Prosecutors urge penalty of 30 years for Hasenfus

Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua - Prosecutors asked on Wednesday that the People's Tribunal deciding the case of American mercenary Eugene Hasenfus give him the maximum 30 years in prison for aiding Nicaraguan rebels.

Ivan Villavicencio, the assistant prosecutor, made the request in written final arguments to the tribunal of a lawyer, truck driver and laborer. He said the 45-year-old American's guilt was "plainly demonstrated" by his statements to the tribunal and government officials.

Defense attorney Enrique Sotelo Borgen said he also would deliver a final statement to the court, which is expected to announce its verdict before the weekend.

An army patrol captured Hasenfus, of Marinette, Wis., on Oct. 6, the day after the C-123 aircraft on which he was cargo handler was shot down over southern Nicaragua. It was carrying supplies to U.S.-backed rebels fighting the leftist Sandinista government.

He is charged with terrorism, conspiracy and other crimes against the state.

Corby's owners refused renewal of liquor license

By MARILYN BENCHIK
Assistant Saint Mary's Editor

Corby's Tavern will not reopen its doors any time soon, as the St. Joseph County Alcoholic Beverage Board voted Wednesday not to renew the liquor license of CTI Corporation, owners of the bar.

In a 3-1 vote, the ABB refused to grant CTI the renewal because of problems Corby's encountered while it was open.

Such problems, cited by law-enforcement officers and neighborhood residents at the meeting, included underage drinking and general defacement of the surrounding area.

CTI needed the license renewal in order to sell Corby's assets to the prospective buyers of the tavern, Thomas and Robert Przybylinski.

Had CTI received the renewal of the license, the ABB would have decided whether the license should be transferred from CTI to Theta Enterprises, owned by the Przybylinski brothers.

The brothers would then have had to prove they could run the tavern in a responsible manner. They already had received a variance to continue legal, non-conforming use of the property.

According to John Gourley, representing attorney for CTI and Theta Enterprises, the formal, operating company owned by the Przybylinski brothers, "CTI put itself in every position to sell the assets. The consistent intent was to sell the property as a bar."

Gourley said CTI found the buyers because that is what the ABB advised the corporation to do last February.

Several law-enforcement authorities and neighborhood residents spoke against the renewal and transfer at the meeting, citing the past history of the once-popular student bar as reason for denying the liquor license.

John Clark, state excise officer and member of the ABB, said the state has made 116 minor arrests at the tavern in the past five years.

"This does not include the arrests the South Bend Police have made in that time," said Clark.

Arthur Quigley, president of the North East Neighborhood Association said his association is "adamantly opposed to the transfer of the license."

Steve Moriarity, a North East Neighborhood Association member also spoke against the license renewal and Morality in management urged by professor

By JIM RILEY
Assistant News Editor

"The field of management must exercise moral judgement concurrently with economic judgement," said Kenneth Goodpaster, professor of business at the Harvard Business School.

"Too many business schools teach students to look inward and outward but only with an economic point of view" instead of considering society, said Goodpaster speaking Wednesday at the Center for Social Concerns.

Goodpaster, whose talk was entitled "Can a corporation have a conscience (and should it have one)?" said the answer to this question is "yes," but not a simple yes.

"Conscience is made of stronger stuff than words," he said, and some people question whether conscience even has a place in business.

Goodpaster compared the thinking of corporations to the moral development of individuals. He said there are three stages of thinking. The first stage simply treats people as a means to an end; the second considers moral thinking to be a system of constraints; and the third, "type-3 thinking," allows for independent motivation.

Type-3 thinking considers respect as an independent value and considers concern for others as ends not means, said Goodpaster.

In six studies over eight months conducted by Goodpaster, "The aspiration was always type-3, but the reality was type-2," he said. "Corporations have a long way to go ... but managers want

American bishops step back from confrontation

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - America's Roman Catholic bishops, after daring to debate the Vatican's punishment of a fellow U.S. prelate, stepped back from confrontation with Rome on Wednesday by declaring the Vatican's verdict "deserves our respect and confidence."

Their decision, after five hours of intense secret talks over two days, said that while the bishops sympathize with the pain of an embattled colleague, the pope in Rome still must come first.

The bishops, all appointed by Pope John Paul II or his predecessors and all subject to church discipline themselves, did not add to the Vatican's criticism of Seattle Archbishop Raymond Hunthausen. But neither did they defend him, as some of his supporters among the group had hoped they might.

"On this occasion the bishops of the United States wish to affirm unreservedly their loyalty to and unity with the Holy Father," Bishop James Malone, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said in a statement approved by most of the group's nearly 300 bishops.

"The conference of bishops has no authority to intervene" in the dispute between the Vatican and Hunthausen, he said.

Hunthausen was ordered by the Vatican earlier this year to give up much of his authority to a Rome-appointed auxiliary bishop after Vatican officials judged him too liberal on such matters as ministry to homosexuals and divorced Catholics and dispensation of general absolution for sin to large groups.

He was allowed to make his case to his fellow bishops at the secret sessions, sessions like Could one of these men be the next ND president?

Today, the Board of Trustees 10-member nominating committee meets in the Center for Continuing Education to vote on who it will propose to the board to succeed retiring University President Father Theodore Hesburgh.

Tomorrow, the full 49-member board will choose, in all likelihood, the nominating committee's choice.

While most observers have centered their attention on Father Edward "Monk" Malloy, Father William Beauchamp, Father Ernest Bartell, Father Michael McCafferty, and Father David Tyson as likely candidates to succeed Hesburgh, I hope there remains the possibility for a "dark-horse" candidate to emerge.

Maybe, just maybe, the Board will consider some possible successors who are qualified to serve the University in their own, unique way.

Here are some alternatives; Board of Trustees, please take note.

1. Billy Martin - The former manager has proven himself a winner wherever he has been made the head man. Martin's managing stints in New York, Texas, Minnesota, Detroit, and Oakland have made him popular all across the country, making him perfect for Notre Dame's national student body and alumni. Get Martin away from the pressures of George Stienbrenner and New York, and I think he'll stop getting into barroom brawls that could embarrass the University.

Although by University rule, the next president must be a C.S.C. priest, I think if a few extra dollars and a lifetime supply of Captain Black chewing tobacco are put into the contract, Martin will take up the vows. Besides, just think of the publicity when the University president races down from the press box of Notre Dame Stadium to kick dirt on a football referee.

2. Gerry Faust - We all know how much the man loves Notre Dame. Although his first go round as a man at the top at ND was not all that successful, what better place than Akron to regain one's composure and build leadership skills. His optimism and incredible enthusiasm would make him great for those fundraising cocktail parties.

From Faust's well-documented trips to the Grotto, we know he's Catholic enough to join the ranks of Holy Cross, and he always said he would do anything for Notre Dame. Most importantly, he's got an escape clause in his contract at Akron, so you know he's ready and willing to come back.

Chris Bednarski

Assistant News Editor

3. Pope John Paul II - He's a priest, so he's cleared hurdle number one. Add in the fact that in the last few years he has gained invaluable experience in the Vatican, and I would say he's just about ready for the job. The Pope loves to travel, so he would fill Hesburgh's shoes perfectly, and his recent decision to fire Father Curran for liberal teaching at American University make him perfect for Notre Dame's predominately conservative administration. The Pope's only drawback would be the long-term contract he's tied into with the Vatican. It's doubtful he has an escape clause for Notre Dame a-la Gerry Faust and Lou Holtz.

4. Clint Eastwood - If the trustees are looking for toughness in the new president, then Clint's their man. Who better to enforce the rules of duLac. "So the students want to extend parietals; Go ahead, make my day." He's been gaining valuable administrative experience at his post as mayor of Carmel, California and may be ready for the position on the third floor of the Administration Building.

His largest drawback is his past experience as an actor. We know the perils of what can happen when a former actor becomes president.

What are the chances the Board would actually choose one of these candidates? Well, what were the chances that Mike Switek and Don Montanaro would be elected?

Phone book distribution soon

By JOE MARKEY
Staff Reporter

A computer program malfunction is responsible for the two-week delay in the distribution of this year's University directory, according to Assistant Registrar David Kil.

"Any changes put into the system after the middle of August were not picked up because of a program problem," he said.

As a result, the addresses of those undergraduate students who made dorm changes were not updated from last year, according to Kil. Also, "the campus addresses of graduate students from St. Joseph's, Brownson, and O'Hare/Grace Residence Halls did not appear in the directory," he said.

Kil recalled all the books before they were able to be distributed for circulation at the last HPC meeting. A corrected version of the book was immediately sent to the printer, University Directories, for reprinting.

Kil emphasized that it is not possible to put the blame on anyone. "We have used the same program for a number of years and never had any problem," he said, calling the malfunction "a quirk in the system."

According to Kil, the reason for malfunction of the program has been discovered and "we know what to do in the future. It won't happen again."

Kil, who said the books should be out by the end of this week or the beginning of next week, commented, "two weeks is an excellent response from the company," referring to the amount of time it took for the reprinting.

"In the future we're trying to get the books out earlier than the traditional mid-October date," Kil said.

Bernard Waldman, longtime Notre Dame scientist and administrator who watched from a military plane as the atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, died Wednesday in Sanford, N.C., after a long illness. He was 73.

Born Oct. 12, 1913, in New York, he received a bachelor's degree in 1934 and his Ph.D in 1939, both from New York University. He joined the Notre Dame faculty in 1938 as a physics research associate, was promoted to physics instructor in 1940 and to associate professor of physics in 1941. Beginning in March 1943, he took a leave of absence to join a team of scientists working to develop the atomic bomb at the Los Alamos, N.M., laboratory.

Waldman's part in the Manhattan Project included work on instrumentation used to measure the force of the explosion. After witnessing the first atomic test on July 16, 1945, at Alamogordo, N.M., he was one of four civilians who watched the Hiroshima bombing from a military observation plane.

After his return to the University, Waldman directed the nuclear physics laboratory, home of a 3 million-volt accelerator that in 1949 was the world's second most powerful producer of X-rays. Postwar research under Waldman's direction concentrated upon the interaction of electrons and X-rays with matter.

In 1967 he was appointed dean of the College of Science, a post which he held until 1979. During his tenure as dean, Waldman implemented plans for developing the College of Science, an effort supported by a $5.6 million grant from the National Science Foundation.

Following his retirement from Notre Dame in 1979, Waldman served as associate director of the National Superconducting Cyclotron Laboratory at Michigan State University until 1983.

Memorial services will be at 10 a.m., Tuesday, Nov. 18, in Sacred Heart Church. Burial will follow in Cedar Grove Cemetery.

The family has requested that in lieu of flowers contributions be made to Notre Dame's Memorial Library.

ND senior, alumna discuss alcohol awareness in talk

By KATIE SULLIVAN
News Staff

"I didn't even realize there was something wrong in my life. It sounds so weird, but alcohol was just a part of our lives," said Connie, daughter of an alcoholic, at Saint Mary's alcohol awareness lecture Tuesday night.

The lecture, entitled "Someone I Know Drinks Too Much," was the second in a series sponsored by the Saint Mary's Alcohol Education Council.

Representative of the benefits of alcohol therapy groups, Connie, a Notre Dame graduate, and Kristin, a Notre Dame senior who battled alcohol and drug abuse, spoke of their experiences with alcoholism and discussed how they learned to deal with the disease.

Connie spoke about her experience with an alcoholic father and discussed how Al-anon, an alcohol support group counseling relatives of alcoholics, changed her life.

In her battle with an alcoholic parent, Connie said she became an empty and unhappy person. "If I didn't have a brain then there would have really been no reason to go on," she said.

Connie said she realized she could be an "Okay" person by getting involved in Al-anon after she saw how the support group had helped her mother.

"Al-anon taught me to believe living was for continual growth," said Connie, "I had to detach myself from my father's problem and get on with living."

Connie said that having an alcoholic parent was very destructive for her when she tried to establish male and female relationships. With the help of Al-anon, she said, she learned to explore her spirituality and form good, meaningful relationships.

Because of Al-anon, Connie said she feels she is gradually becoming the person she wants to be.

Like Connie, Kristen said she had led an unhappy life before becoming involved with an alcohol support group.

Kristen said she began drinking and experimenting with drugs when she was 11 years old. Describing her life as one of living on excuses, Kristen said she never accomplished a thing.

"I was an erratic person. I was always looking for fun, excitement, parties and freedom. It was as if I was afraid of something," she said.

Kristen said she finally sought help for her problem after Christmas of her sophomore year at Saint Mary's.

"I just hit bottom and couldn't take being unhappy anymore," she said. It was then that she went to Alcoholics Anonymous for help, she added.

AA helped her be honest with herself, Kristen said. Like Connie, she noted that alcohol hindered her from developing relationships. "I had no friends but a million acquaintances."

to go there."

Rather than allowing moral decision-making to be taken care of by the invisible hand of Adam Smith or the "visible hand" of government, Goodpaster said he wants to defend a third way, the "Hand of Management."

Goodpaster said the whole conception of management must change. "The corporation is a citizen of society," he said. It must look both inward and outward from both the economic and moral point of view, he said.

The role of conscience must be institutionalized both inside the corporation as well as outside, said Goodpaster. The company has to have respect for the employees as well as respect for the consumers and the general public, he said.

"We have to go deeper than the rhetoric," he said. A corporation's conscience is more than just a statement of values that somebody pulls out of a drawer, he said. "We have to look deeper than that."

Goodpaster also discussed the "Frankenstein problem," namely the question of whether this move toward type-3 thinking and a corporate conscience will be a good thing or if society will be creating a monster. "The moment you move in the direction of corporate conscience as an agenda . . ." you face these three paradoxes, said Goodpaster.

"The idea of corporations working under the same moral standards as we do has intuitive appeal," he said. But the leadership of this organization is not elected or appointed to do this kind of managing, said Goodpaster, calling this the paradox of legitimacy.

Managers usually motivate by appealing to self-interest, said Goodpaster. Thus, he said they face another paradox as they ask, "How do I motivate people to behave not just because it's in their own interest but because it's the right thing to do."

The third paradox

Goodpaster mentioned was the paradox of authority. There seems to be something coercive about dictating values to employees, he said.

transfer. "According to (Tuesday's) Observer, John Gourley was quoted as saying, 'We can't remember when (Corby's) wasn't a tavern.' Well, for over the past year, Corby's hasn't been a bar, and we've enjoyed it.

"My main objection is alcoholic beverages being sold from that particular property," he said.

Said Renelada Robinson, center director for the association, "The main issue is that the tavern is not needed. We have enough taverns in the neighborhood.

"We need to get on with the business of improving our neighborhoods. Let them sell Corby's and get a business the neighborhood wants," she said.

Gourley added, "The present owners have no affiliation (to these past problems) in the transfer of the license."

James Broad, owner of CTI, said CTI was only trying to conform to the ABB's proposal of divesting the assets.

"CTI voluntarily gave it (the property, assets and license) up. We wanted to follow the ABB guidelines to the letter. We would like to sell the permit," said Broad.

"If the renewal is denied, then the asset has no value. Most of these funds will go to creditors," he said.

Board member Harold Zyski offered the only vote in favor of renewal.

"I'll vote for renewal so the man (James Broad, present owner of CTI) can sell the license," said Zyski.

The proposed renewal was voted down by Joseph Szkendi, board secretary; Joseph Derda, board president; and Clark.

Bishops

none other in recent years, and he used the opportunity to complain that "a shroud of secrecy" around the Vatican's investigative process had kept him from even seeing the formal charges against him.

Malone, however, said, "I believe it is clear that the process employed by the Holy See was in accord with general principles of church law and procedures. The decision reached at the end of the process was made by the proper church authorities. As such, it deserves our respect and confidence."

Sources familiar with the debate said that the verdict was softened a bit from an earlier version that would have declared the Vatican decision "just and reasonable."

The final statement, said Cardinal John O'Connor of New York, indicated the bishops do not feel "the sky is falling in ... the church is about to explode, there is imminent rebellion on the part of the bishops toward the Holy See."

Another conservative cardinal, Bernard Law of Boston, said the statement indicated strong papal support by the bishops, and "at this moment, more than anything else, that has to be seen."

Small vote margins do not indicate mandate

In response to Joe Merchant's Viewpoint article of November 11 entitled, "Student Senate Must Push for Divestment," allow me to clarify a few facts and set the record straight. The Student Senate decided on November 3 to table the motion on recommending to the Board of Trustees that Notre Dame

should divest from South Africa because, at the time, many of the Senate members did not feel adequately prepared or informed on both sides of the issue to vote intelligently. It was not simply a matter of not having a mandate from the students, but more a reluctance to vote hastily without seriously considering the implications of divesting and not divesting and without being reasonably sure of why we would vote a certain way. We didn't want to be swayed by emotional claims that divestment is the only moral alternative without really understanding the other side of this complex issue.

In light of this, during the subsequent week those of us, myself included, who didn't feel comfortable with their knowledge of the subject, researched the issue and tried to formulate an informed, intelligent position. This was capped off by presentations from legitimate representatives of both sides of the issue at the Nov. 10 meeting. Then, and only then, did we take a vote. I hope you would agree that the members of the Senate should not vote on any issues, especially issues of this magnitude, on a whim without intelligently formulating an opinion.

As reported in the same issue of The Observer (Nov. 11), the Student Senate did indeed pass a resolution on Nov. 10 recommending to the Board of Trustees that Notre Dame divest from companies doing business in South Africa unless by a specific date, which would be determined by the board, the government of South Africa "has made significant progress toward dismantling its system of apartheid and has taken genuine measures toward negotiating with black leaders." The vote, however, was split down the middle with seven votes for and seven votes against the proposal before Student Body President Mike Switek cast the tie-breaking vote in favor of the proposal. This clearly is not a mandate to the Board of Trustees to change their policy on divestment.

I also do not believe that the student body has mandated divestment either. We cannot take the vote from last year's referendum on divestment as a call by the student body to divest. Based strictly on that vote, we find that the students are split on the issue. On the divestment referendum, only 2,082 students out of an undergraduate population well in excess of 7,000 voted that Notre Dame should divest. Only 58 percent of the undergraduates voted on the issue at all and, of those who did vote, not even half voted for divestment, while a third voted for not divesting and almost a fifth had no opinion on the issue. How can these underwhelming results be taken as a clear mandate by the students to divest? Until proven otherwise, I do not believe such a mandate exists or ever has existed. I just don't see the wholehearted, collective support by the student body as a unified call for divestment, as Merchant apparently does.

Student mandate calls for board to divest now

This past Monday, the Student Senate voted on a resolution which I proposed concerning the University's investment policy toward companies engaged in business activities in South Africa. It is resolved that "...the University should set a specific deadline for corporations engaged in business activities in South Africa to disinvest unless the Government of South Africa makes significant progress toward dismantling its system of apartheid and takes genuine measures towards negotiating with black leaders. If neither the corporations disinvest nor the Government makes significant progress toward dismantling apartheid by the established deadline, the University ought to completely divest from these corporations." The measure was passed by a slim majority, 8 to 7.

John Gardiner

I worked overtime to present my colleagues in the Senate with substantial material from both sides to make a decision, and felt betrayed by the final vote. Upon reflection though, the result has proven to be very revealing. Both sides present valid arguments. However, although each side would like to think that their argument is correct (as I did in proposing the resolution), neither can be absolutely certain that they are correct. Do corporations really aid in the dismantling of apartheid or are they lending economic support to the policy? Would the government of South Africa concede under economic sanctions? These are questions which cannot truly be answered.

What one can be certain of is the current University policy which was established by the Board of Trustees last May. It basically states that the University would divest if it became apparent that the corporations were not influencing the dismantling of apartheid and if the situation deteriorated further. Has the established criteria been met?

Since the last board meeting there have been numerous developments. In June, the South African government declared a state of emergency, virtually taking away any of the rights the blacks may have had. As a response, the United States government, through Congressional impetus, has imposed sanctions on South Africa. In addition, within the past month, numerous corporations have announced that they're divesting. Moreover, the Administrative Board of the United States Catholic Conference voted 47-0, on Sept. 10, 1986, urging the "consideration" of divestment to all Catholic institutions. The bishops claimed that their "religious and moral teaching is daily contradicted by apartheid." Is Notre Dame immune from such teaching?

Again I ask, has the criteria of the present policy been met? This question will underlie the board's policy discussion. From all appearances, the answer is an unequivocal yes. Words mean nothing unless acted upon; therefore, the board must act. The resolution passed by the Student Senate and a similar proposal passed by the Faculty Senate are viable alternatives. In setting a specific deadline one leaves hope that the situation will improve, while putting substance into the policy by genuinely threatening divestment, even if the process of divesting occurs many months later.

John Gardiner is a senior government major and a student senator.

Accent McKenna- Cubs, Bears and ND?

Thursday, November 13, 1986 - page 7

ERIC M. BERGAMO
features copy editor

For Andrew McKenna, interest in baseball began very early in life.

"In my youth, baseball was truly the national pastime, the sport that everyone had the greatest interest in. Professional football had not reached those peaks at that time," McKenna said.

"I grew up in a major league city, a two-team city, in Chicago. So it was a matter of interest for everybody."

That interest would become even greater later in life for McKenna, vice chairman of the Board of Trustees of Notre Dame and a member of the Class of 1951. He helped save the Chicago White Sox from a possible move to Seattle in 1975 and became director of the Chicago Cubs in 1981. More recently, as director of the Chicago Bears, McKenna's involvement in sports has expanded into the world of professional football.

McKenna is also president and chief executive officer of the Schwarz Paper Company and serves on the board of directors of 11 corporations and chairities.

McKenna came to Notre Dame as a student in 1947 during the post-war era. World War II had a profound effect upon the student population at that time, McKenna recalled.

"College life at the time was a mix because there were many older students on campus who were veterans who had come out of the service from World War II and of course there were younger ones like myself," McKenna said.

Notre Dame, at the time McKenna was a student, had not yet reached the level of success experienced today.

"There was a cohesiveness of the school. The school was in many respects still in its early days and was marching along the road to the days of the leadership of Father Hesburgh. It was a school that had not yet quite achieved some of the greatness that Father Hesburgh has brought to it today."

McKenna's first experience with baseball came at a critical moment. Chicago was in danger of losing the White Sox in a move to Seattle.

In 1969, there had been a major league team in Seattle called the Pilots. The Pilots moved to Milwaukee to become the Brewers.

After losing the franchise, the city of Seattle brought a lawsuit against the American League. The lawsuit called for payment of damages incurred by the move or having the League give Seattle another team.

When it was apparent that Seattle had a good case, the American League had to respond by either giving them a team at the end of 1975 or start paying damages. The American League decided to give Seattle a team. At that same time, the White Sox were owned by a man named John Allyn and were in very difficult financial condition. The American League decided that the White Sox would be the team to move to Seattle.

McKenna said he realized that Chicago was in danger of losing one of its institutions.

"It occurred to me, as well as other Chicagoans, that it would be wrong for a major city like Chicago to lose one of its long time franchises." McKenna recalled the moves of the Brooklyn Dodgers and the New York Giants to Los Angeles and San Francisco respectively and how those moves broke the hearts of their fans. To prevent that from happening to Chicago, McKenna contacted an old friend who had been deeply involved in baseball in the past: Bill Veeck.

"He had run several major league franchises and owned the White Sox at one time. He came back and put together a group of businessmen and purchased the White Sox from Allyn and saved the White Sox from moving to Seattle."

McKenna remembers Veeck, who died in 1985, as having a profound effect on him and anyone who got to know him well.

"He was an absolute rugged individualist and referred to himself as a survivor. But he was loaded with common sense and had a great spirit. He had an intellect that he expected some challenges."

"He had a perception of things that you just couldn't imagine. He had a sense about them and anticipated them. He's one of those kinds that doesn't come around very often."

McKenna was chairman of the White Sox when they were sold in 1981 and "having been bitten by the bug," heard that Chicago's other team, the Cubs, were likely to be for sale.

"Mr. Wrigley, who had been the owner, had died and his wife had died and his son was in an estate problem. I approached the Cubs and it was true that they could be purchased."

"But it was also true that they weren't going to wait for someone like me to syndicate a group to buy them," McKenna explained. "They wanted a buyer who was going to put down one check quietly."

Fortunately, it was the Tribune Company, of which McKenna is a member of its board of directors, who put down that check.

"It occurred to me that they (the Tribune Company) would be a very logical buyer because WGN television telecasts their games and WGN radio broadcasts their games."

"And right across the street from the Wrigley Building is Tribune Tower. I just knew that there would be a certain romance to a transaction of that sort," McKenna said.

McKenna was named director of the Cubs after the Tribune Company purchased the Cubs in 1982. Two years later the Cubs, the most lovable losers in baseball, would be challenging for the National League Championship.

"That was a very rewarding thing," recalled McKenna. "The Cubs had been a doormat for years as lovable as they were. In a very short time period, we had set a timetable for turning things around and in 1984 we had a very successful year."

"The only disappointing thing was when we went to San Diego after we won the first two games of the playoffs in Chicago and didn't win a game out there."

Because of their immense ap-

Super Bowl. McKenna said that he wasn't worried that the bad luck that struck the Cubs would also hit the Bears.

The night before the game McKenna had dinner with Michael McCaskey, president and chief executive officer of the Bears, and were kidding about a possible Patriots upset.

Among the guests that night was Dallas Green, general manager of the Cubs. Green and McCaskey, McKenna said, were both professional enough not to be superstitious and yet also aware that sports are full of little nuances of that sort.

Andrew McKenna is vice chairman of Notre Dame's Board of Trustees, director of the Chicago Cubs and Bears.

peal the Cubs are a national institution, McKenna said.

"Cubs fans are not only throughout the country but throughout the world. The Cubs have great appeal to all parts of America and its certainly enhanced by the fact that their games are telecast throughout the country."

"This year the team has not had a good year artistically, but attendance has been terrific and the interest is still there," McKenna said.

While the Cubs are owned by a publicly held company, the Chicago Bears is a family business. In May of 1985 the McCaskey family, the owners of the Bears, contacted McKenna and asked if he would serve as director of the franchise.

"I think they wanted an outside director, someone from the outside who would come in and hopefully offer a little tiny bit of wisdom."

In his first year as director, the Bears marched through the regular season all the way to the

The beginning of the game, however, provided a few anxious moments.

"The Bears fumbled immediately and New England scored. I thought the Bears could only lose by making mistakes and right away they made a mistake. But from that point on it was all Bears."

McKenna said that he believes the Bears can make the trip to the Super Bowl again. But the second time around is going to be tougher than the first.

"There are a lot of other good teams and it is hard to maintain intensity. When you're the champ everyone is waiting for you."

"There is great pressure on the team in the off season for public appearances or other requests that are made. A lot of these guys do a lot of charity work which I think is needed and they ought to do it," McKenna said.

McKenna had high praise for the coaches and players of the Bears.

Head Coach Mike Ditka:

"Mike's done a terrific job. He has a terrific way of handling all constituencies: the players; the opposing teams; the media. I think he's outstanding."

Running back Walter Payton: "He looks as good to me today as he did ten years ago. When we need important yardage, Payton gets it for us."

Quarterback Jim McMahon: "He's a very talented young man. His personal style may be different, but he's a winner. You can't be successful in football unless you have a good quarterback and what makes one quarterback better than the other is the confidence he instills in his teammates."

Defensive tackle William "The Refrigerator" Perry: "A very, very nice man with a large family in South Carolina. Who could imagine a year ago that Perry would be a national hero."

Football has become very popular in England the past few years and the Bears travelled to England over the summer to play an exhibition game against the Dallas Cowboys.

"The sports fans in London are very good. When we played there, all the attention was on the Bears," McKenna explained.

As vice chairman of the Board of Trustees, McKenna will be involved in two important issues facing Notre Dame: divestment and the election of Father Hesburgh's successor.

McKenna said that he does not believe that Coca-Cola's selling of their holdings in South Africa will have much influence on the board's decision.

"Coca-Cola did what was appropriate for that company and I respect them for that and I think that Notre Dame will have to study its own circumstances."

The search for Hesburgh's successor has been "a very healthy and lengthy process and very thorough," McKenna said. The final decision will be made when the board meets this Friday.

McKenna had the highest praise for Hesburgh and his 35-year term as president of Notre Dame.

"You could write a book. He took a school that had not achieved any greatness, but was a good school and on the way up. Just look at the record. He took the endowment from a single digit to $400 million. There are 93 endowed professorships on this campus. There has been the expansion of a number of buildings. The number of Notre Dame graduates who are leading major companies."

"Hesburgh's role in the church, his role in the country and his role in the world has focused great attention on Notre Dame," McKenna noted.

McKenna said he believes that the future for Notre Dame looks very good.

"I think that Father Hesburgh, Father Joyce and Tim O'Meara, our provost, have placed Notre Dame in very solid condition. There is a great foundation for fulfillment of goals."

Iowa State football coach Jim Criner was fired last night. "As a result of the recently completed university investigation of NCAA allegations pertaining to football, new leadership is desired for Iowa State University's football program," said Iowa State University President Gordon Eaton in a statement. Chuck Banker, an assistant, was named acting football coach for the rest of the regular season. -Associated Press

And, adding depth to the team, junior Nancy Loughlin, sophomore Teresa Kibelstis and freshmen Wendy Murray and Linda Filar will be counted on for a strong appearance Saturday.

It will be very difficult for the Irish to come out of this weekends competition with a NCAA championship berth, but Ryan hopes that the team will run well and possibly send a handful of individuals on to the championship meet.

Fumble recovery record Figaro works on pass rush

The previous Irish record for fumble recoveries in a season was five, shared by six players.

The contact zone is really where Figaro belongs, as was shown last week against SMU. One questionable call involving a late hit on SMU quarterback Bobby Watters cost the Irish 15 yards.

"I won't let the other players know they got a good shot on me. During the game, I'll never let him know he got the best of me. It makes him wonder, 'What's this guy thinking?'"

"It is a very competitive tournament," said McCann. "Michigan State always appears at the top of the Big Ten. Central Michigan is the defend-

The team's next competition will be a home dual meet against Air Force on November 19.

Faust

Things are going so well for Faust, in fact, that rumors began circulating last week that Wisconsin was interested in hiring him to fill the Badgers' head coach vacancy. Faust reportedly has an escape clause in his contract that allows him to leave the Zips if he gets an offer from the Big Ten, ACC, or, yes, Notre Dame.

"I think Notre Dame has got a fine football tradition, but so do Alabama, Southern Cal, Michigan, and others. I don't think there's any unusual mystique about Notre Dame any longer, especially not to the younger kids."

Instincts put Lawrence 'in right place' on field

By RICK RIETBROCK
Sports Writer

Being in the right place at the right time.

There is something about this intangible that cannot be coached, improved or created. Either you have it or you do not.

Luckily for the Irish, Steve Lawrence has it.

The senior free safety has established himself as a consistent player in the Irish secondary, and he adds some excitement as well. Secondary coach Terry Forbes says he thinks the past few weeks are an indication of what Lawrence can do.

"He has been playing very well lately," Forbes says. "He's very experienced, and he just does a lot of things right."

He has that knack for being in the right place at the right time."

For a defensive back, being opportunistic translates into interceptions and fumble recoveries and Lawrence has his share. With a fumble recovery and an interception this season, Lawrence now has nine recoveries in his career and eight interceptions.

His total of five fumble recoveries last season tied a Notre Dame single-season record, which has since been eclipsed by Cedric Figaro. His career total of nine is three shy of the career mark of 12 held by Ross Browner.

Lawrence agrees that his opportunism is not something that he has worked on, or been taught.

"It's something that's natural," says the Ypsilanti, Mich., native. "It's not something that I really think about. I anticipate pretty well."

The Irish could anticipate Lawrence would be a pretty good player based on his high school accomplishments. He was an all-state selection as a junior and a senior as a defensive back. He also earned honorable mention for the Adidas/Scholastic Coach prep All-American squad.

It did not take long for Lawrence to get into the swing of things once he arrived, and he received some helping hands.

"We didn't have much depth when I got here, so Troy Wilson and I were second-team right away, behind Stacey Toran and Chris Brown," he says. "That situation definitely helped me develop quicker, and those guys really helped me, too."

Now it is Lawrence who is the experienced member of the group. The 6-4, 194-pound ballhawk also packs a wallop as evidenced by his 23 solo tackles and 10 assists. Forbes says that Lawrence is also taking over the job of showing the younger players the ropes.

"He leads by example," Forbes says. "He really encourages the team from the sidelines, and just exerts a great deal of positive leadership."

His experience and leadership show in his attitude toward drive-stopping. He likes to be the one the team can depend on to make the crucial play that stops a drive.

"I just like to make the play that can turn the game around," the psychology major says. "I like any big play in general, whether it be a recovery, an interception or a big hit."

Being in a position to make the momentum-stopping play is what the free safety position is all about. It is also what Steve Lawrence is all about.

a fine job up front."

Guay scored the only Irish goal in the second Kent State game.

The Irish are still waiting to get a little more experience on their roster.

knee injuries," said Smith.

"They'd have a little more experience and a little more quickness. We lost three big scorers in the likes of (Tim) Reilly, (Brent) Chapman, and (Bob) Thebeau.

Wrestling takes 2nd at Mich. St.

By CHRIS KILEY
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame wrestling team opened its season on the road this past weekend at the Michigan State Invitational and returned with a second-place finish behind host Michigan State.

Head Coach Fran McCann was apprehensive about the results.

"It was a typical good news, bad news situation," said McCann. "Although we did come in second place, we still didn't win, and that was our goal."

The surprise of the tournament was freshman Andy Radenbaugh in the 118-pound division. Radenbaugh won the tournament by defeating last year's tournament champion, who was also a NCAA qualifier.

Three other wrestlers were also crowned champions. Pat Boyd won the 142-pound division while both Ron Wisniewski and Chris Geneser won their respective divisions with pins in the finals.

Lone senior Dave Helmer and 158-pound Dan Carrigan both looked respectable although they did not place. Captain Jerry Durso, however, finished a disappointing third place.

As one of the top 134-pounders in the nation, Durso was heavily favored to win the tournament. After reaching the semifinals, Jerry was upset in the finals by a wrestler he had defeated last year.

"One of our goals was to have five champions and we had four," stated McCann. "I was most pleased because many of Irish defenseman Lance Patten (3) and the rest of the defense played well against Kent State, but the offense needs to increase its goal production at the Pointer Classic this weekend.

ND needs improved offense tomorrow at Pointer Classic

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

After the Notre Dame hockey team lost two season-opening games in which the defense played well enough to win, Head Coach Lefty Smith is looking for an improved offense when the Irish take to the ice this weekend in the Pointer Classic.

"The key to this tournament will be our scoring ability. We have to put the puck in the nets," said Smith. "In our two games against Kent State, we played well defensively and only allowed six goals in two games, but we didn't play well enough offensively."

Notre Dame faces St. John's (Minn.) tomorrow at 5 p.m., then will meet either Augsburg or Wisconsin-

Stevens Point on Saturday. Wisconsin-Stevens Point is hosting the tournament.

"We don't know much about St. John's, but Stevens Point and Augsburg are very competitive," said Smith. "We're certainly going up there with the idea of winning, yet it's tough to see how they'll respond on the road."

Smith is hoping that an extra three weeks of practice will work to the advantage of the 0-2 Irish. Notre Dame had only two weeks of practice before the 4-2 and 2-1 losses to Kent State. The Irish have had three weeks off since then.

"We seem to have made some improvements on the power play, but we've only been playing against ourselves, so we can't really tell," said Smith. "We'd like to feel we've improved, but the proof in the pudding is when you go against someone else."

Three freshmen will receive starting assignments this weekend. Tim Kuehl will start on the front line, Kevin Markovitz will be on the defensive end, and Lance Madson will start at goalie.

Kuehl scored in the season opener, and Markovitz had an assist in the same game. In the second game, Madson recorded 28 saves and allowed only two goals.

"We've been pleased with our freshmen," said Smith. "Markovitz and (Mike) Leher have done well on defense, Madson has been good in the nets, and Kuehl and (Bruce) Guay have done

Merkel leads Irish at districts

By MOLLY MAHONEY
Sports Writer

As the snow begins to fall around the Notre Dame campus, most students are busy running towards the warmth of their dorm rooms. But for the 17 dedicated women of the Notre Dame cross country team, these icy days are just one of the many they have spent since August not just running, but outrunning their competition.

The Irish hope to highlight an already impressive season with a strong finish in the NCAA District IV meet this Saturday. They hope to finish in the top 20 and possibly even better if the team runs well against the powerful teams of the Big Ten and Mid-America conferences, as well as against the defending National Champions from the University of Wisconsin.

Under the guidance of first-year coach Dan Ryan, the team will look to continue its consistently strong showings that have included first-place showings against 12 teams in the Southwestern Michigan Invitational and against 14 teams in the Indiana Intercollegiate meet.

Having finished second in the North Star Conference behind an experienced team from DePaul, the Irish will look to follow in the footsteps of junior Julia Merkel, who has led them to top-ten finishes in every invitational they have competed in this year.

Junior Kathleen Lehman and sophomore Theresa Rice will look to qualify for the NCAA championship meet as well.

see RUNNING, page 8

Green given brief look at defensive back

It wouldn't be the first time a Notre Dame tailback switched over to defensive back, but it might be the most surprising.

Following the tradition of Irish runners like Hiawatha Francisco and Corny Southall, both promising tailbacks that were moved at one time in their careers to defensive back, Mark Green spent Monday afternoon's practice working out with the defense at the request of Irish head coach Lou Holtz.

While the move itself may not be that surprising - Green was a standout defensive back in high school and played flanker for the Irish all last year - the timing is certainly so. The 6-0, 183-pound sophomore has gained 248 yards rushing this year while splitting time with freshman Anthony Johnson, and with only three games to go it would seem unusual to make such a drastic change.

"We've got some guys hurting in the secondary," said Irish secondary coach Terry Forbes, referring to the nagging injuries plaguing Marv Spence and Chris Kvochak, as well as the season losses of Brandy Wells and Mike Haywood. "Mark is a talented all-round player, and we just wanted to look at him there in order to find the best combinations possible."

While this may mean a permanent change for Green in the future, don't count on seeing him anywhere else but in the offensive backfield against Penn State on Saturday.

"Mark's practiced on both sides of the ball this week," said Forbes. "We're not sure yet how we'll use him against Penn State, but he'll be a factor somehow."

For the second time in three weeks, a Notre Dame player has been named AP Midwest Player of the Week. Irish quarterback Steve Beuerlein picked up the award this week after connecting on 11-of-20 passes for a career-high 269 yards in directing his squad to its 61-29 rout of SMU.

Marty Burns

Football Notebook

Two weeks ago, Beuerlein's favorite target Tim Brown received the honor for his performance in Notre Dame's 31-3 victory over Air Force.

For Beuerlein, the award caps an impressive three-week stretch that has seen him settle down and complete a combined 32-of-53 passes for three touchdowns and no interceptions. This leadership has not gone unnoticed by Holtz, who credits much of his team's recent success to Beuerlein's improved direction of the offense.

"Why have we been playing better?" asked Holtz. "I think Beuerlein has really played well. He's got more confidence and he's blending in well with the football team."

On Saturday, of course, it will be critical to Notre Dame's upset chances that Beuerlein have a good day. Although the senior signal-caller had a nightmarish day in the rain at Penn State last season, he has had two of his finest performances against the Lions previously. In 1983, Beuerlein hit 14-of-20 passes for 257 yards, while in 1984 he completed 20-of-28 for 267 yards. Both of those totals were career-bests in yardage.

Holtz has one more thing to add to the growing list of reasons for the importance of the upcoming matchup with head coach Joe Paterno's Nittany Lions.

So far we've all heard about the role it will play in deciding Notre Dame's bowl chances, Penn State's bowl choice, Miami's national championship bid, and the financial situation of the Fiesta, Citrus, and Gator Bowls.

"Notre Dame and Penn State, Notre Dame and Southern Cal, Notre Dame and Michigan," said Holtz, "are all big rivalries that generate a lot of excitement. But because of recruiting it gets intense. They're all fine institutions and you recruit against these teams. Because of what's involved there, this game is so crucial."

Remember Faust Fever? It may still be accompanied by dizziness and nausea in some Irish fans, but not so 300 miles east of here on the campus of Akron.

The Fighting Zips have rolled up a 7-2 slate so far this season, good enough for a rank of an even No. 100 in this week's USA Today computer. Just
