collective bargaining rules, the Sonics weren't allowed to discuss a renegotiation until Oct. 8 — three years to the date after Kemp signed his last contract. Kemp demanded a trade anyway, and he got it last month.

The Cavs also had to wait until Oct. 8 to discuss a new contract, but the sides have been negotiating since then on the new deal.

Kemp, a 6-foot-10 forward, has averaged 16.2 points and 9.6 rebounds in eight NBA seasons.

but said that there were no major decisions made.

"We talked on the airplane. We didn't have some crisis meeting in Malta," Robinson said. "We have just made an opinion and a consensus of how we're going to do it."

"I want what's best for USC. I've always wanted the best for USC. In those 13 years, I've done an outstanding job providing for that. Right now, I'm not providing that in terms of our success."

After Arizona State's decimation of the Trojans, Robinson said that the team was "sleep-walking" through the second half.

He said that there is either a lack of confidence in the team or an issue of not being as talented as he thought they would be. Either way, Robinson said, the team has to perform better in crunch time.

"The one thing that is happening is, there is a choking or an inability to perform when it comes down to it," Robinson said. "I told them after, and I told them a lot of things, that if you can't do it, for whatever reasons, don't tell me that you care or try hard in practice."

"If you can't perform when it comes down to it, you've got to step aside and let somebody else do it."

However, Robinson didn't put all of the blame on the players.

Later in the luncheon, Robinson took a good part of the blame for the team's troubles and made no excuses for the team's performance.

"We all go through something in life where you've got to say, 'Hey man, there's no excuses. It's nobody else's fault. It's not the weather. It's not El Niño. It's me. I've got to stand up and do the best that I can,'" Robinson said.

"I've worked hard this year, the coaching staff has worked hard and the players have worked hard. We have nothing much to show for it, so we had better get going a little faster and try to solve some of these problems and play to our ability." But Robinson said there has been no shortage of support from fans across the country, citing numerous faxes on his desk that are all positive toward Robinson and the team.

"You can say my team's in trouble, I'm going to support the people that are there, and we're going to do the best that we can," Robinson said. "When it's time to decide the future, we'll decide."

"But I am not going to be a part of a situation where I let the team slide into the gutter. We're going to do that the best we can. There are 10,000 (fans), and after (the Notre Dame game) there may be 10,307 marching back from South Bend."

"If it doesn't work there, then we'll start marching again next week. That's how we're going to do it."

blocks (two solos).

Four Notre Dame players have been recognized by the Big East in 1997 during the seven weeks of conference awards. The Irish opened the season with consecutive player of the week honors going to senior hitter Angie Harris, junior middle Lindsay Treadwell and senior hitter Jaimie Lee.

Two-time defending Big East champion Notre Dame is 12-5 overall and 4-0 in conference play.

Each of the Irish losses in 1997 have come to ranked teams, including three currently in the top 10 (No. 3 Florida, No. 8 Wisconsin and No. 10 Washington State), plus current No. 12 Texas A&M and No. 19 Colorado.

The Irish next have three important non-conference tests versus North Carolina at the Joyce Center on Friday, at No. 11 Texas and at Houston.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Aries: Someone finally recognizes what you are worth and may soon pay you accordingly. When you feel good about yourself, others begin to notice.

Taurus: As an earth sign, this is your day to play in the mud. All inhibitions vanish as you pursue your goals or satisfy your appetites. Others will be impressed by a side of you that they may never have seen.

Gemini: When faced with today's set of limitations, you surprise yourself by drawing on hidden strength. Be patient in the face of adversity. Retain your charm to keep others wondering what you're really up to.

Cancer: When the Moon visits Taurus' house, expect guests at your own home. Social activity is favored today, no matter where you go. If you are looking for collaborators, be prepared to share your ideas.

Leo: Your reputation or legal status may be on the line today. A display of arrogance or bad judgement will have most unwelcome consequences. Stabilize yourself by exercising moderation in all things.

Virgo: Your day is productive, but on a much deeper level than just stacking boxes or shuffling papers. You reach a deep and unique understanding about the way you operate. You are beautiful when you're this self-assured.

Libra: Your personal magnetism puts you at the spotlight, but you may not measure up on closer inspection. Conduct health maintenance activities in private. Polite answers to personal questions save everyone from embarrassment.

Scorpio: Try to be open to changes in your relationship today. Stubborn attachment to an impermanent situation will make you a liability in business or romance. Remember the retailer's motto: "You break it, you bought it."

Sagittarius: Your recent pleasure cruise may show signs of turning into a bad trip today. Small stones make big ripples in a still pond. Pay your debts now before those finance charges pile up.

Capricorn: The truth about your feelings is too good to hide from your loved one today. Be faithful to an ideal, and everything else will line up perfectly. Tasteful celebrations are favored today.

Aquarius: Your low energy level leaves you uncomfortable in the presence of exuberant, free-spirited people. You reflect on the things that money can't buy, no matter how much you have. Embrace any early signs of change.

Pisces: Follow your intuition wherever it leads you today. Your mind is quick. Your words are precise. You are creative in a way that often seems too good to be true.

Newell on pace to set scoring record as season draws to close

By ANGELA OLSEN
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

There is a record to be broken and three games left to do it. At the rate Saint Mary's soccer player Eileen Newell is going, the single season scoring record title will be hers by the end of the season. The record was set in 1992 by Megan Dalsaso, who scored 15 goals during the season. Newell currently has 13 goals.

"No matter what happens, if I break the record or if I don't, I've enjoyed playing the game and playing with the women on the team," said the senior forward. "It's something I'd like to beat, but winning the next three games is more important."

It is this team attitude which truly defines Newell's playing style. As a senior and co-captain Newell feels that it is one of her responsibilities to keep the team together. Being a team leader is a responsibility that Newell is willing to take on. "What happens to the team is important to me," expressed Newell. "I'm proud to be a teammate and I'm proud to be a Belle."

In her three years as a starter for the Belles, Newell has played every position on the field. She has done so because there were positions which needed to be filled. As an underclassman Newell was willing to step in and play where her team needed her. This year Newell has been placed in perhaps the most natural position for her on the field.

Her scoring success demonstrates her ability as a forward. In Tuesday's game against Defiance College Newell scored three times. This itself puts her in the record book for most goals by a player versus one opponent. She also scored three goals when playing against Franklin College in September.

Soccer has been a part of Newell's life for quite a long time. The Allen Park, Mich., native started when she was only four years old by playing on a recreation team in her city. At Cabrini High School in Allen Park, Newell was a member of the varsity soccer team for four years. She holds school records in most assists in a season and career assists. In 1994, the Detroit Free Press named her one of 10 Michigan Student Scholar Athletes.

A "love for the game" keeps Newell active in the sport after all these years.

"I get the biggest rush being on the field," commented Newell. "I enjoy being out there."

Big East honors for Boylan

Special to The Observer

Notre Dame freshman setter Denise Boylan has been named the Big East conference volleyball rookie of the week for Oct. 6-12.

The Observer/Joe Stark
Freshman Denise Boylan has set the Irish all season.

Dame extended its winning streak to six matches with victories over Illinois State (3-2), at Boston College (3-1) and at Providence (3-0). The Irish hit a combined .331 for the week, with Boylan averaging 16.40 assists per game. She was second among Irish players during the week with 34 digs, including a match and career-high 21 in the exciting win over ISU. Boylan added five blocks assists, a service ace and six kills on .375 hitting for the week.

Boylan is the first freshman to open the season as Notre Dame's primary setter since 1988. She has helped the Irish surge to a Big East-leading .258 season hitting pct., which ranks third in team history and second best by a Notre Dame squad since 1986.

Behind Boylan's setting and a veteran corps of hitters, the Notre Dame offense is running away with the Big East offensive statistics. The Irish are averaging .357 hitting in conference matches (Seton Hall is second, at .270) and 17.92 kills per game in league action (Villanova is next, at 16.00).

Boylan leads the Big East in overall matches with 12.11 assists/gm, which ranks fourth in Irish history. She also ranks third on the '97 Irish squad with 133 digs (2.46/gm) while her other season totals include 36 kills on .247 hitting, 11 service aces (third on the team) and 28

USC coach Robinson vows to turn tide

Trojans need win to save season and head coach

By JASON SPENCER
Sports Editor, Daily Trojan (USC)

With all of the talk surrounding USC head coach John Robinson and his job security these days, Robinson quelled all speculation at his weekly media luncheon Tuesday and vowed to turn the team around.

"In terms of the speculation about me or anyone else, if we don't turn this program around, if we don't face this issue and make something happen ... then our football team should go in a new direction," Robinson said.

"I'd be the first to say that ... if we can get out of it, then we'll move forward. If we don't, then I think it would be appropriate for us to change."

Robinson said that it was time to band together in a sort of "Million Man March" to bring support together from a multitude of sources.

"Don't write me nasty letters, don't tell me this or that,"

Robinson said. "I'm a really good football coach who's not doing too well right now. If we don't do better, then I won't be here."

"But right now what I'm doing is trying my absolute best to get this football team to play to its maximum potential. We intend to do that. We're not going to be distracted by other things."

As a solution to the recent funk that the USC football program has fallen into, Robinson said that he, USC athletic director Mike Garrett and USC President Steven B. Sample are working together through the "crisis," and that they are doing their best to solve the problem.

"There will be no divisiveness among us," Robinson said. "There will be no one saying anything other than, 'We're going to be together and we're going to face this issue and do the best we can.' We are going to do this as Trojans."

Robinson said that he had "a series of conversations and an understanding" with Sample and Garrett after Saturday's loss to Arizona State in Tempe,
