Catechism of Matrimony.

"Dear Father: I am certainly in distress. I have been writing the same line to three girls in three different schools, and I find that they have compared notes. One of them has just written to demand an explanation. I have to get an answer back right away, because I really love her. What shall I do? -- Papyrus."

When you have made an ass of yourself, always pray that it won't happen again.

Why I Am a Catholic.
(By a Senior Rip Van Winkle.)

~~This question has come to my mind many times, and until recently I would have had to answer that it was only the influence of heredity. Eight years of my school life had been passed in public institutions, and naturally I was under the influence of pagan ideas and ideals. I believed what they told me about the Church.~~

One morning in my third year at the University, Father Walsh presided in place of a regular History professor, and gave a short talk on the medieval church, the abuses of the times, and the causes which led to the founding of the many religious orders. Not until that day did I realize the enormity of the pagan teaching with which I had become saturated.

Later, in an English class, I was forced -- really forced -- to read Joyce Kilmer, Brother Azarias and other Catholic authors. When I read Joyce Kilmer's "Holy Ireland" I believe that last vestige of my paganism vanished. From that day I have been really interested in finding out what I am supposed to believe and practice. Religion is no longer a dreary theory to me., but a very practical something, full of truth and beauty.
