Candle Or Scandal?

Example.

"It isn't what you believe that counts; it's what you do."

How often you have heard that; how often you have been inclined to nod your head in assent, although you know that there is a catch in it somewhere. One just won't do what is right unless he first knows what is right.

Yet you will admit that non-Catholics get their impressions of your religion and character more from what you do than from what you believe.

One good apple can't change a barrel of bad ones. But one good, strong, intelligent Catholic can, by his example, work wonders among weak Catholics and incredulous non-Catholics.

Passports To Eternity.

The Conte de Maille once received a letter which he proudly showed to his friends.

"You will recall," it read, "the little lieutenant who, one evening in 1870, slept near you in a barn on the outskirts of Le Mans. Before going to sleep you said your prayers, while I, who had no faith, smiled. But since then I have reflected, I have studied and have recognized that it was you who were right. Thanks for the good you did for my soul! "

"This letter," the count would remark, "I shall want to have in my hand when I die, so that it may serve as my passport into eternity."

PRAYERS: (deceased) Mrs. Margery Reilly Fenton, friend Fr. Gartland; uncle of Bill Clark (Freshman); Mrs. Giordana; Mrs. Arthur C. Morris; grandfather of Frank Biagi. Ill, two friends of James McCarthy (Sorin); Mary Kay Carvell.
