New Privilege; New Responsibility.

"Dear Father: They tell me that there is a fine new eating place for students at the Oliver Hotel. I understand that the management is catering to Notre Dame men and that University authorities have given approval.

"This is a break that most of us have been wanting, and I for one would like to express public thanks to the authorities, and, at the same time, make an appeal to the students. The appeal goes to Notre Dame men who value their own reputation and the University's, who have the sense to see that group privilege brings group responsibility. It is up to us to see that student conduct in the new place is always beyond reproach, always--whether prefects are present or not.

"There are a few--mighty few--careless individuals among us who think it big stuff to walk out of a place without paying a bill, who get mean and boisterous sometimes with waiters to show superiority. We all have our own private opinions of such parvenus. If they are not thoughtless and poorly bred, they are simply out-and-out cowards. They have to be squelched, in this place at least, or this privilege, like many another of the past, will be lost to all of us--because of the irresponsibility of the few.

"I know that most students feel as I do, and I'm convinced that once this matter is brought to their attention, they will see to it in their own way that a code of conduct satisfactory to everybody will be always maintained. Will you please, Father, use this letter in the Bulletin in the interests of us all?

"A Senior."

Look you to it!

No Reason To Quit.

From a letter: "I think I'm losing confidence in prayer. I pray for so many things and never get them.....What about it?"

A nine-year-old boy might ask for nine strawberry sundaes all at once. He might think that he could do away with them in quick succession with great profit to himself. But his father would know better. In relation to God's wisdom our requests are often not even so sensible as that of this nine-year old boy. We ask for brilliant success, for appreciation of our talents, for economic security, for unbroken relationships with loved ones, when, in reality, we see, at least in the lives of others, that these "blessings" are often stifling. Ask for anything necessary to your salvation and you will get it, infallibly. Ask for all other things only inasmuch as the good God judges them to be beneficial to you. If you ask once and don't get what you want, it is no sign that you ought to stop asking. Maybe it only means that God wants from you more and a better kind of asking.

Questionnaires! Questionnaires!

Before the holidays we distributed 1800 blanks; only 438 were filled out. What did you use them for--souvenirs for the girl friend? Now we have only a few blanks left and we have to be cautious. If you haven't filled one out, kindly call at one of the Pamphlet Racks, get a blank, fill it out and HAND IT IN!
