Prayers.

Dean Konep, of the College of Law, requests prayers for his mother, who died yesterday. Thomas Casey, of Brownson Hall, lost his mother Thursday. Leo Garrity, an alumnus, writes that his wife died recently, after an illness of several months which was borne with heroic fortitude. Three students ask prayers for special intentions, and two wish to make acknowledgement of favors received. Your prayers are also requested for a special intention.

Tomorrow is Sunday.

The student Masses tomorrow are in Sacred Heart Church at 6:30 and 8:15, and in St. Joseph's Church at 8:00. These are the hours set for the beginning of Mass, not for rising. In addition to the scandal of missing Mass to which attention was called during the week, two other scandals have been prevalent: coming late to Mass and leaving early.

Sunday is God's Day, and if you can't give Him that one day without infinite grudging, you are in fine business to ask Him to take you to His bosom for eternity. What on earth will you be doing all through eternity in heaven if you can't keep your mind occupied with God for an hour at a stretch one day out of seven?

The Adoration.

Attendance at First Friday Adoration was very satisfactory yesterday. Those who were wise enough to adore have renewed their store of grace and fervor, and have had a most consoling experience for their Eucharistic Year.

Confessions Yesterday.

The increase in Communions yesterday over the previous day was almost five hundred. Most of these men went to confession yesterday morning. Others did not receive Holy Communion because they felt that they could not wait for confession. This was all very foolish. Confessions were heard all over the campus Thursday afternoon and evening, and there was no necessity for anything like a rush on Friday morning. Be wise hereafter. -- Fr. Albertson will return to Badin Hall for confessions every evening if the hall will appreciate its opportunity. There is no percentage in walking clear across the campus for an average of one or two confessions an evening; it is outrageously selfish to expect a busy man to do it.

The Modern Boy. (Continued)

Qualities to date: gentlemanliness, honesty, courage, consistency, loyalty.
Add the following:

VI.

6. Energy. "The man is the head of the woman," said St. Paul, and in spite of all modern demands for full equality, the man will still be the head of the woman and the support of the household. The shiftless loafer in school becomes the no-good provider in the home. If the loafer instinct is not worked out of a man during his school days it will hardly be dislodged unless he marries a tartar. The vast majority of Notre Dame men have proved to be good providers.
