Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. 15 — Twenty University of Notre Dame students and two recent graduates have been awarded fellowships for their first year of graduate study, it was announced today by officials of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, Princeton, New Jersey.

Twelve hundred superior American and Canadian students will receive the awards which provide tuition and fees for their first year of graduate study at a college or university of their choice plus a living allowance of $1,500.

The Notre Dame group of Woodrow Wilson fellows is believed to be one of the largest at any college or university in the nation. Eighteen Notre Dame students received Wilson fellowships last year, constituting the fifth largest group chosen from any American campus at that time.

Banchoff, Bellairs and Moran are members of the Notre Dame team which is currently appearing on the "G-E College Bowl" over the CBS-Television Network.
Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. 16 -- Prof. E. Jerome McCarthy of the University of Notre Dame's College of Commerce has been awarded a Ford Foundation fellowship to attend a special one-year Institute of Basic Mathematics for Application to Business.

The Institute, to be held at Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology beginning next September, is part of the Foundation's program to strengthen American business education and research. McCarthy is one of forty-one fellows chosen from among 182 college teachers nominated by their institutions.

The purpose of the Institute is to broaden the use in business research and teaching of recent developments in mathematics, statistics and electronic computers. According to Ford Foundation vice president Thomas H. Carroll, "there has been a marked increase in the use of these techniques in such fields as consumer behavior, sample surveys and market research, production management, capital investment, personnel administration and industrial experimentation. The Institute," he said, "will assist leading business educators in incorporating these techniques in their own work."

McCarthy, who joined the Notre Dame faculty in 1956, has been teaching courses which apply mathematics and statistics to business problems. He was educated at Northwestern University and at the University of Minnesota which awarded him a doctorate last year. He recently attended a three-week course on data processing conducted by the International Business Machines Corp. for faculty members in business schools. McCarthy is a member of the American Economic Association and the American Marketing Association.

Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. 19 — Plans for a University of Notre Dame symposium on "Values in American Society" March 23-24 were announced here today by Dr. John J. Kane, head of the sociology department.

Five visiting scholars will address the symposium which will explore the approaches to the study of values as well as the standards or goals prevalent in specific areas of American life such as religion, communication, education and industry, Kane said.

The two-day sessions, to be held in Notre Dame's Law Auditorium, will be sponsored by the sociology department with the support of a grant from Lilly Endowment, Inc., Indianapolis, Ind. Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., Notre Dame president, will extend the University's welcome at the opening session (10:30 a.m.).

Symposium speakers and their subjects include Prof. Clyde Kluckhohn, of Harvard University's anthropology department, "The Study of Values"; Prof. Robin M. Williams, Jr., head of the department of sociology at Cornell University, "Values and Education in the United States"; Rev. Joseph P. Fitzpatrick, S.J., of Fordham University's department of political philosophy and social sciences, "Values and Industry in the U. S."; Dr. John A. Hutchison, head of Columbia University's religion department, "Values and Religion in the U. S."; and Prof. Bernard Berelson, University of Chicago, "Values and Communication in the U. S."

According to Dr. Kane, a discussion period will follow the presentation of each paper. Serving as discussion leaders will be Prof. William Kolb, department of anthropology and sociology, Tulane University; Prof. William H. Form, of Michigan State University's anthropology department; Rev. Joseph Fichter, S.J., chairman of the sociology department, Loyola University of the South; Prof. Thomas J. Stritch, head of Notre Dame's department of communication arts; and Dr. Kane.
Five Notre Dame faculty members will preside at the several symposium sessions. They are Dr. Paul C. Bartholomew, professor of political science; Dr. Bernard Kohlbrunner, professor of education; Rev. Mark Fitzgerald, C.S.C., professor of economics; Rev. Roland Simonitsch, C.S.C., head of the department of religion; and Prof. Robert A. Leader, of the department of art.

Kluckhohn, co-author of How the Soviet System Works, is chairman of the National Research Council's division of anthropology and psychology. He has been associated with Harvard since 1935 and served as director of its Russian Research Center from 1947 to 1954. He is a former president of the American Anthropological Association.

Williams joined the Cornell faculty in 1946 and became chairman of his department ten years later. During 1957-58 he was president of the American Sociological Society. He is the author of numerous articles in professional journals and co-author of Schools in Transition. He was a visiting professor at the University of Hawaii during the spring semester of 1958.

Father Fitzpatrick, who holds a doctorate from Harvard, is a specialist in industrial sociology. His doctoral dissertation was entitled "The Wall Street Worker." In addition to his teaching at Fordham, he has served as a faculty member and engaged in research in Puerto Rico. He is a former president of the American Catholic Sociological Society.

Hutchison joined the Columbia faculty in 1955 after teaching for eight years at Williams College. Ordained to the Presbyterian ministry, he is the author of We Are Not Divided; Faith, Reason and Existence; and The Two Cities. He has also edited Christian Faith and Social Action.

Berelson is a professor of the behavioral sciences in the University of Chicago's School of Business and Division of Social Science. He was director of the Ford Foundation's behavioral sciences program from 1951 to 1957. He is the author of The Library's Public and co-author of several works including The Reader in Public Opinion and Communication.
Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. 23 — A Cornell University sociologist today (Hon.) challenged the description of today's American college students as the "beat generation."

Robin M. Williams, Jr., said that the students of today "basically accept the existing institutions of our society." Particularly in the field of political values, "it is certainly true that students are not 'radical,' not rebels against their parents or their peers," he said.

The head of the Cornell sociology department is one of five scholars participating in a two-day University of Notre Dame symposium on "Values in American Society." The sessions are sponsored by the Notre Dame sociology department under a grant from Lilly Endowment, Inc., Indianapolis, Ind.

Speaking on "Values and Education in the United States," Williams observed that there are "sharp and deep-going divisions on both public issues and personal style of life" among contemporary collegians. These differences, however, "tend to remain within relatively fixed margins," Williams said, "and marked alienation from, or rebellion against, existing institutions and the values implicated in them is exceedingly rare."

Williams reported that college students feel a need for "a religious faith or ultimate personal philosophy. Avowed atheists or 'free thinkers'," he declared, "are so rare as to be a curiosity. The religious quest is often intense and deep, and there are students on every campus who are seriously wrestling with the most profound questions of meaning and value. At the same time, a major proportion of these young men and women see religion as a means of personal adjustment, an anchor for family life, a source of emotional security. These personal and social goals often overshadow the goals of intellectual clarity and spiritual transcendence," he said.

Contrary to the popular impression, the goal-values of today's college students "do not seem to us to be primarily oriented to materialistic success nor to mere conformity," Williams asserted. "Our students want occupations that permit them to use their talents and training, to be creative and original, to work with and help other people. They also want money, prestige and security. But they are optimistic about their prospects in these regards; they set limits to their aspirations --- few aspire to millions of dollars or to 'imperial' power and glory," he said.

Rev. Joseph P. Fitzpatrick, S. J., of Fordham University, told the Notre Dame Symposium that "the nature of international conflict today and the crucial role that American industry has come to play in defense has served to bring into sharp focus the social and cultural context in which industry operates today. The inter-relationship of science, government and industry outlines the role of industry much more sharply as having the characteristics of a national institution rather than those of a private enterprise," he said.

Speaking on "Values and Industry in the United States," the Jesuit sociologist observed that "the same motives of achievement, power and wealth are still a major factor in American business. But," he said, "the businessmen with these motivations can never be unmindful of national security which creates a different dimension for the fulfillment of his individual effort and marks out more sharply the boundaries of his freedom."

For a long time, Father Fitzpatrick said, it was assumed that American individualism and American freedom were the values that had been responsible for industrial development. However, "when Russia manifested the ability to create an industrial system that could rival us, we began suddenly to realize that freedom, competition, self-interest, the Protestant ethic, were not essential to the creation of industry," he said. As a result, he continued, we realize the physical achievement itself is not the important thing; it is the values which guided men in its formation and the values by which they relate the industrial achievement to the other aspects of social life."
Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. 26 — Six estate planning experts will participate in a Finance and Industry Forum to be sponsored by the University of Notre Dame in the Law Auditorium here April 25th (Saturday), it was announced today.

They will explore a variety of taxation topics and will present a detailed case study of the planning and administering of an estate. Approximately 250 accountants, attorneys, trust officers, life underwriters and corporation executives are expected to attend the sessions.

Panelists will include Rene A. Wormser, New York City attorney and former lecturer on estate planning at New York University; William J. Casey, New York City attorney and former special counsel to the Senate Small Business Committee; Robert J. Lawthers, director of estate planning services for the New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., Boston, Mass.; James F. Thornburg, South Bend, Ind., attorney and lecturer at the Notre Dame Law School; William E. Murray, also a New York City lawyer and former chairman of the American Bar Association's Income of Estates and Trusts Committee; and Carberry O'Shea, New York lawyer and lecturer on tax matters.

Included on the Forum program will be discussions of deferred compensation and its use in building future security, corporate planning for estate purposes, and charitable foundations. The panelists will deal with the use of trusts as an aid in saving tax dollars for education of children and family security. They will also evaluate the impact of income and estate taxes upon the wealth and well-being of our country.

Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., Notre Dame president, will address the opening session at 10 a.m. The Forum will close with remarks by Rev. John J. Cavanaugh, C.S.C., director of the Notre Dame Foundation.

Interested persons may register in advance for the Forum by sending a check for $15.00 to Finance and Industry Forum, Box 555, Notre Dame, Indiana. The fee includes all sessions and luncheon at The Morris Inn on the campus.

Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. 28 -- Plans for a University of Notre Dame "Symposium on Gnotobiotic Technology" April 8-9 were announced here today by Philip C. Trexler, associate research professor of bacteriology and general chairman.

Approximately one hundred biologists representing education, government and industry are expected to attend the scientific parley which will bring together those experienced in germfree animal research and others interested in the field.

The symposium will be sponsored by Notre Dame's Lobund Institute which has pioneered in the development of the germfree animal as a unique tool in biological and medical research. Co-sponsors of the two-day meeting will be the National Institutes (cq) of Health, the Office of Naval Research, and the Institute for Laboratory Animal Resources.

Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., Notre Dame president and a member of the National Science Board, will greet the visiting scientists at the opening session April 8 (Wednesday) at 10 a.m. All the sessions and exhibits will be at the Morris Inn on the campus.

According to Prof. Trexler, gnotobiotics is the science of rearing organisms by themselves or in the presence of specifically known associates. It involves the maintenance of a sterile environment as well as the isolation, rearing and testing of an organism. Germfree animals such as those developed at Notre Dame have been described as "living test tubes" in that they are free of any contamination detectible by science and hence give the researcher a unique approach in his investigations.

Several visiting scientists as well as members of the Lobund Institute staff will address the sessions. Roger D. Reid, director of the biological sciences division, Office of Naval Research, and A. G. Bedum, M.D., safety director at Fort Detrick, Frederick, Md., will speak at the symposium banquet (Apr. 8, 6:30 p.m.). Reid will speak on "Discovering Biology" while Dr. Wedum will discuss "Policy and Practice in Laboratory Safety." They will be introduced by Harvey J. Carlson, head of the ONR's microbiology branch.

Members of the Lobund staff who will appear on the program include Prof. Trexler who will keynote the symposium and present papers on "Flexible Wall Plastic Isolators" and "Sterile Rooms;" Helmut A. Gordon, "Historical Aspects of Gnotobiotics Experimentation;" B. A. Teah, "Germfree Animal Production and Use at Lobund Institute;" and Morris Wagner, "Determination of Germfree Status."

The two-day symposium will close with a panel discussion on the problems involved in the production and use of gnotobiotics.

Notre Dame, Ind., Mar. 25 -- Plans for a Midwest Collegiate Jazz Festival at the University of Notre Dame April 11th (Saturday) were announced today by student chairman Bill Graham, Savoy, Illinois.

Sixteen top college jazz groups will participate in the competition to be held in the Notre Dame Fieldhouse. Preliminary competition will be held from 1 to 6 p.m. with the finals scheduled to begin at 8 p.m. The winning group will receive a $200 cash prize and an engagement at Chicago's "Blue Note", Graham said.

According to Graham, the Festival has been organized "to acknowledge the jazz talent on midwest college campuses and to give these talented musicians an opportunity to meet in competition at Notre Dame." He predicted that upwards of two thousand jazz enthusiasts will attend the festival sessions.

Judges for the competition will include NBC jazz accordionist Art Van Damme; Frank Holzfiend, owner of the "Blue Note"; Charles Suber, publisher of DOWNBEAT magazine; and Robert Trendler, music director at WGN, Chicago. Rev. Norman O'Connor, closely associated with the Newport Jazz Festival, also has been invited to serve as a judge, Graham said.

Among the musical groups which have entered the Festival competition are "Dave's Band," Indiana University, Bloomington; "The Octets," Marquette University, Milwaukee, Wisc.; "The UW Quintet," University of Minnesota, Minneapolis; "The Trio," University of Cincinnati; "The Keith Thomas Quintet," Indiana State Teachers College, Terre Haute; "The Southern Illinois All-Stars," Southern Illinois University, Carbondale; and "The Yeomen," Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio.

Also "Duke's Men," Purdue University, West Lafayette, Ind.; "Campus Owls Quintet," Miami University, Oxford, Ohio; "OSU Jazz Forum," Ohio State University, Columbus; "University Jazz Workshop," University of Illinois, Champaign; "The Johnny Jazz Quartet," St. John's University, Collegeville, Minn.; "The Depaul Jazz Ensemble," Depaul University, Chicago, Ill.; "The Bob Flierson Quartet," University of Detroit; "The Lettermen," University of Notre Dame; and an unidentified group from Michigan State University, East Lansing.
