The Earlier Life of the Masterful Monk.

Longmans announce for today the publication of a new book by Owen Francis Dudley, the popular author of Will Men Be Like Gods? The Shadow on the Earth, and The Masterful Monk.

These books, especially the latter two, have been favorites on the campus since their publication. Of the two dozen copies of each placed in circulation by the office of the Prefect of Religion there are still six of each on the shelves. We would advise those who have not yet read these books to do so before taking up the new novel.

We don't intend to spoil the story for you, but it isn't snitching to say that Pageant of Life tells the earlier story of The Masterful Monk. The author has lost none of his punch, nor of the acumen with which he dissects modern paganism. Father Dudley has written another thriller. (Twelve copies have been ordered; they will be available for quick circulation when they arrive. We hope their perusal doesn't start an avalanche of British slang. The first fellow who tells us he feels "cheerioey" is going to head for the lake with an anvil suspended from his favorite neck.)

Reminding You Of Another Book.

At the close of the last scholastic year your attention was called to another book - one dealing largely with the spiritual life of Notre Dame, which it organizes under ten headings. It is Faith and Youth, by Burton Confrey, formerly of the English department here, now Dean of Catholic Junior College, Grand Rapids. There are copies of this book available at the office of the Prefect of Religion; those who wish to buy copies for their own spiritual guidance or to give to others will find a supply at the Book Store.

Chicago To Be Psychoanalyzed.

Yesterday's newspapers announced the opening in Chicago of an Institute for Psychoanalysis, the second in this country and the sixth in the world. God pity Chicago! Of all the excrescences of modern paganism we consider psychoanalysis the most pitiful. Based on a theory most offensive to good taste and harmful to good morals, its possibilities for evil are limited only by common sense and the size of the bankroll which gives it backing. Bank rolls are diminishing - thank God in this instance - but so, unfortunately, is common sense.

Frostbite.

When the number of Holy Communions at the Mission Mass diminishes 100 on a frosty morning (such as yesterday) we are forced to conclude that one hundred of you can't take it. You're not so tough.

PRAYERS: A friend of Eddie Cullen is very ill. Three special intentions.
