Even Lafayette College has its Weak Sisters.
(Quoted from "The Lafayette.")

"Branding the drunks in college as 'weak sisters,' belonging to the 'Association of Weak Wads,' Chaplain Carruthers last Saturday in chapel preached a scorching indictment against drinking. He declared that the price is too big for the tradition of 'Beer in the diploma' before graduation.

"'It has always seemed to me', he cried, 'Absolutely unfair to require the football team to be sober in order to win victories and keep that way, while drunken rah-rah boys, bench warmers and Saturday night rounders celebrate the victory. Therefore, I am prepared to say that as a class the football team does not furnish the drunks. they do not come from the student council. They do not come from those who are achieving the highest scholarship in the different departments. It is a matter of fact that very few, if any, come from those who are working their way through college. They are not recruited from the influential members of the fraternities, nor in the main, from the big college men who control activities.

"'Where do they come from? I cannot answer that question exhaustively but they come from the 'weak sisters' -- the A.W.W. (Association of WEak Wads'). The largest class comes from a group that Jesus, it would seem to me, would designate as hypocrites."'
