Rice argues against death penalty

Professor questions government

By CHRIS YANT
News Writer

"I was a supporter of the death penalty and I've changed for very good reasons," said Professor Charles Rice to open his speech on capital punishment last night in the Walsh Hall chapel.

After a performance from Voices of Faith Gospel Choir and an impressive introduction highlighting his accomplishments, Rice stated that "the only two reasons, in principle, for intentionally killing someone are war and criminal punishment."

However, he questions whether or not these reasons, which are determined by state government, are truly just.

Pope John Paul II, under the new Catechism, maintains that in practice the state should not invoke capital punishment unless it is impossible to protect the surrounding society from the criminal.

Rice, who is a consultant to the U.S. Commission on Criminal Rights, supports this view and relates the story of Cain and Abel. Cain, after killing his brother Abel, is marked by God for the sole purpose that he is not to be killed by others in return.

"God," Rice said, "did not intend on killing as a punishment for murder." Rice stated that the rights of the innocent are absolute; even though the rights of the guilty may be in question, it is not up to us or our government to decide whether or not someone's life should be taken. It is a decision for God to make.

Rice then discussed the rights of the unborn and those in a vegetative state. "Our law now allows the intentional killing by removal of food and water or the implementation of terminal sedation," he said. He argued that the government, in upholding these laws, no longer protects the right to life of the innocent.

"The question is," he stated, "Who is God?"

Rice pointed out the "corruptness" of our government and concluded that we have climbed unjustly to the point where we decide when human life ends.

"Through the use of contraceptives people have gained dominion over when life begins," Rice said in closing, "and now through government we have dominion over when life ends."

Rice is a professor at Notre Dame law school and also serves as a faculty advisor to Notre Dame's organization Right to Life.

Judge puts off Rita retrial for witnesses' ease

Observer Staff Report

SOUTH BEND

A new trial date of Feb. 2 was set on Friday for John Rita's second trial on the charge of leaving the scene of an injury accident. He faces allegations from the Nov. 13, 1993, traffic crash that killed Notre Dame freshman Mara Fox, 18, as she walked along a dark strip of Douglas Road.

The trial was scheduled to begin on Oct. 20, but defense attorney Charles Asher filed a motion with St. Joseph Superior Court Judge William Albright for a postponement. In his plea Asher noted that one witness who testified at Rita's first trial is in the late stages of pregnancy and may be unable to travel and that finding hotel rooms for out-of-town witnesses may be difficult due to scheduled Notre Dame football games on three consecutive weekends.

Prosecutor Michael Barnes did not oppose Asher's request for a continuance.

The retrial comes after a jury was unable to reach a verdict on the leaving-the-scene charge, resulting in a mistrial in 1994. That jury did acquit Rita, a third-year Notre Dame law student at the time of the accident, on the charge of causing a death while driving under the influence of intoxicants.

Barnes decided to retry the count, and the trial was set after Rita exhausted his appeal on several related issues.

Nursing students celebrate accomplishments

By SHANA'E TATE
News Writer

The nursing class of 1999 gathered together on Friday, Oct. 10 to celebrate its accomplishments and dedication to the field of nursing with family, friends, and professors. It was the Second Annual Nursing Dedication Ceremony held by the department of nursing in the Church of Our Lady of Loretto.

"This ceremony is a symbol that you are in the nursing program," said Jennifer Groszk, senior and member of the hospitality committee. "The junior nursing class accepted their call into nursing and now we are celebrating."

This is only the second nursing dedication put on by the nursing department. In the past, the department had held a capping ceremony for the new nursing class; however, the nurses no longer wear the caps due to changes in traditional professional nursing outfits, so the ceremony was discontinued.

This service "makes the students call to nursing public," said Mary Jo Regan-Kubinski, nursing chairman. "Now they are really beginning their nursing career."

Following the call to service was a celebration of the word. Many different students and faculty participated in the prayer service.

"Everything went really well and everyone did their part in helping," said Renee Chulski, dedication co-chair and member of the 1999 nursing class.

The students had to maintain a high grade point average and take certain classes to be able to be part of this department. "The students were challenged to use not only knowledge and skill but also compassion," said Annette Peacock-Johnson, nursing professor.

The celebration of dedication included the call to ministry, dedication, Nightingale pledge, and the blessing. Each student was called by name to be blessed. A faculty member laid hands on the student and prayed that she may understand God's call in her life. The student then received a lighted lamp, which is a reminder of

October Madness

My apartment is a mess. Clothes are strewn all over the living room. Discarded beer bottles, pizza boxes and bags of garbage make a four foot pile where my kitchen garbage can used to be. Maybe I will find it again someday.

What makes me sit, seemingly oblivious to the filth, on the only clear area in the entire place (the couch) and stare at the glowing tube while I shout insults through my open front door at an obnoxious next-door neighbor?

I'll give you two words: October baseball.

Maybe it is the fact that the Baltimore Orioles, the team that I have followed since before I could even remember what a baseball was, have survived the entire regular season in first-place in the American League East.

Maybe that they took down the supposedly mighty Seattle Mariners in four games.

Maybe that they are now up against the ropes against the upstart Cleveland Indians, who took three out of five games from the New York Yankees last week and look to make short work of my favorite team.

Maybe, but I doubt it.

This year's post season play is a prime example of why Major League Baseball needed a playoff system. Three years ago, when the system was first announced, many baseball fans screamed out that it was an unnecessary extension of the year (present company included).

But the 1997 division series showed an underdog team dethroning the defending World Series champions in five games (two of which were won by a 21-year-old rookie). In the National League, an expansion team (Florida Marlins) blew by the surging San Francisco Giants. The defending NL champion Atlanta Braves, led by Greg Maddux, arguably one of the best active pitchers, shut down the fearsome lineup of Bell, Bagwell and Biggio.

This playoff series has seen two pitchers in two days throw 15 strikeouts in a game (Mike Mussina for the Orioles in the AL and Livan Hernandez for the Marlins in the NL).

The Baltimore-Cleveland game on Saturday went 12 innings and ended with a score of 2-1 on an error. The next day, the same two teams combined for more than 24 hits in a full nine innings. (Meanwhile the Orioles hit three home-runs in an inning, a League Championship record.)

So, the way it stands today, the Braves are chasing the Marlins three games to two. My beloved Orioles, on the other hand, are down to the Indians by a count of three games to one.

The division series and now the championship series have produced some of the best baseball I have seen in years.

If Major League Baseball was looking for a remedy to the problem of faltering attendance, these games may be just that.

So, when you get a free moment, flip on your TV to Fox, NBC or ESPN. But be careful, even if your hometown team has been eliminated (To Be Read: New York Yankees, you heard me, Ferg.) You might just get caught up in the fever that is the playoffs and forget about everything else for a while.

Cassini protestors flee Canaveral, fearing deadly accident

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. Nearly all the protestors left town: They didn't want to be around if the rocket carrying NASA's Cassini spacecraft blew up and 72 pounds of highly radioactive, highly carcinogenic plutonium rained down.

The engineers and scientists who devoted years to the project, on the other hand, brought their families to witness what they considered to be a historical, and safe, event: launch of the first spacecraft designed to orbit the ringed planet Saturn.

The moment of truth — liftoff of the mammoth Titan 4-B rocket with Cassini — was scheduled for the

"I invited everyone I love to the launch," said Richard Spehalski, program manager for the Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

Among the more than 30 Spehalski family members gathered at Cape Canaveral: his two granddaughters, ages 6 months and 4 years.

Michener removes his life-support

AUSTIN, Texas

Ninety-year-old James A. Michener has taken himself off life-sustaining kidney dialysis. His condition has not changed since his decision. "Basically, he's stable and resting at home," a spokeswoman said Sunday, referring questions to long-time Michener friend and associate John Kings. "Mr. Michener is undergoing evaluations. He is perfectly well and comfortable," Kings said in a brief statement. "He has spent his life respecting the press and what it has to do," Kings added. "He asks now that the press respect his privacy." Kings would not take any questions. An unnamed source told the (New York) Daily News: "He's decided he doesn't want to go on living like this." The writer has more than 40 titles to his name. He released his latest book, "A Century of Sonnets," earlier this year. Michener's literary success began with "Tales of the South Pacific." The book won the 1948 Pulitzer Prize and was the basis for "South Pacific," a long-running Broadway musical and later a motion picture. For decades, Michener, a former teacher, wandered the globe from Japan and Korea to Hungary, Hawaii, Afghanistan, Spain, South Africa, Colorado, Israel, Chesapeake Bay, Poland, Texas, Alaska and the Caribbean.

ISU student dies in plane crash

TERRE HAUTE, Indiana

An Indiana State University student died Sunday and another was injured after the single-engine plane they were flying crashed. Aerospace technology students Ryan Somerville and Ryan Stocksdales took off in a small Cessna 172-N plane from Clarksville in southern Indiana early this morning. Stocksdales, 19, was flying the plane when he started having problems with the wind, investigators told WTWO-TV. Somerville, 19, was a student pilot. When they tried to land, Stocksdales apparently tried to pull out of the wind, but failed and nose-dived into the grass next to the runway at Sky King Airport near Terre Haute around noon, investigators said. Sky King is a commuter airport often used by ISU students. "When the wind caught it, it blew sideways and dropped on its wing and that was it," witness Edith Action told WISH-TV. Both students were taken to Union Hospital in Terre Haute. Somerville was celebrating his 19th birthday on Sunday. He died from his injuries. Stocksdales was listed in critical condition Sunday night. The Federal Aviation Administration was investigating the crash.

'Summer of Love' relived, '90s style

SAN FRANCISCO

Peace and love. Marijuana. Tie-dye T-shirts. Painful memories of the Vietnam War. It was 1967 again Sunday — albeit with a 1990s flair — as one-time flower children and those who weren't even born then celebrated the Summer of Love. "It's a massive flashback," said Peter Bantowsky, one of an estimated 35,000 people who gathered in a Golden Gate Park meadow to re-live the event that helped usher in the hippie generation. It was a concert-like atmosphere with many basking on blankets in the warm sun as they listened to music from Jefferson Starship and John Handy. Ray Manzarek of The Doors, '60s icon Wavy Gravy and United Farm Workers co-founder Dolores Huerta were among the many speakers. The event was held in October because it traditionally is the nicest time of year in San Francisco. A patch of pumpkins for sale was a quick reminder that it was autumn, not summer. The original Summer of Love evolved from LSD guru Timothy Leary's Golden Gate Park "Be-In," in which he encouraged thousands to turn on, tune in and drop out. McDonald organized the most somber part of the anniversary — a small replica of the Vietnam War Memorial in Washington, D.C. The atmosphere, thick with smells of marijuana smoke and sage and the sounds of bongo drummers, was pleasant. McDonald said he was happy with the large turnout but a bit saddened that the '60s spirit may be waning a bit.

Divers explore Blackbeard's ship

BEAUFORT, N.C.

Archaeologists studying wreckage found about two miles offshore say signs continue to suggest they may have found Queen Anne's Revenge, the flagship of the pirate Blackbeard. "We don't expect to find treasure. But we've already found numerous artifacts," said Fay Mitchell Henderson of the state Department of Cultural Resources. "We're hoping to be able to definitively say that this boat belonged to Blackbeard." Underwater archaeologists began a month-long exploration of the site Oct. 3. They soon plan to begin raising artifacts from the site. Divers have discovered nine cannons at the wreck site about 20 feet below the sea's surface. When Blackbeard was captain of the Queen Anne's Revenge, it carried 40 cannons. Researchers say that if the wreck is not of the flagship, it could be one of two other similar ships in Blackbeard's fleet. Blackbeard, the nickname of Edward Teach, commanded four vessels and 300 pirates in his prime, and his flagship carried a crew of 125. His reign on the seas climaxed in May 1718 when his crew blockaded Charleston, S.C., for more than a week.

Deane honored with prize for his acclaimed novel

By ANTHONY PERRI
News Writer

Professor Shamus Deane, chair of the Keough Institute of Irish Studies, was awarded two Irish Times fiction prizes for his critically acclaimed first novel, "Reading in the Dark." A long term project, the novel started in 1988 and culminated after four years of intense work from 1992 through 1996.

"Reading in the Dark" is the story of a boy growing up in the city of Derry in the north of Ireland in the 1940s and 50s. Partially autobiographical and partially a compilation of other families, it tells the tale of the long-standing and violent conflict between the minority Catholic and nationalist community, to which the boy belongs, and the majority Protestant and unionist community, which wields the reins of power in this society. Growing up, he uncovers a terrible family secret rooted in that conflict and which has become a haunting, threatening presence in the family's life.

Though he somewhat expected a warm reception for this tale in his homeland of Ireland, Deane was surprised by the international acclaim it has gained. Already a sensation in the U.S. and U.K., it has been translated into French and German and has achieved a similar popularity.

"The general situation of a family with a secret speaks to a wide range of people," Deane said. Some have even gone so far as to say that the themes expressed are so powerful as to make the book painful to read.

Deane himself experienced this torment during the long, arduous process of writing "Reading in the Dark." The pressures of work and the fact that deep down he "didn't want to confront the novel" himself, led him to a long procrastination in the late 80s. His long struggle came to fruition in 1996 leaving him with a "satisfaction of having finally articulated his story."

Complementing the Irish Times Prize, "Reading in the Dark" received the Guardian Prize for Fiction and was the close second choice for last year's Booker Prize, the British equivalent of the Pulitzer.

Deane will receive the Irish Times prizes from former president of Ireland Patrick Hillery in a special ceremony on Nov. 20 at the Royal Dublin Society. Deane and the other honored authors in the competition will read from their work at the Irish Film Center in Dublin on Nov. 19.

Since 1993 Deane has been sharing his genius with the Notre Dame community. He joined the University to head the creation of an Irish Studies Program that would become the premier program in North America. Having the "oldest, most complex, and only colonial and post-colonial European literature, along with all the tradition that ties Notre Dame to Ireland" makes the Irish Studies Program all the more important.

This labor of love too is reaching a cross roads. Under his careful tutelage the Irish Studies program will stabilize and "take a clear form by 1998, surpassing any other faculty in the New World."

ND alumnus receives prestigious education award

By MALIN STEARNS

To celebrate his 20-year teaching career, a Notre Dame graduate has returned to be honored by his alma mater.

Michael Wilson, class of '73, received the Outstanding Educator's Award on Friday from the Notre Dame Alumni Association. The award was part of the Alumni Association's three-day "Excellence in Teaching" conference.

Wilson has taught second grade in the University of Chicago Laboratory Schools for his entire career.

"Wilson has powerfully served his students, his colleagues and future teachers," said Karen Sullivan, chair of the computer department at the Laboratory

Schools. "If you are a student, having [Wilson] means, quite simply, having the best year of your school life."

The "Excellence in Teaching" conference was put on by the Alumni Association's Continuing Education office. All middle school and junior and senior high school teachers, principals, and counselors are welcome to participate.

"Participants in the program return to their schools re-committed to their vocations and more effective with students," said Kathleen Sullivan, director of Alumni Continuing Education.

"Participants from the program will become powerful ambassadors for Notre Dame at the Catholic, private, and public school levels," she said.

Participants are sponsored by Notre Dame alumni clubs and individual alumni. More than 2,500 alumni at the middle school and junior and senior high school levels have received invitations to the conference. Five current Notre Dame students were also among this year's participants.

Michael Wilson received the Outstanding Educator's Award on Friday from the Notre Dame Alumni Association.

Students rally against rape

By COLLEEN GAUGHEN
News Writer

"Stop rape! Organize! We will not be victimized!"

This chant was one of many echoing throughout the Notre Dame community during the "Take Back The Night" rally last night.

Campus Alliance for Rape Elimination (CARE) sponsored a rally Sunday evening to raise awareness of rape and sexual assault.

Beginning at Fieldhouse Mall with candles and signs, the rally processed through South Quad, over Highway 31, and concluded at The Clubhouse at Saint Mary's with the music of the Skolchohols.

Students were also given the opportunity to share experiences and discuss the issue of sexual assault in the Notre Dame community.

"It [rape] happens," CARE leader and Sex Offense Services volunteer Cara Stirts said. "So many people think it doesn't happen here, or can't happen here, but it does, more often than anyone realizes."

"I thought it was inspirational. It made me remember why I am part of this program and why I am striving to be a good student," said Marie Kane, member of the 1999 nursing class and head of the reception.

Both programs encourage the awareness of assault prevention and safety.

Special to The Observer

Sister Elaine DeRosiers has retired after serving for 21 years as the director of Educational Media at Notre Dame.

A specialist in closed circuit and broadcast television, DeRosiers had managed and supervised the University's audiovisual centers since 1976.

She also assisted faculty members in the use of new forms of teaching technology and serves as a consultant in the design of new instructional space on campus. She played an integral role in the development of DeBartolo Hall, which is now recognized as one of the most technologically advanced learning centers in higher education.

Before coming to Notre Dame, DeRosiers served as a communication consultant and television teacher for the Boston Catholic Teaching Center. She previously taught in the archdiocesan school systems in Boston and Louisville, Ky.

Colorado prepares to execute Davis

By JUDITH KOHLER
Associated Press Writer

CANON CITY, Colo.

Colorado breaks what a prosecutor calls its 30-year "drought" on executions today when it puts to death a man who raped a woman and then riddled her with bullets, including nine in her face.

Gary Lee Davis is scheduled to die by lethal injection at 8 p.m. for the July 1986 murder of Virginia "Ginny" May.

May was 33 when Davis abducted her while her two small children watched and drove her with his wife to a secluded place. The victim was raped and Davis shot her to death.

"What are these criminals who have been sentenced to death and waiting in prison offering society?" asked May's sister, Jerri Cretti.

Colorado juries have been free to put people to death since 1978, two years after the U.S. Supreme Court ended a four-year moratorium on capital punishment. They have been so hesitant to do so, however, that Oklahoma residents opposed moving the Timothy McVeigh terror case to Colorado. McVeigh was sentenced to death in Denver in August.

Prosecutor Bob Grant, the lead prosecutor on the case, said the wait for justice has been too long.

"There shouldn't have been a 30-year drought," he said.

For others, Monday will be a dark day. Davis' death could help make 1997 the nation's highest year ever for executions. The total so far is 57, the highest since 1957, when 65 people were executed.

Despite the objection of groups including the American Civil Liberties Union, the 53-year-old Davis exhausted all his state and federal appeals and was denied clemency by Governor Roy Romer last month.

Davis' priests, his attorneys and his aunt say he has undergone a genuine spiritual transformation and has accepted his fate.

Airplane crashes, kills 74

By IAN PHILLIPS
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina
An Argentine airplane may have broken apart in the air before it crashed in Uruguay, killing all 74 people aboard, Uruguay's civil aviation chief said Sunday.

The Austral airline plane "may have come apart in the air because the remains are spread so far apart," Lt. Col. Walter Garcia said.

He also said lightning may have damaged the plane, but did not elaborate.

The Argentine newspaper Clarin on Sunday quoted unidentified investigators as saying they suspected the plane may have come apart in the air, possibly losing a wing, as a result of violent turbulence.

Storms bearing strong winds, rain, hail and lightning were raging at the time of the crash Friday night, and the "extremely difficult weather" may have been to blame, officials have said.

Garcia previously had told The Associated Press that the storm "explains only part" of the accident, but he did not elaborate on that statement at this conference.

He said the flight data recorders must be found to help determine the exact cause.

There was no sign of the recorders by late afternoon Sunday.

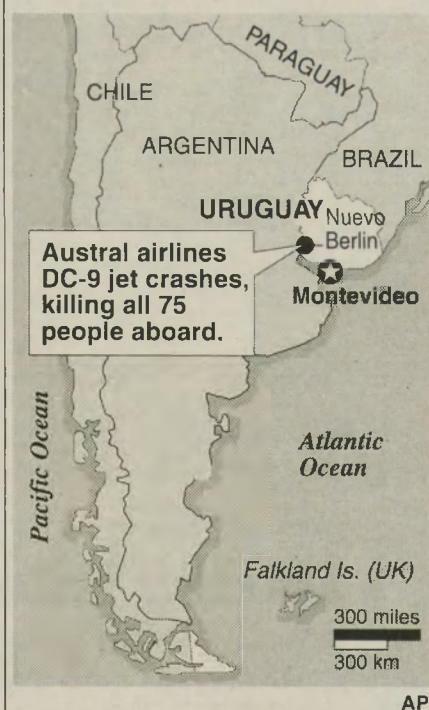

Fragments of shattered metal from the DC-9 and small, unrecognizable human remains lay scattered over farmland where the plane went down, near the town of Nuevo Berlin near the western border of Uruguay.

Investigators sifted through earth and pieces of twisted

Sunday.

An Uruguayan judge and the Argentine Air Force were conducting separate investigations of the crash, the worst air tragedy in both countries' history.

Most of the victims were Argentine, but there were a few Uruguayans and one Swiss, officials said. Three infants were among the dead.

Argentina's Association of Aeronautical Technicians criticized the Austral airline Sunday, claiming in a statement that it "puts business profit before security." The airline is frequently criticized for flying in bad weather when other companies remain grounded.

Airline officials could not be reached immediately for comment Sunday.

The 28-year-old plane had made about 54,000 flights through June, officials said.

Seventy relatives of the victims were flown on Saturday afternoon from Buenos Aires to the Uruguayan town of Fray Bentos, near the crash site.

But they abandoned the trip when told that the remains of the victims were unrecognizable.

"I can't come to terms with this. We have to bury a ghost. My dad disintegrated in midair," said Jose Luis Fuentes, who lost his 59-year-old father in the crash.

"We just have to come to terms with the fact that they are impossible to identify," Argentine Deputy Foreign Minister Andres Cisneros said in an interview with television channel Todo Noticias.

Uruguayan authorities may organize a memorial ceremony at the site of the crash this week.

Deep Thoughts on the Porcelain God

I never wanted my column to be a bi-weekly "football" column. I know many people on the football team who do not want this to be a place where some joker can rant and rave about the football team. My opinion on the football team doesn't really help anything — even though I know one or two things about coaching football (although there is a segment of the population who does not believe I know squat). However, as the season unfolded, the most appropriate topic after each weekend was football.

Because I have been very critical of certain aspects of the team in the past, I feel it is only appropriate to at least praise the team for a portion of this column after its victory. To not write anything about the team's victory would be like a coach of an undefeated team resigning after the team's first loss. No matter how close he was to resigning before that loss, it still looks like the coach was only a front-runner.

Kevin

For the Fighting Irish, credit must be given where credit is due. The offensive line was opening holes that interhall running backs could run through. Autry Denson and Clement Stokes were running hard and punishing the opposition. The offensive scheme even deserves credit. We ran the football, controlled the clock, and sprinkled in some passes. Just throw the ball deep to loosen things up and we'll be in great shape for USC.

This looked like a Notre Dame football team. Although I must ask: What was going on at the end of the first half with clock management? Call timeout and throw it into the end zone! We were playing Pittsburgh. This so called "playing not to lose" where you don't want to lose momentum going into half-time is a sure fire way to increase your odds of losing.

Was the coaching staff in the bathroom while this was going on? Speaking of bathrooms, why do they seem to have a unique influence in our daily activities — other than the obvious? If your dorm had an SYR or formal this weekend, the bathrooms were a site for a lot of varied activity. Many dorms had to change their usual configuration and provide bathrooms for the opposite sex. How many times did someone enter the wrong bathroom (unintentionally)?

If you were the hall staff, bathrooms were the lightning-rod for mischief. Young lads and lasses sneaking drinks into the Senior Bar bathroom. Impromptu public drinking at urinals. Those same youths sprinting to the bathroom to leave regurgitated dinners as presents for unsuspecting resident assistants on their final round.

In a movie I watched over the weekend, bathroom activity provided a strange twist. In "Mallrats" the boyfriend asks his soon to be ex-girlfriend what she does for so long in the bathroom. She responds that she cries. She thinks of all the great things other people do and cries because her only accomplishment is sex with this guy. (Although if she had sex in a bathroom at Notre Dame, she could be expelled).

This got me thinking about bathrooms in movies. There is the great scene in "Weird Science" where the computer-generated girlfriend explains to the nerd's parents that he "tosses off" during his extended stays. The only thing funnier is his disbelieving mother crying, "You told us you were combing your hair!"

Anyway, one of the most well-known bathroom exposés is in Pulp Fiction where every time John Travolta goes to the restroom, something crazy happens.

What is the deal with the influence of bathrooms? I saw in the bookstore where they have condensed thousands of novels to under five pages so you can read them while in the bathroom. Some people have entire magazine racks at your disposal — although in West Virginia I bet they are just picture books (that is if they even have indoor plumbing).

Oddly enough when I was watching the Notre Dame game, one guy came out of the bathroom complaining about how hot he was. It was comfortable when he went in and it was comfortable to the rest of us when he came out. I don't know; you do the math.

Be careful how you let your desire to go to the bathroom affect your judgement. Some girl backed her car into me twice the other night, but I had no time to wait for information and she was gone by the time I got back. Why she didn't stay, I'll never know.

So what is the point of this column? Basically, spend less time in the bathroom, watch "Chasing Amy," and beat the Trojans.

Kevin Patrick is a third-year JD/MBA student. He often has no point. He can be found struggling through three straight mid-terms beginning today.

■ DIGGING DEEPER

ND Must Continue Noble Ideal of Real Education

There is much discussion and debate today on the purpose of a university. A disturbing trend is the compromising of true education for the sake of competition. Most university administrations feel that in order to prepare their students for "the real world," they must educate at least a great number of them in the ways of the world. The virtue of a liberal education has given way to the need for "practical" education. The pressures for encouraging this trade school mentality are not negligible. A school's worth is often judged by its national ranking. These rankings try to be as quantitative as possible, objectively weighing schools against each other by way of concrete and discrete methods. Though a worthwhile objective, the rankings place pressure on schools to churn out students who show immediate "success" in the real world. GRE and MCAT scores, starting salaries and hiring rates, and alumni donation categories prod university administrations to adequately prepare students for immediate entry into the competitive corporate and professional world.

Aaron

In the midst of this shuffle, the pursuit of true education too often becomes obscured or worse yet, lost entirely. What do I mean by a "true education"? Is a degree in management or marketing somehow less an education than one in philosophy or the classics? Not necessarily, but this statement needs further qualification. A business education is concerned with the operations of the corporate world, with the workings of the stock market, banking, etc. This is undoubtedly worthwhile and necessary information, for obvious reasons. But it does not address what a true education should ultimately address. It does not get to the heart of things or even attempt to get to the heart of things. It does not and cannot do this because it does not ask the big questions. It is concerned with the workings of the free market and capitalism. It is not concerned with truth, with what is.

It is possible, and unfortunately all too common, for one to go through our system of higher education without ever being confronted with the questions that are basic to mankind. A business graduate may shrug his shoulders and say, "So what if I've never confronted these questions? Where will that get me anyway? I'll leave that waste of time to the philosophers. I mean, I need to live my life." My answer to this unfortunate soul is, "Exactly." You need to live. But in order to do this, it is incumbent that at some point you address these ultimate questions, or at least learn how to ask them. "The unexamined life is not worth living" is a truth for all time. Education is a serious enterprise.

Am I suggesting that everyone migrate to the College of Arts and Letters? Again, the answer is no. I realize that this would be absurd. A truly liberal education must include the natural sciences, as well as what I will refer to as the practical sciences of engineering and even business. But none of these studies should be exclusive unto themselves. Notre Dame is right in requiring courses in philosophy, theology, history, and literature. If a student finds that these are not sufficient in providing an investigation into what is, then I will be so bold as to suggest that a student ought to explore these questions by reading some of the great books on his own. It is possible for one to acquire some measure of wisdom, no matter what his particular field of study happens to be, but this takes effort and initiative.

Many assert that the purpose of an education is to develop our skills in critical and analytical thinking, problem solving, and communicating — in short, to learn how to learn. They are right, of course. The danger comes in seeing these skills as the only purpose of an education, as an end in themselves rather than means to an end. If we want to truly educate, we must remember that the learning process has an end, that we are searching for what is. We must avoid the modernists pitfall which essentially says that education is based on the pursuit of truth, never on the possibility of its being found.

We as individuals are responsible for our own education. But Notre Dame, as an institution, also needs to actively resist the pressures of secular culture, which encourage the pursuit of power, wealth, and fame, over the pursuit of truth and goodness. If we are truly a Catholic university, we will always be, in some sense, countercultural. (The disciple is not greater than the master.) Notre Dame has always prided itself on its focus on undergraduate education. A few recent trends, however, indicate that ND is sliding away from this noble ideal. The failure of the Ivy League schools — many of which began as Christian institutions — to retain their Christianity, is a warning for Notre Dame. Genuflecting toward Harvard may get us material success and recognition in U.S. News & World Report, but in the process, we will sacrifice that great Catholic ideal which made Notre Dame what it is in the first place.

Stanford Forfeits Scholastic Heritage to Immorality and Cultural Illiteracy

This past Saturday at the Notre Dame-Stanford game, I witnessed an atrocity which is practically beyond description. No, I am not talking about the performance of the Notre Dame football team; I am referring to the shameful display put on by the Stanford band. The outright bigotry and the vituperative, demeaning treatment the band members gave to the Irish Catholic heritage associated with Notre Dame bordered on the blasphemous. This debauchery is certainly destined to replace the performance the band gave back in the closing seconds of the Big Game of 1984 as the most infamous of all Stanford band moments.

I have always had a great deal of respect for Stanford University, and I've always admired its apparent commitment to intellectual excellence. As I understood it, only the best students (and the children of presidents) were admitted there. Stanford enjoys the highest level of prestige far and wide. While I was studying abroad, I found that foreign students know of two great schools in America: Harvard and Stanford. Naturally, I was expecting something indicative of this level of talent from the Stanford band. Those high expectations only made the shameful performance that much more shocking.

The band played several different numbers during their performance, and the music was interspersed with the most obscene, offensive and insulting commentary on all things Irish. It began with flippant treatment of The Famine of the 1840s and the blight that destroyed the potatoes and decimated the Irish. Historians estimate that this event caused the death of one million people in Ireland, and the forced emigration (often resulting in more deaths on the "coffin ships") of another million. Such a tragic event in our history is not to be treated with such levity.

The performance grew in its bigoted tone. The Irish race was scathingly referred to as a race with practically no culture to speak of. Mercy! I couldn't believe my ears! Ireland without culture? Where, oh where, have these children been trained? This is the outcome of a Stanford education?

Perhaps a Stanford education does not cover the pivotal role Catholic Ireland played in the development of Western Civilization. Perhaps the Stanford curriculum ignore the impact the Irish race had in preserving Western culture from the destruction of the barbarian hordes after the fall of Rome. They might do well to consider studying this important aspect of history in their Western Civ courses (assuming they still have some). I suggest they turn to Thomas Cahill, who has written of the Irish impact in his excellent book, How the Irish Saved Civilization:

"For as the Roman Empire fell, as all through Europe matted, unwashed barbarians descended on the Roman cities, looting artifacts and burning books, the Irish, who were just learning to read and write, took up the great labor of copying all of Western literature — everything they could lay their hands on. These scribes then served as conduits through which the Greco-Roman and Judeo-Christian cultures were transmitted to the tribes of Europe, newly settled amid the rubble and ruined vineyards of the civilization they had overwhelmed. Without this Service of the Scribes, everything that happened subsequently would have been unthinkable. Without the Mission of the Irish continent in the bays and valleys of their exile, the world that came after them would have been an entirely different one — a world without books. And our own world would never have come to be."

Still the pathetic narrative continued, wallowing deeper and deeper in outrageous ignorance. It finally reached the bottom of inflammatory atrocity with the implication of the Irish, as a race, in the terrorism of the IRA! I have yet to recover from the shock.

At the end of this incendiary performance, the narrator — half in jest, half in embarrassment — commented that he didn't actually write the script, he just read it. Sounds vaguely similar to what the Nazi pawns said at Nuremberg.

It is absolutely beyond belief that such an abomination can be inflicted on an American audience in these enlightened '90s. Isn't this the age of sensitivity? The age of diversity? Diversity! I thought that was the trump card of the '90s! And Stanford! Good heavens, is there any other university which congratulates itself so boastfully on its pursuit of diversity? On its "multicultural" achievements? On its commitment to non-discrimination? Why, Stanford even has a "diversity day" scheduled for Oct. 18! But don't be fooled by all this chest-thumping and posturing — the facts speak for themselves. When it comes to diversity, the Stanford student body is as hypocritical as it is ignorant.

And it was the ignorance of this display which was the most tragic, particularly its denouncing of the Irish race as being practically without culture. Can such blatant ignorance exist on any campus in America? Do they really believe that? Apparently the Stanford students need to be educated on the incredible debt that Western Civilization owes to the Island of Saints and Scholars.

Again, I believe that Stanford's administrators would do well to offer a course on Irish history and culture to their students. They could even pattern it on the Irish courses offered at Notre Dame. In fact, they would be well served to offer this course in place of some of their other "diversity fostering" course such as:

"Philosophy 172-272. Is Morality Too Demanding?: Exploration of one of the most damning criticisms of moral theories, that they demand too much. Critics have argued that prominent moral theories require moral agents to act in ways that are either impossible or, if possible, undesirable."

"Anthropology 280. Ethnographic Approaches to Cultural Diversity in Schooling: The cultural process is approached by acquiring techniques of observation, interview, and interpretation of behavior in context, and soliciting and recording the 'native' explorations of students' own behavior; developing an internally consistent conceptual structure that orients observation and elicitation productively; and being sensitized to one's own culture and how it influences perception and interpretation of behavior."

"Feminist Studies 240/340. Lesbian Communities and Identities: Scholarship and research on the lesbian experience. Issues of homophobia, lesbian intimacy and sexuality, femme and butch roles, lesbian separatism, and the diversity of lesbian communities and identities."

Well, if this is their standard of what "culture" and "civilization" are all about, perhaps it is no wonder that they hold Catholic Ireland in such low esteem. The Irish have always had this thing about absolute morality.

Leland and Jane Stanford had such high goals for their university. As Mrs. Stanford said in 1902, "The university was ... designed for the betterment of mankind morally, spiritually, intellectually, physically, and materially." I'm afraid that if you consider the performance of their student population in the most important of these objectives, Stanford is a dismal failure.

A Tedious Tibetan Journey

Seven Years in Tibet

Directed by Jean-Jacques Annaud

Starring Brad Pitt, David Thewlis, Jamyang Wangchuck, and B.D. Wong

(out of five shamrocks)

By JOE LENISKI
Accent Movie Critic

Before the green-light was given for this movie, the Hollywood executives charged with producing "Seven Years in Tibet" had to overcome a difficult question: how do you tell a story in which the hero is a Nazi, the Dalai Lama and the Buddhist heritage are central plot elements, the action takes place over seven years, and make it entertaining and appealing at the same time? The concept sounds about as fruitful as starring the pope in an action shoot-em up/urban drama. But the answer came careening into their ever-resourceful brains like a meteorite from the sky: thin out the plotline, place the focus on war, love, and survival in nature rather than religion, and downplay the Nazism by, of course, having cinema-stud Brad Pitt play the lead role. Such original, innovative ideas demonstrate precisely why these guys make the big bucks.

Pitt plays the handsome, cocky, Aryan yellow-head Heinrich Harrer, a German mountain climber (and yes, a Nazi) with a will of iron and a heart of lead. In the midst of World War II, he ditches his wife and his unborn child and travels to India to climb a mountain and prove his male virility. Here is where the archetypal "hero transformation" begins, spanning over 10 years where Heinrich and travel companion Peter (played with subtle dignity by David Thewlis) become POWs, fugitives from the British militia, wandering beggars, established citizens in the xenophobic realm of Tibet, and finally loyal confidants of the Buddhist spiritual leader the Dalai Lama. During the Tibetan war with China, our hero discovers the meaning of love, honor, and loyalty, and still retains that mischievous, boyish grin. By the close of the film, Harrer inevitably becomes the warm, caring person the audience has been expecting, and his hero journey comes to a satisfying, albeit predictable, close.

The plot of this movie is nei-

Brad Pitt stars as Heinrich Harrer, an Austrian mountain climber whose trip through the Himalayas changes his life in "Seven Years in Tibet."

ther surprising nor intricate; it is a true story based loosely on a decade's worth of Harrer's memoirs. What little established plot there is involving the survival in the Himalayan wilderness and war with China dissolves around the intimate, innocent relationship between Pitt and the 14-year-old Dalai Lama, the only element of the film that the audience truly cares about. Essentially this is movie about two kids: one child who is forced to act with an adult responsibility beyond his years, and the other an adult who behaves like a child. Jamyang Wangchuck gives a wonderful performance as the young Dalai Lama, Pitt mostly looks good yet turns in a convincing character despite a wavering German accent, and many of the background actors make the most out of their diminutive roles. But probably the most impressive thing about "Seven Years" is what we see on screen. The costumes look authentic, the cities and temples are realistic, and the backdrop, shot in the Andes Mountains to simulate the roof of the world, is awe-inspiring and breathtaking. Even when this movie embarks into a tedious and repetitious shot sequence (and there are many of them), the viewer can still sit back and appreciate the majestic setting.

I hate straddling the proverbial barbed-wire fence of criticism, but this movie defines a three-shamrock rating. The backgrounds, acting, and intimacy between Harrer and the Dalai Lama make this an excellent film; the slow pace, sometimes dull filmmaking, and uninteresting plot developments make this movie subpar. This is a good film, nothing more, nothing less, and at the very least you should see it and decide for yourself. But if you want an excellent Brad Pitt film, instead of going out and seeing "Seven Years in Tibet," lop off a few words and just rent "Seven." And be looking for the pope's new action drama; I think it is due in theaters around Christmas.

A More Wanted Wayans

Most Wanted

Directed by David Glenn Hogan

Starring Keenan Ivory Wayans, Jon Voight, and Jill Hennessy

(out of five shamrocks)

By JOSH BECK
Accent Movie Critic

All I seem to be able to say after viewing the film "Most Wanted" is: Finally. Finally, Keenan Ivory Wayans has made a movie to be proud of. After such mediocre attempts as "A Low Down Dirty Shame" and "The Glimmer Man," Wayans has produced a film which is both subtle and entertaining at the same time. Smartly directed by David Glenn Hogan with a screenplay written by Wayans himself, "Most Wanted" definitely establishes itself as an action film worthy of viewing.

It seems to lack nothing in its entirety; it has a well-developed plot, fast-paced action, a superb villain (Jon Voight), and dashing lead characters, which of course seems to be the trend these days, i.e. George Clooney and Nicole Kidman in "The Peacemaker." While this movie does not have the star power of most other action flicks (let's face it: Wayans isn't a star YET), it does keep the audience riveted with well-developed scenes that portray a gritty action drama. But this movie isn't all drama and gore: it was above all surprisingly funny. Wayans showcases his acting ability with well-placed punchlines, and some of the film's situations are just so funny you can't help but laugh.

Although it doesn't live up to the billing of highly budgeted summer blockbusters, "Most Wanted" provides a welcome add-on and makes the viewer glad that the summer may not have ended yet. Unlike the summer megabusters which tend to be all action-based, this film is intriguing because it keeps the audience guessing. From one situation to the next, nothing is certain, and this adds to the overall ambience which makes it good. Wayans plays a Marine who is imprisoned for a wrongful offense: he killed his commanding officer in self-defense. After being waylaid by the seemingly righteous conspirator Voight, Wayans is forced to carry out his dirty work or go back to death row. As a result he is forced to carry out an assassination which goes haywire and sends him into an intricate web of deceit as he is pursued by all levels of the federal government; hence, making him the 'Most Wanted.' What is likeable about this is the fact that Wayans plays a superb fugitive and is above all the most charming character. Jill Hennessy plays his reluctant partner-in-crime, Paul Sorvino the cool and collected CIA director, and Eric Roberts his seemingly innocent assistant, just to name a few of the recognizables.

With the intelligent direction of Hogan, this movie has some great scenes. Watch for the hysterical clip where Wayans is chased through freeway traffic by a mob of screaming citizens. As for the cinematography, the scenes are well-developed but have little flashiness to them, which works out fine in the end since the film doesn't really need a lot of pizzazz to accomplish its goal. Its goal, of course, is to keep you on the edge of your seat, which it does throughout, although it is one of the most subtle action films ever made. A cross between a detective drama and an action blockbuster, "Most Wanted" does what it sets out to do and there is no limit to the entertainment value. There are some inevitably bad facets to it, though. The acting could be better, with Wayans having some bland dialogue at times and Hennessy sadly not being given her chance to shine. And someone needs to let Wayans know that when you are a fugitive, you never dress entirely in black all the time. Voight, as always, is the most entertaining character here, as his portrayal of a military general gone bad is extremely funny aside from being intimidating and scary as arch-villains are.

Overall, what will surprise you about this movie is the fact that it is so entertaining and well-done. After seeing Keenan Ivory Wayans' other tries on the big screen, this will be a welcome and much-needed relief. Although it isn't perfect, it is exciting and engaging, and this is what the viewer appreciates most of all in the end. Helped by the memorable performance of Voight and the humor of Wayans, "Most Wanted" takes off and rarely comes down, making it at least one of the more desirable movies of the fall season, when action thrillers are few and far between.

Summary: An action film with a well-developed plot, which can be hard to find these days. Fast-paced action scenes with plenty of guns, fists, and blood. Starts out quick but evens out, so don't get there late. Funny and subtle at the same time, a must-see for the action buff and Wayans fan.

Taming the Panthers

Notre Dame snaps four game losing streak

By JOE CAVATO
Assistant Sports Editor

Saturday marked Bob Davie's return to where his coaching career started as a graduate assistant.

As it turned out, Saturday was also the return to many things for the Irish. The most important return was one to the correct side of the win-loss column as Notre Dame disposed of the Pittsburgh Panthers, 45-21.

The coaches and players were in need of any kind of win, but a comfortable win made it much sweeter.

"It's nice to see the players smile again," Davie said.

"It's easier to go to practice Monday and get up Sunday when you feel good about yourself," Ron Powlus said.

Saturday also marked the return of the type of Notre Dame football that everyone is used to seeing. The Irish ran 52 times for 317 yards and had only 20 pass attempts. In the first five games, the Blue and Gold averaged just 130 yards a game on the ground, but the offensive line was able to dominate the smaller Panthers.

"They're competitive, but not as physical as us," offensive coordinator Jim Colletto said. "I think that wore on them."

The Observer/John Daily

Kick returner Allen Rossum opened things up for the Irish with a bang, taking the opening kickoff 93 yards for a touchdown. It was the first this season for the preseason all-American candidate.

The offensive line simply took care of business as running backs Autry Denson and Clement Stokes ran wild for 128 and 109 yards respectively, while the offense did not have to rely on the arm of Powlus to move the team.

"It was great blocking," Denson said. "I don't think it was anything special I did. We just came out and executed. We're still not clicking on all cylinders."

"Our offensive linemen made up their minds that they were going to play well," Powlus said. "I believe in our linemen and backs."

Something else that returned to the Irish was the threat of a big play and Awesome Rossum.

In dire need of a spark to end the four-game losing streak, Rossum took the opening kickoff 93 yards, proving to the Panthers that history does repeat itself.

After the defense did its part and forced a punt on Pitt's initial possession, Denson broke free for the longest play from scrimmage on the year. With 8:12 left in the first quarter, Denson took the Powlus hand-off, and 50 yards later, the lead was increased to 13-0. Jim Sanson's extra point closed

IRISH INSIGHT

Smiles and silence a refreshing post-game change

"I missed seeing those white teeth," Notre Dame head coach Bob Davie said after Saturday's 45-21 win over Pittsburgh. "It's nice to see the players smile again."

Actually, it seems like it's the first time at all this season that the Notre Dame football team was seen with true smiles of satisfaction for what it has accomplished.

Betsy Baker
Associate Sports Editor

They weren't smiles of anticipation as seen before the opening game against Georgia Tech, and they weren't forced smiles of optimism after the team's first or second loss. And we sure haven't seen any smiles in the last four weeks.

For the first time this season, the players sighed and smiled, and Davie was not forced to explain his team's performance. He was allowed to just relax and bask in the victory — a victory that he claimed was for the players, but the pride that exuded from his voice, as he downplayed how nice it was to return to his hometown and have his dad on the field after the victory, told a different story.

In fact, even the Irish fans seemed to let the team enjoy the victory, and maybe even relax a little bit and take part in the celebration themselves. Granted, it was not the prettiest victory, and if it weren't for Jarious Jackson's two late-game touchdowns, it might have looked a little more like an offensive battle than a blowout. Still, the Irish gave themselves a much-needed boost of confidence going into this week's game against Southern Cal, one that could essentially save the season.

There appears to be a light, regardless of how bright or bleak, emerging at the end of the tunnel. The Irish seem to have found the rhythm for which they had searched five games without results. More importantly, the Irish may have finally shut up accusations of lack of talent or heart.

Offense finally explodes

By BETSY BAKER
Associate Sports Editor

Maybe it was because head coach Bob Davie and quarterback Ron Powlus were returning to their home state. Maybe it was Allen Rossum's 93-yard opening kickoff return for a quick 7-0 lead. Maybe it was because tailback Clement Stokes finally got the opportunity to make a contribution. Maybe it was the appearance of Jarious Jackson and the "T-team" offense.

Whatever it was, something went right for the Notre Dame offense on Saturday, and nothing proves this better than the 45-21 score.

The offense finally shed the adjective "futile" in its win over Pittsburgh and began to show signs of life.

Despite going up against an undersized Panther defense, the Irish were able to control the ball at the line of scrimmage and avoid what has also become an overused phrase to describe the Irish offense: "shooting themselves in the foot."

With the exception of a failed fourth-and-one attempt at the goal line and a second-quarter interception by Powlus, the offense was effective in its movement of the ball, and managed to do so by using a variety of weapons.

The story of the day for the offense, however, was the return of the running game. Many have criticized the Irish this season for their inability to run the ball, especially because the ground attack has been the strong point in the past.

Autry Denson once again led the Irish with another 100-plus yard performance by compiling 128 yards on 19 carries. Senior tailback Clement Stokes saw significant action for the first time on Saturday and did not disappoint anyone with 109 yards on 15 carries. Davie awarded Stokes' work ethic throughout the season by giving him a chance to show what he could do, resulting in the first time this season that two Irish runners have rushed for over 100 yards.

"He deserves to play," Davie commented. "[Freshman tailback] Tony Driver has gotten an awful lot of publicity and has done well. Clement hasn't stopped working. He has given 100 percent in practice and on special teams. He deserved some playing time."

Stokes was obviously happy about the chance to play, but was even happier about the outcome of the game.

"I'm glad I got the opportunity to play," Stokes commented. "I figured if I kept working hard, it would pay off eventually. So it wasn't a matter of Driver playing early; it was just a matter of us winning games. And today was a good opportunity for me to play, and I'm just glad it went positive."

Another new face on offense was quarterback Jarious Jackson, who came in to lead the team's short-yardage "T-team" offense. The offense's inability to complete necessary short yardage plays has been one of the main areas of concern, and Jackson was able to come in and provide some unpredictability, and more importantly, points on the short-yard plays. Jackson's three-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter added some insurance to the victory, and his 43-yard return of a Panther onside-kick with 18 seconds left in the game turned the game into a full-fledged rout.

Like Stokes, Jackson was grateful to perform a role in the victory, especially with the kick return.

"I visualized the return on the kickoff before it ever happened," Jackson said. "The ball took a perfect bounce, and all I saw was open space."

In addition to the emergence of two new offensive threats, the Irish took full advantage of its already-proven consistent performers. Powlus completed 13 of 20 passes for 160 yards, and fullback Jamie Spencer, who has been fighting injury throughout the season, contributed a 23-yard touchdown run.

It might be a little early to say that the Irish offensive problems have been solved after going up against a defense that, on Saturday, looked as though it would have had trouble defending a good high school team. However, the offense has finally been able to get a glimpse of its potential, and what can happen when it develops.

Junior tailback Clement Stokes gave the Irish a much-needed lift on Saturday, rushing for 109 yards on just 15 carries.

the scoring for the quarter and the half.

Pitt's best scoring chance came after Panther cornerback Hank Poteat intercepted Powlus and returned it to the Irish nine. The Irish defense would not give in with Melvin Dansby stonewalling Chris Schneider for a loss on second and goal.

After a Pete Gonzalez incompletion in the back of the end zone with Benny Guilbeaux on the coverage of John Jones, the Panthers missed a 32-yard field goal, erasing Powlus' interception.

"Our defense made some big plays, especially after the interception," Davie said.

Having yet to score in the third quarter this year, the Blue and Gold has worked on making the proper adjustments at halftime. On Saturday, they broke the third quarter jinx with a 22-yard Jim Sanson field goal after the defense forced Pitt to punt from its own 10.

"We knew we needed to play well in the third quarter," Powlus said. "We had an opportunity to get the ball down field, and we made some things happen."

Kory Minor helped set up the Irish offense on their first possession, when on third-and-four, he drove the Panther tackle back into his quarterback before disposing of him and wrapping up Gonzalez for an 11-yard loss to force a punt.

The Panthers showed that they still had some fight in them, getting right back in the game with a six-play, 80-yard drive. The march was aided by a flea-flicker with Gonzalez hitting Terry Murphy with a 34-yard completion to move the ball to the Irish 18-yard line. A Dwayne Schulters eight-yard run ran the score to 17-7.

The offense responded and refused to let the momentum swing Pitt's way with Powlus engineering a nine-play, 65-yard drive, ending in Jaime Spencer's 22-yard romp to the end zone to push the score to 24-7.

Again, the resilient Panthers answered with a nine yard Kevin Barlow run completing a 59-yard drive. However, the Irish said "whatever you can do, we can do better," with Autry Denson scoring on a two-yard run to give the Irish a 31-14 lead with 12:56 left in the contest.

"The way we reacted to them was real encouraging," Denson said. "I think that's just an example of what our offense can be like."

Whenever things started to go the Panthers' way, the Irish responded, pleasing the coaching staff.

"The encouraging thing was that every time Pitt scored, we were able to answer it," Davie said.

"We didn't let the bad things hurt us. We made up our minds to control what we can control."

The win was the first step for the Irish in turning things around as they took care of business against a lesser Pittsburgh squad.

"We made some strides, but we're by no means where we need to be," Colletto said.

Things will be easier for the Irish this week in practice where they will build on a win in hopes of starting to return Notre Dame football to where it should be.

REPORT CARD

Quarterbacks: B+

The success of the running game precluded any need for an outstanding passing effort. The interception was a poor decision by Powlus, but a handful of significant third-down completions compensated for the mistake. Jackson played his role effectively.

Running Backs: A

Denson and Stokes rekindled memories of the old Irish rushing attack as they punished the Panther defense and combined for 137 yards. Spencer was effective, amassing 40 additional yards on six carries, including a 23-yard score.

Receivers: A-

The receiving corps also got the job done when they were called on to do so. Despite the lack of action through the air, Brown and Johnson are finally making more of each individual catch by running longer routes and advancing the ball after the catch.

Offensive Line: B+

Pitt was small, but the men in the trenches took care of business and allowed the backfield to run wild as it should against that kind of opponent — a definite improvement.

Defensive Line: B-

Schulters victimized the down lineman at times, but he was held under 100 yards, and the Panthers were only able to manage 133 yards rushing for the day.

Linebackers: B-

Sacks from Minor and Bryant help the grade, but Pittsburgh had way too easy of a time going around the ends, especially on their two touchdown runs.

Defensive Backs: C

Another unit that was in need of improvement came through in satisfactory way. A number of solid coverage jobs held Gonzalez's passing stats to a minimum, especially in the first half. A few deep balls down the stretch did not reflect extremely well on the secondary as a whole.

Special Teams: B+

Rossum to the rescue. His kickoff return to open the game may have been the spark that the Irish have been so desperately searching for. Sanson was effective, and Jackson embarrassed Pitt's onside kicking crew.

Coaching: C+

The gold helmets were ready to play from the opening whistle and took advantage of their early momentum. Or did they? Any lead, let alone a 17-0 bulge in the first half, is a comforting situation for Davie and his staff, but they could not put the dagger in the Pittsburgh's collective heart when the ball was inside the five yard line in the second quarter.

Overall: 3.04

The Irish played their best 60 consecutive minutes of football on Saturday. The offense faltered momentarily in the middle of the game, but opened and closed the contest with authority. The defense could have played better, but the offense finally gave them the points they deserve, so it did not matter. It was a much needed confidence booster as rival USC heads for South Bend this week.

■ GAME NOTES & QUOTES

HOME SWEET HOME —

Saturday's game was a homecoming for Notre Dame head coach Bob Davie and running backs coach Desmond Robinson. Davie began his coaching career at Pittsburgh in 1977 as a graduate assistant and then returned to the Panthers in 1980 for a three-year stint as a linebackers coach. Robinson played for the Panthers in the mid-'70s and was a linebacker on the 1976 national champion team.

Robinson's return was especially grand as indicated by the Irish running backs' (Autry Denson and Clement Stokes) performances.

"What makes it sweet is to have two backs go over 100 yards," Robinson said. "I've never had that happen before."

ROAD WOES OVER — The win over Pitt broke a four-game losing streak on the road for the Irish. The last time the Irish won away from home was at Boston College on Nov. 9 of last year.

THIRD-QUARTER TEN — Jim Sanson's field goal was the first time the Irish have scored in the third quarter all season. Jamie Spencer's touchdown was the first third-quarter touchdown scored all season for the Irish.

IRISH INJURY REPORT:

• Out — Inside linebacker Ronnie Nicks tore cartilage in his right knee. He will have the knee scoped as soon as possible, and the rehabilitation period will be determined then.

• Due back for this week's game against USC — Defensive end Corey Bennett (knee injury), inside linebacker Bobbie Howard (knee injury), tight end Dan O'Leary (ankle/shoulder injury), and fullback Joey Goodspeed (shoulder injury) are all listed as probable.

STANFORD BAND BANNED —

After last week's halftime parody of the Irish potato famine performed by the Leland Stanford Junior Marching Band, University athletic director Ted Leland has announced that the Stanford Band will be officially banned from performing at any Stanford-Notre Dame game through the year 2000. Leland had already publicly apologized for the performance, but additional criticism from local Catholic school administrators (who criticized the band's performance as "bigoted") provoked Leland and University president Gerhard Casper to take further action. The ban includes a performance at Stanford Stadium in 1999, and two performances at Notre Dame Stadium in 1998 and 2000.

QUOTE ON THE GAME:

Bob Davie on the team's philosophy going into the second half of the season:

"We're going to try to approach the rest of the season like we've really got a chance to show some unique character to everyone in the country."

"I think we can continue to eliminate the mistakes and get better. It's so much easier to do when there's a positive attitude and positive atmosphere."

VIDEO PICK OF THE WEEK

'Happy Gilmore'

By SARA BRANDON
and MARTY HARRIS
Accent Movie Critics

Grandma-lovin'-hockey-player-wanna-be Adam Sandler is hilarious in this classic video rental. Sandler, best known for his Saturday Night Live "Halloween Trick or Treat" skit, makes a smooth transition to the big screen in "Happy Gilmore." So, if you are the one person left on campus who has not seen this treasure, this column goes out to you.

Hockey is the tragic downfall of Sandler's life: his dad dies by the puck, he himself cannot play for the love of God, and his girlfriend falls off a cliff and dies on impact (which is code for "she left him because he's a loser"). None of these pitiful events can tear Sandler's clinging hands from his beloved hockey stick — that is, until his grandma has her house repossessed and goes to a nursing home. His grandma hasn't paid her taxes in years and Sandler must turn golf pro to pay back the money, reclaim the house, and save the day.

Enter Chubbs — the wooden-hand-sportin', alligator-hatin', crazy-glue-usin' golf mentor. Chubbs is our pick for funniest character (behind Adam, of course, who is strangely ... no oddly ... no strangely, attractive). Who can deny the mile-long wing span of Chubbs wooden arm? He cannot give up the dream as he glues the hand together after a close encounter with a Mack truck.

The plot is quirky and playful. Adam keeps you interested with his whiny voice saying "grandma" every five minutes. Sandler's bitter humor and outrageously violent temper keep the laughter rolling. An example of his short fuse includes a brawl with tanned and cheesy game show host, Bob Barker. The two duke it out on the course. Other highlights involve nails through the head, homeless caddies, midgets on tricycles, Happy's place, random hook-ups with old women, and three-mile drives to the green.

Our favorite scene takes place at the old peoples' home. Sandler (who treasures grandma) has no idea the home is a sweat shop for the retirees, a.k.a. the male attendant/nurse runs an underground quilting scam. The best scene is when a crazed, big haired, old chick throws her body on the hood of Sandler's car screaming: "Get me OUT OF HERE!"

Our Ratings:

Best hair: Sandler's first caddie wins our vote. His bleached and big hair give him an "I just smoked pot five minutes ago" look. Or maybe he just got back from a semester abroad in London?

Best clothes: Sandler's flannel shirts combined with sweats and Timberland boots scream hockey player. We would not recommend this outfit for the masses but Sandler looks, well, hot. Call us crazy, but the nastier he looks the better!

Best line: Sandler seducing press agent: "What? Friends listen to 'Endless Love' in the dark!"

Best accomplishment: For Sandler it was not winning the golf championship with no prior experience or making hundreds of thousands of dollars or becoming Subway's celebrity spokesperson. No, as Sandler says: "I am the only hockey player who took off his skate to try to stab someone."

In conclusion, this movie is perfect for unwinding with your friends after a tough week. All should appreciate the random spiral into oblivion. It is just funny.

SOAP OPERA UPDATES

General Hospital

By GENEVIEVE MORRILL
General Hospital Correspondent

This past week in Port Charles, Lorraine, upon discovering that Carly is involved with both a doctor and a Quartermaine, raises her price and begins stalking Carly at home and the hospital. This is bad news for the Doc and his pregnant bride-to-be who are shopping for baby stuff and moving into their new house. A.J. and Carly go for round No. 567 after she wants to know why they are no longer friends.

Luck's home and is giving attitude to everyone from Lucky ("Must go to Switzerland") to Carly ("You bad") to Stefan ("You evil!"). Uncle Luke shows up and tears into Carly for getting pregnant; he's convinced she's working an angle. She tries to convince Luke she's changed, but he's not buying it. When she accepts a package for A.J. he asks if something is up and threatens to go over and talk to A.J. Carly, like an idiot, makes too much of making nothing of it and Luke is now on the scent like a bloodhound. Carly's luck gets worse when Bobbie sees her paying Lorraine off, and is only too pleased to tell Tony. Carly brushes it off as a nursing school loan, but Lorraine still calls Tony and tells him about the sonogram.

Monica and A.J. bond over orange juice and she asks him to let her back in his life. When Carly comes over, Monica refuses to let her in and reminds her to stay the heck away from A.J. Although he is grateful that she cares, A.J. still refuses to let Monica tell Alan about his slip. Later, Keesha and A.J. bond over sodas and plan a date — a date which he can't keep since he's locked in the supply closet with Carly.

Overcome with emotion, Nik and Sarah do some major making out, then go to their own suspicions about who is responsible. He confronts Lizzie who denies everything. She then turns around and tells Audrey that Nik is working to turn Sarah against her. Memo to Lizzie: you don't need any help in that department. Audrey promises her support if Lizzie is telling the truth. If she really did frame her sister ... burning at the stake! Audrey's wise to her game, but not Sarah. But when Lizzie tells Sarah to dump loser Nikolas (Whoa! Cute plus rich plus adores you doesn't equal loser!), and reveals her knowledge of the lucky pen, Sarah's long underused brain begins to crank.

Alexis tries to revive Katherine, as Stefan, with love in his voice, begs her to live. He asks Alexis why she hates her own flesh and blood enough to push her down the stairs. A grim Alexis refuses to be interrogated. After she gets off the floor, Kathy tears into Stefan: "When you thought I was dead, you sounded like you cared." She then goes to Edward and asks him to plead her case before the GH Board. At the meeting, the entire Q Clan stands up for her, but is shot down when Stefan produces doctored figures that accuse her of misusing hospital funds. Shocked, Katherine withdraws her request; heartbroken, she asks Stefan why. His response? See ya! Bobbie offers her comfort, and Luke offers her revenge.

Brenda almost has everyone convinced she's fine, but then she performs grand theft cellular when she mistakenly thinks Jason is talking to Sonny. She manages to scare Emily and drive herself nuts. Jax takes her to the penthouse and invites her to stay. YES, YES, I'll be there after my French midterm! — Oh, Brenda, not me, got it. She doesn't want to take advantage, but is convinced. She even bonds with V. when she comes over. Brenda, here's your chance, throw that annoying Miranda lookalike off the balcony for the good of the show.

Good luck on midterms, GH fans, and don't forget to put GH in your break schedule!

Days of Our Lives

and NICOLE PAULINA
Days of Our Lives' Correspondents

Hello "Days" fans! Wow, what a week! Not only did Notre Dame pull out a victory, but Eric Brady finally got his hair cut! We're a bit mixed on the verdict, though. As it stands amongst the three of us, we've got two votes in favor and one (vehemently) against. We'd be interested in getting a reaction from some of YOU. Why not e-mail us? But now, on to weightier concerns.

After rescuing Jen from the lascivious advances of T.C., Jack flees with Jen to his cell where she hides under the bed while T.C. and some of his buddies kick the crap out of Jack. Later, while Jen tends to his wounds, the cell door closes: LOCKDOWN! So Jen decides to make the most of the situation, snuggling down with Jack with nary a thought of what she will do in the morning. And we thought breaking parietals was a serious offense!

Vivian and Ivan finally move out of their little apartment with the help of Big Bertha. Over at the mansion, Jonesy is awakened by a mysterious phone call in which he assures the speaker that he "is watching all your stuff. Sir, just like I always do." Apparently Viv is in for a shock when she finds out that all the antiques she plans to steal from Jonesy aren't really his!

Roman and Marlena decide to spend a crisp October day out at the Horton Cabin on Smith Island. Apparently they used to do this quite a bit; we got an entire series of "fake" flashbacks involving the two of them. (Why do they think that a ponytail will automatically make Marlena look 10 years younger?). Roman's medication has been losing effectiveness, though, and when he collapses he has to be air-lifted to the hospital. John had better get back with that cure soon!

Speaking of Mr. Black, he and Hope survive the cliff adventure with minimal injuries, seeking refuge in an "empty" cave. Of course the natives pop out as soon as the two of them go to sleep, and the very next scene shows Hope tied up to a pole with war paint all over her "fancy face." After hallucinating about a rescue from Bo, she's finally saved by John. The two of them press onward, but are thwarted again by the natives. Luckily they are spotted by Kristin and Stefano, who went out in a helicopter after Kristin held Stefano at gunpoint. As Hope begins to climb the ladder, though, one can only wonder whether John will follow. It's not like John Black to abandon a mission.

"Days" had some more psychic moments this week when Bo started having feelings of "danger." Of course we all know it was for Hope, but when he calls Kate about it, she tells him that Hope and Franco are off having a "wonderful time together." Poor Bo decides that Hope is gone forever and, in an effort to get on with his life, he tells Billie that he wants to give their love another chance. She, of course, LOVES this idea and we get to see the two of them kiss a few times. Apparently the "Days" writers have decided that Billie has been redeemed by her near-death experience, and now she is worthy of a Brady man.

Also in Rome, the agonizing story of Carrie/Austin/Mike/Debra continues. Mike decides to give Debra a chance, and even kisses her once (though he thought she was Carrie). The four of them tour the Roman Catacombs and Carrie reads a story about Claudius, who lost his true love and is buried there. Basically the whole "Claudius" tale is a reworked version of Dr. Mike's romantic frustrations, and both he and Carrie are noticeably moved by the ending (Claudius died of loneliness.). Will Mike continue to pine for Austin's wife, or will he settle for Debra? We hate to see him sad, but we've got to go with Carrie. MIKE+CARRIE=MAGIC.

(By the way, PW interhall football rules! We promised we'd mention them. ...)

Belles defense falls short

Saint Mary's drops two tight contests

By LYNETTE MALECKI
Sports Writer

It was a long weekend for the Saint Mary's soccer team after facing two more challenging opponents.

On Saturday the Belles lost 3-1 to Albion College (5-7-1), and Sunday resulted in a 2-1 loss to Wisconsin-Whitewater (9-6-0) in sudden death overtime.

The Belles' offense improved this weekend with good passing and plenty of shot opportunities. However, they just could not seem to find the net.

"We had plenty of opportunities; we just need to focus on shooting more for the post and getting it into the net," head coach Bob Sharp said.

In Saturday's game, the Belles started out aggressive, but it was Albion that scored four minutes into the game. Albion was able to score 11 minutes later after a critical missed pass by the Belles deep in their own territory. At the end of the first half, Albion led 3-0.

During the second half, the Belles' defense stepped up after some of the players were switched around. This allowed the defense to be more effective, holding Albion off from any additional goals. Senior forward Debbie Diemer was able to score the Belles' only goal midway through the second half.

"The problem during the first half was that we didn't have the right people in the right places. The second half was much better after we switched Debbie back to mid-field. That created more shot opportunities," Sharp said.

Sharp also added that the Belles' defensive errors were due to a communication problem between him and the players. "It was not anything the girls were doing wrong, it was a coaching error," he said.

Sunday's game against Wisconsin-Whitewater proved to be equally challenging. Once again, the Belles came out fighting with a heightened intensity.

They had several solid shots on Wisconsin-Whitewater's goalie but once again had trouble scoring. About 20 minutes into the first half, Wisconsin scored the first goal of the game, slamming it into the upper left corner of the net. At the half, the score remained 1-0.

Early into the second half, junior Katie Wagner tied the game for the Belles, sending the ball soaring over the head of Wisconsin's goalie. Both teams continued to play a very physical game and excellent defense. At the end of the half, the game remained tied 1-1, and the Belles went into sudden death overtime.

"We were playing very good. We really wanted to get a quick score, but we were playing into the wind which made it difficult," Sharp said.

After the first 15-minute period, neither team had scored. Finally, halfway into the second 15-minute period, Wisconsin-Whitewater fought for a hard-earned goal, sending it over the head of junior goalie Jo Wagner.

"We are still playing individually which is harming the performance of the team," junior midfielder Monica Cernanec said.

At Monday's practice the Belles will focus on shooting goals amongst dense defenders at a close proximity since this seems to be where the Belles are having the most difficulty. With plenty of scoring opportunities, all the Belles need now are the goals.

"Persistence and determination will determine the outcome of the team's performance on Tuesday," said Wagner.

The Belles' next game is Tuesday at home against Defiance College (0-10) at 3 p.m.

Hockey

with a multiple-point game on Friday night, Dhadphale seems back on track.

"I was very, very pleased with the way we played tonight," summarized Poulin.

"There definitely were a lot of positives," added Noble.

Perhaps the biggest positive was winning their first close game. Sometimes, winning the first close game can give a team the confidence it needs to win the next game.

"This will definitely help us to win other close games," said Noble. "We just showed a lot of mental toughness and kept going when it was tied in the third period. I also think that they were getting tired, but we just kept coming at them. That's a tribute to our conditioning program. We were not fatigued."

A contributing factor to the energy of the Irish was the fact that they used most of their bench during the whole game.

"Usually you shorten your bench as the game proceeds," stated Poulin. "But there was no need for that tonight because everyone played well, and they all demanded ice time."

The game was an excellent opportunity for the freshmen to mature, and it was an opportunity that they took advantage of.

"You just can't simulate a game atmosphere in practice," explained Eaton. "You can only talk about what it's going to be like for a while, but eventually you just have to experience it for yourself. This game was definitely helpful for us to understand what it feels like to play in a collegiate game."

According to Eaton, the Mustangs certainly aren't the toughest team they will face all season. This weekend, the Irish travel to play St. Cloud State for another pair of non-conference games in preparation for the CCHA season, which officially begins on Halloween at home against Michigan State.

"We didn't have any glaring errors," said Noble. "But there are always things that you need to work on. I think that we're going to have a very good week of practice. We'll probably work on a few set plays and on our positioning. We have to keep improving and fighting because we are going to face tougher competition down the road."

onship match of the Big East tournament last season.

With the loss, the Eagles fall to 5-16 on the season and 1-3 in Big East action.

On Sunday afternoon, the Irish faced off against a Providence squad that did not have much success against Notre Dame in recent years. The Friars' luck did not change this year, as they lost to the Irish in three games, 15-7, 15-5, 15-4.

The Irish were led by senior hitter Angie Harris, who recorded 17 kills, while Lee tallied 12 kills. The team had an overall hitting percentage of .371 while holding the Friars to .189 hitting.

Providence was led by senior captain Heidi Brady and freshman hitter Heidi Filippi, who each tallied 10 kills for the Friars.

Junior Missy Crotty also helped the losing cause, making eight kills on 13 attempts for a team-best .461 hitting percentage. Providence drops to 15-9 overall and 1-3 in conference play.

The series extended Notre Dame's winning streak to a season-high six matches. During this streak, the team has averaged .364 hitting, with the team of Harris, Lee, Leffers and Treadwell each totaling between 40 and 66 kills. Leffers did not commit a single hitting error during both matches this weekend.

With the two victories, Notre Dame improves to 12-5 on the season and 4-0 in Big East play.

The Irish will return to the court this Friday against North Carolina before heading off on a five-match road trip, the longest of the season. The match against the Tar Heels starts at 8 p.m. in the Joyce Center.

"It's frustrating to lose when we played a very good game," coach Mike Berticelli said. "To Syracuse's credit, they played well, and we were just unable to score; and we need to score goals to win. Though we played as well as we have all year and created some good chances, we were just unlucky."

The first half saw both teams trying to grab control of the game. Both were able to create scoring opportunities but could not capitalize to give their team the edge going into the locker rooms.

Twenty minutes into the second half, Syracuse was able to beat the Irish defense for the lone goal of the game. Junior Jeff Knittel's seven-yard volley off of a rebound put the Orangemen up 1-0.

Knittel's goal came after freshman Matt Torok's ten-yard shot which was deflected by sophomore Irish defensemen Alan Woods as it headed toward the goal. It was the first goal allowed by the Irish in the Big East season.

Notre Dame responded by putting relentless pressure on the Syracuse defense, creating many chances to tie the game. On one of the Irish's many scoring opportunities, the ball was put past Orangemen goalie Dan Hobson, only to have a defender head the ball away at the goal line. Notre Dame was able to collect the ball on the rebound and get off another shot which was blocked again by a defender on the goal line.

Another great chance came off the foot of sophomore Andrew Aris. Aris was able to weave through two Syracuse defensemen and hit a shot from the top of the box. The shot got by Hobson only to be turned away by the post with Syracuse clearing the rebound.

"You can never prepare for games like these where the ball just doesn't bounce your way, but if you're playing soccer its bound to happen," Berticelli commented. "It's tough to lose a Big East game to Syracuse at this time in the season, and it makes the upcoming games even more important."

The Irish hope to rebound against Western Michigan on Tuesday night at Alumni Field.

The single goal which the team gave up against the Orangemen was its first against a Big East opponent.

The Observer Sports department would like to thank our friends from Diamond's Jim for their hospitality. "Home of the best buffalo wings, sandwiches, and biggest Notre Dame fans in Pittsburgh!"

Streiffer's four goals lead team to shutout

By ALLISON KRILLA
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame women's soccer team continued its domination of the Big East, posting a 9-0 win over Georgetown to remain a perfect 7-0 in conference play this season.

The nine goals for the Irish were the most they have scored this season and was their highest total since posting a 10-1 win over Villanova on Nov. 3, 1996.

"We did fairly well against Georgetown," said Monica Gerardo. "We played pretty consistently even though it is difficult sometimes to get up for a game like this."

Jenny Streiffer paced the Irish (12-0-1) with four goals, giving her 10 on the year. The sophomore midfielder connected on two of her first three shots in the contest, opening the scoring for Notre Dame at 13:14 by heading in a cross from Kara Brown.

Just over one minute later, senior midfielder Holly Manthei dished off one of her four assists to Streiffer for the game's second goal. Manthei now has 18 assists in 13 games for the Irish.

Gerardo, returning from an ankle injury suffered against Boston College on Oct. 5, teamed up with Manthei, scoring the team's third goal off a give-and-go.

"(High scoring) games like these are a lot of fun," said Gerardo, "but they're just as tough as close games because it's hard to finish your chances all the time."

"They're helping us get together. We get better at moving the ball and passing which will help us in the postseason."

Before the half, Anne Makinen put the Irish ahead 4-0, taking a pass from Shannon Boxx and Monica Gonzalez and firing a rocket through the hands of the Hoyas' goalkeeper from 20 yards out.

In the second half, Boxx volleyed in a pass from Manthei at 48:53, and Streiffer found the back of the net with another Manthei feed 10 minutes later.

After stealing the ball from a Hoyas defender as she tried to clear the ball from 25 yards out, Streiffer beat three defenders and netted her fourth goal from eight yards.

At 62:20, Makinen connected on a strike from Kelly Lindsey, her second assist of the game. Meotis Erikson closed out the scoring for Notre Dame at 82:49, giving the Irish a 9-0 victory.

Notre Dame outshot the Hoyas 40-1, allowing the only shot on goal with less than

YOUR HOROSCOPE

- Aries: Even with the right tools, the job might not get done today. Last night's dream interferes with your presence of mind. If you dislike making mistakes, it may be best to do as little as possible.

Taurus: You come up with a strange solution that strikes a deep chord among everyone who understands it. Presentation counts today, no matter how good an idea. A pet project gets the green light.

Gemini: Today you have the sense that you won't get what you want if you want it too badly. Approach a problem creatively and save your theatrical assault for another time. A busybody could ruin your day if you let her.

Cancer: If traveling today, take the water route to enhance the seamless flow of your thoughts. Others find you deep and enthusiastic, if a bit vague. You will be at your best before dawn or after dusk.

Leo: If you don't get the respect you want, consider for a moment how much of it you deserve. This is a day to spend time rather than money in pursuit of your goals. Reinforce your instincts with research.

Virgo: A change in your eating habits effects a unique mind-body relationship. Your critical analysis of a situation or process abruptly lands you in the driver's seat. Being able to tell fact from fiction is crucial today.
- Libra: A working relationship is strained by a disagreement over money. Negotiate business matters promptly before the discord reaches a personal level. A methodical approach may be best today.

Scorpio: People assume you are a visionary today because of the prophetic ring to your statements. Mystery and philosophy play greater roles in the every day world. You enjoy your influence over others.

Sagittarius: You experience a minor crisis of spirit when you misplace something important. Getting in touch with a close relative is a useful reality check. Try to do one small thing differently every day.

Capricorn: Even if you don't work in the design department, you may be the one whose creative approach makes the difference. Someone confirms your delightful suspicions. Take a chance on something about which you feel secure.

Aquarius: An unexpected event puts you back in touch with your humanity. Be gentle but firm with others as you set your own house in order. Electronic communications play an important role in your day.

Pisces: You are given a free hand to get things done in your own mysterious, non-linear way. Use confidential information to your best advantage. You turn the flow of events into a forward surge.

Irish put Mustangs on ice

Notre Dame dominates third period play

By CHARLEY GATES
Sports Writer

In a game that eerily resembled so many of their losses last season, the Boys of Winter took a game knotted at one goal apiece and turned it into a 5-1 win.

"Those goals at the end were rewarding and significant because those are the goals that we didn't get last year," remarked benchminder Dave Poulin.

The Irish suffered 12 one-goal losses last season. Had they won just half of those close games they would have made the elusive Central Collegiate Hockey Association playoffs. For whatever reason, they had simply lost that finishing capability, but the Boys found big time in the offseason, much to the chagrin of the Western Ontario Mustangs.

The tied score with 5:18 to play in the third belied the course of the game. The Irish had simply dominated their opponents and finished with an enormous 55-15 shot advantage. At the 14:42 mark, senior center Lyle Andrusiak won a left-circle faceoff in the Mustangs' end.

into the net for what would prove to be the gamewinner.

Andrusiak's goal initiated a flurry of goal scoring. Sophomore forward Brian Urick netted an empty-netter with 58 seconds to play. Thirty-three seconds later, Van Arkel added a power-play goal. He took a pass from junior Aniket Dhadphale and slid the biscuit past Mustang goaltender Mike Hall for his first goal under the Golden Dome. The Irish weren't finished yet. 14 seconds later, freshman defender Mark Eaton recorded the first goal of his Notre Dame career. Sophomore defender Benoit Cotnoir passed the puck to Eaton, who buried the Irish third goal in 58 seconds.

"It was a great feeling to score," stated Eaton. "It was exciting, and it's always good to get one under your belt. Let's hope that it's the first of many."

Dhadphale gave the Boys their first goal of the season, a rebound off a senior captain Steve Noble shot. Dhadphale led the team in goals in his freshman year with 13 but experienced a bit of a sophomore slump last season, scoring just five times on 109 shots. But

Squad topples two in Big East play

By BILL HART
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame volleyball team continued its recent success this weekend with two wins against Big East adversaries Boston College and Providence. The Irish started off their weekend in New England with a four-game win over a relatively inexperienced Boston College squad, 15-4, 15-11, 13-15, 15-2.

The Irish were led by sophomore blocker Mary Leffers, who totaled 18 kills on 21 attempts. The Irish cause was helped also by senior hitter Jaimie Lee, who had 21 kills on 704 hitting, the second-best hitting percentage in Irish history for a four-game match.

Boston College was led by freshman Julia El-Hag, who scored 16 kills. She was aided by teammates Eileen Broderick and Amy Laurence, who had 10 kills each. The third game of the match was the first time the Irish had lost a game in a conference match since defeating Pittsburgh in the champi-

The Notre Dame men's soccer team suffered its first Big East loss Saturday night when it fell to the Syracuse Orangemen by a score of 1-0. The team's overall record drops to 7-4-2 and its conference record to 4-1-1.

However, the score was not a true indication of how the game was played. Notre Dame dominated play and controlled the tempo for the majority of the game. They outshot Syracuse 18-8 and had an 11-0 advantage in corner kicks. The Irish simply put the ball everywhere but the back of the net.
