How Have the Mighty Fallen.

You can't stand victory. The number of Holy Communions Monday morning (596) was the lowest since September 16, and Tuesday (652) was matched only by September 19. If you can't thank God any better than that. You don't deserve a good team.

Don't Kid Yourself About Princeton.

St. Christopher has been chosen patron of the Princeton game. Let him know that you've heard about it.

Why St. Christopher?

He was a noble-hearted athlete, and he used his strength for the honor and glory of God by performing a peculiar corporal work of mercy. He lived near a ford, and he used to carry people across. One day he carried a child, and the weight of the child bore him down. The child told him that he carried the weight of the world on His own shoulders; and that henceforth the name should be Christopher -- "Christ Bearer".

The Notre Dame athlete carries Catholic education into places where it would otherwise be unknown.

For Instance:

The following letter from a student needs no comment.

"A non-Catholic friend of mine said that he would like to see the Notre Dame football team. I was surprised to hear this as he knows nothing or cares nothing about football. His reason is that he wants to see with his own eyes a group of lads who pray before, or during a game, for victory."

Congratulations, Sophomore Hall.

A few buckets of water, skillfully applied, have taken much of the romance out of the Sophomores. It is more like Notre Dame on the North campus now.

Canes.

Students bothered by bobbed-hair will find canes a great protection.

Who Is Dumb?

"Alexis" wants to know what is meant by "dumb" in Tuesday's Bulletin on scalping the holdout. Spiritual dumbness is meant. A man may have an average of 98 in the classics and zero in heaven if he can't understand what Our Lord meant when he said: "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"
