

-----
They Know Their Eggs.

In Washington Hall last Saturday night the freshmen showed that they have read all the collegiate books. They know exactly what to do when the lights go out.

The Religious Aspect.

There have been inquiries as to the response to the appeal for prayers for the football team. We really haven't checked over the halls to see just what happened Saturday. We do know that there were fully two hundred students in church at 12:30 Saturday to say the beads for the team, and we can give the standings of two chapels in the matter of the reception of Holy Communion through the week:

	Mon	Tues	Wed	Thur	Sat
Basement chapel	256	246	249	253	257
Sorin chapel	205	208	207	197	209

We haven't the figures for the other hall chapels, and we hardly think it worth while to collect them for the present. From the figures presented you can see that Saturday means nothing in particular during the football season. (The figures for Friday are omitted because it was the First Friday and the day was out of line with the rest of the week.)

The Waiters.

There was no intention to bear down particularly on the waiters in the announcements yesterday. Attention was called to their case simply because some of them were not fulfilling their obligation to hear Mass on Sundays the same as any other Catholic.

It seems obvious that they cannot be hearing Mass and doing their work in the dining hall simultaneously. The six o'clock Mass is intended for their convenience -- if they wish to hear Mass before breakfast. If they don't, they can hear the 9:00 o'clock Mass. They have no particular business at the 7:00 or 8:00 o'clock Masses. If they wish to receive Holy Communion before breakfast and return later for Mass, a priest will remain in the church to attend to them between the six and seven o'clock Masses.

It was observed yesterday that in spite of the announcement, some of them left before the Communion of the Mass, which means that they did not fulfill their obligation unless they returned for a later Mass.

Crucifixes Again.

A new supply of crucifixes has been received at the pamphlet rack. They are blessed. Help yourself. Hang one on the wall of your room, and let the other wall decorations be in harmony with it.

Prayers.

Joe Dunn, of Brainard, Minn., an alumnus, asks prayers for his father who is very ill. A student wishes a remembrance for a friend who is undergoing an operation.

Unclaimed.

The money found in the infirmary a week ago Friday is still unclaimed.

Study.

That's one thing many of you forgot -- study. The mid-semester tests will be with us in another month or so; then comes the grief.
