Notre Dame, Ind., June 10 -- Professor A. L. Gabriel, director of the Mediaeval Institute at the University of Notre Dame, has been invited to address an international congress to be held in Paris June 19-23 commemorating the 800th anniversary of the Cathedral of Notre Dame. He will speak on "The Early Schools of Notre-Dame de Paris."

The Congress is under the patronage of President de Gaulle and Maurice Cardinal Feltin, Archbishop of Paris. Another Prince of the Church, Paolo Cardinal Marella, has been named papal legate for the centennial celebration.

Professor Gabriel is the only American scholar scheduled to address the Congress. He is a Corresponding Fellow of the French Academy and a historian with numerous publications on the history of mediaeval universities. He is also director of a mammoth microfilming project of classical, mediaeval and Renaissance manuscripts at the Ambrosian Library in Milan. The documents will be available to American scholars beginning next fall at the new Notre Dame Memorial Library.

Notre Dame, Ind., June 8-- Two department heads have been appointed in the College of Arts and Letters at the University of Notre Dame, according to an announcement today by Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., University president.

Dr. Julian Samora is the new head of the sociology department, Father Hesburgh said, and Dr. Robert Nuner has been named to head the department of modern languages. Samora succeeds Dr. John J. Kane, who will continue to teach at Notre Dame, while Nuner replaces Dr. William J. Grupp who has been on leave as cultural affairs officer at the U. S. Embassy in Buenos Aires.

Samora, who joined the Notre Dame faculty in 1959, has specialized in anthropology, medical sociology and race relations. He has done extensive field work among Spanish-speaking people, including migrant workers, in Michigan, Colorado and New Mexico. Samora has been directing a study of civil rights problems of Spanish-speaking people in the United States under a grant from the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights. He has just received a travel and study grant from The Ford Foundation to teach at the National University of Colombia at Bogota from July to December, 1963. He holds a doctorate from Washington University of Saint Louis.

Nuner, who has been acting head of the modern languages department, began teaching at Notre Dame in 1946. A specialist in the Romance and Celtic languages, he is believed to be the first person to earn a doctorate in Celtic studies at an American university. He holds three degrees from Harvard. He is a native of South Bend, Ind., where both his father and maternal grandfather served as city school superintendents.

Notre Dame, Ind., June 7 -- Waldemar Otto, a West Berlin sculptor, has been named artist-in-residence and a faculty member at the University of Notre Dame.

Otto, whose sculpture can be seen in several Berlin churches, is the first to be designated artist-in-residence at Notre Dame since the late Ivan Mestrovic, the celebrated Croatian sculptor, who died January 16, 1962.

According to Rev. Anthony Lauck, C.S.C., head of the University department of art, Otto will teach advanced classes in sculpture in addition to executing commissioned works. Notable features of his work, Father Lauck said, are "his keenly personal germanic portraits, the strong plane modelling in his low reliefs, and the simplified and forceful forms of his figures in the round."

Born in Poland in 1929, Otto studied at the Academy of Art in Berlin for six years under the tutelage of Alexander Gonda. During 1954 and 1955 he held a German government scholarship for advanced study in Florence. Otto has won several important municipal prizes in Berlin art exhibitions, and essays about his work have appeared in Das Munster, the Munich art periodical.

Otto's sculptural commissions in Berlin include a heroic bronze figure of "King David with the Harp" for the Evangelical Student House in Berlin; a continuous bronze relief depicting Biblical scenes on one wall of the Heilandskirche, and a large bronze crucifix for the Phillipus church.

Notre Dame, Ind., June 12 -- The appointment of two department heads in the College of Business Administration at the University of Notre Dame was announced today by Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., University president.

Dr. Bernard J. Kilbride has been named head of the department of finance and business economics, Father Hesburgh said, and Dr. John J. Kennedy will head the department of marketing management. Both appointments are effective with the opening of the new academic year in September.

Kilbride, who has been teaching at the University of Illinois, succeeds Prof. Thomas T. Murphy in the departmental post. Murphy was named acting dean of the College of Business Administration last December. Kennedy, who comes to Notre Dame from The Ohio State University, succeeds Prof. John R. Malone who recently was named assistant dean of the business school.

A specialist in business finance and capital theory, Kilbride was educated at St. Francis University, Antigonish, Nova Scotia, at Columbia University and at the University of Texas where he received his doctorate. He is a certified public accountant. He formerly was a department head at St. Francis University and at St. Edward's University, Austin, Tex. He has been serving as an assistant professor of finance at the University of Illinois and will hold the rank of associate professor at Notre Dame.

Kennedy has specialized in quantitative methods in marketing. He studied at the Newark College of Engineering and at The Ohio State University where he received his master's degree and doctorate. He has been an assistant professor of marketing at Ohio State, and has been named to the rank of associate professor at Notre Dame.

Text of an address by
THE RIGHT HONORABLE LESTER B. PEARSON
Prime Minister of Canada
at the 118th annual commencement exercises
University of Notre Dame
June 9, 1963

For release after 2 p.m., EST, Sunday, June 9th:

I thank the University - deeply and sincerely - for the honour it has done me today in making me one of its honorary graduates. I thank its President, Father Hesburgh, especially. His invitation came to me before I became Prime Minister of Canada. It was then a personal honour for which I was very grateful; as it is now, in addition, a recognition of the office I hold in a country that is your neighbour to the north.

An honorary degree has one certain effect upon me. It makes me value much more the degree that I earned.

By the same token, my football coaching duties at the University of Toronto many years ago, have given me a better appreciation of the finer points of touch football! For this I am grateful.

The moral of this is that you can never know when or what college experience will prove valuable after you graduate.

Notre Dame has many historical connections with Canada.

The order of the Holy Cross is well known and highly esteemed in my country where it is engaged in the work of education to the great benefit of our people.

Notre Dame's founder, Father Sorin, as general of the order, guided much of its early work in Canada. Your seventh president, Father Thomas Walsh, was born in Canada. For many years the enrollment at Notre Dame has included a significant number of Canadian students who have later contributed to the development of my country. John Wintermeyer, who took his degree here, is the leader of the liberal party in Ontario and a collaborator of mine. The President of the National Liberal Federation, my friend Senator John Connolly, who is with me today, was for some time a member of your faculty.

If you were to visit the largely French-speaking Province of Quebec, you would find the name "Notre Dame" attached to villages, hospitals, convents and churches.

In the early 17th century, as one of our poets has put it: "The winds of God were blowing over France, kindling the hearths and altars, changing vows of rote into an alphabet of flame."

This began the French era of our history. The language and traditions and spirit of France became a part of Canada's religious, cultural and political heritage.

Many years later, priests and lay brothers from France came with Father Sorin to this part of underdeveloped America. Here they found freedom. Like their compatriots who went to Canada, they also established a classical college. They trained young men in the arts, the humanities, the social sciences and religion. The cultivation and ennoblement of the human spirit was their purpose. As a result of their work, better men have left these college halls, better citizens have gone out into many communities.

We owe much to such institutions. They have given us men of letters, judgment and of moral purpose; men who have recognized that our western civilization is founded on enduring spiritual values; on the dignity and worth of the human personality.

Cardinal Enriquez, had he been with us today, might have led me to emphasize this point. His Eminence has given great leadership in his native Chile, and indeed throughout Latin America, in his pronouncements upon the social conditions of his people. But the sad reason for his absence is well enough known. Pope John, whose death all men lament, as all men rejoice in the nobility of his life, the greatness and glory of his achievement for all humanity; Pope John, in his great encyclicals and by his efforts through the Vatican Council to unify all men, has encouraged us to hope that the west can bring that leadership to the world which is more than the leadership of power or economics or politics.

In our complex world, the leadership we need is of many kinds and must operate in many fields. In seeking it, I believe that your country and mine can work, must work, together. Of all the reasons for this, the most important is that together we can contribute more to the fundamental needs and hopes of free men than either of us can contribute alone.

We in Canada are your northern neighbour; and in a sense your closest neighbour. Our common border spans a continent and runs close to many of the biggest centres of population in both of our countries. Its importance to both of us was recognized in the communique issued by the President and myself after our recent meeting at Hyannis Port. I would like to quote two sentences from that communique:

"While it is essential that there should be respect for the common border which symbolizes the independence and national identity of two countries, it is also important that this border should not be a barrier to cooperation which could benefit both of them. Wise cooperation across the border can enhance rather than diminish the sovereignty of each country by making it stronger and more prosperous than before."

From this co-operation we both have much to gain for ourselves. Materially, our trade is the biggest between any two countries in the world. But there is a far wider point than that. It is of the utmost importance that the relationship between our two countries should be an example to the world; an example of how two free and independent countries - of great disparity in power - can work together without fear on the part of the smaller, or force on the part of the larger.

Let me put it in a different way, and with the bluntness that we can use with each other. If United States cooperation with Canada were not close and happy, with whom could you cooperate closely and happily?

This point was forcibly put, six years ago, by a Canadian writing in that great American journal, Foreign Affairs.

He said: "The ability of the United States to get on well with Canada is the first and most direct test of her ability to get on well with every other smaller power --- Canada is the world's hostage of American good intentions. Canada is of good repute in the free world. If Canadians said that they were being brow-beaten by the Americans, if they said that their interests were being seriously prejudiced by the United States, the world's sympathy would lie overwhelmingly with Canada. (That, I may insert, is the price you have to pay for being top dog; the sympathy we enjoy is that which attaches to and cheers us smaller dogs.)

"The world sees Canada as a country very like the United States --- If the Americans could not get on well with Canada, with whom could they get on well? --- Good relations with Canada - the good relations of discussion and cooperation, of some real give and take in policy - are a primary interest of the United States."

Having suggested that we are of some importance to you, let me hasten to say that you are of very obvious, and often of overwhelming importance, to us. Geography, history, economics, defence, combine to make your interests in world affairs very largely our interests. When your security is weakened, we have cause to worry. When freedom falters with you, ours is diminished.

The basis of our relationship, in short, is that we are essential to each other.

It was not always so. For a long time, in the formative years of our two countries, we were by no means the best of friends, or even very good neighbours. Indeed, I should tell you that only yesterday I was taking part in celebrating the 150th anniversary of a battle in which we repelled American invaders; at least we did in our history books. Yours are less accurate. That was along time ago. I think that both our countries are entitled to some sense of satisfaction about the way in which we have since worked out a peaceful relationship.

It has not been altogether easy, and I don't expect it to become easy, and I don't expect it to become easy. There are and always will be difficulties and differences of interest between us. It would be folly to ignore them. A country is a whole that is greater than the sum of its parts.

But it has parts. And those parts have their own particular interests. Individual industries in Canada, particular areas of Canada, inevitably have interests which are competitive with the interests of individual industries and particular areas of your country. The very closeness, the acute interdependence, of our relationship means that there are bound to be a great many differences.

Those are the facts of life. It is evidence of the nature of our neighbourhood that we do not have to worry morbidly about them; or allow them to poison our relationship. Perhaps I should say it ought to be the nature of our neighbourhood, and usually it has been. We should be able to take differences in stride; as good friends who know how to take the broad view, to make the general interest prevail, and therefore to accommodate the minor differences with reason and restraint.

We will the better be able to do this if we remember that the things we have in common are much greater than the things that divide us. The political traditions of the United States and of Canada are from the same roots. Each of us has tried to build a society that gives first place to the individual man; his needs, his hopes, his rights, his responsibilities. Our methods are in some ways different, and our efforts on both sides less than perfect, but on balance we can both claim some success in our dedication to the free society. We stand together also in our common dedication to the ways of peace and in our common determination to cooperate and prevail in the cause of freedom and fair dealing between nations. We stand together in the Atlantic Alliance which has proved itself to be the shield of a free world, and in a United Nations which is groping toward a world brotherhood which in our nuclear, jet-propelled age has become a necessity for survival itself.

I am sure that to you at this University, who are students of history and of ideas, these things that our countries have in common need no emphasis from me. Of our differences you may be less aware; the differences which make the good relationship. I do not think so much of our differences in particular interests. Those are normal and can be dealt with. I think of another and central relationship which I have already mentioned, the enormous disparity in power between the two countries. You are gigantic, a super power. Canada is far from that.

From this, two consequences follow. We are always watching Big Brother to see what trouble he might get us into - while at times protesting at the fact that Big Brother is not watching us. You are unaware. We are uneasy. This can cause misunderstandings that should be avoided.

A second consequence of your being a big power and our being a much smaller power is that you and we at times react differently to international problems. Despite all that we have in common as north americans, we often look at things through very different telescopes. We share this difference of viewpoint with other smaller countries.

Our distinction, among those smaller powers, is that we are North American. We are very close to you in so many ways; closer to you than other countries.

There are bound to be these differences between us, arising primarily from the contrasts of size and power and responsibility; but we do not have to allow those differences to divide us. On the contrary, the objective we can and should set for ourselves is to make the differences work for us, to the benefit of both our countries and of international relationships generally.

By making the differences work for us, I mean that we can complement each other's policies and ideas. I mean that, on the foundation of our own close partnership, there are ways of some importance in which Canada can assist in the broader partnership of both our countries with others; with the North Atlantic Community, with the members of the Commonwealth, with the new and developing nations in the world. Our very lack of power makes possible for us a certain measure of ease and flexibility in international relationships which is not possible for the giant. You cannot sneeze without other countries thinking they are getting a cold and feeling inclined to blame it on you. We can sneeze with impunity.

We have much in common with the smaller nations of Europe; and our own political and economic development is recent enough for us to have considerable sympathy with the problems of the newer nations.

I am bold enough to believe that these circumstances give to our partnership with you a special value. It is more than a partnership of direct mutual benefit. It is more than an example of a good relationship between two nations. It is also a partnership in which, if we work wisely together, we can do a more constructive job in international relationships than either you, as the big power, or we, as a smaller power, could do if there were no such partnership; or if history had created in the northern part of this continent one nation instead of two. Because there are two nations, I believe that we are creating more vigorous and more satisfying communities than could ever have been produced within one framework.

That is part of the challenge that faces my country. I hope that in talking about it I have said something of more general value to the people to whom I am primarily speaking - to the graduating class of 1963 at Notre Dame and to the members of the Faculty who have worked with the class to make this great day possible. As a Canadian, I admire the great work your forefathers have done to shape this nation and make it a mighty force for freedom, progress and peace in the world. Your generation will soon be carrying on that work. It is a more difficult and challenging task now. You will be called on to meet new tests and overcome new challenges. Whatever you may choose to do after you leave University, you will have to make your own contribution as citizens to the solution of problems that face your country.

In doing so, I hope you will continue to feel the value of your partnership with Canadians.

I feel myself a deep sense of the value and of the necessity of that partnership. I share that feeling with the vast majority of all Canadians. I shall do my own best to preserve and strengthen it, on the only foundation that can endure, friendship and co-operation based on mutual respect and good understanding between our two nations.
