The Willing Spirit.

While a freshman is a freshman - which means that his group conduct is fairly predictable - it seems to us that here and there a distinguishing characteristic of the group may be detected. Last year's class, for instance, was a wishing class of freshmen; the class the previous year was wanting; the present entries seem to be a willing class.

This may be all wrong, of course. It's the empty barrel that makes the loudest noise, and we shouldn't judge the cargo by the empty barrels. But we have noticed a marked willingness on the part of many freshmen. They are willing to tell you all about their high school records in athletics and oratory and journalism; they are willing to give you Notre Dame's past history and traditions; they are even willing to tell you how to run the school.

The willing spirit is a real asset in education - when, on the part of the student - it is a willingness to learn. We'll give the freshmen a chance.

When, Where, and To Whom.

The institution of "favorite confessors" has the approval of the Catholic Church - which recommends that we choose a regular confessor and go to him habitually. Notre Dame tries to give you a wide choice in confessors, and that you may know when and where your favorite confessor is at your disposal, the following list of assignments is published:

Prayers.

The father of Arthur and Robert Wiele died during the summer. Edmund Moriarty's brother died last night, leaving five small children. Lawrence (Moon) Mullins, '31, lost his mother ten days ago. Ed. Kolski, a freshman lawyer last year, suffered a broken neck during the summer; he counts on your prayers for a complete recovery. Five special intentions.
