ND negotiates for discount computers

By STEPHEN REIDY

News Staff

Students may be able to purchase personal computers with help from the University in the next few months, though no final agreement with a computer company has yet been reached.

The University has entered the "formative stage of negotiations" regarding the acquisition of a large number of personal computers, according to James Wruck, director of Notre Dame's Computing Center.

Although the details of any arrangements remain under a non-disclosure policy, "bulk discounts from vendors for personal computers" are the subject of the negotiations, according to Kelly Havens, director of User Services at the Computing Center.

According to economics professor Jennifer Warlick, Apple Computer has approached a number of institutions with contract proposals for the sale of computers at a discount. Warlick said she is not certain whether Notre Dame will be chosen by Apple to receive the discounts. She said the contract, if accepted, would make computers available to students at a 60 percent discount.

Several economics professors here have told their classes that the

the University will make the soon-to-be-announced MacIntosh model by Apple Computer available to students at low cost.

Wruck said the University is "trying to communicate with any (of the computer companies)."

Wruck cited the growth of computer use on campus and the fact that the "equipment here is not large enough to handle the load" at present, as the main reasons for the negotiations. The response time of the mainframe computer "is pretty reasonable," said Wruck, "but the system is five years old... and we're faced with the problem that many constituencies on campus will want personal computers" in the future.

Rapidly changing technology is a consideration in the final selection of a personal computer model. "You don't want students to invest a thousand or two if when they walk out the door (the computers) are obsolete, useless," said Wruck.

Wruck declined to comment when asked if his remark meant that the students would pay for the computers.

Incoming freshmen at Carnegie-Mellon University will soon be required to buy a personal computer as part of that university's pioneering plan.

Cuban prisoners

Cubans captured by the United States during the action in Grenada last week erect a tent as part of their new living quarters near Point Salines airport in Grenada. The new accommodations are for both Cuban and Grenadian prisoners.

Cuban prisoners flown to Havana

Associated Press

PORT SALINES, Grenada — Fifty-seven wounded Cuban prisoners and ten Cuban medics were flown from Grenada to Havana yesterday and greeted on the airport runway by President Fidel Castro.

The Cubans wounded in the U.S.-led invasion of Grenada were flown to Barbados on an American military cargo plane, then transferred to a Red Cross jet for the flight to Havana.

Castro stood at the foot of the gangway while the Cubans were taken from the plane and transferred to ambulances. He said a few words to each, but made no speech.

Cuba claimed earlier that U.S. forces on Grenada had arrested two Cuban diplomats and were holding the Cuban diplomatic corps inside its embassy in St. George's.

White House spokesman Larry

Speakes said in Washington that U.S. forces surrounded the Cuban Embassy in Grenada in cooperation with Governor General Sir Paul Scoon's orders.

Scoon, the British-appointed governor general who is trying to establish a temporary government in Grenada, on Tuesday gave the Cuban diplomatic corps in Grenada 24 hours to get out.

Cuban has said it would not withdraw its mission in St. George's until all Cuban prisoners were evacuated, and U.S. troops would have to use force to get them out sooner. An estimated 600 prisoners remained on the island by Wednesday afternoon.

Scoon's expulsion order also applied to Soviet and Libyan diplomats. There was no word from those countries whether they would leave.

The U.N. General Assembly voted

108-9 with 27 abstentions to adopt a non-binding resolution calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Grenada. Those opposed included the United States and some of the Caribbean nations that participated in the Oct. 25 invasion.

The Pentagon said 18 U.S. servicemen had been killed and 91 wounded in Grenada. It said 599 U.S. citizens and 121 foreign nationals have been flown off the island.

The Pentagon said 1,800 Marines were being detached from the Grenada operation to head for Lebanon. Occupation of Grenada has been taken over by about 5,000 soldiers of the 82nd Airborne Division.

The Pentagon also said Marines on Carriacou Island had been "relieved of duty" by troops of the 82nd Airborne.

Martin Luther King holiday established

Editor's Note: Information for this story was also gathered by The Associated Press.

By JOAN GIBLIN

News Staff

With Martin Luther King's widow at his side, President Reagan yesterday signed legislation that he once opposed, honoring the slain civil rights leader with a national holiday each year.

Reagan said King had "stirred our nation to the very depths of its soul" in battling racial discrimination.

Congressional leaders and veterans of the civil-rights movement, including Jesse Jackson, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, and Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, filled the Rose Garden for the signing ceremony.

The proceedings climaxed as the crowd softly sang, "We Shall Overcome" — the anthem of King's crusade against segregation.

Professor Edward Goerner, of the Notre Dame government department, said in an interview this week that King "represents a major coming to consciousness that we haven't yet fully solved in this society. He took a powerful and moving stance on the race problem."

McGuire's owner defends addition

By MARGARET FOSMOE

Managing Editor

Additional legal action is brewing in the Five Points tavern district.

State Representative B. Patrick Bauer, partial owner of Bridget McGuire's Filling Station, says he will file suit this week to defend an addition to the tavern.

Last week the South Bend Board of Zoning Appeals dismissed Bauer's request that stop work and demolition orders issued by the city be set aside, saying that it has no jurisdiction in the case.

Bridget McGuire's, a popular student bar at 1025 South Bend Ave., is owned by Bauer and his sister Teresa Bauer.

The Bauers constructed an addition to the building in July after obtaining a building permit from the city. They were later ordered by the city building department to tear down the addition because it violates a city zoning ordinance.

"They simply ducked the issue," said Bauer. "The law is clearly on our side." Bauer plans to seek a disjunction.

The orders are based on an ordinance that prohibits additions to taverns or other controlled-use businesses if they are located within 1,000 feet of two or more other controlled-use businesses. There are three bars in the immediate vicinity of Bridget McGuire's.

Bauer claims this ordinance did not hold when another local controlled-use business, the Mint Julep, 525 E. Washington Avenue, was allowed to expand several years ago.

The zoning board was advised by the deputy city attorney that the controlled-use ordinance had no provision for the issuance of a variance. The board followed this advice by voting to dismiss Bauer's petition.

The board also refused to render a decision on the legality of a parking agreement Bauer sought as part of the building expansion. Bauer has negotiated a lease with the owner of a nearby parking lot. The board was advised that the parking agreement is irrelevant as long as the addition itself is not permitted.

Bauer complains that the dismissal is forcing him to take the city to court to defend a building permit that the city itself issued. He says he is also considering suing Mayor Roger O. Parent personally.

"The mayor is forcing me to spend thousands of dollars to defend (the city's) original position. I am being forced to defend the integrity of the building department," said Bauer.

Bauer recently filed suit against Phillip Slatt, owner of a piece of neighboring property. Slatt had contended that the tavern's beer cooler was located on his property. Bauer says he has had his property surveyed and has proof that the cooler is on his land.

In Brief

Catherine Hunter, who has been held for eight weeks by police in South Africa, is being held as a "potential state witness" in an upcoming treason trial, according to South African Foreign Minister Roelof Botha. Botha's remarks were reported in an article in yesterday's New York Times. Botha spoke at a news conference at which Hunter's mother, Lucienne, asked whether South Africa's new constitution would protect the rights of those held by authorities. Botha told Lucienne Hunter that her daughter would not be affected by the Constitution as the security laws under which Hunter is being held are intended to guard the Constitution against "those who have no interest in democracy." Hunter was mentioned in an October 18 Observer editorial by Notre Dame Professor Peter Walsh. — The Observer

Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth Dam said yesterday that U.S. forces have uncovered secret agreements calling for the Soviet Union, North Korea and Cuba to provide Grenada with $37.8 million worth of military equipment. Dam told a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee that the pacts, found in various places on Grenada, also called for 40 Cuban military advisers to be stationed there and for Grenadian military officials to be trained in the Soviet Union. — AP

CBS News President Edward M. Joyce told Congress yesterday that the U.S. government resorted to "unprecedented censorship" in barring the news media from covering the initial days of the invasion of Grenada. Joyce, whose views were supported by David Brinkley of ABC and John Chancellor of NBC, called the government's policy a new relationship with the media — "a relationship virtually unknown in U.S. history." The news executive testified before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice.

Four aftershocks of a devastating earthquake that destroyed 44 villages jolted eastern Turkey overnight, killing two more people and frightening thousands of survivors sleeping outside in near-freezing weather. The martial-law government said search teams using cranes and bulldozers dug 93 more bodies from the rubble of Sunday's quake, raising the total number of dead from the series of tremors to 1,332. — AP

"The Politics of Energy — Ten Years After the First Crisis" will be the topic of a lecture to be presented tonight by Washington writer and political columnist James Ridgeway. The talk, to be given at 8 p.m. in the Architecture Auditorium, is the sixth annual Joseph P. Molony Memorial Lecture. The author of eight books dealing with energy and resources, Ridgeway will discuss the world competition and dependence in the decade following the Arab oil embargo of 1973. He is editor of The Elements, a journal dealing with world resources, and is a former associate editor of the New Republic. Dr. Alvin Plantinga, professor of philosophy, will lecture on "Advice to Christian Philosophers" at 1 p.m. tomorrow in the Center for Continuing Education auditorium, during ceremonies inaugurating him as the O'Brien Professor of Philosophy. A specialist in the philosophy of religion, Plantinga taught occasionally at Notre Dame beginning in 1973, and he joined the full-time faculty in 1982. The O'Brien Chair in Philosophy memorializes Father John A. O'Brien, a theology professor and author-in-residence at the University for 40 years. O'Brien became the first cleric to receive Notre Dame's Lactare Medal, the most significant award given American Catholics. He died in 1980. — The Observer

Student editors vs. administrators: Conflicts make newspapers tick

Paul McGinn
Executive Editor

Inside Thursday

Editors of student newspapers at Catholic universities say administrators are more concerned about their public relations image than anything else.

Administrators often seem to walk a tightrope, of seeking the prestige of Ivy League colleges while trying to appease conservative alumni and parents by finding ways to retain a distinctly Catholic image.

Despite their ties, however, many universities are not recognized as Catholic institutions by applicants, among them Cyndi Soete, editor of St. Louis' University News, who admitted, "I didn't even know St. Louis was a Catholic university until I got here."

But once she became editor, Soete soon realized St. Louis, like other Catholic universities, was unmistakably different from secular schools. That difference often produces tension between the student newspaper's desire to know and the administration's desire to preserve a Catholic identity.

Says Teresa Hines at The Marquette Tribune "a cloud (is) always over your head." And while almost every student paper is free of prior censorship, administrators are quick to warn, "You're pushing your luck, and you'd better watch it," when the paper treads on controversial ground, Says Hines.

Most editors have received warnings neither to print pro-abortion editorials nor accept abortion clinic advertisements. Though Boston College's Heights remains free of university control and has openly challenged the Church's stand on contraception, premarital sex, and abortion, Heights editor John Carpenter says that advertisements for contraceptives and family planning clinics have never appeared — such ads would offend predominantly conservative students.

Catholic doctrine, though, is not the only touchy subject for university officials. Crime remains one of the most talked about and yet most guarded issues. Assaults and rapes keep campus security forces busy, both in solving the crimes and in keeping those crimes out of newspaper headlines. After an alleged rape at Boston College two years ago, school officials refused to allow Heights reporters to see the daily security logs, claiming the records were private. Heights sued to open the books and won.

But student newspapers also challenge administrators beyond the campus. A Catholic university president is a prime catch for any group seeking some sort of educated moral approval of its cause. But presidents do not always seem to know what they are endorsing.

Last winter, a business-scientific group called the Bi-Partisan Appeal advertised in the The New York Times, asking for, among other things, "a major and sustained defense buildup" in its call for economic rebirth. Both Father Theodore Hesburgh of Notre Dame and Father J. Donald Monan of Boston College endorsed the document. Both The Observer and The Heights decried the endorsement.

Carpenter says that Monan "didn't even seem to have read it" after interviewing Monan about the ad. Carpenter says the ad is only one of many such misguided attempts of university officials to gain recognition.

While outside groups receive red carpet treatment at most universities, student editors can rarely schedule an interview to talk about pressing campus problems. Although she accepts the president's role as a fundraiser who is "always gone on a lot of trips," one editor says that even when the president is on campus,

"he isn't very visible at all."

Even when university presidents or their assistants are available for comment, few accept the blame for their mistakes, according to Bob Poinchtera of Fordham's Ram. When The Ram tries to find out why something went wrong and who is responsible, officials invoke the "ostrich system," says Poinchtera. "Everyone puts his head in the sand and points the other way," he says.

Yet, battles with administrators are only the high-point of student newspaper confrontations. The day-to-day hassles over assignments and layout remain the greatest time consumers for editors. And with few journalism majors or advisors, each editor must persevere to complete a professional obligation. As Carpenter puts it, most editors "are resigned to the fact that one has to be a student newspaper — we always make mistakes, but we'll be the first to admit it."

Class to study presidential campaign

By Mark Potter
News Staff

A class examining the 1984 presidential campaign as it develops and its coverage by the news media will be offered through the American Studies department next semester.

The class will examine "the presidential candidates as they appear to the public via the news media or through their own paid advertising," according to Assistant Professor of American Studies Robert Schmuhl. He added that the class is novel in its analysis of the American political system and the election as it develops from day to day.

The course will be jointly taught by Schmuhl and Max Lerner, Welch Chair Professor of American Studies.

The nature of the current communication revolution, the role of ideology in contemporary politics, and the role of political parties today will be among the topics discussed.

"The class grew out of our interest in American political life and the media today. We also thought that a course like this would be a valuable one in dealing with the upcoming election," explained Schmuhl.

Guest speakers, possibly including candidates campaigning in the South Bend area, will be featured throughout the course. Lectures and open, objective discussions will comprise the other sessions.

The fact that the presidential campaigns will be occurring during the same time as the class is taught will "add life to the class" said Schmuhl. He added that it will be a "highly contemporary class and will examine the campaigns as they evolve."

The class is being offered as an open American Studies class, available to all students. However some restrictions may be placed on the number of students in the class after the initial registration is done and the number of students who registered for the class is determined.

Snite to exhibit Rembrandt's works

By GWEN TADDONIO
News Staff

Almost one-fourth of Rembrandt's famous etchings will be on display at the Snite Museum of Art this December. These extraordinary etchings focus on the Old and New Testament stories Rembrandt enjoyed portraying.

The museum's chief curator, Stephen Spiro, emphasized the distinction between Rembrandt and the other artists of 17th century Holland. He explained that since Rembrandt's purpose was to please his patrons, his etching took on a more intimate tone. He continued, "Most geniuses stand out in their time, and Rembrandt is a prime example of this." He cited the artist's creation of modern and expressive etchings when the times called for otherwise. His works exemplify the freedom he took to deviate from the norm.

The biblical etchings featured in the exhibition are printed from metal plates made during the artist's lifetime. Possessing the quality of 17th century Dutch art, the prints have a uniqueness that other Rembrandt prints may not have because of later reproductions in more recent centuries.

Presently, the Rembrandt etchings are on a long-term loan. But Spiro affirms that an announcement will be made near the time the display opens officially giving the collection to the Snite Museum. This exceptional display opens publicly on Sunday, December 11th from 1 to 4 p.m. in the Drawings, Prints, and Photographs Gallery. The exhibit will run through January.

Picture contest discussed at SMC

By EDWARD NOLAN
News Staff

How strange can you be?
Any section from a Notre Dame or Saint Mary's dorm can find out by competing in the Annual Crazy Picture Hunt. The craziest photo will win $100 and a pizza party.
The contest, sponsored by The Picture Man and Domino's Pizza, was discussed last night at a meeting of the Saint Mary's Programming Board.

Each Crazy picture must contain at least seventy percent of the section to be eligible to participate in the best-picture vote. Each picture will be posted on campus and students will determine the winner by contributing pennies to their favorite picture. All proceeds will benefit the United Way Fund.

Also discussed at the meeting was the Board's student survey of Saint Mary's activities. The survey will be conducted orally on Wednesday and Thursday during dinner. Co-Ex will be cancelled for both those days. Students will have an opportunity to meet student government officials and the information from the survey will provide student government with the vital information needed to plan events on the Saint Mary's Campus.

... Holiday

Some politicians, including the president, had questioned the worth of spending government money by establishing yet another paid national holiday.

Goerner, however, said the cost would be minimal. The importance of the holiday to the civil-rights movement justifies the expense.

"The interest in the holiday now is both to honor King and to call attention to the fact that we haven't yet solved the race problem," Goerner said. "It is still with us."

Some congressman also had argued that the country should wait for history to put King more into perspective before setting up the holiday. Goerner, however, said King's achievements have earned him the holiday — an honor bestowed on only one other American: George Washington.

In the case of Washington's holiday, "There was not any burning public problem with Washington's action that needed to be addressed immediately," Goerner said. "He was honored simply because he deserved it."

At the signing ceremonies today, King's widow, Coretta Scott King, told the crowd, "America is a more democratic nation, a more just nation, a more peaceful nation because Martin Luther King became her pre-eminent non-violent commander."

While saying the nation had made huge strides in civil rights, Reagan declared, "traces of bigotry still mar America."

The legislation makes the third Monday in January a legal public holiday, beginning in January, 1986.

Hesburgh joins freedom effort

Special to The Observer

Washington — University President Father Theodore Hesburgh has joined Sen. Charles H. Percy (R-Ill.) in a new inter-faith effort to promote religious rights in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

Percy, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, invited national, political and religious leaders to join the Advisory Council on Religious Rights in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, which he will chair.

In announcing today that Hesburgh is joining the original Honorary Board of the Advisory Council, Percy said, "I know that Father Hesburgh has a longstanding and heartfelt interest in the major issues of international affairs, and his involvement with the Advisory Council will be an inspiration to all of the members of the council."

Dean Rusk, William Rogers and Alexander Haig Jr. have also joined as founders of the council. Other original members of the advisory group include Joseph Cardinal Bernardin, Archbishop of Chicago; His Eminence Iakovos, Archbishop of the Greek Orthodox Church of North and South America; and Sen. Alan J. Dixon (D-Ill.).

The first meeting of the Advisory Council will take place in Chicago on Wednesday, Nov. 9. Council members will consult regularly thereafter to identify cases, projects and other specific needs for religious believers behind the Iron

"Members of many religious denominations are harassed and discriminated against, their places of worship, theological study and tools of religious practice limited, and their applications for emigration routinely subjected to long delays and in many cases denied. This is a continuing tragedy," Percy said.

The council will advise Percy on matters of concern to co-religionists in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. Projects to receive the council's attention include responses to the anti-Semitic campaign in the Soviet Union, the continuing harassment of Catholic priests in Lithuania and recent press reports of a renewed tax on emigrants from Romania.

Men of ND Calendar sent to printer

By SARAH WRIGHT
News Staff

"The Men of Notre Dame Calendar is on its way to the printers," announced Elaine Hocter at the Saint Mary's Board of Governance meeting earlier this week.

The calendar should be returned by late November.

Barbara Racine, manager of the Shaheen Bookstore at Saint Mary's, has received a request from the producers of the calendar to sell it at the bookstore. A representative from a women's hall at Notre Dame told her that the calendar was a "fund-raiser sponsored by the hall to raise money for charity." However, Racine said the woman never gave her name or the names of the hall or charity.

Racine told the woman she would "think about it," but expressed concern that "it might turn out to be a pin-up calendar, and those aren't the values we support at Saint Mary's." She also added "Selling that kind of calendar would be like stocking Playgirl."

Hocter proposed that she thought the calendar would be a popular item and should be sold in the bookstore. Both Hocter and Racine stressed that the calendar will have to be "in good taste." The bookstore maintains the policy of examining merchandise before ordering it, and Racine plans to continue this policy.

Complaints were voiced at the meeting concerning the inadequate business hours of the First Source Bank branch in the Haggard College Center. When asked by a Board member why they were being "so stingy with their hours," Hocter explained that the bank was working on an extension of branch hours. She added that the twenty-four-hour teller will not be installed until January.

Signups begin this week for the Oxfam Fast in the Saint Mary's dining hall. "We'd like to have as much participation as possible," said Katie Hoban, who presented the Programming Committee report.

The Du Lac Review Committee will continue analyzing exactly what rights students have. The Committee is planning a public hearing on Du Lac. The committee also intends to clarify exactly how much power the administration has over student activities both on campus and off. "I would like to know how far (the power) extends and to make sure it is clear to the students," said Gleason.

A blood drive has been scheduled for Nov. 10, 11, and 12. Signups for the drive will begin Wednesday.

On Nov. 9, an art print sale will be held in the LeMans lobby from 10 a.m.-4 p.m. Ten percent of the profits will go to the SMC Student Government.

Fall Day is scheduled for Saturday Nov. 12. Tours of the Saint Mary's campus will be given to high school juniors and seniors. Representatives will be available for information and questions that day.

Dean Roemer to speak to Judicial Council

By JOSEPH MURPHY
News Staff

Dean of Students James Roemer will speak at the Judicial Council's workshop for all board members Tuesday to "tell what our role is," said Judicial Coordinator Bob Gleason at last night's meeting of the council.

Chuck O'Malley, a member of the Special Events Committee which is planning the workshop said, "It gives the judicial board members who have not been that active a chance to see what goes on in a trial. They will be better prepared when they present their cases. It gives them an idea of what their responsibilities are."

Also discussed at last night's meeting was the problem of low attendance on the part of council members at the meeting. Gleason began the meeting by saying, "It looks like our attendance is a little low this evening." Ten of the 28 members were not present. Gleason commented, "It's just natural because people forget or have too much work to do."

To alleviate the problem the publicity committee will send flyers to remind members of meetings.

He stated the five committees which comprise the council are making progress.

As coordinator of the judicial council, Gleason has overall control. "I do not want to make this a one man show," he said. Gleason said he wants students to contact the council if they have suggestions and he requested all council members to attend future functions.

Ronald Reagan's political fallout

For the first time since Lyndon Johnson's Administration, American troops are engaged in actual fighting in two areas — Lebanon and Grenada. For a president who wants a second term this is dangerous stuff politically. Ronald Reagan knew it when he made the Grenada decision. Is the political fallout of both wars likely to doom him or re-elect him?

Max Lerner

The Max Lerner Column

It depends on how he handles the political potentials of the two military operations. Thus far, especially on Grenada, he has had luck and shown skill.

The luck lay in the fortuitous timing of the Grenadian operation, which happened to overlap with the bloody Beirut massacre, and its success gave the American people a chance to balance their grief with some positive news, and retrieve their damaged self-confidence.

The skill lay in managing a political-military operation which — despite the foul up by intelligence — did achieve its objectives at a small cost in casualties.

The risks were there. A hastily contrived operation can abort, as Jimmy Carter's hostage rescue mission did. A military disaster could have become a political disaster. Reagan was able to mix pride and buoyancy with sadness by joining Grenada with Lebanon in his accounting to the people.

Do these two operations add up to a new "Reagan Doctrine." Reagan critics would like to attach a catch name to his foreign policy, as they did to his economics.

But the Lebanon and Grenada interventions are too dissimilar to form a "Doctrine." On Grenada, Reagan is attacked for doing too much too fast, on Lebanon for doing too little too slowly. In one case the American military faced a Cuban force that fought stubbornly but had no anti-aircraft missiles, in the other it would face a Syrian force equipped with the latest Soviet missile technology.

If there were a Reagan Doctrine in force on Lebanon now, instead of an appeasement operation to hand over power to Syria by a power-sharing plan, America would find some way of striking at the jugular, which is Syria, and changing the new power balance that Assad profits from.

But this could involve an expanded war, and would kill Reagan's re-election chances. Which is why it is not being seriously studied.

Yet even if there is no Reagan Doctrine the president has changed the face and climate of American foreign policy with the Grenada operation. The "resoluteness" which he promised turns out to be something other than rhetoric.

The support which the Grenada policy is getting may portend a better chance for a Reagan election victory than I have given him. All he needs to do, at some point, is to pull the Marines out of Lebanon with some face-saving honor, and patch up cosmetically the damage the American image is suffering in Lebanon.

Walter Mondale says we should have asked permission from all the Contadora countries before moving, and that Reagan's action "undermines our ability to effectively criticize what the Soviets have done."

He must have been talking to his old mentor, Jimmy Carter, because it is the same tender-minded hogwash that brought the decline of American power and prestige under Carter, and would do so again under his former assistant and disciple.

Happily John Glenn has had the sense to bide his time and keep his tongue on Grenada.

Notre Dame's duty to disclose investments

The most confounding question of the issue of where and how Notre Dame invests its $250 million endowment is why Notre Dame does not make public its investment portfolio. Notre Dame claims to support the Sullivan principles, guidelines for companies investing in racist South Africa. However by refusing to disclose its investments, the University makes both discussion about and verification of this alleged support impossible.

Michael Skelly

Back again

Reasons for not disclosing are apparently not forthcoming, but the most obvious one is that Notre Dame has something to hide. If in fact there is nothing to hide, why not disclose the investments and exonerate Notre Dame of all charges of investing in companies engaged in ethically questionable practices.

The University's failure to disclose its investments flies in the face of a university's central purpose — to freely discuss and criticize. To quote a prominent spokesman on the role of the university, Father Theodore Hesburgh, "universities have no monopoly on the misuse of freedom, but few institutions on earth need the climate of freedom to the extent that universities do, whatever the risk involved."

In The Hesburgh Papers, he says that "the university has always been dedicated uniquely to criticism of itself and everything else, even, or perhaps especially, in the case of the Catholic university." Sadly enough this is not the case at Notre Dame. Numerous other Catholic and secular (heaven forbid!) schools have disclosed their investment portfolios and opened them to public scrutiny. This fact has not penetrated the cloud of moral superiority that hangs over the Administration Building, and Notre Dame remains characteristically behind the times.

Notre Dame still prefers to have its investment decisions made by a handful of administrators, tucked safely away from costly ethical considerations. Students, faculty and even alumni are denied a forum to criticize these investments. Information about them is simply not to be had.

Notre Dame students have a right and a responsibility to know where the money that helps finance their education comes from. By refusing to disclose, the University is denying its students an opportunity to deal on a personal level with some of the most important questions of our day, namely those of formulating a system of responsible capitalism, influencing and overcoming systems of exploitation (such as those in apartheid South Africa) and acting ethically in the corporate world. This denial makes Notre Dame's claim of offering students a morally based education smack of moralistic pooh-pahing.

"We should involve students in every legitimate way to the extent that they are willing to assume responsibility, as well as to assert their rights," says Hesburgh. If Notre Dame refuses to disclose where its money is invested, how are students ever going to begin to assume responsibility, let alone assert their rights?

Is Notre Dame hiding something from us then? Is the administration simply afraid of criticism? Or are investments beyond the pale of student criticism? If the answer to all these questions is no, then the only question is, "Why not disclose?" "As a professional class of university men and women," Hesburgh wonders, "do we effectively bring to our times the wisdom, the insight, the courage, and the moral judgment that should characterize our profession?" Do we, Notre Dame?

P. O. Box Q

Don't save us

Dear Editor:

U.S. citizens in Nicaragua refuse to serve as pretext for another invasion. On the morning of Oct. 25, 1983, U.S. citizens living in Nicaragua awoke to learn that military forces from our country under orders from President Reagan had violated the sovereignty of the free Caribbean country of Grenada, to overthrow its de facto government.

As in past cases of U.S. intervention in the region, the current administration is seeking to justify its attack on Grenada by arguing that it was necessary to reestablish democracy and to rescue American citizens from an atmosphere of violence and uncertainty. On the basis of our experience here in Nicaragua, we reject both of these claims as profoundly hypocritical.

Nicaragua is struggling to construct a democratic system after half a century of U.S.-supported Somoza dictatorship. If the Reagan administration favored democracy it would not now be financing the remnants of Somoza's military to block this effort. The alliance between the Reagan administration and these forces is precisely what threatens our security. The counterrevolutionaries have already killed hundreds of Nicaraguan civilians and several foreigners, like ourselves.

It is widely recognized that the Reagan administration intends the destruction of the Nicaraguan revolution. We will not allow the safety of U.S. citizens to be used as a pretext for a direct U.S. invasion of Nicaragua as has occurred in Grenada; nor under any circumstances do we want to be "rescued" from the Nicaraguan government by U.S. or U.S.-funded occupation troops. We stand beside the vast majority of Nicaraguans, who together with their government, continually express their desire for peace. It is only peace and commitment to respect Nicaragua's sovereignty, that will guarantee our safety and that of our Nicaraguan brothers and sisters.

Cheerleaders

Dear Editor:

Congratulations and thanks to the cheerleaders for their exceptional spirit and contribution to the Notre Dame-Army game on October 15.

We at the the Meadowlands in New Jersey enjoyed the enthusiasm of the squad throughout the entire game.

The cheerleaders rotated around the entire stadium — with the exception of the forbidden Army territory.

We were proud of the Irish cheerleaders.

Champion racehorse destroyed

Associated Press
 ARCADIA, Calif. — Roving Boy, a 1982 champion 2-year-old and a winner of six of nine career races, was destroyed yesterday after winning the $64,250 feature race at Santa Anita, then breaking both hind legs in a fall just past the finish line.
 Jockey Eddie Delahoussaye was shaken up in the fall, but was released after examination at the track's first aid room.
 Roving Boy, whose earnings of $800,425 last year was the highest ever for a 2-year-old, sustained tibia fractures in both legs, track officials said. One of the bones was broken in so many pieces "we wouldn't have had enough to work on," said Dr. Greg Ferraro, one of several veterinarians who worked at saving the colt.

Owned and bred by R.E. Hibbert, Roving Boy won the Oak Tree meeting event after swinging out of a pocket near the head of the homestretch and was a nose in front of Hula Blaze at the end of the 1 1/16 mile Alibhai Handicap.

Mourners pay Halas tribute

Associated Press

CHICAGO — George Musso, Hugh Gallarneau, Bill Osmanski, George McAfee, George Blanda, Sid Luckman, George Connor, Ed Sprinkle — they're just some of the old Bears in a last lineup to pay final respects to their coach, George Halas.

A viewing was held Wednesday night for "Papa Bear" Halas, who died Monday of cancer at age 88. Crowds began collecting several hours early outside the North Side funeral home to pay homage to the man who pioneered the National Football League as owner-coach of the Chicago Bears.

Team officials said donations will go to the Brian Piccolo Cancer Research Fund, which commemorates the Bears' courageous running back who died of the disease in 1970.

Funeral services Thursday at St. Ita's Church were expected to draw hundreds of people.

Jerry Vainisi, named Bear general manager in one of Halas' last club-associated acts, said NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle and virtually all club owners were expected to attend the funeral.

He said the Bears had considered wearing black arm bands, "but we decided Mr. Halas would not have wanted that."

Mayor Harold Washington requested a special session of the city council to honor Halas, Vainisi said, but the Bears asked that such honors come later.

Mike Ditka, the Bear alumnus who was hand-picked by Halas two years ago to coach the team, said players will be bussed to the funeral services and then return to Lake Forest for practice.

"It will be interesting to see how we will react (against the Los Angeles Rams Sunday)," said Ditka. "We've tried to dedicate the year to him. But unfortunately that's kind of shallow when you have the kind of record (3-6) we have."

Art Rooney, Pittsburgh Steelers' owner and one of Halas' oldest friends, may have summed it up best:

"He had a great life. I'm sure he had the life he wanted."

Referees' strike continues

Associated Press

BOSTON — Picketing referees, led by union chief Richie Phillips, handed out whistles to fans going in to last night's Celtics home opener and later entered Boston Garden amid scattered applause.

"Blow your whistle on scab referees," said one sign carried on the picket line outside Boston Garden before the Celtics' game with the Milwaukee Bucks.

"The whistles are just another gimmick to call attention to our position," said veteran referee Ed Rush.

Prior to the start of the game, the Celtics announced twice over the public address system that anyone "throwing an object or blowing a horn or whistle will be ejected immediately."

The referees have been without a contract since Sept. 1, and the league has used substitute referees since the exhibition campaign.

Boston was the fifth site that the union referees had picketed since the regular season began last Friday. They earlier picketed games in Philadelphia, New York, Indianapolis and East Rutherford, N.J.

Reads from Paul Denny reacts to Cy Young award

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — John Denny of the Philadelphia Phillies turned to the New Testament to explain how he felt about winning the National League Cy Young Award on yesterday.

The winningest pitcher in the NL read from Paul, saying the passage summed up how he felt about the baseball honor:

"And I do all things for the sake of the gospel that I may become a fellow partaker of it. Do you not know that those who run in a race all run, but only one receives the prize? run in such a way that you may win and that everyone who competes in the game exercises self control in all things..."

Denny, 30, compiled a 19-6 record in leading the Phillies to the NL East title. He had the second best earned run average, 2.37, and six wins without a loss in the team's September drive to the division championship.

Denny was the No. 4 starter at the beginning of the season, but when other pitchers experienced some problems, he became the team's stopper. He was 13-1 after the All-Star break, and accounted for the Phillies' only World Series victory in a 4-1 elimination by the Baltimore Orioles.

... Dorsey

weaknesses. Dorsey is no exception. Both he and his coach agree that Dorsey excels in stopping the run versus the pass.

Dorsey notes, "On the run you can move towards the flow a lot easier and faster."

"On the pass plays you have to battle for foot position with the offensive lineman and then you have to chase the quarterback."

Dorsey enjoys playing right tackle because of the freedom he has. He no longer has just one particular assignment on each play. When the Irish were calling the line slots contain and flip, he would be removed for certain plays.

"It was hard to have consistency coming out for certain plays," says Dorsey.

"I feel more comfortable now."

The improvement in Dorsey's play has been continual since his arrival on campus as a freshman. However, everything seemed to come together in the South Carolina game. Dorsey attributes this in part to the type of offense the Gamecocks used.

Dorsey recalls, "Against South Carolina we faced an option type offense. I played better in that game because I like defending against the option."

The mention of the matchup between Dorsey and Fralic brings a big smile from Dorsey.

He says, "I am really looking forward to playing against him. I have read about him since I was in high school and when I visited Pitt he was my host."

"If I'm in full health, it will be a really good matchup."

Coach Robertson reflects the same idea. "The Dorsey-Fralic matchup will be one of three key matchups. Their battle will be a great one."

"It will be worth the price of admission."

When the Irish and the Panthers do battle under the lights Saturday, there will be seven post-season bowl scouts observing. No doubt the winner will take a big step toward a bowl appearance.

As most people will be concentrating on where the ball is when the Irish defense is on the field, it might be interesting to watch just the Pitt offensive line and the Irish defensive line. In particular look for Eric Dorsey, No. 71, and Bill Fralic, No. 79, to put on a show worth the price of admission.

Irish sophomore Eric Dorsey will be at the forefront of the line battle when Notre Dame and Pittsburgh meet this Saturday. He will be facing Panther junior Bill Fralic, one of the NCAA's premier defensive linemen. The matchup proves to be a good one. See Tim Doyle's story on page 12.

First round playoff action begins Sunday in men's interhall football

By TOM ANTONINI
Sports Writer

With the completion of the regular season on the Thursday before October break, six teams are now set for the 1983 men's interhall football playoffs. Beginning this Sunday Dillon, Flanner, Alumni, Sorin, Stanford, and Howard will begin postseason action to determine this year's interhall champion.

The playoff picture was very much in doubt up until the last four games of the regular season, which turned out to be defensive battles for the most part. Two of the games, Stanford vs. Alumni and Zahn vs. Holy Cross, ended in scoreless ties. In other action, Howard nipped St. Ed's 2-0 and Sorin blanked Pangborn

Both Dillon and Howard received byes for the first round of the four-round tournament. With a perfect 5-0 record on the season, Dillon gained the first bye. Howard tied Stanford for the second best record with a 3-0-1 mark but was given the bye after an arbitrary drawing. The first-round games will feature Flanner going against Alumni and Sorin facing Stanford.

Alumni enters postseason play with a 2-0-2 mark and must face a tough Flanner squad which is 4-1. Flanner's only loss of the year was a 3-0 defeat against Dillon. Since then, Flanner has shut out Off-Campus 15-0 and blasted Grace 22-7. The winner of the game will face Dillon, winner of 19 games in a row and unscored upon in its five games this year. Either possibility, the matchup of rivals Alumni and Dillon or a Dillon-Flanner rematch, should provide some fireworks.

Sorin lost its first game of the season but turned things around in time to make the playoffs. After tying St. Ed's, Sorin went on to defeat Carroll and Pangborn in consecutive shutouts. They will have to face an unbeaten Stanford team (3-0-1) in round one. The winner will face Rockne Division champ Howard.

Flanner will meet Alumni this Sunday at 1:00 on Stepan North followed by the Sorin-Stanford game which is scheduled for 2:00. The site of the championship game on November 20 is still in question, but hopes remain high that the game will be played in Notre Dame Stadium.

Battle in the trenches

Sophomore Dorsey to be tested

By TIM DOYLE
Sports Writer

The line battle between the Pittsburgh Panthers offense and the Notre Dame Fighting Irish defense promises to be a good one. While there will be several key head to head battles, one of the more widely spoken of is that between Irish sophomore Eric Dorsey and Panther junior Bill Fralic.

The two players match up well physically. Both stand at 6-5. Fralic weighs a little more at 290 lbs. than Dorsey at 269 lbs.

Dorsey, playing right tackle for the Irish this year, has accumulated 15 total tackles. Three of those tackles have been quarterback sacks totaling 17 yards of losses.

As a freshman Dorsey played more minutes than any other freshman. He made 24 tackles playing mainly at nose tackle.

As a high school senior Dorsey was chosen as one of the top 100 incoming freshmen by The Sporting News. As captain of his high school team he totaled 24 solo tackles, 92 assists, 46 first hits, 11 fumbles caused, and one blocked punt.

Throughout this season Dorsey's play has been hampered by a strained abdominal muscle. He suffered the injury prior to the start of the season. While a very strange injury in nature, it has been painful at times.

Dorsey comments, "I hurt it in practice on day. How, I don't really know.

"When it is inflamed, I have a hard time sprinting."

Interior defensive line coach Jay Robertson says, "Eric missed only the Army game, however he has missed a lot of practice due to the injury. We sometimes have had to hold him out of practice in order for him to be healthy on Saturdays.

"The injury has impeded his progress towards reaching his full potential."

The men's interhall football playoffs begin this weekend with Flanner, 4-1, going against Alumni, 2-0-2. In the second game, Sorin, 2-1-1, will face Stanford, 3-0-1. Dillon and Howard, last year's finalists, both received first-round byes. See Tom Antonini's story at left for more details.

Pasquerillas winners in women's football

By MARY SIEGER
Sports Writer

As the race for the playoffs accelerates in women's interhall football, competition between teams is becoming more intense. In two important games last night, Pasquerilla East earned a spot in the playoffs after defeating Farley 8-0, while Pasquerilla West beat Badin by an identical score.

With last night's victory, P.E. improved its record to 5-1, earning the best record in the league. Team captain Kim Zerr emphasized team effort as the key to P.E.'s success.

"We put it all together and I can't think of anything that went wrong in the game," she said.

P.E.'s scoring drive came during the second half, effectively shutting out Farley. "We were up for the game, we knew we could win and we felt whoever played well would win the game," said Zerr.

On Sunday, P.E. will face a tough 4-1 Lewis squad. Zerr does not plan to change game strategy for Sunday and said P.E. can win, "if we don't get cocky, and play a good game."

Farley, last year's champion, saw its record drop to 2-3 and its chances for competition in the playoffs fade. Sharon Zochler, Farley team captain, said yesterday's game hurt the team badly and that "bad breaks may cost us the playoffs."

Zochler was disappointed with the outcome of last night's game and with Farley's season. "I think we're a better team than the record shows," she said.

Zochler blames last night's loss on the team's inconsistency. To prepare for their remaining games, the team will be working on every play and on improving its intensity. Zochler said the team plans to enter its last two games with the same enthusiasm as it would if it were going to the playoffs.

Although P.W. improved its record to 3-3 yesterday, P.W. athletic commissioner Cathy Schafer said it is impossible for P.W. to be included in the playoffs. "There is no way for us to get in the playoffs, but it doesn't bother us. We're a good team and we're happy we did as well as we did," she said.

P.W. scored on Badin during the second half and Schafer was pleased with Cathy Swanson's performance last night. Swanson played both offensive and defensive positions last night and Schafer said her performance helped motivate the team.

Schafer attributes P.W.'s success this season to the players' dedication to football. "They really enjoy what they're doing and they like to play together," she explained.

Schafer is looking forward to the team's match against Lewis next week, and anticipates a victory. "They're pumped to play Lewis and it will be an emotional high for the season," said Schafer.

Badin, 0-6 this season, will not participate in the playoffs this year. After last night's 8-0 loss, team captain Sally Esposto said there is a significant loss of team spirit. "Now, everyone just wants to get the season over," she said.

Esposto said there were several players who weren't present at the game and the defense made some mistakes. In light of Farley's loss last night, Esposto will not predict how Badin will do against them next week.

Are the Irish really this good?

Do you realize that the 1983 season is almost over and nobody really has any idea how good the Notre Dame football team is? Oh, sure, many people have their opinions, but none of them are based on good evidence.

On one side, you have those people who feel that Notre Dame is not nearly as good as its 6-2 record would indicate. They make their judgements from a pair of games that were played almost six weeks ago, and the fact that the Irish have yet to beat a team with a winning record. But then, how many good teams did North Carolina beat as it moved up to the No. 3 spot in the nation?

Obviously, one person who is a member of this group is Doug Looney of Sports Illustrated. Unimpressed by a convincing Irish win over Southern Cal, he accused the Notre Dame defense of being too slow, Steve Beuerlein of being unable to read complex defenses, and the team of relying too much on Allen Pinkett.

Looney was probably too harsh on the team. After all, he was making judgements from just one game — one that was played on a very slick field. However, there are many other people who share his doubts about this Irish team.

The Irish have yet to beat a team that has won more than it has lost. They have gone through periods of play when they can do nothing on offense against an over-matched team (for instance, the second quarter against South Carolina). They just have not proved themselves on the field against a good team.

On the other hand, there are people who feel that Notre Dame has regrouped and is now rolling toward a bowl game. The players and coaches feel this way. "In my opinion, we are playing some of the best football in the country right now," says Pinkett. The fact that Notre Dame has the third best defense in the country this week and one of the top offenses would seem to back up this thinking.

The final three games of the season will give the answer. I had said earlier in the season that the game against Miami was the most important game for Notre Dame in the last three years. The next two games against Pitt and Penn State, together, will be just as important.

The loss to Miami hurt the team more than people realize. If you wonder why Notre Dame isn't moving up the rankings very fast, the Miami game is the answer. The team looked so bad that people cannot forget it. Five wins would normally help make people forget, but critics like Looney see the weak opponents and refuse to believe that the team could have improved so much.

The effect of the Miami game on the students has not completely worn off, either. The crowd participation has gotten better, but there is still some intensity and excitement that is lacking. Wins in the next two games will create a lot of intensity for the Air Force game, but there is no use thinking about Air Force and Penn State with a tough opponent like Pitt ahead.

Now that the Pitt game is on CBS, however, the Irish have an excellent opportunity to erase some of the doubts. They have an opportunity to partly redeem themselves for their performance against Miami. The players know this. They have to redeem themselves on the field, though.

Another thing that the players realize is that a major bowl bid is in their own hands. If they beat Pitt, then beat Penn State, then beat Air Force, there will be many happy people around campus. However, the students have been conditioned not to get their hopes up too high. The past two years have been marked with continual disappointments, so they have come to expect that the disappointments will continue.

I'll admit that I'm an eternal optimist, but I feel that the disappointments may be coming to an end. I've always felt that the team had the talent. Judging from the preseason polls, there were a lot of so-called "experts" who felt the same way. It was desire that I felt was lacking. Now it appears that the players have the desire.

The players seem to have reached the saturation point as far as outside pressure is concerned. It is not affecting them like it used to. They are worrying about just the opponent and not the opponent and the outside pressure. One more loss will reduce the fun that they are now having, though.

Pitt is going to want revenge, which makes Notre Dame's job harder, but, if the Notre Dame players have any character or any pride, they will be ready for the fired-up Panthers by being even more fired up.

They have a chance in the next three games to gain a great deal of respect and they can't let this opportunity slip away. They already blew a big chance when they lost to Miami. Respect, a high ranking, and a bowl bid — these last three games mean so much. We'll see if they are up to the challenge.
