Notre Dame, Ind., March 10 --- General Alfred M. Gruenther, Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, tonight was named recipient of the University of Notre Dame's Laetare Medal for 1956. He is the fourth military figure to receive the award which has been presented annually since 1883 to an outstanding American Catholic layman.

Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., president of Notre Dame, in announcing the selection of NATO's commanding general, said:

"General Gruenther exemplifies to a superlative degree the devotion, integrity and resourceful leadership that the United States expects of its military men. His brilliance, evident even in his student days at West Point, has long been recognized throughout our defense establishment. In Europe, where he commands forces representing fifteen nations, he is respected as a statesman as well as a soldier. The University of Notre Dame, in conferring its Laetare Medal on General Gruenther, honors him for all these things but especially for his virile spiritual life. He personifies the military power and the spiritual strength which are the western world's bulwark against the Communist tyranny."

The Laetare Medal winner is named each year on Laetare Sunday, the fourth Sunday of Lent and an occasion of joy in the liturgy of the Church. Formal presentation of the medal is arranged for a time and place convenient to the recipient. AFL-CIO president George Meany received the award last year. Other recent Laetare Medalists are diplomat Jefferson Caffery, Thomas E. Murray of the Atomic Energy Commission, actress Irene Dunne, philanthropist I. A. O'Shaughnessy, and General J. Lawton Collins. Other military figures who received the Laetare Medal are General Hugh A. Drum in 1940 and General William Starke Rosecrans in 1896.

General Gruenther was appointed Supreme Commander of all NATO forces in Europe as well as Commander-in-Chief of the U. S. European Command in July, 1953. For the previous two-and-a-half years he had served as Chief of Staff at SHAPE (Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe), first under General Eisenhower and later under General Matthew Ridgway. The land, sea and air forces under Gruenther's command have been described as the most powerful peacetime alliance of free powers in the world's history.

Decorated with the Distinguished Service Medal, the Legion of Merit and the Bronze Star for his World War II service, General Gruenther is credited with planning the North African invasion, the amphibious assault on Italy and the campaign up the peninsula which resulted in the surrender of all German forces in Italy and western Austria on May 2, 1945. During most of this period he was Chief of Staff of the Fifth Army and the Fifteenth Army Group commanded by General Mark Clark. From July to November, 1945, Gruenther was deputy commanding general of the U. S. Force in Austria and led the U. S. Mission in Vienna to arrange for the establishment of the first American troops in that city.

General Gruenther's post-war assignments have included service as deputy commandant of the National War College; Director of the Joint Staff, a planning group assisting the Joint Chiefs of Staff; and Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans at Army Headquarters.

Born in Platte Center, Nebraska, Gruenther was graduated fourth in his class at the U. S. Military Academy on Nov. 1, 1918. Between 1919 and 1941 Gruenther served eight years as an instructor at the U. S. Military Academy. He also was graduated from the Field Artillery School, the Chemical Warfare School, the Command and General Staff School, and the Army War College. In 1922 he married the former Grace Elizabeth Crum. They have two sons: Richard and Donald, an Army major.

Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. 7 --- Church Building and Furnishing:

The Church's Way, a new book designed primarily for pastors and architects, has been published here by the University of Notre Dame Press ($5.50).

Rev. J. B. O'Connell, a Welsh pastor and scholar, is the author of the volume which interprets the liturgical law governing the building, decoration and furnishing of a Catholic Church. The book is the second in a series of Liturgical Studies being published at Notre Dame under the editorship of Rev. Michael Mathis, C.S.C.

"The disregard of liturgical prescriptions, of sound tradition and of the norms of sacred art by architects and artists, and their patrons, has resulted in some churches and oratories which are defective in plan, poor in design, tawdry in decoration and incorrect in furnishing," Father O'Connell contends in that book's Foreword. Only a faithful compliance with the Church's law, he says, will insure the holiness, dignity and beauty befitting the house of God.

In Church Building and Furnishing Father O'Connell deals with each part of the church and with every furnishing or object found within its walls. For each item of church furniture the author gives a brief account of its liturgical history as well as the canon law and rubrics governing its use.

What color should the sanctuary carpet be? Where and how should confessionals be installed? What is the liturgically correct location for the organ and choir? What about the use of so-called modern art in our churches? These are typical of the practical matters Father O'Connell discusses in his new book.

"A serious responsibility rests upon those who are entrusted with the task of building a church," Father O'Connell says. Upon them, to a large extent, he says, will depend whether succeeding generations of the faithful come "joyfully or reluctantly" to their parish church.

Notre Dame. Ind., Mar. 9 --- Notre Dame students will hold a mock Democratic national convention on the campus April 16-18, the University announced today.

Nationally prominent speakers as well as student leaders will address the three-day sessions which will culminate in the nomination of a Democratic presidential candidate. Mock conventions, alternating between the two major parties, are staged every four years at Notre Dame. President Eisenhower was the students' choice for the Republican nomination in 1952.

The student political conclave will follow the rules of the Democratic national convention in every respect. Two thousand student delegates and alternates have already been elected in campus balloting. Because of Notre Dame's truly national enrollment virtually all of them will be in their home state delegation. Included among the delegates will be students from nearby St. Mary's College.

Campus campaigns are already underway in behalf of Governor Harriman of New York, Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee, Governor Lausche of Ohio and former Governor Stevenson of Illinois, the 1952 Democratic candidate. Fifty-four campus caucuses also are being held to elect chairmen of each state and territorial delegation.

Notre Dame's quadrennial mock political conventions have been sponsored since their inauguration in 1940 by the Academy of Political Science, a student organization. Casper R. Taylor, Cumberland, Md., is the Academy president and convention chairman. Dr. Paul Bartholomew, professor of political science, who originated the campus convention, is faculty advisor.

For release in AM's, Wednesday, March 14th:

Boston, Mass., Mar. 13 --- Parents who exercise reasonable influence and control over their children's choice of "dates" can generally save their sons and daughters from an unfortunate or unhappy marriage, Dr. John J. Kane, head of the department of sociology at the University of Notre Dame, declared here tonight.

Although he conceded that the vast majority of dating will not result in courtship or marriage, the Notre Dame sociologist stressed that "no boy or girl today marries a person whom he or she did not at first date. The family can influence or control dating more easily than it can the ultimate choice of a marital partner," he asserted.

Dr. Kane spoke on "The Family's Influence in Dating and Courtship" at the National Catholic Family Life Convention here. He is the author of Marriage and the Family.

It is ironical, Kane said, that "in the past when parents did have greater influence and control over courtship and marital choice, there was less need of it. Today," he claimed, "when parents have much less influence and control, there is a greater need of it."

Young people in the United States, Kane declared, have the greatest freedom of choice in marital partners, but "comparatively little knowledge about how to exercise such freedom in an intelligent way. When a marriage partner has been chosen or is about to be chosen," he said, "it is generally considered highly undemocratic and consequently highly reprehensible for Church, family or friends to try to influence or interfere in any way."

Too often, Dr. Kane asserted, solicitous parents intervene actively "only when an actual marriage is in the offing." Generally, he said, they use a negative approach, forbidding the marriage and even threatening to disown or disinherit their son or daughter. The Notre Dame sociologist cited four liabilities to such negative parental tactics.

"First, such an approach is usually too late and will fail. If it succeeds the first time, it may place the son or daughter on the rebound where an even more unfortunate choice may be made with even less discretion, and parental opposition the second time is more easily overruled.

"Secondly, such an approach is purely negative. What young people want is positive information. They want to know what to do rather than what not to do.

"Third, parental threats not infrequently serve to render the fiance or fiancée even more desirable and can arouse the most compelling and irrational aspects of the romantic love complex.

"Fourth, it is just this type of effort to influence mate selection which American society is apt to view as undemocratic, tyrannical and even wholly un-American."

Instead of ignoring their children's dating partners and the intervening only when a tragic marriage impends, Dr. Kane urged parents to regard education for marriage and choice of a marriage partner as "one of their very important duties." He called on parents to help their sons and daughters form a "more realistic ideal image" of their future husband or wife. With most young people enamored by the beauty or handsomeness of their lover, Kane urged parents to stress the importance of choosing a mate with the same religion as well as similar social, economic and educational background.

Parents must begin educating their children for marriage long before they ever have their first date, Kane declared. "When the age for dating arrives, if parents have helped construct a satisfying and adequate picture of the ideal mate, a large part of their task has been accomplished."

Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. --- Notre Dame's yearbook, THE DOME, named for the famed golden dome atop the University administration building, this year observes its fiftieth anniversary. When students receive the golden anniversary edition this Spring, they will see a pictorial story of "the old and the new," contrasting the university of today with the small school of a half-century ago. THE DOME has been published continuously since 1906 except during World Wars I and II when most Notre Dame students were in the armed forces.

The editor of the 1956 DOME is Donald Sniegowski, a senior English major and varsity third baseman from Toledo, Ohio, who recently won a Rhodes scholarship for graduate study at Oxford University in England. The 1906 DOME was edited by Charles O'Donnell from Greenfield, Indiana, who was to become a poet, a priest and president of the University of Notre Dame from 1928 to 1934.

When the first DOME came off the press a half-century ago, Notre Dame was a relatively unknown school consisting of a half-dozen buildings and little more than two-hundred students. Today the University numbers more than fifty major buildings and 5,600 students from every state in the Union. The present faculty is more than twice the size of the entire collegiate student body fifty years ago.

This year's DOME will compare pictorially the changes that five decades have made in the campus and student life. It will illustrate Notre Dame's phenomenal athletic record as well as the University's academic growth and development through the years. Student attire at the turn of the century, marked by derbies and starched collars will be shown alongside today's khaki pants and white buck shoes.

Editor Sniegowski's chief aides on the 1956 DOME are associate editor Robert Morsches, Ft. Wayne, Ind., and business manager Fred Brinskelle, Birmingham, Ala.

Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. 19 --- Military strength, firm alliances and a strong and growing economy at home and in the free world are the best guarantees of American victory over the Soviet Union in the cold war, Dr. Philip E. Mosely, a foreign affairs expert and former State Department official, declared here tonight

"During the race for the intercontinental missile, allies and alliances will be more important to us rather than less important," Mosely asserted. He warned that if we lose our allies, present and potential, while the Kremlin is developing an intercontinental missile, "We run the risk of defeat, without a war, through a self-isolation which only we can bring about."

Mosely currently is director of studies for the Council on Foreign Relations, New York City, and adjunct professor of international relations at Columbia University's Russian Institute. His lecture here was sponsored by the University of Notre Dame's Committee on International Relations as part of a year-long series on "Diplomacy in a Changing World."

"The Soviet leadership, under Khrushchev and Bulganin, has moderated its tactics, but has not changed its goals or its basic strategy," Mosely said. He described recent Kremlin criticism of Stalin and his regime as "trivial." Pointing out that "there is no sign of a slackening of the Kremlin's military and technological effort," Mosely warned that if Russia wins the intercontinental missile race, it could "blackmail the non-Soviet countries into piecemeal surrender, one by one."

Mosely claimed that the United States "will have to re-think and re-plan many of its present policies" to cope with the new Soviet tactics. Military alliances, he said, must be backed up by stronger programs of economic and cultural cooperation. "We must continue to help uncommitted countries to strengthen their bonds in non-military ways with the free world."

Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. --- "Out of sight is not out of mind in the case of Knute Kenneth Rockne. Twenty-five years have passed since Rock's tragic death plunged the Notre Dame campus into the most sorrowful day of its history. Yet even such a lengthy span as a quarter of a century has failed to dim the imprint of Knute Rockne's life on the University he loved."

At the University of Notre Dame, the Monogram Club, present athletes born, most of them, after Rockne's death, join with the alumni of the University in the adjoining St. Joseph Valley, many of them friends and associates of Knute Rockne, in the 25th annual memorial Mass and breakfast on the campus. A wreath is placed on Rockne's grave in nearby Highland cemetery after the ceremonies on the campus.

Speaking for the University on this silver anniversary is Rev. Edmund P. Joyce, C.S.C., executive vice president of the University, chairman of the University's board in control of athletics, who came to Notre Dame as a freshman two years after Rockne's death. Father Joyce continued:

"Present Notre Dame students, unborn at the time of his death, find many mementoes of Rock on the campus--pictures, busts, trophies, the huge comfortable stadium which was his great joy, the handsome Rockne Memorial which provides facilities for all non-varsity athletic activity. None of these things, however, explain the enduring influence of Rockne. Knute Rockne still is a vibrant living force at Notre Dame because of the powerful personal influence for good that he exerted over so many Notre Dame men. These men in turn have handed down the lessons and inspiration of the master to younger generations. The dynamic spirit of Rockne lives then in this human chain, energizing it and strengthening its various links.

"In his funeral sermon on April 3, 1931 the President of Notre Dame, Father Charles O'Donnell, C.S.C., predicted that because of Knute Rockne's love of his fellowman 'he had verified the Christian paradox--he had lost life only to find it. This was not death but immortality.' Truly, as we commemorate for the twenty-fifth consecutive year, Rockne's death, we are keenly aware of the perpetual niche of honor that this man holds in American athletic circles and in the hearts of Notre Dame men everywhere. We have gained much from his life. We have not lost him through death."

For release in PM's, Monday, April 2nd:

Notre Dame, Ind., Apr. 2 --- A University of Notre Dame scientist says that "irreparable genetic damage" may result from the increasing use of radiation in medicine, industry, research and military development.

According to Dr. Edward O. Dodson, a genetics specialist and associate professor of biology, genetic damage, unlike radiation sickness, "does not have the benefit of a minimum threshold of dosage." He urges that precautions be taken to protect personnel from the genetic effects of radiation just as precautions are currently taken against radiation sickness.

Radiation, Professor Dodson explains, can induce mutations or permanent and generally harmful changes in man's genes, the elements which transmit hereditary characteristics from one generation to another. He stresses that "there is no minimum dose known for the production of these mutations."

Dr. Dodson's warning on how radiation may affect man's heredity is contained in his new book, Genetics, the Modern Science of Heredity, published today by W. B. Saunders Co., Philadelphia. The volume, with illustrations by Frederick Beckman, associate professor of art at Notre Dame, is designed primarily for use as a college text.

Although the founder of the science of genetics, Gregor Mendel, was an Augustinian monk, Dr. Dodson's new book is believed to be the first major work in the field to be published by an American Catholic scholar. An historical chapter in the book is based on a partial transcript of the archives at Mendel's monastery in Brunn, now part of Czechoslovakia.

Dr. Dodson joined the Notre Dame faculty in 1947 after receiving his Ph.D. at the University of California at Berkeley. His Textbook of Evolution was published by W. B. Saunders Co. in 1952. He is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Xi, the American Society of Zoologists, the Genetics Society of America, and the Society of Systematic Zoology.
