"The University is always preaching that one should marry Catholic girls and we never get an opportunity to meet any. Why are we not allowed to meet St. Mary's girls?"

The university does not dictate the policies for St. Mary's. The authorities there are well able to do that. Here is one thing for you to consider, however: There are probably 300 Catholic girls at St. Mary's and 1500 Catholic boys at Notre Dame who contemplate marriage. One husband is enough to ask any girl to marry at a time.

If there are no Catholic girls in your home town, go home with your pal and take a job in his home town for the summer. But don't cop his girl.

And speaking of St. Mary's, it is said that a survey made very informally one day last year disclosed the fact that there was not one girl at St. Mary's who did not know at least one student at Notre Dame.

"What should be your attitude towards the different kinds of women?"

Respect all women. No gentleman will do otherwise.

Choose for your girl friends only those who appreciate respect.

A woman of strong character can help you to save your soul; a woman of weak character can send your soul to Hell.

Despise no woman. A poor "solid dove" who never had a chance may find a refuge in the heart of God while her proud persecutors are sinking into the depths of Hell.

Fifteen years ago a handsome young man set out to face the world with a double standard -- one standard for his mother another for other woman. He believed in this double standard because his father, a man of the world, had told him to avoid bad women if he could, but to see a good doctor if he couldn't.

Five years this young man died of syphilis. His widow, to whom he left this disease as a heritage, still finds the satanic joy of revenge in communicating to as many men as she can ensnare. God mercifully took their only child.
